"There may be some recent reductions which I have not been able to find out.

"In addition to the large increase in rents, the prices of stock, &c., especially sheep and cattle, have fallen very low, and the wages of labourers are twice as high as they used to be.

"Forty years ago the farmers of the district managed to live upon what their own farms produced. Now I have calculated that something like 27 tons of malt stuff, Indian corn, &c. is used monthly for man and beast, from outside. The following farms are farms which are running out of cultivation and becoming one with the mountain :—

"Fotty y plas.

"Fotty ffridd Bryn Pyrs.

"Blaen y cwm.—About 300 acres belonging to this farm have become part of the mountain.

"Bryn celynog.—A large portion of this farm has gone out of cultivation, and is practically reckoned with the mountain as a ffridd.

"During the last 40 years 51 labourers' cottages have fallen into ruins in the parish. I have prepared a list of them which I can hand in if necessary. [List handed in.] There are also 12 or 13 farm houses less than 40 years ago.

"Until I was 33 years old I worked at home with my father on the farm called Bryn ys guboriau (230 acres). About the year 1866 the house was rebuilt and my father had to do all the carting and all the labourers' work connected with the building without being paid for the same. A year after the house was built the rent was raised 20*l.* In the year 1873 my father died and I took the farm. In the year 1874 the farm was sold and I retook it from the purchaser, the rent being increased 5*l.* In 1876 the barn and cowhouse were rebuilt. I had to cart all the materials and do all the labourers' work without pay. In the year 1879 another out-building was made, and I had to cart materials, and did a great portion of the work, including a pond. In 1883 I received a notice to quit and left in 1884. I did not complain of the agreement until I was leaving, but then it was put in operation. Every letter of the agreement was enforced."

9342. Whose estate was this?—Robert Lloyd Jones is the owner of the farm.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9343. As to the list of alterations in the rent, are they of your own knowledge?—No, not all.

9344. Are you able to give the date of the alteration in the rent?—Not accurately, but they were raised about 15 to 20 years ago.

9346. Was there any increase in the land attached to each holding to account for it?—No, I only know of one instance.

9347. Were there fresh buildings supplied?—Yes, on several.

9348. Did that partly account for the increase in the rent?—I cannot be sure.

9349. Were there any instances in which the rents were reduced?—I cannot remember, but several of the farms mentioned in my list have been reduced from the high rent which was paid for them at one time.

9350. Then are the figures supplied in this paper the maximum amounts within your memory?—Yes, they are.

9351. Are they within your own knowledge, or is it from hearsay that you know of it?—This is the way I got the figures. Of course I asked a friend to make inquiries in a district and to get a list of farms and the rent, and another man in another district, and, of course, I have personal knowledge of many of them.

9352. With regard to the labourers you tell us that 51 labourers' cottages have fallen into ruins?—Yes.

9353. Have any new ones been built instead?—Yes, in the village.

9354. One of the witnesses told us just now that the labourers, in consequence, would have on an average about a mile extra to walk. Is that your own experience?—If I may be allowed to explain the difference, when these old cottages were on the farms the labourers then worked on the farms and lived in these houses on the farms here, but now that these workmen have come to work at the quarries they have gone to live at the village, because it is more convenient.

9355. Then they no longer work on the farms?—They do not work at all on the farms—those who live in the villages.

9356. You say there are 12 farmhouses less than there were 40 years ago?—There are 26 farms, I believe, where they have been consolidated—two made into one.

9357. But your evidence says 12 farmhouses less 40 years ago?—26 farms have been consolidated—two farms made into one—so that the result is that there are only 13 houses now.

9358. Quite so. That explains it. So that there have been consolidations in 26 farms, and there are now 13 where there were 26?—Yes.

9359. Have there been no instances of division of the farms?—Yes, one farm has been subdivided into three parts.

Professor Rhys.

9360. There was a reference to an agreement there. I do not know whether that agreement is put in, or that we have seen a copy of it?—No.

9361. You say, I know that every letter of that agreement was carried out when you left?—Yes, everything that was necessary. May I be allowed to explain what I say here? What I mean to say is this, that I did not complain of anything in the agreement whilst I was in that farm until I left, and then every clause and every point in the agreement was enforced.

9362. What I was referring to is this, that there are several clauses in most of the agreements that we have seen which we have heard are never carried out. I want to know how it stood with regard to this case. You are very strong in saying that every letter of this agreement was carried out?—It was so in my case. I have not a copy of the agreement with me.

9363. Did you ever have a copy?—Yes, I had.

9364. What has become of it?—I have lost it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

9365. Will you explain one sentence in your evidence. You say that 40 years ago the farmers in the district managed to live upon what their own farms produced. Now I calculate it that something like 27 tons of stuff for animals and men come in monthly. Do you mean to say that the farming is less productive?—They do not keep enough labourers to cultivate it properly. That is my opinion.

9366. Is there any change in the character of farming. Is there more feeding of stock than there used to be?—I can scarcely say that there is.

9368. I should like to know whether you are in favour of having a duty on the corn that is brought in?—No, I am not.

Mr. Griffiths.

9369. You have told us several instances of farms where the rents have been increased. Can you tell me if the rates have also been increased?—I do not understand that they were raised. I do not recollect well, but I think there has been a re-valuation of the rates about 10 or 12 years ago.

9370. But I wanted to know if that is the case generally?—No. This re-valuation only affected a few farms.

9371. If you have your rent lowered, would you not have your rates lowered too?—I have found but very few appealing for a reduction.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

9372. Just one more question. You were asked as to how you obtained your information in regard to the rents of the farms mentioned in your evidence. Now, in regard to those cases in which you did not know of your own knowledge what the old rent was and what the new rent was, did you get the information from a thoroughly trustworthy person?—Yes, the best men I could think of in the neighbourhood.

Lord Kenyon.

9373. Do you remember the railway being made at Trawsfynydd?—Yes.

9374. Has not that very much improved the property about Trawsfynydd?—No, not particularly.

9375. Do they not get their produce better to market and themselves better to market than they used to when they had a long way to walk?—The railway has been injurious to our market.

9377. May I take it you would rather be without the railway?—No, I do not mean that.

Chairman.

9378. There are a couple of questions handed in. One by Mr. Vincent: "What were the "conditions of the agreement which were "enforced when you left, did they relate to "dilapidations, to the state of cultivation, or to "what?"—I do not recollect it quite accurately, but by one of the clauses I was asked to keep the fences in repair; all the hay and straw on the land also had to be used, unless we had the consent of the landlord to sell.

9379. You do not remember exactly what the conditions were?—No, I cannot remember all the clauses of the agreement.

9380. "If you had to pay anything, what was the thing paid for?"—I was not obliged to pay anything.

Chairman—continued.

9381. "If you received too little yourself, "what sum ought you to have received?"—I did not say anything about that point.

9382. Then there are three questions from Mr. Robert Jones, Mr. Wood's agent: "Are you "prepared to say that the poor rates are higher "now than they were 35 years ago?"—No, they are not as high.

9383. "Do you not know that the fact is "that the poor rates were doubly higher than "they are now?"—I recollect that from 35 to 40 years ago, about that period, the poor rate in our parish was very much higher than it is now.

9384. "Are you prepared to say that the "present rents of the following farms are not "as I say: Pantglas, 120*l.*; Brynygath, 60*l.*; "Brynmaenllwyd, 45*l.*; Bryncrwn, 35*l.*; and "20 per cent. abatement for the last year?"—I knew that there were abatements, but I did not refer to that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

9385. I should like to ask if you can give us any explanation why the rates were higher, say, 35 up to 50 years ago than they are at present?—After the Festiniog Poor Law Union had been formed a workhouse was built, and the Festiniog quarries were then just beginning to develop, 50 to 60 years ago. It was only a union in part then, a union for the workers and for those whose parishes could not be determined.

Chairman.

9386. This is another question by Mr. Robert Jones, estate agent to Mr. Wood: "Are you "aware that the late Meredith Roberts valued "Brynygath, when it came into Mr. Wood's "possession, at 70*l.*, and that after his death, "two years ago, Mr. Wood reduced the farm to "the widow to 60*l.*?—I know that from what I have heard Mr. Robert Jones himself say.

9387. This question is by Mr Owen Wynne: "Have not several new farmhouses been built "on Sir Watkin's property in that district of "late years?"—Yes. Re-examined, 17,441.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. Edward Williams called and examined (through an Interpreter).

The Interpreter read the following evidence of the witness:—

"Evidence of Mr. Edward Williams, Uwchlaw'r Coed, Llanbedr.

"Tenant farmer, farming about 300 acres, rent 130*l.*; Mr. Ansell, landlord; about 60 acres arable land.

"1860 or 1861.—The first farm I went to was Cyfanedd ucha, in parish of Llanegryn, on the estate of Mr. Pugh, Cefn Camberth. The previous tenant paid 24*l.* for it. It was subsequently raised to 26*l.*, again to 30*l.*, and when I went it was raised to 32*l.* I lived there 12 years and held it for 15 years, and I find the rent was afterwards raised to 40*l.* For a long time the landlord failed to get a tenant and held it in his own occupation. While I was there I carried all the materials for repairs and buildings made by the landlord. I myself built some walls, and opened drains, &c. When I left I had no compensation. In 1872 I went to Bronllety Ifan, in parish of Celynin, belonging to the same landlord. I paid 45*l.* rent. I was there for six years, holding Cyfanedd at the same time, and for three years holding Bronllety Ivan alone. I received a notice to quit, with a view to raising my rent. I refused to pay an increased rent. My landlord wished to let the place by the acre.

"A hay shed had gone on fire before I went there. In making a new one, I received the zinc for roofing it, but I had to pay for the labour myself. I had also a roof for a shed, but I had to pay for all the work. I received no compensation when I left. In 1878 I took Uwchlaw'r Coed. At one time, from what I understand, the rent of Uwchlawr' Coed with a mill was 63*l.* The rent of the mill and the small farm attached is now 26*l*; 22 years ago the rent was 108*l.*, and there was a sheep walk for 400 sheep. This was afterwards taken away, before John Williams became a tenant. John Williams, the tenant before me, paid 150*l.* rent. The rent I was to pay was 160*l.*, but as I received 10*l.* towards lime I considered that I was only paying 150*l.* About six or eight years ago rent reduced to 130*l.* I told my landlord I must leave unless he granted me a reduction.

"1878.—Cows (two and a half years old) sold for 14*l.*, now the same sell for 5*l.* to 6*l.*

"A hay shed was made yonder. I received 50*l.* towards it and the timber to roof it. I paid for everything else. Probably it would be worth 40*l.*

"Game.—Mr. Pope takes the game over my land. I suffer considerable annoyance from his keepers going through my cornfields, &c. The trespass I have suffered is very great. They have been constantly over my land and the damage caused is of a very serious character. I propose to bring an action to recover for damage."

Chairman.

9388. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Ansell.

9389. Then why does Mr. Pope trespass on your land in pursuit of game?—Because Mr. Ansell lets the game to Mr. Pope.

9390. And this you consider a hardship?—Yes, the greatest hardship and the greatest oppression in the country.

9391. Is game preserved very highly on your farm?—Yes, pheasants are reared on my farm, and they have been trespassing during the last 15 years.

9392. And doing any damage?—I believe that last year the damage was from 12 to 20 bags of corn.

9393. Where does Mr. Pope live?—Mr. Pope lives near me, on the boundary.

9394. Is he a Welshman?—Mr. Pope is not a Welshman.

9396. You would not consider it as great a hardship if your landlord sported over the land as if it was let to a sporting tenant?—I would far prefer that Mr. Ansell should go over my land, because I feel certain that he would not do so much harm to me. I think Mr. Ansell would not care to damage me so much, because he would be anxious that I should pay him my rent, but Mr. Pope does not care a rap whether I can pay my rent, provided that he is able to get his game on my land.

Lord Kenyon.

9397. Can you tell me how many pheasants Mr. Pope has shot on your farm?—I really cannot say exactly, but he is coming on to shoot with half-a-dozen other gentlemen, and perhaps with two or three dozen dogs.

9398. The pheasants, I take it, are tame pheasants, home reared?—Yes, they are rather tame.

9399. But I mean are they reared by a keeper by hand—are they home reared?—They are reared on my land, but I really cannot say, I cannot prove, but I think that the keepers send them on to my land in order that they may be reared.

9400. I want to know whether they are reared in confinement?—Those pheasants that are reared on my land nest on my land.

9401. They are what we commonly call wild pheasants as distinguished from tame pheasants?—Yes, wild pheasants, but Mr. Pope claims them, and he claims them just as I claim my cows on my land.

9402. Mr. Pope, I take it, pays a rent to Mr. Ansell in order to shoot them?—I understand, I am not able to prove it, that he pays 160*l.* for the part of the estate yonder.

9403. You say here: "I propose to bring an "action to recover for damage"?—I intend sending in a bill to him, but with regard to going to law, Mr. Pope is a lawyer and I am not, and I should like to ask a question of these gentlemen, how many years can I charge him for game in the bill which I am going to send him.

9404. I should advise you to charge him nothing that you cannot prove?—I say that I can prove it, and I say that I can bring my servants to say that what I am saying is correct.

9405. That lies between Mr. Pope and you, and of course we cannot go further into that. Now there is another thing I do not quite understand. The farm you have got now is the Uwchlaw'r Coed?—Yes, Uwchlaw'r Coed.

9406. You say the rent of the mill and the small farm attached is now 26*l.*?—So I have heard, but I am not able to prove it.

9407. But you say now?—Yes, I say so now. I say that I heard a man, when I took Uwch law y coed, saying so.

9408. You say 26*l.* is the rent now?—This man said that Uwchlaw'r Coed was 63*l.*, including the mill.

9409. But now you say it is 26*l.*, and a little lower down you say it is 150*l.*?—So it was told me—that the rent of the mill and the small farm attached to it is now 26*l.* The rent of Uwchlaw y Coed without the mill and small farm when I took it was 160*l.*, but I was allowed 10*l.* towards lime. Neither the mill nor the small farm was ever in my possession.

9410. Is that the farm you hold?—No, I have nothing to do with it.

9411. I should like to make this a little more clear, if I can, In 1878 I understand you took a farm Uwchlaw'r y coed?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

9412. Did that taking include not only the farmhouse and the farm, but also a mill with a small farm attached?—Oh no; it is about 50 years since these two were consolidated, I should say.

9413. It is 50 years ago that the mill, with the small farm attached, and the farm called Uwchlaw'r y Coed were attached together—consolidated into one?—Yes.

9414. What was the rent then, as far as you understand, of the whole consolidated taking, 50 years ago?—I cannot say, but I have receipts in my pocket.

9416. Was the mill, and is the mill and the small farm attached to the mill called Caepenrallt?—I do not know about that.

9417. In the receipt that you put in, of January 5th, 1793, a year's rent for both these takings is specified at 50*l.* 5*s.*?—I had them from a man who was brought up there.

9418. That is just 100 years ago?—Yes, I should think so, judging from the receipts.

9420. Then when you first went, which farm was yours of these two; and did you take both or did you take one?—Only Uwchlaw'r y Coed.

9421. Did that include the mill?—I never took them together, but when they were consolidated they were together. Up to about the year 1868 there was sheep walk for 400 sheep. At that time the mountain was walled up, and the sheep walk added to the Cors-y-gedol walk.

9422. But when you took this farm, Uwchlaw'r y coed, in 1878, the mill was not consolidated with it?—No.

9423. What rent did you pay then?—It is 160*l.*, according to the agreement; but then I had lime to the value of 10*l.*, so I considered that I was only paying 150*l.*

9424. Then what is your point about the rent here?—My point is this. The rents were raised 15, 20, and 25 years ago, to correspond with the prices obtained in the market, and my point now is, that I should have a fair rent to correspond to the market prices now.

9425. What do you suggest as the remedy then?—I should suggest a Land Court, so that the landlords and the tenants should have fair play. If some farms are let too low I should like landlords to have their proper value; and if some of the farms are let too high I should like the tenants to have them at their proper value.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

9426. Have you had no compensation at all for the damage done in pursuit of game?—No, not a halfpenny.

9427. What is the amount of your claim?—I cannot say. I do not know how much I lost.

9428. But if you bring an action, as you suggest, you will have to say something or other in the particulars?—I do not say I will go to law about it, but that I will send in a bill.

9429. How much will you send in?—Well, I do not know; about 6*l.* this year, and about 4*l.* last year, I should think.

Mr. Griffiths.

9430. You say you do not receive any money from Mr. Pope. I suppose he leaves you a chance hare or rabbit, and a pheasant now and again?—Not one; my teeth are perfectly clean of any of them.

9431. That cannot be very fair. I suppose you take a good deal of trouble to keep the nests?—No; I do not go to that trouble, but I do not think it is fair. I certainly believe that.

9432. Do the pheasants come down as far as the haggard when the corn comes in?—They are at it from the time I sow the corn until I get it to the barn.

9433. Do you make a mistake sometimes and kill a chance pheasant instead of a fowl?—No, I do not. If I were a keeper I might do it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

9434. Did you ever threaten Mr. Pope with a long pole?—Yes; that is, I mean his keeper.

9435. Are you troubled with sparrows?—Yes, there are several birds yonder besides Mr. Pope's birds.

9436. Are there a lot of hawks?—No, not many; we see one hovering above in the air when it is likely to rain, so they say.

9437. Do the keepers kill the hawks?—I believe they try to kill them.

9438. What is the consequence?—Indeed I do not know what is the consequence.

9439. Did your farm pay last year?—No, not nearly.

9440. Did it pay the year before?—No, not lately.

9441. How long will you cling to your farm if this continues?—Until the market is better, for fear I might lose hundreds of pounds by selling my stock now.

9442. Then you live in hopes of better times?—Yes, indeed, and I hope it will come very soon.

Chairman.

9443. There is a question put in by Mr. Vincent: "It is only your present farm, not the "first you mentioned, that belongs to Mr. "Ansell"?—Yes.

9444. "Do you know that, at any rate, in "respect of pheasants reared, you have a right

Chairman—continued.

"of action against Mr. S. Pope, Q.C." ?—Some persons have been telling me so, as I was going to send him a bill in order that I might get a claim.

9445. "Has Mr. Ansell affected either the "whole or part of improvements for you with-"out charging any interest" ?—He has not made any improvements since I have been yonder, but he did build a hay-house, and I was allowed 50*l.* towards that.

9446. "Was your rent 160*l.* when you entered "from another farm belonging to another "owner" ?—Yes.

9447. "And is your rent now 130*l.*" ?—Yes, it is.

9448. Then this question is put in by Mr. Chas. Williams: "Have you not taken another "farm within the last five years, and at present "hold the two farms" ?—Yes; that is, I and the children.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Robert Maurice Wynne called and examined.

Chairman.

9449. You live at Peniarth, Towyn, and your property is mostly situate in Merionethshire ?—Yes, my lord.

9450. What district do you wish to give evidence as to ?—I should like to give evidence for the districts of Llanegryn, Towyn, Llangelynin, Llanfihangel, and Mallwyd.

9451. Your estate comprises about what acreage ?—About 9,213 acres roughly speaking; it includes a lot of sheep walks.

9452. Have you anything to say about the manors ?—The manor of Talybont is in Llanegryn parish only, and Mallwyd is in the manor of Mawddwy.

9453. You have no courts held in connexion with the manor ?—We have no courts in Talybont. There is a court held in the manor of Mawddwy.

9454. There is no rule about land being held in fee simple or anything of that kind ?—I can lay down no rule, but I should like to give the answers which I have put down. It is obvious that the owners of unencumbered estates can deal with tenants better than the owners of encumbered estates, to their mutual advantage. There are no copyholds.

9455-6. Are there any enclosures?—There have been two enclosures in Towyn parish early in the century. My opinion is that these are certainly beneficial. They have given room to improve the land, and they have avoided disturbance between the tenants of unenclosed properties. There is no enclosure in Llanegryn parish, but there is one in Llangelynin.

9457. And there are no recreation grounds or allotments for the use of the labouring poor ?—No, not under the Acts, that I am aware of.

9458. Nor squatters' cottages ?—No, nor squatters' cottages. You have asked whether unenclosed lands are adaptable for cultivation. My answer to that is that the chief part of the whole unenclosed land is not adaptable for profitable cultivation in the sense of arable land, as it is too high, and swept by the sea winds. It is of use for cattle and sheep pasturage. The rights of pasturage are vested in the owner, and allotted to the different farms, and included in the rents. They are part and parcel of the rents. That is an answer almost to the following question also, but they are included in the rents of farms which enjoy them, and they are of distinct benefit. If there were no sheep walks, the farms would not command half the rent. One of the most usual questions that we have asked is, when a tenant applies for a farm, "what "sheep walk is there" ?—As to No. 24, I think you can lay down no absolute rule, but the resident owners of the consolidated estate, I think, can obviously attend better to them than an absentee owner.

9460. What is the usual date of entry in your district ?—That is the 25th of March.

that is the right answer to give. You ask whether any cases of hardship have arisen, and I say none to my knowledge. In resuming the occupation of a field or plot out of a holding for the sake of planting, building, or for other purposes, different owners generally serve their tenants with proper notices. The agreement, which I will hand in if you wish to have it, provides for that.

Lord Kenyon.

9462. We have got one copy of it. It was handed in by your brother?—It provides for that, and states specifically that compensation is to be made. We cannot divide it by the same agreement. Fair notice is given to tenants to plant. As to mines, I hardly have any. Then, "if damage is done to the land in timber cutting, is the tenant compensated." Certainly; the landlord is bound to do that by the agreement. I have just compensated a tenant for having a small wood cut down on his farm. "If any "mining, brickfields, quarries, or other industrial "operations have been commenced on land in "your occupation, has the rent been re-adjusted "or compensation granted in consequence." There are scarcely any. What few there were are extinct now, but compensation has been and would be granted, and the agreement under which the tenant holds would provide for that. Then you have a copy of the agreement, which shows the conditions of tenancy. You ask if the clauses are considered oppressive. I believe that none of them are oppressive; I never had any objection taken to them, or heard that they have any effect on the cultivation of the farm. Please do not think I am saying too much, but I think it is fair to put in the ordinary agreement of this part of Wales. "Are penalising clauses common, and are they often enforced." That is important, I venture to submit. The clauses are in for the protection of farms, but I never heard of their being enforced. If they were not put put in in cases of yearly tenancy the farm might be ruined. All the restrictive clauses coincide with the local custom. That is my opinion, and, if you wish for an explanation, I could give you an explanation of why I think so. If you did not have a penalising clause the outgoing tenant, who might be a very bad one, might plough up all your grass land, and he might cart off all the straw, and leave no manure for the incoming tenant, and might do a great deal of harm to the farm. I believe in all the parts of the country for which I speak the clauses are put into the agreements, but are never enforced; and many of the clauses in these agreements are never enforced with a good tenant, and we never hear much about them; but they are put in for the protection of the property, and good tenants never hear of them. Then you ask, "Are tenants usually "given a copy of the agreement or lease, or, if "Welsh speaking, are their contents explained "to them." The contents are explained, and the copy is given to them, and, if they are Welsh-speaking tenants, they take it home with them, and thoroughly understand it before they sign it. I find that in new applications I have for a farm, the would-be tenant always asks for the agreement, and takes it home and consults his people, and thoroughly goes into it before he signs it.

Chairman.

9463–4. Do you fix the rent at so much on the whole farm, or do you put it at so much per acre?—It is fixed at a gross sum; we say the whole farm is worth so much, without giving it field for field, or per acre.

9465. "Is there any uniformity in the rents "of land of similar qualities on the same or "neighbouring estates"?—I cannot answer for the neighbouring estates, but on my own estate, if that is worth anything, the land of similar quality has much the same value.

9466. But then we have been told that on the small farms the rent is higher?—Yes, you see the reason. The small farms are generally better land; the larger farms have what we call a lot of "fridd" land partially enclosed or entirely enclosed with a wall, or a fence of some sort, which of course diminishes the rent and the value of the farm, if taken per acre, but the "fridd" is a great advantage.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9467. And proportionately the buildings are of much more value?—Of much more value on a small farm, and are more costly to keep up. I have a great many small farms as well as big ones, and I find that the keeping up of the buildings costs me a great deal.

Chairman.

9468. What about the mountains in your parish?—The mountains in my parish are not common qua common as I have stated. They are all held with allotted parts of them given to each farm as sheep-walk; they are not common to everyone to turn out so many cattle or so many sheep upon. We do not number them, but we have got boundaries for all the sheep-walks, and the sheep are kept to their allotted pieces.

9469. In fact there is no common then?—There is no common as common would be understood in England.

9470. Then as to the services other than the payment of rent?—I have answered this. The tenants cart some coal for the use of the mansion. I will explain this. It is all put into their agreements before they take a farm as to how much coal they are to carry, according to the size of their farms, and in fixing the rent I always consider that they do this service. We always consider that it is part of the services done by them, and I never heard any grumbling about it, and we always consult their convenience as to the days that they can cart, and so on. There is a clause in the agreement that they should keep a dog, but I do not think I have had a dog at any of my farms for years. It is all mentioned in the agreement, and it is taken into account in assessing the rent. The rent is generally fixed by private treaty in case of change of tenancy. I have had a few farms valued.

9471. Are farms let to the highest bidder?—I never heard of such a thing. I never had a bid offered to me for a farm in my life, and my answer, which you have, I believe, is quite correct; but no bids are ever offered, nor would they be considered. I would not listen to a fellow who offered me a bid for a farm against another man. Such a system would not be good at all; you might have a man bid against his neighbour, and you might get a bad tenant by such a system. We would not listen to such a thing for a moment. As to whether it results in fair rents being fixed or in the acceptance of tenants with sufficient capital, as I have just said, I would not listen to a bid for a farm, and besides it would not at all ensure your getting the best tenant. A man might bid you a high rent for the purpose of getting a farm which he had some fancy for, and he might not be the best man at all. "Is arbitration ever resorted "to as a means of settling or readjusting the "rent?" I have already said that sometimes we have a valuation in the case of a new tenancy, and that in one case one of my large farmers, who is dead now, was asked to value a small bit of land on two farms between two men, but generally we have had no trouble about re-adjusting the rent.

9473. Then the temporary reductions?—I have reduced about 200*l.* I have got the tables here, which I can hand in now if you care to have them. I have reduced permanently about 200*l.* a year out of about 4,600*l.*, or something of that sort, and the particulars of the temporary abatements are all attached to a table which, with your permission, I will submit to you.

9474. Are the abatements general?—Not over all the farms, but on certain farms.

9475. What permanent reductions have been made?—200*l.* per annum would be about the permanent reductions which have been made on the estate since 1880, and there have been temporary reductions of 15 per cent., as to which I have a table to show you here in the past eight or ten years to meet the depression—the bad times. Then you ask: "When rents are raised or reduced, does "the change depend on a re-valuation? If so, "by whom conducted, and at what intervals "is it usual? If not, does the change depend "on fluctuations in prices?" There is no valuation. It is occasionally made in the case of a change of tenancy and none of the same family succeeding. If the same family succeed there very seldom is any alteration. On one of my large farms the same family succeeded: the son succeeded his father the other day, and he is permanently reduced 12½ per cent. in spite of new buildings, new houses, new everything, and the whole drainage thrown in for nothing. The chief fluctuations in prices are, that wool and corn were much lower, and now, of course, stock and corn is much lower, but butter, poultry, and eggs are all much dearer. The labourers' wages are much higher, as you have heard.

9476. Then when do you ask them to pay their rent?—Well, I want it about three to four months after it is due, but virtually now there is a lot overdue.

9477. Do you approve of the preferential claim for rent?—I approve it in this way, my Lord, that if the landlord has no preferential claim for rent—if he could not be sure to get his rent before other claimants—he would probably demand it the moment it was due. He probably would give his tenant no grace at all, and you must look upon your land as a certain amount of capital invested in trade, in my opinion, and if you could not get the security for this capital, and the first security before the tenant goes round to a whole lot of shopkeepers, whoever they may be—I think if you do not have a preferential claim (of course this a political question entirely) the landlord probably would at once say to the tenant the moment the rent became due "I must have that rent down at once." That is my reason for saying so, and all the creditors are well aware that the landowner has a prior claim for the rent. I do not think that it is any hardship to the farmer to feel that he first of all has to pay for the land upon which he hopes to make his living. That is really a matter of opinion quite open to argument, but that is my opinion and my reasons for it.

9478. As to other charges on land?—Well, in all my new agreements the tithes are merged in the rent—of course since the new Tithe Act. In the old ones the tenant still pays. The land tax is paid by the tenant and all the local rates. I believe that is put in everywhere. Of course the owner pays the Income Tax. I heard in some evidence here this morning that an owner refused to pay Income Tax. I do not see how he can. It is recoverable by law.

9479. The local rates have increased?—Yes, the local rates have increased. More is required for sanitary purposes, and in some parishes for school board purposes, and they have increased no doubt.

9479*a*. "What is the average size of farms in your district?"—They vary so much that I could give you no answer to that question.

9479*b*. "Have holdings been consolidated?"—Not in my time. Within the past 100 years no doubt they have been consolidated, a good many small holdings have been merged into larger ones, and in the neighbourhood about me there are a great number of small holdings still. I do not think I have ever consolidated one.

9481. As to their ability to provide for their families?—They provide very well for their families.

9482. There is no general scarcity of labourers?—No, I do not think there is. I do not hear any complaint about labourers; and their wages, I should say, are from 15*s*. to 18*s*. a week; or about 11*s*. to 12*s*. when they are fed. I may as well say that the fences, and so on, are not as well attended to, although they cost us with the drains, and so on, an immense amount to put into order.

Chairman—continued.

9484. Arable land?—There has been certainly a good deal more arable land laid down than pasture, and the tenants provide the seeds. There has been a good deal of it, no doubt. I would submit that it saves a large bill for labourers and horses, and so on, if it is in grass. If the tenant lays down the land in grass, he provides the seeds. I never was asked to supply it; if I were asked I would supply it to a good tenant.

9485. There is no fallowing?—There is no fallowing done virtually.

9486. And the landlords make nearly all the improvements?—Yes, almost entirely. I do not say that some of the tenants do not make some, or help in making some, but they are comparatively few. The tenants have lime frequently. The gates and posts are provided by the owners. The tenants pay a slight sum for the gates. The landlord pays for drainage, buildings, protection from river encroachments. As to the rest of the question it has been already answered. In building and repairs we have spent from 1872 to 1891, 10,258*l*., and we have spent for drainage and protection from the river 11,518*l*., making 21,776*l*., and before that, looking over the accounts so far as I can of my father's time, there was at least 5,000*l*. spent besides that in drains, and for that I am sure I do not get 1 per cent.

Mr. Seebohm.

9487. On the whole 21,000*l*.?—On the whole 21,000*l*. The buildings are never charged anything for, except, I will admit, as to one building; a shed was built for a man, and I think the increased rent was 2*l*. 10*s*. 0*d*. or 2*l*. 7*s*. 6*d*., for a cattle shed; beyond that I do not charge a farthing for building. The tenants haul to them, but we do not charge them a farthing. The landlord does all improvements. I think I have told you that; but if a tenant leaves, as one tenant did, who hauled a lot of stone to build a wall round his fields and the park at home, as it is sometimes called, he was recouped when he left, and we shall certainly recoup anybody who left before he had had the advantage of the thing. 2*l*. 12*s*. 6*d*. is the amount of interest that was charged for that small building, I see. With regard to compensation, that is in the agreement that you have before you, but that, I believe, is in every way quite as fair as the Agricultural Holdings Act.

Chairman.

9488. You say the agreement provides for compensation, and that you consider it more liberal than the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

9489. Then do you contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—We contract out of Section 33, because I think myself, and most of the new tenants that I have taken on lately, that it is better, certainly in these depressed times, for a man not to be tied up in a farm for two years, but to have a short notice of six months. If he is getting into difficulties it is better to change your tenant than to tie him there for two years. That is my opinion and I give it.

9490. You do not contract out of the custom of the country?—No, not at all. I believe all our agreements comply with the custom of the country.

9491. You say that the farmers do not apply for written consent for specific improvements?—I have never been asked. I would give it in a minute if I was asked for it, but I have never been asked.

9492. Then we will look at the agreement?—That is before you. That gives compensation, and the usual compensation as the custom of the country, as to the allowance to outgoing tenants and in respect of growing crops. That is our usual custom in this part of the country, and we adhere to it and it is in the agreement.

9493. Then the manure has to be left, and the hay and straw?—Yes, because if it was all sold off he would be put in a very bad position. The incoming tenant would have no manure to put on his land when he came into occupation, and he would have no hay to feed his beasts. If he took occupation in the spring of the year he would have nothing to feed his beasts on the farm. I think that is usual in England as well as Wales.

9494. If there is no agreement as to permanent improvements the incoming tenant would probably take to them?—Yes, if they are permanent improvements.

9495. Then as to the liabilities of the tenant?—They are part and parcel of the agreement, and are thoroughly well known to the incoming and outgoing men.

9496. And you do not know of any outgoing tenant who has failed to obtain compensation?—No, none of mine who have ever done anything, and have ever asked for compensation, have been refused it.

9497. "Is there any right recognised as "belonging to tenants to dispose of their "interests in their holdings to any solvent "tenant to whom the landlord shall not have "any reasonable objection"?—No, we acknowledge no right, and I never heard of it at all. That is the question of free sale, and I think it would be a very prejudicial thing, because if a man goes into a farm with a lump sum hanging round his neck that he has paid for free sale, as I understand free sale, it is a bad thing, and if a farm is worth a sum of money under a free sale, it would be worth so much more to the owner, but I think it would be a sort of log round a man's neck. It surely must be if he is possessed of the money and can do without borrowing the money or not, still that it is so much more capital into that farm than he would require to work the farm. That is my answer to that. But it is not recognised, and we never heard of it at home, It has never come to my knowledge since I have been there.

9498. What is the custom as to the sale of the sheep. He is obliged to buy them?—Yes, he is obliged to by the custom of the country, and it is in our agreements.

9499. That is the custom of the country?—Yes, and he is obliged to, and where he is not obliged to, no landlord in my position would let his farm to a tenant who would not take over the stock of sheep, because you cannot establish a flock of sheep upon a farm in a moment. It would be ruin to a farm if he did not take over the flock of sheep.

9500. Then you never hear anything about the procedure under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I have never heard anything about it. Nobody ever troubles about it.

9501. Now about game?—I think I can tell you something about the game. The principal part of my tenants do make use of the Ground Game Act. One of my largest tenants has had his son all through the summer trapping and snaring rabbits, and selling them to a large firm of game dealers in Manchester. There are virtually no hares now on the whole of my property. We killed about 60 last year. I have got the whole tables, which I have made out, and on about 4,491 acres of enclosed land which I have got, I have taken six years for example (I do not know whether you think that is enough), there have been killed 14,334 during the whole of that time. I think I am a little bit wrong in my calculation, but I calculated it that there are not three rabbits to the acre. I am not quite sure that I have given you the figures exactly, but there are not three rabbits per acre to the enclosed land during the six years, that is about three acres to a rabbit.

16,084
16,166.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9502. Per acre per annum, do you mean?—Yes. I make out that there are not. I have got the whole table here.

Lord Kenyon.

9503. Was that the average of six years?—The average of six years. In the past six years there have been shot 678 rabbits; there have been trapped 3,571 couples, which we doubled. I will work it out for you again in a minute. I am not quite sure that my figures are right. I was calculating it while listening to the evidence. I think there are about three rabbits, but of course in some places there are more rabbits than others. But the farmers do kill them. I compensated my largest farmer for the damage done; he is an Englishman. Almost all the others shoot and snare. There are hardly any partridges. There are no hares to speak of. We have killed about 60 hares, as I told you, last year. There is not much damage done by game to the crops, and if the pheasants do any mischief—I heard a great deal about pheasants—when the harvest is late we compensate them for the pheasants.

Chairman.

9504. The tenants are not expected to beat?—Not at all.

9506. Of course rates are high?—Railway rates are high; I have no doubt about that, but still I maintain that we are much better off than when we had no railways. Surely it must be much better to put goods into the train than to have to cart them about the country.

9507. There is no co-operation and combination between the landlord and tenant?—Not as I understand co-operation between employers and employed.

9508. Is there co-operation among farmers?—No, not that I know of; certainly not for butter factories, nor for selling produce. As to 141, the farmers always help one another at threshing, and they do sheep shearing, but they do not help one another in harvesting in my parish.

9509. They do not insure?—They never insure their buildings. We have to insure all the buildings. I cannot tell whether they insure their crops, but I know that I have had to build up a large building for a farmer, who burnt it down through putting wet hay into it. There certainly is no combination among the landlords to accept tenants of any certain district; no combination of that kind; and it is very difficult for the owners to say whether there is combination among the farmers or labourers to fix wages. I do not think you could call it combination, but I believe there was something of the kind of a combination among the labourers in Anglesey; I remember hearing something about it a few ago, but it is a county I have nothing to do with, so that I could give you very little information on the subject. I believe many of the labourers belong to clubs. There are several clubs down in my neighbourhood at Towyn. The life insurance I cannot answer as to, nor, of course, as to savings banks.

Chairman—continued.

9510. There are several peasant proprietors?—Yes, there are a good many peasant proprietors; not so many about us, but there are some of them, and one in our parish has a very long line of ownership, and is one of the oldest freeholders in the district. I do not think their number has decreased, not to a sensible degree, and it is probably on account of their having mortgages on their property, and perhaps also from hearing that there is a general depreciation in the value of land. One freeholder offered to me to buy his farm in the spring of the year, which he bought some 50 years ago himself, and I did buy it, but their number, as I told you before, has not decreased. One of my tenants is owner of 6,000*l.* worth of property which he bought from the adjoining owner in 1886. He is a tenant farmer himself now, and has bought this property and lives in my farm, although he has got this land of his own; so I suppose that he thought it was a remunerative purchase. This man I am thinking of now bought in 1876. I happen to have got his contract for sale here, because I was a trustee of the estate after this part was sold. It was about that date.

See 9596.

9512. We can take it that they only work on small farms?—The actual farmer on large farms does not work himself, and the women, the wives, never work in this country out of doors.

Chairman—continued.

9513. What about the provision to children on marriage?—I think in all cases they are able to give the children something.

9514. Do you think rents could be maintained if wages were paid in respect of children labour?—My answer to that is, that rents are equally paid by farmers who have no children, or else very young ones, who could get no benefit at all by children's labour. That is my opinion upon that.

9515. Then, as to the proportion of farm labour which is hired, as compared with that rendered by members of the household?—I think that must depend upon the members of the household. If a man has a lot of grown-up sons they can help him on the farm.

9516. Then you agree that most of the unmarried men are lodged upon the farm premises?—Yes, and most of the married men have cottages, and all get gardens to them, as is reported upon by your secretary in his report as to the state of the Union. As to those who live on their employers' finding or their own finding, that varies; most of the unmarried men live in the houses.

9517. What is the amount of the labourer's cash wages?—I should say if he has no food, they are about 15*s.* to 17*s.* a week; that is about what we pay; and if he has food, so far as I can make out from the farmers about me, they get from 10*s.* to 12*s.*, if they are fed by the farmers.

9518. And you think it has risen a third in the last 25 years?—Yes; in the last 50 years you mean.

9519. In the last 50 years?—Yes, I should think it has, because I remember labourers when I was a boy—well, 50 is longer than I can remember; but getting on for 40 years ago, when their wages would be about 8*s.*, and now it is represented by 12*s.* Yes, I should think it has risen.

9520. Are they fair wages do you think?—I think they are fair wages for the labourers, because food for the labourers was never so cheap at any time before as it is now.

9521. Sleeping accommodation is better?—Certainly very much better. We are continually making it very very much better.

9522. And cottage accommodation too?—I have spent an immense lot on that. That is greatly improved. We have no cottages hardly without two or three bedrooms in them. We never build one now without.

9523. Then you say "many farms have cottages on them"?—Yes, a great many of them have, but I have one large farm with an excellent cottage on it, and the people will not take it and live in it. The labourers will not take it because it is away from the gossip of the village; they like to get into the villages.

9524. It is the isolation that they object to?—Yes, it is isolated. It is only a quarter of a mile from the farmhouse; it is a capital good cottage, with water and everything, and yet the labourers on that farm will not take it; the farmer always tells me himself that it is because they want to go to the village, where they can gossip. That is the reason that the man himself gives me.

9525. Then you say the men's condition has improved?—Yes.

9526. Then you say, "cottages have gardens "in nearly every case. There are no allotments, "but very many small holdings exist"?—Almost all my cottages have gardens. There are no allotments, but there are a great many small holdings in the neighbourhood, and I am going to try now to see if it cannot be extended. I have had one application from a cottager; he is my woodman in the village; he would like to have cow land, and I am going to try to encourage something in that direction. But, of course, to take land for allotments very often may turn a farmer out of his farm. There is the difficulty about that. It means turning somebody out of his farm or some portion of his farm possibly, which will be sure to be said to be the best fields on the land if you take it from him. That is the difficulty. But I quite agree that they should have gardens, all of them; and, if possible, I think a bit of cow ground is very excellent for the cottager. I do not agree with what somebody said at Bala, that there was no good in giving the cottagers cow ground.

9527. Are the cottages let by you or by the farmer?—They are almost all let by me. In almost every case where there has been a change of tenancy I have taken them over. I think they are much better let direct by the owner. Then we are responsible for seeing that they are tidy and kept in proper order, and that the labourers are not rack-rented or anything of that kind; because it is very hard to tell what rent may be imposed upon them if they are let by the farmer.

immensely improved, and is much cheaper than it ever has been in my opinion.

9529. Then as to keeping accounts?—I do not think many keep accounts; some do.

9530. When did the present depression in trade begin?—I should have thought the worst part of it, in our neighbourhood, from 1884 to 1885; it might have gone back before that, but it has varied very much. It has not been continuous the whole time.

9531. Then, what are the principal causes of the depression?—As to the principal causes of the depression and what classes are chiefly affected by it, I would say that the reduction in the price of stock and wool and sheep, and an increase in wages and rates are the causes of it. Many of these rates, like the school board rates, are voted for by the farmers themselves. Instead of occasionally combining voluntarily to avoid a school board they will vote for one, as I know in one or two parishes I am interested in; and that always causes some amount of expense—large expense in a great many cases.

9532. You have no remedy to suggest?—Well, that is a very large question.

9534. Then, will you put in the amount spent for repairs?—Yes. "From 1870 to 1892, both "inclusive, there has been spent in repairs and "improvements the sum of 24,760*l.*; in buildings "and repairs, 11,981*l.*, and in drainage, 12,779*l.*" With regard to buildings and repairs, bar 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, which is a trifling item that I mentioned to you, I never charged, or my father before me, one single farthing for buildings. With regard to drainage, in addition to this 12,779*l.*, there was another 5,000*l.* spent a few years further back, and I do not think I got one per cent. upon the whole outlay for the whole thing. In addition to that, it is done under the Land Drainage Acts, and I am liable on the ordinary rate; that, now, is made to pay generally about 180*l.* to 200*l.* a year for what is called the Maintenance rate, to keep up these farms, in order to command the rents where they have been raised at all by the drainage. The details can be given. From 1857 to 1863 there has been about 1,200*l.* to 1,400*l.*, and the interest on this may be about 35*l.* Between 1863 and 1870 there has been about 5,000*l.* spent in drainage, and the total increase of rental for these last sums, 5,000*l.* and 12,779*l.*, total 17,779*l.*, is about 138*l.* to 140*l.* per annum.

Then against that I have got to set about 2,000*l.* a year, roughly speaking, in outlay to keep the thing up, in order to command rents. You ask: "How many, and what cases have you on your "estate of families having held the same farms "for generations"? I say we have 10 to 15 families who have been a long time on the estate. One told me the other day that his family had been there about 300 years; it is only a small farm. Others from 140 down to 30 or 40 or 50 years. When there are vacancies we often have applications from members of the same family. I have got a table that is included in my replies. These are the farms which have been reduced in rental, the names of them, and the amounts. There is a spare blank sheet of returns of each year in which those reductions have been made upon the rentals, during 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1892, and 1893, varying from 5 per cent. to 12½, 10, 10, 12½, 10, 10, 5, 5, and the last year 15 per cent., besides many other allowances made to individual tenants. The rental, I consider, is reduced 205*l.* or 206*l.* a year permanently since about 1878, and 165*l.* a year since 1880. Then there are tables with regard to the game, which I do not suppose you want to trouble with.

9535. You put them all in?—I should like to put them in.

9536. With regard to rabbits, will you explain whether you meant one acre to three rabbits, or three rabbits to one acre?—At Peniarth, on enclosed land and some of the unenclosed land, from 1887 to 1892, both inclusive, there were 778 rabbits shot, and 7,142 trapped; total 7,920. The acreage is 4,491 acres, so that there were not more than two rabbits to an acre. See 9501.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9537. In your agreement you have some restrictive clauses, but you tell us they are not often enforced?—No, very seldom.

9538. I think I heard you put stress on the fact, as I did in Mr. Walter Jones's evidence yesterday, that they were put in rather against very bad tenants?—Just so.

9539. As a matter of fact, have you ever had occasion to put them into operation?—I have never had occasion to turn out but one tenant in my life, a man who now is in the room, for arrant bad farming, I turned him out because I could not do with him any longer, and I believe all his neighbours agreed that I had justification and that I was obliged to do it. He is the only man I have ever turned out in this country.

9540. With regard to the number of sheep that are allotted to a farm, do you restrict them?—No, we do not generally. One farmer I have got is restricted to the number that we should take over. I see the tenant in the room now. He is limited to the number that we should be responsible for. We generally consider the varying character of the sheep walk, it will carry two to two-and-a-half or three sheep per acre, but sometimes they try and stuff more on.

9541. Then on any of your farms do the sheep runs overlap one another, so that the sheep of one farmer would be mixed up with the sheep of another farmer over the sheep runs?—Yes, of course, the runs are all open mountain. They are not enclosed.

9542. Is that a cause of quarrelling?—No, we do not often have a fuss about it. Of course, there is occasionally a row, when the bigger farmer with the bigger flock of sheep is accused of trying to override his poorer neighbour with the weaker flock, but it very seldom comes to me to be adjusted. We very seldom have a row about it.

9543. Do your tenants come to you for adjustment of these troubles?—Oh, invariably.

9544. Because you speak Welsh?—Well, I hope so, but they invariably come to me. They are always to be seen in the office any morning.

9545. Then another of the customs on your estate, which I understand to be part of the agreement, is with regard to the tenants hauling. Is it the custom on your estate that the hauling is done by the occupier?—With regard to hauling coal for the use of the house, do you mean?

9546. No, I mean hauling materials for repairs?—Yes, it has always been the custom, and I have never heard it objected to.

9547. I understood you to say that in one instance where an occupier left his holding you compensated him for that?—Certainly. He carted stone for a wall round the farm. He occupied the farm. He being a tenant of part of the farm, carried the stones, and then when he left soon after he was compensated. That we should always do, naturally.

9549. You say that the existing buildings would be suitable?—Generally suitable. You mean to ask whether it would involve extra cattle sheds, or something of that sort.

9550. Yes, because that has been a great deal done in some parts of the country?—Yes, if it was necessary we should try to build them, and we are going on building them, but we should not charge for them.

9551. You have not found it a large expenditure?—No, not so far beyond the general amount of building that we are doing.

9552. Then I understood you to entirely repudiate admitting any competition for rents. You would not take the highest bidder for a farm that chanced to be waiting because he was the highest bidder?—Certainly not. He might not be the best tenant at all—surely not.

9553. Thus you consider that you fix what is a fair rent and not a competition rent?—I believe so.

9554. In your opinion, from your point of view?—In my opinion. I believe so and I will not listen to competition. I never had an offer made me of any competition at all.

9555. I think you also repudiated free sale?—Yes, I think it would be a very mischievous thing.

9556. What I understand by free sale is the sale of goodwill quite independently of any unexhausted improvements?—Yes, unexhausted improvements the outgoing man ought to be fully compensated for, but free sale, as I understand free sale, would be adding an increased rent to the property.

9557. Once admitted it never afterwards could be refused?—Probably not. I do not see how it could be, but I think it would be a very mischievous thing. Either the land is worth the rent or not, or the landlord is getting more money than the land is worth; in other words that tenants, owing to land hunger or whatever you like to call it, pay more the than true value of the land.

9558. Are you able to speak for your neighbours as well as for yourself that free sale is not a custom of the country?—I think I can speak for the surrounding properties near me. I am not authorised to speak, mind you.

9559. I did not ask you that. I only meant to ask whether you knew whether it was a custom or not?—I believe as a fact that it is not so. I believe it is not a custom at all that any price is given for goodwill, so to speak. That is the best of my belief.

9560. In regard to fixity of tenure, you say you have never been asked for leases?—Never; never once in my life, nor was my father before me in his time.

9561. I think you went further than that, and said that even if a tenant offered it you would accept it?—Certainly, it would be rather to my advantage in these days if he had capital.

9562. What is your opinion in regard to a Land Court?—Oh, I think it would be a very mischievous thing. I can give my reasons for that. I do not see that it is at all necessary. I believe if you have a Land Court you put the landowner into the mere position of a rent receiver. He is like a sort of mortgagee of the property. His direct interest in connexion with his tenants would virtually cease. He would simply be a man to receive so much money on a fixed day. He probably would do no repairs unless in some way he was bound to do them, which probably would not be the case. It would be something like Ireland, where the tenants have to do most of the repairs themselves. If that is the court the farmers are thinking of, I do not think it would be of any interest to the landlord to improve his property. His personal connexion with his tenants, which in Wales so far hitherto has been good, and kind, and friendly, would probably cease. He might turn himself into an absentee, which I think is exceedingly bad. I believe that the whole country would go very much to the worse than it is now, while the landowner lives on his property. I am as strong against absentee landlords as anybody could be. I think your duty, as long as you own land, is to live on your land among your people and try to help them in bad times or good times, as the case may be, and to be there and hear what they want, but I no not see what earthly good a Land Court would do. As to rents, we can agree among ourselves surely by freedom of contract and say what is a fair and reasonable rent. I think all this talk about land hunger in Wales would in no way be benefited by a Land Court. I do not want to praise myself, but, if I might hand them in, I have here two addresses that my tenants have given me on two different occasions at intervals of 10 years, in both of which they express their satisfication with the interest and the kindness that I and my father have taken in them. I believe that is the general opinion as to most of the landowners in this part of Wales now. I am pretty sure it is, and I do not see that a Land Court would do one single bit of good. That is my opinion. I do not think we should be one bit better, and, on the contrary, I think we should be a great deal worse if rents were fixed judicially. I presume the landlord would then cease to do repairs. Another important point is that if the landlord had his rent fixed judicially, he probably would demand his rent the moment it became due. He would give no grace to the tenant; the tenant would simply be to him a man who owed him so much money, like anybody else. I do not think it would be a bit of good, and there is no necessity whatever for it in Wales. I believe rents can be fixed between landlord and tenant perfectly easily. Of course we have to mind bad times when we do meet them, and, I believe, the majority of landowners have met them, and in some instances the tenants, I think, acknowledge that they have been fairly met. That, sir, is my answer to your question.

Professor Rhŷs.

9563. Sir John Llewelyn alluded just now to the fact that you talked Welsh to your tenants. Are most of them Welsh-speaking?—All but one; I have only two Englishman on the whole property.

9564. And you consider, I suppose, that that greatly facilitates you in your dealings with your tenants?—Oh, most certainly.

9565. With regard to cottages, do they usually pay as a matter of investment. We have heard a good deal about cottages lately?—You mean if I build them as an investment?

9566. Oh, yes?—No, not at all.

9567. You build them for the indirect use of them?—For the use of the estate. We must have them to keep the labourers on the estate, but they do not pay as an investment.

9568. That is what I wanted to get at?—Oh, no, not at all. The worst property in the world is cottage property, I think.

9569. That is what we have heard before. Then with regard to farmers' accounts. What do the farmers go by. They do not seem to keep much in the way of accounts?—Well, it is very hard to know whether a tenant does keep accounts, but I see one of my tenants in the room who, I believe, keeps as good and correct accounts as possibly any of the others do. I am now only giving you an opinion, mind. My own opinion is that they do not keep regular book accounts, if you mean that sort of accounts, but I really cannot tell you.

9570. You mean they go partly by the banker's book?—I think they go by the banker's book as much as anything, but I cannot tell you. Mind you, that is only an opinion.

9571. But, as a matter of fact, do you happen to know of any farmer on your estate or on anyone else's who keeps accounts that distinguish as between income and capital, or could keep such accounts?—Well, as a matter of fact, there is or was in the room behind me one man who always tells me that he keeps regular accounts, and the one English tenant I have quoted, who is a very intelligent man, I should think probably keeps accounts, but I should doubt as to the generality of the tenants keeping them.

9572. You mean keeping them to that extent?—To that extent—to the extent of distinguishing between yearly income and capital, if you mean that.

9573. Yes, I mean that?—I should doubt it, but of course I cannot say.

9574. I am not quite sure that I understand your remark about the fair maids of Merioneth. You said they never worked; what did you exactly mean?—Well, what I say is, that the farmers' wives do not work out of doors. Of course on the smaller farms the wife may help in the hayfield or something of that kind, or she will go and dig up potatoes, but the larger farmers' wives do not work on the farm. There is no woman labour in the ordinary sense.

Lord Kenyon.

9575. In the sense of manual work?—In the sense of manual work, bar that the wife would go and raise potatoes in the field and she might help on some small holding, but the wives of the large tenant farmers would not dream of such a thing.

9576. She might help in the dairy?—She would help in the dairy to make butter and that kind of thing, but she would not do outdoor labour except in quite the small holdings.

Professor Rhŷs.

9577. You mentioned that the colleges have been doing something in the way of encouraging dairy teaching?—Yes, Aberystwith and Bangor.

9578. Do you think there is more room for that?—Yes, I think there is great room. I think if we could get better butter in the market it would pay very well. Our butter is not half good enough for the market price it fetches now-a-days. If we could get better butter it would be a very great assistance, and would be a source of very great profit to them; so I hope the colleges will go on with their teaching.

9579. Is there anything else that they could do besides what they are doing in connexion with dairy education?—I think they might, perhaps, include cheese making among their classes, which would be a very great help, because notoriously the cheese-making countries now-a-days are doing very well. In Cheshire, and parts of Shropshire, where they make cheese, they are doing very well. I do not see why in many parts of this county we should not be able to get some sale for the cheese made.

9580. We had yesterday some witnesses who talked about fencing, and so on. They used the term "rood." I do not know whether you can tell us what is the usual length of the rood in Wales?—I think it is eight yards.

Mr. Seebohm.

5981. You know the properties all round about here. Are you in a position to say distinctly that there is nothing here like the custom there is in Ireland, of the tenants making their own houses and doing all the improvements?—Certainly not. I never heard of it. The owner does everything.

9582. Would you think that if that could be proved of Wales it would go a long way towards proving the necessity for free sale and a Land Court?—If it could be proved that the tenants did it?

9583. Yes?—Oh, it might be a strong argument clearly then in favour of something of the kind, because the tenant would expect protection for anything that he had done; but I say, if I understand it aright, that there is nothing of the kind done in this part of Wales.

9584. Then what it really comes to is this, is it not, whether by some sort of extension of compensation for improvements we can get rid of the feeling that has been shown in our evidence in certain cases, of walls being made, and things of that kind, which do not come under the large category of houses, and yet do not come under the terms of the agreement or of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—But do not you think that the Agricultural Holdings Act is sufficient to cover all these things? I have not got the Act by me, but the words are, I think, "New buildings, "draining, fixed machinery, reclaiming, making "new roofs, fencing," and so on, "with the "written consent of the landlord or agent." Possibly you may be right.

9586. But does everybody do so?—I think so. To the best of my belief everybody would. No tenant would be allowed to leave his farm leaving behind unexhansted improvements of which he had not a fair enjoyment, a reasonable, and a very reasonable enjoyment. He would never be allowed to go away on any decently managed estate without getting compensation. That is my opinion.

9587. Then that may be, and very properly, protected on a good landlord's estate by the good terms between him and his tenant, but in the case of a bad landlord, or in a case where there is a disagreeable feeling between the landlord and the tenant, is there not a sort of loop in the law, something wanting in the law to protect the tenant in those cases?—As against a bad landlord you mean, against a predisposed bad landlord?

9588. Yes?—But do not you think the Agricultural Holdings Act protects the tenant?

9589. We are told that it is hardly understood here in many cases?—I have heard that said at Bala the other day, but I cannot quite agree with that. I think it is understood fairly well.

9591. We are talking of a bad estate?—Yes, of course I am only thinking of a bad estate, but it must be a very bad estate where the owner cannot come to terms with his tenants upon going out.

the other side of the county, I have hardly ever heard a case where it was not easy to settle between owner and occupier. Of course there is the possibility that such a bad landlord might turn up, and it might be to somebody's advantage, but I do not think it would be to the general advantage of the public at all to have any sort of outside party, and as to a land court, I can only repeat what I have already said about my feeling as to that.

9593. Just one more question. With regard to the payment for improvements and also the payment say for the sheep, is that a charge upon the landlord or upon the incoming tenant?—As to the sheep first of all, in all my agreements it is a direct charge on the landlord. He says he "shall" take to the sheep. In my new agreements, which were made when these compensation clauses were all put into them, it says the landlord "may" take to the sheep. Some tenants, on taking their farms, have said "Well, the word 'may' does not compel you to "take our flock of sheep." I say no, certainly not, but on the other hand, I will not take and would not take any tenant who would not take to the flock of mountain sheep, because you cannot establish a flock of sheep on a mountain for several years. Therefore, the word "may" and the word "shall" are pretty well equivalent, but I, for my own protection would not allow the sheep to be sold off the farm, I should either buy them myself and turn them over to the incoming tenant, or if a man applies for a farm the first sine quâ non is that he shows that he has sufficient capital to take to the flock of mountain sheep.

9594. But in case he did not take to them, or became insolvent or anything of that sort?—Then I should take to them for my own protection, because I could not afford to have them sold off the farm, because as I say you could not establish a flock on the farm for several years. These are mountain sheep, and it is not like buying a lot of sheep in England and turning them into a field, they would not stop there, they would be all over the country, you could not keep them.

9595. Then the change in your agreement from "shall" to "may" is practically of small importance?—Practically of small importance. That is the explanation of it. All the "may" means is that I may buy them all, and I say I should buy them all, because I would not allow any tenant to come into the farm unless he had capital sufficient to take to them, or he would be no use on the farm.

Mr. Richard Jones.

9596. Do you want it to go abroad that this gentleman who bought the estate for 6,000*l.* accumulated the money by farming on your estate?—I cannot say how he accumulated the money, and I do not want anything to go abroad that is the least unfair to him. All I know is the fact that he bought it for 6,000*l.* His father was tenant of the farm before him. and several of his family are in large farms. I really cannot tell you where he got the 6,000*l.*

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

I never asked him, but I know the fact that he did buy the 6,000*l.* worth of property, and he lives on my farm still as a tenant.

9597. I think you said that the large farmers did not take part in the manual labour on their estates?—No, very little part, not the actual large farmer himself, very little, not in the direct manual labour. The smaller farmers do.

9598. How many acres do you consider a large farm in your neighbourhood, that is about Llanegryn?—I mean a farm of 150 or 200 acres, or 100 acres, or something of that sort. I mean the larger ones—the farmers of, say, 150*l.* to 200*l.* rental. They would not do much actual manual labour in my opinion.

9599. If they came forward and said they did, would you still contest that statement?—Well, I only know by not seeing them actually working in the fields. They may help in hay harvest, of course, and in corn harvest, and that; but they would not do the rest of the general manual labour of the farm. That is my opinion.

9600. You say that landlords have borne their proper share of the depression. Can you give us any instance where landlords have reduced their establishments by discharging gamekeepers, and in other ways?—Yes, I can give you one of my own, because I have discharged a gamekeeper of my own, and I did reduce a great deal. If you lose 600*l.* or 700*l.* a year you have naturally to reduce a great deal.

9601. Do you know of any other instances?—Oh, I cannot speak for other people. I cannot really tell you what other people have done on account of the depression. I can only speak for myself. I know I have to cut my things uncommonly fine to keep the tenants living.

9602. Just one other question. I daresay you can answer it. Let me read you an extract from Mr. Doyle's report, published in 1882:—"A great number of our farms were brought to "the market in the last 15 years, and have "been sold at from 35 to 45 years' purchase, "and owing to the high price given for the "property, the rents have been increased, and "are considered high. About two years ago we "re-valued all rateable property in our union, "taking the rent as a basis, and the result is an "increase in the rateable value of the union of "nearly 18,000*l.*" Now this occurred in the Dolgelly Union. Are you able to confirm that statement?—That is in 1882?

9603. Yes. The report was published in 1882, and we have heard to-day statements as to property being continually brought into the market?—Well, not since 1882. About the year 1876 or 1878, or thereabouts, there was a very large estate put on the market near me.

9604. This refers to the 15 years previous to 1882?—Well, there was a large estate put on the market adjoining me, and it was split up very much. But I believe the present rental of that estate (I am only telling you from hearsay) is much lower than it was when the present owner bought it in 1878 or thereabouts.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

9605. According to this statement, it says that several farms were brought on to the market—several estates?—This estate was an estate of over 6,000 acres. It was split up into a great number of lots; in fact, it was allotted, a great deal of it, and it was sub-divided into an immense lot of small portions, the main part being sold with the mansion. Since then there have been a certain number of farms changed hands in the neighbourhood. I have bought some myself, and the produce of them does not pay certainly more than 2½—not 2½ per cent.—not a bit more.

9606. When farms come frequently into the market, how does that affect the question of rents?—How do you mean?

9607. What is the consequence upon the rents as a whole?—I do not quite understand you.

9608. Has rent a tendency to advance where farms are brought often on to the market?—No, indeed I do not think it has. If a farm is sold now, I know from my own experience—I bought one two years ago, and I had to reduce 15*l.* on the rent directly. That is, if I am answering you correctly according to your question. I am not sure that I follow you.

9609. Is not the tendency to advance rents with a view to the sale of the property?—You mean prior to the sale?

9610. Prior to the sale?—Raising the rent for the purposes of the sale?

9611. Yes?—I do not think so. This large estate near me had been re-valued, I think, some years before it was sold, and I do not think that there was any great increase just prior to the sale. I have available the whole of the old rentals there, because I was eventually a trustee of the estate. Of course, a fellow selling a small farm might try to put a fictitious value upon it; but you naturally would have the farm valued before you bought it. You would go and look over it yourself. That is, if I am following your question rightly.

9612. Then in that case you are not prepared to confirm this statement?—That is as to the Union rating?

9613. That the union rating is based on the rent?—Well, I cannot dispute that there was an increase of the Union rating and of the county rating. If it is going back to the county assessment, I was, probably, chairman of that committee; I was chairman of quarter sessions about that time. But we had all this threshed out at our county council the other day. There was a great increase then, but that was in fairly good times. Some of that increase in the union rating would be for new houses at Barmouth and Dolgelly and other places; it would not be a mere agricultural increase. We had a great fight at our last county council. I was trying to get the proposed new basis, which is now to be adopted, reduced by getting 10 per cent. given us back instead of 5 on the agricultural value which they proposed to increase, but I was defeated by the county councillors. I do not know whether I have answered you correctly, Mr. Jones; I hope I have.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

9614. Of course, your explanation does not coincide exactly with this statement?—I wish I could make it clearer. As regards the union. The union, no doubt, was increased in valuation 10 years ago, and the whole county was re-rated.

9615. But, according to your statement, you make out that the rating was increased owing to the erection of cottages chiefly?—No, I would not say the cottages. I would say houses in Barmouth and Dolgelly, and so on. I think you would find, if you went into that increase of the union assessment, a good deal of it was due to the re-assessment of the railways in the county. You are talking of Dolgelly, of course.

9616. Yes?—Not of the county assessment?

9617. The Dolgelly union assessment?—The Dolgelly union assessment. I think a good deal of that was owing to the re-assessment of the railways if I remember rightly. Of course, 10 years is a longish time to go back.

9618. This attributes it chiefly to the property changing hands?—And being raised in rental on account of the change in hands?

Mr. Griffiths.

9620. I am very pleased to find that you and your tenants are on such good terms. May I ask just one question upon what you said just now. You said you thought more could be done in the way of poultry farming?—I think so.

9621. Are the farmers on your estate provided with accommodation for poultry farming?—You are suggesting whether it would be good to give them more hen-houses, or something of that sort.

9622. Facilities for rearing poultry?—I think it is a very good suggestion. It never was brought to my notice. I never was asked about it, but I think it is a very good suggestion.

9623. And I think it is a thing that could be improved very much?—I think so. It is a very good idea.

9624. Especially round Barmouth and in this neighbourhood?—Yes. I can assure you there is an immense trade down in my neighbourhood. At Llwyngwril Station, if you looked this morning, you would have seen a great trade being done there. It would be well worth while for the farmers if there were a great deal more done.

9625. And in the way of producing a better breed of fowls?—Better breed of fowls, and trying to provide eggs for the country instead of buying all we do from Holland. I think it is a very excellent suggestion, and I hope the Commissioners will do their best to advance it.

9626. Now and again you might make the tenants a present of an incubator, that would not be a very bad thing?—Not at all, if the tenant would attend to it and not roast the eggs in it.

9627. And in return he might make the landlord a present of a pair of fowls now and again?—Sometimes they do.

9628. They are all on very friendly terms?—They are very good in that way. In olden times we used to get lots of fowls. They are rather too poor now to give fowls.

9629. There is one thing that struck me with regard to the cottages. You are an experienced man; what do you consider would be the proper sum for building a suitable cottage for a labourer on a farm?—In my opinion you cannot build a single cottage, if it is to be a sound cottage, on a farm with the necessary accommodation—the pigstye and ordinary sanitary accommodation as is required—for less than 120*l.*, to be a decent cottage. I heard a man say yesterday that you could build one for 60*l.*; you can do nothing of the kind. I am absolutely certain you cannot. Of course if you build two or three in a row they come cheaper.

9630. What could you let that cottage for?—3*l.* with the garden, 2*l.* 10*s.* to 3*l.* That is the usual rent of our cottages; or if it is a very good one with three bedrooms, perhaps you might get 3*l.* 10*s.*, but it must be an extra good one. The average is 2*l.* 10*s.* to 3*l.* 10*s.*, somewhere about 2*l.* 10*s.* or 3*l.*, but it must have a garden and pigstye and everything else, and I am sure you cannot build it for less than 120*l.*

9631. At any rate not for 60*l.*?—Certainly not, nothing like it; not double that; it is absurd.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

9632. Just one or two questions with reference to this agreement. I understand you put this agreement in as being in your judgment a fair agreement between landlord and tenant?—Yes, I think it is a fair one. I do not mean that it will cover everything that could arise, but I think there is nothing unfair to the tenant in it. I think it is rather too long.

under clause 19. Now, the first thing that I call your attention to is this, that if you refuse to pay him any compensation because he has broken any one of the preceding clauses of this agreement, he will have lost his right to compensation under this agreement and he will have lost his compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act, because by relying on this agreement had not given the two months' notice of his claim. Is that a fair position for a tenant to be placed in?—Well, we never should think of doing such a thing. That would be my answer to that.

9634. I quite agree. I do not think for a moment that you would take advantage of it, but I take it that when we are talking of an agreement that is to be fair between man and man, the agreement ought to be fair upon the hypothesis that both parties may be bad or that both parties may be good. If it is a one-sided agreement it is hardly fair?—I do not think it is a one-sided agreement.

9635. Well, it places a tenant almost entirely at the mercy of his landlord surely?—Do you mean that it would be better not to have these compensating clauses at all, but to let him return to the Agricultural Holdings Act?

9636. Most assuredly; because in the case supposed if the landlord were a bad tempered man, and were sorry that his tenant were going or angry with him, he might turn round and say: "Well, look here, I shall not give you any "compensation at all because you have had an "order against you under the Debtors Act of "1869, made in the County Court, and thus "violated clause 6; therefore you cannot get "any compensation under clause 19." Then the tenant says: "I will have it under the Agricultural Holdings Act." Then you meet him with clause 7 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, which says that the tenant claiming compensation shall, two months before the determination of the tenancy give notice, but the poor man has omitted to give notice because he has relied upon this agreement?—I never really heard of such a case or of such a point being raised.

9637. That is so, and as a lawyer it is these unusual cases that, when people quarrel, do arise in court, and it is upon these unusual cases that litigation proceeds?—I think it is very difficult to make an agreement that will provide for every hypothetical case between landlord and tenant upon all such issues, but in my opinion that is rather more liberal than the Agricultural Holdings Act, and I do not think any landlord would ever for a moment withhold from a tenant compensation under clause 19, because there was a breach of some other clause.

9638. That is what the agreement says?—I never heard of such an issue being raised.

9639. The landlord's counsel in court would certainly take it at once?—I have never heard of such an issue being raised at all. I can only tell you that. Then it would be better in your opinion, would it, merely to say that the tenant shall go back upon the Agricultural Holdings Act?

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

9640. I should say so, certainly?—We thought in drawing this that this was more liberal rather than the Agricultural Holdings Act.

9641. Then if it is more liberal by way of compensation and you are satisfied, there is no reason why you should not, as I pointed out yesterday, omit the proviso at any rate at the end of section 19: "Provided that none of the "clauses have been unfulfilled, transgressed or "evaded, the landlord will compensate the "tenant." The agreement to pay compensation is entirely conditional on the tenants having fulfilled every single one of these complicated clauses?—Then he will have to go back to the Agricultural Holdings Act.

9642. Not so, because he would have omitted to give notice?—But is it not his duty to give notice under the Act?

9643. Not under the agreement. Either it is a substituted agreement under the Agricultural Holdings Act?——I see what you mean quite.

9645. Not if he is relying on that agreement?—I see what you mean quite, but the point has never been raised; I never heard of it coming in, but I quite see what you mean.

9646. It has not been raised because, as you very fairly stated, you do not recollect having to enforce an agreement of the kind, or any agreement against any one of your tenants?—We never do enforce half of these clauses. There are a great lot of restrictive clauses that are put in for the protection of the farm and of the property as against a bad tenant. We never do enforce such a clause. As I said, I have only had to turn one man out for bad farming.

9647. But in an agreement a man is entitled to be protected against every possibility?—Certainly, I should think everybody would admit that.

9648. Then we are at one?—I see your point and I think it is worth great consideration. If this agreement does not protect the tenant sufficiently, having regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, I would have that remodelled directly. If you as a lawyer think that it is not sufficient protection to the tenant I would distinctly have that re-modelled, but we went into great trouble in drawing this, and I confess I did not see the point you have raised.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

9649. You see the possibility?—Perfectly. I see the possibility; I think it is very unlikely ever to be enforced. He would be a very bad landlord who, if his tenant got into difficulties, would try to sacrifice his improvements or his compensation, or everything; but I see the point you have raised quite, and it will commend itself very much to my attention in drawing future agreements whether it would not be better to say "You may take the Agricultural Holdings Act pure and simple." That is what you mean, is it not?

9650. That is what I am suggesting to you?—I see it quite clearly.

9651. If the tenant has signed it he will have to abide by the consequences. I only point that out?—Well, we have never had to exercise it. I quite see what you mean.

9652. Now one question in regard to the Land Court. I do not propose to argue the question of a Land Court with you. I have noted what your opinion is, and I just want to know your opinion a little more definitely. Of course a Land Court might be established upon different lines from the Land Court established in Ireland. Were you thinking of the Land Court established in Ireland by that Act of 1881, in expressing the opinion you did?—Well, more or less. That, as far as I have heard from the witnesses, is the suggestion of a Land Court to fix rents; that is what they have in their minds. I think if the Land Court is intended to be only to place the landlord in the position of a mere rent receiver—in the position of a mortgagee, which is the same thing—it would be a very bad thing for the tenants, if that is what is intended by the Land Courts.

9653. In expressing that opinion, by what test do you judge of the expediency. Do you do it by reference to the good of the whole community or by reference to the good of the landlords and tenants only, or by reference to the good of the landlords only?—Oh, certainly not by the good of the landlords only. I mean as between landlord and tenant. I do not say for a moment that it would not be equally mischievous as between the two. I think it would cause the landowner to cease to take interest in his tenants which he now has. I do not at all mean that it would really reflect solely to the detriment of the landowner. I do not mean that at all. Of course I do not know much about the working of the Irish Land Court. I have not been in Ireland for 25 years, and I do not know how the Land Court there does work; but if that is the idea of what is intended by a Land Court, I give my opinion for what it is worth that it would be mischievous in this country and that it is unnecessary.

9654. Then, practically your reason is that it converts the landlord into a rent receiver?—I think it would do so, and that it would very much diminish his direct interest in his property, and in his tenants, and those about him.

9655. So that if it were for the general good that the landlords should be converted into mere rent receivers, you would have no objection?—Well, I do not think it would be for the general good.

9656. But supposing it were?—That is a hypothesis that I really cannot give you an answer to.

9657. You said that things would be worse then than they are now. Am I to infer from that that things are good now?—Do you mean as to agriculture?

9659. One question on another matter, suggested by an observation you made. Are most of the estates—I am not asking you about your own——?—I am afraid I have said too much about my own.

9660. But are most of the estates in this country more or less encumbered?—No, I should say not. Of course, I cannot tell you, but in my opinion I should say certainly not; very few.

9661. I only asked that as the basis of my next question. Are you of opinion that it is very disadvantageous to agriculture for the owner, the landlord, to have his estate encumbered?—Oh, most surely. The question answers itself.

9662. Then, with regard to entail, you referred, I think, to being tenant in fee simple, but a great many of the estates, I suppose, in Wales are still entailed, are they not? Probably the owner is tenant for life as a rule?—I do not know whether I have explained that legally; you, as a lawyer, would know that better. My estate is entailed as far as my own brother goes. It is entailed upon my brother.

9663. I was not asking you as to your own estate. It was only to ascertain how far we are agreed, that is all. It is rather disadvantageous for a landlord to be only a tenant for life, is it not. It is expedient for the general interest of the estate that he should be tenant in fee simple?—Exactly and able to do as he likes; but the Settled Land Act gives him virtually that power now, does it not?

9664. I rather agree that it does?—I take it it would be a very bad thing that a fellow should be hampered so that he could not sell a farm here or there, but I thought Lord Cairns's Act overcame most of those difficulties.

9665. I only wanted to see how far we agreed?—I quite agree with you that the landlord should be entirely unhampered. You may have an estate enormously mortgaged, so that the owner cannot touch a bit of it himself. I think that is a very bad thing, but I thought the recent Acts overcame that.

Mr. Seebohm.

9666. May I ask a question before you go further, just to set right what Mr. Richard Jones brought forward. He read an extract from Mr. Doyle's report in 1882; and I think, in order to understand the extract he read, it ought to be split into two sentences. I think it should read in this way: "A great number "of our farms were brought to the market in "the last 15 years, and have been sold at from "35 to 45 years' purchase, and owing to the "high price given for the property, the rents "have been increased, and are considered high." That is one statement, I think. Then follows this observation, which I think is probably an entirely separate statement: "About two years "ago we revalued all rateable property in our "union, taking the rent as a basis, and the "result is an increase in the rateable value of "the union of nearly 18,000*l.*" The latter statement would apply, would it not, to the general re-assessment for the purposes of rateable value?—Yes, it would. As far as I recollect, I probably was chairman of guardians at the time that was made. I was chairman of the board about that time. I think you are right, and that the increase would be on the railways and on the new houses built in this place and other places in the district.

9667. You think that is the explanation?—I think probably it would be the explanation.

Lord Kenyon.

9668. May I put in to the Commission this memorandum as to drainage?—Yes, if you please. It shows something like the amount we have spent.

9669. May I also have the amount of the rents you get for these fields that have been reclaimed?—Yes, I could give you them on the farms. I am afraid I have not them with me now.

9670. The fields themselves are not separated from the farms?—Not at all; they are all part and parcel of the farms.

9671. It was only with a view of ascertaining how much per cent. you get for that money so expended?—I think I get about 134*l.* a year increase, towards which I have to pay nearly 180*l.* or 200*l.*, on an average, maintenance rate; say 250*l.* in the whole district, of which I own about half. Therefore I am a distinct loser, although the rentals are a little higher. The maintenance rate is paid by me, and is swallowed up, and more than swallowed up, in keeping the banks and things in repair, so as to command the rent which is now got from the farms. For instance, one farm of mine was re-let last year at 25*l.* a year cheaper. The 200*l.* is now 175*l.*, without taking into consideration the smallest fraction of the outlay for drainage. He is reduced 12½ per cent. on his full rental, and no consideration whatever is taken of the drainage. I look upon the capital sum spent on the drainage as absolutely and entirely lost.

9672. Is the land going back at all?—Oh, no; in the upper part it has very much improved—considerably improved.

9673. It is the great expense of doing it?—It is the great expense of doing it that has swallowed up the whole benefit; and the amount of increased rent that the tenant has paid is nothing compared to the cost of doing it.

9674. Then about the preferential claim of the landowner, I understand from you that you think the landowner is likely to be a better friend of the tenant than the shopkeeper would be?—I do think so, most decidedly. If the landowner had no preferential claim, he very

9675. Then I think you are an owner of land in Leicestershire?—Yes, I have four farms there.

9676. In your experience of England and Wales, do you think there is any difference in the treatment of their tenants by English and Welsh landowners?—Not the slightest in the world. My four Leicestershire tenants are treated by me just the same as the Welsh ones, and the Welsh the same as the English ones—not a bit of difference.

9677. All your relations are the same?—Perfectly, and the agreements with them are almost word for word the same as the agreements in Wales; there is no difference in the tenure at all.

9678. You spoke of a number of clubs in your neighbourhood. Do you know whether they are sound or not actuarially?—I never heard anything to the contrary; they are principally in Towyn. I never heard that they were unsound—you mean financially?

9679. Yes?—No, I never heard that they were. I believe in cases of sickness the labourers get a good deal of benefit out of them.

Chairman.

9680. There are several questions handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Jones. The first is: "Do "you wish the Commissioners to understand "that Welsh tenants were always compensated "for unexhausted improvements, or did you "speak of your own tenants, and of them "alone?"—I can only speak as to my own tenants; I cannot speak for other properties.

9681. "What are your grounds for stating "that farmers on your estate are able to "provide their children with marriage portions; "have any cases of this kind taken place "within the last five or six years"?—I really could not say within the last five or six years; but several of the tenants' children have gone into other places, and I believe they had marriage portions. It is a very hard thing for the owner to say what portion a tenant's child has got, but tenants' children have gone to other farms.

9682. In the case of compensation given for damage done by game, who decides how much compensation should be given?—We generally agree with the tenants. It is a matter of talk between the landlord and the tenant.

9683. "Can you specify any cases where "compensation was given, and the amounts"?—Yes, I can say that my chief tenant, Mr. Phillips, of Glanmachlas, had compensation for rabbits for the last three or four years. I do not remember the actual sum now, but I have it at home. It was at the rate of some 5*l.* or 6*l.* a year, I think. He has had compensation for several years, because he thought there were too many rabbits on the farm. Some other tenants, also, have been compensated where there has been a late corn harvest, and the pheasants have been said to do damage. I have not the actual figures by me, but I have them at home.

9684. "Do you breed pheasants extensively "on your estate, and is the damage to crops "great?"?—No, not the damage done by pheasants, because we feed them entirely ourselves. As I have said, in a late corn harvest the pheasants may do some little harm to the corn if it is left long in the shocks on the field. Otherwise, in a harvest like this, the pheasants do not do a bit of harm.

3809, 33. 9685. "Did you ever hear that a gentlemen "formerly residing at Aberdovey (now deceased) "established a secret agency for the purpose of "bringing church landowners, having farms to "let, in touch with church or conservative "tenants anxious to take farms"?—No, I never heard of that gentleman.

9686. Then you never received a circular from that person?—No.

9687. Are you the owner of the village of Bryncrug?—I have only got two houses in it.

9688. Have you got a farm called Pen y Wern on your estate?—Yes.

9689. Have the tenants within the last four years reared any dogs of yours?—I do not think so; I do not think there have been any dogs on any of my farms for much more than four years, but I would not like to swear to that. I do not think there has been a dog walked, as they call it, on my farms for much more than four years.

9690. Then there are one or two questions by Mr. Vincent: "I think you have made a mistake "as to the temporary abatements—will you, in "putting in the table, state whether they are "general or not"?—I have taken them off the rental, I believe they are correct: I believe they are absolutely correct.

9691. Were the abatements over the whole estate?—Yes, over the whole estate, and also in Flintshire as well where I have some property; over the whole estate, and also the small farms down to the 10*l.* holdings.

9692. "With regard to agricultural educa- "tion, is the annexed the prospectus of the "agricultural department of Bangor University, "and are you a subscriber"?—Yes, I am a subscriber to the agricultural classes of the Bangor University.

9693. "And is not your brother one of the "Technical Education Committee of this county "which is concerned with dairy classes"?—He is a member of the education committee.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Richard Davies called and examined through an Interpreter.

15,782. 9693*a*. The Interpreter read the following evidence of the witness:—

Evidence of Mr. Richard Davies, Las Ynys, Harlech, Tenant Farmer.

1868.—In the year 1868 I became tenant of a farm called Cae Glas Maentwrog on the Tan-y-Bwlch estate (Mr. Oakley). The extent of the farm was 83 acres, rent 28*l.*

1870.—In 1870 I received six months notice to quit.

1871.—In 1871 I retook the farm, but 42 acres of land of a similar character to the land on Cae Glas were added to it, and the rent of the whole raised to 70*l.*

1874.—In 1874 two fields consisting of eight acres were taken from me without notice, but I was promised compensation for certain improvements I had made in them. I never received this compensation, but my rent was reduced 6*l.*, i.e., to 64*l.*

1876.—Early in September I received a letter stating that they proposed to add 30 acres to the farm, and increase the rent to 81*l.* I refused to take this land, and was consequently threatened with notice to quit by the agent.

1877.—I received notice to quit as I refused to take the above land. I accordingly went to Mr. Oakley and stated my complaint, and he allowed me to have the farm without the additional piece of land.

1879.—I left as my landlord refused to reduce my rent. During the last year I was there I carted materials towards building, and also kept the walls and fences in good repair without any compensation.

In the year 1886 as the tenant who succeeded me had taken the new piece of land (30 acres) and could not manage to pay his rent, at his request I accompanied him to Mr. Oakley, and told that it was absolutely impossible to pay the rent of the farm. He accordingly reduced the rent to 57*l.* Since then the present tenant has received several times an abatement of 15 per cent., and the tithe is paid by the landlord.

While I was at Cae-glas some four or five acres of the farm were planted with trees. No notice was given me of the landlord's intention to plant, and I received no compensation for the land planted in this way.

About eight years after I came to Las ynys I endeavoured to obtain a lease, but the terms my landlord desired to have inserted in it were such that I decided to become an annual tenant.

The following is a statement of the rents of some farms in the neighbourhood.—

Prior to the rent being raised a farm, called Ty nant, was divided among the above farms. The rent of Ty nant was 45*l.* 10*s.* Five labourers' cottages on Ty nant were deserted.

Lord Kenyon.

9694. Where did you get the figures for the rents of 20 to 25 years ago?—I had the receipts for the rent of Cae-glas, and I paid the rent for several years.

9695. I wanted to know before you paid it. You mention a farm, Las-ynys-fach, which was raised from 90*l.* to 150*l.* in 1873, according to you?—Yes.

9696. That does not tally with the evidence before given. Can you reconcile the two statements? Where do you get the rents of Las-ynys-fach from?—The former tenant paid the rents, and I was there for many years.

9697. How do you know the rent of Las-ynys-fach was 90*l.* Have you the receipts for that 20 to 25 years ago?—I know that from hearsay.

9698. Was Las-ynys-fawr also from hearsay?—Yes, 20 to 25 years ago.

Mr. J. M. Griffiths.

9699. When you came to Las-ynys, you asked for a lease, did you not?—Yes, I asked for a lease.

9700. We have repeatedly heard that tenants never ask for leases. Why did you not have a lease?—I asked Mr. Holland for a lease, and he said that the farm had been doubly improved. And I said perhaps someone would be raising my rent because I had improved the farm. And then he asked what were the respective ages of the children, the boys I had with me, and so on; and he would see that the rent would not be raised at Las-ynys. I told him, "I am not "afraid of the rent being raised during your "lifetime." It was left there then, and he said he would enquire into the matter, but he could not then suddenly give a lease, as it were, without previous notice.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9701. Is that the total amount of refusal, or did you refuse? I understand you to say that you refused to take a lease upon the terms upon which it was offered?—No, I did not refuse a lease from him. We did not enter into any particulars.

Mr. Griffiths: The evidence, according to the statement you have given, is this: "When I "came to Las-ynys I endeavoured to obtain a "lease, but the terms my landlord desired to "have inserted in it were such that I decided to "become an annual tenant."

Lord Kenyon.

9702. Is there any date given for that?—After I came to Las-ynys.

9703. When did you come to Las-ynys?—What you have just now read is not quite accurate.

[The statement was interpreted to the witness in the Welsh language.]

9704. When did you ask for a lease?—I did not ask for a lease as soon as I came to Las-ynys.

9705. What was the date of the entry at Las-ynys?—1879.

Chairman.

9706. Mr. Vincent wants to know how long ago this request was made from Mr. Holland?—It was about the time mentioned when Mr. Robertson was a candidate; I cannot recollect the year. That is the last time he was yonder.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Robert Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

9707. The interpreter read the following evidence of the witness:—

"Evidence of Mr. Robert Jones of Ystumwern, Dyffryn.

"Evidence chiefly relates to the rise on rents in various farms in the district.

"Ystumwern.—Present landlord Mr. Ansel. The rent of this farm in 1840 was 82*l.* 10*s.* In 1841 it was raised to 120*l.*, and a field of 1½ acres was taken away from it. In 1858 the estate upon which this farm was, was sold. After the sale, a large quantity of land was taken from it, but the rent remained the same. The former tenant carted all the materials for building and the materials for draining a large part of the farm. He used to value his work at a sum of not less than 200*l.* Further, a sheep walk for at least 300 sheep belonging to the farm has been taken away, but the rent remains at 120*l.*

"Dolgau.—About 1860 the rent was 50*l.* It was during the years 1860–70 raised at two different times to 60*l.*, which is the present rent.

"Tyddyn gronwy.—In 1853 rent was 28*l.*, soon afterwards raised to 31*l.*, in 1858 raised to 36*l.*, and a sheep-walk for 100 sheep taken from it. Since then it has been twice sold, and I believe the present rent is over 70*l.*

"Ty Isaf Llanddwywe.—In 1840 rent was 15*l.*, in 1858 a house and smithy and about 9 acres of land were taken from it, and rent raised to 25*l.*, at which it remains.

"Taltreuddyn Bach.—In 1795 rent was 27*l.*, raised in 1799 to 45*l.* In 1801 raised to 60*l.* About 1846 rent raised to 77*l.* In 1873 raised to 97*l.*, and later on to 100*l.*, which is the present rent. [Receipts for the above years produced.] When the railway was made, a portion of the land was taken, but no compensation given for the loss.

"Tenant also made several buildings at his own expense such as a hay shed, pig-styes, hovel, and he did all the carting for other buildings, such as the house, cow-house, and stable. In addition to this he made almost all the walls on the farm. He received no compensation for anything done by him.

"Taltreuddyn fawr.—Tenant, J. R. Jones. In the year 1840 the rent of this farm was 80*l.* About 1855 raised to 104*l.*, and again in 1873 to 160*l.* The present rent is 150*l.* About the year 1860 the tenant built a hay-shed entirely at his own expense (about 40*l.*). Later on he built an out-house and a dairy (60*l.*). No compensation received."

Sir John Llewelyn.

9707*a*. Did you make an application for a concession ?—I was not the tenant.

Chairman.

His evidence chiefly relates to the rise in rents in various farms in the district. He was not the tenant.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9708. Did the man who did the haulage make an application for compensation ?—I do not think so.

9709. Would it occur to you that it was the first step to take, to make application for compensation ?—I am not sure whether he did; I do not know. I do not know but that he may have applied for compensation.

9710. You have given instances of rents being raised; do you know of any rents which have been reduced ?—Taltreuddyn fawr.

9711. That is an instance ?—Yes.

9712. Others beside that ?—No, but of abatements I know.

9713. Will you kindly give the Commissioners the source of your knowledge, whence you obtained this information ?—I had the information with regard to Taltreuddyn Bach from one of the members of the family, and I have the receipts in my hand.

Lord Kenyon.

9714. Will you put the receipts in ?—Yes [handing them in].

Chairman.

9715. There are only two questions to ask. They have been handed to me by Mr. Vincent. "Did all these raisings of rent on what is now "Mr. Ansel's estate take place before he bought "it" ?—Yes, all of them in connexion with his place.

9716. "Although you may be able to give "accurate figures as to increase of rent on other "farms, do not you think it rather unsafe to "give hearsay evidence on such matters as "compensation" ?—I think I can venture to give such evidence. The bailiff on Taltreuddyn fawr gave me all the information with regard to Taltreuddyn fawr.

9717. Then you have satisfied yourself in your own mind that these figures are correct ?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID GRIFFITH called and examined through an interpreter.

The interpreter read the following evidence of the witness:—

"Evidence of Mr. David Griffith, Tyddyn du, Harlech.

"Evidence relates to Tyddyn du farms; acreage, 344.

"The above farm was bought in 1856, by the late Mr. L. K. Thomas for 3,300*l.* At that time the rent was 115*l.*

"In the year 1857 a piece was added to the house and a room for corn crushing made by the tenant at the cost of 100*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.*, the landlord paying 50*l.* towards the cost.

"In the year 1858 the landlord spent 11*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* on draining, and the rent was raised 10*l.*

"In the period between 1861 and 1868 a hayshed, stable and carthouse were built by the landlord and the rent was raised to 131*l.* 2*s.* It cost the tenant about 35*l.* in digging the foundations of the above buildings and in the cartage of materials.

"In 1878 a hayshed and other sheds were erected by the landlord. They cost about 150*l.* and the rent was raised to 136*l.* It cost the tenant in digging the foundation, raising stones, making floors and mangers and racks in the sheds, 40*l.*

"In the year 1889 the farm was sold for 4,900*l.*, and thus the tenant was deprived of all compensation for the improvements made by him in the years 1856 to 1889.

"The witness makes the following suggestion to meet the agricultural difficulty.

"1. Security of tenure. Tenants to be secure of their farms for a fixed number of years by lease or otherwise.

"2. Fair rents, proportionate to the value of land.

"3. The following improvements in the agreements between landlord and tenant.

"(a.) Rent to be paid annually.

"(b.) A fair valuation of all crops at the close of the tenancy.

"4. Full compensation for all improvements made by the tenant.

Chairman.

The Commissioners do not ask you any questions.

(Witness.) My present landlord is Mr. Owen, of Brynbellan, Dyffryn.

Mr. JOHN ROBERTS called and examined through an interpreter.

9718. The interpreter read the following evidence of the witness:—

"Evidence of John Roberts, Ceintreforfawr, Talsarnau.

"I am a tenant farmer. I was brought up on a farm called Cwm, in Carnarvonshire. My father held that farm under Mr. Wynne Griffith, Llanfair, near Carnarvon. At that time the rent was 40*l.*; subsequently the rent was advanced to 49*l.*; in another eight years it was advanced to 59*l.* Not a penny was spent by the landlord on improvements or buildings, so that the increase of rent was on the tenants' improvements.

"In another 10 years, or 24 years ago, several farms on the Llanfair estate were sold, and as my mother was at that time a widow with nine children, I, who had a little money left me by an old uncle, rather than see my mother cast adrift, determined to buy the farm, which I did for 2,200*l.*

"About this time I got married and became a a tenant of Dolymoch, under Mr. Oakley, Tanybwlch. Before I took Dolymoch the rent was 130*l.* I had to pay 160*l.* A portion of another farm was added to mine, and the rent was raised to 200*l.*, although the rent of the whole farm—part of which was added to mine—was only 30*l.* rental.

"About 13 years ago I had to leave Dolymoch, as I could not possibly pay the excessive rent. Now, however, the rent has been reduced to about 150*l.*, or 50*l.* reduction.

"When I took Cefntrefor, my present farm, 11 years ago, my predecessor paid about 160*l.* A small farm which was joined to it, and for which 24*l.* rent was paid, was taken away; but in spite of that, my rent was raised to 180*l.*, or an advance equal to about 50*l.*, and this, be it remembered, when the farm had been exhausted by the former tenant.

"I suffer a good deal from the game. My landlord, Mr. Poole, Carnarvon, lets the shooting to Mr. Samuel Pope, Q.C., who sublets it to Mr. Kirby, who re-lets one portion to Captain Corderer, and another portion to Lord Harlech. Although I have a right to the rabbits, yet I fear the consequences of making use of my rights. I have arranged with a man to catch the rabbits on a certain portion of my farm, but in the meantime Lord Harlech's keepers appeared, and commenced ferreting wholesale. When I remonstrated, I received a threatening letter from Lord Harlech, and intimating that if I interfered with them he would see my landlord about it. I would not complain so much if Lord Harlech simply walked over my farm for sporting purposes, but he catches the rabbits in cart-loads and sends them away to supply the English markets, thus making profit on what I consider my own. I would as soon see him taking away a flock of my sheep and selling them to a butcher."

9718*a.* Can you put in the letter you had from Lord Harlech?—The letter is in my possession. I thought a copy of it had been sent here, but it appears it has not come, I can get it to-morrow.

Chairman.

9718*b.* Will you send it to-morrow?—Yes, I will bring it to Port Madoc to-morrow.

TWELFTH DAY.

Town Hall, Portmadoc, Carnarvonshire, 16th September 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.
MR. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. OWEN R. HUGHES called and examined.

Chairman.

9719. Where do you live?—Brynefail-Ucha, Garn.

9720. You are prepared to give evidence with regard to the raising of rents in the district, and the raising of your own?—Not my own.

9721. The raising of rent generally, and the refusal of landlords to compensate for improvements. Is that so?—Yes.

9722. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

9723. And your farm is 191 acres, and your landlord is Lord Harlech?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"I am a farmer, and Brynrefail is a farm of some 191 acres belonging to Lord Harlech. I wish to give evidence more particularly with reference to the farm of Gwern-ddwyryd, Penmorfa. That farm was in the occupation of my family since the year 1826. In the course of that time the rent has been considerably increased. I find from receipts in my possession that the rent in the year 1851 was 74*l.* About the year 1856 a tram-road, of about half a mile in length, was run through the best fields on the farm, but no reduction whatever was made in the rent. In the year 1870 a place called "Cae Canol," of about 12 acres of land was added to the farm, and the rent raised to 92*l.* In the year 1873 the rent was again raised to 102*l.* per annum. In 1886 the farm (without Cae Canol) was sold for 3,400*l.* Since then my mother, the tenant, has had to pay for the portion sold a rent of 100*l.*, and for Cae Canol, 15*l.* In the course of the last 20 years prior to the sale, my father expended considerable sums of money in improving the farm. I have receipts for close upon 250*l.* paid in hard cash for building work and material supplied. In addition to this, my father did the blasting, haulage, and cartage at his own expense. This would mean at least 200*l.*, and most of this, only some eight or nine years previous to the farm being sold, as herein-after stated. This is exclusive of the improvements on the land. I calculate that my father during his tenancy spent on labour and materials hundreds of pounds. A good part of Gwern-ddwyryd used to be pure marsh-land. This my father thoroughly drained at his own expense, so that it is now equal to the best land in the neighbourhood, and there can be no doubt that the owners, Messrs. Huddarts, of Brynkir, benefited on the sale owing to my father's improvements to the extent of 1,500*l.* at least, for owing to the good farming it was looked upon as a model farm. We have never received a penny by way of compensation from the landlords, nor have they given us any assistance to carry out the above improvements. On the contrary, all they have done is to have gradually risen the rent as above stated. I have had an estimate made of the value of the buildings. It was absolutely necessary to have the buildings in order to enable my father to farm the place properly. On this question of building I am of opinion that the buildings and farms generally throughout the district are inferior and insufficient, and that there ought to be some means of compelling the landlords to erect proper buildings for the purposes of the farm, and that where they are erected by the tenant (as in my father's case), there should be a provision enabling him to recover from the landlord their fair value to him. I also think that the tenant should be made secure of his tenancy, so long as he cultivates the farm properly, and pays the rent.

Chairman—continued.

"And as to the rent I consider it very unfair that the tenant should be altogether at the mercy of the landlord, and I am of opinion that the tenant ought to have some voice in fixing a fair rent, either by means of arbitration or a land court, as in Ireland. I am not aware that there have been reductions, notwithstanding the period of severe depression from which farmers now suffer, and have for some years past suffered. I am not aware of a single case of permanent reduction in the rent, but some landlords have latterly allowed their tenants a discount, varying from 5 to 15 per cent. This allowance I consider altogether insufficient to meet the necessities of the case. Prices have fallen from 40 to 50 per cent., whilst wages remain pretty much the same, and as to the labour there is another fact that should be borne in mind besides, viz., that the hours of labourers are shorter than they used to be by two hours. They used formerly to work indefinitely, from early morning until late at night, the labourer's average day being from 5 a.m. to 8.30 p.m., but latterly, owing to an agitation amongst the labourers themselves the hours have been pretty generally shortened from 6 a.m. to 7 p.m. It would, in my opinion, have been impossible for the tenants to pay the rents as well as they have done had it not been for the saving way in which they live. As a rule, the farmer himself, his wife and children, work hard on the farm, and the children go without any wages until all the other payments have been made, the consequence being, that in nine cases out of ten, the farmer himself gets nothing, neither as wages nor as interest for the capital he has in the farm. I do not think either that there is any chance of getting a permanent reduction in the rents without the intervention of the law, because I believe a good many of our landlords have heavily mortgaged their property, and fix the rents high so as to cover the interest. I consider also that the tenants' complete dependence on their landlords produces an unhealthy state of fear and servility in the tenants towards their landlords, and a better system of land laws would, in my opinion, result in the development of a higher type of character in our farmers. I believe that this fear of their landlords is stronger in Wales than in England, because of the great attachment of the Welsh farmer to the land, and the great craving for land that exists in Wales. As an illustration of this I may say that there is a general feeling of being oppressed amongst the farmers, and they are very glad that the Commissioners are coming round to inquire into their grievances, but so great is their fear of their landlords, and so much do they feel themselves to be in their hands that very few of them dare come forward to give evidence, lest they should incur their landlord's displeasure. I know that this is the general state of feeling amongst them from my intercourse with a great many of my fellow farmers. A question very often put to me by my fellow tenants latterly, after it became known that I was going to give evidence before the Commissioners was 'Are you not afraid of your master?'

"There is very little fellow-feeling between the tenants and their landlords, who belong to an entirely different and distinct class which never mixes with the tenants' class. For my own part, though I have been at Brynefail 13 years now, I never saw my landlord except once, when he was pointed out to me at a cattle show. My landlord, Lord Harlech, is an Englishman, a Tory, and a Churchman, whilst nearly all his tenants are Welshmen, Liberals, and Nonconformists.'

"Lord Harlech resides most of his time, I believe, out of Wales, and transmits his business through his agent, Mr. Lawford, who is also an Englishman, living in Oswestry. Many of the tenants are unable to speak English.

"One consequence of the present sense of insecurity under which the farmer lives, in my opinion, is poorer farming, and a consequent deterioration of the land.

"No one in his senses would think of farming now as my father did many years ago."

Chairman—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

9724. When did you leave the farm you were speaking of, Gwern-ddwyryd?—February, 1880.

9725. Why did you leave that farm?—I went as a tenant of Brynefail-Ucha.

9726. Why did you leave the farm, was it because it was sold?—No, my mother is still there.

9727. So you are speaking for your mother?—Yes.

9728. You say the farm was sold, do you not?—Yes.

9729. When was it sold?—I believe it was 1886.

9730. Do you happen to know what the farm fetched at the sale?—It was not all sold, but the part that was sold was sold for 3,400*l.*

9731. How many acres did that represent?—About 12 acres were not sold.

9732. What was the acreage of Gwern-ddwyryd?—About 120 acres; I am not quite certain. I think that is about it.

9733. You say a tram-road was driven through the farm in 1856. Was that tramway a benefit to you?—None at all. It ran to a quarry.

9734. You received no compensation for that tramway?—None at all.

9735. Not from the quarry owner?—Well, I do not know if they paid for any damage done on the farm at the time; I am not quite certain of that; but as to receiving anything from the landlord we did not at all.

9736. Who put the tramway there, the quarry owner or the landlord?—The quarry owner.

9737. Your complaint would have been against the quarry owner then?—But we did not receive any reduction in rent.

9738. I mean for damage. You did not receive any reduction in rent in respect of the land taken away?—No. I am not quite certain whether the quarry owner paid anything. I do not know.

9739. You say you have receipts for 250*l.* paid in hard cash for building work. Could you specify what those buildings are?—A barn, a hay-house, and an engine-house for chaff, and a part was added to the house, and a good many other things besides; he made them quite at his own expense.

9740. Did his landlord agree to his doing those himself?—Well, he referred to the landlord and asked him to do it, but of course he would not do it, and my father could not do without them.

9741. So he did them himself?—Yes.

9742. Your father also drained a large portion of the marsh-land?—Yes, a very large portion.

9743. At his own expense?—Yes, quite.

9744. On that you think Messrs. Huddart benefited at the sale?—I do.

9745. To the extent of 1,500*l.* at least?—Yes.

9746. Then you say you are not aware of a single case of permanent reduction?—No, I am not.

9747. You stick to that?—Yes.

9748. You say also: "I am not aware that "there have been reductions notwithstanding "the period of severe depression," but a little lower down you state: "Some landlords have "latterly allowed their tenants a discount "varying from 5 to 15 per cent." Those hardly agree, do they?—An allowance in rent.

9749. You do not consider an allowance a reduction. You meant a permanent reduction?—I meant the permanent reduction formerly.

9750. Do not you think that the hours of the labourers were unduly long when they lasted from 5 a.m. to 8.30 p.m.?—I do think they were.

9751. They are sufficiently long from 6 a.m. to 7 p.m.?—I believe so, if work is properly done.

9752. Have you ever heard of the case of children receiving wages from their parents other than in the shape of pocket money?—Well, I do not know of any.

9753. You mean not even in the good times?—No, I do not know of any whatever.

9754. Nor do I. You state there is great fear of the landlords. I presume that is not so in your own case, otherwise you would not be here. You are not afraid of Lord Harlech?—I hope he will not do any harm to me after being here, for I only meant to say what was right.

9755. I am quite sure he will not, if he is a reasonable man. You say you have never seen him except at a cattle show?—Not to my knowledge.

9756. Have you ever tried to see him? Have you ever been to see him?—No, never. I do all that is wanted with the agent, always.

9757. Have you anything to complain about on your present farm?—Not at all, only that the rent is too high.

9758. You think the rent is too high?—Oh, it is too high to meet the prices paid for the production of the farm at present.

9759. Have you had any reduction or abatement?—Yes, an allowance.

9760. This year?—Yes.

9761. How much?—15 per cent.

9762. Is not that sufficient allowance, do you think?—It is not near sufficient to meet the prices on the product of the farm at present.

9763. You say that the fall in prices amounts to 40 or 50 per cent?—Yes.

9764. Do you think that is a case of this year, or does it look like being permanent?—It is worse this year than it has been, but we may say that they have dropped some years ago now very much.

9765. But taking one year with another, that would not represent the average fall?—40 to 50?

9766. Yes?—Not with everything.

9767. You say, take six or seven years, that would not be the average?—Perhaps it is a little more, taking all the stock into consideration.

9768. Pigs, for instance, have not fallen?—They have fallen, but very little. I think they are quite as high as ever, but that is the only thing just now.

9769. You think Lord Harlech is an Englishman, I suppose, because he does not talk Welsh. Is that the reason?—Well, I do not know much about his relationship at all.

9770. He has as long a Welsh pedigree as your own, I believe?—It may be so, I do not know, but he cannot speak Welsh; that is what I meant.

9771. I mean so far as the blood in his veins is concerned, there is a great deal of Welsh blood?—I know nothing about that.

9772. You say no one in his senses would think of farming now as your father did many years ago. You mean would not go to the expense that your father did?—Yes, just now, and besides that no one could if he had not a capital besides what he could earn from farming.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

9773. You have mentioned that your father did a great many buildings himself upon the farm Gwernddwyryd?—Yes.

9774. Who did the necessary repairs to the farmhouse and the outbuildings?—The landlord rebuilt the house, but the part where the work was to be done, where the servants were working, was done very small indeed, so that it was very inconvenient, and to make it more convenient my father, at his own expense, added a part to that part of the house—quite at his own expense.

9775. When was that new house built, what year?—In the year 1869 and 1870. Well, this new part later on some years—I could tell you, but I cannot just at this minute, perhaps.

9776. What is the average size of the farms in that district for which you are speaking?—Some farms are very small, and the average, say about 200 acres, some bigger, perhaps; but these big farms have a lot of poor land with them.

9777. Is there much competition for a farm when it becomes vacant?—Oh, very much.

9778. Are there any small freeholders near here?—Yes, lately some have bought farms at public sales, a few, but very seldom before that.

9779. There are not many old freehold properties?—No, not very many old; very few.

9780. Do you think that the farmers during the last few years have been able to make any profit over and above the necessary expenses?—I believe otherwise, that they have run into debt or mortgaged their stock, if they have no means besides farming.

9781. You think that most of the tenant farmers are in debt to tradesmen?—Yes, I believe so.

9782. Do most of the tenant farmers in this district speak Welsh only, or are they able to speak English as well?—Well, the young tenants, most of them, can speak English, but the old tenants cannot. That is the rule, but there are exceptions to that rule.

9783. What language do the tenant farmers habitually use at home?—Oh, Welsh always.

9784. Even the young people?—Yes, there is no English spoken in the farmhouse at all.

9785. You have said nothing, I think, about the cottages for labourers on the farms. Are there plenty of cottages to be had at a reasonable price?—Yes there are at the villages I believe; not in the rural districts so many.

Mr. J. M. Griffiths.

9786. Do I rightly understand that this farm was sold twice?—No, not in my time.

9787. Only once?—Yes, only once. My father bought part of it, and sold it again at just the very same time. He bought it at that time, and he sold it to the one that bought the remainder; but he was not a tenant to anyone.

9788. You say that Gwern-ddwyryd farm was sold for 3,400*l.*?—Yes.

9789. Do you consider that was high or low?—Very high, it was sold; and that was owing to the farm being looked upon as well finished, as I have said in my statement.

9790. How do you make out that your father had spent 1,500*l.*? You give us an amount of 250*l.* and 200*l.*, but how do you make that he spent 1,500*l.*?—That is only in building alone. I did not make a statement at all of the drainage, because I could not.

9791. You mean the general improvements on the farm in draining, ditching, and hedging?—Yes, and walling.

9792. Did he do much walling on the farm?—Yes, he did much work.

9793. Expensive work? He had to dig the stone, I suppose?—Yes, he dug a good deal; he blasted them from rocks.

9794. Do you think people in this neighbourhood speculate on farms with a view to selling them again?—They have been doing so, I believe; well, with the view of making money out of them, whatever.

9795. Raising the rents after they had bought them?—Yes, but that is not lately.

9796. Do you think the land around here could be made to produce better crops if the tenants had security of tenure?—Yes, by far. I think they are going back now; they must be, because farmers have no capital to do what they ought to do on their farms.

Mr. J. M. Griffiths—continued.

9797. Did they ever have capital?—Well, they used to have much more than they have now.

9798. What would you consider a fair abatement of rent for this year, if you were a landlord yourself?—This year alone?

9799. Yes.—Well, I mean to say for this year alone we really could not pay any rent at all; only make the other payments. That is what I consider taking this year by itself.

9800. For what reason did the first landlord sell this farm, do you know?—The landlord died. The agent is here, and he knows better than what I do; I do not know; but it seems a great deal of the estate was mortgaged, and then I suppose they were compelled to sell. I do not know.

9801. You say that some of the farmers around them purchased some farms themselves?—Yes.

9802. Had they the money to pay for these farms?—Oh no, that is very seldom.

9803. Did they borrow the money?—Yes, they borrowed the money; perhaps they had a small part to pay.

9804. And some I daresay pay as much interest as they pay rent?—I am afraid they pay more.

9805. Then they are no better off after buying, except that they have security as long as they can pay. They were very much afraid of being turned out of the farms?—That is the reason they bought the farms.

9806. Well, this is a bad state of things. What remedy do you suggest?—Well, I am certain I do not know.

9807. How can they improve this state of things?—We must have, as I have said in that statement, I suppose, some way of having a proper rent put on.

9808. Who is to know how that rent is to be put on? How are we to settle it?—Well, that must be left to persons that have a better knowledge of things in general than I have.

9809. Do you think any man has a better knowledge of your own farm than yourself?—No, I do not. I mean now how to rent the farms in general; that is what I mean by saying that.

9810. You think a man should be paid for all permanent improvements he makes?—Well, if they are not expired.

9811. You would not call stone walls and building houses permanent improvements?—Of course those get older in times, and they get into ruin after some time.

9812. According to the number of years you have been on the farm?—Oh, those were not worse a bit when the farm was sold, not a bit, they were quite new, most of them.

9813. You think it is hard for a tenant to leave a place and leave his labour behind, and have nothing for it?—Yes, very hard.

Mr. Richard Jones.

9814. Have you a sheep walk attached to your farm?—I have, to my own.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

9815. Are those sheep wintered on the mountain?—No, down on the farm.

9816. Have you sufficient land to winter those sheep, or do you winter them out on farms?—My own farm is not so much of a sheep farm. I have a part of my own stock and a part I let for wintering.

9817. Now that sheep have fallen in price, is there any reduction in the wintering—so much per head?—The wintering keeps nearly as high.

9818. Although the price of the sheep has fallen?—Yes.

9819. And likely to be this next winter so far as you know?—So far as I know I believe something about the same.

9820. Is your farm arable or pasture chiefly?—Partly arable and partly pasture, and a great part of it is poor marsh-land, the poorest a crow ever flew over.

9821. Do you plough as much now as you used to do?—Yes.

9822. Much the same?—Much the same. If we do not plough our land it will stand, and it will go back in produce.

9823. Do you raise as much roots as formerly, or more?—Something the same since I have been farming, but farmers do more than they did then, some 50 years ago.

9824. Are you able to keep more stock now than you used to?—Well, I am. I have improved my farm very much.

9825. And consequently you are able to keep more stock?—Yes.

9826. Have you had any additions to the buildings in order to shelter this stock?—I have had a few.

9827. Did the landlord supply them?—Yes, but I did all the cartage. I believe our landlord always does it, but the tenant has to do the cartage.

9828. You said pigs now were far more profitable than any other stock. What about horses? Is there any attention paid to horse breeding here?—Yes, a great deal. The horses have not gone back as much as other things, but I think they have gone back a little.

9829. Are there any entire horse associations in the district?—What do you mean by that? Did you mean shows?

9830. Shows, or societies if you like, for travelling an entire horse?—No.

9831. The landlords have done nothing to encourage the better breeding of cart horses?—They have done nothing—if they do not call that doing anything—giving some prizes at the show. They have done nothing else, so far as I know.

9832. Do you find farmers ready to give up old ways, and go in for the most profitable methods of cultivating a farm?—The young farmers go after a new method, but the old ones, of course, will not come on very fast.

9833. They stick to old ways?—Yes.

9834. Has the standard of comfort amongst farmers improved? Are farmers generally clothed better, and, so far as their food is concerned, is it better than it used to be?—I believe it is about the same as in the olden times, but I do not remember very much back, but it is about the same, I think, as far as I can remember.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

9835. In the report of the Commission on the employment of children and women in agriculture there is a reference to Merionethshire, and it says, "The cloth they wear they weave from wool of their own growing, both men and women, the men a kind of frieze, and the women linseys." Is that the case now?—That is not the case now, but they weave their own wool sometimes, generally they do not. The stockings are generally made out of their own wool.

9836. You do not find men wearing suits of clothes made from wool from their own farms?—Oh, yes, sometimes, but that is not the rule. They are considered the best clothing, the strongest whatever for wear.

9837. It is considered the best because it is the cheapest?—No, I do not think that. It is not the cheapest now.

9838. But does it not last longer?—It does last longer.

9839. Well, it is the cheapest I should think?—I do not know.

Mr. Seebohm.

9840. May I ask you a few questions about the farm which your father occupied, and which your mother, as I understand, now occupies?—Yes.

9841. I think the acreage was 191 acres?—No, that is my own farm.

9842. What is the acreage of your father's farm?—About 120.

9843. Then had he a sheep-walk?—Not attached to the farm without paying rent by itself.

9844. Separate rent?—Yes, separate rent.

9845. Then you stated, I think, that Lord Harlech in 1869 rebuilt the house?—No. That was my father's place. I am under Lord Harlech.

Lord Kenyon.

That first one, Gwern-ddwyryd, is not Lord Harlech's farm.

Mr. Seebohm.

9846. I wanted to keep the two farms distinct, because there is rather a muddle in my own mind about it. Then who was the landlord of your father's farm?—Mr. Huddart.

9847. He was the person who purchased it?—No.

8948. Your father's house was not rebuilt at all?—Yes, it was.

8949. Then it was rebuilt in 1869 by Mr Huddart?—Yes, but my father had to do much to help him—very much.

9850. The hauling?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

9851. I was going to ask you how much the landlord spent upon the rebuilding of the house; do you know at all?—No, I do not know very well, perhaps 150*l.*, I could not say. I should think that a good sum.

9852. 150*l.*?—Well, perhaps; I do not know; even that I believe.

9853 Then the rent was slightly raised. I think you stated that the rent was raised in 1873. Was that in consequence of the building?—No, it was not in consequence of the building, I think.

9854. But the building had been improved in the meantime between 1870 and 1873?—Yes.

9855. And the rent was raised from 92*l.* to 102*l.*?—Yes, I think the rent was raised to all the tenant farmers the same.

9856. Then, in 1886, your father's farm, as I understand it, was sold for about 3,400*l.*?—Yes.

9857. Of that 3,400*l.* you consider that 1,500*l.* was due to your father's improvements?—Yes.

9858. That is a little less than half—nearly half—you know. Do you not think you must be a little exaggerating that?—It is less than half. That is, according to the statement of neighbours about. That is not my own statement.

9859. Then do you think that the farm was really only worth, without those improvements, something like 2,000*l.*?—Yes.

9860. Then could you tell us how much of the 1,500*l.* for improvements was in buildings of your father's?—I have stated in that statement. Say 500*l.*—something of that kind. I am not going into extremes at all.

9861. Then I wanted to ask you one question about this. You stated, I think, that the farmer now in these bad times gets nothing on his own capital?—No.

9862. You mean by that that he lives out of the farm—his family live out of the farm—but he has nothing to put by?—Nothing to put by. They work very hard on the farm, all of them. They keep much more hours than what the labourers do. They are obliged to work from early morning till late at night.

9863. They are still getting a bare living, and perhaps in a bad year. Do you think they lose anything out of their capital? Do they lessen their capital?—As I have stated, I think they lose in these years.

9864. Then just one word about the weaving. Are there many hand-looms still to be found in the farmhouses?—Oh, no; I never remember any at all.

9865. Then how is the weaving done?—There are small factories about the country.

9866. But you said that sometimes people wove their own cloth?—I did not mean that. They send it to the factories to be done. The work done on the farm is altogether gone now in this country.

9867. But in the old times it was done. How long ago would that be?—I remember doing it.

9868. How long ago had they had looms in their own houses—20 or 50 years ago?—Thirty years or something of that kind, I suppose.

9869. You said that sometimes they wove their own clothes; you did not mean that sometimes they had their own looms?—No; they send their wool to the small factories about the country to be done.

Lord Kenyon.

9870. There are some small "pandies" about the country, are there not, I think?—Yes; there are some still about.

Mr. Seebohm.

9871. Do they belong to the farmers or are they independent?—Yes; they are independent.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9872. Is Gwern-ddwyryd occupied by your mother now?—Yes.

9873. Who bought it?—Mr. William Jones, from Portmadoc here.

9874. When it was sold, did you make any claim for compensation?—I believe my father did with the agent. I do not know much about it, but I know very well he asked solicitors and others if he could get any, and they all answered he could not. He made inquiries of that kind. He had to pay every farthing to the landlord; he had to pay a quarter's rent, which was due then, when the farm was sold. He had to pay every farthing.

9875. Was the farm offered to you for sale?—It was at a public sale in this room.

9876.—Before that was it offered to you or your family?—My father tried to buy it the evening before the sale in Portmadoc, and there was some small sum between them, and the gentleman ordered him to come down the next morning, and when he came the next morning he was not allowed to see the gentleman; I do not know why.

9877. Do I understand from that that it was offered to you for sale prior to the sale in the market?—It was the evening before the sale and my father was down here with the gentleman in the "Sportsman Hotel."

Lord Kenyon.

9878. With the executors, that would be, of the late Mr. Huddart?—Yes; the sons and some solicitors. I do not know who the men were.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9879. Then there were some negotiations with regard to a private sale to you?—Yes, he tried to buy it, and he meant to do it the morning after, but he was not allowed to see the gentleman.

9880. Was it a question of price the day before?—It was a question of price the evening before.

9881. Have you any objection to tell us what the price was at which it was offered to you?—Indeed, I do not know. My father was there with the gentleman. I do not know at all.

9882. What sum do you say it was that your father was paying prior to the sale, 102*l.*?—Yes.

9883. That is exactly 3 per cent upon the purchase money. It amounted to 3,400*l.*?—But the farm was not all sold. Twelve acres of about the best land was kept behind.

9884. Who bought that?—Well, a small portion of it was sold to Mr. Graves. The rest belongs to Mr. Huddart.

9885. Have your family purchased some part of the farm since then?—No, my father purchased about 12 acres at the time of the sale, but he sold it again to the man who bought the remainder of the farm.

9886. You are now living at Brynrefail?—Yes.

9887. That is Lord Harlech's?—Yes.

9888. With regard to Lord Harlech, do you know whether he keeps stallions for the use of his tenants?—Not in this part. I do not know if he does anything in any other part.

9899. Or a bull?—Not in this part.

2890. He keeps no bulls?—Not in this part. I am living in Carnarvonshire.

Chairman.

section 2 and section 4 of the Act for the Better Protection of Witnesses who give evidence before any Royal Commission or any Committee of either House of Parliament, or on any other public inquiries. Section 2 is, "Every person "who commits any of the following acts, that "is to say, who threatens, or in any way "punishes, damnifies, or injures, or attempts to "punish, damnify, or injure, any person for "having given evidence upon any inquiry, or "on account of the evidence which he has "given upon any such inquiry, shall, unless "such evidence was given in bad faith, be "guilty of a misdemeanour, and be liable upon "conviction thereof to a maximum penalty of "one hundred pounds, or to a maximum im-"prisonment of three months." Section 4 is, "It shall be lawful for any court before which "any person may be convicted of any offence "under this Act, if it thinks fit, in addition to "sentence or punishment, by way of fine or "imprisonment, to condemn such person to pay "the whole or any part of the costs and ex-"penses incurred in and about the prosecution "and conviction, for the offence of which he "shall be convicted, and upon the application "of the complainant, and immediately after "such conviction, to award to complainant any "sum of money which it may think reasonable, "having regard to all the circumstances of the "case, by way of satisfaction or compensation "for any loss of situation, wages, status, or "other damnification or injury suffered by the "complainant through or by means of the "offence of which such person shall be so con-"victed, provided that where the case is tried "before a jury such jury shall determine what "amount, if any, is to be paid by way of satis-"faction or compensation." I have only to say that we do not think for one instant that any of the landlords would be hard on the tenants for giving any evidence before us; but if such a thing comes before our notice, if an individual case should come before our notice, it ought to be well known that we should not hesitate at once to put the law in force.

Questions put in. This question is put by Mr. William George: "As to horses, is it not a "fact that they must be kept on hand some "years before they can be sold at a good price?" —I suppose that means that you cannot sell a horse until he is five years old?

Mr. Richard Jones.

Until he is five years old.

Lord Kenyon.

It depends upon the sort of horse.

Chairman.

9892. Is it a fact that no horses are saleable before they are five years old?—Yes, they are, but they must be five to get the highest price possible for a horse.

Lord Kenyon.

9893. I suppose that refers to agricultural horses?—He is not of full value as a horse until he is five years old.

Chairman.

9894. "Do not farmers find it difficult owing "to the depression to so keep them, and do not "they sell them at any price that they can get in "order to pay the rent?"—I am afraid that may be the case in a good many instances; something of that kind, not more with horses than anything else.

9895. A question put in by Mr. Owen Wynne, "May I ask how much a year you make by the "wintering of sheep?"—Well, according to the size of the farm and the nature of the farm. They pay from 3*s.* to 4*s.* a head.

9896. From 3*s.* to 4*s.* a head for wintering them?—Yes, that is the average; that depends according to the nature of the farm.

Lord Kenyon.

9897. How many could you winter on your farm?—On my farm close upon 200.

Chairman.

9898. Questions put in by Mr. Vincent. "Had "not 1,000*l.* been spent in repairs by your land-"lord on Gwern-ddwyryd?"—Oh, no.

9899. "Does not Lord Harlech visit this "district and actually live at Oswestry on the "border?"—Well, he visits about here sometimes, I believe, but I do not recollect that he has been round my place.

Lord Kenyon.

9900. He would come to Glyn, I suppose you mean?—Yes, I believe so, I do not know much about that because I live up in Carnarvonshire, some distance from here, towards Carnarvon.

Chairman.

9901. "Upon what authority do you say that "the majority of landowners are mortgaged?" What evidence have you to make you think that there are mortgages on most of the properties?—I believe that they would meet the farmers if they could, but I am afraid they cannot possibly do it, and I know of some cases—that is the estate, as I have said, of Mr. Huddart's—they were mortgaged, as the condition of sale shows.

Chairman.

9902. (Addressing Mr. Vincent.) Would you put that question about his own landlord? I should hardly think that would be a question to put.

Mr. Vincent.—I know his own landlord has no objection to the question.

Chairman.

9903. "Do you allege this of Lord Harlech?"—No.

Chairman—continued.

9904. You have no knowledge of that?—Oh, no, I did not mean him.

9905. "Did not Messrs. Huddart redeem the "land tax in 1819, and was not that for the "benefit of tenants?" Do you know anything about that?—I know there was no land tax to be paid on Gwern-ddwyryd. That is all I know.

9906. "Do you think that the majority of "farmers hereabouts begin business with suffi-"cient capital?" Do you think that the majority of farmers have got money enough to start farming with when they begin?—I am afraid some do not have enough perhaps.

9907. They start on very little money, some of them?—I believe so. Well, most of them are sons of the farmers, and now they cannot give very much to their sons when they leave their homes, for they have no money to give them.

9908. Their fathers and mothers go security for them?—Yes, certainly.

9909. A question by Mr. Vincent. "Did not "you or your mother or some member of the "family buy a plot of 12 acres?"—My father bought 12 acres.

9910. "After the sale for 600*l.*" Was that the price paid for it, do you know?—Yes.

9911. "Such plot being now let at 5*l.* per "acre." Do you happen to know if that is the rent of it?—No; this plot was let; my father sold this plot as I have stated before to Mr. William Jones, who bought the remainder of the farm, and he took all of it in one farm as before.

9912. But do you know whether this plot now is let at 5*l.* the acre, whether they get 5*l.*?—That plot is not let at all now, it is in my mother's possession.

9913. Your mother keeps it?—Yes, I believe the question goes to this: my mother lets a good part of the farm by auction, but this part of the farm happens not to have been let. It is ploughed land, this part which my father bought.

9914. "It is not suggested that this rent is "too high, but it is suggested that you were "allowed to buy below the market value," that the 600*l.* was not quite enough for the land, is that the case?—No, I believe it was quite enough for the piece.

9915. You think it was the fair market value?—Yes.

9916. You have no reason to think otherwise?—No, I cannot see the otherwise.

9917. Do you know that the rent of the farm as it stood in the year 1813 was 118*l.*?—I have not got the note as to it in my possession now. I thought I was to give evidence at Pwllheli, so I did not bring it; but a good part of the farm was taken from the farm. The farm is not as it was when my grandfather first came in; it is smaller.

Chairman—continued.

9918. But do you know anything about the state of the farm in 1813?—Oh, it was in a very poor state.

9919. Do you happen to know whether the rent was 118*l.*?—I can give you the receipts.

9920. Perhaps you can send that in?—Yes, I can, but I have not got them in my possession now.

9921. It is as to the state of the farm in 1813, if you wish to make a note of that. Mr. Vincent asks: "You say that you let 'wintering.'" That is when the sheep come down, I understand?—Yes.

9922. Mr. Vincent asks first: "Whether you take the best price you can get, or whether you make an abatement?"—We take the best price we can get, of course.

9923. Secondly, "Whether if a land court were established, you would make sub-lettings subject to it"; that is, subject to the court?—Subject to the rules of the court, I suppose.

9924. If a land court were established, would sub-lettings be subject to the court?—Yes, I suppose they ought to be.

Mr. Seebohm.

9925. May I ask about this underletting by auction. You said that your mother underlet part of the farm by auction. I do not quite understand what that means. Do you mean for the whole year, or simply for sheep?—For about six months. She lets it for wintering sheep the remainder of the year.

9926. But she does not underlet the whole farm?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

9927. Would you mind telling me how much she lets by auction; what proportion of the farm?—Two-thirds of it, I should say.

9928. Can you tell me what rent she got for that last year?—For that part of the farm?

9929. Yes?—I could afterwards; I cannot just at this minute.

9930. Would you send that in at the same time as you send in the others?—Yes.

9931. I understand you that the remainder of the farm she lets as wintering, or is it the same part?—She lets the whole part of the farm as wintering. In the course of the summer she lets by auction about two-thirds of the farm.

9932. Could you tell me at what price it was sold? You say that you sold back that portion to Mr. William Jones, I understand?—He did not make any advantage on it at all. The only thing was that he took the whole farm as a tenant; he had no advantage at all, he had it for the very same penny.

9933. The same price?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

9934. How far from you does Mr. Oakley live?—Some good distance.

9935. Does he not keep entire horses nor bulls for the use of the tenants, does he?—I live in Carnarvonshire, some seven miles from here, towards Carnarvon.

9936. Do you keep a dairy farm?—Well, I keep cows.

9937. How many do you milk?—About 12.

9938. Do you find any difficulty in getting dairymaids now?—The wives of the farmers are always the dairymaids in this part if there is a wife.

9939. Who does the milking?—The female servants do the milking as a rule, with a boy with them.

9940. Do you find any difficuly in getting female servants to milk?—Yes, they are very scarce.

9942. "There is also difficulty in obtaining "good dairymaids, though perhaps it would be "well to say that the supply of girls for general "farm service is short. It is the trained and ex-"perienced girls that are scarce, as the best are "drafted into domestic service in England by "visitors who come to the Welsh coast in the "summer time." That is what this report says?—Yes.

Re-examined, 17,655.

Mr. William Watkin called and examined.

Chairman.

9943. You are agent to whom?—The trustees of the late Mr. Huddart.

9944. What do you want to tell the Commissioners?—I want to contest the evidence given by the last witness, Mr. Owen Hughes.

9945. The agent for Mr. Huddart?—Perhaps it would be the trustees; one of them is Mr. French.

Chairman—continued.

900 sheep between them; he did not charge anything except a little interest for the walling; a little interest, I think, they paid for that, and then I found that the grandfather of Mr. Owen Hughes came to Gwern-ddwyryd in 1822, and Cae Canol was separate from it at the time. He paid 74*l.* for it without Cae Canol. Afterwards they took Cae Canol; that was a small farm adjoining Gwern-ddwyryd, and then gave it up. The long and short of it is this: In 1873, when the prices were very high, a slight addition was made to the rents all through, making the rents for Cae Canol and Gwern-ddwyryd at that time, 102*l.*, which were not raised anything in Cae Canol, but keeping Cae Canol separate, so in fact on the whole, there was no addition to the rent at all between the two. If you put together 28*l.*, which was the rent of Cae Canol before he got it, and 74*l.*, it will make 102*l.* The estate has spent 1,000*l.* at least in repairs of that place. We paid more than 200*l.* for slates alone. It is like a village. If you pass along Cae Canol you will see it is.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9947. Since 1872?—Since 1822, when Owen Roberts went there. So things went on till 1885. Mr. Huddart died in 1885 and left all the property to be divided between all his children. So the things were left according to the will; they were bound by the will, and to invest the money. I need not go into that. The trustees were handicapped one way and the other; they felt very sorry for the tenants, so the night before the sale they gave Mr. Hughes an offer under my valuation. The trustees said, "We "are willing you shall have it on this valuation," and he refused to take it.

Lord Kenyon.

9948. Upon your valuation?—Yes, 2,250*l.* for one lot; and he refused to take it.

9949. Was that for Cae Canol or Gwern-ddwyryd?—For Gwern-ddwyryd and all the buildings, 2,250*l.* There were three small lots. That is my valuation for one, and 2,700*l.* for the three lots, which Mr. Hughes said went for 3,400*l.* at the sale. This was the night before the sale, and he declined to take it. The trustees thought they were justified in selling at my valuation, but then, on the morning of the sale the auctioneer objected to sell anything privately; he said it would damn the sale, and that is why they would not see him. Then there was a portion between the three roads which is the most desirable. My valuation of that was 900*l.* On the morning of the second day's sale before going into the room, I sold it privately to Mr. Hughes for 600*l.*, and we sacrificed 300*l.*, for him on account of his improving it. I know that he had spent some money on the farm in improving it; so we consider we allowed him 300*l.* in those lots, and I understand Mrs. Hughes has been letting for the summer months some of that land at 5*l.* an acre, and reserving it for the winter for the sheep.

Chairman.

9950. Then you have the same figures as Mr. Hughes has?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

He said he was going to contest Mr. Hughes' evidence.

Chairman.

9951. Yes. Your figures correspond?—We gave 300*l.* to him.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9952. You sold for 600*l.* that which you valued at 900*l.*?—Yes, which I valued at 900*l.*

Chairman.

9953. Then all the difference is this. You say your valuation of the property was 900*l.* and the trustees sold at 600*l.*?—Yes; but the trustees would not sell at my valuation.

9954. You say your valuation, as a practical man, was 900*l.*, and his valuation of the land as a practical man was 600*l.*, and the trustees sold for 600*l.*?—Yes.

9955. So there was a difference of 300*l.* between you?—Yes; but Mrs. Hughes has let some of that land in the summer months at 5*l.* an acre: it was good land.

9956. He tells us his mother does not let it at all?—No, not this year.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

9957. He ought to know better than you?—The auctioneer is here. He can say what it is let at. I have seen it let myself.

Mr. Seebohm.

9958. The question I was going to ask you was this. I took it from your evidence you admitted that the trustees were obliged to sell in 1885?—Yes; 1886.

9959. They felt that under the existing law it would be a damage to the tenants that they should sell?—Yes.

9960. Because they would not get the proper allowance for these buildings and things which they had made. All the evidence which you have given is to show that the trustees were not to blame in what they did, but that the law was to blame for not giving them sufficient compensation for himself?—I beg your pardon, but that meant all the buildings.

9961. But then we had it in evidence from Mr. Hughes?—But I can prove it. I have documents to prove that we paid for the buildings.

9963. Yes; but the barn was not sufficiently large, he said?—Well, he merely removed one little bit, one wall; but then we gave him the materials to make a large roof on it—the slates and timber; so he merely removed one side.

Chairman.

9964. He said he had receipts for close upon 250*l.*, paid in hard cash for building-work and material supplied; and, in addition to that, his father did the blasting, haulage, and cartage at his own expense. Do you deny that?—Oh, I deny that. We always pay for the buildings and material, except the haulage. That is a different thing.

9965. Yes; he said he did the haulage; and besides that, he says he spent of his own money 250*l.*, which he has receipts to prove?—Not the buildings.

Mr. Seebohm.

I think it is a valuable admission on the part of the agent that, though he wishes to show that the trustees did not do anything wrong, he at the same time admits, as I understand, that the law did not give sufficient compensation for improvements.

Chairman.

9966. [To the witness]. That is so?—Did not allow them as trustees?

9967. Yes?—Yes.

Chairman.

9968. This is a question sent up by Mr. William George, "As to the sheep-walk?" You remember the sheep-walk?—Yes.

9969. "Was not a separate rent charged for this?"—Merely the interest of the money for building the wall; that is all.

9970. "Was not a separate rent charged for this?"—That is so. 15*l.*

9971. There is a receipt in the book; 15*l.* 5*s.*—Yes.

9972. Then a separate rent was charged for the sea wall?—Yes, quite right; not upon one farm, but for the whole estate.

9973. "Were you with Messrs. Huddart the night before the sale?"—Yes.

9974. "When the tenant was told to call again in the morning?"—Well, I was not there when Hughes left. My train went before he left.

9975. You were not with Messrs. Huddart the night before the sale, when the tenant was told to call again in the morning?—I did not hear them. I was there the night before.

9976. Did you hear the tenant told to call again in the morning?—No.

9977. You have no remembrance of that?—No.

9978. "On the day of the sale was any offer made to him to buy?"—No; because the auctioneer declined to see anybody before the sale.

9979. Then the answer is, when he was there the day of the sale, no offer was made to him to buy?—Yes.

Re-examined, 11,518, 17,288.

Mr. John Roberts recalled and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

9979*a*. Your evidence last night, Mr. Roberts, was this. You said, "I suffer a good deal from "the game. My landlord, Mr. Poole, Carnarvon, lets the shooting to Mr. Samuel "Pope, Q.C., who sub-lets it to Mr. Kirby, who "re-lets one portion to Capt. Corderer, and "another portion to Lord Harlech. Although "I have a right to the rabbits, yet I fear the "consequences of making use of my rights." Then you said you had received a "threatening "letter from Lord Harlech"; those are the words which are down here, and this is the letter which is put in. [Showing it to the witness.]

9980. "October 5th, 1892. Lord Harlech to "Mr. John Roberts. Sir,—I have had a report "from my keeper, Edwards, as well as that "from you, respecting the occurrence on the "race-course last Monday." What was the occurrence on the race-course?—I met the keepers there, and I claimed the rabbits from them.

9981. Carrying rabbits, were they?—Yes. They told me that they had a right to the rabbits; to come there and catch them; and I had no right to them, and he asked me if I was paying any rent for the race-course, saying that it was his land.

Chairman—continued.

9982. Who pays rent for the race-course?—I do, saying that it was land of Edwards, the keeper, and that he had a right to come there.

9983. Anything further?—Saying again, that I had no right to the rabbits at all. When I came to the place first of all, Mr. Lawford offered me a pound for the rabbits.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9984. A pound a year, or what?—Yes; a pound a year.

Chairman.

9985. For the privilege of shooting the rabbits?—Yes.

9986. The entire privilege of shooting?—Yes. Mr. Lawford himself, for Lord Harlech, and the keepers; an exclusive right to them. I believe that Mr. Lawford took the rabbits in the same way from the previous tenant, and paid for it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9987. A pound or two?—A pound or two.

See 17,604. 9988. This was an offer?—I declined to let it to Mr. Lawford for the pound a year.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

If it had been so, that would have been unlawful under the Ground Game Act.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9989. You did not accept his offer?—No; I declined his offer.

Chairman.

9990. Are you aware whether, under the Ground Game Act that agreement was illegal?—This happened 11 years ago.

Lord Kenyon.

9991. Was this offer to include the land as well as the shooting?—No. It was understood that he had a right to go over the race-course for the game.

Chairman.

I think the Commissioners quite understand it. As I understand, they offered him 1*l.* for the exclusive right of shooting the rabbits which he found, and which besides was illegal under the Ground Game Act of 1880.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

9992. I do not quite follow what the keeper said on the race-course?—They said that I had no right to the rabbits.

Lord Kenyon.

9993. Was it to the rabbits that the keeper had in his hand, or was it to the rabbits on the place?—The rabbits on the race-course generally, not those in his hand.

Chairman.

9994. When did this occur?—About a day or two before the date upon that letter, the 5th October.

Chairman.

I will read the letter:

"Brogyntyn, Oswestry,
Sir, October, 5th, 1892.

I have had a report from my keeper, Edwards, as well as that from you respecting the occurrence on the race-course last Monday. You seem to be quite ignorant of the law as to a tenant's rights to ground game, and your behaviour was extremely illegal, and you rendered yourself liable to punishment. However, I am quite disposed to believe your conduct was through ignorance of the law. I exercise my rights to the game and rabbits there from Mr. Pope, who derives his right from your landlord, Mr. Poole. Your best course will be to see Mr. Pope at Hafod-y-bryn, who, being not only a sportsman but a lawyer will be able to inform you what a tenant's rights respecting ground game are, and if you stick to them there will be no occasion for difference between you and me. The sooner you see Mr. Pope the better.

Yours faithfully,
HARLECH.

To Mr. John Roberts,
Cefntreforfawr."

9995. Then I have a letter put in from Mr. Joseph Hood. Who is Mr. Joseph Hood?—One who took the farm before Mr. Corderer, the occupier of Maesyneuadd Hall, previously to Mr. Corder the present tenant of the farm.

9996. Is Mr. Hood in the room?—No.

9997. I do not think we need bring in this letter at all, it has nothing to do with it?—Very well.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

Is Lord Harlech's agent here?

Mr. Lawford: Yes.

Chairman.

Do you want to say anything on this?

Mr. Lawford: Yes, I should like to tell the Commission what I know of it.

[As Mr. Lawford passed to the witness-box he paused to speak with the witness Roberts.]

Chairman.

We cannot permit any communication between the witnesses.

Mr. WILLIAM ROBINSON LAWFORD called and examined.

Chairman.

See above. 9998. Do you want to say anything about this shooting of rabbits?—I have not the management of Lord Harlech's game, but I happen to know what took place, and I thought it would be well that what I have to say about it should be known at once.

Chairman—continued.

9999. How do you know anything about it, by hearsay?—Lord Harlech told me himself.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,000. But Lord Harlech was not present at this interview on the 3rd August?—No, but he told me about the transaction; he told me he had written to Roberts about it, and I also heard from the keepers. The keepers had often spoken to me about Roberts previously. I only want to tell you what I know about it. In the first instance I believe Mr. Roberts is wrong in saying that Mr. Kirkby has anything to do with shooting; I believe he has nothing whatever to do with it. I think Mr. Pope takes direct from Mr. Poole, and Lord Harlech exchanges direct with Mr. Pope. I believe Lord Harlech maintains that he has a right to shoot the rabbits conjointly with Mr. Roberts—a concurrent right. Lord Harlech does his best to keep down the rabbits on the adjoining farm. Mr. Roberts has harboured a great lot of rabbits there simply and solely, I believe, for the purpose of letting it for shooting purposes. I would not swear to it, but I believe it is the fact. I think there are gentlemen in the room who can prove it if you wish it. I am only speaking from memory; I believe I paid Mr. Roberts 1*l.* some years ago; it was simply and solely for the purpose of destroying these rabbits, nothing else—for no other purpose—so that they should not breed there and trespass upon Lord Harlech's adjoining property. I will tell you what I said to Roberts just now—that he ought to have told you that he had let this land for shooting purposes, and I thought the fact that he had received a shooting rent for it would have come better from him than for me to have to tell you. I believed he received that rent from Mr. Hood, late of Maesyneuadd.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Chairman.

10,001. We are much obliged to you for this information, but I do not think it throws very much light upon it. All you can tell us is that this gentleman let the rabbit shooting on his farm, that is all?—He used to let it. Lord Harlech merely wanted to get the rabbits destroyed.

Re-examined, 17,604.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Roberts recalled and further examined through an interpreter.

[The evidence of the previous witness was read by the shorthand writer and translated into Welsh by the interpreter.]

Chairman.

10,002. What do you desire to say upon that?—I cannot remember everything that has just been translated to me.

10,003. You can answer in any order you like?—It was the first year that I came yonder that Mr. Lawford offered me 1*l.*; he never paid me a halfpenny.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,004. Did Mr. Lawford ever complain to you for harbouring these rabbits?—No, never; he had no cause to complain; there were no rabbits there.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,005. Are you quite certain that the keepers on the racecourse asserted that you had no right to take or kill the rabbits at all?—Yes, I am certain of that; and I have two witnesses if I only knew that they would be wanted.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Chairman.

10,006. There is a question by Mr. Vincent, "Why did you claim the rabbits from the keepers?"—Because they were there catching them with ferrets and nets.

10,007. Is Mr. Vincent "right in suggesting "that you claim an exclusive right to the "rabbits?"—I thought I had the right to refuse to allow anyone to come on my land to net the rabbits. It was not according to the agreement.

10,008. You deny the existence of a concurrent right in the land; you think the landlord has no right to kill the rabbits on your farm?—He ought not to have the right at any rate.

Professor Rhŷs.

10,009. You mentioned an agreement. Have you got it?—No, I have not got the agreement with me.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Richard Hughes called and examined through an interpreter.

The interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"Mr. Richard Hughes, Portmadoc, Corn Merchant, will prove—

"I am a corn merchant and farmer.

"I have had 30 years' experience of Welsh farmers and farming, and wish to speak as to the effect of the present high rents, on their condition, and the condition of the country generally. I know intimately nearly every farmer for four or five miles round, and have been doing business at one time or another with most of them, and know their circumstances and feelings well.

"I believe that the bulk of these farmers are in a state of great and chronic distress. Their first consideration is to pay their rents. They are only able to do so (1) by dint of hard working, pinching themselves and their families; (2) by the indulgence of their other creditors. I know that tradesmen have to wait for years without their bills because farmers are unable to pay them. I think that it is unjust that landlords, at the expense of tradesmen, should be able to charge rents which keep their tenants on the verge of poverty all their lifetime. Of late years the prices of cattle and corn have fallen from 30 to 50 per cent. And as to corn (of which I would speak more particularly), it seems to me that the prices are likely to fall lower still. I attribute this fall off partly to foreign competition. I sell a ton of foreign stuff for every sack of home produce, i.e., the proportion of home produce to foreign produce in the market is 1 to 10.

"The fact is, very little home corn is now sold except for the purpose of seeding. The reason of this is that foreign corn is cheaper. The bulk of the Welsh farmers' live stock consists of cattle. These he is obliged to sell for anything he can get before they are in a state to command a good price in order to get cash to pay his rent. I know a case where a farmer took 12 heifers to a recent fair. He failed to effect a sale, and he told me that he had a stack of hay worth 100*l.* at home, which he would have to give to the heifers, and that he would not get 100*l.* for the lot in the end.

"I consider that something must be done to relieve farmers of the present rents, and to fix them in their tenements, and to secure compensation for their improvements.

"Farmers generally are too timid to come forward to prove these facts, but they are true nevertheless."

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,010. This is not a corn growing district, is it?—No.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,011. In stating that nine-tenths of what is sold in the market is foreign, do you mean what you yourself sold?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,012. Do you think that the farmers at present deny themselves of things that they used to have years ago—do they live harder?—I believe so.

10,013. Is there as much stock on their farms as there has been?—I believe so; perhaps more cows and sheep than formerly.

10,014. Is that in consequence of raising less corn?—No, because they cannot get a market for cows and sheep.

10,015. Then they hold their live stock on because prices are so low?—They keep their stock now because they are unable to sell their stock for any price whatever.

10,016. How are they going to keep them over the winter?—I cannot say indeed.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,017. Do you think the tenant farmers of this neighbourhood are much indebted to the tradesmen of the towns?—It is rather a delicate thing to mention, but I am afraid it is so; in fact I know it is so.

10,018. You say that they pinch themselves; how do you explain that?—They have to work hard and they have to live economically, the same men whom I have known for years.

10,019. Do you occasionally advance money to farmers before they bring in their produce to you?—Yes, I have done so many times, often.

10,020. On what ground do you think corn may yet be lower?—I do not understand that I said so.

10,021. You say that corn will yet be lower?—Well, it is very low now.

10,022. And "to all appearances will be still lower," you say?—Well, it looks like that whatever.

10,023. Do the farmers of this district buy more corn and food with you than they sell?—Many of them at any rate.

10,024. Have you any remedy for this distress?—The only thing is to try and get some other means whereby farmers can live better. At any rate the wages of the labourers cannot be lowered, and the rates cannot be lowered.

Lord Kenyon.

10,025. Do you mean that?—Yes; I do not see any signs that local rates are going to be reduced.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,026. Supposing the landlord should pay part of the rates; would that be any good?—Yes, it would be a great deal of good so far as it would go.

10,027. You do not think the labourers are having high wages now, are they?—No, I do not think so.

10,028. Then we cannot get any reduction in that sense?—No, it is impossible, I believe.

10,029. I suppose if they cannot get the wages on the farms they can get the wages in the neighbouring quarries, and the farm wages must follow, is that the case?—Yes, that is so. They must have the same wages almost as those of quarrymen.

Lord Kenyon.

10,030. There is not much corn grown in this district, is there?—No.

10,031. You do not buy much corn in this district?—A little within a radius of five miles of this town.

10,032. Oats and wheat and barley?—Oats and barley.

10,033. Would you be in favour of labelling foreign produce?—Yes, that would be a very good thing.

Chairman.

10,034. A question is put in by Mr. George Owen, "What do you pay your workmen per "day, and for how many hours per day do "they work"?—22*s.* a week, and they work for about 12 to 13 hours a day or thereabouts.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,034. As you are a corn merchant, do you sell any artificial manure as well?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Wm. Cadwaladr Williams called and examined through an interpreter.

The interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"Evidence of Mr. William Cadwaladr Williams Junior, Beudy Mawr and Tanygrisiau Isaf, Festiniog.

"The evidence of witness will be chiefly as to the occupation of a farm held by his father. The farm is called Tan-y-grisiau Isaf, and is in the parish of Festiniog. The owner of the farm is Lord Harlech.

"The tenant of this farm some 40 years ago was one Cadwaladr Williams. About that time he gave it up, and it was let to his brother John Williams and his son William Cadwaladr Williams. John Williams used to let the farm in small holdings, and although the rent of the whole was high, the occupiers of the small holdings were rack-rented to a much greater extent.

"The rent of the farm was 56*l.* One could keep 12 cows upon it, and during the summer 150 sheep. But as the place is very cold and high, they have to be taken away during the winter and 3*s.* or 3*s.* 6*d.* per head paid for their pasturage.

"The house in which Mr. W. C. Williams lived was very poor. The light could be seen through the slates and the roof, and during the winter the snow would cover the beds. The house stood between three small streams and if these were very high, it would be impossible to reach the house. Mr. W. C. Williams applied several times for a new house as the doctor said it was unfit for any one to live in. He attributed the death of one of Mr. W. C. Williams's daughters to the condition of the house. Lady Harlech and Mr. Lawford (the agent) came to see the house. It was suggested to Williams that he should build, and he was promised timber and slates, but he was unwilling to do anything unless security was given him for compensation if he had to leave. However, in 1881, a new house was built on a 60 years' lease, ground rent 30*s.* At this time also W. C Williams built a hay shed and a cow-house. In 1891 he was served with a notice to quit. He wrote to the agent asking him to let him the farm again, but he failed to be allowed to continue as tenant. The house is useless except to persons who can put their animals on the land. The sums spent by Williams are as follows:—

House - - - - -	220
Cowhouse - - - -	50
Other buildings - - -	20

"The house would not if sold in a forced sale perhaps fetch more than 120*l.*, and the agent has refused to compensate Williams for building the other buildings.

"Being a shopkeeper at Tan-y-grisiau, I can also give evidence as to the way in which farmers have run into debt during the last few years."

Lord Kenyon.

10,036. I do not quite understand this passage: "The tenant of this farm some 40 years ago was "one Cadwaladr Williams. About that time he "gave it up, and it was let to his brother, John "Williams." Was it his brother, John Williams, who let the small holdings that you say were rack-rented?—Yes.

10,037. Was that your uncle?—Yes.

10,038. What is the house that you refer to in which Mr. W. C. Williams lived?—Beudy-mawr.

10,039. Is that the same house that you referred to before?—The old Beudymawr was taken down, and my father has built another house on a lease under the same name.

10,040. Will you tell me when Lady Harlech and Mr. Lawford visited the house?—I cannot say for certain, but that was the only time Lady Harlech came. Mr. Lawford is here, perhaps he can remember.

10,041. You could not tell me which Lady Harlech it was who visited?—I believe it was the Dowager Lady Harlech.

10,042. You said a house was built on a 60 years' lease, was that by your father?—Yes.

10,043. Did he give up his lease?—No; my father has the lease on the house still. My father built this house because there was no farmhouse fit for habitation.

10,044. He still occupies the house?—Yes.

10,045. You are a shopkeeper at Tanygrisiau?—Yes, at Blaenau, near Tanygrisiau, just the same place.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,046. To what did the notice to quit served in 1891 apply, to the farm or to the house as well?—The farm.

10,047. Only the farm?—Only the farm.

10,048. Then your father has remained in possession of the house, but has been obliged to give up the farm?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

10,049. Was the farm attached to another farm?—No; it was divided into two or three parts.

10,050. Into small holdings?—Ever since my father can remember the farm it has always been sub-divided into two or three parts.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,051. I do not quite follow that. What was the acreage of the farm that your father had with the old house upon it?—I cannot say, but he held about half of the farm and paid about half the rent.

10,052. Was that before he built this house?—It was before and after, the same; before building the house and after building the house, just the same.

10,053. Where did your father live before the present house that was built upon lease was in fact erected?—He lived in the old farmhouse which was taken down. The old farmhouse was not taken down, but it fell into ruins, became dilapidated.

10,054. Thereupon your father built a new house upon a 60 years' lease?—Yes.

10,055. Why was the notice to quit served?—I believe it was after the death of that John Williams, and he was co-tenant with my father.

10,056. Did your father want to go on the farm?—Yes, I wrote on his behalf to Mr. Lawford.

10,057. W. C. Williams is your father?—Yes.

10,058. Was he a joint tenant with a person who died, or was he a sub-tenant?—He was a joint-tenant.

10,059. Did the agent give any reason for not continuing the tenancy?—He gave notice to all the sub-tenants when John Williams died, and then I wrote to him on behalf of my father to ask whether he would be allowed to retain his own part as formerly, and he replied stating that he would get further information when the land was being let again.

10,060. But was not your father a tenant?—He was a tenant when he took the farm at first, but about the time of an election John Williams was going to pay the rent in hard cash. My father always accompanied John Williams to pay the rent at the time it was due. By-and-by he allowed him to take his rent down for him. Many years afterwards, at the time of an election, he found that his name had been erased from the registry. He inquired into the matter, and went down again to Glyn, Lord Harlech's house. He found that his name had been erased from the books, but he remained as tenant still the same until he received that notice

10,061. The point that I put, then, is accurate. He did get a notice to quit the farm in the year 1891?—Yes.

10,062. So that as late as 1891 he was treated as tenant?—He was, certainly.

10,063. What was the reason given for his being sent away?—No reason was given.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

10,064. Did he ask to be allowed to remain on the farm?—I wrote three letters to Mr. Lawford, who is here to-day.

10,065. What kind of house is it? Is it a house that is of any good to anybody except the farmer on this land?—It is only suitable for the farmer. It is not equal to another house by perhaps about 100*l.*, because there is no cart-way leading to it.

10,066. No road leading to it?—No public road at all, only a footpath.

10,067. But is there an accommodation road leading to the farm?—No, not at all.

Lord Kenyon.

10,068. Could you not answer in English?—I will try.

[The remainder of the examination was taken in English.]

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,069. Am I to understand that there was no road at all here, or that there was not at the time when the Williamses were tenants of the farm?—No, not at all, only the narrow gauge railroad. Of course, we were allowed to take anything down along the narrow gauge after the trains stopped at night. They took the waggons down, and shunted into a siding. Of course, that was nothing but permission from the railway company.

10,070. This appears to have been a pretty old farm, and to have been let a good long time, at any rate. What was done before the railway was built?—I do not know.

10,071. You are a shopkeeper, I think, are you not?—Yes.

10,072. Have you among your customers many of the farmers of the neighbourhood?—There are a few, but the farmers about Festiniog are not the same as farmers in other parts of the country. Of course they get assistance in certain parts of the year in the quarries to pay their ways, and amongst many of the small farmers I think they work in the quarries to be able to pay rent for these farms. If it had not been for the quarries they could not live on the farm. The rents are too high. That is my opinion about the farm, about the small holdings.

10,073. Do you find, from your knowledge of the district, that the farmers are in debt much?—They are, as a rule, those that depend upon farming altogether, nothing else.

10,074. Do you agree with what has been said, that most of the farmers speak Welsh almost exclusively among themselves?—Yes.

10,075. And are they chiefly Nonconformists here, as we heard they were in other parts of this county?—Yes, I think they are, with very few exceptions.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,076. You say you spent 290*l.*?—Yes.

10,077. Did you ever apply for compensation for that amount?—We did. I wrote to Mr.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Lawford myself. I called a valuer there to value the place, when we saw we could not get the tenancy. We wrote then to Mr. Lawford, and enclosed the valuation of this gentleman, a builder, at Tanygrisiau, of the name of Evan Griffith. He valued the cowhouse, and the valuation was sent to Mr. Lawford.

10,078. Was that the amount of the valuation?—I think the cowhouse was put down in that valuation at 42*l.* to 45*l.*; I am not certain.

10,079. You have not the receipts?—No, not now.

10,080. Have you any remedy to recommend for this state of things?—The only remedy would be this, that they should be compelled to pay compensation.

10,081. Compensation for improvements, you mean?—Yes, of course; if they compel the tenant to go away they ought to pay compensation for improvements.

10,082. Do you think the tenants have been a little slack in taking and in building without some security?—Yes; but what could they do? My father for many years before he built his cowhouse, lived in a very bad house, and they had no place to put their hay in. He would have to go to the expense every summer of making a haystack, which would mean about 3*l.* or 4*l.* to him.

10,083. Do you think he could have placed his money on better security?—No doubt he could.

10,084. Why do you think he did not do so?—Well, he did not like to part with his home. His family has been there now, I think, for seven or eight generations, the same family.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,085. Do you think that small farms in the neighbourhood of quarries and other works are let higher than they are somewhere apart from any quarry?—They are; there is no doubt about that. They charge, as a rule, from 7*l.* to 9*l.* or 10*l.* a cow about the slate quarries. It is most astounding in some parts there.

10,086. You mean for sufficient land to keep a cow?—Yes.

10,087. You have to pay about 10*l.*?—From 7*l.* to 10*l.* in these small holdings.

10,088. What do you consider that a farmhouse on a small place of 10 acres would let at?

—Well, I should think on a small place it is not worth more than 5*l.* or 6*l.* a year. There is no public road, of course, to it; only a footpath.

10,089. Which do you consider best off, a man who has a little land and is enabled to work in a quarry, or a small farmer who lives entirely on his land?—A small farmer who lives entirely on his land, I think, as far as rent is concerned, because they take advantage of the quarry men about the quarries.

10,090. That is a point I wanted to get at, because we heard yesterday from Mr. Wynne, of Penarth, that it was the other way?—No; they take advantage of that, no doubt because they are near the quarry.

10,091. Are you living on a farm in the neighbourhood?—No; it is an industrial neighbourhood.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,092. You say you cannot tell why your father is not allowed to continue the tenancy?—No, I cannot.

10,093. Do you think it has anything to do with the sub-letting? Is half a farm still sub-let to small tenants?—The other half was sub-let by John Williams.

10,094. Then did his successor in the tenancy after the notice to quit was given do just the same—did he occupy half and sub-let the other half?—I do not understand the question, because when John Williams died the notice was served all round, so there were no tenants, only those that cared to work out the notice of John Williams. The notice was given to the executors of John Williams the same as my father.

10,095. I mean when the new tenant came in, after your family was turned out, did the new tenant occupy only half of the farm and sub-let the other half?—Exactly the same.

10,096. And you think that sub-letting had nothing to do with the change in the tenancy?—No, I do not think so.

10,097. Why did John Williams sub-let half of the farm?—I do not know. No doubt he was getting higher rent for it. I think I could prove that—that there was very little rent he was paying himself when you added up these small rents together. I could prove that.

10,098. Was the sub-letting chiefly to persons connected with the quarries?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts called and examined through an interpreter.

The interpreter read the following statement of the witness:

"Evidence of Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts, Buarth Melyn, Tan-y-grisian, Blaenau Festiniog.

"My evidence will relate to the farm I occupy which is glebe land belonging to the living of Llanfihangel-y-Pennant, Carnarvonshire. The character of the land is mountainous and swampy. I am a tenant from year to year.

"I have known the farm for the last 50 years as I was born and bred there, my family having lived there for some centuries. Since more than 50 years there has been no road to the place, a way which was used about 50 years ago having been sold to the Festiniog Railway Company for them to make the railway along it. The owner of the farm received a good sum for the same, but no new road to the farm has ever been made.

The result is that nothing can be brought to Buarth Melyn nor taken from there except along the Festiniog Railway between the different trains, and this is of course illegal. In case of a death at Buarth Melyn the consent of the Railway Company has to be obtained to take the corpse away on a bier. I remember from 26 to 28 funerals taking place there.

"About 12 years ago one of the family met with an accident, the medical man who was called in came along the railway, was prosecuted by the Company and fined 2*l.* 2*s.* and costs.

"In my father's time the rent was 14*l.*; the present rent is 38*l.* From the notice which has been issued of the intention of the incumbent of Llanfihangel to sell the farm under the provisions of the Glebe Land Act, 1888, it will be seen that 10*l.* a year is paid for the lease of a right of way. [The notice was handed in.] The owners have never spent a penny on improvements or repairs. When my father married, the farm house was at Glanrafon ddu, where my grandfather lived. My father then built Buarth Melyn at his own expense. He later on built three other houses and rebuilt Glanrafon ddu after my brother was tenant for about two years. I became tenant after him and have myself spent scores of pounds in improvements by making drains, drying the swampy parts. One year it cost me about 30*l.* to change the course of the river with a view to adding two acres of mountain land to the meadow land. The following year I received a notice to quit as another person was offering more rent for the place, and had I not agreed to pay 10*l.* more rent I should have had to leave. The sub-tenant became bankrupt and I incurred a loss of 15*l.* and though they knew this they accepted him as candidate for the farm against me. This fact determined me not to make any further permanent improvements without having greater security for my tenure. I asked the owner for a lease or offered to purchase the farm. The lease was promised, but I was told that it would be necessary to give me notice to quit before the purchase could be carried out. This notice was given me, and now there are notices posted about offering the place for sale. Soon after that a valuer on behalf of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners came to value the farm. I then sent to the rector of Llanfihangel asking him whether he would not try and secure for me some compensation for all the improvements I had carried out and send a valuer over to estimate what was due to me. I never received an answer from him. I have never received any abatement except 10*s.* goodwill in the rent, though I made several special appeals during the last few years, and especially this year, but my request was distinctly declined. The cattle pasturage is very dangerous owing to the rocks, and I have lost 13 cows in the last 27 years.

"The children of farmers generally work at home, and do not receive any wages in return for their labour. In my father's time I worked at the quarries, and used to hand over the whole of my wages to my father to assist him to live and to pay the rent and rates. I did this till I was over 20 years old. In return for this I received my clothes and 1*s.* 6*d.* a month, which I contributed towards religious objects. Besides this, in the summer months I used to work upon the farm, after returning from the quarry until it was too dark to work. A brother of mine worked on my father's farm till he was 28 years old without receiving any wages. He then became tenant himself. The gross value of the stock at my father's death was 85*l.* From this there had to be deducted various debts, in addition to the doctor's bill and the funeral expenses. This reduced the value of the stock by one half. My father and the whole family had never been in the habit of wasting money but on the other hand they had a reputation for industry, thrift, and sobriety."

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,099. Do you consider that glebe land is satisfactory tenure?—The terms were quite satisfactory until five or six years ago.

10,100. Have you ever had any repairs done for you?—No; not even a stone on any of the buildings.

10,101. You would be better off under a large landlord?—Oh, yes, I should be much better off if I had a landowner like Mr. Oakley; he would give me an abatement.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,102. I think you stated that your family had been on this farm for some centuries?—Yes, they have been.

10,103. Did they always hold as tenants from year to year as far as you know?—From my father's time, I can remember that, from year to year.

10,104. Did you ever hear that they ever had leases, or anything of that kind, before, in old times?—No, never. I tried for a lease several times, but failed.

Professor Rhŷs.

10,105. I wish to know whether you repeat this statement: that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners valued it for you?—The steward valued it.

10,106. On whose behalf?—For those who had the authority to sell, so he told me.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,107. Were you supplied with pipes for draining the swampy parts of the farm?—No, I never had a pennyworth of anything ever.

10,108. Did you make any gates or posts there?—Yes, he paid for making or repairing the mountain walls every year.

10,109. Were you supplied with materials for making the gates?—When I had money to buy them.

10,110. Did you get anything from the owner?—No, never.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,111. Are you a Nonconformist?—Yes.

10,112. Did you ever refuse to pay the tithe?—No, never.

10,113. Neither did you offend your landlord at an election, did you?—No, I rather fancy I am on very good terms with him.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,114. In what year was it that you received the notice to quit that you mentioned—the first notice to quit?—About five years ago, when Mr. Williams, whose Bardic name is Berw, became incumbent.

10,115. And the result of that was you had to agree to pay 10*l.* a year more rent?—Yes, I had to give 10*l.* or be without it, because there was another man who was ready to go into the farm, but he became bankrupt, and was only able to pay 8½*d.* in the pound to his creditors. I lost 15*l.* That man owed me 15*l.*

10,116. Has any abatement or reduction been made of any kind since the time when the rent was raised?—No, they have positively refused each time. Each time they saw that I had improved the farm they raised my rent.

10,117. I understand you to say now that the farm is offered for sale?—Yes, the Chairman has the paper.

10,118. That is only the notice under the Glebe Act, 1888?—They have offered it both to the Local Board and to the Sanitary Committee.

10,119. Have they not offered it to you, seeing that your family has been there for so many years?—Mr. Owen sent to me to ask me how much I would give for the farm, so that he might have something to show to the Bishop as a basis for the valuation.

10,120. Of course, the Act of 1888 contains this proviso, which is put in in the interests of labourers, cottagers, and all persons who desire to acquire small holdings, and they appear to have been quite right, therefore, to have offered it to the sanitary authority, though it may have been very hard indeed upon you. But as the authority has not taken the matter up, I want to know, has not anybody offered it to you at a fair price?—The steward, or the agent, told me that after he had had time to consider what the value of the farm would be he would let me know in a few days, but no price was stated.

10,121. When you received this notice did you not give some notice under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—No, nothing.

10,122. Then of course the mere effect of the sale of the glebe lands does not necessarily put an end to the tenancy?—So far as notice terminates it, it does.

10,123. That is what I want to know. Then they gave a notice to quit as well?—I had a notice on the 20th March.

10,124. And that expires on the 25th March next year?—Yes.

10,125. You are to go out of your farm next Easter?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

10,126. I do not quite understand whether you made any offer for the farm?—Yes, I offered more than it was worth because I considered that so much of my money was invested in it.

10,127. Then I understand that offer was refused?—He did not say that he refused any offer, but sent a valuer and that was all.

10,128. You have had no answer to your application to purchase?—Mr. Owen, the clergyman, has positively refused and has also refused to send a valuer to value the improvements which I have made.

10,129. Has Mr. Owen positively refused to sell you the farm?—I have sent my estimated price of the farm in nine months ago, and he has not replied in any way whether I will get the farm or not, but he has sent me notice.

10,130. Am I to understand that what you call your estimated value of the farm was at the same time an offer to purchase?—Yes, according to Mr. Owen's own desire.

10,131. Can you tell me whether it has always been glebe land during the time that your family have had it?—It has always been, within the recollection of my old grandfather, glebe land.

Chairman.

10,132. Question put in by Mr. Vincent: "Do you sub-let part of your holding?"—Yes, I let it to that man who offered to pay 10*l.* rent more for the farm, and from whom I lost 15*l.*

10,133. At what price?—10*l.*

10,134. This is another question put in by Mr. Vincent; "The rent is 38*l.*, you say?"—Yes.

10,135. Would you mind saying how many cows, other horned stock, and sheep your holding will carry?—Five cows, if I give them a decent amount of meal. I have six cows now, and I send down 4*l.* worth of meal every month.

10,136. How many sheep?—I have no place to keep sheep on my farm. I have no sheep walk on my farm. I keep my sheep on Crown property, and I pay for my sheep in Carnarvonshire and during winter.

10,137. Mr. Walter Jones asks this question: "Has not your sub-tenant made a claim against "you in respect of a house he has rebuilt?"—The only house built on my land now is built by a widow and the local board condemned all the other houses as being unfit for habitation.

10,138. Then the answer to that is "No"?—The widow expects me to pay 60*l.* for the house that there is now.

Professor Rhŷs.

10,139. What widow?—My sister-in-law. Mr. Walter Jones told me that she could not claim a single penny unless she had signed something with me.

Lord Kenyon.

10,140. What is the acreage on your farm?—It used to be 120, but since Mr. W. B. C. Jones came yonder to value it he has increased it by adding Crown property, so that it is now about 200 acres or so.

See 10,324 17,624–17,629.

10,141. What is the acreage that you sub-let?—I do not sublet it now. I have not sublet it for four years.

10,142. What is the acreage of the land which you used to sublet?—I cannot say, but the portion I sub-let to this man was just enough to keep a cow going.

10,143. Would it be four acres?—No, it was more than that by far.

10,144. Could you tell me approximately within an acre or two?—I should not be surprised that it was six or eight acres, only it was rock almost all of it.

10,145. So that you sold 6 or 8 acres at 10*l.* and you paid 28*l.* for the rest?—I reckoned that the house which my father had built, with which the land had nothing to do, was worth 4*l.*

Chairman.

10,146. Question put in by Mr. Vincent: "Is not the Crown land to which you refer an "allotment to this glebe land?"—No, it has nothing to do with it. The Crown leases it to others.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Simon R. Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

10,147. The following statement of the witness was read by the interpreter:

"Simon R. Jones, Llwyn Mafon Isa, in the parish of Ynyscynhaiarn, in the county of Carnarvon, farmer.

"I am co-tenant with my mother of the above farm, which measures about 128 acres. Up to the year 1864 the tenant was Mr. Thomas Jones, now of Eisteddfa. The farm then belonged to Mr. R. J. Ll. Price Rhiwlas, Bala, and the then rent was 71*l.* In the year 1864 my father became tenant, and in the course of the negotiations for the transfer of the tenancy, Mr. Thomas Jones, who was tenant, sub-let to my father, assured him that the rent would not be raised, and backed his assurance up by entering into an agreement that he, Thomas Jones, should pay the increase for 10 years should any be made. About two years afterwards Mr. Price sold the farm for 2,700*l.* to Messrs. Huddarts, the owners of the Brynkir Estate, and immediately afterwards the rent was raised by the new landlord from 71*l.* to 96*l.*, an increase of 25*l.* They did not spend any money on the farm for improvements or otherwise. Mr. Thomas Jones, the late tenant, continued to pay this increased rent on the land until my father and he came to terms, whereby by father accepted a lump sum in discharge of Mr. Thomas Jones' liability under this agreement, and thenceforth paid the full increased rent himself. My father continued tenant up to his death in September 1889. During his tenancy my father expended considerable amounts in walling, draining, building, and other improvements. The pig styes had become dilapidated and unfit for use, and my father rebuilt them entirely himself, getting only some 18*l.* or so from the landlords towards the expense.

"I cannot say what sum of money my father spent altogether, but I know it was considerable and that during the whole time the landlords expended practically nothing in improving the farm.

"In the year 1886 the greater part of the Brynkir Estate was sold, and amongst the lots sold being our farm, which fetched at the auction 3,000*l.*, the purchaser being Mr. J. J. Williams, of Criccieth. In 1889 (after the auction) our new landlord served my father with notice to quit, and when we went to him he stated that he would not let it without an increase of 15*l.*

"This was in October 1889, a week after my father's death, and this rent we have had to pay ever since without a penny of reduction, abatement, or discount, not even so much as the dinner which is customarily given to tenants when paying the rents.

"I consider that the present rent is considerably higher than a fair rent would be, and there is no doubt we would have left, but for the scarcity of farms in these parts.

"I have often expostulated with my landlord because of the unreasonable rent which he is extorting from us, but the only reply he gives is that there are plenty who would be willing to take the farm at the rent we give and that if we did not like to pay it we could leave. He also added that he would be willing to grant us a lease for 15 or 20 years, if we paid him an additional 15*l.* per annum, but of course a condition so unreasonable was not for a moment to be thought of, as it is really more than we can do to make the farm pay at the present rent.

"I may add that we have not received a penny compensation by any one in consideration of the improvements executed by my father and ourselves.

"I produce my receipts for rent and the notices to quit we have had from time to time in order to effect an increase in the rent, and also the notice under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, whereby the landlord contracted himself out of the Act. [The receipts and notices were handed in.] I believe this notice was very generally given by the landlords in this district, and that neither the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, nor that of 1883 or the Ground Game Act, 1880, have been of any substantial benefit to the tenants.

"I believe that very few tenants keep any accounts, so that it is difficult for them to say exactly what they make out of their farms, but I am strongly of opinion from my intercourse with my fellow farmers that neither they nor their families receive hardly anything beyond their keep and clothing in the shape of wages for their labour, and practically no interest on their stock. I have been keeping careful accounts lately, and my accounts show a very considerable reduction in the price of cattle during the last eight years. A list of prices and wages is ready to be put in." [The document was handed in.]

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,147*a*. Do you pay 111*l*. now?—Yes.

10,148. That is 96*l*. and 15*l*. added?—Yes.

10,149. Is it a fact that there are many others ready to give that rent?—That is what the landlord told me.

10,150. Do you agree that that is likely to be the case?—I daresay it is so.

10,151. You think it is not right that there should be competition rents exacted?—No, I do not think so.

10,152. Have you any game troubles?—No, not much.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,153. Do we understand that 10*l*. a year was paid by your father to the previous tenant because he had guaranteed your father against an increase of rent?—No. It was rumoured that the farm was to be sold and my father was afraid of that, and Mr. Jones stated that if there would be an increase in the rent he would pay for 10 years.

10,154-5. Then did your father give to the previous tenant anything like a goodwill which justified such a guarantee?—Yes, he had given 800*l*. for the stock and goodwill and said that the stock was worth about 600*l*., so that the rest, about 200*l*., was goodwill.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,156. Does the present landlord own much property?—Not so far as I know.

10,157. Which do you think the best, large or small landowners?—The large landowners.

10,158. Do you know if a good deal of property has changed hands during the last 15 years?—Yes, in this neighbourhood.

10,159. Has rent been raised with a view of sale and also after sale?—There are examples of rent having been raised after sale.

10,160-1. Do the tenants in this neighbourhood avail themselves of the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, not so far as I know.

10,162. Do you know of any cases where tenants have written to their landlords to ask their consent for making improvements under the first Schedule in the Act?—I do not know.

10,163. Who does the draining on the farms. Is it the landlord or the tenant?—The tenant.

10,164. Do they get their pipes supplied?—Some landlords give the pipes.

10,165. In those cases where the tenants have to use the pipes and all, are you aware that if you give notice to your landlord you can claim compensation when you are leaving the farm?—Yes, I know it. I have the Act.

10,166. Are there any instances where tenants claim compensation under the Second Schedule of the Act with regard to draining?—I do not know.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

10,167. Then we will take it that generally speaking the tenants do not avail themselves of this Act?—No, because it is deficient.

10,168. In what is it deficient?—Many of the farmers can do a little improvement every year, and if I understand the Act rightly, one must give notice to the landlord and receive his assent and that all the improvements should be made during the time specified and unless they keep to those times that they forfeit the claim to any compensation.

10,169. But that only applies to the First Schedule. Do you know that there is no need to send notice to your landlord previously to obtain his consent for improvements under the Third Schedule?—I understand that, but I misunderstood which Schedule you referred to.

10,170. Then are we to understand that the tenants do not make but very little use of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Not in these districts.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,171. Do you know of any others who have given good will on going into farms?—I cannot mention any now, but it is a custom in this country.

Professor Rhŷs.

10,172. On what estates?—I think it is the custom on the Brynkir estate.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,173. Do you think these notices to quit on the sale of farms tend to improve the farming in this neighbourhood?—No, quite the contrary. If we had only security of tenure we could make a farm double the value it is at present.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,174. Then what suggestion do you make?—A Land Court, according to my opinion.

Lord Kenyon.

10,175. Have you ever asked for a lease?—No.

10,176. Would not that give you security of tenure?—Our present landlord offered us a lease if we only paid a further sum of 15*l*.—another 15*l*.

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,177. May I ask you what amount of goodwill did you pay on going into the farm?—My father?

10,178. Yes?—From 150*l*. to 200*l*.

10,179. Was that with the consent of the landlord?—He made an agreement with the outgoing tenant, Mr Thomas Jones.

10,180. Was that with the consent of the landlord?—I cannot say that.

Interpreter.

10,181. Was it with the knowledge of the landlord?—Mr. Jones, of Eisteddfa, knows; I do not know.

10,182. What has he to do with it?

He is the man who became surety for the 10*l.* previous increase.

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,183. Yes, but what I wanted to know was whether the landlord, the owner of the Brynkir estate, I suppose it was, was in any way cognisant of that?—He knew that it is customary in this country to give so much for goodwill.

10,184. The landlord knew that it was customary. Are you sure of that? It is a very important point, I think?—It is likely that he did know.

Chairman.

10,185. Question put in by Mr. Wm. George: "Why do not tenants apply to their landlord "for consent to make improvements, or give "notice in writing of intention to make im- "provements?"—They are afraid that if they improve their farms the rent will be raised.

Chairman—continued.

10,186. Question put in by Mr. Vincent: "Did the Brynkir estate give the materials for "the pig-styes as well as the 18*l.*?"—No, but they had some old tree from Brynkir, and it was not worth the value of sawing it up.

10,187 One more question by Mr. Vincent: "How do you know that the landlord knew of "the payment for goodwill?"

Interpreter.

He did not say that. He said, "It is likely "that the landlord knew it was customary."

Chairman.

The question is withdrawn?

Mr. Vincent.

Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Henry Roberts called and examined.

The interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"Evidence of Henry Roberts, Pensyflog, Tremadoc, Ynyscynhaiarn—

"Acreage, 120 acres. Rent, 238*l.* 19*s.*

"My father was tenant since 1830, and the rent for 140 acres then was 150*l.* (the acreage being 140).

"Improvements.—Buildings and drainage. The land was a mere sandy waste when my father first took the place. It had only recently been reclaimed from the sea.

"My father bought the lease of two lives for 200*l.*, which expired in 1865. The farm was then divided, and 50 acres were taken away, and the rent was advanced 58*l.* 19*s.* The fact is the rent was raised in proportion to the improvements made.

"Being an auctioneer and valuer as well as a farmer, I turn considerably amongst farmers, and have an intimate knowledge of their affairs, and I say without hesitation that a very general distress prevails amongst them, and has prevailed, more especially during the last three or four years.

"As a class, farmers live very economically and providently, and they and their families work hard all their lifetime, but notwithstanding this fact very few of them have managed to save anything by farming beyond their stock, and very many of them of late years have even been obliged to borrow money on the credit of their stock. I believe that great efforts are made throughout the country to pay the rent, even where it has not been earned on the farm, in fact, the first consideration of the Welsh farmer is to pay the rent, often at the expense of making other creditors wait. It is an old saying in these parts, "Rhaid talu'r rhent" (the rent must be paid). It is within my own knowledge that farmers back one another at the banks and elsewhere in order to raise money to pay the landlord. As to wages to the farmer, his wife, and children, I am certain that not one of them get anything, nor does he get anything in the shape of interest on capital invested in the farm. I am of opinion that rents are much too high in these districts, and I consider that the tenant ought to have a voice in fixing it.

"Rents have been generally raised throughout the district during the last 30 years from 15*l.* to 30*l.* per cent. During this time the landlords have spent nothing on the land in the way of improvements.

"As to buildings, the general rule is that the landlord supplies materials and labour except the haulage and cartage, which has to be done by the tenant, and this in upland districts is a considerable item. For instance, there is the case of Erw Suran, the property of Owen Evans, Esq., Broomhall, and others. Some eight or nine years ago repairs were executed to the house and buildings there. In order to get a load of lime (e.g.) from the station to the place, the tenant had to send a cart with three horses and two men, one load meaning a day's work to them. The lime itself cost only 12*s.*, but the cartage was worth, in this way, at least 15*s.* When leaving, the tenant never gets anything for the improvements he has executed on the farm. Besides having a proviso for fixing fair rents, I think the law of distress ought to be abolished, and the landlord put on the same footing as any other creditors."

"In or about the year 1850 my father, Robert Roberts, Pensyflog, took about 40 acres of land adjoining Pensyflog at 1*l.* and 1*s.* an acre rent. He made new fences everywhere on the land except a portion of a fence adjoining the high road, and made several large stone-covered drains that are almost in as good condition now as when they were made. About the year 1860 the rent was raised to 30*s.* an acre. In the year 1866 nine acres were taken from his widow and children (my father was dead now) in addition to what was taken by the railway and the remaining 29 acres let to his widow for 2*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* an acre, while the same quality of land on the other side of the road was let for the same rent until last year when it was sold."

Mr. Griffiths.

You say, Mr. Roberts, that many farmers borrow money on their stock. Is it by bill of sale?—Yes, they do by bills of sale, but as a rule they do it in a more secret way by having bills and something like that.

10,188. They back them up at the bank?—That is it.

10,189. Do you think farmers owe much money at the bank?—I am afraid they do since the last three years—during the last three years.

10,190. Are you of opinion that landlords are more ready to raise the rent in good times than they are to lower in bad times?—Well, they have never reduced them, so far as I know. They have given abatements.

10,191. But no permanent reductions?—Nothing that I know of about here.

10,192. Then the tenant cannot get his rates reduced, can he?—No.

10,193. So long as the rent is up he cannot get his rates reduced, can he?—Well, I do not know that that affects the rates, so far as I know.

10,194. It certainly affects the rates.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

The abatement does not affect the rate so far as you know?—No, I think not; because the assessment of the rateable value is a different thing from the rent, is it not?

Mr. Griffiths.

10,195. Yes, but it is founded on the rent. If your rent were reduced your rateable value would be less?—Well, we differ there, I think; so far as I know it here the rateable value is not based on the rent. I think not; I am not quite sure.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,196. Mr. Roberts, what would be the effect of the abolition of the law of distress on competition for farms?—They would be more careful in the selection of their tenants, I suppose. They do not care there. They have priority for the rent for 12 months now; they are all right; they do not care.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

10,197. The consequence of the preferential claim of the landlord is this, that he takes a man of straw if he bids a high rent?—I think so.

10,198. What would be the effect on the other creditors; would it improve the credit of the farmer with shopkeepers and others with whom he has dealings?—Yes, I suppose so. They would be in the same boat, at all events, after that, all the creditors; and then it would be their look out.

10,199. Are there many cases of distraint in this district?—No, too few.

10,200. What do you mean by saying "too few"?—Well, we do not get work as auctioneers.

10,201. Is it from a selfish point of view that you look at it?—Well, that was how I did just now, at any rate. I am better sometimes. As a fact there are not many distraints here.

10,202. Do you think that tenants are in arrears?—No, I do not think many are. They are not, I think, because they take good care to pay their rent, even if they borrow it from other quarters.

10,203. You think that the first consideration of tenant farmers, as a rule, is to pay the rent?—Yes, that is it.

10,204. What is the cause of that, do you think? Can you assign any cause?—Yes, the love of home, I suppose. They cling to their homes. They would rather starve there than anywhere else by far.

10,205. Do you think that Welsh farmers are more attached to their homes than English farmers?—Well, I have no experience about the English farmers generally, but I know that Welsh farmers do cling to theirs very tenaciously.

10,206. Is there any migration of farmers from this neighbourhood?—No, very few.

10,207. Do you think they could do better if they went down into English counties?—Well, I cannot answer, really.

10,208. Is there any emigration to foreign parts, the colonies or America?—Yes, a few, not many.

10,209. How do those do who emigrate? Do they do better?—Indeed, I do not know. All I know is about these parts; that is quite enough.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,210. You said, I think, that your father had bought a lease for two lives?—Yes.

10,211. At what date did that lease expire?—In 1865.

10,212. Do you think that the family who held that lease for two lives had been for many generations on the farm before?—Well, I do not know. They were agents, I think, or something; I am not quite sure upon that point. They did not live at the farm, because my father had lived there about 20 years before that.

10,213. They let the farm?—Yes, they let the farm, and he had built the house and buildings—everything except the stable, I think—previous to this lease.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

10,214. Do you hear of many leases for lives in those days? Were there many in this neighbourhood?—I do not think there were.

10,215. This was quite an exceptional case?—Well, I believe so.

Professor Rhŷs.

10,216. How many acres do you farm?—Now?

10,217. Yes?—About 120, I should say.

10,218. What servants do you keep?—About three or four; as few as ever I can.

10,219. Three or four men servants?—No, only two, and two of the other sex. As a rule I am grazing it.

10,220. How many are you obliged to keep for that, two men servants?—Yes, as a rule, that is it, only I keep some extra hands in harvest.

10,221. Who does the milking?—Well, the maid-servants, as a rule.

10,222. That is not the case everywhere, though it may seem funny to you?—No, not exactly; the man-servant too milks.

10,223. I thought so. Have you any labourers on the farm?—Only those servants.

10,224. Have their wages gone up very much in your time?—Yes, I believe so, but not so high as they have been some years ago.

10,225. Would you mind telling me what sort of fare they have? What sort of food do the servants have, the same as your family?—Well, the same as myself, exactly; we go to the butcher's shop every Saturday night and get fresh meat, and we feed on that the following week.

10,226. You have fresh meat on Saturday night every week?—Exactly so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,227. When you say that you are in favour of the abolition of the law of distress, would that be in favour of the other creditors, the shopkeepers or of the tenant farmers?—Of the other creditors.

10,228. Or is it in the interest of the tenant farmers that you speak?—I think it would be in the interest of both; that is what I think.

10,229. You think it would be in favour of the tenant farmers?—I think it would be fair.

10,230. I understood you to say that would be fair to the general public, but would it be to the benefit of the tenant farmers?—Yes, it would, and it would be only fair for the landlord, too, I think. There would not be anything unfair in it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,231. Is that the only remedy that you suggest with regard to the law referring to landlord and tenant?—Oh no, there are plenty of other things, such as compensation for improvements. I do not know whether some security of tenure would be of benefit; perhaps so.

10,232. How do you propose that such security of tenure should be obtained?—Well, that is the question. I think the farmer ought to have a voice in settling the rent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

10,233. He has got a voice in settling the rent now?—Only he must get out of it and leave his improvements behind without getting paid for them. That is his only remedy now, so far as I know.

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,234. They certainly ought to get some compensation. You think it ought to be extended?

Lord Kenyon.

Do you mean that there should be a further extension of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Oh, it is quite a dead letter here altogether.

10,235. I mean, if it were further extended, if there were more compensation clauses, would that meet your view?—It must be more simple.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,236. Are you in favour of the Land Court, which I think has been suggested by some of the other witnesses, I think by the first witness to-day?—Well, perhaps they would be afraid of the thing. I am not in favour of getting into law; these lawyers are running up their bills tremendously, and there are some cases I believe which have appeared in the newspapers about the Agricultural Holdings Act, and where these costs did run up to several hundreds of pounds, and that had a deterrent effect on the tenants no doubt.

10,237. But is it not the fact that the lawyers complain of the auctioneer's bills?—No, they are quite satisfied with them.

10,238. That is not my experience, but it may be so?—I have got some notes about these farms. I do not know whether I should tell you of them. This is Erw Suran.

Chairman.

10,239. Which farms are those?—It is a farm near here, and scores of farmers would not turn up, and I have got this from the tenant himself. It is only a few words.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,240. What do you mean by that? Why would not scores of farmers turn up?—I do not know; they are afraid of something, of their shadows perhaps. Shall I state this?

Chairman.

10,241. Yes, if you please?—The tenant went into this Erw Suran.

10,242. Will you give us the name of the tenant?—Cadwaladr Evans, of Erw Suran.

10,243. Who is the landlord?—Mr. Owen Evans and others. There are three or four landlords there. It is a joint ownership, I suppose.

10,244. Now tell us what this gentleman wishes you to say?—He went there in 1883, and it is an upland farm about 700 feet, I should say, above the level of the sea. What he complains of is the haulage—the cartage of the materials for building. He went there in 1883, and in 1885, that was two years afterwards, they built a house there, a new roof to a stable, a new house for chaff cutting, a new roof for a cart house, and in 1890 they built a new cart house there, and all the carting is done by the tenant, which according to his estimate was fully 100*l.* He has given notice to quit, and he is leaving now.

10,245. He has given notice, or has he been given notice?—He gave notice himself, because the rent was too high, and he said he could not pay. Then he leaves all that haulage, or cartage, whatever you call it, behind him, which he says is fully 100*l.*

10,246. And gets no compensation for it?—Nothing. With reference to the rent raising, I do not know whether I should state it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,247. Before you leave that case, is there anything in the agreement providing for compensation in case he left within a certain time after hauling?—No, I do not think he had an agreement, but it is the custom about here, very often, for the tenant to do the haulage.

Chairman.

10,248. It is the universal custom, I take it?—Yes, it is, as a rule. This is as to another farm near here.

10,249. Who is the tenant?—William Williams, of Llanerch.

10,250. Who is the landlord?—The Tremadoc Estate, the owner of the land about here.

10,251. Who is the owner? It is in trustees, is it not?—I suppose it is; I do not know.

10,252. You do not know?—No; indeed, I do not know, except they call it the Tremadoc Estate.

10,253. That is sufficient?—The rent in 1823 was 51*l.* There was a lease on the farm, I think, which expired in 1823. The rent then was 51*l.* It was raised in that year to 102*l.* In the year 1860 it was raised to 140*l.* In the year 1867 it was raised to 160*l.* That is all there.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,254. Then does it remain at the present rent?—Yes, that is it.

10,255. Are there any abatements made in the present rent?—Yes, 10 per cent., I think.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,256. You are pretty well acquainted, Mr. Roberts, with the whole of this district of South Carnarvonshire, are you not?—Yes, I am.

10,257. Are there any complaints as to deficient means of communication? Are the roads in a satisfactory condition, and are there enough of them?—So far as I know, there are.

10,258. One or two cases to day have been mentioned for the first time; it is the first we have heard of cases in which there were no roads at all to the farms?—I do not know of any, unless it would be a very outlandish upland farm. I think that the depression tells more severely on the upland farmers by far than the lowland.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

10,259. In this town of Portmadoc is there any desire expressed for increased facilities for the acquisition of land by public bodies?—No, I do not think so. I do not know of any.

10,260. Is it difficult to acquire land for any public purpose here on fair terms?—No, I think not.

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,261. This is arising out of what Mr. Brynmor Jones has elicited. You consider that the depression is telling more severely upon the upland than upon the lowland farmer?—Yes.

10,262. Is that owing to the depression in the price of sheep?—Sheep and cattle.

10,263. And the wool?—Yes, and the reduction in the price of wool; and they winter the sheep in the lowland farms about here.

10,264. In your opinion the depression is telling more severely upon the upland than upon the lowland farmers?—I think so.

10,265. It is bad enough upon the lowland farmers, is it not?—I think so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,266. Have there been any losses in sheep during the last season?—Oh, yes; a good many.

10,267. Have there been any losses since the year 1885?—Yes, after that, certainly.

10,268. Two or three years ago, during those severe seasons?—Yes, there was a severe season, certainly.

10,269. A large number of sheep were lost?—Yes; a good many in the upland farms.

Professor Rhŷs.

10,270. You mentioned just now that certain cases of litigation arose which frightened people from the idea of having recourse to the Agricultural Holdings Act, did you not?—I did.

10,271. Would you mind telling me at what time this occurred?—Indeed I cannot say that.

10,272. Where were the cases tried?—There was some case in one of those High Courts; really I forget where.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,273. The County Court is the court for the administration of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Even if the sum would be a big sum?

10,274. Yes, even if the sum is a big sum. There is an appeal to the High Court?—So there is; and that is the worst of it, that they do appeal and go to the High Court, but really I have not got the case at my fingers' ends.

10,275. I think everybody is agreed that the machinery of the Act of 1883 is very cumbrous. I have had one or two cases under my notice in which the costs were, as you say, very high?—Yes, and farmers have to do things by rule of thumb, really. They do not like to give notice to their landlords, or get consent, or anything like that about improvement under the Act, but still there is improvement made in the land by the farmers.

Professor Rhŷs.

10,276. I thought you referred to something that had taken place in the Courts about here. That is not so?—That is not so.

10,277. There is one other thing I should ask you. Do you know of cases of an incoming tenant paying the outgoing tenant what is called goodwill for what is done?—Not lately, certainly. It used to be the case.

10,278. On what estates?—Not under the heading of goodwill, but better price for the stock, perhaps, or the crops.

10,279. That was how it was done?—That was how it was done, but I do not think it is done now.

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,280. Was it done generally?—Well, on the best estates I daresay it was.

Professor Rhŷs.

10,281. Whose estates, for instance? Can you mention any?—Well, they say that comparisons are odious, do they not?

10,282. I will not press you, but you know it was not an unusual thing?—It was not years ago, when things went well.

10,283. Then the man who offered the best price for the outgoing tenant's stock, and so on, had the best chance of coming in?—If the landlord consented, no doubt; of course you must have the landlord's consent.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN OWEN MORRIS called and examined through an interpreter.

The interpreter read the evidence of the witness as follows:—

"John O. Morris, Grocer, Sea-view, Borthygest.

"(As to Morfa Bychan foreshore.)

"I am 73 years of age, and was born at Glandon, Morfa Bychan, and lived there for 47 years until I removed to Borth 25 years ago.

"My father had lived about 20 years in the place before I was born.

"I remember that at first we had about 3½ acres of land, but it gradually increased on account of the sea falling off.

"When I was a boy the sea used to come close to our house but now it only comes to within a quarter of a mile of cultivated land which lies between the then and the present high water mark.

"Our place was a barren common when my father built a house on it at his own expense.

"He enclosed and cultivated the land and lived there without paying rent until I was about 10 or 11 years of age, when it was claimed by the Glyn estate people, who, after a long struggle lasting over many years, ultimately succeeded in their attempt and granted my father a lease of the place during the lifetime of my father and mother, the rent being 15*s.* a year.

"My father died in the year 1868 and the lease consequently expired.

"The rent was thereupon raised to 4*l.* and afterwards to 6*l.* per annum, and my sister and her husband are now the tenants of the place.

"The way my father was treated applies to the whole of Morfa Bychan.

"I remember the time when there were 15 small places (farms) similar to ours with houses built thereon in the same manner as ours and with about the same quantity of land enclosed with each of them.

"All of these by now have been taken by force from the people who built the houses, and are now rented to them at their full value.

"The waste part of Morfa Bychan the gentry divided amongst themselves.

"I remember the Glyn Estate people coming to our house when my father was refusing to pay the rent they asked.

"I remember the people of Morfa Bychan once joined together to oppose the attempt to seize the place. A lawsuit followed.

"The matter was heard twice. The first time, verdict was given for the Morfa Bychan folk.

The gentry appealed and in a trial before a special jury composed of landed proprietors, the previous verdict was quashed and they found for the gentry."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,284. I think when I was listening to your proof being read in the other room, the case that you referred to was stated by you to have taken place a good many years ago?—Yes, it has taken place many years ago.

10,285. As far back as the year 1831?—50 or 55 years.

10,286. Did it go to the Court of Great Sessions?—It was at Carnarvon twice.

10,287. And was great dissatisfaction felt in that district as to the result. Is that the substance of what you say as to that?—Yes, there was great dissatisfaction.

10,288. What was the point, do you think, in the case?—The question was this: It was alleged that if the land was gained by the sea receding, that the gentry owned it; and the other side alleged that land so gained belonged to the Government.

10,289. Then, as I understand it, the point was whether this accession, this addition to the soil near the sea, belonged to the Lord of the Manor or belonged to the Crown?—That was the question at issue.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Leonard Fielden called and examined.

10,289*a*. The interpreter read the evidence of the witness as follows:—

"Mr. Leonard Fielden, Ynysgyngar, Morfa Bychan, near Portmadoc, labourer."

"The above place is a small cottage situate at Morfa Bychan, Portmadoc, with about six acres of land belonging to it, and which I and my late stepfather reclaimed from the sea.

"My wife was bred and born in this place, and she is now 66 years of age."

"My father-in-law was a ferryman, carrying people to and from Merionethshire, and it was he who converted my cottage from being a carpenter's cottage into a dwelling-house, and came there with my mother-in-law to live. He reclaimed the whole of the land which now belongs to me, excepting about two acres which I myself added to it about a year after I went there to live. Since then the whole of the land has been enclosed and occupied by me."

"My wife remembers the sea coming up right to our doorsteps, and the boat being fastened to the door of the house."

"In Morfa Bychan there are about two dozen small cottages with about the same quantity of land attached to them as to mine."

"All these were reclaimed from the sea in the same way as mine was, that is, by the inhabitants themselves, and it was they who built the cottages on these bits of land and cultivated the ground, but they have all been deprived of them by different landed proprietors of the neighbourhood, who are now receiving rents therefor. Mine is the only one which has not been taken in this manner."

"After the death of my mother-in-law, 28 years ago, my wife called at the office of Mr. Breese, the solicitor of the estate, not knowing what to do with the house."

"Mr. Breese told her that the place was not entered in the books, and that it was hers, as her father and mother had occupied the place long enough to own it."

"Some time before Mr. Breese's death Mr. J. P. Roberts, the agent of the Tremadoc estate, passed the place and asked my wife whether she paid rent for the place; when she replied in the negative, he said she would have to pay, that he would report the matter to Mr. Breese. However, we never heard anything of the matter afterwards."

Chairman. We have nothing to ask you upon that document.

Mr. William Jones called and examined.

Chairman.

10,290. You want to contradict a statement which was made yesterday, I believe?—Yes.

10,291. The statement came in the evidence of Mr. Robert Jones, of Ystumwern, Dyffryn Mr. Jones said, "that in 1853 the rent of Tyddyn "Gronwy was 28*l*., soon afterwards raised to 31*l*., "in 1858 raised to 36*l*., and a sheep-walk for 100 "sheep taken from it. 'Since then it has been "twice sold, and I believe the present rent is "over 70*l*." Do you wish to make this statement, which I have here, with reference to that?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

10,292. "Since the rent of above was 35*l*. per annum, over 11 acres of land have been added to the farm. Outbuildings, walls, &c., to the value of about 400*l*., have been erected thereon by Mr. Edward Humphreys, and since it came into my possession I have built a new house, which is also adapted to take in visitors, and containing two sitting rooms, nine bedrooms, &c., &c., at a cost of about 400*l*." That is your statement?—Yes.

Chairman. That statement will be put in.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Griffith called and examined through an interpreter.

The interpreter read the evidence of the witness as follows:—

"Evidence of John Griffith, of Portyrheuddyn:

"I am the tenant of the above farm. Average, 160 acres. Rent 172*l*.

"I have been in occupation after Mr. Jenkins during the last 16 years.

"Arable and good hay land about 45 acres.

"The rent ought to be 100*l*. I let the house for 40*l*. and live in a small cottage. I have lost 250*l*. in hard cash on the farm and have worked hard all my lifetime and earn hardly sufficient to provide myself in clothes after paying the rent. Rents have generally been raised of late years. There ought to be a fair proviso for fixing fair rents."

Lord Kenyon.

10,293. Has your rent been raised?—It is the same since I have been yonder.

10,294. Have you ever had an abatement?—2*s*. in the pound. These are hard times now.

10,295. And how often have you received 10 per cent?—Twice.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,296. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Roche.

10,297. Can you get a suit of clothes once a year?—No, indeed I cannot, and pay for it as well.

10,298. You say you lost 250*l*.; where has it gone to?—Towards paying the rent and everything of that kind. During the last two years we had nothing scarcely from the farm, except water.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

10,299. What remedy do you sugest?—A reduction in the rent.

10,300. Anything else?—And to appoint valuers who know something about land to look over it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,301. Have you got a sheep-walk?—No, not in the summer; but a little in the winter; a small sheep-walk in the winter.

10,302. What do you mean by that?—Above the house I keep about 60 sheep during the winter.

10,303. That is not included in the 160 acres then?—Yes, that land is included in the 160 acres.

10,304. Do you mean to say that you pay over a pound an acre for your land, including that sheep-walk?—It is a little over a pound.

10,305. Is the grass on your land good and rich enough to feed cattle, that is, to fatten them?—Oh, no, certainly not.

10,306. Not without giving them corn, or something of that sort?—No; but we have about 45 acres of good land.

10,307. If you have lost 250*l.* on this place, why did not you give it up?—I have given up the farm several times and tried for a reduction, but they will not allow a reduction.

10,308. But have you given notice to quit?—Yes, I have given notice to quit several times.

10,309. Well, why do not you go?—The times are so bad that if I were to sell my stock I would hardly get anything for it.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

10,310. How long do you mean to stay there if it continues in this way?—I cannot stay there very long because I have nothing.

10,311. Then you are living in hopes of better times?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,312. Do you keep servants?—Yes.

10,313. Do you pay them more wages now than you used to years ago?—Oh, yes, I do; a good deal more.

10,314. Do you pay double the wages you used to?—Oh, no, not double.

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,315. There are two questions put in by Mr. George Owen, "Do you not sub-let?"—No; no one will take it; it is too high.

10,316. Is that true, because I see that you say in your statement, "I let the house for 40*l.*?"—That is quite correct. I let the house for 40*l.*

10,317. Question by Mr. Vincent: "How "many acres are there apart from the sheep-"walk?"—Indeed I do not know.

10,318. "How much is sheep-walk and how much is not sheep walk?"—The flat part of my farm is 80 acres, and that is sometimes covered with water, almost all.

10,319. The flat part?—The lower part.

10,320. How much is the upper part?—The other part is about 40 acres, perhaps.

10,321. Question also by Mr. Vincent: "What is the rent?"—That is 172*l.*

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WALTER B. C. JONES called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,322. The evidence you wish to give is as land agent, land valuer, land inspector under the Board of Agriculture, county treasurer and fellow of the Surveyors' Institute; is that so?—That is so.

10,323. For what district do you propose to give evidence?—I propose to give evidence as to parts of Carnarvonshire, Merionethshire, Denbighshire, and Montgomeryshire.

10,324. What estate does your evidence refer to?—It refers to an estate of about 7,000 acres; but I have also dealt with much property outside of the estate I am now agent for.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,324. Who is the owner?—Mr. Ellis Nanney. I also propose to deal with the principles of ownership and occupation of property, which I take to be the same whether the extent of land owned or occupied is large or small. With regard to the questions as to the ownership, namely, "What difference in effect do the follow-"ing variations of tenure and circumstances

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

"produce on the occupation and the cultivation "of land, where land is held in fee simple and "unencumbered, mortgaged, or otherwise en-"cumbered"? I think it has no effect whatever. The cultivation depends almost entirely upon the stamina and energy of the tenant; a real good stirring man will farm well under any system of ownership. I distinctly make a difference between good farming and laying out money in permanent improvements. The one repays its cost very rapidly, the other less rapidly. With regard to the property of the Crown, of corporations, and glebe land, the two former I have nothing to say about. With regard to the glebe land, I should like to make one or two remarks as to the evidence given by Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts as to the glebe land near Festiniog. I may state that I am professionally employed by the owner of that glebe land of Llanfihangel-y-pennant to apply for, and, if possible, to obtain the consent of the Board of Agriculture to the disposal of the farm or small farms grouped in one; and with reference to what he suggested about our having hawked about the property first to one corporate body and then to another, it was, as Mr. Brynmor Jones said, to comply with the requirements of the Act which requires certain notices to be given to certain local authorities, when there is application for permission to sell, there has been no hawking about first to one and then to the other, and I feel, as the consent has not at present been obtained from the Board of Agriculture to sell, a delicacy in going further into the matter.

Professor Rhŷs.

10,326. I will ask you one question while we are on this. For whom did you value the farms? Did you say the Ecclesiastical Commissioners?—No, I valued the farms for the present incumbent of Llanfihangel-y-pennant.

10,327. So it was not for the Ecclesiastical Commissioners?—Oh, no. I do not know whether the Commissioners wish me to give any further evidence as to that glebe land, but I wish to state broadly that what Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts says I almost entirely deny, and what he denies I almost entirely say.

Sir John Llewelyn.

As to the fines and other charges made on admission and enrolment, I pass them over, as I know nothing whatever about them. With regard to where the land is (or recently was) the waste of a manor, a common, or land reputed to be commonable, and what are the recent enclosures, whether by Act of Parliament or otherwise, and their effect on the neighbouring population, as far as my knowledge extends, the only effect of enclosures by Act, has been to legalize what was enjoyed partly by custom and a good deal by force, strong tenants always keeping more than their share of stock, and the weak tenants less; but in all cases claims to allotments had to be proved before the Commissioner, and no one got a slice of common, or failed to get a slice who could prove that he was entitled to one. In answer to the question, "Were recreation grounds "or allotments for the use of the labouring poor "apportioned? If so, how used at present?" Allotments were usually set out for public purposes, but a reference to the awards will be true evidence of all such matters. To set out an allotment for the use of the poor would not work, as the poor are not all equally able to take care of themselves, and the weak would go to the wall as usual, and how they could make any advantageous use of it I fail to see. Having land means having some stock to live on it, and the poor usually have no stock; and if they have, I believe the guardians see to its conversion into cash if they are in receipt of relief. As to "squatters' cottages or other dwellings erected "on waste or unenclosed land, how dealt with?" If they held adverse possession for a sufficient time, I presume they got the freehold; if they had not acquired title thus, I fail to see what right they had to expect more consideration on public property than on private; indeed, no one has a right to be generous with public property, and to do so is "robbing Peter to pay

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Paul." In reply to the question with respect to "existing unenclosed and hill land, and its "adaptability for profitable cultivation as "compared with the uses to which it is at "present put:—Where there are rights of "pasture over 'sheep-runs,' &c., in whom are "such rights vested, and subject to what pay-"ments and conditions? Whether 'without "stint' or how limited?" I apprehend "unenclosed land" refers really to sheep-walks unenclosed, and they are, I believe, much best adapted for sheep, young cattle, and pony runs. Farmers in such localities have a right to turn on a certain number, but I do not know that there is any law limiting this; it simply means that the boundaries of each sheep-walk are pretty well known, and each drives his neighbour's stock off, if trespassing on his walk. Here, again, the strong are very apt to press on the weak. Then as to what effect they have on the rents of adjacent farms, the sheep-walks are taken into account in the rent, and at first sight make the rents per acre of such farms appear very high. With regard to the general condition of sheep farming, they are very advantageous to farms generally, but they are particularly so, if adjoining them, when the walks are far off, it entails shepherding; but if this is fairly done, it is not of so much difference, except that in spring, the man adjoining the mountain has the best of it. I believe it would pay the tenants to pay reasonable interest on the cost of enclosing them. With regard to the question as to "(1.) Management:—Where land "is held by small or large, by absentee or "resident, landowners, in consolidated or scat-"tered estates?" Small estates and large estates should be managed upon the same principles. No doubt, some owners cannot afford to lay out money on repairs, &c., but that is their misfortune, and does not arise from any defect in the management, or system of land tenure in Wales. It is generally acknowledged that land, acquired by men who have saved money, in single farms or in small quantities, is let dear, and frequently with more regard to the interest on cost than to its agricultural value. "(2.) Where there is a difference of either "language, politics, or religion between the "landlord (or agent) and the tenant (or pro-"posed tenant.)" I do not believe that any difference exists in practice, but solely in the brain and mouth of the agitator. I hold that any Churchman has a perfect right to say he will not let his farm to a Nonconformist, and a Nonconformist has exactly the same right to say he will not let to a Churchman. In reply to the question, "Where agents are employed, have "they received any special training for the "supervision of agricultural land? If not, is "there any inconvenience or hardship ex-"perienced?" I cannot say generally, but I, myself, served four years with a good practical tenant farmer and valuer, am a tenant myself, and manage about 200 acres with a working bailiff under me. When farming becomes what it should be, viz., based largely upon scientific principles as against ancient rule of thumb, agents must keep pace with and be as well up in all details as those they superintend. Agents have many duties other than "purely agricultural." "Term of tenancy. What is "the usual date of entry in your district?" March 25th as a rule, with permission to incoming tenant to enter in February to plough. In reply to the question, "Are farms let on "leases or from year to year?" There is one lease on the estate granted for 60 years, 20 years of which are unexpired, and it is most desirable, if possible, that the Commissioners should inspect this farm, to note the effect of "security of tenure," and draw their own inferences. There are two other farm leases; the above refer to this estate. There is no demand for leases. I consider it very desirable to grant leases, especially of outlying farms, but the right to assign must not be allowed, or the sub-lessee will have a stiff rent to pay. "Do tenants "readily accept leases? If not, why?" They do not, and in my opinion it is because they are well aware that under a lease they would have to do what was wanted themselves, whereas under a yearly agreement they get something done for them. "Is the condition "of the leaseholders, and of their farming "superior, or the contrary, to that of yearly "tenants?" I do not see how their respective conditions are to be ascertained, but I have no hesitation in saying their farming is no better than that of yearly tenants. The very best men I know are yearly tenants. "Have "changes in tenancy become more, or less "frequent than in former years?" Stock sales are certainly not as frequent; and the changes on the estate I have to manage are very rare. "Have any cases of hardship "arisen"?—I know of none. "In resuming "the occupation of a field or plot out of a "holding, for the sake of planting, building, "or other purposes, do owners generally serve "their tenants with proper notices for the "purpose, and grant them compensation?"—My own course is to see the tenant, explain what I want, and arrange how much his rent is to be reduced, and settle the matter amicably. I have never had to give notice to attain my object, but have always found tenants quite reasonable and obliging. "If damage is done "to the land in timber cutting, is the tenant "compensated"? Compensation certainly is paid when damage is done, but I have had very few cases, and mostly in case of the hauliers. I usually give the tenant as much of the tops as he likes to fetch, and as much haulage as he can manage if he comes to contract price. "If any "mining, brickfields, quarries, or other industrial "operations have been commenced on land in "your occupation, has the rent been readjusted, "or compensation granted in consequence?"—Compensation granted and annual allowance made, also permanent reduction when land is actually destroyed. "Agreements and leases. "What are the usual conditions of tenancy?" Copy of agreement in English and Welsh produced, also of circular in English and

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Welsh inviting tenants to discuss same before final adoption. All costs of the new agreement, including stamps, were paid by the owner, Mr. Nanney. "Are any of the clauses "considered oppressive? What effect have "they on cultivation?" I am not aware that any of the clauses are considered oppressive. I cannot say what effect they have on cultivation, but I believe a good farmer will be a good farmer however bad his agreement, and a bad, slovenly farmer will be a bad, slovenly farmer under any agreement ever made or to be made hereafter. "Are penalising clauses common, and are they "often enforced?" I have often seen them, but rarely heard of their being enforced, except in the case of an outgoing tenant ploughing more than he should, or such similar wrongdoing; and I think an outgoing tenant who is determined to be as awkward as he can be requires some pretty strong preventative measures. "Are tenants usually given a copy "of the agreement or lease, or, if Welsh-"speaking, are their contents explained to "them"?—In my administration, I always give them a copy to take home with them to study, and on this estate all tenants have a Welsh copy. "Rent, its amount?" I do not quite know what that means. If it means the amount of rent of the estate I do not name it. "Is the rent usually fixed on a gross sum, "or at so much per acre?" It is ultimately a gross sum, arrived at by a field valuation, which worked out and added up, of course, gives a gross sum, to which was added 80 per cent. of tithe commutation, and that is now entirely rent, and is received as such, the tenants covenanting to pay all rates, &c., "except tithe rentcharge." "Is there any uniformity in the "rents of land of similar qualities on the same "or neighbouring estates?" It is very unequal. "Rent" is much influenced by the question of what the landlord is to do and does, and what the tenant is to do and does. If the latter does everything, his rent is something plus what he pays the owner. If the owner does everything his rent is something minus what the tenant pays him. "Is the rent of the smaller tenantry "higher per acre than on larger farms?" The rents of the smaller farms are undoubtedly higher per acre than those of the large farms. The cost of house and buildings (especially house) has to be spread over a small area; and many tenants take small places, not to live by them, but to enjoy the produce of milk, butter, poultry, &c., and they easily let. The usual rent of average lands of different qualities on upland and lowland farms is very difficult to say. I pass 45. "Is the right of pasture-"age over a common, &c., taken into account "when the rent is fixed?" I do not know of any cases, but undoubtedly every privilege which appertains to the freehold should be fairly charged for in the rent, because it is by virtue of the occupation of the farm that the grazing right is exercised, and is not the personal property of the tenant, who on leaving leaves his common rights behind him. The question is asked, "Are there any services other than "the payment of rent rendered by tenants "in respect of their farms?" and so on. I am not aware of any, and should strongly disapprove of such. "How fixed? Is the rent fixed on the "basis of a valuation, or by proposal followed "by private treaty?" The rent is fixed by valuation on this estate, by a practical valuer and a tenant farmer. Proposals of higher rent have been made and refused. I am bound to say that I do not see why an owner of an article (simply because that article is land) should not accept the best price he can get for it, and it is exactly what an outgoing tenant would do if he had the right of free sale, and it seems to me that the incoming man had much better fall into the hands of his owner than those of the outgoing man. "In "the latter case, is the holding practically let "to the highest bidder? If so, does the system "result in (i) fair rents being fixed?" No, and if adopted, it would undoubtedly ultimately come to be that the highest bidder would become the tenant; and, speaking from a purely business point of view, I fail to see why it should not be so. "Fair rent" is a thing I cannot quite understand in its undefined state. "(ii) The acceptance of tenants with sufficient capital?" Purely a matter for the owner to take care of. He can make a payment of rent in advance a sine quâ non. It would amount to this: If a man adopts a system which will not work, he will have his land on hand, and self interest will prompt him to change. Intending tenants know very well what they are about. "Is arbitration ever "resorted to as a means of settling or re-ad-"justing the rent?" No, any more than the price of coal is settled by arbitration. There would be no rights of property if such a system was adopted. No man is bound to let his land at any rent, and no man is bound to take land at any rent. I think land in England is to be had on tenants' own terms. Two questions 55 and 56: "How varied? Have rents been "raised generally, or in individual cases, within "the last 50 years? If so, give particulars." In answer to those questions: I think, taken as a whole, they have been raised, but I know of many cases in which rents have been lowered. I am prepared to hand in a list of holdings on this estate with respect to which the rent was permanently lowered by the valuer (handing it in).

10,328. That is a list of permanent reductions?—That is a list of permanent reductions made by the valuer, who was also a tenant farmer, in the year 1876.

10,329. On this property?—On this property which he valued, and which remain at his figures as then put

10,330. In 1876?—Yes, 1876. 57 and 58: "Have there been any permanent reductions or temporary abatements of rent?" The list has already been handed in of the permanent reductions, but there is one other case of a reduction on a valuation by myself on a farm in Merionethshire which had been raised from 40*l.* to 45*l.*, and there were complaints that it was too high. I walked over the farm, and advised Mr. Ellis Nanney it was too high, and it was reduced from 45*l.* to 39*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*; and with regard to that farm I should like to mention that a large amount of money has been spent upon it. The reduction in cash alone does not seem much, but I would point out that since I have been agent, from 1871, we have spent upon that farm upon buildings alone the sum of 130*l.* 19*s.* 10*d.*, and upon drainage 124*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* The rent in the year 1872 was 40*l.*; between 1872 and 1890 it had been raised 5*l.*; but now it stands at 39*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*; so we have spent 255*l.* on this farm, and are in receipt of somewhat less rent than we were some 20 years ago. In due course I will hand this in. With regard to the abatements, for the year ended March 25th, 1886, there was 10 per cent. given; for the year ended March 25th, 1887, the whole of the tithes were paid for the tenants; for the year ended March 25th, 1888, there was 10 per cent. on the rents and 17½ per cent. on the tithe added to the rent; for the year ended March 25th, 1889, there was 10 per cent. on the rent plus the tithe added to it; and for the year ended March 25th, 1893, there was 12½ per cent. on the rent plus the tithe added to it. Question 60: "Is any notice given to the tenants of such intended abatements?" There has been no formal notice given, but in every case the fact has been thoroughly well known before the rent day. Question 61: "When rents are raised or reduced, does the change depend on a re-valuation?" On a revaluation; at no stated intervals, and it would only be done in case of change of tenants, or upon complaints by tenants, in which case I have walked every field with the tenant. Prices have altered considerably within the last 50 years, and I think it would be very desirable that statistics should be obtained from the Board of Agriculture, which would be conclusive evidence. Of course, I cannot myself go back 50 years; that is quite clear. With regard to the payment of rent, it is generally received three or four months after it is due, but most estates have their own ancient system. Although our agreements stipulate for payment twice a year, on the larger part, it is paid only once. On the Gwynfryn estate the whole year's rent to March 25th is paid on December 21st preceding that date; on the Plashên estate the whole grass rent to March 25th is received about the 10th of that month; on Merionethshire and Montgomeryshire estate the whole year's rent to March 25th is received April 22nd following; Brynkir and Mynyddednyfed estate and house rents, due September 29th and March 25th, are received November 13th and May 13th. The tenants were offered half-yearly payments, but they preferred things to remain as they are. With regard to the position of the tenants generally, I am not prepared to speak, but I should like to hand in, as showing the effect that it has on the landlord, a statement of some of the arrears which stood on the books when I became agent in 1872 for this part of the estate. I do not know whether the Commission would care for me to announce the names here.

10,331. Will you tell us generally what the effect of the paper is and then put it in, if you desire?—I have some people here in arrears of rent, seven, six, five and eight years; and I think if the landlord had not some preferential claim he would hardly allow those things to continue.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,332. He only has it for one year, has he?—For six years' rent, he had a right of distress, excepting in the case of bankruptcy, I think.

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,333. You do not need to mention names, but you can say that as a matter of fact that credit is given?—As a matter of fact I have the names here, but I do not think it would be nice to call them out.

10,334. I think you had better not.—Anyhow, it is here.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,335. The preferential claim is only for one year, is it not? I should have thought that would have been the important point?

Sir John Llewelyn.

With regard to the payment of tithes, land tax, chief rent, local rates, and income tax. The tithes are paid by the owner. The land tax is paid sometimes by owner, sometimes by tenant. The chief rent is paid sometimes by owner and sometimes by tenant. Local rates are paid by the tenant, except in case of accommodation land. Income tax is paid by the landlord. But the matter is purely one of arrangement; so much rent and pay rates, or more rent and owner pays rates. Local rates have increased in some parishes. There is the school board rate, burial board rate, local board rate, the sanitary and highway rates, and the toll gates have been abolished. The increase is paid by the tenants, and very properly so, as they elected to have the various boards (with the exception of local and sanitary boards, and abolition of turnpikes), the school board and burial board are the most expensive things the farmers have gone in for. As to the average size of farms in my district. I cannot strike a reasonable average, but there are all sizes from 3 acres to 250. A few holdings have been consolidated (but not to any extent) some years back, by dividing and adding to adjoining farms. The consequence is that there is only one cost of superintendence where perhaps two or three existed before. Holdings can easily be too small to live upon, however well done, unless other work is obtainable. I speak of Lowland farms. The effect of consolidation on production has undoubtedly been to lessen the cost, as stated in the previous answer. One superintendent and his family can look after one or two hundred head of stock as easily as after half a dozen. The effects of consolidation on the employment of labour, I think are that the labour employed is better remunerated by working than it was by occupying just enough land to be neither farmer nor labourer. The effect on rent is a net increase generally, but slight; the net rent is more, by reason of less outgoings. The effect of consolidation on population and inhabited houses I cannot say; population does not seem to me to depend upon rent or acreage. As to sub-division or sub-letting, I do not know of any sub-division by a tenant, but sub-letting takes place for grazing when a man has met with some reverses, and it gives him a chance of pulling up, to which we do not object. The relative effects of small and large holdings respectively on their occupiers as to their practical skill in farming is absolutely nothing. A man who is a good farmer is so, no matter whether his holding is large or small; but on a large holding it is a most important thing for the tenant to be a good manager of men, to be able to put them to work at the right thing at the right time. As to their condition in time of trade depression, they lose pro rata upon the capital invested the same, I take it, but no doubt the establishment charges on the larger holdings are larger, and yet it resolves itself into a question of per-centage, and in regard to their ability to provide for their families, the land can only yield a given amount, and out of a very small area I cannot see how anyone is to provide for his family without earning wages somewhere off the farm. The saving powers of men and women are widely different; some will save and starve almost for the pure love of "saving," misers in fact. "The state of "cultivation and nature of farming pursued?" Mixed husbandry; potatoes grown largely in proportion to roots, oats, barley, hay, and grazing; no regular course, five or six shifts as a rule; but a field is laid down with barley or oats and left down until it shows signs of moss, rushes, &c., then it has a round again, but on large farms a more regular system is adopted. The state of cultivation is not first rate as a rule. Stock is badly bred and fed. There are exceptions. There is no scarcity of labourers. Labour is dear; but I do not think the question of cost so much affects the question as the matter of inborn tidiness. There is room for improvement in the ditches, &c., but they are not bad, taken as a whole. There is no land going out of cultivation that I know of, but there is much that should be better cultivated by means of more stock eating cake, &c. on grass. Very few tenants seem to believe that cake eating pays, and they look upon it as a "fad," only to be indulged in by people with plenty of money. "To what extent has waste land been reclaimed "by tenants in your district within living "memory?" I cannot say, but I have seen very little during my 20 years' experience. Improvements are more talked about than executed. "Is there much land still waste "which is capable of profitable reclamation "by (1) ploughing up rough land?" Yes, but whether any one is willing to pay reasonable per-centage upon the cost is a question. No doubt the occupiers would not object to its being done free of charge. "(2) "draining marshy ground." The same reply and remarks apply to this as to the former part of the question. "(3) Embanking rivers." None in my district, and it is an expenditure which no tenant would be justified in incurring except under peculiar arrangements. "Has "there been any considerable change in the "nature of the agriculture pursued in your "district within the last fifty years; (1) arable "land being laid down in pasture." Very little. If any at tenants' expense, but in some cases I believe seeds have been given. "(2) Increase or decrease of root crops?" Rather an increase. Fallowing is not practised, as far as I know, and has not been in my own experience. I cannot say what have been the cause and effect of such changes. "What improvements are gene- "rally made in your district by (1) the landlords?" All new buildings are done by the landlord as a rule, but in some cases additional buildings have been built by tenants, the materials being given them free. Materials are given on this estate practically ad libitum, free of charge for repairs and renewals. The tenants come on Monday morning and state what they require, and I have an order book, a copy of which I have here. I give them an order for bricks and tiles, or anything else they want, and they go to the foreman or the storekeeper with that printed order, and get what they want free of charge. That comes to a considerable sum per annum. The landlord obtains no interest (with some exceptions) for his outlay, the tenant obtaining increased comfort and facilities for profit-making as his interest on what he spends. Practically the landlord lays out his money with next to no interest. The tenant lays out his, with an immediate return of more or less interest in the way indicated above. As to improvements by the tenants, it is difficult to give a general answer. There is no common standard of what are "improvements"—ordinary acts of good husbandry, such as opening and cleaning water courses and ditches, making good the fences and banks, gates and gateways, ordinary repairs where materials are given, painting and cleaning, are by some tenants looked upon as "improvements," for which they should be paid by someone. There is no uniformity of system, and much depends upon "ways and means." I consider no improvements should be made by a tenant for which he expects to be paid, without the consent of the party he looks to for payment, and the landowner should have the right to refuse to have his land or his buildings improved, and when any improvements are made by the tenant, I hold that as soon as he has recouped himself his outlay plus good interest and something for "his brain" and all other fair charges, that the owner of the land (or raw material) is entitled to reap some benefit from the increased productiveness of his share of the concern, exactly as all quarry and mine owners do by royalty, the more the tenants spend in those cases the more the owner gets in royalty. It is the pent up stores of fertility which lie dormant in the landowner's raw material which are brought into activity by the tenants' outlay on draining, subsoiling, and other good cultivation, but why should the tenant alone reap the whole benefit of the effects of nature? In the case of buildings, sometimes additions are required to enable the tenant to profitably convert the increased produce of the farm into "meat" and "muck." Why should he be supplied with increased facilities for his trade free of charge? Would any tradesman expect his landlord to put up a wing to his shop free of charge? All these transactions should be stripped of all sentiment, and carried out on commercial principles, and two men of ordinary common sense should be left to make their own bargains. One has something to lend out which the other one wishes to hire, let them make their own arrangements; and I hold strongly that it is of no concern to the man who lets out how much or how little profit he who hires makes, or even whether he makes any profit at all, in the case of land any more than in the case of any other commodity. It is no answer to this argument to say that land is a limited commodity, because it is equally true that occupation of land is not a compulsory occupation, and is not pursued unless it pays, as a rule. The consumers care not a straw where the stuff they use is grown, at home or abroad, at a profit or otherwise. Consumers form a large portion of what is known as the State, and I see no justice in the cry for cheap food and interference with the raw material on which food is raised in this country. The Legislature has also decided that payment of rates is "in respect of occupation," which need not be a "profitable occupation," and as payment of rates cannot be evaded on the plea of no profit, why should rent be evaded on a similar plea. As to improvements in the matter of drainage, the custom of this estate is to allow pipes free of charge. The improvements under any of the above heads are very rare. As to gates, the timber is allowed free. Posts are very generally built up. In my opinion the gates should be provided and maintained by the tenants at their own cost entirely and belong to them. As to manures and seeds, they are very careless as to both.

"In the case of co-operation in improvement, "what is the part usually undertaken by "each, and how is remuneration secured to "either party?" I do not see that there is much co-operation, excepting that the landlord allows the materials. In the case of improvements, wholly or partially effected by a tenant, compensation is granted by the landlord. The tenant is safe of his share, but I never could see where the landowner's share comes in. He is supposed to be always ready to buy materials to give away, &c., without any increased income. I am asked for instances where either party contracts out of the operation of the Agricultural Holdings Act. The agreements are generally framed to contract out of it, and rightly so in my opinion. The Acts are no good to any one but the lawyers. The custom of the country is also contracted out of, as far as I know, but I think there is very little custom so well defined that it has become practically a law. Customs differ in various localities within small distances. "By virtue of the Agricultural "Holdings Acts (1875 and 1883), do farmers "often apply for their landlord's written consent "for specific improvements?" Very rarely; but I hold strongly that every owner should pay for nothing he has not consented to, and should be at liberty to refuse to have his land improved, otherwise he is not an owner, but holds his property subject to the rights of others to improve it if they like, whether he likes it or not. I cannot say whether such consent is readily given when asked for generally, but on this estate it is. I have several instances where we have given consent and paid compensation. I know of improvements made both with and without consent (under agreements expressly providing for consent) and compensation claimed, and allowed as a donation, avoiding giving it as a "right." "What is the "custom of the country as to allowances to "out-going tenants in respect of growing crops?" As to tillage and cultivation, the incoming tenant gets in in time to do his own, but if any has been done it is paid for by valuation. When a tenant is leaving, he usually comes to terms with the new man as soon as harvest is over, as he likes to get away before the winter six months begin. The manure and produce are taken too at valuation as a rule, but sometimes the produce is sold out, the manure very rarely actually goes; if put up, the incomer or the landlord generally secures it. I do not think there is any custom as to permanent improvements. The respective rights as to outgoing and incoming tenants are usually defined under agreement, but those under the custom are very dubious, and personally I do not know that there is any well defined right. "The "liabilities of a tenant as to mode of culti- "vation, dilapidations, and sale of produce?" This is a most difficult thing to define, and I decline to attempt it; it is a very rich nut for lawyers to crack. There is a general principle that the land must be farmed according to good husbandry, but who is to define that? The sale of produce without restitution of fertilisers is, of course, bad husbandry. "Have "many (or any) cases occurred in your dis- "trict where an outgoing tenant has failed "to obtain sufficient compensation for his im- "provements?" I do not know how sufficient compensation can be defined, but I hold that it served him right if he got nothing, if he was soft enough to spend his money on other people's land without first having an understanding where he would be in case of the determination of his tenancy, and if he failed to get that understanding after applying for it, he was silly beyond all hope if he spent his money. I hold strongly that a man should not be so silly as to lay out his money upon any other man's land without first of all ascertaining what position he will be in if the farm is sold or if the tenancy is determined. "Do you know of "any instances where compensation has been "given for the general improved condition of a "holding, and not simply for specific improve- "ments?" I do not know of such instances, and I do not think any man has a moral or legal claim. Such result can only arise from good cultivation, which the man has entered into an undertaking to carry out when he took the farm, and by a liberal use of cake, &c., and a man adopts that system with a distinct view of making more profit (which he usually does), and the general improved condition is the natural result. He does not do it with a view of improving the condition of the holding apart from improving his own pocket. General improved condition is a very easily dispelled element. "Is there any right recognised as belong- "ing to tenants to dispose of their interests "in their holdings to any solvent tenant "to whom the landlord shall not have "any reasonable objection?" No; and any such system would be a general curse to the rising generation. Sitting tenants would obtain a very valuable asset, for which they pay nothing. The tenants of the future would have to pay very heavy rents. True, the payment to the owner might be exactly the same, but the interest upon the premium paid the outgoing man, for what is known as "turning his back, &c.," would make a largely increased rent, and this point is hardly ever thought of, I am afraid. It is certain that an incoming tenant had better deal with the owner direct. Then, what are reasonable objections? Who is to define them? I suppose it would be reasonable in a local option man or teetotaller to refuse a publican or a man who got a drop too much sometimes, and vice versa. If such a course was adopted, what possible interest could an owner have in his property? He would simply be a receiver of rents issuing from certain farms, as to which he was called upon to do everything in the way of spending money, but somebody else was to fix upon the occupiers; would not any sane man prefer his money in consols which require no repairs, &c.? The outgoing man would naturally select the highest bidder. I pass question 112. With regard to game preserving. Rabbits, hares, and other game are preserved by the landowners in my district. "Do tenants generally avail themselves of the "provisions of the Ground Game Act?" I do not think many do, but certainly some do. It is not every man who has the least interest in the matter, and I feel bound to add that it is a matter of pride to me to find that so many men act honourably up to what was in the minds of both parties when they took the farms, "that the rabbits and hares belonged to the owner," and that they refuse to take advantage of a variation made by Act of Parliament without the consent of both parties. "Is there much "damage done by game to the crops and "pastures of tenant farmers?" I do not think there is. Farms adjacent to covers are always valued at less per acre than land of similar quality away, and an allowance is made. The damage is assessed annually in some cases. When so much is said about game trespass, people forget that all those contingencies are brought into account when the rent is fixed, and the landlord takes part of the payment for the hire of his land in cash, and part in kind, viz., game. "Are tenants expected to beat coverts, &c., "when their landlords go out shooting?" Certainly not. Beaters are hired, and paid and fed, &c., in my experience. "How does game pre-"serving otherwise affect cultivation?" Not in any way. A man farms just the same whether there is game or not. As to the effect of game preserving on the relation between landlord and tenant, I do not know of any hitch. The tenant takes the farm, knowing the game is not his, but reserved to the landlord, who can enjoy it himself or let it. Game preserving in no way affects the labourers that I know of. Its effect on the public generally I cannot say, but if there was no preserving, game would soon become extinct, and a useful article of food would be lost to the public. In my petty sessional district I cannot say what proportion offences against the Game Laws or offences against the person bear to other offences, but it must be a very small proportion, as they are exceedingly rare. "Is the law of trespass in other respects "satisfactory?" No. I should like to see an Act passed, to punish farm labourers and others who, when they should be in bed after a decent day's work, get prowling and rambling about other people's premises after 9 p.m. after servant girls, and playing all sorts of pranks with your larder, &c. It is a public scandal, and an intolerable nuisance, which the farmers admit, but are powerless to stop. I have nothing to say as to the exercise of sporting rights over Crown lands and commons. As to agricultural education, no attention is being paid in my district to fruit culture, practically none to horticulture, none to forestry, very little to poultry farming, very little to bee-keeping. "Are any of these sources of profit to farmers at "present." They all are when practised, but there is no go in the women of the farms in this line, no continuity in their efforts; it is a sort of anything anyhow. "Is there any instruction given (1) in butter and cheese-making?" Occasionally in butter-making, and I believe with marked success, but you cannot persuade the elders that their ancient ways are not the best, even yet. "(2) By field experiments?" Yes, and a grand thing this is. "(3) In other agricultural subjects." Yes, and I am satisfied much good will come out of it, but it is very up-hill work. "To what extent are they being availed "of?" Very limited. It is impossible to get the ordinary farmer to believe that he is not as perfect as he can be, and if anyone does better than he does, he always puts it down to anything and everything except to superior skill on the part of the other man. As to railway rates, I do not think that our produce can be sent away to compete in the great centres of population by rail; whether the companies could carry cheaper and pay their way I cannot say, but I do not see why farmers should expect any favours. No doubt quantities are cheaper shifted than small consignments. As to co-operation, I do not know of any instances of profit-sharing, or anything of the kind, and I do not believe in any such scheme. I have no faith in it in any way. "To what extent (if at all) do "farmers insure their stock, crops, implements, "or buildings?" To a very small extent their stock, and crops, and implements, and only in case of leases do they insure buildings, but I consider they ought to be compelled to do so in annual tenancies, as any fire arising would arise from the carelessness of them or their servants, except in case of lightning, which might be covered by the landlord paying a share of the premium. As to combinations in the nature of trade union among landlords, among farmers, or among labourers (Syllabus, v., 2), I never heard of any such. I hold that in all three cases they have a perfect right to combine for either purpose if they like. No man is bound to let his land to anyone, and if that is so, he has an equal right to say whom he will let it to. It would be absurd to describe a man as owner who could not stipulate that all his tenants should be Atheists, or Mahommedans, or members of any other sects, or of no sect at all, if he choose. "Are there "many tenant farmers who have bought "either their own or other holdings for "their own occupation in this district?" A good many. I do not know what induced them to sink their capital in such a poor paying investment, and one so unsuited to a man with a family, who on his death will expect their regular shares, &c. The purchases have been at various dates, some in 1889 on this estate, but there are many other instances. The auctioneers and the income tax collectors could give good information.

As to the state of cottage accommodation in respect of supply as compared with the past, that has much improved. Cottages are now built of a much better class. Cottages have nothing to do, I consider, with the requirements of thorough cultivation. It is not necessary that each man should have a cottage. Some people prefer single men.

"To what extent are diaries and farming "accounts kept?" I have never seen any. When complaints have been made of bad times, I have often said, "Let me see your receipts and "expenditure." but I never yet got a glimpse of one. I think an effort should be made by the Commissioner to fix some prominent tenant farmer to a statement of account, to see what he really charges against the land. "When, "in your opinion, did the different periods of "trade depression begin." I cannot fix it. Depression came very irregularly, and in the case of smaller products it has not come at all. Butter, poultry, eggs, fruit, carrots, milk, pigs, garden produce, &c. have more than held their own, particularly within walking distance of populous towns or sea-side resorts. Butter, in August 1893, in Criccieth, was 1*s.* 8*d.* a pound. I well remember it 8*d.* I am paying for tub butter this week 1*s.* 2*d.* a pound, salt butter. "What are the principal causes "of such depression, and what classes are chiefly "affected by it?" Supply greater than demand. Foreign meat sold as prime Welsh. The producers are injuriously affected, the consumers cheated and robbed by being charged the same price for a sirloin of beef from Canada marked "Prime Welsh." I pay the same for meat now as when I sold bullocks at 9*d.* a pound. I now get 6½*d.* to 7*d.* I wish the Commissioners could say why. The producers are the ones chiefly affected by it, but I know of tenants who have never done better, and they admit it. What remedies do you suggest for improving the profits from land? Increased produce at reduced cost. Greater activity among farmers and closer attention to their business, and a good fair knowledge of the constituents of crops and the soil they farm, and from which they will know what the soil requires and what it does not require, in fact, a thorough knowledge of their business, theoretical and practical. It is absurd to think that, knowing how and when to sow, to reap, to plough, to harrow, &c. will enable a man to wring out of the soil the utmost it will produce, and to quickly and economically replace the fertilising matters removed. A moderate quantity of the right stuff (that is, the stuff which the land is deficient in) will produce at a minimum of cost the maximum result, while ignorance on these points may lead to applying liberally what the soil does not want and cannot utilise, and which might as well have been chucked into the river. This points to the intricacy of claims for unexhausted manurial values which cannot be settled by rules, excepting upon the principle, I suppose, that any attempt to settle it is better than none. A liberal use of cake all the year round will help matters, I believe. As to general relations between landlord and tenant. I believe they are friendly, but I entertain the view on this subject, that neither is under any obligation to the other. A contract exists between them by which they are bound, and I fail to see any reason for expecting some imaginary difference in the relations between two parties to a contract simply because it relates to land other than if it was a contract relating to a railway or a house, or anything else. One man lets out on hire, the other takes on hire, and what difference can it make whether they are friendly or not? Surely Parliament is not going to arrange degrees of friendship between people. Questions 185, 186, and 187 I pass over. "What money have you spent in repairs "and improvements?" Since I was appointed agent in 1871 there has been spent through the estate account the sum of 34,200*l.* up to December 31, 1892, upon repairs, and renewals, and new buildings and materials furnished the tenants. Individual examples taken from the repairs ledger are given.

10,336. What average is that per farm?—1,700*l.* per annum.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,337. Perhaps you would not like to say upon what rental, but upon what acreage? What is the acreage?—7,000 acres now. There was considerably more than that, but I have extracted here at considerable trouble from the estate books of the various estates some examples showing the acreage, the rent in 1872, the amount spent on the holding during the 20 years, and the rent now. (Papers put in.)

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,338. Is the rent more or less now?—In many cases less. I have an example here, for instance. One farm is 150*l.* We spent 327*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.* on it. It was 150*l.* when we sold it. We sold it the other day. The tenant sent in a claim for 819*l.* and we gave him 200*l.* as compensation; he was not entitled to sixpence. He claimed one-sixth of the selling price of the farm. I could show you other cases. There is a farm here 63*l.* rent; expenditure on it 163*l.* It is now 61*l.* 10*s.* I should like to put these in. They are all fair copied and have been prepared at considerable trouble (handing in statements).

10,339. Is there anything you wish to add to your evidence?—No, not on that point. I think I will pass all the other questions. I do not see that there is anything affecting the question of land tenure. It appears to me that land tenure in Wales, as far as I understand it, is the same as in England.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,340. Sir John Llewelyn has been good enough to point out to me your answer to the question, "Whether there are many tenant "farmers who have bought either their own or "other holdings for their own occupation in "this district." You reply "A good many." You have also added that you cannot state why they were induced to do so. It occurs to us that possibly it might be with a view of getting fixity of tenure?—No, I do not think that they would acquire fixity of tenure by so doing, unless they had money to pay, because they would be still liable to the mortgagee.

10,341. That, of course, may be a mistake on their part, but it was with regard to the motives that induced people to become freeholders that I was asking you?—No, I do not think so.

10,342. You were good enough to say that you wished to express some opinion as to the principles upon which a sound land law should be passed. Did I catch aright this expression, "land is an article"?—Yes.

10,343. Then am I to understand from that that your view is that one of the principles of a sound land system should be that the landowner should have the same rights over land that he has got over other subjects of property, say watches and tables?—Yes.

10,344. That is your view?—That is my view.

10,345. If you will permit me to say so, I thought you followed that view out quite logically throughout all the opinions you have been expressing?—Yes, that is my stand.

10,346. Then may I ask you whether you would lay down as a principle that the good of the community is an element which should enter into the formation of a good land system?—Absolutely not. I do not see that the outside public has anything to do with it.

10,347. I thought I gathered that from you. What I am putting to you is this: Then you want the law to be altered so as to make the landlord an absolute owner?—No, I believe he is now, and I am satisfied with it as it is.

10,348. But the law does not say so?—Pardon me.

10,349. Every man is only a tenant, even the landlord is only a tenant, under the Crown, according to our land laws. I thought you were under some misapprehension?—No, I take it every man is the owner of his property, subject to the exigencies of the State, not the community.

10,350. But what is the State but the aggregate of individuals forming the community?—Quite so, that is true, but then the ownership is absolute, subject simply to taxation for Imperial purposes and local purposes.

10,351. That is not the law now?—It is the law, as I understand it.

10,352. As a matter of fact there is no such thing as absolute property in land known to our law?—Well, I am satisfied with the amount of absolute property which we now have.

10,353. Of course, we are not determining what the law is, we are considering the general circumstances with a view, if we should be of that opinion, of recommending alterations. Now does it not occur to you that it is a somewhat strong position to take up, in reference to an article, as you call it, like land, to say that any person in the State should have the same rights over land that he has over watches and tables and chairs, when I mention this circumstance to you: land is necessary for all, is it not?—No.

10,354. A man must be born on land?—Not necessarily, he may be born on sea.

10,355. But there is land under the sea, after all?—Ah, but there is no right of freehold property in the sea outside the three-mile limit, at any rate.

10,356. No, that is so, and that is because it is not deemed expedient to permit even those great aggregates which we call States to have an absolute property in the sea?—Well, I cannot follow that argument, but what I hold is this, that if I invest a thousand pounds in sods or land I want it to be mine, as much as if I invest a thousand pounds in watches. That is what I wanted to express. You have the right as a State to tax the watches for Imperial and for local purposes if necessary. I want to have the same right.

10,357. I want just to elicit your opinion upon the point. You have argued very logically from your postulate; that I am willing to admit; but does it not strike you that, land being limited in quantity and population increasing, it might be necessary and expedient to alter this position, and not to allow landowners to have the same right in land that they have in watches?—No, it does not.

10,358. You do not even think that?—No, because the occupation of land is not a necessity. It is not necessary for a man that he should occupy land until he dies, then he must have a bit to be buried in; but it is not incumbent upon any man to take land unless he wishes. There is no compulsory occupation.

10,359. But putting aside the case of the sea that you put, we are all occupying land here at this moment?—No, you are not occupying land, you are occupying something which is above the land at the present moment.

10,360. We are in a building which is built on land?—Yes, but really it is no use splitting straws upon that point, because we come to this: Your argument is that because land is limited in quantity there must be exceptional dealing with it.

10,361. That is my suggestion to you?—Then if you can prove to me that there is an absolute necessity for every man to have a share of that land for his occupation, so as to enable him to live, I shall agree with you.

10,362. I thought it would come to that. Now let me put it in another way. Seeing that this commodity, or article as you call it, is, according to the admission you have made, very important at any rate, if not absolutely necessary, is there freedom of contract between those who have now got even the rights in land that the law accords and persons who have got rights in land to such an extent as they have—is there freedom of contract between landlords and tenants?—Perfect freedom, as far as I understand it.

10,363. How can there be perfect freedom when the landlord is dealing in an article or commodity which is limited?—But he is dealing with a limited number of persons requiring that article. There must be an owner of the land even if the State take it. Assuming you abolish private ownership in land, there must still be ownership in land, and there must be administration of land, in smaller or larger quantities. You cannot throw open the land and say, "We have done with the landlords, help yourselves boys." There must be administration; whether it is by the State or by private individuals comes to the same thing.

10,364. But you have admitted the absolute ownership of the State; you have admitted the right of taxation, for instance?—I admit the State owns the land and us. If the State says that you and I must go and shoot the foreign enemy, we must go, if the exigencies of the State come to that; we are all the property of the State.

10,365. I see your point as to that. Now is this estate of Mr. Nanney's in any manor? Is he a lord of the manor?—No.

10,366. In what manor is it?—In no manor at all that I am aware of, that is to say, I have never had any manorial rights claimed, excepting that the Crown claims to be lady of the manor over certain portions of the mountain which I suppose she is.

10,367. When did these enclosures of which you speak take place?—The last one that I was concerned in, in any shape or form, was I think, in the year 1868 or 1869.

10,368. Was that done by Act of Parliament?—Yes, it was the Llangwm Enclosure Act. I think it is partly in the county of Merioneth and partly in the county of Denbigh.

10,369. Were there recreation grounds and allotments provided under those enclosures?—No, I think not. They were public stone quarries and roads.

The Secretary.

See 6679.

10,370. It is the one referred to by Colonel Lynes?—I think it was the Llangwm and Cerrig y druidon Enclosure Act, to the best of my recollection.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,371. You are not aware of anything that you would call a hardship having taken place upon Mr. Nanney's estate recently?—No.

See evidence of next witness.

10,372. Do you know the case of Mr. Owen Owens of Bethesda?—I do not know a man of the name of Owen Owens of Bethesda.

10,373. Do you know a farm called Fachgoch near Tremadoc?—Yes.

10,374. Do not you know that Owen Owen's father took that in 1874?—Yes.

10,375. At a rent of 47*l.*?—I believe that was the rent, yes.

10,376. And I think the father died some time afterwards. Within two years ago I think the farm was sold to Mr. John Jones?—That is so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

10,377. Did you offer the farm to the tenant?—No.

10,378. What were the politics of the tenant?—He was a Conservative, I believe. He always had the reputation of being a Conservative.

10,379. How is it you did not come to offer it to him?—I did not feel bound to offer it to him; we offered the two farms, Fachgoch and Taicochion. There had been a talk of selling them, and indeed, an attempt to sell them some years ago; the prices did not come up to the mark, and we offered them to a gentleman close by, a first-rate landlord, and a good man all round. We had great difficulty in getting to this farm, except by permission of this gentleman, and we sold them to him at what I said—a good price, and we sold the farms with the agreement for compensation to the tenant, so that if anyone had to compensate them, it was the man who bought their holdings.

10,380. Have you entered into an agreement to sell it?—Certainly. I could produce that. I did not know you would want it.

10,381. Never mind. It is in the usual form?—Yes, a copy was handed up yesterday. You will understand I never terminated Owen Owen's tenancy. I passed him over with the farm.

10,382. Well, but afterwards, when he found that he was evicted by the succeeding owner, he came to you and told you of the improvements he had effected on the farm?—Oh, yes.

10,383. It is the fact that he had drained and walled, is it not?—To a very small extent indeed.

10,384. Well, he had done something, say 87*l.*?—How much?

10,385. 87*l.* on the buildings?—87*l.*?

10,386. His father had spent 87*l.*?—Nothing of the sort. His father had built under an arrangement which he entered into, and was allowed the materials and everything for it. It is perfectly true that Owen Owens and the other tenant put in claims, or sent in claims for improvements made on the farms long before they became the property of Mr. Ellis Nanney, over 40 years ago, but let him produce his claim and let us see it.

10,387. You know you are bringing everything down to the terms of the law, so that when I ask you whether you consider this man was hardly treated, I am not asking you a lawyer's question at all, I am asking you a question of morals, a question of good conduct as between citizens?—Well, sir, I say he was not hardly treated, and I should be very sorry to let out in a public court all that I could say about this man, but really if one is pressed——

13,388. You did not give him notice?—I did not wish to.

10,389. Then if he is such a bad man, why did not you, on your principles?—I handed him and the farm, which was an outlying place, to another gentleman altogether. I should never have disturbed the man.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

10,390. I am not saying that you would. You have said that there was no instance of hardship on the estate?—And I say so still.

10,391. I am putting it to you that after this man's father had been there years before, and he had been there so long, as you were going to sell this small farm, it would have been at any rate courteous to offer it to him?—No, I do not think it would, because the two farms were bound to go together, and he could not have bought the two farms, and if I had split the two farms up I should have utterly ruined my market. He would not have bought his neighbour's farm. There was a regular mixture up of the sheep and the sheep walk. There was a deal of trouble in the whole matter, and it is to nobody's interest to alter it.

10,392. Do you consider this a fair agreement?—I do.

10,393. Let me call your attention to Article 21: "It is also agreed (except as provided in "in the preceding clause) that the provisions "of the Agricultural Holdings Acts, 1875 and "1883, shall not apply to the tenancy hereby "created"?—Yes.

10,394. Are you aware that you cannot contract out of the provisions of the Act of 1883 except as to section 33, about the notice to quit?—Quite true.

10,395. Then why do you put it in the agreement?—It has no effect if it is not valid.

10,396. But it has an effect upon the minds of ignorant persons?—No, it has not, nothing of the sort.

10,397. You talk about principles. Do you think it is right to draw up a form of agreement contravening the law of the land?—I do not say it does contravene the law of the land.

10,398. Let me read you the law of the land?—The law of the land is perfectly clear, that if I do put anything in the agreement which contracts out of it it is of no effect.

10,399. You said, "Do not let us split hairs," a moment ago, you know. "Any contract, agree-"ment, or covenant, by virtue of which the "tenant is deprived of his right to claim com-"pensation under this Act in respect of im-"provements," and so on, "shall, so far as it "deprives him of such right be void in law and "equity"?—Quite so. The intention of that clause is this: that there is a substitution for manurial compensation as against the compensation settled in Schedule 3 of the Act. That was the intention.

10,400. Where is that?—You will find there is compensation given on a liberal scale for cakes and manures, &c., and it is to substitute something positive for something which is the reverse in the Act; and, with all due respect, a solicitor is responsible for that clause.

10,401. I do not care whether a solicitor is or not?—No, nor I, sir.

10,402. I am only putting it to you. You vouch this as a fair agreement?—I do, but I do not hold myself responsible for anything as to legality in it—the legal portion of it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

10,403. Supposing a man's father has been on the estate, and he himself has been on the estate for 20 years, and then he gets into debt for 10*l.* to a tradesman and he is not able to pay the 10*l.*, and the tradesman issues execution for his goods?—Yes.

10,404. You can go in the next day under this agreement?—Yes.

10,405. Is that fair?—Quite, and a grand thing for the tenant, too.

10,406. That if a man should have a fieri facias issued against him you should have a right to resume possession at once?—Yes.

10,407. How is it a good thing for him?—Because he then falls into the hands of a man who is likely to have mercy on him. If he falls into the hands of the solicitors and general creditors they will not leave him while there is a feather on him.

10,408. But this does not prevent the creditor from suing him in the county court?—Then the tenancy determines. If I clear out the creditors I say to this poor chap, who has, perhaps, been swindled, and gone security for somebody, "Morris Jones, I will give you a chance again; "you shall let this grazing land and pull up "for a year or two." I have cases on the estate where I have done it, and where it has been the greatest charity to the man and his family.

10,409. But in the case of the goods being taken again by the creditor you may give him the very same chance without the tenancy being determined?—How could I?

10,410. I do not know whether you could, but the question is whether you would?—He would have a fresh lot against him as soon as he got the stock in. I do not say so far as the creditors are concerned it is any good, but so far as the poor tenant and his wife and family are concerned, it is the finest protection for him in the world, and it is his only chance of ever getting on his legs again if he once gets down.

10,411. Then, again, take this: "The land-"lord reserves to himself, subject to the Ground "Game Act, all game, rabbits, fish and wild fowl "with liberty for himself and other people "authorised by him to enter upon the lands and "to pursue and take the same." Supposing they do damage, ought not the tenant to have some compensation?—Certainly not, if he signs to take the farm without it.

10,412. I ask you, is it fair to make a man take the farm, or to suggest that a man should take the farm and reserve their rights without offering compensation?—Perfectly fair. A man sees what you offer him. You say, "You shall "have my farm at 50*l.* rent, subject to these "conditions," or "If I abolish all these con-"ditions I take 70*l.* a year for the farm."

10,413. Supposing a man has been a century there, and then you offer him a new agreement. What do you say then?—Even then I say it is perfectly fair, if you offer him a fair agreement.

10,414. In other words, you think a monopoly is fair?—No, I do not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

10,415. But it is perfectly obvious in that case that the landlord has got a monopoly, because the land on which the tenant or his family has been on the land for centuries is the only land in the world in regard to which he stands in that relation?—Not at all.

10,416. The only land in the world upon which his family have been for so long?—What does it matter.

10,417. It is sentimental, if you like?—Sentimental, but that is nonsense.

10,418. It is what Mr. Wynne said yesterday?—I do not care what Mr. Wynne said; I am expressing my opinion, and I say you cannot introduce sentiment, and value it in the account.

10,419. Mr. Wynne, of Peniarth, yesterday said he would object to the introduction of a Land Court, because it would destroy the friendly relations that have been existing so long between landlord and tenant?—I quite agree with him upon that point.

10,420. But that is sentimental, is it not?—Not at all; it is not sentimental. It would reduce itself into a commercial question, and destroy sentiment entirely.

10,421. That is not the way it was put yesterday?—It is the way I am putting it now, sir; I am not responsible for what Mr. Wynne said.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,422. I think you said that you remember a few farms being sold to tenant farmers?—Yes, on the estate I manage now.

10,423. You do not remember which ones they were?—Yes, many in the neighbourhood around. The number of freeholders is increasing in that way.

10,424. You have no reason to give?—One of my reasons is this: that farming is not the bad thing they all make it out to be.

10,425. You say that tenant farmers are better off as a rule than otherwise. Why should these men—so many as I see before me now, 59 on the same estate—have purchased their farms. In another place the total of them is 168?—That they have purchased on one estate, do you say?

10,426. Yes, 59 on one estate?—I never heard of as many as that purchasing on one estate.

10,427. Do you know the Brynkir and Madryn Estate?—Yes, very well; but they are not the same estate; they do not belong to the same people.

10,428. Whether the two estates are the same, I cannot say, but there are 59 given as the number?—Yes, I quite believe that; I thought you meant on one estate.

10,429. I do not know about its being one estate, but it seems to be a great number. You have no reason to give why these men should be inclined to go and buy their land?—No, I have not.

10,430. From the evidence we have heard here to-day of how some of the tenant farmers have been treated, I quite see to my thinking there is a very grave reason why they should be inclined to buy their farms?—How do you mean—the way in which the farmers have been treated here to-day?

10,431. Many of them have laid out so much money upon their farms, and the farms have been sold and the rent risen, and all the rest of it? Is not that course of proceeding quite unwarranted? It shows a lack of sense to go and spend their money without having the slightest security for it?—How are you going to protect men from making fools of themselves?

10,432. But I ask you, is not that a reason why they are inclined to buy their farms?—No, I do not think it is.

10,433. I am not sure whether it was you who told us yesterday that the tenant farmers' wives did not work at all?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

That was the day before yesterday, when Mr. Wynne suggested that they did not work in the fields.

Mr. Griffiths.

No, that they did not work at all.

Professor Rhŷs.

It was Mr. Wynne of Peniarth, I think; he explained that they did not work in the fields. You may ask your question all the same.

Mr. Griffiths.

No, it does not matter.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,434. I think you said that a good farmer would farm well under any conditions?—No, I did not say that.

10,434A. Will you kindly explain that?—I said that a good farmer would farm well, however bad his agreement was, and a bad farmer would farm badly, however good his agreement was. I will read the reply if you will give the number of the question. I think it is No. 38: "Are any "of the clauses considered oppressive? What "effect have they on cultivation?" My answer is: I am not aware that any are considered oppressive. I cannot say what effect they have on cultivation, as I believe a good farmer will be a good farmer, however bad his agreement, and a bad slovenly farmer will be so under any agreement ever made or to be made hereafter.

10,435. But if the agreement is such, and if he signs it, that it does not protect him and secure for him compensation for unexhausted improvements, is there any encouragement for good farming?—No, from a commercial point of view there is not any encouragement.

10,436. Do you think that a farmer under those circumstances is likely to farm so well?—He is a very silly man if he does. A man is a great ass if he spends his money without knowing exactly where he is going to be when he is done. I want them to bring that commercial intelligence to bear upon the trade of farming which a man brings to bear upon the trade of selling cloth, or anything else, and the sooner they do so the better for them.

10,437. You say you do not know what population has to do with rent, I believe?—I look at the question as regarding population produced on the farm. I do not see why, if a man is blessed with a large family, that that has anything to do with the rent.

10,438. Was it in that sense you used the word "population"?—Yes.

10,438*a*. I took it in another sense?—Of course, populous places have a great deal to do with the rent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,439. I thought you meant that. I took it in the way that you are saying?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,440. I see you mention that there is a great increase in the quantity of potatoes raised. What is the cause?—Did I say "increase"?

10,441. Well, that there is a large quantity?—No, I say that there is a larger proportion of potatoes grown to the root crops than in my opinion there ought to be.

10,442. I have noticed that in Mr. Lleufer Thomas's report.—I believe it is a bad system of farming, but nobody will believe what anybody else says about it; every man will take his own way here.

10,443. Is there any demand for potatoes in these seaside places?—No, it is the pigs; all the manure is put to the potatoes for the pigs—good and bad—all huddled together.

10,444. This question has been handed to me by Mr. William George: "Were common lands ,402, "enclosed in Rhoslan, and was any compensation 3. "paid to the parish in respect of the almshouses "belonging to the parish on this common?"—The enclosure of Rhoslan was before my time; I know nothing about it whatever. I have only been in this locality 21 or 22 years.

Mr. Seebohm.

120*l.* in the sale room at Carnarvon to enable him to pay the deposit on his purchase; he bought the farm. He could have defied the landlord and everybody else; he had got a claim on the estate; and what I want every tenant to do is to take care to do that before he spends a shilling on the property; he cannot do that until he gets the consent.

10,446. I can quite understand what you mean, but then is it so in fact? You present, for instance, an agreement to a tenant which contains a clause which, to some extent, is void, owing to what Mr. Brynmor Jones pointed out. You assume the tenant is so ignorant of the position, or is in so difficult a position, that he has to accept it even with that illegal clause, or that void clause in it?—No, it is nothing of the sort. The tenants, I assure you, are perfectly well advised about these matters; they do not trust to their own knowledge; there is not a single scrap of written matter which is signed by the tenants in this locality, or many miles round that is not subject to a good pretty sharp legal eye. At the same time when the tenants are invited to come to the office, they have had the agreement in their possession for 2 or 3 months before they were to sign it. It was competent for any tenant to go to any solicitor to ask him to look over it. I believe many did so, and had any tenant said to me, "Well, this is a doubtful clause as to its construction," I should have said "Wipe it out," and if they choose I will wipe it out to-morrow, with the consent of my principal.

10,447. Would it not be better for the landlord to put it in a perfectly clear form which was actually legal, and which would show the actual state of things?—Perhaps it would be better.

10,448. I may take it that in your opinion it would be better?—Yes, I think you may take it that it would be better.

10,449. If you take a house from year-to-year, you know perfectly well what that year-to-year tenancy is. You would still think it a hardship if, after you had removed your furniture and fitted up the house, expecting to go on in that house for years, you should be turned out the very next year?—I should consider it a hardship. At the same time I should blame myself for having been such an ass as to go to that house, and that expense, without protecting myself. There is this to be said in respect to that: every change of tenancy in my experience means a year's rent expended on the place for something or other. The colour of the dining room paper which suited you would not suit the next man, and a grate that suited you would not suit him, and so on. I hate a change of tenants.

trustees, should get the full value that they could possibly get under the law. That is one of the conditions that any estate may fall into by a death, and then what you say would apply; that anyone would be a fool to take a farm, according to you, with that risk?—Not under our agreement. If you become a tenant on our estate, and carry out the agreement, and you say, "Mr. Jones, I want to spend 500*l.* in draining "the farm, but I will not do it unless you give "me security," I should say, "Very well, what are you going to do?" "I am going to spend 500*l.* on drainage." "Well, let us see the plans"; and when you have settled the matter agreed, I give you the written authority, which is entered in the letter book, and you proceed with the works, and when completed you bring the bills to the office, and you get the certificate. It does not matter what becomes of the estate, it is a claim against the freeholder.

10,452. Is it not better, both for the landlord and the tenant, that the agreement for compensation should be made in such a form that so far as possible it covers these contingencies?—Then I may say that our agreement does carry that out.

10,453. I hardly see it does with regard to haulage, and with regard to anything that a man must do on a farm?—This is Clause 13: "If a "tenant executes entirely at his own expense, "on his holding, any of the improvements "hereinafter mentioned with the previous consent in writing of the landlord or his agent, "he shall, subject to the provisions hereinafter "contained, be entitled on the determination of "the tenancy (if it shall terminate, as to the "improvements firstly hereinafter mentioned, "within thirty years after the same shall have "been made, and within twenty years as to the "improvements secondly hereinafter mentioned, "after the same shall have been made) to compensation in respect thereof as hereinafter "provided, that is to say:—(1.) If he erects or "improves any building, the amount of compensation shall be the sum properly laid out "by him thereon, after deducting one thirtieth "part thereof for each year the tenancy continues after the year of tenancy in which the "outlay is made. There shall be taken into "account of reduction of such compensation, "any sum reasonably necessary to be expended "for the purpose of putting the same in tenantable repair or good condition. (2.) If the "tenant improves the land by draining or clearing the same of stones, or making, altering, or

"straightening fences, the amount of compensation shall be the sum properly laid out by him "thereon after deducting one-twentieth part "thereof for each year he continues tenant after "the year of tenancy in which the outlay is "made, but no drains for which compensation "will be allowed shall be of a less depth than "three feet, unless the same have been sanctioned in writing by the landlord or his agent. "Should the tenant prefer to execute, with the "previous consent in writing of the landlord or "his agent, any of the improvements mentioned "in this clause, by having materials allowed (as "in Clause 4), he will be allowed compensation "upon his share of the legitimate expenditure "in labour and cartage, upon one-half the scale "in the case of his doing so entirely at his own "expense. Certificates of compensation must "be settled within twelve months of completion "of the works, and must be produced at each "rent audit for the amount due to be marked "thereon. The efficiency of the works made by "the tenant and the amount of compensation "due to him in respect thereof shall in case of "disagreement be referred to arbitration."

10,454. I see the intention of that clause is to be perfectly fair, so far as I understand it?—That is the intention.

10,455. I am not quite sure, even with regard to that, that if a tenant were to get the previous consent of his landlord, and agree with his landlord that a house should be built by the landlord, he contributing the haulage, that the haulage would be included. Do you think it would?—Yes, undoubtedly it would.

10,456. If in your agreement, which I have not seen, that item of haulage is made safe, do you think it is so in the majority of agreements in this district?—That I cannot say.

10,457. But if it was not you would say it was not a fully fair agreement, would you not?—I cannot say I should say it was not a fair agreement, but I should say the tenant was unwise in taking upon himself pecuniary burdens where he was not covered. He should carefully consider what his position is before incurring these expenses.

10,458. We have had many complaints about the haulage. I wanted particularly with regard to the haulage to know whether in your opinion it would not be wise for landlords to fully compensate, as you think you do, for the haulage in those cases?—I do not quite follow that question.

10,459. If the general habit of agreements in this country is not to cover the haulage, in those cases would it not be wise that they should be altered so that they should cover the haulage?—Yes, I do. I go to this extent, that the tenant ought to be compensated for everything, whether it is haulage or anything else.

10,460. And that it ought to be in the agreement?—Yes, that is my opinion, that it would be better it should be so. At the same time I go to this extent, that if a man likes to let his land upon other conditions, I am in favour of his having that right. I do not advise him to do it, but I claim he should have the right to be as obstinate as he likes so long as he owns the property. What I claim for a right I do not suggest is a wise thing to do, but I say if I am the owner of the property I want to be the owner of it.

10,461. If the Agricultural Holdings Act could be so far altered as to make it perfectly fair as regards haulage, you would think it would be wise it should be so?—Well, I think the Agricultural Holdings Act, in the absence of agreement, would not benefit him a bit, unless he had given the proper notices. In the Agricultural Holdings Act a man cannot claim for building unless he has given notice, and obtained consent according to Schedule I. He must obtain consent under that Act, and he must give the proper notices, and if he does not he is out of court, in my opinion. We have an old Welsh proverb, "Y mae'r cyttundeb sala yn well n'ar gyfraith oreu." That is my opinion; that the worst agreement is better than the best law. An Act of Parliament is nothing more nor less than food for the lawyers and valuers.

Professor Rhŷs.

10,462. You said just now that some of the farmers have applied for permission to effect certain improvements on their farms?—Yes.

10,463. Can you tell me how many?—I have brought here two to-day.

10,464. What I wanted to know particularly was what class of farmers they were?—We have one 150*l.* per annum, and we have one 40*l.* per annum, and one we had was 14*l.* or 15*l.* per annum, and we gave him the certificate, and he got the 120*l.*

10,465. It is not a case of the smaller farmer being negligent exactly—some of them have also applied?—Yes, one or two of them.

10,466. Your policy, I see, is to carry out the principle of caveat emptor, let him take his chance—he is to look to his agreement?—Who?

10,467. The tenant. If he does anything that is not in his agreement, and so on, you consider he is acting foolishly?—I think he is a silly man. The survival of the fittest is one of my principles.

10,468. In what sense?—In every sense. If a man cannot look after himself there is no one else will.

10,469. Do you say the tenants insure the buildings on the farms?—Well, I am a tenant myself and I insure the buildings on my farm.

10,470. What is the practice on the estate?—I am sorry to say not a single tenant I know, except two or three leaseholders, insure; but I think they ought to be made to insure.

10,471. Not the landlord?—No.

10,472. Is that the case on most estates?—It is on some estates I know, and rightly so, I think, because if the buildings are burned it is sure to be by the tenant's servant man setting fire to the hay, with a candle or match for instance; it would not be by anything the landlord would do.

10,473. At present the landlord would run a risk if that took place when the buildings are not insured. The landlord is concerned?—Yes, he is concerned. It means this, that he will probably have to rebuild them. But the tenant runs this risk, that the farm may be divided amongst the next two farms to save the cost of rebuilding.

10,474. Do you often do that?—We have never had a case that I know of. We have, as I have said in my evidence, put one or two farms together.

10,475. You mentioned just now the habit of the servant men going about prowling after the girls during the night. Would you mind telling me what districts you had in view?—I reside in Criccieth myself, and I speak of all the other districts. I think it is the common complaint from one end of the country to the other.

10,476. What county?—Carnarvonshire and Merionethshire. I know them both well, and I know a great deal of Flintshire and Denbighshire.

10,477. Merionethshire has a comparatively good reputation with regard to morality. Is that not so?—Well, not that I know of.

10,478. All the country round Criccieth particularly you know?—Well, I speak of the habit, and the farmers themselves complain of it.

10,479. I wish you would specify certain districts. I think this sort of thing ought to be put down?—Well, I say that the whole country suffers from it.

10,480. What do you mean by the whole country?—The whole of Wales, so far as my experience goes.

10,481. There is a great difference. What districts do you mean particularly; there are certain districts where it is not so customary?—Well, I should be glad to hear of those beauty spots. Will you kindly name them?

10,482. It is generally supposed that there are certain districts which are more given to this practice than others. I want to know which you mean?—I meant all the country of which I know anything of, is, so far as I know, equally bad. I am not going to blacken one part of the country more than another.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,482*a*. It is suggested I should ask you this question. What are your duties as Inspector to the Board of Agriculture?—I am one of the land inspectors of the Board of Agriculture.

10,483. Is there much work in the discharge of your duties under that office?—Not at present, I am sorry to say.

Re-examined, 11,824.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Owen Owens called. Examined through an Interpreter.

10,484. [The interpreter read the following statement by the witness.]

"Owen Owens, Hill Street, Gerlan, Bethesda.

"I am now a quarry labourer, but used to be a farmer.

See 10,372-10,391. "I have come all the way from Bethesda specially to give evidence.

"In 1874, my father took Fachgoch near Tremadoc, of Mr. Ellis Nanney.

"My father died in about 12 or 13 years after going there, and I took the farm afterwards.

"Two years ago the farm was sold to Mr. John Jones, Ynysfor.

"It was not offered to me, nor did I know anything of the sale until afterwards.

"The first thing I got afterwards was a notice to quit.

"I went to Mr. John Jones for the farm, but he said he would not let it to me without a rent of 60*l.*, and taking part of the Ffridd, sufficient to depasture 40 sheep on, away as well.

"I refused to take the farm on these terms, and had to leave.

"I was not paid a penny for any improvements I had made.

"My father had actually spent in cash 87*l.* on buildings, and had done the cartage besides.

"I tried to get something from Mr. Walter Jones, the agent of Mr. Nanney, but he refused to give me anything.

"I consider that our improvements had considerably increased the value of the farm.

"I had an agreement during my tenancy of the farm, but my father had none.

"Farmers generally are afraid of applying to their landlords for written consents to effect improvements, lest they should get notice to quit.

"They prefer relying on the landlord's honour, but in my case I was sadly disappointed because my father did so.

"I consider that I lost about 150*l.* in the stock alone in having to sell at the time I did."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,484*a*. Mr. Walter Jones puts the question: "Did your father receive 23*l.* 18*s.* as compensation for walls and drainage?"—Never a halfpenny.

10,485. Mr. Vincent puts this question: "Was not 91*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* spent on your house"?—I cannot say how much they paid for the materials; we paid for the work.

[Adjourned to Monday next at Pwllheli.]

THIRTEENTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Pwllheli, Carnarvonshire, Monday, 18th September 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

MR. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Chairman.

Before we begin, I should like to say that the evidence of the Welsh witnesses will be taken in the same way as we have settled to take it up to now, that is to say, the Welsh evidence will be gone through in another room by one or two of the Commissioners who understand the Welsh language, so that there can be no mistake in the evidence as given in English. Every witness will perfectly understand the evidence he proposes to give will be read out to him by one or two of the Commissioners so that he may perfectly understand his evidence, which will be read out in English. I shall be glad also at the same time if anyone present, whether they are tenant farmers or landlords, or agents, or representatives, or gentlemen of the Press, or any person, if any evidence is read too quick or is not understood or not heard, or misunderstood in any way, will at once let me know, so that the matter may be cleared up. We are extremely anxious that every person should understand the whole of the evidence, and I should be personally obliged if any gentleman who is in Court who is interested in the examination would be good enough to put any question to me at the time if any question put to the witness is misunderstood or not taken down correctly.

MR. WILLIAM HUMPHREYS called and examined.

Chairman.

10,486. Where do you live?—Aberkin.

10,487. What are you?—I am a tenant farmer.

10,488. And what is your acreage?—175 acres without right of sheep run.

10,489. Who is the owner of the farm?—The Hon. Frederick George Wynne, of Glynllifon.

10,490. Have you any property of your own as well?—I have a very small place, about 8 or 9 acres?

10,491. Freehold of your own?—Freehold of my own; but I do not farm that; I let it.

10,492. Will you kindly tell us what you wish to say?—I wish to give evidence about my own farm and the neighbourhood, and I wish it to be perfectly understood that I give this evidence entirely as an independent witness, and that I have not been asked to give evidence by any person or association. First of all as to question 5 in syllabus. I believe recent enclosures of waste land have done a deal of good. The said land is now properly cultivated and the proper amount of stock put on it. Before it used to be overstocked, and that too to such an extent that it was detrimental to the stock, and thus causing serious loss to the different owners. I do not know of any unenclosed land in my district. There are no rights of sheep walk in my district. I consider unlimited rights of sheep walk most injurious, inasmuch as they are an inducement to farmers to put more sheep on than their rights will carry. I think that matters are managed best on large estates. I do not think that politics or religion or language make any difference between the tenant and the landlord. As for myself I can understand my landlord's English and he can understand Welsh. My landlord never interferes with the politics or religion of his tenant. They can act according to their own opinions. The time of entering on a farm is the 25th of March. Agreements are most common. I do not know of a single case of a tenant asking for a lease in my district. I consider that tenants are safer under agreements providing they get security for unexhausted improvements. I believe that tenant farmers should be fully secured for unexhausted improvements in cases where they are compelled either to give up their farms or to pay more rent before getting the full benefit of the improvements made. And the landlords should likewise be secured against any dilapidation caused by the neglect of their tenants; such dilapidation or improvement to be valued by four men, two appointed by the landlord and two by the tenant; in the event of these four men failing to agree, they should have the power of appointing a referee, as is done now in case of valuation between outgoing and incoming tenants. I am also against being under the necessity of getting the landlord's or the agent's consent before having a claim for improvements, as it gives unnecessary trouble. Then question 16 I will pass over. I do not object to my agreement.

10,493. Will you put in your agreement?—Yes, here is my agreement (handing it). I do not object to my agreement or I would not have signed it. It is the custom for owners not to use the stricter clauses in the agreements against good tenants.

10,494. What do you call the "stricter clauses"?—I mean in cases where the tenant leaves his farm. There are such clauses as that he is to keep the farm in repair and so on in the course of cropping. I do not think they are particular at all unless the tenant turns out a bad one; then they use them. Then as to question 18 there are cases where tenants have not got a copy of their agreement. All tenants on the large estates are provided with a copy, and the agreement is given them to read before they sign it. I have a case in point if your lordship will allow me to put it forward.

10,495. Yes, do so?—It is a case at Ynysgain Ganol. Mr. W. D. Jones has been the tenant of Ynysgain Ganol for six years at a yearly rent of 50*l.*

10,496. Have you that gentleman's consent for stating this?—He is here.

See 10,581–10,595, 10,729–10,753.

10,497. But have you his consent?—Yes, I have his consent and he is here himself to corroborate my evidence. He has been a tenant for six years at a yearly rent of 50*l.* (the farm containing 25 acres). Mr. Jones never had a copy of his agreement which Messrs. Lloyd George and George made on behalf of the landlord Mr. John Prichard, Criccieth, who formerly farmed Ynysgain Ganol himself, and from what transpired afterwards it seems that Mr. Lloyd George took particular care that the conditions of the agreement were carried out by the tenant. When Mr. George paid a visit to Ynysgain Ganol, with a gentleman who desired to buy the place, he was not at all satisfied with the way Ynysgain Ganol was farmed, but as the tenant was away from home that day, Mr. George had no chance to tell him then that he was dissatisfied. Shortly afterwards Mr. Jones met Mr. D. Ll. George at Criccieth and Mr. George accosted him in the most stern manner, and accused him of having broken the agreement and of having done such damages on the farm that would necessitate Mr. George to bring an action against him unless Mr. Jones would agree to pay damages according to the valuation of two men, Mr. George then naming his father-in-law as his valuer. In a few days afterwards Mr. Jones received a notice to quit, written by Mr. George's clerk and corrected by one of the principals of the firm of Messrs. Lloyd George and George. As the time of giving up possession drew nigh Mr. Jones thought it would only be right for him to have a copy of his agreement, in order that he might see what were the conditions, &c. as to his leaving the place, therefore he wrote a letter to Messrs. Lloyd

Chairman—continued.

George and George, of which the following is a copy:—

"Ynysgain Ganol, 15th July.

Messrs. Lloyd George and George.

"DEAR SIRS,

"WILL you kindly send me a copy of the agreement you made between John Prichard and myself on my becoming the tenant of Ynysgain Ganol.

"Yours faithfully,

"W. D. JONES."

Copy of reply:—

"Criccieth, July 19th, 1893.

"DEAR SIR,

"WE are in receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, and are getting the copy agreement made out and will send it to you on hearing that you are prepared to pay our charges for same together with our charges against you in connection with the letting of Ynysgain Ganol, which you have not yet paid, amounting altogether to 2*l.* 2*s.*

"Yours faithfully,

"LLOYD GEORGE AND GEORGE.

"W. D. Jones."

But I must say that lately a copy of the agreement came to hand when it was rumoured that I was going to give my evidence before the Commissioners, and perhaps I may be allowed to read Mr. George's letter, and produce a copy of the agreement, which I will hand to you if you wish.

"Criccieth, September 9th, 1893.

"DEAR SIR,

"IN accordance with your request, we enclose you a copy of the agreement of tenancy signed by you. It was made when sent for by you, but owing to the writer's subsequent absence from the office, the matter was afterwards overlooked. We should be glad to receive a cheque for our charges in the matter.

"Yours faithfully,

"LLOYD GEORGE AND GEORGE.

"Mr. W. D. Jones,

"Ynysgain Ganol,

"Criccieth."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,498. Are you reading the statement of some other gentleman?—Yes, of Mr. Jones.

10,499. Is he here himself?—Yes.

10,500. But you are reading his statement, I understand?—Yes. I may say he lives in the next farm to me.

Chairman.

10,501. Now proceed with your evidence?—This is my own evidence now. As to Question 19, whether the agreements are explained to tenants, I say the agreements are explained to the tenants. Some landowners have their agreements printed both in Welsh and English. The rent as a rule is fixed at a lump sum. As to Question 21, there is uniformity in the rents of land of similar quality on large estates, but on small estates the rents vary very much, and that is owing to the greater demand for small holdings, as less capital will do to take them. There are no upland farms in the district. There is no service other than payment of rent in my district. The holdings are not let to the highest bidder, otherwise the rent in many instances would be double or even treble of what it is now. I have received 15 per cent. abatement in my rent for three years out of the seven years that I have been tenant of my farm. And these abatements were made without any request on the part of the tenant. The rates in the district have been about the same for the last 25 years. But in districts having local boards, school boards, and burial boards, &c., the rates have more than doubled in that time, and the increase has to be paid by the tenants. There has been no consolidation in my district. I think the land has produced more through it in those districts where farms have been consolidated. Undoubtedly it has caused more labour to be employed. Large farmers are the best farmers. Large farmers provide best for their families. Large farmers can stand out longest against depressed prices, as they generally have more capital to fall back upon, consequently they are not compelled to sell their stock at ruinous prices in order to meet their demands; they can afford to wait until they can get better prices for their stock. Large farmers have also such a variety of stock that they are likely at all times to have some articles that would fetch good prices.

In some cases they do sublet at more than treble the rent they pay themselves. I wish to bring a case in point. Close to where I live a farm called Pencarth, in the parish of Llanystumdwy, the property of the Misses Priestley, of Trefan Hall, is let to the present tenant (who has been in occupation for a great number of years) at an annual rent of 16*l.* 5*s.* The tenant has for several years been sub-letting portions of his farm. This year he gets 38*l.* for one portion, and 12*l.* for another, whilst retaining enough land himself to keep a cow or two, to grow enough vegetables for his family, and to feed a number of pigs thereon as well. I may also state that part of this farm is taken by a tenant farmer, who gets his own farm at one-third the cost per acre of what he pays for this part of Pencarth.

Invariably, when tenants sublet they make treble the money the landlord gets, therefore I fully believe that if landlords were to let their farms to the highest bidder, they would more than double their income.

I might also say that this gentleman also sold 12*l.* worth of straw out of that farm this year, or at least he has been offered 12*l.* for it.

The rent is generally paid within six months after it becomes due. There are several instances of the time being postponed without a request to that effect being made by the tenant. I do not know of any farmers in my district borrowing money to pay their rent.

Question 32, "Are labourers scarce?" No, I maintain that we have the best class of labourers in the whole country, and I consider their working hours are plenty long enough.

10,502. Too long, do you say?—Not too long.

Lord Kenyon.

10,503. You say they are quite long enough?—Yes, they are quite long enough; I consider the working hours of the labouring class are plenty long enough now, and they are an obliging good class of workmen.

Land is fairly well cultivated in my district, and in almost every farm there is a little waste land in small patches here and there, and probably some portions of it could be profitably cultivated. A good deal of arable land has been laid down in pasture owing to the low price of corn, and the labour expense attached to corn growing.

Root crops have increased wonderfully owing to a greater amount of live stock being kept, and greater effort being made by the farmers to fatten their animals for the butchers instead of selling them.

Fallowing has fallen into disuse owing to the increase of root crops, which is a far better and cheaper method of cleaning the land than by leaving it fallow.

Improvements such as buildings for stock put up and protection from river encroachments are generally done by the landlord. Drainage, fences, gates and posts, manures, seeds, &c., mostly by the tenants. On some estates the pipes for drains are given by the landlord. In cases where the pipes are allowed for by the landlord, I think the landlord or his agent should have power to inspect the drains, and see that they are of the proper depth, and also to see that the pipes are laid down properly.

In the case of co-operation in improvement, remuneration is secured to the tenant in and by the benefit he will derive from the improvement made. The landlord is amply rewarded in most cases in seeing his tenant comfortably situated. There are some agreements under which compensation is obtainable. Compensation is also obtainable under the Agricultural Holdings Act, provided consent has been obtained before such improvement is made.

My landlord never attempted to contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

The custom in this district is for the incoming tenant to take crops and manure at a valuation. I do not know of a single case in which the outgoing tenant paid for dilapidations.

If the landlord fails to find a tenant he is supposed to buy all the sheep.

I do not think there is any real trouble about game in my district.

There are several freeholders, and they are almost invariably worse off than tenant farmers, as they have to borrow money at a high rate of interest to pay for their farms. I had better give a few reasons why I think they are.

My reasons for believing that small freeholders are worse off than tenant farmers are the following:—

(4.) Almost invariably small freeholders have not enough capital to put up proper buildings on their property. And on the farms of small freeholders the buildings are generally in a dilapidated state, whereas a large landowner often spends as much money in putting up buildings on a farm as the real value of the farm itself. I know cases where as much money has been spent in building on a farm that if invested at 4 per cent. it would produce more in interest than the rent of the farm.

Then as to question 45. I know of plenty of farmers without sons who have managed to pay their way, and have made a good fortune by farming. Plenty of farmers set their sons up in business, some as bankers, doctors and solicitors, &c. And they have also given good portions to their daughters.

My opinion is that the establishment of a land court would be the means of destroying the present good feeling between landlord and tenant and to widen the gap between them. A tenant in applying to a land court would have to secure the aid of a solicitor, and thereby incur unnecessary expense, and also lose every chance of help in the way of abatement of rent and the postponement of the time of paying such rent in times of depression.

I consider that foreign competition is one cause of the present low prices, and, in my opinion, the said competition is quite unfair to the British farmers, inasmuch as foreign countries protect themselves against our sending there by charging such duties upon them that it would be profitless for us to send them over, whereas this country is a free and open market to foreign goods.

I feel that the marking of foreign meat would be a great boon to the British farmers, as it would give them a better chance to compete with foreigners as regards the quality, if not the quantity, of the meat. But under the present system foreign meat is sold freely in our country as home-fed meat, hence the consumers do not get a fair opportunity of judging between foreign and home-fed meat.

Then as to question 48, I beg to suggest that a Government inspector should be appointed to examine seeds, and also the various cakes and manures that are manufactured. Some of these feeding stuffs and fertilisers no doubt are of a very inferior quality; but farmers, especially in the present depressed condition of trade, are tempted to buy them. This they do, not only to their own loss, but often to the ruin of their land and their animals. Farmers cannot be expected to know much about chemicals, therefore they ought to be protected from manufacturers who, under the cloak of low prices for wrongly specified goods, mislead them.

I may also mention that the entire horses that travel through the county, before being allowed to do so, should be examined as to their soundness by a veterinary surgeon appointed by Government. As at present, it is hardly of any use for a landowner to buy a valuable entire horse, and charge for his service only just what will cover the expenses, when there are many unsound and worthless stallions in the county, which many of the farmers are tempted to use owing to the low price charged for their service, and also owing to some kind of obligatory feeling to their neighbours. In using the service of these unsound horses they do themselves serious harm. They breed worthless animals, which, at the best of times, are a perfect drag on the market.

Then as to question 50, I know of several tenant farmers who hold the same views as I do, and would if they came forward give similar evidence, as I have done, but they do not come forward because they are afraid of the preachers and the deacons.

Chairman.

10,504. Are you a member of the Church or a Nonconformist?—I am a Nonconformist, my lord—Methodist.

10,505. You say there is intimidation from the ministers and deacons?—I do say that plenty of farmers would not come forward because they would lose their chance of promotion in their different chapels.

10,506. Perhaps you may have read what I have said about intimidation of any kind or description. It ought to be very well known, that if there is any intimidation of any sort or kind brought home to anyone, the Commissioners will not hesitate to put the law for the better protection of witnesses into force?—I do not mean to say it is intimidation in that way, but I maintain this, that they would not get the same position as they do get, that is if they were straightforward and gave their opinions.

Lord Kenyon.

10,507. You said that you thought the tenants should be secured for unexhausted improvements. Do you mean that there should be some further clauses added to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—Yes.

10,508. You think the Act does not go far enough?—Yes.

10,509. What suggestion would you make?—One suggestion I would make is that the tenant should not require the consent of his landlord or his agent.

10,510. Not in respect of section 1 of the schedule?—Quite so.

10,511. "Improvements to which the consent of the landlord is required"?—Yes.

10,512. You think that the consent of the landlord should not be required to any of those heads?—Yes; I do not think the consent of the landlord is required nor his agent.

10,513. Not to the erection or enlargement of buildings?—I do not say anything about that. I say improvements on the land, I do not mean the buildings.

10,514. You would not exclude the whole of part 1 of the schedule then?—No, I would not put the buildings in, only just the land.

10,515. Would you put in the formation of silos?—No.

10,516. Laying down the permanent pasture?—Certainly; I would put every improvement on the land.

10,517. Making or planting of osier beds?—I do not quite follow the question.

10,518. Perhaps that does not refer to this part of the world?—No, we do not have them in this part.

10,519. Making of water meadows or works of irrigation?—No, I would not put in anything for that.

10,520. "Making of gardens"? Supposing a man had a small farm, and he were to erect in his garden a large number of glass-houses, would you compel the landlord to take over all those glass-houses?—No, my lord, I would not. I do not think the tenant deserves compensation for such as those, because they do not generally belong to farmers.

10,521. Would you require the consent of the landlord to the making of gardens?—Yes.

10,522. To the making or improving of roads or bridges?—The consent of the landlord, of course, would be required.

10,523. "Making or improving of water-"courses, ponds, wells, or reservoirs, or of works "for the application of water for agricultural "or domestic purposes"?—Yes, I think the consent of the landlord would be required for such as those.

10,524. "Making of fences"?—I do not think that the consent would be required for the making of fences.

10,525. "Planting of hops"? That does not refer to this part of the country. "Planting of orchards or fruit bushes." Then "reclaiming of waste land"?—I think the consent is not required for that.

10,526. "Warping of land" then "embankment of sluices against floods"?—Yes, I think that the consent is not required for that. Of course it is an improvement of the land.

10,527. Yes; then there are five clauses at least in that first schedule, to which you would say that the consent of the landlord is not required. I think that is a valuable suggestion. Then you mentioned the case of sub-letting. I wanted to get out the details. You mentioned an instance; could you give me the name again?—Pencarth, Llanystumdwy; that is the name of the farm.

10,528. Can you give the details of it?—It is a farm called Pencarth in the parish of Llanystumdwy, the property of Messrs. Priestly of Trevan Hall; it is let to the present tenant, who has been in occupation for a great number of years, at an annual rent of 16*l.* 5*s.* The tenant has for several years been sub-letting portions of his farm.

10,529. I only want the details of the rent. What does he sub-let it for?—38*l.* one portion, and 12*l.* the other.

10,530. He gets 50*l.* a year for it?—He gets 50*l.* a year for it, and still retains a lot in hand.

10,531. He still retains some in hand. Then you stated that you knew of no cases of farmers borrowing money to pay rent?—I do not know of any in my district.

10,532. Do you know of farmers going to a bank and saying, "I do not wish to sell my stock "now, would you advance me so much until my "stock is sold." I do not know that much about their affairs.

10,533. Not even that?—Not even that.

10,534. Or do you know of cases like this, of their going to the landland and saying, "I have "not sold so much stock, will you kindly wait "until that stock is sold." Do you know of any cases of that sort?—I do not know, but there may be some and I am pretty certain that there are plenty of landlords who would grant the time.

10,535. You gave us your views of the land court; you thought it would be against the good feeling, as I understood you, but you rather proposed a sort of land court yourself with regard to compensation, that there should be four men?—I only go in for compensation for unexhausted improvements, in the event of the tenant being obliged to leave the farm. If he leaves to better himself, I do not think he ought to be compensated, only when he gets a notice to quit for an advance in his rent.

10,536. With regard to security of tenure, we have heard a good deal about that. Do you think that tenure is sufficiently secured now?—I believe it would be sufficiently secured with security for unexhausted improvements, my Lord. I do not suppose the farmers would want anything further than that, so far as I understand them.

10,537. Is there any demand for leases that you are aware of?—Not so far as I am aware of.

10,538. We heard a good deal about wages to children, from farmers. Have you ever known of children receiving wages from their parents in the shape of money?—I believe they receive a lot more wages than the workmen, in the way of clothing and pocket money, and so on.

10,539. Only it would not be specified as wages?—It would not be specified as wages, quite.

10,540. It would be rather the natural thing that the father should——— ?—Should hire a son.

10,541. Are railway rates too high about here or not; you have said nothing about that, I think?—The railway rates are about the same here as they are in any other part of the country. We do complain that they are a bit high.

10,542. But still you make use of the railway?—Yes, we make use of the railway.

10,543. And you prefer to have a railway than not to have a railway?—By a long way.

10,544. You thought a Government inspector should be appointed for analysing stuffs. Have you any experience of the work of the Bangor College in this district?—I have not very much.

10,545. I think they analyse if necessary, do they not?—I do not know.

10,546. They have a laboratory at Bangor?—I have nothing at all to do with them. There is an Act passed now, the Fertiliser and Feeding Stuff Bill, and I hope that will protect farmers from buying inferior stuffs. I have not seen that Bill myself; I saw a report about it in the "Live Stock Journal," and it says it is a very good Bill.

10,547. The Royal Agricultural Society will analyse stuffs, if necessary, also. Do any farmers about here belong to the Royal Agricultural Society of England?—Yes, we have a few, but I mean to go further than that—I mean to pass an Act that all the manufacturers of inferior goods should be prosecuted; that they should not be allowed to manufacture at all.

10,548. In fact that they should not be allowed to sell adulterated goods?—That is what I mean.

10,549. You spoke of unsound stallions. Are there any landlords in this district who keep stallions?—Plenty. Mr. Wynn, of Glynllivon, has spent many hundreds of pounds trying to improve the breed of horses in the country.

10,550. And the entire horses are not used, chiefly because they are unsound?—They are not used; they do not, I think, even pay their expenses. I can mention many landlords who are only too anxious to improve the breed of horses and cattle in the country. I was speaking to Lord Penrhyn at the Agricultural Show, and he said he would be only too glad to send a thoroughbred entire horse. I said that breeding horses would pay well, if they were good, and he said he would be only too glad to send a thoroughbred entire horse.

10,551. In your opinion they would not use it; they would sooner go to a cheaper animal?—That has been the case up to now; the breed of horses has been very backward, especially carriage-horses. I do not see why we should not be able to breed here a carriage-horse worth 100*l.* as well as they do in Ireland.

10,552. The cheaper stallion is bought at a cheaper rate, and therefore can serve at a cheaper fee, whereas the sound animal you have to pay a large price for. I take it that is so?—That is my opinion; and another thing is that farmers differ so much in opinion, and perhaps one farmer would like an unsound horse better than a sound one.

10,553. Owing to his shape and make?—Yes, owing to his shape and make, or some fancy of his own, but of course if they were all sound that would improve the breed.

10,554. I suppose you mean sound in wind and limb?—Yes, sound in wind and limb—all round.

10,555. With no hereditary disease?—Yes, no hereditary disease—free from that.

10,556. Then in fact, in this part of the world, you think it would be profitable to breed horses?—No doubt it would. I think it is a country adapted for the breeding of horses. We could breed the best hunters in the world. That is my opinion.

10,557. Have they any trouble with mares in this country. Do you suggest anything as to the soundness of mares. You must have soundness on both sides?—Yes. No doubt that would be a good thing, but we must have a good entire horse.

10,558. Are there good mares in the district?—There are good mares in the district for breeding hunters and carriage-horses, if we get a thoroughbred entire horse here. There are some of the best.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,559. I understand that you express yourself as satisfied with the existing state of the law as between landlord and tenant?—I do, excepting security for unexhausted improvements.

10,560. Except with regard to the details that you have mentioned?—Yes, I am perfectly satisfied.

10,561. I think you said that your evidence was not given in connexion with any association?—I have no connexion whatever with any landlord nor association.

10,562. May I look at the document from which you read? (The witness handed his statement to Mr. Brynmor Jones.)—I was never asked to give my evidence.

10,563. I see that the questions are numbered here. They are not numbered on the syllabus that was issued to the Commissioners. I see also that there is an arrangement of the questions here which is very like that which has been issued by an association?—The only arrangement of the questions is this. I sent them to Mr. George Owen, of Carnarvon; I had to do that so as to give notice to the Commissioners, and it is word for word as I sent it to him. I had not seen Mr. George Owen before. Of course he marked the questions.

Lord Kenyon.

10,564. Do I understand from this, that you wrote to Mr. George Owen, saying that you wanted to give evidence?—Yes, I wrote saying that I wanted to give evidence, and I sent them in my evidence.

10,565. Did Mr. George Owen ask you to give evidence?—He never said a word to me about giving evidence, until I wrote him word, and sent my evidence in to him.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,566. But Mr. George Owen is the Secretary of the so-called Property Defence Association?—Yes, so he is; but what I say is this, that I sent my evidence in to Mr. George Owen, before he knew that I was going to give my evidence, and what I wrote to him is down there word for word, and I might say further than that, there is a clause there that Mr. Owen objected to—of course in a way, so far as his judgment went—but I said I would give my evidence word for word as I wrote it, and I have given it to you to-day, gentlemen.

10,567. Then you had some correspondence with Mr. George Owen?—No correspondence whatever; I wrote my evidence out and sent it.

10,568. Then you had some talk with him?—Afterwards; after I sent my evidence in.

10,569. And he wanted you to alter it in some respect?—He did not want me to alter it for one moment, but he said I was rather hard on landlords. Of course, he naturally said that, because he was Secretary of the Defence Association.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

10,570. Whether that was the case or not, he would naturally say that.—He would naturally say that, but, of course, I did not alter a word of it.

Lord Kenyon.

10,571. Did you know that you might have communicated straight with the Secretary of the Commission?—I did not. I did not know where in the world to send my evidence to at first.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,572. Can you point out where you are hard upon the landlords in your evidence?—Well, some people think it would be hard on their part to pay for unexhausted improvements and not to get the consent of the landlord and agent to make them.

10,573. But that is the law now?—No, we have to get the consent.

10,574. Under the Agricultural Holdings Act, there is no consent as to part 3 in the schedule?—There is a consent before any improvements can be claimed for.

10,575. It is not so as to part 3 in the schedule?—May I ask you what was part 3?

10,576. As to chalk-cutting, clay-burning, and so on?—That is not an improvement we generally do on land; I mean, improvements in draining, fencing, and manuring land.

10,577. Very well, take drainage. According to part 2, by simply giving notice that you are going to do drainage, you can secure a right to compensation?—But I am against giving him notice. A farmer ought to know what is best for him to do on his farm.

10,578. You mean you ought to be allowed to do the drainage without giving any notice to the landlord, and be able to secure compensation at the termination of the tenancy for that kind of improvement.

10,579. I agree. Now, with regard to this instance that you gave, in which the name of Mr. Lloyd George, I think, cropped up?—Yes.

10,580. What is the complaint there, and against whom is it? I do not quite follow that?—I have just given that as a proof that every tenant farmer does not get a copy of his agreement. That is the only thing that I want to prove by it, and that the tenants in some cases have to pay for a copy of the agreement, and pay for the copy of the agreement upon going out.

10,581. Then the complaint is against the landlord, and not against Messrs. Lloyd George and Company?—I am not making a complaint against the landlord or against Mr. Lloyd George, but I am just giving plain facts to prove that there are tenant farmers who cannot get a copy of their agreement.

10,582. Do you think they ought to get copies?—I think he ought to have a copy, and read it before he signs it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

10,583. Then you are complaining against Mr. Lloyd George as the solicitor of the landlord, that he did not get a copy?—I am not complaining of anybody, but I am only bringing that to prove that there is a case in which the tenant farmers do not get a copy of their agreement. It is not a complaint against anybody.

10,584. I do not want to quarrel about words, but I understood you vouched that as an instance where the landlord was doing something which he ought not to have done?—It is for you, the Commissioners, to judge whether it is right or not; I am not a judge upon that point. It is only for me to give you the evidence, the plain facts, and for you to draw your conclusions out of them.

10,585. I do not know, it seemed to me that most of your evidence consisted of conclusions and opinions?—I have no conclusion at all in that, it is the plain fact. I have got the tenant here to corroborate my evidence.

10,586. But what is the relevance of the fact, what has the fact to do with us unless you say there is a complaint made?—I see you are asking questions whether tenants did obtain a copy of their agreements. You were asking that question.

10,587. I do not know whether I did, I daresay it has been asked?—It has been asked, and I wanted to bring a case forward to prove that they do not always get a copy of their agreements. In some cases they have to pay for such, which I consider is very unfair for the tenant-farmer.

10,588. But in this case the tenant farmer had been a tenant for many years, had he not?—He has been for six years, but, of course, he had notice to quit, and then he wanted this agreement. It was natural he should want his agreement.

10,589. Quite so. Does he say that he had had no agreement given to him at the commencement of the tenancy?—He is here himself, you can ask him any question you wish.

10,590. But you have vouched him. It will not be necessary to call him if there is no challenge?—He had not got this agreement, he did not know in the world what it was, nor even the clause the agreement contained.

10,591. But Messrs. Lloyd George and Co. were simply solicitors acting for the landlord?—I have nothing at all to do with Messrs. Lloyd George and Co. I do not know what they have done.

10,592. But you brought their names in?—Pardon me, I am bringing the facts; I could not bring the facts without the names.

10,593. Quite so; but I am asking who the gentlemen are. Are they the landlords, do you say?—I do not know what they were, they are solicitors at Criccieth, that is all I can say, and John Prichard is the landlord, according to that agreement.

10,594. But Mr. Lloyd George is a Member of Parliament, is he not?—Yes, I think he is.

10,595. Was not that the reason why you brought his name in?—Certainly not. I have no objection for him to be a Member of Parliament, if he is a member for his lifetime, and even if I had, I would not bring it forward in evidence before the Commissioners.

10,596. I should like you to explain another—I do not know whether you call it "fact" or "opinion"—that there is intimidation by ministers of religion, I think you said?—I never said anything of the sort. What I said was this, that many farmers would come forward to give their evidence—it has been said several times that many would come forward to give their evidence—if it had not been for being afraid of their landlords, and I said on the other side, that many farmers would come forward to give very straightforward evidence if it had not been for their being afraid of losing some promotion in the different chapels and churches.

10,597. Upon whom in the Calvinistic Methodist body does that promotion depend?—It depends on the deacons and ministers. Of course, if there is a good minister he can lead his congregation—he can lead his church.

10,598. Quite so. Why should not a good man lead?—I am quite willing for him to lead.

10,599. I should like to bring this matter out a little more, Mr. Humphreys. Do you mean to say that people are afraid of their ministers in the Calvinistic Methodist body?—What I mean to say is this. It has been given out several times that tenant farmers are afraid to come forward to give their evidence on account of their landlords. Never was a single case brought in point to prove it, and I am not going to bring a case to prove what I say, but I maintain that they are as much afraid of one as the other.

10,600. How can that be? Fear of an individual must depend upon the power which the individual is able to exercise?—I maintain that the preachers have a power. They are the power in Wales to-day, and I do not regret it; I do not find any fault with them for being so.

10,601. Oh, you do not find any fault with it?—Certainly not—not for being the power in Wales, if they exercise that power in the right direction; I think they ought to be in power.

10,602. Just observe: a landlord can give a notice to quit and turn a tenant out of a farm upon which his people may have been for generations?—Well, I am giving evidence for my ——

10,603. Can a minister of religion do that, as such?—Well, he can do a lot, of course. Of course, he is not landlord; if he happened to be a landlord he would do that in many cases.

10,604. It is a prophecy; we cannot deal with that?—I might say it is a prophecy of my neighbourhood, so far as my opinion is concerned.

10,605. You are not giving prophecies, but facts?—Well, the fact is this: not a single farmer has given notice to quit in my district since I have been farming.

10,606. So be it. Will you answer my question? What can a minister do to enforce the fear that you say the members of this congregation stand in?—He can do this, he can stop a man from voting in the way of being made an officer in his church and chapel, and so on.

10,607. Is it not the case that that depends on the general voice of the congregation?—Yes, and the general voice of the congregation is confined to the opinion of the leader, if he is a proper man, so he has the power in his own hands.

10,608. Then it follows that at any rate the great majority of the tenant farmers do not share your view or the view of those people who are so much afraid of coming forward?—I do not know, but I know this. My landlord does not know that I am coming forward, and even if I offend him by coming forward I would have come just the very same. If he gave me notice to quit, if I knew that he would, I would have come

10,609. Yes, but you have given the landlord's agent notice of the sort of evidence you were prepared to give?—I have not seen my landlord's agent for six months.

10,610. Mr. George Owen I was referring to?—I do not know what George Owen has done, but I have done nothing.

10,611. Will you kindly give me a single instance of any attempt on the part of a minister to degrade or to retard the condition in the congregation of any member of it?—I am not going to give any instance, because you did not think it was right on my part to give an instance of a landlord or solicitor refusing.

10,612. Forgive me; I never said anything of the sort; I only asked you whether you were making any complaints, I never said anything of the sort. I do not object to your giving any instances. Can you give me any instance of intimidation or any fact to justify your allegation that people are afraid of ministers of religion?—I am not going to give you any instance at all. I am not going to make personal remarks.

10,613. Very well. Then we are to be content with your expression of opinion. You are the first witness so far as I know who has ever said so?—Yes.

10,614. You give no evidence in support of your assertion?—Nothing more than what I have said.

10,615. Only an expression of your opinion?—Of my opinion, yes.

10,616. Now there was one other remark in your evidence I did not quite follow. You said if a Land Court were established there would be no chance of an abatement of rent. What did you mean by that?—I mean in bad times. Suppose the rent was fixed by the Land Court say at 1*l.* an acre or any other sum; bad times might come, very bad times, when that farm would be a loss altogether; there would be no chance of appealing to the landlord, the landlord would do nothing but what the Land Court directed; the landlord himself would be relieved of all responsibility.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

10,617. You say "would do this" and "would do that," that is again an expression of opinion, and an expression of opinion as to the future. What I mean is this. Supposing the Land Court instead of fixing the rent for a period of years were to fix the rent upon application at any time having regard to the value of the produce, would you then assert that there was no chance of obtaining an abatement from the Land Court?—I do not say but there would be a chance of abatement, but I maintain this, that it would destroy all the good feeling between the landlord and the tenant. And more than that, I am of opinion that the landlord has a perfect right to let his farm as dear as he possibly can, provided he gives security for unexhausted improvements. I think the value of land, like the value of anything else, is what it will fetch in the market. That is my opinion about land.

10,618. You are a landowner, are you not, yourself?—No I am not, I am sorry to say.

10,619. I thought you said you had some land?—Well, I have only about seven or eight acres, so I am not worth being called a landowner.

10,620. Do you let that?—I let that, yes.

10,621. You have no fault to find with your agreement, have you?—No, I have no fault to find.

10,622. I see that the effect of this agreement is to give you all the rights under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. There is no contracting out of the Act?—There is no contracting out of the Act, no.

10,623. Suppose a writ of execution in the County Court were issued against you, and you were turned out. Under this agreement the landlord would be entitled to re-enter the premises and your tenancy would thereupon shortly cease?—Yes. Well I would much prefer to fall into——

10,624. Wait a moment. That is as I read this agreement; you will tell me if I am wrong. Then you would if you were turned out by your landlord claim under the Agricultural Holdings Act, would you not?—I do not quite follow the question.

10,625. The tenancy may be determined under this agreement either by notice to quit on either side, or it may be determined upon certain other conditions. What I have put to you is one—the case of a warrant of execution issued from the County Court against you, and the bailiff seizing your goods. Thereupon this agreement says the tenancy shall wholly cease. Do you follow that?—I do.

10,626. Would you think it is fair or not for you to get compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, if the tenancy ends like that?—I do consider that it is fair to get compensation.

10,627. You consider it fair to get compensation, but inasmuch as the Act says that a notice must be given two months before the determination of the tenancy, how would you get your compensation?—Well, that Act could be altered. That Act is not perfection in itself, you know.

10,628. I agree with you, but I thought you were satisfied. You told me that you were satisfied with the existing state of the law?—I am. I am perfectly satisfied with my agreement. As I said, in case I fail, or something of that sort, I would rather go to my landlord. I would rather fall into his hands.

10,629. You can read the Act for yourself. I do not know whether the case has ever arisen, but as I read the Act you would lose all claim to compensation, because you had not given two months' notice?—I would not get any compensation as it is, not a penny.

10,630. That is an incident in the agreement which you consider perfectly fair?—Yes. According to my agreement I could not claim any compensation. I have done as much improvement on my farm as any farmer in Carnarvonshire almost according to the size of the farm, but I could not claim a penny of compensation. Therefore I am quite willing to go on under my agreement. I farm my farm on that agreement.

10,631. Though it is a disadvantageous agreement under those circumstances, you are quite satisfied with it?—What I feel is this. We ought to get compensation for unexhausted improvements. That is the only security that I as a tenant farmer want.

10,632. If you have a writ of execution for 5*l.* issued against you the landlord might enter then and put an end to the tenancy?—I have no security.

10,633. And yet you are satisfied?—Certainly I am, because I took the farm to be satisfied with that agreement.

10,634. You are satisfied because you entered into the contract with your eyes open?—I am satisfied because I have a good landlord, but that is not the case with everybody.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,635. How are the stone walls generally built in this neighbourhood, by the landlord or by the tenant?—They are generally built by the tenant, except by the mountains; sometimes there they are long walls, and they are built by the landlords. In my district they are all built by the tenants.

10,636. Do you consider that a permanent improvement or not?—Well, it is a permanent improvement if the walls are kept up.

10,637. Do you consider a tenant ought to give notice to his landlord when he goes on building a wall?—I do not. I think he ought to know what time and where to build a wall.

10,638. I think you said you were in favour of him having compensation for permanent improvements?—I am in favour of him having compensation for every improvement that he has done on the farm to increase the value of the farm.

10,639. Is it not an improvement which will increase the value of the farm to have a good fence around it?—It is; but as I said before I am in favour of getting consent to make up walls.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

10,640. When arable land is laid down to pasture does the landlord give the seed for so doing?—No, not in my district.

10,641. And he does not give any compensation to a tenant when he is left?—Yes, the incoming tenant has to pay for the seeds, and sowing and harrowing it.

10,642. What is the reason why many tenant farmers have purchased their farms lately in this neighbourhood?—Because the landlords sold their farms on account of this agitation. That is my own opinion, of course. They did not take much interest in the land. Complaints were made about the landlords, and then they sold, and of course the tenants had to buy.

10,643. What agitation do you refer to?—The times were bad, and the tenant farmers grumbling, people advising them to go on against the landlords. There has been a lot of that, no doubt, lately.

10,644. You say those who purchase their farms are not so well off. Is it not rather strange that they should purchase them in spite of that?—Well, they would purchase them rather than lose them. A Welshman will stick to his home as long as he possibly can.

10,645. You keep a dairy farm, do you not?—No, I do not. I only keep a few cows for the yearling calves.

10,646. You live near Criccieth?—Close to Criccieth, within a mile and a half of Criccieth.

10,647. Do you not make any butter on your farm?—We do not make any to sell, only just enough to keep us going. We rear a lot of calves.

10,648. Do you think rearing calves pays better than making butter?—It pays me better. I do not know what it would other farmers.

10,649. Do you sell your calves fat?—We make them fat when they are about two years old—from 18 to 24 months old.

10,650. And do you feed your cattle also?—We feed them also, but we never sell any stock. I do not say never, but very seldom.

10,651. What is the promotion you spoke of, that members of the congregation might get?—They could get some important office in connexion with the church or chapel.

10,652. Are they paid for it?—I could not tell you whether they are paid, but there are plenty that are proud of some office, whether they are paid or not.

10,653. Are you in office?—No, I am not. My ambition is not quite in that direction.

10,654. You are living near Criccieth, and I find there is a great demand for fowls, eggs, butter, and that sort of thing. Does your landlord provide you with proper poultry houses, and so on?—Yes, we have very good buildings, splendid buildings, plenty of them. Mr. Lloyd George has got good buildings all over his estate in this part. The buildings were put up before I took the farm.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,655. You say that your farm would let for a higher rent than you pay, and the same with other farms in the neighbourhood?—Yes, especially when they are pretty good land.

10,656. Then you depend to a great extent on the liberality of your landlord?—I do not depend on him at all, except that I depend on him as a landlord in this way: he could give me notice to quit, and I depend that he will not do that. I never asked him for any abatement in my life, nor for any favour of any kind.

10,657. But if the land was let at competition value, and you get it under that value, you are dependent to a certain extent on his liberality?—Certainly, it is to a certain extent, because I know he could get more rent for the farm.

10,658. What is the consequence of that on you as a farmer, and also on the other farmers, as far as their indepence is concerned?—I do not quite follow the question.

10,659. What is the consequence of that on the farmers in general, as far as their independence is concerned?—My opinion is that the best tenant farmers, all through Wales, I mean the tenants of the best landlords, the large landowners in Wales, never like to part with their landlords.

10,660. You do not seem to follow my question?—I do not perhaps see what you mean.

10,661. You say you are dependent to a certain extent on the liberality of your landlord, inasmuch as you have the land under competition value. You admit that, do you not?—I admit that he could let the farm for more money. That is all I do admit.

10,662. What I want to get at is the effect of that on your independence. Do you feel as independent as if you had the land at its full value?—I feel as independent as can be, but I would feel more so if I got security for unexhausted improvements, then I would not care when I left.

10,663. But when you have the land under its value, do not you feel the necessity of conforming to the whims of your landlord, and not provoking his anger, for fear of being turned out?—Certainly not. I like to get a horse or cow under its value, or anything. I would not grumble at getting anything cheap.

10,664. I must say I cannot understand your process of reasoning. Now you say you would like to put a tariff on foreign produce?—I did not say I would like to do it, but I say that other countries put tariffs on our produce that we send over there, I think that I did not say that I wished to see a tariff put on foreign produce.

10,665. You do not make a definite statement then advocating a duty on foreign produce?—Quite the reverse. I advocate that other countries should be thrown open for us to send our goods there. Let us be on the same level with them.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,666. I understand that you consider that the law ought to be altered, so as to ensure, as far as possible, complete security for improvements?—Yes.

10,667. But you except buildings unless the consent of the landlord is previously obtained?—Yes, except all old buildings.

10,668. I wanted to ask you a few questions about haulage. We have had several instances of alleged grievances. It has been said that on the determination of a tenancy the value of the haulage that a man has done on his farm is lost. I will put a case. Supposing by agreement with the landlord, the landlord had rebuilt your farm buildings, and had done the whole of the buildings, but you finding the haulage. If you continued in that farm say for a dozen years after, there might be no injustice in your not being paid for the haulage. Do you follow me?—Yes.

10,669. But in case from any reason the tenancy is determined, say the year after, you would say that there was a hardship in that haulage not being returned to the tenant, would you not?—Yes.

10,670. Then would not you include in the compensation for improvements some compensation for haulage which had not been used sufficiently long by the tenant?—It is paid already, according to the custom of the country, if a tenant leaves in a short time after the buildings are put up. I went to my present farm in about three or four years after the buildings were put up, and I had to pay, according to the valuation to the outgoing tenant for the haulage towards that building. See 10,803–5

10,671. That is not in the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Not in the Act nor in the agreement.

Lord Kenyon.

10,672. The custom of the country you mean?—The custom of the country.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,673. But is that custom of the country sufficiently definite? Would you not rather have it in the Act of Parliament?—Indeed I could not give you my opinion on that point, but here we find no difficulty in settling that matter.

10,674. Because you have the custom of the country?—Yes we have the custom.

10,675. We have been told that in other places there is no such custom?—When a farmer puts up the buildings he does not think of leaving the place in a very short time, as a rule.

10,676. No, but still he may, either from the act of his landlord, or from his own death, be put in the position of having to forfeit the haulage, unless there is some legal right for him to claim it amongst the improvements. Would you not include that as one of the improvements which ought to be covered by the Act?—I would rather hesitate before answering that question. I would rather leave it to the custom of the country, as it is now.

10,677. I want to put to you one or two questions in regard to the Land Court. The Land Court, you say, would be too expensive, in the first place. Supposing a man wanted to have his rent reduced owing to bad seasons, it would be a too expensive thing, you say, for him to go to the Land Court?—Yes.

10,678. I suppose you would say the same thing if it were put to arbitration, that any form of arbitration that could be used in such a case would be too cumbrous and too expensive?—Yes, I do not think myself, of course it is only my opinion, that a tenant would get any more of his rights by having anyone to interfere between himself and his landlord. I think he ought to be able to manage his own affairs, as he does with every other thing, independent of any outsider.

10,679. Have you ever considered whether, short of a court, or even if there was a court, before you had to take advantage of the court, something in the nature of a public expert, who might be called in as a sort of umpire to advise without actually settling the question—something of that kind, some inexpensive process, might sometimes prevent the necessity of going into court, or having any dispute with the landlord?—I would rather fight my own battle with the landlord than let anybody else do it for me, much.

10,680. Yes, but you are an independent man?—No, I am not; I am as poor as any farmer that will come before you.

10,681. But we are told that a great many farmers cannot approach their landlords with quite the same freedom that, judging by your evidence, I should conclude that you would?—It is the fault of the tenant farmers themselves.

10,682. Whether it be their fault or not, if it be a fact, do you not think it would be possible that the bringing in of some third person, who would be independent, and have a public position, but who should simply be an adviser, or mediator, might do no harm, and might help matters?—I should be very sorry to see any third person coming between me and my landlord.

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,683. You tell us you think the tenants ought to have rather further security than they have now?—Yes.

10,684. It ought to be extended?—Not to require the consent of the landlord or his agent.

10,685. I think I followed you to that extent. With regard to the tenants becoming owners in case of a sale of the farm, do you think that would be desirable?—I do not quite follow you.

10,686. I will put it in this way. I think you have already told us that there are not many freeholders?—Not very many. There are more now than there were about 10 years ago.

10,687. They have recently bought?—They have recently bought.

10,688. And with borrowed money?—Of course many of them would buy with borrowed money, no doubt.

10,689. Can you tell me at what price money could be borrowed; at what rate of interest?—You could not get it under 4 per cent.

10,690. We have had evidence that it was obtained at 3 per cent., but probably that is from some private source. If it could be obtained at 3 per cent., say from Government sources, or from any other sources, do you think it would be advantageous?—I do not think so for a moment, according to the prices farms were making at the last sales.

10,691. Not even at 3 per cent.?—Not even at 3 per cent., and when they had to borrow at 4 per cent. it was worse still.

10,692. Is there any way in which you could suggest that fixity of tenure would be obtainable?—No other way that I think of. I would not want anything personally myself, more than full security for unexhausted improvements, in the event that my landlord should give me notice to quit. I should consider myself fully secured as a tenant farmer after getting that.

10,693. You would consider yourself to be fully secured if you got more right to compensation?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,694. You say that you think that a tenant should not obtain compensation for unexhausted improvements in case he gave notice to quit to the landlord, I think?—Yes, I do. If the tenant leaves to better himself, or for some other reason, I do not think he ought to claim. A tenant as a rule, if he means to leave, will not make much improvement on his farm.

10,695. We will take your case, for instance. You are farming Aberkin—I believe that is the name of your place?—Yes.

10,696. Suppose that you, during the last year of the tenancy, had expended a good sum either in drainage or for some other purpose, and you died, and your family were not able to keep on, they would have to leave in the following year. Do you not consider that it would be a hardship that the money you had expended, and which had not been exhausted, should not return to your family?—I cannot see why my family should leave. They should carry the farm on, and if the landlord gave them notice to quit, they could claim compensation.

10,697. Yes, but owing to some peculiar circumstances, perhaps, they would not be able to keep on?—I think that would be tying down the landlords too much.

10,698. Suppose you had only some young children who would not be able to keep on, do not you think it would be a hardship in a case of that sort?—I do not think it would. I think it would be harder on the landlords if they were bound to give compensation to every tenant who wished to leave his farm. Many a fellow would go and trade by making a few improvements and then leave.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

10,699. But the circumstances in some cases might be peculiar?—Well, of course, there are some peculiar circumstances, as you say. I quite admit that, but I myself, whatever, would be perfectly satisfied with full security for all unexhausted improvements in the case of raising my rent or giving me notice to quit.

10,700. There is one other question. You say that in the case of buildings, according to the custom of the country, you get compensation for unexhausted improvements?—For haulage.

10,701. Yes, for haulage. How is that sum assessed?—Well, it is assessed by the valuers, as a rule. The incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant agree together sometimes, and at other times it is valued by two different men. That is, of course, if the tenant leaves in a short time after the building is put up, otherwise if he stays in the farm for 15 or 20 years there is no compensation paid.

10,702. Suppose they fail to agree, what course is taken then?—They take the same course as they do in valuing the crops. They have a referee, and appoint him before they commence to value, and then his decision will be final.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,703. Might I ask how long your family has been on this same farm?—Seven years.

10,704. Only seven years?—Only seven years.

10,705. Do you know whether the family that had been there before had been on the farm for any length of time, many generations, for instance?—I could not tell you. Well, they had been on it for a good many years.

10,706. Can you recollect, or do you know, with regard to this farm or any other, whether there was a time when it was let on lease for three lives? Has it always been let on a year to year tenancy?—Always, as far as I know.

10,707. And in this neighbourhood you have no recollection or no tradition that in old times there was anything but that?—I have not. There might be without my knowlege, but I do not know of any.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,708. Does the custom of the country apply to anything besides buildings? What is the custom of the country with regard to crops between the incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant?—As far as the custom of the country is carried out, the incoming tenant has to buy all the dead stock, and all the crops left on the farm, manure, seeds, and everything like that, and those are valued by four men, two on each side; an umpire is named, and fixed on, before they start the valuation, and if they fail to agree, then they leave it to the umpire.

10,709. What do you mean by crops, is it wheat?—Corn, oats, barley, potatoes, roots.

10,710. There is permission, is there not, for the incoming tenant to go on the land to plough—oats and so on, in February?—Yes, that is when the tenancy commences on the 25th March.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

10,711. Do not the tenancies generally commence on the 25th March?—Not in every case.

10,712. Do they not?—No, they did not, and as a rule even when they do commence on the 25th of March, the outgoing tenant will make some arrangement with the incoming tenant to come in earlier, and pay him some compensation for doing so. They generally agree like that.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,713. Take the case of a tenant and a landlord failing to agree about the rent. They may be on the very best of terms (I have a case in my mind just now) on the same side of politics and everything else, but the landlord thinks that his farm is let reasonably, and the tenant thinkd the farm is let at too high a rent. How wouls you suggest to settle that question?—I think the tenant ought to take care, when he is taking the farm, not to promise too much rent for it.

10,714. Then the tenant must go and leave the farm, if he thinks the landlord is asking too much for it?—I think if he makes a bad bargain he ought to be responsible for it, as he is for anything else.

Chairman.

10,715. There are some questions put in. Here is a question by Mr. Cledwyn Owen, "What in your opinion, is the chief reason why "the farmers obtain the service of inferior "horses for mares? Is it chiefly on account of "the difference in the fee; or is it from a "dislike to offend the owner of the inferior "horse, who generally is his neighbour's?"—It is chiefly on account of the difference in the fees. That is my opinion.

Lord Kenyon.

10,716. May I ask one question about that fee? What should you consider would be the fee a farmer would pay? What is the highest that he would pay?—It depends on the value of the horse. I maintain that there are some horses that it would be worth the farmer's while to pay a five guinea fee for.

10,717. Do you think that he would under any circumstances pay five guineas?—Well, I do not know. That is a very hard question to answer.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,718. I have a question to put on that very point. Do you consider that these stone walls that you have on your farm are advantageous for the breeding of thoroughbred horses?—Well, we have plenty of farms without any stone walls, and I cannot see any objection in stone walls for breeding hunters and carriage-horses.

10,719. Do you not think they are more liable to accidents?—No, I do not think they are for a moment, if the walls are high enough.

Chairman.

10,720. Then there is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne. "Have you not often been selected to judge at agricultural shows?"—I have.

10,721. Then there is a question by Mr. William George. "Are you aware that in Ireland "there have been reductions on fair (statutory) "rents?"—I am aware of that, my Lord, and I am aware of something further, if I may be allowed to tell it.

10,722. Please answer the question; that is all you have to do. Then there is a question by Mr. Vincent. "What fees do the farmers "have to pay for the horses now available?" —Two guineas is the highest fee I know of.

Lord Kenyon.

10,723. Is that for a horse sent out by the landlord?—That is a cart horse.

Chairman.

10,724. Then a question by Mr. William George. "Have you had security for the im- "provements you have effected?"—I never asked for any security.

10,725. Then the answer is no. Then, "Do "you argue with Mr. Walter Jones that a "farmer who spends money on improving a "farm without previous security is a fool?"— I do not. I believe that a farmer is a fool if he does not spend money on his farm, if he means to live on it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM GEORGE called and examined.

Chairman.

10,726. Will you kindly tell us what profession you belong to?—I am a solicitor.

10,727. Of what firm?—Lloyd George and George.

10,728. And where do they practice?—At Criccieth, Pwllheli, and Port Madoc.

old gentleman of 85 or 86 has. He bought it with his own savings and cultivated it like a garden. After letting it to Mr. William Dwyfor Jones, he did not see the place for some years; but when he went there he found the place, according to his opinion—and he is a farmer—in a disgraceful state, the drains choked up, and very many other defects which he noticed. He was very angry with the tenant at the time, and spoke to him about it. Knowing how very much the old gentleman prized this farm, I thought he might be exaggerating these facts, and so I advised that he should get a practical farmer and valuer—a gentleman who gave evidence before the Commission on Saturday on behalf of the tenants, Mr. Henry Roberts—to look at the farm and report on it, and his report was that the place was very badly farmed, and he gave his reasons for saying so. We wrote to Mr. William Dwyfor Jones directing to come over and see this report, and go over it with us, but he did not come.

10,730. I am sorry to interrupt you, but this does not seem to me to have much to do with us. The allegation was, that this farmer under Mr. Prichard never received an agreement when he went into the occupation. Is that so?—There are two allegations.

10,731. Wait a minute. Let us have one first. Is it a fact, or is it not, what the last witness stated, that this tenant farmer went on to Mr. Prichard's estate and remained as tenant without any agreement?—No, that is not the fact.

10,732. Had he an agreement?—There was an agreement.

10,733. Had he an agreement? The last witness says he had not a copy of the agreement. Had he a copy of the agreement or not?—He had it as soon as he applied for it.

10,734. While he was this landlord's tenant had he an agreement as soon as he went into the farm?—He had it prepared.

10,735. Yes or no. Had he an agreement when he went into the farm?—Yes, he had it prepared.

Chairman—continued.

10,736. Had he a copy of his agreement in his possession?—No.

10,737. That is all I want to know?—No, for the reason——

10,738. I do not want the reason. Did he come for it or not?—He did not take a copy with him.

Lord Kenyon.

10,739. Did he ever sign an agreement?—He signed it in draft, that is all, and he never came for it again.

Chairman.

10,740. He never had his agreement as I understand?—No.

10,741. When he had notice to quit two years afterwards, he wrote for this agreement, did he not?—Yes.

10,742. And he was charged two guineas for it by your firm?—Yes, they prepared it.

10,743. Is it the custom of the country ordinarily when a tenant goes into occupation that he is charged two guineas before he gets his agreement?—It is the fact that solicitors do not prepare agreements without being paid for them; and in this case, this being the only farm, he was asked to pay that fee.

10,744. I only want to know; is it the custom of the country for a tenant to go to a firm of solicitors and to pay two guineas before he gets his agreement?—Not on large estates, where perhaps there are 200 agreements, and they are all copies of the original.

10,745. Is it the ordinary custom on small estates?—Yes.

10,746. It is the ordinary custom of the country on a small estate that a tenant farmer has to pay a firm of solicitors two guineas before he gets a copy of the agreement?—No, he has to pay for the preparation of the agreement. It is the law, as I understand it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

It is the law.

Chairman.

That the tenant has to pay two guineas?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,747. Not necessarily two guineas; but if the landlord and tenant employ a solicitor to act for both of them, it is usual to pay him for the agreement?—Yes, they are not the scale charges. The scale charges are more than that.

Chairman.

10,748. I only want to know: is it the custom of the country for a tenant, before he gets a copy of his agreement, to pay a firm of solicitors two guineas?—Yes. The scale charges may be more than that.

10,749. We do not want that. I do not think we need go into that?—I understood Mr. Humphreys to make some complaint against my firm as to that.

10,750. I think there must be some misapprehension on your mind. Mr. Humphreys expressly said he did not make any complaint against your firm whatever?—Then why did he bring in our name?

10,751. That is another thing. All we want to know is, you acted as solicitor only?—Yes.

10,752. And that you made the usual charges?—Yes. There was a complaint of bad farming against the tenant which we offered, but he refused to refer to arbitration.

10,753. We need not go into that?—The matter was mentioned.

Re-examined, 11,824.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. R. PUGHE JONES called and examined.

Chairman.

10,754. Will you kindly tell us where you live?—Ynysgain, in the parish of Criccieth.

10,755. You wish to give some evidence?—Yes.

10,756. Then will you kindly do so?—Yes, I will. I may mention that for some years I practised as a conveyancing counsel, and enjoyed a considerable practice, the greater part of which, however, came to me as counsel to some of the large brewers and the principal distillers, Nicholson and others. For some nine years I had the general direction of the Madryn estates belonging to the late Sir Love Jones Parry.

Chairman—continued.

10,757. What do the estates consist of; how many acres?—I think it would probably be about 10,000 or 13,000 acres, including the mountain.

10,758. What is the gross rental?—The gross rental before the sale in 1886 was 8,200*l.* a year, or thereabouts, and the gross rental now, after the sale, is 4,700*l.*, or thereabouts, so there was sold the difference. I was counsel to the mortgagees of this estate, who in 1883 advanced on parts thereof a sum of 60,000*l.* at 3½ per cent. per annum. I am now a trustee of the estate under the will of the late Sir Love Jones Parry, but Mrs. Jones Parry, the sister of the testator, as tenant for life, has under the provisions of the Settled Land Acts the control and direction of the estate, though, as a fact, she can derive no income therefrom during the life of the testator's widow, who is 25 years her junior, and who has to be paid out of the rents a jointure of 2,000*l.* a year, the tenant for life herself taking thereout under her mother's will two annuities of 200*l.* each, and there remain charges of 40,000*l.* and 2,500*l.* by way of mortgage, and having precedence as to the jointure. The sum realised by the sale was 109,000*l.*, more or less, and I had the management of the sale and the general direction of the sale. There were three valuers, and the sale was carried on in this room for four days, and the greater part of it was sold here at the public auction, the rest being sold privately either then, after the auction in the evening, or on subsequent days.

10,759. May I ask, was any of the property bought by the tenant farmers themselves ?—Yes ; I have a list here of the purchasers, and more than one-half the lots were bought by the tenants.

10,760. More than one-half of the whole estate ?—More than one-half : I think something like five-eighths were bought by the tenants themselves. The lots varied. The highest lot was one which was bought for 8,600*l.*, which was bought by a tenant farmer, but not by a tenant farmer of this estate, by another tenant farmer, who also bought two other lots, or three other lots, the total purchase moneys of which came to 4,400*l.* ; so this tenant farmer had actually bought 13,000*l.* worth of land. He was a man who started without anything, and I think when he died the other day, he was worth something over 39,000*l.* I have a small property of my own, partly in this county, but as to the greater part, in the county of Merioneth.

10,761. Are you going to tell us about that estate ?—I am going to tell you about that estate, and generally as to my knowledge.

10,762. But you will confine yourself to Madryn now ?—Yes ; to Madryn now. In the year 1886, I had the sole direction and responsibilities of a sale. I may as well state this, because this was the first large sale, and it was a sale that was brought about by the talk (because it was not much more at that time) about a Welsh Land Bill.

10,763. Will you kindly give us the details of the property ?—Yes. In the year 1886, I had the sole direction and responsibilities of a sale of the outlying portions of the Madryn estate, comprising an acreage of 3,976, and a gross rental of 3,508*l.*, but excluding obligations as to repairs, some 130*l.* was payable thereout in respect of rates, &c., on small tenements, and at the time, the farm tenants were receiving abatements of 10 per cent. on their rents. So the actual rent received was not 3,500*l.*, but something like about 3,200*l.* The properties offered were situated as to some three or four lots in the parish of Llanllyfni, whilst the remaining 202 lots were in the parishes of Llanarmon, Llangybi, Llanystumdwy, and in some eleven different parishes in Lleyn, so it covered a large area ; it was a sale of the outlying portions of the estate. All the lots except two were sold either at the date of the sale in the sale room or shortly afterwards, one unsold lot being subject to a lease, with an unexpired term of 63 years. In some instances the purchases were of consolidated lots. The extent of the lots and their respective values varied greatly. Then comes what I have already mentioned—that the largest farm sold, having an acreage of 296, realised 8,600*l.*, and was purchased by a tenant farmer, who also purchased other three lots for 4,400*l.* Comparatively, only a few lots were bought by county gentlemen, the only purchasers being Mr. Owen Evans, 10,870*l.*, Mr. Lloyd Edwards, 8,600*l.*, and Mr. Assheton Smith, 2,560*l.* ; and the lots they purchased adjoined portions of their own estates. More than one-half of the lots were purchased by the tenants thereof, and save in one or two instances have not changed hands since the sale. The condition or state as to repairs of the houses and buildings upon the farms or tenements sold did not differ appreciably from those now forming parts of the Madryn estate. That is all I have to say about the sale.

Then as to "ownership." No part of the Madryn estate or of my own is situated in any manor or held otherwise than by a fee simple tenure. When an estate is known to be subject to heavy incumbrances the tenants, naturally fearing a sale, are indisposed to lay out moneys of their own even upon necessary improvements. But I do not think that the circumstances of such a charge is felt to be an objection to the taking of a farm or to the rent to be paid therefor, or even to the cultivation as practised in this county. It may induce a greater remissness than is general as to opening ditches, &c. and maintaining the lands by the application of suitable measures and a proper course of cultivation in good heart ; in fact to a taking thereof for the purpose of getting out of it what it can return with the least possible application of labour and money. All the enclosures of which I have any knowledge were effected under Acts of Parliament and more than 60 years ago, and were of high lands in a hilly district over which only sheep were depastured, or of sundry lands adjoining a beach. I have never heard of any allotments having been made for the labouring poor. The cottages upon an allotment passed with the allotment to the uses under which was held the tenement to which it was assigned. I am stating this from my knowledge of the titles of certain estates in this and the adjoining county. I do not know of any unenclosed land adaptable for more profitable use than as a sheep run attached to the adjacent farms. The right of pasturing is vested in the beneficial owner of the farms to which such rights are attached, and speaking generally, subject to no payments, but limited as to the number of sheep to a stated number or to such number as the tenement can maintain during the winter. My father reckoned the value of such a right to a tenant at 1*s.* 6*d.* per head, but the mountain sheep sold then for from 6*s.* to 8*s.* The value must depend upon the feeding which the pasturage produces. What is taken to be its value is added to the rent of the farm. Such farms sell for high prices. I have sold some of my own at 40 years' purchase and more, and this year Sir Richard Bulkeley, Bart., has sold such farms at the same high price. At Sir Richard Bulkeley's sale, as appeared from the report, the mountain farms realised over 40 years' purchase —42 I think. Their rents are not appreciably higher than they were 50 years back, and even during these bad seasons their sheep realise more than as much again as they did 40 years ago, and in some years the profits of such tenantry have been very considerable. Parts of my lands here I let as accommodation land for sheep and cattle, and the takers pay me from 4*l.* 5*s.* to 5*l.* an acre therefor, nor was it necessary for me this year to have an auction, the takers of last year being anxious to retain their fields at last year's rents. I may say that I kept one field last year at the same rent to myself as I had let it the year before, and after paying that rent I had a balance of 10*l.* of profit upon it. It is only a field of three acres or three acres and a quarter, though I was putting against myself, before taking profits, a rent of 4*l.* 10*s.* per acre on the field—keeping sheep.

Sir John Llewelyn.

It is exceptional.

Witness.

I pay all rates and taxes, the expense of ditching, wiring, and walling, and the land is also well dressed with what has been gotten from the ditches mixed with lime. Then as to management: To a tenant a wealthy resident owner is the ideal landlord. The estate need not necessarily be a large estate. Its rental may be under two thousand a year or may only reach half that amount. But the landlord of the tenant's selection is one with a good margin of income over expenditure, one who, working his own home farm, has some practical knowledge and experience of farming, and who is his own overlooker or head agent, and, without any intrusive intermeddling, takes a personal interest in all that concerns the well-being of his tenantry. Under such a landlord a tenant of even an outlying or distant farm can have every confidence, and the confidence reposed in the management of the great estates of Glyn, Penrhyn Castle, and Vaynol is not less absolute or justified. I am speaking from knowledge, because I know this part of the country very well indeed, and I am speaking of what is common knowledge and matter of common talk as between myself and the tenants of those estates.

Lord Kenyon.

10,764. Glynllifon?—Yes, Glynllifon. The confidence is given to the principles and practice which under varying circumstances and conditions, as well in good as also in bad years, have guided the management and which from their application through a series of years have assumed the proportions of rules and principles. I may say that I have had no communication with the landlords. I am not a member of the Landlords' Association, nor have I had any communication with Mr. George Owen; in fact, I have written letters to the newspapers very much objecting to much that they have done. I am giving my evidence as far as my own knowledge goes. I was asked by the Liberal Association to send a contribution to assist them in getting evidence, but I did not reply to the letter. No doubt the farmsteads and outbuildings in the immediate neighbourhood of the mansion obtain a more personal attention from the landlord. But when the landlord is well-to-do and takes a personal pride in the well-housing and well-doing of his tenantry, and whether a large or a small landlord and whether his estate or his tenements lie together or are scattered, the tenants will not have any reasonable grounds of complaint. As to the Madryn estate an expenditure of some 2,500*l.* would put all the farmsteads and outbuildings into a reasonable state of repair. During the ownership of the late Sir Love Jones-Parry, Bart., he and his mother expended sums which in the total could not have fallen short of 45,000*l.* in relation to such farmsteads and outbuildings. But the persons employed in the works, though paid the current wages, gave but half a day's work for their pay, and owing to the neglect of agents or of those who should have superintended the works being executed, it cannot be said that the value of the work done exceeded 10,000*l.*, if indeed 7,000*l.* Had a proper surveyor been employed and the works let out for tender, some such sum would have been the cost thereof. And this remark applies to other estates where the buildings or reparations were executed by the estate masons, carpenters, and other workmen, though probably at Madryn there may have been much greater remissness than in the case of other estates. It is when the landlord is an absentee and his estate is encumbered, or where his expenditure exceeds his income, or when resident he has purchased farms with borrowed moneys, that the rents are raised and upon some properties more than once, the agents either proceeding at the instance of their principals or to justify their selection and fitness. Upon other estates the rent would not be considered for readjustment except upon the death of the landlord or tenant, and they would be rents running back some 25 to 35 years, and the readjustment would be made by a competent valuer in whom the tenants reposed a general confidence. The late Mr. Thomas, of Plasdu, was frequently so employed. I do not believe that any landlord of position in this county permits any difference of language, politics, or religion to influence his disposition towards his tenants. I have never known of any case that could bear the test of examination. As to language or religion, the suggestion is ludicrous. The members of the county families all speak Welsh after a fashion, and take a pride in being able to make themselves understood by their tenants and neighbours. Whilst as to religious beliefs, and the magazines they severally took in, &c., &c., there certainly was not until quite recently any difference of principles or moral teaching.

10,765. What do you say as to the magazines?—They took the same in at the mansions as the farm-houses In the old times, at Trefan, Nanhoron, and other houses, the magazines edited by Dr. Guthrie, Dr. McLeod and other ministers of the Established or Free Church of Scotland were those most commonly taken for Sunday reading. What I mean is, that as to religious belief and as to moral teaching there is no difference, so far as I know. I am the son of a Methodist myself.

10,766. You mean they are of various denominations?—Yes. They were not High Churchmen. They held views commonly held by Presbyterians. The house and out-door servants at the principal residences go to church or chapel as they please. It is the rare exception for any master or mistress to seek to influence their servants as to their preference in matters of religious observances. I believe it to be the fact that before the Ballot Act some of the agents during election time spoke roughly to their tenants, and may have held out general threats if they did not vote with their landlords; but I do not believe that they had received from their principals any authority to so express themselves; they spoke as their own narrow and dictatorial nature prompted them, and the Conservative party to this day suffers from the interposition of these agents in elections. To be a Liberal got to mean a man of independent bearing who would not be dictated to by agents as to his votes; to be a Tory was accepted to mean the agent's man or tool—a mere cipher—a man not to be respected. Hence large bodies of men, without any accurate, if any, knowledge of the questions or issues upon which their votes should be recorded, pledge their suffrages for the Liberal candidates as vouchers of their being free men. The present position of the Tory Party in Wales is in a great measure attributable to the talk and acts of these agents, and to the landlords not mixing freely among their tenants, visiting them at their houses as friends and neighbours, and as friends discussing with them personally the political questions of the day. I think the clergy have for some years wished, and, when possible, have sought to induce the landlords to give a preference to churchmen as incoming tenants, and since the recent appointments to the St. Asaph and Bangor dioceses the clergy have become a militant order and have taken every opportunity of impressing their views upon their hearers, but I do not know of any cases in which their urgency has prevailed. Very few of the agents—and only those who were farmers when selected—have received any special training for the supervision of agricultural land, and some farmers have as agents been the least considerate towards the tenants. In my opinion no land agent should be permitted to sell to the estate or to the tenants thereof, or to buy directly or through a third person from a tenant. Then as to "term of tenancy." In Lleyn the date of entry is the 11th of October, or upon some estates the 29th September. In Eifionydd, save as to the farmstead and the field next thereto, or a field selected by the tenant the 25th of March, and as to the farmstead and the field the 13th of May. In each district the letting is from year to year, and in the old times such a tenancy was held to be as good as a lease. Some years back there was a demand for leases, but in these depressed times leases at the present rents or any rents not ascertained and fixed by competent valuers would not be accepted. A landlord's objection to a lease is that a farm or tenement under lease becomes unsaleable, whilst the tenant's would be that to a lessee no abatement in rent is made, and that under the agreements and covenants usually inserted he has to bear all the expenses of reparations and of additional buildings. Leases, moreover, will not be granted except to men of some means, and therefore it is that the conditions of such tenants is superior to that of many yearly tenants, but it cannot be said to be better than that of yearly tenants of equal means and ability. Changes of tenancies, not referable to sale, have not become more frequent than in former years. Landlords are anxious to retain good and paying tenants, and, except on such properties as I have before referred to, cases of hardship have not arisen. I do not think that it is the practice to serve any formal notice upon the tenants when land is taken for planting or road-making, but if land to any extent and value is taken for planting, compensation in some form or other is given or received by the tenant, whilst as to roads and single or double cottages the tenants are concurring parties, and have some interest or other in their erection. I am referring to plots of land of no appreciable extent, say, under an eighth of an acre. The same remark applies to land taken for mining and quarrying. The land so taken, as also for planting, speaking generally, has no appreciable value, and the rent is not adjusted or compensation given. If timber-cutting is in the plantations the tenant is not damaged, save, perhaps, as to the walls or hedges of the plantations and which the landlord restores. Then as to agreements and leases. My own agreements are very short, and simply express a tenancy from year to year at a stated rent and subject to the custom of the district and the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act or any amending Acts.

Chairman.

10,767. Can you put in one of the agreements?—No. As to the Madryn estate, of which I am speaking, there are no agreements. I know of one for a farm called Bronheulog. The tenant went to some expense for outbuildings and in order to bring him within the provisions of the Act I signed an agreement of taking, which had been left by the agent with him, but which had not been signed by the agent or the tenant; but as the man had put up the buildings, and as there was a clause in the agreement as to compensation in respect of such buildings, the tenant and myself signed the agreement; but except as aforesaid, and two or three leases for years, there are no agreements; upon this estate it is a verbal letting and taking.

tenants, is the carrying of house coal from Pwllheli to Madryn. This service has been rendered by the tenants for so long a period that it may be presumed to have been within the knowledge of all tenants who have taken farms parts of this estate within the last 40 years. Then comes the question, "How fixed?" The rents on the Madryn estate have not appreciably been varied within the last 50 years, and there the farms are practically let to the man selected by the agent, no arbitration being resorted to as a means of settling or readjusting the rents. The rents upon that estate are considerably higher than upon the Glyn estate, but excepting a few farms, they have not been raised within the period aforesaid, and some have been lowered. The rent of Bachellyn was raised 30*l.* 57 years ago, and a meadow of from 4 to 5 acres taken therefrom. Three successive tenants who went to Wern farm failed. The rent before the third went in was 160*l.* a year, now it is 137*l.*, and each successive tenant worked the farm out, and putting nothing in, depreciated its value. Then the next question is, "How varied?" Upon the Madryn estate temporary abatements of rent (10 per cent.) were made from 1885 to 1888, and again last year and this, but no permanent reductions have been granted. No notice is given to the tenants of the intention of making such abatements until just before the rents are payable. Any change in rents depends not upon a revaluation, except when an estate is valued as a whole upon a new landlord succeeding thereto or becoming the purchaser thereof, but upon fluctuations in prices. A good cow 50 years ago might have been purchased for 6*l.*, and now they have not fallen below 12*l.*—so, if the rents are the same as they were then, they are not unduly high. As to the payment of rent. Rents are usually paid three months after they fall due, and the preferential claim for rent enables the landlord to dispense with any guarantee from the tenant's friends or some personal security by deposit or otherwise. It would not in my opinion be in the interests of tenant farmers that this preference should be taken away from the landlord. Then I come to "Charges on land. Size of farms." On the Madryn estate all chief rents and the income-tax, and as to park lands or lands so described, and whether let by auction or by agreement, and cottages or small tenements, also the tithes, land tax, and local rates, are paid by the landlord. As to farms and the larger tenements, the land tax and local rates are paid by the tenants, and in Lleyn the rates have not increased within the last 25 years. The tithes are now paid as to the whole property by the landlord, and collected from the tenants by the landlord. The average size of farms in this district is from 80 to 100 acres, and upon the Madryn estate no holdings have during the last 40 years been consolidated. The sub-letting of parts of holdings for sheep and cattle grazing when the same fields are so let from year to year and the farmer neither opens the ditches

nor cleans the land, nor applies any special manures thereto, or ploughs it in the ordinary course of cultivation, greatly depresses the value of a holding. There are farmers who let portions of their lands to cover the rent, and if the farm as a whole is worked upon a suitable course of cultivation and maintained in good heart, no depreciation need arise. The relative effects of small and large holdings on their occupiers, their rents being fair rents, depends upon the occupiers themselves, the husbandman, wife, and children, and not upon the extent of the acreage. Some of the smaller holders are able to make a better provision for their families than the large tenants, and the present depression bears heavier upon the latter. Then the next question relates to the "state of cultivation "and nature of farming pursued." As to that, I say there is no scarcity of labourers, but the money wage being now three times what 40 years ago it was, the fences, ditches, water-courses, &c. have been much neglected, so much so, that the drains not infrequently are choked at the mouth, and then follow a considerable growth of rushes. Even when the landlord has opened surface drains at his own expense the farmers sometimes do not keep them open. I have done that myself at Bwlchwyn, and the farmer, Ellis Williams, does not keep them open. Many tenants have reclaimed waste lands, and to the extent of many acres, but other tenants whose rents are fair rents have permitted their lands gradually to go out of cultivation, or to become less productive. The high prices at which store cattle and sheep sold a few years back, and the increased cost of labour has induced this neglect; but it is also attributable to a large number of farmers taking farms without sufficient capital to work them, or at all events to hold their own in bad times and with a falling market. A man will take a farm of some 200 acres and a rental of 140*l.* with only 500*l.* to stock it, and carry it on. As a fact, few enter farms with more than half the necessary capital, and have to borrow at the banks or from their friends, paying for interest 5*l.* or 6*l.* per cent. per annum. Unless there is a big rise, they seldom reduce the sum borrowed, and think they have done well if they have paid and kept down the interest. Such borrowing means a considerable addition to the outgoings of the tenant and supplies an explanation why many tenants at fair rents are going backwards. There undoubtedly is much rough land which is capable of reclamation by taking up or blasting stones, and after ploughing and seeding of the same, and there is marshy ground which might be drained, and some of such land may be expected to yield a profitable return. Formerly one-half the land was under cultivation, but of late years, whilst of root crops as much again are raised as in the old times, the farmers, except in certain corn-growing districts, now rely upon the pastures and meadows. The arable land is laid down in pasture by the tenant, but only in the course of a regular rotation of crops. The pasture land is ploughed when its crust has become too hardened, oats are sown the first year, potatoes and roots are grown the second year, and in the third year barley, and with it clover and grass seeds. The tendency is to leave lands unploughed too long. The low price of grain, the high prices at which unfattened cattle and sheep sold for years, and the increasing cost of labour have been the causes of the change, and where a regular rotation of cropping is not applied to the lands, where the ditches and watercourses are neglected, and the land is insufficiently manured, the effect is that the holding becomes every year less capable of yielding a profitable return to the tenant. Then as to "Improvements," drainage, irrigation works, protection from river encroachment, and also buildings for stock, are, save in excepted cases, or under the terms of a lease effected and put up by the landlords, and though it may have been agreed that the tenant should pay a low percentage on the expense incurred, when times get worse he not infrequently claims and obtains exemption from such payment. Some landlords charge an additional rent of 4 per cent. per annum in respect of a new house or buildings indispensable to the habitation of the tenant and the working of the farm, or the repairing of the same, but if necessary for the working of the holding, this charge ought not to be made. Fences, gates and posts, manures, seeds, &c. are provided by the tenants, except on very small tenements, where the landlords may put up fences and gates. The tenant sometimes at his own expense, erects cattle and other sheds, and maintains them, the landlord supplying the timbers. Except under the express terms of an agreement, the tenant, when leaving a farm, can claim no compensation from the landlord for what he has done, and, unless he gets something from the incoming tenant, he usually gets nothing. I do not know of my own knowledge, and except from hearsay, of any instance where a landlord or tenant has contracted himself out of the operation of the Agricultural Holdings Act, or the custom of the country. On the Madryn estate, an outgoing tenant can sell by auction everything—hay, straw, manure, gooseberry bushes, &c., and the incoming tenant must buy them or let them go to the highest bidder. I have only known of half-a-dozen instances where farmers have applied for their landlord's written consent for specific improvements under the Acts referred to. I think such consent would in most cases be readily given by the landlords themselves, but the agents put off signing a written authority charging the estate, and the tenant having executed the work on the faith of the promise of such a consent, never gets it, and this discourages other tenants from making such applications. But all well-to-do landlords would prefer to make such improvements themselves, the tenant undertaking to pay a small per-centage of interest, say from 3 to

Chairman—continued.

4 per cent. per annum, on expenditure incurred for hay-houses, or other new additional buildings, not indispensable. By the custom of this district, the outgoing tenant sells to the incoming tenant or to his landlord, his manure and produce remaining, including growing crops of mangolds, swedes, and turnips. I am speaking of Lleyn now, where the tenants go out on the 11th October. In my part of Carnarvonshire, Eifionydd, where the incoming tenant comes in on the 25th March, mangolds, swedes, and turnips are sold in the ordinary course, or probably consumed before the date of the entry. But whatever the date of entry, the custom is for four men to be appointed, two by each side to settle the value, and if they disagree, an umpire of their own choosing determines what the value is, and the incoming tenant has to pay to the outgoing tenant the sum or value so arrived at. In such valuation, if the tenancy expires in October, the whole, and if in March, one-half is allowed of the price of the seed sown, and the market value of the manure if in the yards, and one-half market value if put in for potatoes and root crops the preceding spring. The tenant, unless by the terms of the agreement, is under no restriction as to mode of cultivation, or any liability as to dilapidations or sale of produce gotten. A landlord always desires to retain improving tenants, and such a tenant would leave only at his own volition. He would receive no compensation for the general improved condition of his holding unless from the incoming tenant, and there is no right recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of any interest in their holdings. There are landlords who have taken advantage of their tenants improvements, and have raised the rents on the death of such tenants when relet to a member of the family, or to a stranger, and in some instances, the rent of the improving tenant himself has been raised. In Lleyn, the tenants can sell their sheep, either to the incoming tenant, or to any other person. In the mountain sheep farms, they have to be taken over by the incoming tenant or the landlord, at a valuation as aforesaid. Then, with regard to "game preserving," on the Madryn estate, the tenants, before the passing of the Ground Game Act, had, from the goodwill of their late landlord, an exclusive taking of the rabbits on their farms, and such goodwill was continued to them during his life. It was not of right, but of privilege until withdrawn. Some of the tenants made 60*l.* a year out of their rabbits, others 40*l.*, 30*l.*, 20*l.*, or smaller sums. The tenant had to employ a rabbit catcher, approved of by the landlord, at a stated rate of payment for each couple; pheasants, partridges, hares (when any), woodcocks, and snipe were and are reserved to the landlord. As to damages done to crops by the game preserved, no compensation has been granted to the tenant. When, some years ago, a portion of the Madryn estate was let to a sporting tenant, he bred over 500 pheasants, who fed upon the tenants' crops. I drew the lease myself, and there was a provision that the lessee was to pay damage to the tenants in respect of the feeding of game, but no damage was obtained from the shooting tenant, Mr. Angerstein, before he left the country. That is the only instance on the Madryn estate where there has been a complaint made as to over-preservation and of considerable damage to crops by pheasants. But save during the continuance of the five years' tenancy referred to and the corn growing farms included in that letting, the Madryn tenants have not to any appreciable extent been sufferers from the game reared on that estate. Game preserving, when carried on to any considerable extent, inflicts great injury to crops; and even when compensation is made to the tenant the amount is fixed by the landlord according to his good pleasure and not by any calculation which pretends to ascertain an approximate return of the loss inflicted. The tenant in such cases gets something, but what is tendered to him provokes irritation and creates a feeling of despondency as to what his sowings may bring him. I at one time let some rough shooting near Barmouth, but the farmer complained of his hedges being knocked about, of wires twisted, gates left open, and of sheep frightened by the dogs, and during recent years I have not let the shooting. I am of opinion that the property in or right to all game upon a farm should be in the tenant; that he alone should be recognised as having any right to kill or take the same, but that from year to year he might dispose of the same to his landlord, or any other person. In the petty session held at Portmadoc a tenant's son working on the farm was last year fined 2*l.* and 10*s.* costs for shooting a brace of partridges feeding on his father's land. In the preceding year a tenant's shepherd was fined 1*l.* 1*s.* and 10*s.* costs for picking up during his walk a partridge out of a snare set for rabbits. It should not be possible to take any proceedings against a tenant or any member of his family, and any proceedings taken against a labourer should be by the tenant. Proceedings against persons other than labourers should, in my opinion, as the practice is in relation to the Madryn estate, be instituted by the tenants. The right of shooting as now reserved to the landlord is, however, a valuable interest. The shooting rent obtainable may not exceed 1*s.* an acre, or may even be less, but upon the sale of a property it is difficult to apportion the exact sum attributable to the purchaser's desire to possess himself of the sporting rights. Any substantial change in the Game Laws, save as to supplying a more accurate mode of reckoning the damage occasioned by rearing pheasants, may in a large number of cases appreciably diminish the sale values even of small tenements and, disturbing the old values, may create uneasiness in the minds of the mortgagees thereof. Except from over-preservation or rearing of pheasants the tenant farmers in this district have not much to complain of in the matter of the game. But the presence of the keepers about, and the airs and license they assume, provoke irritation. If game preservers would trust and rely upon the tenants more and in the keepers less, in short if they would constitute their tenants the keepers on their respetive farms, a much better feeling would subsist,and there would be less poaching and more game for the landlords. That is my opinion.

Chairman—continued.

VI. Proprietor Farmers.

The number of small freeholders who have inherited their holdings from their ancestors is not large. Their number during the last 40 years has decreased by sales brought about either by a trust for sale in an ancestor's will, or by a devise to children or relatives as joint tenants or as tenants in common, or again by the charges affecting the same becoming too onerous to be borne by the person in occupation when payments by way of rent had also to be made to other the joint tenants or tenants in common thereof, or by the largely increased value of such tenements in the sale market, or the fact that a neighbour desired to acquire the same and was offering a sum much beyond its market value; these and other causes have made a sale of such holdings advisable in the interests of all parties. At the sales in the year 1886, a large number of tenant farmers bought their own holdings to ensure their continued occupation thereof. A few tenant farmers and persons not tenant farmers purchased other holdings for their own occupation or as investments of money, or at the request of a relative who was anxious to remain in occupation of his tenement. And at the sales effected in the succeeding years, and during the present year, the purchasers have for the most part been made up of tenant farmers who were induced to buy under the circumstances about referred to. The holders of large estates in this county, even when wealthy men, seldom become purchasers, except of lands in the immediate neighbourhood of their residences, or, when outlying, with the object of obtaining better boundaries, or at the urgent entreaty of the tenant in occupation, and who is unable to buy his holding or otherwise to secure continued occupation of his house and lands. When a tenant farmer is openly bidding at an auction, it is quite the exception for a third party to bid against him, and the lot would be knocked down to the tenant if his last bid is within a year's rental or even within the total of two years' rental of the reserve fixed, and consequently the purchase money paid by such purchasers cannot be said to have been excessive. Some few tenants on the Madryn estate were in 1886 able to complete their purchases without any borrowing of moneys, but the many purchasers at that and subsequent sales have had to obtain from two-thirds to three-fourths of the purchase moneys on a mortgage bearing interest at 4 per cent. per annum, while some have had to find the balances at the bank or from their friends upon promissory notes or other personal securities bearing a high rate of interest, or by selling a part of their stock. Of such purchasers, some of those who were under the necessity of borrowing only two-thirds or three-fourths of the price paid, have reduced their liabilities by part payments, but with bad seasons and lower prices some even of that class are becoming more involved, and unless things mend will be unable to retain their lands. Those purchasers who were under no necessity of borrowing, or who had to borrow only small sums, and had moneys of their own wherewith to improve their purchases by building, draining, or otherwise, have done well, and their holdings would now fetch much higher prices. But as to purchasers at such sales who had to borrow three-fourths or more of the purchasing moneys and otherwise to cripple their ability to buy and sell in the markets, their present condition is one of great anxiety, and can admit of no comparison with that of the yearly tenants about them. Moreover, the fact is that the yearly tenant on the large estates, and even on the smaller estates when the beneficial owner has a good income and is sympathetic, cannot better his position by acquiring the fee, even if his money investments bring him in only $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. per annum, for after the purchase he will have the buildings, reparations, and other the improvements or works theretofore executed by such a landlord to bear upon his own shoulders, and in bad seasons will have no one to whom to look for any abatements in money payments.

2. Tenant Farmers.

On the small tenements at fair rents of from 30*l.* to 45*l.* a year the manual labour will be performed by the tenant, his wife, and children. The nature and character of the holding may necessitate the tenants obtaining assistance for a few days during harvest time, or it may enable him to take temporary service at neighbouring farms, or to devote time in some other pursuit or industry. Children do more and better work than hired servants of the same age. The children who give their labour have allowances for clothes, &c. Some receive the wages generally payable in the district, while others in the place of the full value of their services, and in addition to such allowances as aforesaid, obtain a provision on marriage or independent settlement in life, varying with the ability of the parent and the measure of success which has attended the working of the farm, and one, and sometimes more, of the children would be looking forward to becoming tenants of the farm, and having the stock to carry it on with. If there are no children, or if children rendered no such services, more servants would have to be hired, but where the rents are fair rents, and the tenant had sufficient capital when he entered, they can be maintained by such hired service, or by the children taking out their remuneration in the wages receivable in the district for the labours they perform, and not, as most frequently occurs, by permitting some part thereof to remain in a common family fund, to be appropriated or divided amongst them in some of the ways I have indicated. Where no wages can be paid to or a fund set apart for the children labouring on a farm it will, speaking generally, be found that the tenant had insufficient capital for the working of the farm when he took it, and by reason of his borrowings at the bank or otherwise, has in outgoing had too heavy a weight to carry.

3. Labourers.

The proportion of the farm labour hired from outside the household depends upon the number and ages of the children at home.

Chairman.

10,769. We have had a great deal of evidence about the farm labourers, and I do not think we need trouble much about that?—No.

10,770. We have had statements about farm labourers, and also their condition and their food, and so on?—Then I will pass that over. Then about the cottages; we have very few cottages on the farms, hardly any cottages.

10,771. They live in the farmhouses, I suppose?—They live in an outhouse; they sleep in an outhouse, and have the meals generally in the kitchen with the family.

10,772. These are just the same conditions as are usual in the other parts of the country?—Yes.

10,773. We understand all that?—There is no accommodation for them to spend the evenings; in most of the farms there is only one kitchen—the smaller farms—where all the family and the labourers eat together, and if they remain in after supper, they have to sit in that kitchen. As a rule they go out and stroll about until they go to bed.

10,774. That is what we have heard?—Then the labourers in service with the small tenant farmer, or with the small proprietor farmer whose lands are charged by way of mortgage, partake of the same diet and in the same room with his employer and the family. When engaged under the same conditions by the large farmers they have healthy and sustaining meals and meat at their dinner. The families of the labourers, even when the labourer is on his own finding, do not fare so well, butter, pork, or bacon taking the place of meat. But much depends upon the wife and the number of children at home earning no wages. The small tenant farmers have relatively better house accommodation than the larger tenant farmers. But the house accommodation, as well of large as also of small tenants varies greatly, according as the management of the estate is generous or niggardly. Proprietor and tenant farmers, whether large or small, who possess capital, or who are well to do, have as to diet what persons of their means usually have. Potatoes, carrots, and turnips are the only vegetables they grow. Some 25 to 30 years ago, owing to the badness of the times, there was a considerable migration of farmers and labourers to America and the Colonies, and of some to Scotland and England, but within recent years few have gone out of this country. In this district there was a large drop in prices during the years 1885–1889, but not so large as during the last two years, the drop or depression during the last two years chiefly, if not exclusively, affecting store and fat cattle and sheep. fat sheep now realising only half the prices they did a few years back, though mutton stands at the same price. Butter and young and fat pigs command higher prices than have been obtained for years. It is the large farmers, whether proprietor or tenant, who are chiefly affected by the depression under which we all now suffer. I believe a larger number of farmers now keep farming accounts than formerly did.

10,775. I have finished my statement now.

10,776. There is one question I should like to ask you. You have spoken about the agents being allowed to sell or to buy from tenants. Is that a common custom of the country?—No, it was a custom on this estate for them to sell to the landlord. If anything was wanted the tenant went to the agent and it was got from the agent.

10,777. Did the agents deal in cattle or sheep, or anything of that sort?—No, not here; only materials for building.

Lord Kenyon.

10,778. Do you mean the sales pass through the agents' hands?—Yes, if a tenant wanted some reparation done he would go to the agent and ask for timber, &c. They did not themselves sell timber; but slates and other materials they sold themselves.

10,779. I took quite a wrong view of it, but I understand you now?—And it was sent to the farm and it was entered against the landlord.

Sir John Llewelyn.

10,780. With regard to the tenants buying their own holdings, you said that you thought that about five-eighths of the whole sale was made to tenant farmers?—More than one half.

10,781. Not all to the sitting tenants?—Yes most of them were sitting tenants.

10,782. You gave one or two instances in which tenant farmers on other estates bought?—Yes, there was a tenant farmer on Lord Newborough's estate who bought to the extent of 13,000*l.*

10,783. You subsequently gave us more information. What I wish to learn about is whether that was with borrowed money. You told us some of it was with borrowed money and some was not?—Yes.

10,784. Do you think it would be a good thing if there was an opportunity for sitting tenants to purchase with money advanced by Government at a low rate of interest?—Well, the average price obtained at the Madryn sale was from 32 to 33 years' purchase, so that the actual net rent gotten by the landlord would not exceed 2¼ per cent. Therefore, even if money was got from Government at 2¾ and 3 per cent., it would be better for a tenant to remain a tenant than to become purchaser of his farm.

10,785. Agreements are rare. You told me that a great many of them are simple?—Speaking generally, they are simply verbal lettings.

10,786. Verbal lettings subject to the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

10,787. Is the security under that Act insufficient, in your opinion?—Yes, I think as to improvements effected by the tenant it would be sufficient if notice was sent to the landlord, and no consent required. I should say that notice should be sent and the landlord should have an opportunity of stating his concurrence or refusal, and if it was a matter clearly to the benefit of the tenant, I should give the tenant an appeal to the county court judge. I think tenants when they do effect improvements should be secured.

10,788. Do you think it was that sense of insecurity that made the tenants buy in this particular instance?—No, they bought in this case in order to retain their homesteads.

10,789. In order to retain their holdings?—Yes, in order to retain their holdings.

10,790. There is a sense of insecurity?—Yes.

10,791. That operated in inducing them to purchase?—Yes.

10,792. Do you think that they had to pay where they had to borrow for that purpose interest at the rate of 4 per cent.?—I think their farms now stand to them at something like one half as much again as previous to the sale, i.e., reckoning interest on purchase money as against former rents less abatements.

10,793. Do you think that the rate which they would have to pay would be 4 per cent., or less than that?—Four per cent., and getting nothing done by way of repairs.

10,794. Of course they would have to do the repairs?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,795. You have stated, I think, that on this estate holdings were chiefly by verbal agreement?—Yes.

10,796. I wanted, if I could, to understand exactly what takes place upon a change of tenancy. I presume that in the first place the outgoing tenant can claim whatever he can claim according to the Agricultural Holdings Act?—He can sell everything.

10,797. May I go step by step, please. In the first place he has the claim which the law gives him under that Act?—Yes.

10,798. Then over and above that, do I understand that there is a valuation made between him and the incoming tenant by valuers?—Yes.

10,799. In that way he gets more than the Agricultural Holdings Act gives him?—No, the valuation as beween the outgoing and the incoming tenant has relation only to the crops, hay, straw, mangolds, swedes, and everything on the land, and they are valued by four men on each side and an umpire, and the outgoing tenant brings in the bills for seeding, and the incoming tenant has to pay the full sum for the seed, for the tenancy expires on the 11th October.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

10,800. Yes, but what I mean is this; take for instance, the case of sheep. Under the Agricultural Holdings Act I am not sure, but I think there is no reference to sheep, to the right of the outgoing tenant to be paid by the incoming tenant for his sheep?—No, there is no such right.

10,801. That is under the custom of the country?—No, they can sell their sheep to whoever they like.

10,802. Here they can do that?—Yes. In Merionethshire it is different. There the incoming tenant has to take them over.

10,803. I was told, in answer to a question to Mr. Humphreys, that as regards such a thing as haulage the custom of the country gave more than the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I had a great number of claims after the Madryn sale from the tenants of farms sold in respect of haulage. Allowances, I think, were made. I think some tenants kept back a part of their rent to meet such claims.

See 10,6

10,804. But is there a custom of the country which regulates it to a certain extent?—I do not know of such a custom. I heard of it today for the first time.

10,805. The payment from the incoming tenant to the outgoing tenant. Is it barely what is necessary under the law as it now exists under the Agricultural Holdings Act? Is there a custom of the country which gives, in certain particulars, more than that?—I do not know of any such custom.

10,806. Would it be very difficult to form an Agricultural Holdings Act which would include in all the different parts of England and Wales the various things that was necessary in each district; for instance, take the question of sheep in Merionethshire. Do I understand that that ought to be included in the Agricultural Holdings Act or left to the custom of the country?—I think it is much better left as it is. I do not think there are any complaints about it.

10,807. So that it would be very difficult to get all the rights as between the incoming and the outgoing tenant into one Act of Parliament?—Yes, I think so. I agree with what Mr. Humphreys said as to the schedule to the Agricultural Holdings Act. I think it ought to be extended. As a fact, the farmers do very little here in the way of improvements. Of course there are a few, like Mr. Humphreys and Mr. Roberts, of Penystumllyn, and others, who do.

10,808. But what I wanted to come to was this. You might have an Act of Parliament for the whole country, but no schedule which you could draw would probably cover all the requirements of each particular district, when you must, over and above what the law gives by Act of Parliament, have a custom of the country in different districts covering larger rights as between the incoming and outgoing tenant?—I should say, that if as in Merionethshire for instance, a custom has prevailed for a long period of years, it must be founded upon good reason and ought to continue unless in some particulars it is open to objection. There is no objection to taking a farm upon the custom of the country, whether in a mountainous country or in a lowland country, as it is understood by all men. What they object to is being bothered with agreements having long clauses which they may or may not be able to understand.

10,809. You think they would understand the custom of the country better than they would understand the schedule of an Act of Parliament?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,810. Do you know of an instance where either the clergy or ministers of denominations have been trying to exercise their influence with landlords to let their farms to tenants of some particular creed or political complexion?—I have heard of such cases.

10,811. You could not specify any instances if you were asked the question?—I am perfectly certain none of the landlords would listen to such suggestions. None of the landlords I know anything about would listen to any suggestion that a tenant should be preferred because he was a Churchman, but I have heard it so stated; I admit that. I do not know that any landlord has given the preference to an applicant because of his being a Churchman or because of his being a Conservative.

10,812. So that, practically, it is hearsay evidence?—I think so. One hears a lot occasionally; but I do not think if you go into it and thrash it out that you will get much of a foundation for the suggestion.

10,813. I understood you to say something about a cow for 6*l.* I do not know what that was?—I saw in a notebook that I had that the price of a good cow 50 years ago was 5*l.* or 6*l.*

10,814. And that cow would fetch 12*l.* now?—That cow would fetch 12*l.* now, I take it. I could never buy a cow under that figure, even though a very middling one.

10,815. Do you mean to quote that as a basis for fixing the present rents?—Where the fall in prices have affected this district is in the price of store cattle and sheep. The pigs have never done better.

10,816. Did not the people in this part of the country use to raise a good deal of wheat years ago?—Well, yes, my father used to raise some.

10,817. What has been the fall in the price of wheat in the course of 50 years?—They have not been raising any wheat here for ages, nothing to speak of. I am speaking in the presence of the farmers. I do not know more than half a dozen farms where wheat is raised.

10,818. How does barley and oats compare with 50 years ago?—Of course it is lower; but then that cuts the other way, because farmers can buy the grain to fatten their beasts and get the fattening process done at so much less. The labour is now three times what it was formerly. Of course the labour is the heaviest item. It is three times what it was 40 years ago.

10,819. Is that the only item which is higher at present than it was 50 years ago?—I take it every item except grain is much higher now than it was 50 years ago. I think my father used to buy those mountain sheep for about 7*s.* each. They complain now that they get 13*s.* only.

10,820. Can you enter into figures with respect to grain?—No, because there is so little grain grown here. There is very little grain grown on the Madryn estate or on any estate I know of.

10,821. So it would not make much difference in the farming?—Except in some districts. There is one farm, Crugau, for instance, where a great deal of grain is grown, but he is a very well-to-do tenant; he has been there for 50 years and has done very well and I believe he is worth some thousands of money: it is Mr. Morris.

10,822. You would not be able to present a case to me where a farmer 40 or 50 years ago sold so much corn for so much money and also present a case at present where a man has raised so much corn and sold it for so much, to show either the profit or the loss in comparison with what it was 40 or 50 years ago. That is what I want?—In this part of the country there has always been more grazing done. The fluctuations in the price of grain have never affected this part of the country.

10,823. You are not prepared to enter into particulars. It is simply a general remark on your part?—It is a general remark as to that feature of the case.

10,826. Do you think a railway system of communication would answer the purpose in this part?—Yes, I think that if the London and North

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Western made a line from Pantglas to Nevin and Port dynllaen, it could be made inexpensive —a line just round there.

10,827. It would be of benefit to the farms?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,828. I am sorry I was not present so as to hear the whole of your evidence, but I should like to ask you a question or two. Can you mention any instance where children have been paid by their parents for work done on a farm?—I cannot mention the names, but I can supply the names if you wish. I can supply the names by letter.

10,829. Do you not think that owners of estates should provide sleeping accommodation for the labourers inside, and not leave them to roam about the country as we have heard of in other places?—Yes, I do.

10,830. On what ground do you consider that tenants bought their farms at 32 years' purchase?—Well, they were very high. I have got the valuations here (producing same). You can see it was done perfectly fairly.

10,831. Yes, I quite understand that. But I ask you on what ground do you suppose that they were induced to give such a sum of money for their holdings?—They were valued by three valuers, Mr. Dew, Mr. Owen Edwards, and Mr. Thomas Roberts, the surveyor, and they were valued at the figures at which they were bought. Some went above the figures and some below.

10,832. Do you not think there was some part of that due to the tenants for improving their farms?—Possibly in some cases there was a part so due. I made some small grants, I forget to what extent, but to the extent of some hundreds, for buildings put up by the tenant, and about this haulage too there were many claims allowed.

10,833. Have you any dairy farms on the estate?—There are about 12 farms of a rental exceeding 150*l.* a year.

10,834. Do they do much dairying?—I must admit that the dairies are very insufficient in room and accommodation.

10,835. Do you mean accommodation of the dairy itself?—Yes.

10,836. As to the situation?—The extent of the accommodation and the situation is not good. It must be very difficult for them to make butter in hot weather in a great many farmsteads.

10,837. Sometimes the dairy is attached to the dwelling; it is too close and the heat is present?—Yes, inside the dwelling-house.

10,838. Is there sufficient room to bring modern implements in?—I am afraid many of them have not room enough to bring in any implements; you can hardly turn in them.

10,839. I noticed on some of the farms around that the dairies are built too near the manure heap?—Yes, that also is true, but that is the fault of the medical officer of health. He ought to take stronger measures.

10,840. Do you think that the butter produced is satisfactory?—Yes, I think so. I have only got three cows and I have got five or six servants and four or five in the house. We have been selling 30*s.* worth of milk a week at Criccieth and about five pounds of butter. Cows are very good if they are properly looked after and fed.

10,841. Do you suppose that all the farmers pay the attention that you do to their dairying?—Well, they have not the accommodation. Mine is underground.

10,842. You think a great deal more could be done in that way?—Yes, a great deal.

10,843. Are you aware that there are tons of butter and cream brought into this neighbourhood from Devonshire at the present moment supplying all the hotels in the district?—Yes. Butter has been 2*s.* a pound here. It was 1*s.* 8*d.* for some time. I do not know what it is now. 1*s.* 6*d.* I think, but it has been as high as 2*s.*

10,844. Could not farmers be induced to do more in the way of dairying?—Yes, but I was talking last week with a very large farmer who has got about ten cows, and he says, "I cannot "send my butter to Pwllheli. I must make it "pot butter," because it is so hot.

10,845. With the modern appliances I do not think there is any difficulty in making butter, and I think it a great pity for this neighbourhood that they cannot produce butter as well as can be brought here from Devonshire?—Yes, it is a great pity.

10,846. Have you any dairy schools here?—I have never attended any.

10,847. Did you send your dairy maids?—No.

10,848. Is there much feeding of cattle done on the estate? I mean, is there sufficient food, turnips, and so on?—Oh, a great deal. They give them swedes and mangolds, and some give their cattle barley meal and Indian corn.

10,849. Are they fat or store cattle?—Some go in for fat cattle and others for store cattle; they vary.

10,850. Have you any provisions for cake consumed in your agreement?—We have no agreements.

10,851. You have no provisions for cake. I understand you have no agreements?—No none.

10,852. Do you ever pay the tenants for cake used on the land?—No, I think very few of them feed much with cake.

10,853. Do you know if the block test has been tried in this neighbourhood, that is, for farmers to judge the weight of the cattle?—No, they have got something to measure round.

10,854. Are they able to ascertain to a nicety what a beast will weigh?—Well, I tried it myself and I came within eight pounds.

10,855. That is very good. Do you think all the tenant farmers are able to do the same?—I think so.

10,856. Do you not think that there is much money lost between the producer and the consumer?—I think they had some lessons at Bangor Show the other day.

10,857. Did they all come to very near the weight of the beast?—I cannot speak as to that. I was not there.

10,858. I have seen some shows where there have been some hundredweights out in the weight and it is a great loss to the farmers. Have you any increased provisions for poultry keeping?—I do a lot of poultry keeping myself; I think it pays uncommonly well; I think some of the farmers go in a small way for it.

10,859. Do not farmers neglect the eggs? Do they not leave them to stray all round the farmyards?—Yes, they collect the eggs sometimes every third or fourth day.

Mr. Griffiths.

But they should be collected daily. That is what the foreigner cannot bring us—a fresh egg every day. That is all I have to ask you.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,860. I think you are a member of the North Wales Circuit, are you not?—I only went round once a great many years ago. I was a conveyancing barrister, and I simply wanted to show myself in order to get people to send me up some conveyancing work.

10,861. You were in holy orders before?—Yes.

10,862. I find this statement made by you, that no part of that estate—that is the Madryn estate, I think?—Yes——

10,863. Is situate in any manor or held otherwise than by a fee simple tenure. What do you mean by a fee simple tenure?—There are no customary lands or copyhold lands

10,864. What do you mean by a fee simple tenure?—The ordinary tenure.

10,865. Fee simple is the name of an estate?—Yes, it is that.

10,866. I do not recollect having heard of that in conveyancing before—fee simple tenure?—It is a term that is commonly used—a fee simple title.

10,867. Ah, fee simple is estate; there is a distinction between "estate" and "tenure." Do you mean that land is held directly—that where you do find a tenant in fee simple he is a tenant in capite holding direct under the Crown? Is that what you mean?—No, the estate is an estate of freehold, not of customary or copyhold tenure, that is what I mean; it is very simple.

10,868. Very simple; but you may have an estate in fee simple in a copyhold?—I never had to pass the Bar examination; I came before the Bar examination was instituted.

10,869. I am not asking this from any trivial motive. I want to know what the condition of the tenure is?—It is a freehold tenure. There are certain chief rents payable to the Crown.

10,870. Am I to understand from you as a conveyancer that the tenant in fee simple here is a tenant in capite under the Crown? What do you understand by the position here?—He is an owner of the freehold, and it is held in the case of the Madryn estate after executing a disentailing deed to him—the late beneficial owner—and his heirs for ever.

10,871. You have used the word "tenure" and that means that the person who has got the estate is a tenant. If there is a tenant, there must be a lord. Who is the lord, in your judgment?—There is no lord except the Crown, but we know that means nothing—all lands are held of the Crown.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

10,872. Do not think I am putting the questions hostilely to you. I am not doing that, but I am endeavouring to ascertain what is the legal position here. Is there a manor? Do you mean to say there are no manors in Carnarvonshire?—There are no manors of which I have any knowledge. No part of this estate is held of any manor that I know of.

10,873. I have got a return here to the House of Commons of the year 1845 of the manors belonging to the Crown, and here I find a manor of Pwllheli which contains several hundreds in this county, and then follows a list of the hundreds?—Yes, but I mentioned that we paid certain chief rents.

10,874. What are the chief rents?—They come to some 3*l.* or 4*l.* a year.

10,875. They are paid to the Woods and Forests I suppose?—I think so.

10,876. You cannot give us any enlightenment about the manors here. I hoped when I saw that you were a conveyancing counsel you might have got that up for us?—We have never had anything to do with any manors.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,877. You do not call them manors?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,878. Or lordships?—I have gone through this title several times and I have never seen the term "lordship" or "manor" or anything else.

10,879. I think I gathered rightly the effect of your statement that you are giving the opinions you have expressed on your own account, are you not?—Yes.

10,880. Quite independently?—Quite.

10,881. And therefore they are not representative?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

10,882. You have made some remarks about agents which I did not quite follow. You said the landlord has a head agent. What do you mean? I do not quite understand?—I think it is better that there should be head agents in some cases. Of course where the estate is a large estate like the Penrhyn Castle estate there must be head agents, but where the estates are small estates from 2,000*l.* to 4,000*l.* or 5,000*l.* a year, I think the tenants expect the landlord to be the principal overlooker.

10,883. Certainly, I quite agree with you that the landlord should be the principal; but is it not to the interest of the tenant that there should be a capable man who understands land and cultivation to be his agent and to act for him?—Well, the rule is here to let the tenant cultivate as he pleases.

10,884. Certainly. I do not mean to disturb the tenant in his cultivation, but to be a mediator between the landlord and tenant where it is necessary?—Tenants prefer——

10,885. Tenants prefer to deal directly with the principal when they can. There I quite agree with you; but surely an agent is more necessary on a large estate, or on an estate of a comparatively large size, otherwise matters must get into a very slipshod state. Do you say rates are higher than they were 25 years ago?—No. I except from that statement Criccieth parish where they have got a school-room built by a school board. There the rates are very high.

10,886. You are speaking of Lleyn?—The rates in Lleyn have not increased.

10,887. Can you give any instances of landlords charging interest on improvements?—Well, I have done so myself, but I have let it slide after a time. I spent 350*l.* on a small place, the rent of which was only 30*l.* a year. I thought I ought to get 5*l.* more rent; but I let that drop. I also did the same at Barmouth for drainage, 3 per cent.; but I also let that drop. At Madryn what improvements have been made were made without any attempt to put on any charge.

10,888. I do not think it would be usual that a landlord should charge interest on improvements?—No. I think they are entitled to charge interest for hay-houses, because they are not absolutely necessary.

10,889. Can you give any instances of landlords taking advantage of tenants' improvements to raise rents?—That is what I have heard.

10,890. It is only from hearsay?—Yes, it is all from hearsay.

10,891. Has the Bangor College had any dairy instruction in this district?—I believe so, but I do not know anything about Bangor College.

Chairman.

10,892. Some questions are put in that I must trouble you with. Mr. Owen Wynne asks, "Do you think the dairy is put too "near the manure heap, or the manure heap "put too near the dairy?" Can you answer that question?—I daresay it happens in both ways. I know several farmsteads on the Madryn estate where the dairies are certainly very much insufficient or inadequate for the reasonable demands of the tenants.

10,893. Mr. Owen Wynne also asks, "Do you "think it is usual for agents to deal in materials, "and would you name the agents you refer to?" —No, I do not know of any other instance.

10,894. Will you name the agent you referred to?—I did. It is only the agent of this particular estate. It is an old practice here which has been discontinued.

10,895. Mr. Walter B. C. Jones asks, "When "you refer to agents selling materials for repairs, "do you include me in the insinuation thrown "out?"—Oh no.

10,896. Mr. Vincent asks, "Is it not a fact "that wheat was grown largely near Aberdaron, "and that the difference in favour of the wheat "growers near Aberdaron as compared with "English wheat growers is that the Aberdaron "land is capable of being laid down in pasture "and the English land is not?"—I believe that is quite right, but I have only been to Aberdaron once or twice. I believe that is so.

10,897. Mr. Wm. George asks, "Did Mr. "Thos. Jones, your last tenant, leave Ynysgain, "and if so, why did he do so?"—I gave him notice to go. I wanted the land myself. He had not opened the ditches for ten years. I have had one or two men on for a year opening the ditches. It had been very well drained by my great uncle, but the drains were unable to run out. It cost me 50*l.* to have it done.

Professor Rhŷs.

10,898. May I ask who insures the buildings on the farms on the estates you speak of?—The landlord.

10,899. Do you approve of that?—Yes, I think it is unnecessary in that case to insert the tenants' names in the insurances.

10,900. Do you approve of the landlord doing it rather than the tenant?—I think so.

10,901. What district do you know best. About here?—About here and Lleyn—all the southern part of Carnarvonshire.

10,902. It was mentioned to us the other day by a gentleman who knows this district very well, that it is rather notorious in some parts of the country that the servant men, and the labourers, the unmarried ones, go prowling about at night around farmers' houses. Have you ever known anything about that?—Yes, it is so. I do not think the practice is so general now as it was in past years, but it certainly is a practice.

10,903. To what would you trace that mostly?—To the natural man I should say.

10,904. Yes, but the natural man is much the same in other countries, where we do not hear of this. I mean, is it anything in regard to the arrangements of the homesteads. Is there anything in the way the buildings are arranged or lack of accommodation?—Yes. I think it may be to some extent attributable to that, but I am not aware that the number of such children born in Cardiganshire is less than here. In Cardiganshire I think the men sleep in the houses to some extent, to a greater extent than here.

10,905. I did not refer directly to illegitimate births, but of course it is quite right that you should put it so. You think it is partly due to the lack of accommodation on the farms?—To the lack of accommodation and proper recreations in the evenings. In the old times they used to spend the evenings carving, now they do not do anything of a useful description unless it be reading the Welsh papers, and they walk about; some of them smoke pipes; it may be they go more to the inns than they did before.

10,906. Then, when they did the carving and so on, they sat with the farmer and his wife on the common hearth?—Yes.

10,907. Now they cannot do that, and they have no separate room, is that it?—In the smaller farmsteads there is but one kitchen. In the larger ones there are two; the farmer's family live in the best and have their meals there, and the labourers have their meals in the other. Even where there are two, the labourers as a rule go out after they have had their meals. It is usually small and wanted for other purposes.

10,908. That means that the accommodation is rather short?—It is insufficient.

10,909. And inadequate?—Inadequate.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,910. Might I ask, arising out of Professor Rhŷs' question, does the tenant farmer affect to exercise any kind of discipline over his indoor servants?—Outdoor servants you mean.

10,911. No, I call the indoor servant a labourer who is engaged and gets his board and lodgings at the farm house. For this purpose I call him an indoor servant?—Well, he sleeps outside.

10,912. He sleeps in an out-house generally?—Yes.

10,913. So that he can come and go at any hour of the night without the farmer knowing anything about it?—Yes.

10,914. Does that equally apply to female servants?—No; female servants can only go out with permission.

10,915. Is there access from outside to the apartments of the female servants as a rule?—Not except by coming through the door or through a window.

10,916. But I have seen separate staircases up to rooms, for instance, in some places separate staircases built outside, stone staircases leading up to a room in the farmstead?—Yes, to a room where the men sleep.

10,917. That is what I meant. Take that to be so; you do not think the female servants are ever placed in rooms which have access in that way?—Not to my knowledge; I do not know of any instance of that; they always sleep in the house.

10,918. If that is so, and discipline is exercised, and the farmer looks after the servants, then I take it the men have nothing to do but to loaf around. Mr. Walter Jones drew a very alarming picture of the state of things at night, which I understood he spoke about from his own knowledge. Let me put it in this way. Have you any reason to think that the tenant farmers permit their female servants to be out too late at night?—No, they do not permit them.

10,919. Then the thing comes to this; that the menservants, as soon as the work of the day is over and their last meal is had, prefer to go about walking and going to the inns and so forth, and to smoke and spend their time away from the kitchen of the farmer?—Yes.

10,920. And so far as you know there is no foundation for the charge that they are worse than other young men?—No, certainly not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Michael Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

10,921. Is this (indicating) a statement of your evidence, and do you quite understand it?—Yes.

10,922. That is your evidence, and it is accurate?—Yes.

The interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"I am a farmer living at Nantfawr, Dinas, Llaniestyn, Pwllheli, and am a member of the Carnarvonshire County Council.

"Acreage of farm in my occupation, 76 acres.

"Madryn Estate.

"A great part of this estate was put up for sale a few years ago, and farmers were greatly disturbed in their holdings.

"I am well acquainted with the state of things as regards the treatment of tenant farmers by the landlords in this part of the country

"There has been a general increase in the rents in these places during the last 30 or 40 years.

"In my opinion the rents are a great deal too high to allow the tenant a fair chance to cope with the present state of things, and I think that a Land Court to assess the amount of rent would be the only remedy to put things right and just in this respect between landlord and tenant.

"I think this craving for land on any terms is characteristic of the Welshman.

"As to the statements made by the landlord during the recent depression, I think the sum returned by the owner is far too little as compared with the fall in the prices of farm produce.

"Taken altogether, I have no hesitation in saying that the prices of cattle, horses, and farm produce have fallen at least 50 per cent. in the last 10 years, and the per-centage is higher still if you take the last three years only. As an illustration, I may say that I sold two heifers in August for 3*l.* each, whilst I got 10*l.* for one such heifer some 10 years ago.

"But not only do we get less in cash for our cattle now, but we have to keep them longer in hand before we can get a market for them, and in the meantime fodder often becomes scarce, and we have to pay heavy prices for same.

"The following considerations should therefore be taken into account in estimating the distress which the Welsh farmers suffer from:—

1. A reduction of 50 per cent. in the price obtainable for his farm produce.

Chairman—continued.

2. The increased price of that produce, owing—

(a.) To the difficulty in obtaining a market for it;

(b.) To the scarcity of fodder.

"As to corn (oats and barley—no wheat), there is also another consideration, namely, that owing to the unfavourableness of the seasons of late years, the quality produced has been poor and below the market par, so that the farmer can hardly get anything for it.

"In the face of this state of things the landlords have made no permanent reductions, and have only granted temporary abatements, varying from 10 per cent. to 25 per cent.

"As to game, tenants who have lands adjoining woodland are considerably troubled by them. I myself am so to some extent. I produce a notice which the tenants of the Madryn estate got as to game at the last rent audit (notice handed in).

"I consider the following reforms very essential for the well being of the Welsh farmer—

(a.) A land court to fix a fair rent.

(b.) Security of tenure.

(c.) Security for unexhausted improvements.

"Insecurity of Tenure.—There are some farmers whom I know who abstain from coming forward to state their grievances, simply because they think they would offend their landlords if they did so.

"A great many sales of land have taken place in the neighbourhood of recent years, and many families have in consequence had to leave their farms and break up their homes. This has added to the farmer's sense of insecurity.

"Improvements.—But for this sense of insecurity I think more would be spent on land to improve it than is done at present. All the improvements in the land are generally executed by the tenant himself in my neighbourhood. I can give give instances where farms have been re-valued, and the rent raised after improvements had been executed thereon by farmers.

"Waste Land.—There are thousands of acres in Lleyn which are practically waste land now, but which could be made into good land if the farmer had security of the tenure of it, and of compensation for improvements executed on it. A tenant on leaving receives payment for his crops, but not, generally speaking, for permanent improvements on the farm, nor for its increased value owing to good cultivation.

"Relation of Landlord and Tenant.—The landlords are, generally speaking, alien in religion, language, politics, and some in race, even from the tenants, and there is but little direct communication between one class and the other. The Welsh farmer has, therefore, nothing to hope for without the intervention of Parliament.

Chairman—continued.

"Commons.—From inquiries I have made I am given to understand that there were hundreds of acres of common lands in this parish formerly, but they have all been enclosed now and added to the great estates around.

"Amalgamation of farms.—There are several instances in the neighbourhood of small farms being thrown together into one. The consequence is, inferior cultivation, less produce, and the employment of less labour. When this is the case, labourers' cottages and sometimes farm buildings are allowed to fall into decay."

Lord Kenyon.

10,923. What is the size of your farm?—76 acres.

10,924. What is the rent you paid?—40*l.* 10*s.*

10,925. How long have you been there?—I am there since 1851.

10,926. That is 42 years. Has your rent been raised in that time?—No.

10,927. Was your farm sold with other farms on the Madryn estate?—No.

10,928. Why?—I cannot say why. There I was, and there I am still.

10,929. Was it put up for sale?—No, it was not on the list for sale.

10,930. Could you tell me whether you think those tenants who bought their holdings on the Madryn estate were better off than you are or not?—I would not venture to buy.

10,931. Then you think you are better off as you are?—I understand so from those who have bought and who are in my neighbourhood.

10,932. Can you give me the date of the Madryn sale?—No, I cannot say.

10,933. You say that commons have been added to the neighbouring estates?—Yes, as I have been informed by tradition.

10,934. Then that is merely hearsay, you cannot give any instances?—No, except that the walls or fences speak something.

10,935. You give no instances; you really only speak from hearsay?—Yes.

10,936. You say, "All the improvements on "the land are generally executed by the tenant "himself"?—That is so with me yonder.

10,937. You say, "I can give instances where "farms have been re-valued, and the rents raised "after improvements." Will you give those instances?—Hirdre on the Cefn Amwlch estate. I cannot think of another instance just at this moment.

10,938. You say that thousands of acres in Lleyn are practically waste land. Have they been cultivated and lapsed into waste land?—Most of them appear not to have been under cultivation at any time.

10,939. What do they require, is it draining or what? What sort of land is it?—I do not consider all the waste lands common.

10,940. I am not asking about commons, I ask what sort of land it is?—It is level for the most part; a good part of it is level, but it produces long grass.

10,941. What would be the best thing to do, to drain it or what?—In the first place if you wish farmers to do it, you ought to give them some security.

10,942. But I want to know how it is to be done, without considering whether it is done by the landlord or by the farmer?—Clear the land first of all.

10,943. Then you think it would pay for cultivation?—Oh yes, a good part of it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,944. Do you know a good many of the tenant farmers of your district?—Yes, in my own neighbourhood.

10,945. Do you know something of their circumstances from conversations which you have had with them?—Yes, I had a little.

10,946. Is it true to say of them, as has been said of farmers in districts of Merionethshire, that they find that their life is a struggle to pay rent?—Yes, under the present circumstances at any rate.

10,947. Do you think that many of the men whom you have talked to, many of the men whom you know who are farming land, are able to save any money or have been during the last few years able to save any money?—It is impossible.

10,948. You have been good enough to suggest some remedies to improve the relations between landlord and tenant, do you think that many of the tenant farmers or most of the tenant farmers agree with you in desiring those remedies?—I believe so.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,949. How do you explain that farmers are in terror of losing their farms?—We as Welshmen crave land greatly; we have a sort of craving for land.

10,950. Why do you do so?—The landlords somehow or other occupy a higher position than we do, and we are afraid of offending them; perhaps there might be something in me to attain it. There is something like this in it; we measure every one by his own measure.

10,951. Is that the reason why so many have bought their holdings?—Yes, they prefer some kind of security than to be as they are.

10,952. You say that some of them have the money to pay for their holdings?—It is very likely, but I do not know where they get the money; they did not get it from the land.

10,953. Much of it was borrowed, I suppose?—It is very likely.

10,954. Those that had money, do they farm better or worse than the tenant farmers around them?—They farm better. I have evidence of that near me.

10,955. How are we to reconcile that with what we have heard elsewhere. We have heard elsewhere that they farmed rather worse if anything?—I am not going to pretend to reconcile the two; I only mention what I know.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

10,956. Will you kindly name those that you know that do farm well?—By me, on my borders, there is a part of the Madryn estate, you would scarcely recognize or know the place since the time it was sold, and that a very short time.

10,957. Is it better or worse?—It is far better.

10,958. Then you look alone to Parliament to remedy these things, do you?—Yes, I do.

Mr. Richard Jones.

10,959. You say in your evidence that owing to the seasons you are not able to command the same price for your oats and your barley. Have the seasons affected you in other ways?—Yes, even with my stock.

10,960. In what way?—More sickness with my stock in wet weather, and damp weather as well, and storms—during wet weather and storms.

10,961. Do you think the herbage is as rich now as it used to be?—Not this year, at any rate.

10,962. Did you have any losses in sheep during the last year?—I did not.

10,963. Had you any sheep?—Oh yes, I had sheep. I do not speak for anyone except myself.

10,964. Do you know of any one?—Those about me at Penllerch and the lower part of Edeyrn; Edeyrn being a parish or district.

10,965. You mention that the landlords have not taken this into consideration in making abatements?—I would think so, seeing that the abatements are only 10 per cent. That is only my own feeling on that point.

10,966. How many labourers do you employ in your place?—I work myself, and I have a permanent servant, and another servant occasionally.

10,967. Suppose you charged for your own labour and the labour of your own servants, the permanent one and the casual one, what would your labour bill be in a year?—Am I to charge for food?

10,968. No, exclusive of food?—I must get 50*l.* for myself and the servant, and that is very little to——

10,969. I simply want to know your opinion, because I see the opinion of another person has been quoted, and it states that 1*l.* for every 1*l.* of rent would be considered an average, and according to that your labour would be 10*l.* higher than the rent?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

10,970. According to that, either you have got too much labour or too little rent?—No; well I have got nothing to do but say how matters are.

Professor Rhŷs.

10,971. Did you say that you knew of thousands of acres or hundreds of acres of land that could be reclaimed?—Thousands of acres in Lleyn.

10,972. And the tenants would reclaim it if they had security of tenure?—I cannot say that, but I should say it could be done.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,973. Do you know of any land in this neighbourhood that makes you think that the Lleyn people would cultivate that unredeemed land?—Oh, yes.

10,974. On the mountain sides?—Yes, and on the lowlands too.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,975. Do you think it would pay a good rate of interest on the outlay?—Oh yes, provided the rent was not too high.

Mr. Griffiths.

I will read this extract from Mr. Lleufer Thomas's Report to the Royal Commission on Labour. Speaking of the farmers of the Pwllheli Union, he says: "They take a more "active part in farm work than their Anglesey "brethren, and there is not in the district that "social gap separating the labourer from the "farmer, which I observed in the Anglesey and "the Ruthin Unions. Their thrift and industry "is evidenced by the way in which they have "brought into cultivation the rough land on the "mountain sides, adding year by year to the "cultivated area a strip out of the waste land "of the farm, using for the purpose the spade "where the plough could not be worked."

Chairman.

10,976. I have two or three questions put in. Mr. Owen Wynne asks: "What amount of stock "do you keep, cows, sheep, and so forth"?—I used to keep seven cows, two horses, and about 15 to 18 sheep.

10,977. "Do you know one instance of a "tenant declining to give evidence for fear of "his landlord? If so, will you give his name"?—No; I know of several, but I cannot give the name of any.

10,978. Question by Mr. Vincent: "In what "districts are the thousands of acres of land "reclaimable you name?—You start at Four Crosses, and then you might go there to Lleyn, and so on. There are hundreds of acres in the neighbourhood of Carn Madryn which might be well cultivated, just as they cultivate the sides of mountains—good land.

10,979. Question by Mr. Vincent: "There are "three farms called Hirdre on Cefn Amwlch; "which of them do you mean"?—I refer to Hirdre in the occupation of Morris Roberts.

10,980. Another question by Mr. Vincent: "In relation to land hunger, I understand that "the son of a deceased tenant usually succeeds. "Will you tell me what usually becomes of the "other sons of the farmer, if he has any; what "sort of occupations do they pursue"?—When the deceased farmer has children or other sons, some go to sea and some go to mountain.

Mr. Richard Jones.

His answer simply implies a general scattering.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN JONES called and examined (through an interpreter).

Chairman.

10,981. This statement (indicating) is your evidence, and you have corrected it as explained to you in Welsh?—Yes.

The following statement was then read by the interpreter:—

"I am a farmer living at Penrhyn Ydyn, Llanfihangel bachellaeth and Llanbedrog, and the acreage of my farm is 120 acres. Rent, 125*l.*

"I am considerably troubled by game. The landlords around me are game preservers. They farm the game and let them to different people, who of course make the best they can out of them.

"The consequence is that they do considerable damage to my fences and to my crops and pasture.

"I have seen scores of pheasants on my corn at one time, and during a late season, when my corn was on the ground for a considerable time, the damage was a very serious matter.

"The gamekeepers are very strict, and they used to give me strict orders not to lay so much as a trap within a yard of the boundary fence of the woods.

Chairman—continued.

"I remember on one occasion setting a man to repair a fence which the rabbits had pulled down, and as he was finishing at one end the keepers with dogs and ferrets were ripping it up at the other end. My fellow tenants complain of exactly the same thing.

"This is a very general and a very serious grievance in these parts, but as a rule it is of no avail for farmers to complain.

"I made some complaints to the agent once, and they told myself and two or three others to send in our bill. We sent our joint bill in to the man who had the shooting, but never heard anything more about it.

"The Ground Game Act of 1880 is practically worthless to the farmer. Very few farmers care even to have a gun in their possession, lest their masters should suspect them of having designs on the game.

"Latterly the Madryn Estate was thrown into Chancery, and the receiver has given us a notice that unless we signed a paper giving up our rights to the rabbits, they would not make us any abatement in the rent.

"Speaking generally, I say that the condition of the Welsh farmer is most unsatisfactory.

"I would like to speak more particularly of the lack of security.

Chairman—continued.

"Generally speaking all improvements on the land are executed by the tenant; the landlord never touches the land.

"Rents have been raised considerably throughout the district during the last 50 years.

"Notwithstanding the distress that prevails amongst farmers of late years, owing to the fall in prices and depression in trade, there has been no reduction in the rents but abatements varying from 10 per cent. to 25 per cent. have been granted."

Lord Kenyon.

10,982. What estate is your farm on?—The Madryn estate.

Mr. Seebohm.

10,983. You spoke about the estate being under a receiver of the Court of Chancery?—Yes.

10,984. You do not find the receiver of the Court of Chancery a better landlord than a private landlord would be?—No, not as good.

10,985. Is it not the fact that a man who is bound to keep within the law strictly must be a worse landlord than a man who, if he has kindly feelings, can make concessions to his tenants?—I prefer living by my landlord, so as to be able to go and state my grievances to him.

10,986. Would you rather be under a land court than under your landlord?—No, I prefer being under a landlord.

10,987. There would be some danger that the land court would have to keep within the lines of the law, and might be obliged to be more harsh than your landlord would?—Yes, according to what I think.

Mr. Griffiths.

10,988. Do you object to game farming?—Yes.

10,989. Why?—Because it incurs great losses.

10,990. Would you not like to rent the game yourself from the landowner?—I did not complain so much when my own landlord came down to shoot, but I did when another made a profit from it by rearing game on the farm for profit commercially, when he reared about 400 yearly.

10,991. What difference would it make to you whether it was the landlord or anybody else?—I should think my landlord would make some effort to give me compensation, but as for the man to whom the game is let, he tries to make profit from the farm, just as I do.

10,992. Why did not you enter an action against that man, whoever he is?—We did, within these last six years, but another one has taken it now. I and Mr. Owen Williams, and Mr. John Jones, went to Mr. Pughe Jones and Mr. Edwards the agent, and they directed us to send our bill to the gentleman who reared game yonder.

10,993. What became of the bill. Did he pay it?—No.

10,994. Why did you not insist upon having the amount of damage done?—He went away just at the time from yonder.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

10,995. Are you aware that you had an equal right to the rabbits as he?—Yes, I had, but I had not the same means for catching them as he had.

10,996. What do you mean by that?—Because he kept men simply in order to catch the game.

10,977. Is it true, because you would not sign the agreement giving up your rights to the game, that you could have no abatement of rent?—I could not say. They refused to pay 2*s.* abatement in the pound.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

10,998. You answered a question which Mr. Seebohm put to you about the difference between having a receiver of the Court of Chancery as landlord and an ordinary landlord. Do you know anything about the powers of a receiver of the Court of Chancery?—No, I do not. I think I replied the other way.

10,999. I thought you did not understand the question. However, you do not know what the powers of a receiver are?—No, I do not.

11,000. With regard to Mr. Seebohm's suggestion as to the difference of treatment by a land court placed over you, and the treatment you would expect to receive from a landlord, you gave an answer to that?—Yes.

11,001. I want to put this case to you. Supposing your landlord said to you, "I am going to "raise the rent 10 per cent., and I consider that "the rent so raised will be a fair rent," and suppose you say to him, "No, if you raise the rent "it will not be a fair rent, and I cannot pay it," supposing the landlord then gives you a notice to quit, do you think it would be a desirable thing for you to have a Court of Justice to go to to settle between you and your landlord what was a fair rent—whether the 10 per cent. rise was or was not fair?—Yes, if the rent was too high.

11,002. (The question was repeated by the interpreter.)—Yes, it would be a very good thing that the tenant might have fair play instead of many farmers running against each other to ruin the tenant.

Lord Kenyon.

11,003. Have you got any agreement?—No.

11,004. Then I imagine that you have got the game?—No, the game is not mine. The game has been let to a gentleman.

11,005. But if the landlord has not retained the sporting by agreement, you have the right to the game, I understand?—No, there is no sort of agreement between me and my landlord as to the game.

11,006. Then I think the remedy lies with you. I will not venture to interpret the law, but I venture to think that if the right to the sporting is not retained by the landlord in his agreement you would have the right to the game.

Professor Rhŷs

11,007. Have you read and studied the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

11,008. You do not know what your right is according to that Act ?—No, I do not.

11,009. Are many farmers, like yourself, gnorant of its provisions ?—Yes.

11,010. We have been told the other day that the farmers here know perfectly well what is in these Acts of Parliament that relate to their interests ?—I believe that there are very many who do not know anything.

11,011. You do not think that statement is at all true, do you, as a general statement ?—No, not as a general statement. Quite to the contrary.

Chairman.

11,012. I have two or three questions handed up. Mr. William George asks: "Your landlord "has always treated you as if the game were "his ?"—Yes, it has been let to another gentleman several times.

11,013. Mr. Pughe Jones asks: "Has your "rent ever been increased during the last 40 "years ?" No, I do not think so. It is just about the same.

11,014. Mr. Pughe Jones asks again : "Have "you not had the rabbits for years ?"—Yes, except when the farm was let to that gentleman from Llanbedrog who had them jointly with me.

11,015. Who held "it" ?—Who held the shooting.

11,016. "Has there been any interference "with you on taking the rabbits" ?—No, not at all, except warning me not to set traps or wires within a yard of the hedge of the woods where the bulk of the rabbits were.

Chairman—continued.

11,017. "Was any loss or damage suffered by "you from game except during Mr. Angerstein's holding" ?—Oh, yes, I have had a little loss every year, but I did not feel it so much as during that time when the game was being reared yonder.

Lord Kenyon.

11,018. How long did Mr. Angerstein have it ?—Three or four years, but he had taken the shooting for seven years, only he went away before.

Chairman.

11,019. Mr. William George asks: "Who let "the game and received the rent for it, you or "the landlord" ?—My landlord.

The Witness withdrew.

Chairman.

It may be for the convenience of gentlemen that I should state that the Commissioners have decided to meet again on the 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th of October, when we hope to finish Merionethshire. From the 9th to the 14th of the same month we propose to go to Llangefni for the whole of the Isle of Anglesey. Then, as we are given to understand that the landlords have now been able to get their evidence together, we propose to go back to Glamorganshire, which we visited before, and which we were unable to visit on account of the landlords' evidence not being ready ; we shall go there the week commencing October 30th.

Mr. RICHARD WILLIAMS called and examined (through an interpreter).

Chairman.

11,020. This statement (indicating) is your evidence, and you have corrected it as explained to you in Welsh ?—Yes.

The following statement was then read by the interpreter :—

"I live at Bodgadle, Pwllheli, and I wish to speak as to the farm of Erwsuran, Penmorfa, near Portmadoc.

"My father took this place in 1820, and at that time the acreage was 300 acres. Rent 100*l.*

"Half of the farm is poor land and rocks. My father improved the farm by walling, draining, and cultivating the land, as well as other ordinary repairs on buildings, to which it is right to say that the landlord contributed.

"My mother and self were co-executors after my father's death, and for eight years there was no change, when my mother also died, and I became sole tenant. I then was tenant for 16 years, and there was no change in the rent for 12 years, at the end of which term it was advanced to 150*l.* Mr. J. H. Roberts, clerk of the peace (Carnarvonshire), who is the owner of two-thirds of it, and it was worth that money.

Chairman—continued.

After then I was losing money every year, and I gave notice to quit as soon as I got a farm to suit me. About 10 years before I left I spent 50*l.* in rebuilding a cowhouse without getting a penny. When I left I did not get anything for the improvements my father and self made upon the farm. Owing to the improvements we made, I consider we have it by about 20*l.* a year.

General remarks.

"The small cottages are allowed to go to ruins by the landlords. They refuse to repair them, so many of the best labourers leave us for the quarries and the towns. What we want is security for our tenements and payment for the improvements we execute.

"I give this as a statement of facts, and not as a complaint against my landlord."

Lord Kenyon.

11,021. Did you make any application for compensation ?—No, I did not.

Mr. Griffiths.

11,022. Did your landlord build or drain on any of your farms ?—No.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

11,023. You say that the best labourers leave?—Yes, they leave for the quarries, and go away to better places.

11,024. Old people and young lads are the only ones employed on the farm?—No, it is not quite so. A man who has worked on a farm for 30 to 35 years feels some interest in that farm, and when the rent of the farm is too high he loses heart.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

11,025. What year was the rent raised?—13 or 14 years ago.

11,026. Who do you expect to give you the security you demand?—My landlord.

11,027. (Question repeated).—I do not know, unless my landlord gives it, or a Land Court.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ELLIS WILLIAMS called. Examined through an interpreter.

The following statement of the witness was read.

See 12,338–12,392.

11,028. "I now live in a small farm called Glyddyn. I have been living there for the past 10 years. My father was a mason and I have been working as such all my life.

"I have been working for 25 years on the Glynllifon (Lord Newborough's) estate, and used to reside at Abererch. I was brought up at a small place called Penrhyn Huddygl, which lies between Tanycoed and Broom Hall near Abererch. I was the eldest of 14 children.

"When my father went to Penrhyn Huddygl to live (about 67 years ago) the house was one built of mud and roofed and thatched with straw. The rent was 2*l.* a year. But as my father was a mason he built a new house at Penrhyn Huddygl entirely at his own cost. The old mud house was falling down. I helped him. I had previous to that time been working as a mason with my father and had earned 10*l.* whilst improving the Pwllheli Embankment. This was the first instance of my saving my earnings. However, as my father was building a new house, I gave him the money to carry on the work. I never received a penny of them back, neither did my father get compensation for his work. My father also put a slate roof over a stone building, converting it thereby into a barn and cowhouse. He never was compensated for this nor for the carrying of several loads of stones, &c. for the works.

"Soon after this my father had five acres of uncultivated land in addition to the house and his rent was increased to 6*l.* a year as the five acres mentioned were let to my father along with the house. The rent of the other land from which this was taken being at that time 7*s.* 6*d.* an acre.

"Immediately we got possession of these five acres we set to to enclose and improve the land. We ploughed, drained, and gave it lime. We had great work in draining and cultivating. We paid for carrying scores of loads of stones to make a main drain which ran through the land. We had the stones at Penarfynydd Bach and Rhydynog, and paid 6*d.* a load to the carter for carrying them.

"We paid the rent to Mr. Owen Evans regularly. Because of something or other (I believe it was our pigs trespassed on Ty'n Coed, the adjoining farm), Mr. Evans got angry with my father and gave him a notice to quit. The effect of this on my father was that he never afterwards walked a healthy step. He saw his labour and money spent in vain. Dr. Williams, Talarvor, said that his heart was so upset that he would never be the same as before.

"My father was allowed to remain there afterwards, and my mother lived there with my brother Owen for about four years after my father's death. But Mr. Owen Evans deprived my brother of the land and only let him the house and garden at 4*l.* rent.

"The land is now part of Tynycoed, a place farmed by Mr. Owen Evans, the landlord himself. He gave no compensation to our family for their work and money expended, when the land was taken from my brother Owen Williams. The house was held by my brother Owen for several years, and he paid the rent to Mr. Evans himself at Broom Hall. When my brother Owen complained that the rent was too high, having regard to the fact that the house was built by our father and that the rent was formerly only 2*l.*, Mr. Evans replied that in future Owen Williams would have to pay to the steward at the "Black Lion." My brother re-married and left the place for "Rhosydd." Every effort was made that his eldest daughter, who was just married, might be allowed to take the house. I promised, inasmuch as the place was my old home, to become responsible for everything, but Mr. Evans said that his son, Mr. Lloyd Evans, wanted the house for his gamekeepers.

"Now Mr. Evans is reaping the benefit of the improvements executed by my father and myself, and one of his men lives in the house built by us, but we never received anything in respect of such improvements.

"My father, by his will, expressed a desire that I should live in the house to keep up the old home for my mother. I went, with my mother, after my father's death, to see the landlord, and showed him the will, I told him that I would probably take care of my mother even if my father had not mentioned it in his will. After my mother's death the land was taken away."

Sir John Llewelyn.

11,028*a*. Did you ask for a lease?—Mr. Evans could not afford to give me a lease then.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

11,029. Do you say Mr. Evans had no means to give you a lease then?—Mr. Evans was a tenant at Tynycoed when my father was building the house.

11,030. Did you attempt to get a lease?—No, I did not.

Mr. Griffiths.

11,031 Would you kindly give us the conversation that passed between you and Mr. Owen when you went to retake the house?—I asked for it for my brother's eldest daughter, and Mr. Evans said that Mr. Lloyd Evans wanted the house for his keepers.

11,032. How was the rent fixed at 4*l.*?—Mr. Evans himself did that with my brother.

11,033. What did he tell him?—"I am not "doing any injustice with you, Owen. How "much do you get for your couple of houses in "Llanbedrog?" "4*l.*," said Owen.

11,034. What was the difference in the houses?—This difference, that my father and myself built Penhrynhuddugh, every stone at our own expense, and my brother built these houses at his expense.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,035. Have you talked to other farmers in the neighbourhood often times about rents and so forth?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

11,036. What do you find in conversation with them—do you find that they complain that their rents are too high?—Yes, according as the market is now it is very difficult for everyone to pay the rents.

11,037. Before the recent depression did the tenant farmers in this district that you know find it difficult to pay their rents?—Some had and others had not.

11,038. What do say with regard to the majority?—It is a general complaint throughout the country.

11,039. Were the farmers in those days, even in days when times were much better than they are now, able to save anything with which to pay their rent?—I was a mason then.

Lord Kenyon.

11,040. You said just now that Mr. Evans could not afford or was not in a position to grant a lease. Was Mr. Evans a tenant farmer then?—Yes, he was a tenant then, but he would do his best as another neighbour to my father.

11,041. Then how did he become a landlord?—He married the heiress of the Broom Hall estate.

Chairman.

11,042. This is a question put by Mr. Vincent. "How long ago was the house built"?—The house was built in the year 1840.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Brynmor Jones here took the chair.

Mr. David Jones called. Examined through an interpreter.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Mr. David Jones, Brynllefrith, Llangybi, farmer.

"I wish to speak more particularly as to the political persecution of their tenants by the landlords.

See evidence of next witness.

"I was a tenant of Mr. Ellis Nanney in the year 1868.

"I held the farm called Brynllefrithbach.

"My family had held this farm for generations like the majority of my co-tenants.

"I was a Liberal in politics, and when the election of that year came, great pressure was brought to bear on me to induce me to promise to vote for Mr. Douglas Pennant, the Conservative candidate.

"My landlord, Mr. Ellis Nanney, came here once and his agent twice, to press me to vote for the Conservative candidate, but I refused to do so. I remember well the last occasion the agent was with me. After trying to pursuade me for a long while, and finding it was of no use, he got up suddenly and went towards the door. Having got towards the door, he turned back again and said, 'I can assure you, David 'Jones, that it would be better for you to do as 'we ask. I cannot say at all what may happen 'after this.' I said I would not go, but that it was a matter of conscience with me. He thereupon went out.

"The election took place late in November 1868.

"The great question before the country then was the Disestablishment of the Irish Church.

"The very first opportunity afterwards, in common with all other tenants in these parts who had voted for Mr. Jones Parry, I received notice (I can put in that notice) to quit the farm. Some received them there and then and some afterwards.

"In a fortnight or so after receiving the notice I went to the agent.

"He said he could not do anything for me as I was a tenant of Mr. Ellis Nanney, junior, for whom he did not act on that day, and in that case, he wanted me to go there on a certain day and meet the landlord himself.

"I went there, but Mr. Ellis Nanney was not at home on the day fixed.

"The agent saw me and said that he had consulted Mr. Nanney and that Mr. Nanney had been obliged to go from home, but he said I should get the farm again upon signing an agreement to retake it, which I did. I never got a copy of this agreement. I had no agreement before. He told me not to make any fuss about the matter, as the notice was given only just to show who the master was.

"I said that I admitted that by paying the rent, but that voting was a matter of conscience. He made no reply to this.

"Finding that the other tenants who had also received notices were being gradually cleared out, I bought a small place close by which we could have to go to in case of emergency.

"After completing the purchase I went and informed the agent of it and said I had no intention of leaving my old home if they would let us stay on the same. He replied that there was not the slightest intention of turning us out. But the very first opportunity afterwards he gave me a notice to quit.

"After receiving this I expostulated with him and told him that it was now too late for me to build a house on the bit of land I had bought to go to in May.

"He promised to see Mr. Nanney once more, and after a good deal of pressure I was allowed to remain another half a year. No reason was ever given for turning me out. In fact, the agent positively refused to give me any reason. I heard for the first time that Mr. Ellis Nanney was a candidate for a seat in the County Council, but the reason for turning me out was that he (Mr. Nanney) thought I could not do justice to his farm and the bit of land I had bought.

"Brynllefrithbach was only 31 acres, and the land I had bought 18 acres only, and both nearly adjoining tenements with a road connecting the two.

"Neither the public nor myself ever believed that my eviction was due to anything but revenge for my action in the election of 1868.

"Looking back over that time to the present day I find those who then received notices have since almost without exception been cleared off the estate on some pretext or other.

"I had effected considerable improvements on the farm in walling, reclaiming bog-land, draining, building, &c.

"All the compensation received in respect of all this was 22*l.*, and this was paid some two years after I had left.

"The rent originally was 16*l.* 16*s.* in my father's time. But after my father had begun to improve it, the rent was raised to 20*l.* when Mr. Nanney's predecessor bought it.

"About the time I left, it was re-valued and the rent was raised to 25*l.*, that is an increase of 25*l.* per cent.

"I consider that the improved value of the farm was due entirely to the improvements I had executed.

"I consider that I increased by my improvements the freehold value of the farm to the extent of from 200*l.* to 300*l.*

"Suggestions for improvements of Land Laws:—

"Security for improvements.

"Security of tenure.

"Provision by means of a land court for fixing a fair rent.

"I think also the burdens on land should be lightened by the utilisation of the tithes for local and national purposes.

"I consider that farming has considerably deteriorated of late years, that is, the improvements are not executed on such an adequate scale, and the reclamation of waste land is not carried on as formerly for fear of having no compensation.

"I go about a good deal and have had an intimate knowledge of the country around, and I am strongly of opinion that the farming is of a very indifferent character. I attribute this to the sense of insecurity existing owing—

"(1) to the evictions of 1868.

"(2) to the sales of land which have since taken place.

"I have seen the Gwynfryn Estate agreement of tenancy, and consider it unsatisfactory in many respects.

"The tenants are too much afraid of their landlords to come here and speak out openly before you to-day.

"There is no co-operation of any sort amongst farmers in these parts, the reason being that they have been rendered timid by the masters' high-handed conduct towards them, and mistrust one another.

"It is a matter of life and death almost for the Welsh farmer to retain his farm, as if he loses that which he has, it is practically impossible for him to get another in Wales, and it is out of the question for him to go to England where the language and life are so different from ours.

"In the first place, as to clause 4 of the agreement, I think it is unjust that the tenant who has only a yearly interest should have to bear the brunt of the expense of repairing buildings, and doing other permanent work on the farm without being entitled to compensation.

"As to improvements under clause 13, I think this proviso most inadequate. I consider that the tenant ought to be allowed compensation for general improvement in the condition of the farm, and that the compensation for specific permanent improvements ought to extend over a considerably larger number of years, e.g., drains if properly made will do their work at the end of 50 years' time. This I can prove from my own experience. My opinion is that it is not right to tie valuers down to any specific number of years, but that they should be allowed to use their own discretion to value the improvement as it then stands, and at its then market value.

"I also consider the principle upon which compensation for drains is payable erroneous.

"As to clause 19, I consider it unfair that the tenant should in the last year be made to quit on the 1st of February, whereas the custom of the country allows him to stay on until the 25th March.

"And generally I say that it is not right to tie the tenant down to a specific course of farming, as is done here. The farmer himself ought to know best how to farm, and he should only be subject to a general prohibition against bad farming.

"I know that there was considerable objection amongst the best farmers to sign this agreement, but they had to do so or leave their farms.

"As to the reservation of some fish and wild fowl under clause 10, I consider it unjust that the landlords should reserve this unrestricted right for themselves 'and other people' to hunt these on the tenant's land. Tenants suffer considerably from the game, and all the more so because they dare not show any displeasure, especially on this point, which is a sacred one with the landlord."

Mr. J. M. Griffiths.

11,043. If I rightly understand, you had some 22*l.* from the landlord for the repairs, did you not?—Yes, that is the sum I received.

11,044. You consider that you had spent 300*l.*?—I consider that I had spent at least from 200*l.* to 300*l.*

11,045. How do you account for farming deteriorating in this neighbourhood at present?—Because I believe from what I know of the country that there are not so many permanent improvements being carried on.

11,046. Why are there not so many permanent improvements being carried on?—It appears to me, so far as I am able to believe, that there is a want of confidence between the farmers and the landlords, and because the farmers have no security that there will be a sufficient compensation for their improvements.

11,047. Is that the reason why so many of them buy their farms?—The chief reason why farmers buy their farms is because the hereditary estates are being sold, and the farmers prefer buying their own holdings, if they possibly can in any way, than to lose their homes.

11,048. Can you give the date at which you and the other farmers were asked to sign this agreement?—I was not on the estate at the time when that agreement was signed, so that I am not able to give the date.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,049. In the margin there is the following statement: "I heard for the first time Mr. Ellis "Nanney was a candidate for a seat in the "County Council, but the reason for turning "me out was that he, Mr. Ellis Nanney, thought "I could not do justice to his farm and the bit "of land I had bought"?—Yes.

11,050. May I ask if the fact of Mr. Ellis Nanney coming out as a candidate for the County Council had anything to do with turning you out of the farm?—This is how the question arose At a meeting in connexion with the election to the County Council somebody asked a question about me (I was not present at the time) with regard to my eviction from Brynllefrithfach, and as it was told to me the reason why I was evicted was because I could not do justice with my own property as well as his.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

That is all I have to say on that question so far as I know now.

11,051. That is not a direct answer to the question. I asked whether the probability of Mr. Ellis Nanney coming out as a candidate for the County Council had anything to do with turning you out from that farm?—Nothing at all, because I had been turned out of my farm some few years before that.

11,052. Will you state in what years your rent was first advanced?—The rent was raised the first time before the sale of the Plashên estate.

11,053. About what year?—About the year 1844.

11,054. Was that the time it was raised from 16 guineas to 20*l.*?—No. I was young then, and I am not quite sure to what extent the rent was raised at that time.

11,055. When was it raised from 16 guineas to 20*l.*?—The rent was raised from the time the estate was sold. I am not quite sure how high the rent was raised on the valuation of the estate before the estate was sold, but when it was sold the rent was raised above that which was the rent before to 20*l.*

11,056. When was it raised from 20*l.* to 25*l.*?—The time I was obliged to leave the farm in 1878.

11,057. Has there been a good deal of property changing hands in this neighbourhood?—Not so much extra; there has been a good deal during my lifetime.

11,058. How do you think it has affected the question of rent?—The buyer wanted so much interest on the money or the capital which he expended on the farm.

Mr. Seebohm.

11,059. Why do you object to the clause in this agreement fixing the time of entry of an incoming tenant as the 1st February?—For this reason; mainly because it is the time in this neighbourhood of Eifionydd to enter a farm on the 25th March if he is removed from one estate to another estate. But if he removed from one holding on a particular estate to another holding on the same estate, then my objection loses force.

11,060. Is not the effect of the entry on the 1st February that the incoming tenant does his own ploughing?—That would be beneficial to the incoming tenant, but in my opinion it would certainly be a loss to the outgoing tenant.

Professor Rhŷs.

11,061. I understood that you bought a small piece of land because you were afraid of being disturbed in your holding?—It was so.

11,062. Buying land under those circumstances would tend, would it not, to make you pay a higher price than you otherwise would do for a piece of land?—It would appear so at any rate; at least I bought the land when land was very dear in the year 1876.

11,063. So you would say, as I understand you, rightly or wrongly, that the insecurity of tenure tends to make those who buy their own land offer too much for it?—As the circumstances are, so it will be, so far as I understand the question.

Mr. Seebohm.

11,064. I want to ask one more question with reference to the hardship of tenants being obliged to, or being induced to, leave after the election of 1868, on account of the way in which they voted. Would you say that after the Ballot Act there is now no longer a great grievance to be feared upon that point?—The pressure on an elector in canvassing is so great that the Ballot Act is practically ineffective, and the belief is that the elector will not derive that benefit from the Ballot Act until canvassing is abolished.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,065. A question by Mr. Vincent, "Will you "name the agent who threatened you, and say "if he is alive?"—The late Mr. Evan Parry. He has been buried many years ago.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

11,066. A question by Mr. Evans, "Did not "you buy a farm of your own, and did not "Mr. Nanney's agent tell you you might choose "whether you would farm your own farm or his, "but that he could not have you moving produce "from one farm to the other"?—He did not.

11,067. A question by Mr. William George, "Did Mr. Ellis Nanney give any reason for "evicting you until the recent County Council "election."?—Not at all.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

The Commissioners did not propose to take Mr. Ellis Nanney's evidence at length to-night, but it has been intimated to me that Mr. Ellis Nanney would like to deal with the statements of this witness at once. Mr. Ellis Nanney may do it exactly as he likes. Either he may reserve what answers he wishes to give to the statements of this witness till to-morrow, or he may give evidence with reference to this point now.

Mr. ELLIS NANNEY called and examined.

See above.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,068. I think you were in the room when Mr. David Jones gave his evidence, were you not?—Yes.

11,069. And I understand that you desire now simply to make a statement as to the portions of his evidence that affect your conduct, or alleged conduct?—Yes.

11,070. We shall be glad to hear anything you like to say upon that if you please?—Yes. Simply that in 1868, so far as I remember, I asked him if he would see his way to vote one way, but I did not use pressure. I am speaking from memory.

The interpreter translated this answer into the Welsh language.

Mr. David Jones.

May I be allowed to say something now?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,071. No. (To the witness.) Is that all you wish to say? Do you wish to state the substance of the conversation that you had?—Well, no, I cannot remember it all this time back. I may say myself that I have asked a great number of people if they could see their way to vote in a certain way, but I have never put any pressure upon anybody, because I knew I had no right to.

11,072. I do not find that he alleges any improper pressure from you before the election?—I understood from him that that was so. I may be wrong; I am subject to correction at your hands.

11,073. He says, "My landlord, Mr. Ellis "Nanney, came here once, and the agent twice,

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

"to press me to promise to vote for the Con-"servative candidate."—Yes.

11,074. What was the nature of it? Did you simply canvass in the ordinary way, do you say, or what took place?—That was so.

11,075. Then you were not present when the agent had the second interview with him?—The second interview?

11,076. There were two interviews with the agent, and one with you, according to this gentleman's recollection?—I had personally one, so far as I remember, not another I believe.

11,077. It seems that notice to quit was given shortly after the election. That is what he also alleges?—Yes, I do not remember it myself.

11,078. Here is the notice to quit (handing same to witness)?—Yes.

11,079. Have you any remark to make with regard to that notice? What is the date of it?—The 28th day of September.

11,080. Will you put it in?—Yes. With reference to the signature to this, I cannot swear to that being my writing.

11,081. You are not upon oath, of course. Have you any reasonable doubt that this is a notice issued by you and signed by you?—Of course, my then agent is dead.

11,082. But that purports to be your signature. What is the date of the notice?—It is dated the 28th day of September 1869.

Professor Rhŷs.

11,083. What is the date of issue of that notice?—I have read the whole thing, it is a notice to quit on the 25th of March 1869.

The following notice to quit was read:—

"To Mr. David Jones, farmer. I do hereby give you notice that you must quit and deliver up the quiet and peaceable possession of all the messuages, tenements, lands, and premises which you hold under me, situate, lying, and being in the parish of Llanarmon or elsewhere in the county of Carnarvon, at or upon the 25th day of March now next ensuing, or whenever else your present year's holding expires. Whereof you have this notice dated the 28th day of September 1869, from your landlord, H. J. Ellis Nanney."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,084. It has been also stated that other notices were sent out to other tenants?—By whom?

11,085. About the same date?—To my tenants?

11,086. Yes, some then and some afterwards?—I do not remember them.

11,087. I am only trying to refresh your memory?—Will you allow me to explain?

11,088. Yes?—I owned the Plashên property then, not the Gwynfryn property. I came into the Plashên estate in 1866 on my coming of age. I did not own the whole property. I do not remember any on the Plashên estate.

11,089. That, I take it, is what you wish to state?—That is so.

11,090. Have you any further information to give bearing upon the evidence of Mr. David Jones?—No, except that the agent of that time is dead, and I do not know what took place between Mr. David Jones and the agent.

11,091. I might perhaps ask you this question, why a notice to quit was given, the notice to quit that is put in and signed by you?—That notice to quit in 1869, do you mean?

11,092. Yes?—The reason why he had notice to quit the farm was that he bought this other piece of land.

11,093. But there is a notice to quit in 1869. He did not buy the other piece of land till long afterwards, as I understand his evidence?—That is so. As I said before, I do not remember doing that, and what took place took place between him and my land agent.

Mr. Griffiths.

He stated that he took it under agreement at that time.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

It may be so, but this is Mr. Ellis Nanney's own handwriting at this time. I do not wish to press him any more than as to what he knows about this estate.

Witness.

I really cannot tell about this handwriting; it does look like mine. I can only say that I do not remember it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

11,094. What was the explanation offered by you with respect to the other notices; I did not hear very well?—The other notices?

11,095. The other alleged notices to quit which had been served on other tenants?—At that time, sir?

11,096. Yes, at that time?—I merely explain that at that time I was not the owner of the whole estate. I was only owner of Plashên estate and some property in Merionethshire. I came of age in 1866. My father did not die then. He died in 1870, so that I was not possessed of the whole estate until after 1870.

11,097. Then really the notices to quit were served owing to a change in the possession of the estate?—No, I do not say that. I was merely explaining the circumstances of the case, because I thought that the gentlemen might think that I had always been in possession of both properties.

Mr. Griffiths.

11,098. Is that formal notice similar to those that are used on your estate?—I cannot tell you that at this time.

11,099. Is not that the printed form of notice that you generally use?—I cannot tell you. I have seen that form before, but I have not had much to do with it; in fact those things have generally gone through the agent's hands.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,100. Question by Mr. William George, "Brynllefrith was part of the Plashên estate, "was it not?"—Yes.

11,101. Question put by Mr. William George, "Was the 25th March then next the first pos- "sible date upon which David Jones could "have been evicted after the General Election "of 1868?"—The 25th March was after November 1868.

11,102. Perhaps you will look at the question which is handed in (handing question to the witness)?—The 25th March 1869.

11,103. Will you see what the question is?—Yes.

11,104. That seems to be so?—Yes.

11,105. That is all, I think. We will hear your further evidence to-morrow?—Yes.

Re-examined. 11,183

The witness withdrew.

Mr. RICHARD OWEN called and examined through an interpreter.

The interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"I am a retired farmer, living at Mynydd Ednyfed, Criccieth, and have been farming for 50 years. I went to Dolwgan in 1853, and thence to Mynydd Ednyfed, near Criccieth. Dolwgan belonged to Miss Wynn, of Ruthin. Mynydd Ednyfed belonged to Lord Harlech. I spent a deal of money, at least 200*l.*, in putting the drains and fences in order. The place was in a dilapidated and disordered state when I took possession. Then I spent some money on farm buildings and in putting the house in a water-tight condition. When thinking of retiring a few years ago I wrote to tell Lord Harlech's agent of my intention, and asked him if he would accept a good man as tenant. He replied that he had plenty of applications for farms, and that he would select a tenant of his own for Mynydd Ednyfed. The consequence was that I got nothing for goodwill, and nothing was paid me for improvements. I consider that I had improved the farm to the extent of at least 500*l.*, and, moreover, that if I had been allowed to select a new tenant of my own, I would have got 200*l.* more for my stock and as goodwill than I actually received.

"The rent of Mynydd Ednyfed to my predecessor was 94*l.*, but it was re-valued in my time and raised to 112*l.* 10*s.*

"I have dealt in agriculture all my lifetime, and know very well the state of things in these parts for the last 50 years, and I have the following general observations to make:—

"(1.) That the rent of nearly every farm in the district has been raised, and, in some cases, raised considerably, during that time. For instance, there is Dolwgan, the farm I once occupied.

"Its old rent was 105*l.* then it was raised to 110*l.* The farm was then sold and bought by Messrs. Huddarts, of Brynkir, and they raised the rent to 320*l.* I left when I understood that it was about to be sold. Messrs. Huddart only gave 5,200*l.* for the place. There is another small farm near Criccieth called Tir ucha, the property of Mr. G. H. Owen, Ymwlch. The rent 25 years ago was 10*l.* 10*s.* It is now 29*l.*, the landlord paying the taxes, amounting perhaps to 2*l.* or 3*l.*

"There is Ystum-cegid, again, a farm near Garn Dolbenmaen belonging to Lord Harlech, where the rent was raised 29*l.*

"(2.) As a rule all improvements have been made by the tenant. It is impossible to get landlords to spend any money on the farm, the only thing they will do is, when it becomes absolutely necessary to get fresh buildings on a farm, to build those. It is the rule on some estates (the Gwynfryn estate for instance) to give the materials only, the tenant paying for the labour.

"(3.) As a class the farmers live hard and work hard all their lives, the majority of them are able to save nothing beyond their stock.

"I consider that the landlord's power over the tenant is too absolute by a long way, and it is a well-known fact in Wales that the landlord does not hesitate to exercise this power if his tenant gives him umbrage.

"No farmer in our neighbourhood doubts this since the General Election of 1868, and I can give specific instances to prove that such is the case.

"There are several clauses in Lord Harlech's agreement which I object to, for instance: (1) There is the end of clause 1, which provides that the whole of the last year's rent shall be recoverable beforehand at any time after notice to quit shall have been given or received. Then there is undue interference with the tenant's management of the farm. The farmer should have a freer hand in the cultivation of his farm. Then it is stated that the incoming tenant may use all the manure of every description, which is, of course, most unjust. And further, the agent is made umpire between the incoming and the outgoing tenant, another example of unfairness of spirit on the landlord's part towards the outgoing tenant."

Mr. Griffiths.

11,106. You speak of this Dolwgan farm. Did the landlord make any improvements in building or draining when he rose the rent from 110*l.* to 320*l.*?—He had bought the farm.

11,107 And the rent when he bought the farm was 110*l.*, was it?—Yes.

11,108. Did the tenant have any compensation?—No, nothing.

Mr. Richard Jones.

11,109. You complain that when you left Mynydd Ednyfed that you had spent 500*l.* in improvements, and you could not recover any of it?—No, 200*l.* on the land and a little on the buildings.

11,110. Would you be satisfied if you could recover compensation for what you had spent, independent of goodwill?—Yes, I would be satisfied if I could get that which I have spent.

11,111. What do you want with goodwill?—I regarded it as goodwill getting that back unless there had been an agreement, there being no agreement as to compensation.

11,112. Am I to understand then, that you are satisfied, that if you can get compensation you do not want any goodwill?—Oh no, not at all, but to get compensation.

11,113. Are you in favour of the principle of goodwill as a general thing?—I am not in favour of goodwill, but I am in favour of full compensation.

Mr. Seebohm.

11,114. Upon the point of goodwill, if the outgoing tenant gets more by his being allowed to make his own agreement with the incoming tenant, and to get as much as you would have got, 200*l.* for goodwill, it means that the incoming tenant is handicapped to that extent, does it not?—I should think it would not be handicapping the incoming tenant, provided that the outgoing tenant had expended his money in a wise manner.

11,115. Now, what was his rent at the time he gave up the farm?—Do you refer to Mynydd Ednyfed fawr or to Dolwgan?

11,116. The farm that you gave up and would have got 200*l.* for goodwill, if you could have made your bargain with the tenant?—That is Mynydd Ednyfed fawr. That is 112*l.* 10*s.*

11,117. Do you know what rent the incoming tenant paid?—I believe it was the same rent.

11,118. Then if you had had to pay 200*l.* for goodwill, it would have been the same thing to you as raising your rent from 112*l.* 10*s.* to 112*l.* 10*s.* plus the interest on 200*l.*?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

11,119. If that was allowed, would it not be a way of getting a competition rent put upon the incoming tenant?—I should think there would be less contest for land then.

11,120. If the incoming tenant always had to pay to the outgoing tenant what he could afford to pay under the land hunger which we have heard of, the interest on the sum which he would have to pay would raise the landlord's rent into a competition rent?—I would not expect 200*l.* unless the improvements on the farm were worth that amount.

11,121. That is not an answer to my question?—I do not know how I am to answer it otherwise.

11,122. The point I want to understand is this, that though it seems very fair to the outgoing tenant that he should receive whatever any incoming tenant was willing to pay him for coming in, at the same time the effect of it would be that all the incoming tenants under that arrangement would be coming in at a competition rent?—Somehow I cannot see that.

11,123. If an incoming tenant has not only to pay the old rent, but has to lose the interest on the money he pays for the goodwill to the outgoing tenant, he must be sitting at a higher rent than he otherwise would be?—I follow the circumstances you put.

11,124. Supposing an Act of Parliament were passed that every outgoing tenant might sell to the incoming tenant his holding without an increase of the rent, that is to say, with the old rent, would not that be a very unkind thing for the future incoming tenants?—I do not see that, if the things were sold for their price.

11,125. That is exactly what we come to. What we are trying to do is to prevent the rents of the farms in Wales from being raised up to the competition rent, which is the highest rent that the highest bidder would give for them?—The rent would be settled in the first place, and then if the outgoing tenant left 200*l.* in improvements when leaving it would only be right that he should have payment.

11,126. Yes, that is for improvements, but we are speaking of a payment for goodwill—something above improvements?—I said that I was not in favour of goodwill, but of compensation.

Mr. Griffiths.

11,127. Might I just interpose a question which I think will explain this. Would you be willing for goodwill to go to the wind if you were paid compensation for your improvements?—Yes, I am perfectly satisfied.

Mr. Seebohm.

11,128. Then we are quite agreed that there is not a wish amongst the tenant farmers here that there should be anything like the free sale of the tenancy or goodwill?—Yes, that is entirely my opinion.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,129. Might I ask what are your remedies for the ills which you have mentioned in your evidence?—That is one thing—a full compensation.

11,130. Anything else?—To be allowed to live on the farm if I farm it properly.

11,131. You mean by that, I take it, some kind of fixity of tenure?—Yes.

11,132. How do you propose to obtain fixity of tenure?—I think we would want a court.

11,133. What would the court do, according to your notion?—It would decide what a fair rent would be.

11,134. Simply decide that, or do you mean that the Court should prevent the turning out of a farmer so long as he paid the rent which the Court determined he ought to pay as a fair rent?—Yes, if he had paid his rent, and if he had cultivated his farm properly.

11,135. Do you not think that if that were done the result might be that the tenancy of the farm might become a kind of property—that there might be a kind of system of selling by one tenant to the other?—I am afraid I am not sufficiently good a lawyer to settle that.

11,136. Here is a question by Mr. Vincent, "Did you pay for manure when you went into "Mynydd Ednyfed fawr? Is it not the custom "to go out on the same terms as those on which "you entered?"—The farm had been let by auction for years before I went there, so there was no manure when I went there. It is the custom to go out on the same terms as those on which you enter.

11,137. Another question by Mr. Vincent is, "How near to Criccieth is the farm belonging "to Mr. Owen, Ymwlch, of which the rent has "been raised from 10 guineas to ——?"—Hardly half a mile.

11,138. Then there is a question by Mr. William George: "What is the new tenant, is "he not a Conservative in politics and canvasser "for the party at election times?"—Yes, he canvasses, at any rate.

11,139. What farm is this relating to now?—Mynydd Ednyfed fawr.

11,140. Then there is a question by Mr. Watkins: "Were you ever a tenant of Messrs. "Huddart's?"—No, never.

11,141. "How soon after you left Dolwgan "was it sold?"—As far as I can say, about seven years.

11,142. Was your successor under notice to quit from Miss Wynne?—I believe he was.

11,143. Then there is a question by Mr. Vincent, "Was not the new tenant previously a "tenant of Lord Harlech's?"—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow at 11.15.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Pwllheli, Carnarvonshire, 19th September 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELLYN, Bart.
Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.
Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. LLEWELYN ADAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

11,144. You are, I believe, a solicitor?—I am.

11,145. And clerk of the peace for the county of Denbigh?—Yes.

11,146. Where do you live?—At Ruthin.

11,147. Have you been in practice there for 45 years?—Yes.

11,148. And have you been deputy-clerk of the peace?—Yes.

11,149. You wish to speak as to what estates?—The Aberdunant estate, belonging to Mrs. Jones-Parry, and secondly the Tregayan estate, belonging to Mr. Thomas Edward John Lloyd of Plas Tregayan.

11,150. Please proceed to tell us what you wish to say?—I will take the Aberdunant estate first, as it is the larger estate of the two. Mrs. Jones-Parry resides, and has done for years, at Aberdunant, in the county of Carnarvon, and she is the owner of 2,458 acres of land, situate in the counties of Carnarvon, Merioneth, and Anglesey. I have acted as her estate agent for the last 21 years. I may say it is a very scattered estate. The lands are situate at Abererch, Clynog, Llangian, Llanbedrog, Llanengan, Llanfihangel-y-pennant, and Penmorfa, Llanaelhaiarn, Llanllyfni, Treflys, Trawsfynydd, Bangor, Llanllechyled, Llanallgo, Tregayan, Llangefni, Llanddyfnan, and Amlwch.

11,151. Most of the latter property being in Anglesey?—No, the larger portion is in Carnarvonshire. I may say that at the date of my appointment, in 1872, I had the estate re-valued; it had not been valued for many years, and I thought, for my own guidance, it would be well to get it re-valued. I consequently had it re-valued by a field valuation by Mr. Jenkins, residing in the neighbourhood of Ruthin. The result of his valuation was that there was an increase in the rent of about 80*l.* upon the whole of the estate. That increase was not acted upon, but there was, upon re-takings, an increase of some 40*l.* or 50*l.* only. The re-takings were all entered into upon written agreements, and a copy of the agreement I have here. The agreement was of the most simple and naked character.

Chairman—continued.

11,152. Will you hand a copy of the agreement to us? (A copy of the agreement was handed.)—May I say, my Lord, the only condition with regard to the cultivation of the land is that the land should be cultivated according to the custom of the country, and nothing more. The ordinary stipulations are contained in it, and with regard to the repairs the landlady does the outer repairs, the walls, roofs, and so on, and the tenant only the interior. There is a reservation of game, which however is now affected by the Ground Game Act. That reservation has very seldom been acted upon. No shooting has ever been let upon the Aberdunant estate, and the tenants have never been interfered with with regard to the mode in which they dealt with game. I may say, my Lord, also, that since 1873 I have never had occasion, with one exception, to give a single notice to quit, and I have never had occasion to distrain for rent during the whole of the period to the best of my recollection. The tenancies, although under agreements, are tenancies simply from year to year. I may say that on no occasion have I ever had any disagreement with a tenant, nor has the slightest ill-feeling ever existed between us. The payments of the rents have been most punctual and most regular, and time after time, audit after audit, I have had the pleasure of reporting not a single arrear upon the estate. That has occurred very, very frequently.

11,153. You have told us the acreage of that estate is 2,458 acres?—Yes, my Lord.

11,154. And the net rental is 1,624*l.*?—Yes,

11,155. And then, deducting an allowance of 10*l.* per cent., it brings it down to 1,462*l.* 6*s.*?—Yes, that is so.

11,156. Can you tell us anything about the other estates?—The only other estate I can give any information about is the Tregayan estate. That is also another scattered estate, situated in Pistyll, Bryncroes, Tregayan, Llangefni, and Amlwch.

Lord Kenyon.

11,157. Have you a copy of the agreement on the Tregayan estate?—I have.

11,158. Could we have that? (A copy was handed.)—May I add, with regard to the letting of the estates, it has been the invariable rule, and I do not know any instance in which it has been departed from, that where a tenant dies his nearest relative has generally the option, and generally does take the farm. I may say there are instances where a tenant has remained. I know of one by tradition, as being in the occupation of his farm, by himself and his predecessors, for a period of very nearly 500 years. In one or two instances the tenancies have been continuous for from 150 to 200 years.

11,159. In most instances, do you say?—In many instances. I may add during the time I have been the receiver of the rents there has been the introduction of certainly not more than three strangers upon the estate.

11,160. As to this reduction of 10 per cent., which I see here for this year, when did it begin?—It began in 1883, and has been continued ever since. In the years 1890 and 1891, when the reductions were not so much required, they were continued on both these estates, although on other estates they were discontinued.

11,161. Have you had any applications for abatements or reductions of rent?—Nothing beyond the 10 per cent. with one or two exceptions.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,162. I see nothing in the agreement—or rather, as I ought to call it, to be strictly accurate, the lease—put in about compensation for improvements?—I believe not. I may say all the repairs are done by the landlord whenever required, and no increase of the rent has ever been made in consequence of the outlay.

11,163. Are there no applications from tenants for further improvements, for fences and buildings?—No, none beyond those which occur every half year. Some few things are required and they are at once attended to.

11,164. Are the tenants mostly Welsh, or all Welsh?—They are almost, without exception, Welsh, but a considerable number can speak English.

11,165. And Nonconformists?—I never inquire into their religious belief.

Mr. Griffiths.

11,166. Do you consider that 10 per cent. is a sufficient allowance?—I consider it is quite sufficient with the moderate rent that exists upon the estate. The tenants are all perfectly satisfied, and I have had no complaints whatever.

11,167. We heard yesterday one tenant who said that if the whole rent was given him back he could hardly have paid his way with the present prices and the advances in labour?—I have no idea who that man can be.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

11,168. I think we have several instances besides?—Not upon the Aberdunant estate; I know nothing of the other estates. I confine myself to that estate and the Tregayan estate.

11,169. I think you have given the abatement for the last seven or eight years?—Since 1883. I think I am right in saying 1883.

11,170. Have you ever considered how much money you could have saved the tenant if you had given him a reduction of rent instead of an abatement at that time?—I have not considered that, because upon the Aberdunant estate it has been a reduction and not an abatement, therefore it never came into my consideration.

11,171. It is not an abatement of rent?—Not an abatement of rent.

11,172. A permanent reduction?—A reduction.

11,173. I am very pleased to hear you say so, so that the tenant had his rates reduced accordingly?—Certainly; it was done for the purpose.

Mr. Grove.

11,174. As to cottage accommodation for labourers on the property generally, do you consider that there is ample accommodation?—I consider there is.

11,175. Have any of the farms been consolidated?—No, none

11,176. Does your agreement interfere with section 33 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, as to the notice?—No; they are all entitled to 12 months' notice to quit.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,177. The document put in is dated before the Act of 1875?—Yes.

11,178. There is nothing in the lease, therefore, about contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, therefore the Act would apply?—Quite so.

Mr. Grove.

11,179. Is the document put in the document actually in use now?—The printed forms are always in use. Whether that one in particular is in existence now or not I cannot say. If a tenant dies, and his son or his widow comes in, there is no new agreement made; they are allowed to go on.

11,180. The point is this: since the passing of the Agricultural Holdings Act have you had a fresh agreement prepared, or do you still adopt the old agreement?—Yes, I still adopt the old agreement.

Sir John Llewelyn.

11,181. You say not more than three strangers have been introduced on to the estate. I think you subsequently modified that by saying they were not Englishmen but Welshmen. You say they are all Welshmen on the estate?—I believe with very few exceptions they are all Welsh.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

11,182. There are three strangers?—The probability is they were neighbours. When I say strangers, I mean they were not recent neighbours. The relations had failed, and therefore third persons came in.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. HUGH JOHN ELLIS NANNEY called and examined.

Chairman.

11,183. Where do you live?—At Gwynfryn, Criccieth.

11,184. You are going to give us evidence about your property?—Yes, within a radius of five or six miles from Gwynfryn. I may say Gwynfryn is six miles from here.

11,185. What is the size of the property?—My estate is about 7,000 acres.

11,186. I suppose mountain land and other land?—It is variable.

11,187. What is the usual date of entry?—The usual date of entry is the 25th of March.

11,188. Of course your tenancies are generally yearly tenancies. There are no demands for leases?—I offered leases to my tenants. I have not a very large demand for leases. I should be very glad if I might put one in as a specimen.

11,189. Yes, kindly hand it in? (A lease was handed in.)—That is a 60 years' lease, and the property is close to a station. I should be very glad if some of the Commissioners would view it for themselves. It is Tan-y-bryn, near Pen-y-groes.

11,190. Of course the condition of the farm depends upon the energy of the farmer, naturally. Are the changes frequent?—No.

11,191. You have an amicable arrangement when you take any land for planting?—Yes.

11,192. Have you any oppressive clauses, as they are called?—I have had no complaints. You mean in the agreement, I suppose?

11,193. Yes.—I have had no complaints. The agreement has worked well hitherto.

11,194. Are the penalising clauses common?—I have never heard any complaints of them.

11,195. Are the tenants given a copy of the agreement?—Yes, in English and Welsh.

11,196. And the rent is fixed at a gross sum?—Yes.

11,197. We may take it that the rents of the smaller tenants are higher than for the big farms?—Yes.

11,198. And the right of pasturage is taken into account when the rent is fixed?—Yes.

11,199. You have no services which you enforce from the tenants?—No.

11,200. No hauling of coal, for instance?—No.

11,201. And the rent is fixed upon the basis of valuation?—Yes.

11,202. Now tell us about the rents. Have they been raised in the last 15 years on the estate?—Some have been raised, and some lowered.

11,203 Have you got a statement of that?—I have a list of some of those reduced in the valuation of 1876.

Chairman—continued.

11,204. Will you put that in? (Handed in.) How about permanent reductions or temporary abatements of rent?—Question 57. "Have there been any—

(a) Permanent reductions, or

(b) Temporary abatements of rent?

(a) Yes.

(b) Yes.

If so, when and to what amount?

(a) Several rents were reduced in 1876, when my estates were re-valued."

11,205. Permanently reduced?—Yes. Then, "(b) 1886, 10 per cent.; 1887, paid all tithes; 1888, 10 per cent. and 17½ per cent. on tithes; 1889, 10 per cent. on rent, including 80 per cent. of tithes; Michs. 1892, 10 per cent. on plus tithe-rent; March 1893, 15 per cent."

11,206. Then you gave no formal notices?—No formal notice.

Sir John Llewelyn.

11,207. Some were permanent reductions, and some were temporary abatements?—When it was re-valued the reductions were permanent.

11,208. You have put in a list of those?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

11,209. Robert Thomas being the name of the valuer?—Yes, Robert Thomas was the name of the valuer, a practical farmer on an adjoining estate.

Chairman.

11,210. Then what do you say to Question 65, "Other charges on land or income derived from land?"—Tithes, paid by owner; land tax, paid by tenants; chief rent, paid by owner; local rates, paid by tenants; income tax, paid by owner.

11,211. The local rates, of course, have increased?—Well, I have made this remark: "I should say yes. They vary as to amount of increase in different parishes—tenants pay increase. Tenants have a voice in electing boards, &c., on whom depends, in a great measure, the amount of local rates."

11,212. Then what do you say as to Question 71, "What is the average size of farms in your district?"—I should say 30 acres or 40 acres. Of course, that is my opinion, so far as my knowledge goes.

11,213. There is no consolidation, you say, to any great extent?—No.

11,214. Then what do you say to Questions 78 and 79, as to the sub-division or sub-letting of holdings?—In the cases that have come under my notice the result of sub-letting is bad, the utmost rent being extorted.

11,215. Then as to Questions 81 and 82, as to the condition of the farms in time of trade depression, and the farmers' ability to provide for their families, you say this depends on the energy and resources of the individual?—Yes; it depends on the energy and resources of the individual.

11,216. You put in an agreement about the improvements?—Yes.

11,217. Do you generally do all the improvements?—According to the agreement put in.

11,218. Do farmers often apply for their landlord's written consent for specific improvements?—They do not apply often.

11,219. You give such consent when reasonable, I suppose?—Yes; when it is reasonable it is given.

11,220. Is there any right recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of their interests?—No, none on my property, and I do not know of any such right.

11,221. Now tell me a little about the game.—I will read what I have said about preserving game. "Some preserve moderately, others do "not. The rabbits on my estate are kept down "as low as possible. Hares are few in number." Question 114: "Do tenants generally avail "themselves of the provisions of the Ground "Game Act?" Many do so. Question 115: "Is "there much damage done by game to the crops "and pastures of tenant farmers? If so, are they "compensated, and how is the damage assessed? They are compensated for damage done. Farms subject to game damage were valued accordingly. Question 116: "Are tenants expected to 'beat' "coverts, &c., when their landlords go out shoot-"ing? If so, are they paid, and how?" They are not expected to as tenants. Beaters are paid by the day and have lunch.

11,222. "Is there any instruction given in "butter and cheese-making?"—Some; principally in the last three or four years.

11,223. How are the carriage facilities and disposal of agricultural produce affected by railway rates?—I believe some are high. I have heard rates of live stock complained of from time to time. Only on Friday last a large farmer at the agricultural show dinner, who sent away much live stock, complained of this. I agree with him that this ought to be seen to. No one wants to do the railways any injustice, but where we are far from the English markets, as in Lleyn, having to drive in cattle 15 or 16 miles before they get to rail, it is a matter of great importance.

11,224. Then 136: There is no co-operation between landlord and tenant, or anything of that kind. So that I need not trouble you about that?—No, there is none.

11,225. Then we come to 142, as to farmers' insurance?—They do so as per agreement in my case in leases, only in the leases that I have. I have 12 or 15 leases, perhaps, on agricultural farms. I do not know the exact number.

Chairman—continued.

11,226. Then as regards trade combination, I do not think we need trouble you about that?—No, there is not any, to my knowledge, my Lord.

11,227. Let us go to 149, about the peasant proprietors or small freeholders who have inherited their holdings?—The question is, "Are "there in your district many peasant proprietors "or small freeholders who have inherited their "holdings from their ancestors?" There are a good number, in my opinion.

11,228. And their number has not decreased?—"Has their number decreased in a sensible "degree? If so, what have been the causes?" I should say not.

11,229. Have any tenant farmers bought their own or other holdings in their own occupation in this district? You say some have?—Some have.

11,230. "What is the present condition of "such freeholders as compared with the yearly "tenants about them?"—I should consider the yearly tenants the best off, if energetic men.

11,231. Then about tenant farmers and their wives; I think we have had a great deal of evidence about them?—I simply say this, that tenant farmers vary a good deal in this. Most of them take part in the manual labour. Many are away frequently at markets, &c. The wives help, some in the hay time.

11,232. Then 174?—"(V.) Ownership and "tenure; whether held of the owner or of "tenant farmer as middleman, whether subject "to any restrictive conditions as to employment, "and subject to what length of notice for the "termination of the tenancy?" I say yearly takes mostly; some subject to employment.

11,233. 179: "Has there been any consider-"able migration of farmers or labourers from "your district within the last 50 years?"—I do not know of much. What have gone have gone to the quarries mostly, some few, perhaps, to towns.

11,234. I suppose farming accounts are not very generally kept?—No, they are kept very scantily, I say.

11,235. When did the depression begin in your district?—In 1878, or so. After that it has varied from from time to time, much depending on harvests and price of cattle. Other things, however, very important to the smaller tenantry, butter, eggs, poultry, pigs, &c., have kept up their prices well. My Lord, you asked me to give a remedy. I do not know whether you would like to have it now or later. It does not matter.

11,236. Have you got your remedies written down here?—Yes, I have put it down in a few words.

11,237. What number is it?—No. 183.

11,238. Will you kindly tell us what you suggest?—It is really a very general sort of thing.

11,239. What remedies do you suggest?—I cannot think of any panacea that can be named for any depression that may exist. If temporary assistance is given by landlords, and if the tenants set to work, not only with their hands, but with their heads, studying the ever-varying requirements of the markets of England, and sending good stock to the local fairs, which dealers will look at, I see no reason to despair of their doing well. We have a great advantage here in having a large population, quarrymen and others, who have to be supplied with food, butter, eggs, bacon, &c. Great care must be taken not to frighten capital out of the land, for Wales has certainly none to spare.

11,240. That is your suggestion?—Yes, my Lord.

Sir John Llewelyn.

11,241. Are your rents much the same, on the whole, as they were 30 years ago?—I think so, on the whole. There may be some slight increases.

11,242. Some have been increased, some reduced?—Some have been increased and some reduced.

11,243. And the reductions have been some permanent and there have been some temporary abatements?—Yes.

11,244. But, on the whole, you think they are much about the same?—I think so, speaking generally.

11,245. Are the leases of old standing or are they recent?—Most of them are recent. That one that I have handed in I think began 40 years ago; 40 years have run of the one that I handed in, and there are 20 years to run.

11,246. That is what I should call an old lease?—An old lease.

11,247. Are the other ones of more recent date?—More recent date.

11,248. Do you find an increasing demand for leases?—No, I do not think so; agricultural leases I am talking of.

11,249. I am speaking of agricultural leases, too?—I do not think there is an increasing demand for them.

11,250. In your opinion, is the lease the best way of meeting any demand for fixity of tenure, or can you suggest any other way?—No, I think there is no objection to leases. I cannot, at the moment, suggest any other particular way. I told you that I offered my tenants leases.

11,251. I wanted to get that. You offered your tenants leases?—Yes, and some few came to ask for them.

11,252. In consequence of that offer, or, at all events, subsequently to that offer?—Yes, some few availed themselves of it.

11,253. Do you suggest any special reasons to differentiate land tenure in Wales from that in England?—No, I think the tenants in Wales, taking them altogether, are better off than the ones in most parts of England in a great measure, because in many of the farms corn is not grown to any very great extent.

11,254. Do you speak Welsh, Mr. Nanney?—Quite well; as well as English, I suppose.

11,255. And you converse with your tenants in Welsh?—Oh, yes. They could not speak to you in English, so that we should have to "shut up" if we could not speak Welsh. Many of them could not speak English.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

11,256. Politics and religion make no difference between you and your tenants?—No, I want the best man.

Mr. Grove.

11,257. You spoke of butter-making; I suppose that means County Council work, does it not, for the last three or four years?—Yes, that is so.

11,258. Do you consider the quality improved in consequence of that?—I do not know that we have seen much. I fancy it has, in some cases, but I do not know that it has been long enough tried to see the result.

11,259. Is it not the fact that a good deal of butter is sent into this county from other counties?—I heard so.

11,260. Is there any butter from this county sent out of the county, that you know of, to any extent?—I do not know, but I should think it would be sent to the towns, to Liverpool and Birmingham, but I cannot give you statistics, or anything of that kind.

11,261. Do you always supply a copy of your agreements to the tenants?—Yes.

11,262. Whether they ask for it or not; I mean do you volunteer to do so?—Yes. I think that every tenant should have a copy of his agreement. I think it is of great assistance to him; he knows exactly how he stands.

11,263. You say that the tenants do not often apply for written approval for improvements under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Under my agreement, that is.

11,264. Are they, do you think, cognizant of the conditions of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Well, the ones on my estate—I am speaking of my estate.

11,265. Yes?—They are cognizant with what is in my agreement. It was all before them, and they had a chance of discussing every clause in it, and did, and many of the clauses are put in at their suggestion. It was open to them.

11,266. Has that agreement been remodelled since that Act came into operation, or is it an old agreement?—No, it has been remodelled. It is a newish agreement. It is put in.

11,267. Then in speaking of game, the relations between you, I suppose, as landlord and your tenants, you consider of a friendly kind, and that there is nothing of an unfriendly nature existing in consequence of the game?—I believe not.

11,268. You have said that you thought a yearly tenant was better off than one under a lease if an energetic man?—Under a lease, did I say?

11,269. I think I so understood it. I have not got the question before me?—Do you mind giving me the number?

11,270. I was only going to ask you a simple reason, if you could just give it briefly, why you consider a yearly agreement better. I am told the number of the question is 154?—I consider the yearly tenant better off if he is an energetic man.

11,271. Could you tell us the reason why?—Because he has the capital, which he gets the use of at a cheaper rate of interest.

11,272. And that is the principle of reasoning in your mind?—That is the reasoning in my mind.

11,273. Have you put in a table showing the reductions of rent when they were re-valued by Robert Thomas?—Yes, by Robert Thomas, a practical tenant farmer.

11,274. These were all reductions when they were re-valued. I suppose he re-valued all the farms. Were some of the farms advanced at the same time as these were reduced?—Yes, some of them.

11,275. You have not put in the list of advances?—No, but you may take it as a rule that it was 6 per cent; not more.

Mr. Griffiths.

11,276. I think you mentioned something with regard to the letting of land; I suppose that was by auction?—I do not think I said by auction, did I?

11,277. There was some land mentioned. I do not think you mentioned the word "auction," but I understood that is the case?—I did not mention it that I remember.

11,278. I do not think you did mention it as being by auction, but there is some land that is let otherwise than in farms, some small lots underlet by people; there is some letting, is there not?—Yes, some I believe.

11,279. Can you give any reason why the competition is so keen for a plot of land when a field is to be let?—No, I cannot give you any special reason why it is so. I do not know why it is. It varies according to circumstances, the places and circumstances of people, of course.

11,280. The circumstances of farmers. I suppose the position they are in as to food and grass, and that kind of thing?—Yes, I suppose that comes in.

11,281. And their outlay is no greater, is it. Sometimes a small farmer if he takes an additional field or two does not keep any more hands?—No, not if it was grazing. If he did not plough it or anything of that kind, of course, then the labour would be greater.

11,282. May I ask you what dairy accommodation you have on these farms in general, is it satisfactory as to dairies?—I believe they are fair dairies, sufficient, mostly speaking, generally for the requirements of the farms. They are not very large dairies in this country.

11,283. No, that is the case in most countries. Their dairies are not large enough for their present appliances, the dairy utensils?—Yes.

11,284. Do any of your tenants use a cream separator in their dairies?—That is quite new to them. I fancy most of them did not know much about it till these lessons were given in connexion with the North Wales College, but I cannot tell you whether many of them did. I should not think many of them did.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

11,285. I suppose the dairies are generally situate in a northern aspect in the coolest place you can get?—That ought to be so. I fancy they are, generally speaking. Perhaps there might be a difficulty sometimes in meeting that requirement, but that ought to be.

11,286. Are there any drains leading to the dairy?—Well, not that I know of.

11,287. In some dairies there are drains which are very offensive?—Yes.

11,288. What kind of floor is there generally to dairies?—Well, they are either flags or else tiles.

11,289. Is the butter generally made on the modern principle or by the old system of the hand?—Well, they ought to use wood; they ought not to touch it with the hand.

11,290. But I want to know whether they have really adopted that system?—I believe some people stick to the hands; so long as their hands are clean it is all right.

11,291. I doubt it.—I quite agree with you that, of course, the hands ought not to touch it.

11,292. The reason why I mention this is that in all the towns as we come along, at all the hotels we find that they use the Devonshire butter?—Yes.

11,293. They do not use the butter from the neighbourhood, and when I ask the landlords they say, "It is no use, we shall have complaints "in less than a day if we use the butter made "in this neighbourhood." The consequence is they are obliged to go to Devonshire for their cream and butter.—It is a very important thing to have good butter, of course.

11,294. There is no reason why you should not have the best of butter in this country?—No, except this new way is rather complicated for some farmers who have been accustomed to the old way. That is the reason, I mean, why it is not adopted thoroughly and fully.

11,295. I quite agree with you that farmers' wives in general are very slow to adopt it.—That is so.

11,296. Do you not think it is but fair that the landlord should pay for the insurance of buildings? Is it not sufficient for the tenant to insure the stock inside the buildings?—Yes, I have not thought that matter out.

11,297. If a tenant farmer insures the stock it would come rather heavy if he has to pay for the insurance of the buildings as well?—Yes.

11,298. It comes heavier?—Yes, that is quite a matter that I should like to have considered. I have not considered it, but I think it is quite a fair matter for consideration, and it is a matter I should like to weigh the pros and cons of.

11,299. I think you made a remark with regard to the farmers attending the markets. Do you not think the farmers should attend the markets?—Certainly, but I think in these days of trains that a great many people are away from home more than used to be.

11,300. Too often?—Yes, that is it, too often.

11,301. It is but right that a tenant farmer should know the prices, because he may lose in one day more than he may earn in a week?—

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Yes, I quite agree with that, it should be in moderation.

11,302. Do any of your farmers keep a proper farming account?—I do not know, of course, but I should think they were loosely kept, most of them; some might keep them, but most do not keep regular debtor and creditor accounts.

11,303. I should like to meet with some; why I ask is that I find in the Report made to the Commission on Labour this remark: "I also "found that the farmers pay a little more "attention to accounts than they do in most "parts of Wales"?—Yes.

11,304. "And two instances, rare elsewhere, "were brought to my notice of employers who "had in their possession books of wages, con- "tinually kept for nearly a whole century." We should like to meet with some of these people. That is why I asked you the question. Then with regard to poultry, I suppose you have proper poultry on your farms?—No, not regularly, but I do not know that they rear poultry to a very great extent.

11,305. Eggs?—There are not regular poultry houses attached to each farm.

11,306. I think there should be a little extension?—Yes, of course, people in close proximity to towns deal more in eggs and butter than they used to, and that sort of thing. I say that from my knowledge and observation, and of course it is quite right, because they get very large prices for them in the seasons.

11,307. Can you tell me, do the farmers' sons in this neighbourhood attend those lectures on agriculture that have been given?—Yes, they attended very fairly some few that I have attended. I myself was at one or two at Criccieth, and I think I was at one or two in this place, which is a centre, of course, for Lleyn, and the farmers' sons and farmers' daughters attended very fairly.

11,308. Do you know whether any of them obtained certificates for the South Kensington examinations?—Yes, some of them have.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,309. Are there any vacant farms on your estate now?—No.

11,310. When a vacancy occurs are there plenty of applicants for it?—Yes, there are plenty of applicants, but I have known more in times gone by.

11,311. The present is a time of exceptional depression, is it not?—Yes, it is depressed now.

11,312. However, I may take it that there is a good deal of competition for farms in the part of the county that you know of?—Yes, there is.

11,313. I understood it to be rather the case from the evidence which we heard in Merionethshire, too?—Yes, there has been more in times gone by, say 15 or 18 years ago.

11,314. Well, times were better for farmers then?—Yes; it was a roaring time then.

11,315. May I take it that there is a good deal of attachment to the land on which they have been brought up on the part of people living in this county?—Yes; I should say so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

11,316. Would it be going too far to say it was a passionate attachment? You may call it sentimental if you like, but would you go so far as to say it is a passionate attachment?—Generally speaking, there is a great attachment.

11,317. I mean an attachment so strong, that farmers do not like to leave the district?—Yes. Of course they vary according to different circumstances and different people.

11,318. Oh, no doubt; but speaking of the men generally. You have the great advantage, as I understand, of being able to talk to the tenant farmers in their own language?—Yes, quite well. I do so always.

11,319. Then you must have formed some opinion as to the character of the people, as to their general desires and as to their views of life?—Yes.

11,320. Do you not think there is a great reluctance on their part to leave Wales, or to leave the part of the country in which they were brought up?—Yes; I think they are very fond of their country.

11,321. I am not sure that I caught the figure aright, but I think you said that the average size of farms on your estate was about 30 or 40 acres?—Yes. I was not talking of my own estate specially, but so far as I knew.

11,322. So far as I can gather from your evidence, your estate does not differ in any particular from most of the other adjoining estates in this county?—No, I think not. I said I thought about 30 or 40 acres.

11,323. Is it not the case that in England there is a great difficulty in letting farms now?—Yes; but they are very big farms there.

11,324. Quite so. Then there are two points of difference between Wales and England that you have come across; the farms in England are much larger?—Well, speaking generally, they are. Of course, they vary there in different counties, do they not?

11,325. Oh, certainly. Is it not the case that in England, too, the farmers move much more from county to county and from one part of the country to another than they do in Wales?—I do not know. I cannot tell you sufficiently about that. I have not lived in England.

11,326. Now, let me take another point. Where a tenant farmer has several sons, what is the general course of life on the part of the sons? What generally becomes of them?—One or two help their father, perhaps, and the others get on in life; some go to get clerkships, or some go to business houses.

11,327. Is it not the case that a good many of them become farm labourers?—Well, it depends upon the size of the farm. I do not know that many do.

11,328. Of course we have a large body of testimony that the sons of the tenant-farmers in Wales habitually assist about the farm work, until they go out into life on their own account?—Yes, they do when they are young, most of them. Of course, that is after schooling; they have to go to school.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

11,329. Do not a great many of them become artisans of different kinds; masons, for instance?—Some might, but I think many of them look to a clerkship, or some business of that kind. It varies very much. Of course, you are speaking generally, and I am answering generally, so far as I can.

11,330. Quite so. I do not see how we can expect any uniform career on the part of sons of the tenant farmers. I am not suggesting that, but, speaking broadly, do not the sons become masons, or go to the quarries, or become farm labourers? I am now dealing with the majority of them?—Yes, some would.

11,331. Is it not the case, that sons of farmers who have gone as farm labourers to adjoining farms, ultimately, when they get the opportunity, take farms themselves?—Yes, they do.

11,332. Then I may take it, if you like, that the social and educational characteristics of the tenant farmer do not differ very largely from those of the artisan class?—Well, some of them, to a certain extent.

11,333. Some, of course, but I am dealing with the bulk. You know this county well?—Yes, I do; but it is very difficult to lay that down as a rule without having gone into the question thoroughly, and accurately, and carefully.

11,334. But you must have formed some conclusion on these subjects after living here for so many years, you know?—Yes, I have lived here all my life.

11,335. Do you not think that the difference between the tenant farmers and the labouring classes is less in this and the adjoining county than it would be in the agricultural counties in England?—I do not know the agricultural counties in England. I do not know the relations between the different classes there. I have not lived there, so that I am not able to compare the one with the other. I have not lived in England any time. If I had lived in an agricultural district in England I could have given you a definite answer upon it.

11,336. Well, that is very fair. Is it the case that most of the tenant farmers are Nonconformists?—Yes.

11,337. Nearly all the landlords, I presume, belong to the Church of England, do they not?—Most of them do, some do not.

11,338. I do not think we have had an instance of a single large landowner who is not a member of the Episcopal Church?—I can give an instance, Mr. Richard Davies in Anglesey.

11,339. We have not been to Anglesey yet?—He is a very large proprietor. I might find some others if I thought of it. Most of them are Church of England.

11,340. Did you hear the evidence of Mr. Walter Jones, your agent at Portmadoc?—Yes, I did.

11,341. Do you agree with his view that the true theory of the relation between landlord and tenant is that it is a commercial one. That was the substance of Mr. Jones' evidence, as I understood it?—Well, it is a commercial one to a certain extent, but there are other things as well. It is not entirely a commercial one.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

11,342. No relation may be said to be entirely commercial. As I understood Mr. Jones' evidence it was this, that land is like any other article that is purchased. He called it an "article"?—Yes.

11,343. He said it represents so much capital sunk; consequently a landlord in dealing with a tenant deals with the man exactly as if he was dealing in any other kind of market with a person whose interest is diverse from his own?—I have heard Mr. Walter Jones' evidence, but I did not follow every word he said, and there is no reason that I should agree with every word he said.

11,344. Not in the least.—I have got my own views and I am giving my own evidence and am glad to give my evidence here, but I will not pin myself to every word Mr. Walter Jones has said and I do not suppose Mr. Walter Jones would pin himself to every word I say. We have our own ideas and if you ask me any question I shall be very glad to answer it.

11,345. I have asked you a question. I have said shortly what I understand Mr. Walter Jones' view to be, and I ask you whether you agree with it?—What is it?

11,346. He said that he regarded the true theory of the relation between landlord and tenant to be the same as that between any other commercial classes?—Well, from one point of view it is a matter of business. There are other relations as well as a matter of business.

11,347. Do you agree or do you not agree with what he said?—I am not going to say that I agree in every word that Mr. Walter Jones said.

11,348. I see that in reference to the head of remedies all you have dealt with is agricultural depression?—Yes.

11,349. You have not given any suggestion for the alleviation of the grievances under which the tenant farmers allege—I put it no higher than that—that they suffer?—I have not there.

11,350. Have you any objection to a Land Court for instance?—I do not think a Land Court would be good, and I do not think it is required.

11,351. You do not require it?—No, and I do not think the tenants on a good estate require it, and I do not think the tenants as a rule would be better off with it. There is another thing. If there was a Land Court of course now the land is owned by whoever it may be—the landlord or the freeholder—but when there is a Court the private ownership would be interfered with, and it would interfere with the interest which a man takes in his property. He would not give the time and the interest to improve his property as he does at the present time and I do not think he could be expected to.

11,352. Then, as I understand it, your main objection is very much that which is taken by Mr. Wynne that the establishment of such a court as has been hinted at would lead to a landlord to deal with the position from an entirely commercial point of view, and that he would cease to take a friendly interest in his tenant farmers?—He would not give the enormous time that he does now to consider all the details of his property. I am speaking from experience. I give a very great deal of my time to going into all the matters connected with my property, and I feel it my duty and my pleasure to do so.

11,353. Why should not he do the same if a Land Court were established?—Because it is interfering with private property and it is fixing—as I am telling you—what the rent should be, and it should be fixed as between man and man, and it should be fixed by the natural laws of supply and demand. That is my opinion.

11,354. Then it really comes to this, you think that the Land Court would interfere with the sense of ownership?—I do think so, sir, that an owner would become a rent-charger on the farm.

11,355. Why should that diminish his interest in the well-being of his neighbours?—It would diminish his interest in the farm.

Sir John Llewelyn.

11,356. May I ask one question? I did not understand Mr. Walter Jones to have said that the landlord did deal, but merely that he was entitled to deal, on a commercial basis with the tenant?—Yes, that is so, that is what I understood Mr. Walter Jones to say.

11,357. You did not come to say that he did do so?—No.

11,358. That the landlord dealt in a commercial manner as regards rent?—No, I did not understand him to say so.

11,359. But that he was entitled to do so?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

11,360. You refer to a case of sub-letting?—Yes.

11,361. You say "In the cases of sub-letting "that have come under my notice, the result of "sub-letting is bad, the utmost rent being "extorted." Can you give any instances?—I have known of instances, not lately, I am afraid I cannot give you names. I am speaking from recollection.

11,362. Do you consider this an exceptional year as regards depression? You give back more per cent. this year than you have done before, 15 per cent.?—Yes. I think there was very little demand for store cattle and cattle in the spring.

11,363. On account of the lowness of prices?—On account of the lowness of prices.

11,364. And I suppose you consider that your rents are based on an average, taking a good year with a bad year?—Yes, I do.

11,365. You do not receive from your tenants more in a good year?—No, all the same. You mean that I receive the same rents in good years and bad years?

11,366. What I mean is this, that, apart from all abatements, you consider your rent to be a fair rent, taking good years and bad years on an average?—Yes, I do.

11,367. Are they based on a seven years' average, or on no particular average?—No. They were valued by a practical farmer, as I told you, in 1876. I have given in the return.

11,368. With regard to damages, I see you state that farmers ought to work not only with their hands but with their heads?—Yes.

11,369. I suppose that brings in the question of agricultural education a little?—What I mean is, that the requirements of different markets in England change from day to day, and if farmers would think more of what was required in the different English markets, what would sell best, what there is the greatest demand for, and not go on in the old routine which their fathers and mothers, and grandfathers have gone in before, they would do better. They go on in the same groove, and will not move; but if they would consider in their heads what would sell best, I think they would do better than they do now.

11,370. Do you not think the custom of the county rules that groove very much? For instance, in one county, you will have cheese-making and dairy-farming, and in another county stock-rearing?—Yes.

11,371. Do you not find it is difficult to get out of a groove of that sort?—Yes, no doubt it is.

11,372. The education of the agriculturists in that part of the county tells them that which is best for them?—Yes, no doubt.

11,373. With regard to the Bangor College, you say there have been lectures established in this district?—They have not been established more than two or three years, and I have been to three or four, perhaps more, in Criccieth, and here as a centre, and I think, considering that they were new, and that they were the first of a series given, they were well attended on the whole.

11,374. What has been the practical result? Has there been any improvement in farming, or any improvement in the butter produced, or the stock produced?—Well, I imagine in some cases, from what I have heard, that it has been better; but I do not think it has been established long enough to produce any possible change, or any great change in the general supply of butter.

11,375. What would you suggest to them as their best form of lecture or demonstration?—Well, going on giving practical lessons, keeping on at it, and then the interest in them would increase, and I suppose the advantage from them, and the knowledge to be gained from them, would increase as it went on.

11,376. Do you think there is too much theory and too little practice?—Well, there is a good deal of theory; we have not seen much of the result of the practice yet; we may, as time goes on, you know.

11,377. Would a travelling dairy be a good thing?—Well, I really do not know.

11,378. I heard Mr. Griffiths say just now, that in all the hotels he has been to in North Wales, he gets nothing but Devonshire butter?—Well, that is a great pity, and we allow a lot of money to go out of the country in that way, and there is no reason for it, because some of the farms in Lleyn, and some of the land, are well calculated to produce the best butter in England.

11,379. I suppose the English tourist likes fresh butter without a bit of salt in it?—That is so.

11,380. And butter without much taste in it?—Yes, and they do not like to see the butter-milk bubble up when you put your knife in it. They like to see it good, and what is more, when strangers come down here they like to get things good, and they will have them.

11,381. And, in short, you think the farmer would do better if he would only learn what the English tourists require?—Yes. If his butter was as good as other people's butter the hotel people would take his butter; but they will take the best; that is my opinion.

11,382. With regard to poultry, you would be prepared, I suppose, to put up poultry houses if you were asked?—If I were asked I should be prepared to put up houses for poultry, and I should only be very glad to do it, in fact. They do it to a far greater extent than I remember in close proximity to towns.

11,383. Do you think the present condition of the farming population is better or worse than, say, when you came into your property?—The general condition?

11,384. The general condition. Are they better fed and clothed; and have they more money?—The farmers?

11,385. Yes; are they better or worse off, taking one thing with another?—Well, I do not know that they are worse off.

11,386. Much the same?—I fancy so; and in some parts I fancy there is an improvement in some things, and not so, perhaps, in others.

Chairman.

11,387. There are some questions put in by Mr. William George which I must trouble you with. The first question is, "Can you tell how "many notices to quit you gave tenants on your "estate after the 1868 election?"—No, I cannot. Those matters, speaking generally, come before me, and are discussed between me and my agent; and I do not go into the details of all those things on my estate. I could not do it. I may say that the agent I had then is dead.

11,388. Is it a fact that all who then received these notices had voted for the Liberal candidate?—I cannot answer that.

11,389. You cannot answer that?—No.

11,390. Was Mr. Robert Jones of Glyn a tenant of yours, and why was he evicted?—He was a tenant of my father and of mine, I think, so far as I remember, afterwards.

Chairman—continued.

11,391. Can you tell us why he was given notice to quit—why he was evicted?—No, I cannot.

11,392. "Why was notice to quit given at the same time to Mr. Rowland Hughes, Hendre, and Mr. William Jones, Felin Chwilog?"—That was in 1868.

11,393. That was after the 1868 election?—Part of those are on my father's estate. My father had his estate, and I had my separate estate. I managed my own estate, and my father managed his estate, and Hendre is on my father's estate.

11,394. Were either of these gentlemen on your estate?—Yes.

11,395. Rowland Hughes, Hendre, was not on your estate?—No; my father's.

11,396. And Mr. William Jones, of Felin Chwilog, was he on your estate?—Yes, he was.

11,397. You cannot give any particulars of that?—No, I cannot.

11,398. No particulars at all about that?—No.

11,399. Have you and your fellow landlords enclosed Rhoslan Common?—Yes.

11,400. "And if so, upon what right?"—It was done in my father's time.

11,401. Can you tell us under what right it was enclosed?—No, I cannot, now. My father had the management of it, and I dealt with my property, and I did not interfere with the management of his property then.

11,402. "Were there at the time of the "enclosure six almshouses on the common "belonging to the parish?"—I cannot tell you that. As I said before, that was done in my father's time. See 17,642

11,403. Can you give instances of compensation given to tenants in respect of the depredations of the game?—Yes, I can give instances.

11,404. Will you send in a return?—Yes. See 17,65

11,405. You will make a note of that?—Yes. 17,653.

11,406. "Was the rent of Bettws Fawr raised "from 120*l.* to 148*l.*?"—What date is it?

11,407. I have no date put in, but do you remember the rent on that farm being raised?—No, I do not; not now. I have not got the date of it, and I cannot answer it straight off. See 17,631–3.

11,408. "Had not the tenant, previous to the "raising of his rent, spent considerable sums of "money in improvements?"—I cannot answer that.

11,409. "Are these cases of increase of rent "marked on the accompanying list with a cross "correct—Rhiwlas Estate, Bronmiod Farm; in "1843 the rent was 80*l.*, and in 1893 the rent "was 126*l.*, was that bought for the Gwynfryn "estate?"—That was bought. See 17,63

11,410. That was raised?—That was raised. I am only speaking from memory; that was raised after the purchase, I believe.

Lord Kenyon.

11,412. Here is another. Tyn-y-llan Farm: that was bought for the Gwynfryn estate?—That was bought for the Gwynfryn estate.

11,413. In 1843 the rent was 12*l.*, and in 1893 the rent was 35*l.*?—Yes.

See 11,602. 11,640. 11,414. Then Cae'rtyddyn. That was raised from 28*l.* 7*s.* in 1852 to 44*l.* 10*s.* in 1893?—I cannot tell the amount, but it was raised.

11,415. It was raised?—Yes. I am only speaking from memory. All these were valued afterwards by Mr. Thomas, you know.

11,416. They were raised according to Mr. Thomas's valuation, was that it?—No, not at that time, but they were valued in 1876, the whole, by a practical farmer.

11,417. Oh, those are possibly not the rents now?—Not now, possibly.

11,418. This was Mr. Thomas's valuation in 1876?—Yes.

Chairman.

11,419. I have a question put in by Mr. Owen Wynne. "Did not Mr. Robert Jones, of Glynn, "owe hundreds of pounds when he got notice?"—Well, I believe he owed something. I am only speaking from memory. He owed something.

11,420. Hundreds of pounds?—Well, he owed something. I cannot tell you hundreds of pounds. He owed a good sum, I cannot say how much. It is a long time ago; I cannot say that.

Lord Kenyon.

11,421. Does that mean he was in arrears to the estate, or elsewhere?—In arrears to the estate.

Chairman.

11,422. Who is your agent now?—Mr. Walter Jones is the agent now.

11,423. Who gave his evidence at Portmadoc?—Yes.

11,424. Questions put in by Mr. J. E. Vincent. "At almost every market town in agricultural "England there are weekly auctions of cattle. "Do you not think such auctions would be a "great advantage to this country; weekly "auctions of cattle"?—In different centres, you mean.

11,425. Yes, I suppose so?—I think they would be. I think they are very good things, giving farmers, in their respective localities, opportunities of meeting together, and meeting drovers, and getting the cattle off. I think it would be a very good thing.

11,426. There are two other questions by Mr. Vincent. "Were not your tenants invited "to discuss the clauses in your agreement?" "Are not the rents of the smaller tenantry "higher because their buildings are more "expensive in proportion to their holdings?"—That is so. I have got here a few examples of the expenses of the farms now on small places just to show the expense of buildings on small places. I will just mention a few of them. There is Tyn-y-fridd, Owen Ellis, in Llanystumdwy; I have just built a new house there. The extent of the farm is three acres, and the rent, without tithe, 8*l.* 15*s.* I have just spent, in the cost of buildings, 177*l.* on that small place—a new house, a small cowhouse.

Chairman—continued.

11,427. Question by Mr. Pughe Jones, "Do "you not think that the establishment of a "Land Court would lead to large sales of outlying "portions of estates, and the letting to graziers "of large portions of the estate lying near the "mansion?"—Yes, that might be so; it might tend to that.

11,428. Mr. J. M. Griffiths (who is taking the Welsh evidence in the next room, reading it over in Welsh to the witnesses), asks two questions. One is, "I find no provision in your "lease to repay the tenant for cake consumed "the preceding years, at the expiration of his "tenancy?"—That is in the agreement, I think. It is clause 16. I will read it if you like. "The "tenant on quitting shall also be paid the value "of the manure remaining unspread upon the "premises, and in ascertaining the value of such "manure, the value of all artificial food consumed by stock-housed or in yards during the "last twelve months of the holding, shall be "taken into consideration."

Chairman.

Then that is so. That answers that question, and the other it is not necessary to put.

Witness.

My Lord, will you allow me just to make one remark? It was said, I think, by somebody, that farmers had bought their farms so as to gain security of tenure. I would like to point out that many freeholders prefer to live on large estates, and eight or ten of my own tenants do that, and let their own farms, proving the fact that there is some advantage to be got on a large estate; at least they think so. I wish to make that remark.

11,429. I understood that they keep their freehold land in reserve in case of something happening?—Yes; they have farms of their own, but they still live on my estate, and they let their own farms.

11,430. So they have their own farms to go to if anything happens? Is that what you mean?—Yes; they are still my tenants. I suppose it is to be naturally inferred that there is some advantage in being on my estate, and so they feel pretty secure in the tenure.

11,431. Quite so; and they have the advantage of having a farm to go to in the event of notice to quit?—They may have bought the farms or have inherited them.

Lord Kenyon.

11,432. You understand they prefer to live as tenants on your farms than on their own?—Quite so; freeholds.

Chairman.

11,433. Question by Mr. J. E. Vincent, "Can "you remember on your own part giving notice "to quit for a political reason?"—No; I cannot remember.

11,434. You cannot remember?—No.

11,435. On your own farm?—On my own farm; on my own estate.

Lord Kenyon.

11,436. Would you emphatically say you have never given a notice to quit?—To the best of my recollection.

Chairman.

11,437. You will not say any more than to the best of your recollection?—No.

Chairman.

We must have a clear answer to that. Perhaps you had better put the question again.

Lord Kenyon.

11,438. I only ask you whether you can emphatically say you have never given a notice to quit for a political reason?—Not that I remember.

11,439. But you will not go further than that?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,440. What about the receipt I handed last night to you?—I said the details of the matters I left to the agent to carry out, and he has gone, and I cannot recollect.

Chairman.

11,441. I must point out that this is a very serious question of Lord Kenyon's. Is that the only answer you can give us?—That is the only answer, except that I can speak to that matter you referred to just now. Can you give me the paper?

Chairman—continued.

11,442. I do not mean that, I mean on the general question, is that the only answer you can give?—That I cannot recollect?

11,443. That you cannot recollect having done so?—Yes. There is one more thing. I do not know whether you would like me to mention this. It has been said, I think, several times, that the farm labourers' wages are higher than they used to be. That is so, but they were higher still a few years ago. I think it should be remembered that there are also some advantages which the tenants have now to counterbalance that in these days; for instance, I can remember some 25 years ago, the time when the farmers used to have to send 12 and 15 miles for every load of lime that they wanted on the farm. That meant, to have a couple of horses and a couple of men, because a man would be required to load the lime. Now they get a truck of lime close on to the farm, and they can cart the lime on to the farm from the station, which is a great convenience. The same thing applies to artificial foods and manures.

11,444. What has that to do with the labourers' wages?—Well, it was pointed out that the labourers' wages are a great tax on the farmers and it is so, and I simply wanted to point out in addition that which had not already been pointed out.

Mr. Grove.

11,445. I suppose the farmer would pay the carriage on the line?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM OWEN called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

11,446. Is that (indicating) a statement of your evidence, and are you satisfied that it is right?—Yes, this is my evidence as revised, and it is correct.

The interpreter read the evidence of the witness:—

"William Owen, Caenewydd Chwilog, Farmer.

"I occupy the above farm, and have done so since my father's death in 1873.

"Prior to that my father was tenant of Ty'nllwyn, near Bangor, a farm of 350 acres, belonging to Mr. Assheton Smith.

"My father, the Rev. John Owen, occupied the farm for nearly 16 years, and during that time effected considerable improvements upon it.

"He spent a lot of money in building, walling and draining.

"We have not a complete account of my father's disbursements and expenses, but I calculate they are not far from 3,000*l.*

Chairman—continued.

"Sometimes a small allowance would be made by the landlord towards those expenses when my father was paying the rent, but nothing at all adequate.

"Everything went on smoothly enough until the year 1868, when the General Election took place.

"My father took a very prominent part in that election on the Liberal side, whilst his landlord's family were equally prominent on the other side.

"Mr. Jones, the sub-agent of Mr. Assheton Smith's estate, called several times to press for father's vote, and ultimately my father wrote two letters, one to the Vaynol agent and the other to Lord Penrhyn's agent, saying that it was unnecessary for them to call again, as he was a Liberal and intended to vote accordingly. I have copies of these letters, and they have appeared in the public press and have not been contradicted. I produce copies of the letters."

The first letter is as follows :—

"Ty'nllwyn, Bangor, N.W.,

"Dear Sir,— "October 12th, 1868.

"Mr. Jones called here some days ago intimating that it is desirable that I, along with the other tenants of the Vaynol estate, should vote for Major Pennant. I am very sorry to say that I cannot do so without parting with my own peace of mind. Besides approving of the general policy of Mr. Gladstone I consider the present a very eventful time in the history of our country. To govern Ireland the British Parliament must either endow Roman Catholicism or disendow and disestablish the Protestant Church in that country. The first course would not fail to strengthen the Ritualistic party in the Church of England, which is dreaded not only by the Protestant Dissenters of this country but by the Evangelical party in the Established Church. Under these considerations I feel that I have no alternative but to vote for the Liberal candidates. I have thought much upon what the consequences may be, but the issue is under the superintendence of an all-wise Providence.

"I remain,

"Dear sir,

"Sincerely yours,

"John Owen.

"Jno. Millington, Esq."

11,447. Who was John Owen?—My father, the Reverend John Owen.

11,448. Who was John Millington?—The agent of the Vaynol estate. The second letter is as follows :—

"Ty'n Llwyn, Bangor, N.W.

"Dear Sir, "October 12, 1868.

"I understand that you called here concerning my vote for the county, and that her Ladyship called afterwards. You like plain dealings, then I must tell you that I am a Liberal in politics, and must vote for the Liberal candidate or act contrary to my convictions. I assure you that I feel very sorry that we do not coincide in our political opinions, as Lord Penrhyn and his agents always acted towards me the part by good neighbours.

"Will you have the kindness to show this to Major Pennant to spare him the trouble of calling again.

"I remain,

"Dear Sir,

"Sincerely Yours,

"Mr. Easson. "John Owen."

11,449. Who is Mr. Easson?—Lord Penrhyn's agent.

[Statement continued.]

"The Liberal candidate won that election, and in a speech made at the time by Captain Duff, (one of the Trustees of the Vaynol Estate) to explain the defeat of the Conservative candidate, he said that they attributed their defeat to the influence of certain Nonconformist ministers.

"My father was one of these ministers.

Chairman—continued.

"Soon after this we began to feel the resentment of the family.

"Mr. Assheton Smith would pass my father on the road without looking at him, though prior to this he was very friendly with my father. And when there were rejoicings going on at Vaynol on account of the coming of age of Mr. Assheton Smith all the larger tenants except my father were invited there.

"The next step was the service on my father of six months' notice to quit.

"This is dated 10th May 1869 and is still in my possession.

"The only reason assumed for this conduct was that Mr. Assheton Smith wanted the farm himself.

"As a matter of fact he only kept it on his own hands for some ten or eleven months, after which he exchanged with Mr. James, the tenant of the Vaynol Farm.

"Public opinion clearly pointed out this as an instance of the persecution, that went on after this election, of such farmers as had opposed their landlord's will, and there was great excitement at the time.

"Some compensation was paid to my father on his leaving, but nothing at all adequate, and I believe he was a loser to the extent of over 2,000*l.*, according to our estimate.

"My father's is not the only case in which people under the landlords' thumbs were persecuted on account of their opinions.

"Copy of Notice to Quit to the late Rev. Jno. Owen, Ty'nllwyn, nr. Bangor—"Notice to Quit.

"'To Mr. John Owen.

"'I do hereby give you notice that you must quit and give and deliver up the quiet and peaceable possession of all the messuages, tenements, lands, hereditaments and premises situate, lying and being in the several parishes of Bangor and Llanddeinioleu, or elsewhere, in the county of Carnarvon, which you hold under John Newdigate Francis Ashlley, Esquire, Trustee for George William Duff Assheton Smith, Esquire, at or upon the twelfth day of November now next ensuing, or at the end and expiration of the current year of your tenancy thereof which shall expire next after the end of one half year from the service hereof. Whereof you have this notice, dated the twelfth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine.

"'From John Millington, Agent to John Newdigate Francis Ashlley, Esquire, Trustee of George William Francis Duff Assheton Smith, Esquire.'

"I can detail a conversation with the chief agent which he thinks goes to prove that they did not intend to keep us on as tenants of Ty'nllwyn."

Lord Kenyon.

11,450. You say "the only reason assumed "for this conduct was that Mr. Assheton Smith

"wanted the farm himself. As a matter of "fact, however, he only kept it on his own "hands for only some 10 or 11 months, after "which he exchanged with Mr. James." Did Mr. James then enter upon this farm of Ty'nllwyn?—Mr. James did occupy the farm within so many months.

11,451. Then, as I understand it, Mr. James's farm was taken as the home farm next?—I cannot say that.

Chairman.

11,452. There are one or two questions handed up. One by Mr. Vincent. "Is Mr. Millington dead?"—Yes.

11,453. Then a question by Captain Stewart. "Was not your father paid for improvements?"—A certain sum.

11,454. "Improvements such as draining, walling, and for unexhausted manures?"—Yes.

11,455. "Was he not paid for haulage?"—Yes, partly.

11,456. "Was he not paid for the general "improvement of the farm?"—No.

11,457. "Apart from specific improvements?"—No.

11,458. Then a question by Mr. Vincent: "Was not the amount paid in compensation to "your father ascertained by a valuer agreed "upon by both parties?"—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,459. Had your father an agreement, or was he simply tenant from year to year on a verbal taking?—He had no agreement.

11,460. Did he do the hauling in connexion with the building?—Yes, altogether.

Chairman.

11,461. There is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "How old were you in 1868?"—27 years old.

11,462. A question by Mr. Wm. George: "Was it not a fact that the valuer's discretion "was limited as to what was to be valued?"—Yes.

Chairman.

We will now take the evidence of Capt. Stewart in reply to the statements of this witness, but we will ask Mr. Owen to stay in the room and listen to what Capt. Stewart says.

11,463. Will you be able to understand Capt. Stewart's evidence?—I cannot be sure that I would.

Chairman.

Then the interpreter will translate Capt. Stewart's evidence into Welsh to the witness Owen.

Re-examined, 13,303.

The witness withdrew.

Capt. Niel Patrick Stewart called and examined (his evidence being interpreted into Welsh by the interpreter.)

See above, and 13,273–13,336.

Chairman.

11,464. You are agent to the Assheton Smith estate?—I am.

11,465. Were you agent to that estate in the year 1868?—No, I was not.

11,466. What do you wish to say?—First of all, I think I ought to say that I did not know at all about this matter, and am completely taken by surprise at its being brought forward now. It is a very old matter indeed; it is a matter that happened 25 years ago, and of which I cannot speak personally except with regard to part of his evidence which I can prove to be entirely wrong. That is from information I derive from my books at the Estate Office. I understood Owen to say that his father was not paid for general improvements, that is, improvements apart from specific improvements. I think I can undertake to satisfy your Lordship to-morrow that a sum of 200*l.* was paid to his father for general improvements altogether apart from specific improvements, that is, for having improved the general condition of the farm. Mr. Assheton Smith at this time was a minor, and I do not know that he had much to say to the management of his estates at that time; but I have been his agent for nearly 19 years, and I have never known a case of eviction on the Vaynol Estate for political purposes. I can also say that the valuation of the stock and crops, and not only that, but the valuation of the improvements at Ty'nllwyn was arrived at by the valuation of men mutually appointed to value. If the amount awarded is not sufficient it is therefore not Mr. Assheton Smith's fault. It was in the hands of, probably better judges than either the witness's father or Mr. Assheton Smith, who was a minor.

11,467. Who was the agent on the Assheton Smith Estate in the year 1868?—Mr. Millington was; and so far as I have heard from Mr. Assheton Smith himself, and from others, the sole purpose for which the farm of Ty'nllwyn was taken by Mr. Assheton Smith was for the purpose of a Home farm. At that time there was no Home farm.

Sir John Llewelyn.

11,468. Will your books also show whether the umpire's decision was limited?—No, it does not show that it was.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,469. When did you have this conversation with Mr. Assheton Smith as to this particular eviction?—Not for a long time; I do not call it an eviction; it was not an eviction.

11,470. We will not quarrel about terms?—Well, you call it an eviction; I do not, because the man was not evicted.

11,471. You will excuse me. My use of the term is right and yours wrong?—That might be.

11,472. You said you were taken by surprise; that is why I asked you this question. You began by saying that; now you say you had a specific conversation with Mr. Assheton Smith about this eviction?—Yes, a long time ago. I did not say an eviction.

11,474. All the witness has said is that some compensation was paid to his father on his leaving, but nothing at all adequate; you would hardly contradict that?—I do not consider that he is a more adequate judge of that than I am. I said that the valuation arrived at was come to by practical valuers, men of great experience. I can repeat the names of several of them now from memory; there was Mr. Humphreys. My object is this: He says that he has been inadequately compensated; I say that he has been fully compensated, and that better judges of compensation than either this witness's father or Mr. Assheton Smith arrived at the amount paid him, and therefore he has no right to say that his father was inadequately paid.

11,475. I do not know what you mean by saying that he has no right to say that his father was inadequately compensated. The attack made by the witness is not an attack upon any valuers appointed at the time. His point is that his father, during the years that he was on the farm, was, in fact, a loser to the extent of 2,000*l.*, and that the 200*l.* compensation did not pay him for the loss of capital involved in that way?—I say that this witness alleges that his father was inadequately paid. I give you my reasons for showing you that he was adequately paid, on the information of more experienced men.

11,476. But he is talking about some different kind of compensation. You are only saying that the valuation was properly done; what the witness is complaining of is a system of land relationship which involves his father in 2 000*l.* loss in the course of a few years?—He is dealing, not with a system, as I understand, but with the farm of Ty'nllwyn.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

11,477. He says, "Some compensation was "paid to my father on his leaving"?—Quite so, and I contend enough compensation was paid.

11,478. And he contends not enough?—Quite so. Surely the valuers ought to say. Surely the valuation arrived at by practical valuers is the thing to be looked at.

11,479. But suppose I said that you detained from me a watch and a table, and then you could not produce the watch and the table; however, you admitted that you owed something, and the valuers valued the watch only; that is no answer to my claim for the table?—Oh, he could claim the whole world, if he liked; he would like to claim the farm, probably.

Lord Kenyon.

11,480. Is Mr. James now in the occupation of what was Mr. Owen's farm?—No, Mr. James is dead.

11,481. Was this the question: whether Mr. James or Mr. Owen should leave their farms, in order to make a home farm?—No, I never heard that.

Chairman.

11,482. These are questions put in by Mr. George: "Do you know, of your own know-"ledge, what the terms of the reference were"?—I have the book containing the valuation signed by the valuers, which I shall be happy to produce at Carnarvon.

11,483. "Are you aware that the facts now "proved have already more than once been pub-"lished, and that they have never hitherto "been contradicted"?—No, I am not aware of that.

11,484. "Was not the late Mr. Owen con-"sidered an exceptionally good farmer, and was "not Ty'nllwyn one of the largest farms on the "estate"?—One of the largest.

11,485. That does not answer the first part of the question: "Was he not one of the best "farmers in the district"?—I cannot say that.

11,486. You do not know?—No.

11,487. "Why was notice to quit given to "Mr. Jones, Velin Rhydhir, after the General "Election of 1880"?—I should like to say, with regard to Ty'nllwyn, one thing more. I have a receipt in my possession for payment in full of all demands by the tenant.

See 11,53

11,488. Now will you please answer the question, "Why was notice to quit given to Mr. "Jones, Velin Rhydhir, after the General "Election of 1880?" That was in your time?—I cannot tell you what reason; I am very certain it was not for any political reason, but I cannot tell you now for what reason.

11,489. Were you agent in 1880?—Yes.

11,490. You gave that notice?—Yes.

Re-examined, 11,591.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Robert O. Jones called. Examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

11,491. Has your evidence been read through to you and corrected, and do you thoroughly understand it?—Yes, it is my evidence and it has been read to me, and I have corrected it.

See generally, 11,518, 17,288–17,318.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Mr. Robert O. Jones, Plascanol, Minfordd, Penrhyndeudraeth.

"I wish to give evidence with reference to the farm of Plasynpenrhyn, Penrhyndeudraeth, a farm which was held by me from March 1885 to March 1893.

"Messrs. Huddart were my landlords, and I paid rent to them in respect of the house 50*l.*, and taxes, and in respect of the land 80*l.*, namely, 2*l.* an acre.

"Shortly after I went to live to Plasynpenrhyn Mr. Watkin the agent commenced improving the house, but owing to the death of Mr. Huddart just at that time, the repairs were not completed by him. I completed the alterations and spent about 4*l.* besides my own labour in improving gates, &c. Before I took to farming I was in the masonry trade, and I did much work in improving Plasynpenrhyn, which would, but that I was a mason, have to be paid for. I have not kept an account of the days I worked as a mason at Plasynpenrhyn. I never received any compensation for my money or labour.

"In about two years after I went to Plasynpenrhyn, a part of the farm was sold, namely, 25 acres, and the yard and a lake of water, to Mr. Haigh, of Aberia, near Portmadoc, and that part was annexed to Mr. Haigh's farm, Plascanol. I was thus deprived of the water with which I previously supplied my cattle. Shortly after this sale, Mr. Huddart (one of the sons) and Mr. Watkin visited Plasynpenrhyn. I told Mr. Huddart about how I was deprived of my water. Mr. Huddart expressed his surprise at the part having been sold, and told Mr. Watkin that he never intended that that part of the farm should be sold, and further told him that he, Mr. Watkin, must see to having a water-course made to my farm. Mr. Watkin replied "that so it happened." After this sale I had to carry water in a tank for about a quarter of a mile distance, and further had to pay 14*s.* a quarter rent to the Portmadoc Water Works in respect of this water. No reduction was made with rent in respect of this, although previous to the sale I never had occasion to seek for water elsewhere than in the lake.

"About this time I told Mr. Watkin that I could not make the farm pay, and went to him three times to tell him of my intention to give the farm up. But he always persuaded me to stick to the place, saying that no one was harsh, or would be harsh with me. When I asked for a reduction in the rent I was refused.

"The matter preyed so much on my wife's and my own mind that we could not sleep at night, and my wife was so impressed with the matter that one day I found her having made up her clothes, &c. in a parcel, saying that she was going to leave.

Chairman—continued.

"I had great work in soothing her that night.

"Next morning we lost sight of Mrs. Jones, and after searching for her for half-an-hour or so, we found her in the cellar having attempted to injure herself, and but for our timely arrival no doubt she would have committed suicide. Two doctors attended Mrs. Jones the following morning, and their opinion was that she would not recover, because of the mental strain she was put under owing to the worry and annoyance caused us through lack of water to conduct our business in the house and farm properly, as I then carried on a milk business, selling milk at Portmadoc.

"I may say that we have paid high rent for the house as a lodging-house, but the house was so much out of repair that the visitors whom we had continually complained about the dampness occasioned by the leakage of the water, and we were never able to get Mr. Watkin to do the necessary repairs, which of course added to my wife's worry and vexation.

"I consider the agent's conduct towards me as very arbitrary and high-handed, but it is only an illustration of the way in which he is in the habit of acting towards other tenants under his thumb. For instance, two neighbours of mine, Messrs. Evan Griffith and William Williams were paying at the rate of 2*l.* an acre for an accommodation field which they held under him. They made several complaints that they were not able to pay their way at that rent, but Mr. Watkin refused to make any reduction, the consequence being that the tenants gave him notice to quit and gave up the land, and Mr. Watkin was unable to relet it at the same rent without a reduction from 20*l.* to 16*l.*

"Finding that we were unable to go on at that rent, I went to Criccieth to see the agent with the intention to give the place up. I remember when on one of the occasions above referred to he persuaded me not to give it up, and I told him that I would not pay a penny rent in respect of the house, which was not in a fit state of repair. He admitted that the house was in a bad state, 'But,' he added, 'I am not 'allowed to spend money on it. I shall, however, 'speak with Messrs. Huddarts.' I asked him to let me know before the 1st of March the result, so that I might have fair play, so as to make a sale of the furniture in the house, and go to the granary loft to live in. He promised faithfully to let me hear from him by that time, and I replied that I would not touch the garden until then, but that unless I heard anything from him, I would take it for granted that my proposal was agreed to.

"Three weeks after the 1st of March I met Mr. Watkin at Portmadoc, when I told him that I had begun to cultivate the garden. He said I had done right. Then I said that it was agreed to that I was to get everything according to my proposal, and he bowed assent. Just at that time a gentleman, Mr. Casson, applied to me to let the house to him, but owing to Mr. Watkin not carrying out his promised alterations, negotiations for letting fell through.

"The result of Mr. Watkin's treatment of me was this:—

"1st. That notwithstanding the fact of considerable depreciation in value and utility of the farm through the taking away of the water and the piece of land and farm-yard, no reduction whatever was made in the rent.

"Secondly. That notwithstanding the fact that the house of Plasynpenrhyn was let to me at a high rent as a lodging-house, and that it was rendered useless for that purpose through lack of water and disrepair, no reduction whatever was made in the rent of the house, nor was any attempt made to repair it as promised.

"Thirdly. Owing to my losses in connexion with the above, I had to sell out all my stock and leave Plasynpenrhyn a ruined man, and my wife's health broken down. I lost 600*l.* in eight years at Plasynpenrhyn, and as a consequence I have, at the age of 73, to work for the support of myself and wife.

"I consider that my case is only an illustration of the way in which estate agents act in Wales, and that an Act of Parliament ought to be passed whereby such conduct as Mr. Watkin's towards me, which may, and I fear often does, occur in other cases, should be made impossible for the future, and that tenants who like myself are anxious to make the best of the land in our tenancy should be protected against such arbitrary and unjust conduct on the part of landlords and their agents.

Chairman.

11,492. Did you owe any money to your landlord when you were given notice to quit?—He did not give me a notice to quit, but he made me give a bill of sale to him of all my stock.

11,493. Did you owe any money to your landlord when the bill of sale was demanded?—Yes, I owed him money. I was unable to pay up all the rent every year.

11,494. I want to know, were you in debt to your landlord when the bill of sale was demanded?—Yes.

11,495. To what extent?—I do not know, but he allowed me to remain at Plasynpenrhyn, and said no one was harsh towards me, and no one would be harsh towards me.

11,496. What was the amount of the bill of sale?—I do not know; he knows.

11,497. Was it 600*l.*?—Yes, it was a good deal, but the house was left to me for the last two years without my having been obliged to pay the rent.

11,498. What was the rent?—The rent of my house was 50*l.*

11,499. How much did you owe your landlord?—I really do not know. I cannot recollect now, how much money I owed my landlord.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,500. Have you a copy of the bill of sale?—Yes, I have at home.

11,501. Whose name is in it, Mr. Watkin's or the landlord's?—Mr. Huddart's, my landlord's name.

11,502. There had been no dealings between you and Mr. Watkin?—In what way?

11,503. There were no dealings between you and Mr. Watkin except in Mr. Watkin's capacity as agent?—No, there was no buying and selling between me and Mr. Watkin.

Chairman.

11,504. There are some questions put in. The first is by Mr. Vincent: "Is not the land now let "as accommodation land"?—Yes, for half, so they say.

11,505. "Have you ever paid the whole of "your debt to the landlord"?—I am not quite sure. I do not know whether I paid in full the first year's.

11,506. How much money had you left of your own when you had paid the debt to the landlord?—After the selling under the bill of sale?

11,507. Yes. I want to know how much you had left in the world?—About 15*l.*

11,508. That is all you had left in the world, when your landlord had exacted your rent?—Yes, and a little furniture to go to the other place.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,509. Are we to understand that Mr. Watkin entered and took possession of the stock under the bill of sale, or did you, finding you were in difficulties, determine to have a sale yourself, and hand over the proceeds to Mr. Watkin?—I made the sale. I paid him down 100*l.*, that I should have my own, and on the 1st of March following, I paid another 20*l.* to Mr. Watkin, so that I should have the right of selling, and the bill of sale should not be enforced.

Chairman.

11,510. To redeem it?—Yes, to redeem it.

11,511. This is a question put by Mr. William George: "Would you have stayed in Plasyn-"penrhyn at all, but for Mr. Watkin's promise to "repair, and the Messrs. Huddart's request to him "to bring you water"?—It would have been easier for me to have paid my rent by far, and it would have been easier for me to have stayed there.

11,512. "Did the rent run while the house was practically useless to you, and the farm was of considerably less value"?—Yes.

11,513. "How did you pay off the bill of sale, had you to borrow money"?—Yes, I had to borrow money.

11,514. "How much did the stock realise"?—I had 110*l.* for the whole bill of sale.

11,515. "Were you not 10*l.* out of pocket"?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

11,516. This is a question put by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Then all you really paid was 120*l.* out of 600*l.*"?—Yes, as he asked for the rent of the house for the two years, 100*l.*

Chairman—continued.

11,517. Practically you paid everything you had in the world except 15*l.* and your furniture?—Yes, and I owed 10 guineas for a cow, and I paid the money. Re-examined, 17,446.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Watkin recalled.

Chairman.

See above, and 17,288–17,318.

11,518. The Commissioners do not want any general statement from you, but we want you to confine yourself entirely to what you want to rebut on this evidence. We do not want any statement as to the estate of any soil except what clearly relates to the evidence which we have just heard from Mr. Jones. Have you anything to say on that?—Yes, I contest almost everything that Robert Jones has said. First of all he took the house by itself, and the land was always let since 1863 as accommodation land. It is quite close to Portmadoc, within a mile of it, and it was not a bill of sale at all, it was an assignment. The matter was put into the hands of the solicitors for the estate, and they came to an agreement with him to take a bill of sale instead of selling him up.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,519. Have you the document here?—No, I have not.

11,520. You say it was an assignment of this man's whole estate and effects?—Yes, I believe so.

11,521. It was not registered under the Bills of Sale Act?—I do not know. I had nothing at all to say to it. It was done by the solicitor.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued

11,522. We quite understand?—He owed us about 492*l.* 14*s.* at the time, and instead of selling him up the solicitor accepted from him 100*l.* in cash at the time, and I think his promise, or somebody's promise for him, for 20*l.*, and to leave the place.

Chairman.

11,523. You, as agent, allowed this tenant to run 492*l.* 14*s.* into debt?—There were particular reasons for it, my Lord.

11,524. I do not want to know the reasons, but you allowed this tenant to run 492*l.* 14*s.* into debt with his landlord?—We did in this case, my Lord, I am very sorry to say.

11,525. We are only talking about this case, I want yes or no?—Yes, we did.

11,526. You then sold him up for 120*l.*, yes or no?—Yes.

11,527. And you left him with 15*l.* in the world and his furniture?—He had his furniture.

11,528. His furniture and 15*l.* was all he had in the world, and he was owing 10*l.* for a cow he bought. Do you dispute that?—I do not know anything about that. Re-examined, 17,288.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Chairman.

We shall take rebutting evidence after the other witnesses.

Mr. John Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

The Interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"Mr. John Jones, Tynllan, Llanfihangel bachellaeth, near Pwllheli, farmer.

"I wish to give evidence as to the way in which farmers in these parts are apt to be treated by their landlords.

"In 1862 I took a farm on the Bryncelyn estate known as Tyisa. The rent used to be 82*l.*, but when I took it it was raised to 90*l.* The agent told me there would be no danger of my being disturbed, nor was I disturbed so long as he was alive. Not long after two other pieces were taken away to form a plantation, but no reduction whatever was made in respect of these, nor was any notice given me before it was taken.

"Then the agent, who was an Englishman, of the name of Mr. Manley, died, and in two months' time I got the letter (producing same) from the new agent informing me that the rent would be raised to 110*l.* and giving me a week's time to consider whether I would take it or not. I considered the rent most unreasonable and did not agree to take it. So I got the notice to quit which is produced." (Notice dated 8th May 1878, produced.)

Chairman.

11,529. What year is that?—1878. I never received any compensation in respect of the improvements I had effected on this farm, relying on the landlord's promise that I would not be disturbed. About the time my notice matured there was another farm on the same estate becoming vacant, the tenant refusing to hold on unless a reduction of 50*l.* were made in the rent, and having nowhere else to go I took this farm, Tynllan.

11,530. Who was the landlord?—The same landlord as Tyisa.

11,531. Who was he?—The Reverend Robert Nowell Whitaker; that landlord is dead, though.

11,532. Who is your landlord now?—My landlord now is a new one, who has nothing to do with the last, a lady of the name of Miss Gillespie. Everything is all right; she is a good landlady.

Sir John Llewelyn.

See evidence of next witness.

11,533. Is it private property or glebe land?—No; it was a small estate. About the time my notice matured, there was another farm on the estate becoming vacant, the tenant refusing to hold on unless a deduction of 50*l.* were made in the rent, and having nowhere else to go, I took this farm Tynllan. The landlord makes all repairs as regards buildings; I pay for all improvements on land. Many years ago, I took a farm known as Felin Rhyd hir, for my parents, Mr. Assheton Smith being the owner and Mr. Millington was the then agent. In the course of the General Election of 1880, a Tory agent came for me with a car to take me to vote for the Tory candidate. I refused to go with him. I subsequently went unawares to this agent and recorded my vote. The next thing I got was a notice to quit from Captain Stewart, and I had to give the place up. (Notice dated 8th May 1880, produced.) I saw Mr. Assheton Smith himself and Captain Stewart, when I was giving up the place, and said that I had voted all right. I insisted upon then translating what I said to the landlord, and he scolded the agent and said he would not like to have a row over a thing like that.

Chairman.

11,534. You were a tenant under Mr. Assheton Smith?—Yes.

11,535. Mr. Millington was the agent?—I was under three agents on that estate.

11,536. You voted for the Liberal candidate in 1880?—I always voted for the Conservative candidate. I might as well tell the truth.

11,537. In 1880, a Tory agent came to you with a car to take you to vote for the Tory candidate?—Yes.

11,538. You refused to go?—Yes.

11,539. You afterwards went and recorded your vote?—They sent another man with another car, and I went with that because I knew he was a Tory.

11,540. I do not want to know who he was. Did you record your vote or not?—I did vote.

11,541. Was the Ballot Act in force at that time?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

11,542. Did you get notice to quit, after the election, from Captain Stewart?—Yes; the following month.

11,543. Did you give the place up?—Yes.

11,544. Did you see Mr. Assheton Smith afterwards?—Yes; I went to the office several times.

11,545. Why were you given notice to quit?—I have not heard.

11,546. Did Mr. Assheton Smith scold Captain Stewart?—I did not understand indeed what they were saying.

11,547. Then why do you say in this statement that Captain Stewart was scolded by Mr. Assheton Smith?—I do not understand that it was so.

11,548. This is what you say in your statement: "I saw Mr. Assheton Smith and he scolded the agent"?—He gave me fair play to say what I had to say—that I had voted right.

11,549. Did he say that he would not like to have a row over a thing like that?—I did not understand.

11,550. Then you want to withdraw that?—I withdraw that.

11,551. Did you go back into your farm?—To Felin-Rhyd-hir.

11,552. But you got notice to quit. You left your own farm?—I gave up Felin-Rhyd-hir at the time that the notice fell in.

Lord Kenyon.

11,553. Have you seen your landlord lately?—Yes; my present landlord.

11,554. Miss Gillespie?—Yes.

11,555. When?—Yesterday.

11,556. Did you say you were going to give evidence?—Yes, we spoke about that. That was a subject of conversation too.

11,557. What did she say?—I was talking then with her father (General Gillespie) and he said they had no objection to my telling the truth.

11,558. What did you say?—I said I would not say anything but the truth, and I had nothing to do but show the letter as it is to be seen.

11,559. Were you asked to withhold any part of your evidence?—No. The present landlady is no relative at all and has no connexion at all with those. Everything is all right with her.

11,560. Have you seen any of the other landlords that you mentioned lately?—No; I am clear of all landlords. She is my only landlady.

11,561. Do you know of any cases of intimidation by a landlord or agent?—I do not say that they intimidate us, but at the same time we are afraid of offending the gentlemen. They are far kinder and far better and treat us far better than they used to throughout the country generally.

11,562. Since when?—During these depressed times some of them give fair abatements.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

11,563. When do you allege that they treated them less kindly than they do now?—At the time when the rents were so much raised; at the time they raised the rent so much.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,564. Were you here yesterday?—No, I was not; I was at home.

11,565. You had received, had you not, a notice from the Secretary of the Commission that you were to come and give evidence to-day?—Yes, I knew both to-day and yesterday.

11,566. How is it you have come here? Who has asked you to come here?—Mr. Griffith of Galltyberen.

11,567. Did you tell him the story of your life so far as it related to the different farms you had been at, and the notices to quit and so forth?—Mr. Griffith knows, as I do, everything.

11,568. And did he write down in your presence?—He wrote some things.

11,569. It was yesterday afternoon, was it not, that Miss Gillespie called upon you?—Yes, she was yonder. She was going through the estate with her father, and she was very kind, promising to build new buildings and everything of that kind.

11,570. How long is it since you saw Miss Gillespie before?—Yesterday was the first time I had seen her since she became my landlady four years ago.

11,571. You appeared before Mr. J. M. Griffiths and the Secretary this morning in the adjoining room, did you not?—Yes, I did.

11,572. Did you say to Mr. Griffiths, "It does "not matter about putting that in now"?—I told everyone who spoke to me that it was no good my writing anything except that which I could prove.

11,573. Did you use the words I have mentioned to you?

(The question was repeated to the witness by the Secretary.)

Secretary.

The words used were (I will put them in Welsh first) "Does dim eisieu cyfeirio dim at hyna rwan." "There is no need to make any reference to that now."

Professor Rhŷs.

You asked him if he made use of those words, and his answer was, "It may be so." I think that was it.

(The Secretary again questioned the witness.)

Perhaps it was, but I also said it was no use wasting time to make statements that I could not prove.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,574. What did you mean by saying "It is no use stating that now"?—It is something that has occurred some good long time ago, and I was not quite sure about it; I had no assurance of it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

11,575. That is not the point?—Captain Stewart told me that it was not owing to politics or to political views that the warning or notice to quit came.

11,576. But we are not talking about Captain Stewart at all. When Mr. Thomas, in the presence of Mr. Griffiths, read something to you, I understand you said, "It is no use stating that now," or words to that effect?—Politics, was it not?

11,577. No. Were not the sentences that the Secretary read to you sentences regarding your present position and circumstances?—I said that everything was right with regard to this farm. They had misstated the facts.

11,578. But you have admitted to me that the words which you said were, "It is no use stating that now," or words to that effect?—No, it is the politics.

11,579. Let us get this perfectly clear. After the Secretary had read to you what is stated in this paper about the politics and Captain Stewart and notice to quit, the Secretary went on to read something else?—Yes.

11,580. And when Mr. Thomas read it to you, did you not say, "It is not necessary to refer to that now," or words to that effect?—Yes, I withdrew everything that they had written about politics towards the end there.

11,581. Having used those words, "It is unnecessary" or "not necessary to refer to that now," did you not add in Mr. Griffith's presence, "But it is quite true though"?—Yes, there had been considerable talk about my having voted for Mr. Watkin Williams.

11,582. But that is not the question I am putting to you. The part that Mr. Thomas was reading was about your present circumstances and your present holding?—I understand now.

11,583. When Mr. Thomas was reading that did you or not say the words which you have already admitted that you used, "It is not necessary to refer to that now"?—With regard to my landlord having taken land for the purpose of planting trees without reducing the rent; it related to that.

11,584. Will you kindly answer my question? Do you admit that when Mr. Thomas was reading certain words about your present holding you said "It is not necessary to refer to that now"?—Yes.

11,585. Did you not add these words, "It is quite true though," in Welsh?—Yes, only that I had agreed to what my master had asked.

11,586. Quite so—at the interview yesterday?—No, after my landlord had taken the land. I was showing them my master had taken the land for that purpose, and not reducing my rent and without giving notice and to raise the rent so much after that.

11,587. If that is so, what did you mean by saying "it is unnecessary to refer to that now"?—Because I had agreed to take the place without having a reduction for the plantation.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

11,588. But why had you said it before then?—Perhaps you understand that my present landlady had come to know that I was going to give evidence here, and that she wished me to be silent, but that is not so.

Mr. Griffiths.

11,589. Why did you insist on having what you had to say to your landlord translated in his presence?—For fear there might be something which I could not prove.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

11,590. You do not understand. When you went to your landlord you insisted upon having what you had to say translated to the landlord?—I have no recollection of that at all.

11,590A. "You consider that the agents are worse than the landlords"?—I considered that Captain Stewart was more harsh than Mr. Assheton Smith, my landlord.

The witness withdrew.

Capt. STEWART recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

See above. 11,591. I understand that you wish to say that there is no truth in the suggestion that the notice to quit was given for a political reason?—I wish to say so distinctly. If you wish to know why he had notice to quit it is very hard to recall the facts after a lapse of 13 years, but so far as I can tax my memory now I will tell you frankly. What I believe to have been the reason was this for one thing. He did not reside at the place. He resided at a farm some distance away. He neglected the farm so much that the buildings became a heap of ruins—nothing better than that—the dilapidations were most serious. I asked him if he would come to reside at the mill if he was allowed to go on. He said he would not: he would not promise to do so; then I said, "You are not a fit tenant." He left the business to be conducted by his sister and never looked after the business at all. So far as I can tax my memory those are the reasons why notice to quit was given.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,592. Whose obligation was it to repair?—It was his duty.

11,593. Under what contract?—Under his agreement with his landlord.

Chairman.

The Interpreter will tell the previous witness that Captain Stewart says that he gave him notice to quit because he was a bad tenant and let the farm go to ruins.

(The Interpreter translated the observations to the previous witness.)

Chairman.

11,594. There is a question from Mr. George: "Was there a discussion in the office about politics"?—Politics might have been mentioned. I have a perfect recollection of his coming to the office and having an interview with Mr. Assheton Smith and myself, but I understood him to withdraw the expression that Mr.

Chairman—continued.

Assheton Smith had scolded me. If he has not withdrawn that expression I must characterise it in very strong language.

11,595. Was there any discussion about politics in the office?—I do not remember anything being said about politics. I remember his visit to the office perfectly well.

11,596. Was there any discussion in the office about politics?—I am pretty certain we had no discussion about politics.

11,597. You are quite certain that there was no discussion about politics?—Yes, quite certain. We never do discuss politics in the office. I have never yet known it done once.

11,598. Was not the farm taken for his parents?—He was not a tenant, I believe.

11,599. Was not the farm taken for his father and mother?—Well, I do not know. It was not taken in my time, I think, but as I said before the thing happened 13 years ago, and unless I have an opportunity of looking up the case I cannot tell you.

11,600. Perhaps you would look it up?—Very well. Re-examined. 13,273.

The witness withdrew.

An announcement was made in Welsh and in English requesting the Welsh witnesses to go into a room with one of the Commissioners in order that there might not by any possibility be any mistake creeping into their evidence.

Mr. Cledwyn Owen.—My Lord, I handed up a question to be put to the witness. That question has not been asked. It was handed in through the Secretaries, and I think it was a question which ought to have been asked.

Chairman.

The Commissioners think the question need not be put.

Mr. Cledwyn Owen.—I think it is a fair question to put.

Chairman.

Will you sit down, please?

Mr. Cledwyn Owen.—I think it is a perfectly fair question.

Chairman.

Will you sit down?

The Commissioners deliberated.

Chairman.

It must be distinctly understood that although we have every wish that every sort of question should be put in by any person in court, yet we distinctly reserve to ourselves the right of determining whether that question should be put or not in the public interest.

Mr. JOHN DAVIES called and examined (through an interpreter).

Chairman.

11,601. Can you give your evidence in English or in Welsh?—In Welsh.

11,602. This is your evidence (indicating same) and it is accurate?—Yes.

The interpreter read the following statement:—

1,414, 0. "John Davies, Caertyddyn, Llangybi, farmer.

"I am a tenant of Mr. Ellis Nanney, and hold under a lease for 30 years from 1887.

"I have been at Caertyddyn for the last 20 years, and during that time have executed considerable improvements in the place at my own expense. The rent of the place used to be 28*l.* 7*s.* in 1853. It is now 44*l.* 10*l.*

"Some six years ago, the buildings having become very dilapidated, I applied for repairs and extension of the buildings.

"The landlord refused to execute these improvements except on consideration of my paying 5*l.* per cent. per annum on the capital he would expend. I refused this offer. He then told me he could get plenty who would give more for the place than I was giving. I offered to leave if they would pay me for the improvements I had already executed. He then offered me a lease on condition of my executing the improvements myself. This I accepted and have spent 400*l.* to 500*l.* of my own money on improvements in the course of the last 15 years. I had not had the advantage of having the farm at a low rent previous to the lease. I consider the rent to be quite high enough, even when farming pays much better than it does now.

"I am stating this as a matter of fact, to show how difficult it is for a tenant to make a fair agreement with his landlord in the absence of proper protection for the tenant in the laws of the land, although the best personal feelings exist between me and my landlord and his agents as far as I know."

"I am of opinion that the proper way of fixing rent is by arbitration or by a land court.

"From my knowledge of the farmers of my own and surrounding parishes I consider that the absolute power which the landlords possess over the livelihood of their tenants is destructive of the tenants' independence and injurious to their manhood.

"At present there is hardly any intercourse between the landlords and their tenants. The landlords belong to a different class, hold different religious and political opinions, and use a different tongue from their tenants. Generally speaking the former turn in a circle their own, are Churchmen and Conservatives, and use the English language, whilst the latter seldom see their landlords, are Nonconformists and Liberals, and speak Welsh. The consequence is that there is very little fellow-felling between one class and the other, and all communications which pass between them are of a business character and pass through the land agent.

Chairman—continued.

"The farmer in these parts lives a very hard life. He and his family have to drudge from morning till night, summer 5 a.m. till 7, or perhaps 8, or even later than that, p.m. Winter about the same, and I live on a poor fare and dress poorly. It is the exception for a farmer to have fresh meat on his table. Sometimes a cow is killed and a quarter or so kept and salted for future use.

"I do not consider that the farmers' sons and daughters get fair play under the present system by a long way.

"For instance, when I was a lad and had to walk three or four miles to school, I had also before starting to assist my sister and the servant to milk the cows, or some other farm work, and so again after returning home, and during the harvest and other busy times we were kept at home altogether. My schoolmaster (Eben Fardd, Clynnog) used to tell me that pauper children were better off for schooling than farmers' sons like myself. It is very much the same yet. It is the children's unpaid labour that has enabled the farmers of this district to tide over their difficulties as well as they have been able to do these last years.

"Some 25 or 30 years ago there was a general raising of rents in these parts, and there is many a farm I could name whose rents has been nearly doubled or trebled the last 40 or 50 years. There has been no permanent reduction made during these bad times. All that the landlords did was to extend the time for payment and allow a discount varying from 5*l.* to 10*l.* per cent. I got no reduction or allowance. I applied, but was told no allowance could be made to leaseholders.

"I do not believe the land agents are practical men as a rule. I can give instances to prove this. I should like to hand in a list of farms whose rents have been raised on account of improvements effected by the tenants.

"I consider that the agreements under which farmers hold their farms are unjust in many respects.

"I can produce a rent receipt book from 1728–1784."

Sir John Llewelyn.

11,603. What is the date of your lease?—1887.

11,604. For how long does it run?—Thirty years

11,605. Is that at 44*l.*?—44*l.* 10*s.*

11,606. What is the acreage?—I am not quite sure of that. It is something between 52 and 55 acres, more or less.

11,607. It is a repairing lease?—Yes.

11,608. The repairs being upon the tenant?—Yes.

11,609. You think a land court is required?—Yes.

11,610. Would that be to fix fair rents?—Yes.

11,611. And fixity of tenure?—Yes.

11,612. Do not you get fixity of tenure under the lease?—Yes, but I did not want fixity of tenure according to the lease. I had to abide by the terms of the landlord, without getting my own terms inserted in the lease.

11,613. You get fixity of tenure by the lease?—Oh yes, but the conditions are not right.

11,614. Were you not a party to that six years ago?—No, it was almost a twelvemonth before I would accept a lease. I wanted to repair my buildings or my house; I did not want a lease.

11,615. Why did you sign it, then?—The circumstances were these. It was rumoured in the district that the more remote parts of Mr. Nanney's estate were to be sold, and I knew, from experience, what it was to be on another estate under similar circumstances. After I had been in that farm for six years, and farming it as well as I could, and getting it in a good condition, it was sold by auction in this town.

11,616. Then it was after all with the object of securing fixity of tenure that you took a lease?—I chose the less of two evils. I had spent 250*l.* on the place between the labour and the money on the farm, when I asked for these repairs from my landlord.

11,617. Then it was to prevent your being turned out from the farm, to avert the danger of being turned out, that you took the lease?—Yes, in order to avoid the misfortune of seeing my labour having been in vain.

11,618. Then has Mr. Nanney changed many of his tenants?—I do not know. I have not been disturbed for the last 15 years; I have had perfect quietness for the last 15 years.

11,619. Do you think that a land court ought to fix fair rents for those who hold under a lease?—Yes, I know of several under the same conditions in this part of the country, or in this district, who would like to have the thing referred to a third party.

11,620. You said you would like to see a land court or arbitration court?—So far as my conception of one and the other goes they answer the same purpose, the land court and arbitration.

11,621. What is the difference between the two?—Well, I have not seen either a land court in existence, or arbitration resorted to in this neighbourhood, so it is very difficult for me to express my opinion.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

11,622. You might have thought the matter out and given us some opinion. You say landlords differ in language; your landlord speaks Welsh, I think?—Yes, but I have spoken very little with him, either in Welsh or English, although he only lives five miles away.

Mr. Grove.

11,623. Just one question. Although you speak of the advantages of a land court, I suppose you would always wish the landlord and the tenant to try to come to terms before you go to a land court to settle?—A good deal of time is spent now with that object, but they fail to come to terms, they fail to agree.

Mr. Richard Jones.

11,624. I should like to know if the duties of a tenant with regard to repairs are clearly defined in the agreements on Mr. Ellis Nanney's estate?—They are easily understood. In fact, they are more easily understood than they are fulfilled. It is easier to understand them than to fulfil them.

11,625. I want to know under what clause in the agreement is the tenant obliged to repair the buildings, and how far are we to understand the word "repair." Does it mean erection of new buildings?—Expending 150*l.*, and that at the discretion of the tenant.

11,626. Is that in the agreement, that you are to spend 150*l.*?—Yes, it is.

11,627. I am talking now about the agreement?—I have no agreement. Mine is a lease.

11,628. Had you any agreement before taking the lease?—No.

11,629. Was there no understanding between you and the landlord with respect to repairs when you took the place?—Yes.

11,630. What was the understanding then, between you and the landlord, with respect to repairs when you took the place?—I was there at Caretyddyn without being a proper tenant for five years through marriage.

11,631. When did you become really a tenant?—About 15 years ago.

11,632. When you became a tenant, did you come to an understanding, either with Mr. Ellis Nanney or with the agent, with respect to repairs in this place?—No, not then; there was no reference to the buildings then, when I became proper tenant.

11,633. Why did you not come to some sort of proper terms with either the landlord or the agent, with respect to repairs, before making such a large outlay?—There is this to be said. I took pleasure, it pleased me to cultivate the land, and it was said about the Gwynfryn estate that it was a good and secure estate to be on, so I went about making these improvements with greater freedom.

11,634. Had you made any inquiries under what conditions the other tenants held under Mr. Ellis Nanney with respect to repairs?—I did not understand that there was any special form on Mr. Nanney's estate until the last few years, when an agreement was adopted and signed.

11,635. Then, practically, you became a tenant on this estate with your eyes shut ?—My eyes ought to have been more open.

11,636. After about six or seven years' experience of a lease, would you recommend other tenants to be under lease ?—It depends on the terms of the lease.

11,637. We will take your lease, for instance. What do you say ?—It would fare very badly under such circumstances as these, or in such a depression as this.

11,638. If you considered your own interests entirely, how would you farm under a lease now ?—I would cultivate it as well as I could, of course.

11,639. For how long ?—As long as I remained on the farm.

11,640. Would you cultivate it as well as you could right up to the end of the lease ?—Yes ; because that would be a kind of natural instinct which I would follow, unless, of course, circumstances pressed me to give it up.

11,642. Well, you turn among tenant farmers. I will ask this question. Do you think that tenant farmers in general would be conscientious enough to take the interest of the landlord and the community into consideration ?—I suppose that most of them would first of all look to their personal interests, and then, secondly, to the landlord's interest, but there are a few or some honourable ones amongst them who would regard their own interests and those of the landlord pretty well the same.

Mr. Griffiths.

11,643. What do you mean by saying that the absolute power of the landlord would destroy the manhood of the tenant ?—The tenant's livelihood depends so much on the landlord at present that he does not feel himself a free man. It is so much in the hands of the landlord that he does not feel himself a free man or an independent man.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

11,644. You say again that farmers' children are not educated as well as paupers' children. Is that the reason why so many of them become farmers, that they are not fit to go to anything else ?—I say it is a reason why they become labourers on the farms ; not half of them become farmers. The other half go in for something else.

11,645. They do now ?—I did not say that half of them become farmers.

11,646. Then you do not say that they are so badly educated after all ?—They go and work as labourers, and do not take advantage of the education they have received.

Chairman.

11,647. There is one question put by Mr. William Humphreys which the Commissioners think had better not be put. A question by the Rev. W. Thomas : "Was the witness ever intimidated by a minister or a deacon ?"—No, I do not know that it is so.

11,648. "Do you know of any instances of such intimidation ?"—So far as I know that class, they are only a terror to wrong-doing.

11,649. Does that mean yes or no ?—No.

11,650. Question by Mr. Vincent : "Is it not "perfectly usual for farmers' sons to become "ministers, clergymen, and doctors ?"—Some who are farmers' children attain or follow those vocations, as well as those who are children of labourers.

11,651. Does that mean yes ?—Yes.

11,652. Mr. Vincent asks, "Mr. Nanney speaks Welsh, does he not ?"—I heard him say by this table that he is a very good Welshman, but I have never spoken Welsh to him.

11,653. A question by Mr. Owen Wynne : "Did not you stand as a candidate for the County Council ?"—Yes.

11,654. "Were you not beaten by Mr. Nanney" ?—Yes.

11,655. "Was not the election conducted under the Ballot Act ?"—Yes, so far as I understood, it was carried on under the Ballot Act.

11,656. Question by Mr. Vincent : "Would "you let land if you had it on terms which "would leave a man able to 'run' the land at "the end of the tenancy ?"—I should try my best to persuade him to do differently, and if he did not do so I should take time to consider what I should do with him afterwards.

The witness withdrew.

Dr. ROWLANDS called and examined.

Chairman.

11,657. Where do you live?—Llanaelhairn.

11,658. You are a physician and surgeon in practice?—Yes.

11,659. You have been so for the last 15 years?—Yes.

11,660. In what sort of district is yours?—An agricultural district and a quarry district.

11,661. You know the life of the farmers and the farm labourers?—Yes, quite well.

11,662. What sort of state are the houses in generally?—The houses are not all satisfactory, that is, as to sanitary condition, most of them. As a general rule the sanitary condition does not get proper attention.

11,663. Are the farm buildings too close to the dwelling-houses, and are the houses filled with bad smells?—Yes, in some parts.

11,664. Is the sleeping accommodation of farm servants good?—Very bad.

11,665. Where do the men generally sleep?—In out-houses; that is, in stable lofts.

11,666. Can you give us an instance?—I know of one stable loft which is only a few feet high. If a man was to sit in bed his head would be through the roof. There is no partition or railings between the bed and the horses beneath. If that man was to tumble out of bed he would fall underneath the horses.

11,667. Is that a common state of things?—No, it is not common. I am naming one instance of a bad case.

11,668. That is a very bad case?—That is a very bad case. They are not all the same. In this place, besides that, the pigstye is just above the kitchen where the men servants are eating, and where they are cooking food for them, and there is a sloping ground, and all the dirt from this runs down to the back of that stable, passing the front of that kitchen.

11,669. Is it easy for tenants to get their buildings put in repair by their landlords?—I am afraid not.

11,670. Are the tenants afraid, in your opinion, of pressing their landlord upon this point?—Yes, they are very much afraid.

11,671. Do many labourers live in cottages?—Yes, some.

11,672. Do you know of any farms with cottages on them?—Yes, I do.

11,673. Are those cottages sub-let very high?—They are sub-let very high, while the tenant farmer pays very little for them, and will not do any repairs on the house.

11,674. Are the conditions under which the labourers live favourable for any attempt at self-improvement?—No, it is quite different.

11,675. How long do the labourers work?—They work as a rule from six to seven, but there are instances where they keep them, perhaps, from six till nine o'clock or ten at night; but those are exceptions from the rule. The rule is from six to seven.

11,676. Have the labourers ever rebelled against these conditions?—They did some time ago, and the reduction became then from six till seven.

Chairman.—continued.

11,677. Where do they get after the working hours?—They are very apt to come to the villages, to the crosses there, and to flock together, but others go, perhaps, to public houses and to different places and roam about.

11,678. Then do the maids stay in the house?—I believe they do.

11,679. And there is nowhere else for them to go?—There is nowhere else for them to go—except to the stable loft.

11,680. Do you consider the conditions of the maid servants in your district satisfactory?—It is quite otherwise, it is not satisfactory at all.

11,681. It is not proper, and not right, and not as it should be?—No, it is not right.

Lord Kenyon.

11,682. Why does not the sanitary inspector interfere?—He does very often, but I am giving it now as a general complaint to the Commission, a thing that is well worth notice, that the sanitary inspector should get more instructions to be careful about the condition of affairs in the country districts.

11,683. The law is very strict about that?—Yes.

11,684. If the sanitary inspector complained, the landlord is bound to see that the place is in repair?—Yes, but there are very many houses which come very nearly within the law, but not quite within it.

11,685. But surely that matter lies within the province of the sanitary inspector?—It does so, but I am dealing with the state of things as they are.

11,686. Yes, but I think the fault lies with the sanitary inspector not drawing the attention of the landlords to the defects. That is what occurred to me. Now, you mentioned one very bad case indeed of lodging for the men. Would you mind stating where that is?—I would not mind doing it but I would rather not. If I am pressed to do it I will name the farm. I believe I wrote to the agent; I am under the impression that I informed the agent about the pigstye. I had one man suffering from pneumonia there, and had to remove him to the house at the time, but I would rather not name the place, as I do not desire to bring anything of a personal character, but I will do it if you wish me.

11,687. I certainly will not press you. You say you know of farms with cottages, and that these cottages are sub-let by the farmers at treble the rent which the landlord has charged?—Yes, I believe so.

11,688. I conclude you think it better that the labourers should hold their cottages direct from the landlord?—Oh, by far better.

11,689. We sometimes hear one opinion and sometimes the other?—I say it will be far better for those men to have the houses from the landlords themselves.

11,690. You say the condition of maid servants is worse than that of the men. What would you suggest as a remedy for that, more rooms or what?—The maid servants work as a rule from five in the morning until eight at night, without any intermission, and without any educational opportunities. What I would suggest as a remedy is a good night school, and nights out for them to go to the night school, and proper matrons to teach them in cooking, housekeeping, and in morality.

11,691. Is the moral state of the country very bad?—I do not consider it very bad, though there are several illegitimate children, but I do not consider that prostitution.

11,692. Is the bedroom accommodation in the farm houses insufficient then?—It is not what it should be. I have not seen a single case brought before the magistrates between people that are working in the quarry. They live quite differently. I never saw a young man and young woman belonging to the quarry bring a case before the magistrates, to Pwllheli, since I have been in Llanaelhaiarn. There are several hundreds of people living in Trefor, but I have not seen a single case there. In the farmhouses it is different, therefore I conclude that there must be some mischief in the sleeping accommodation, and in the connexion between them and the farmhouses.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,693. You mean, I suppose, that with regard to the affiliation cases that come before the petty sessions you find the parties are generally farm labourers?—Always.

11,694. I do not quite understand whether, in regard to the sanitary condition of the farmhouses, you think the law defective or the administration of the law defective?—Perhaps there might be some defects in the law, as well as in the administration of the law.

11,695. Would the matter be improved by the greater localisation of government; for instance, by the establishment of district councils and parish councils?—I believe it would to a great extent.

11,696. What, for instance, is the area of the Rural Sanitary Authority which you are more particularly speaking about?—I really cannot say.

11,697. Take the very bad case, the name of which very properly Lord Kenyon did not press you to mention, in what union is that?—In the Pwllheli Union.

11,698. Is that a very extensive union?—Yes.

11,699. How many parishes?—I do not know. Some members of the Board of Guardians are here. I am told 26.

11,700. I daresay we can find out otherwise. Do you think the area is too extensive for a proper supervision by the sanitary officer?—I believe it is, and besides that, we as medical men are not to report houses as a rule, unless we get cases of certain fevers there, and then we do not take upon ourselves to report them, because other men are paid for looking after that work.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

11,701. I mean you have no independent power, you as a medical man, practising at Pwllheli, have no independent power to report or call the attention of the Authority?—No, it is not my work.

11,702. To call attention to any defect that you may notice in regard to sanitary arrangements otherwise than incidentally to the obligation cast upon you to mention the existence of certain diseases?—Yes, certain fevers. That is all my authority.

11,703. What strikes me is this, that your evidence suggests that there should be more than one medical officer of health. Is that so?—I do not suggest that, but I suggest this, that the buildings all through the farms should be better, and so much better that they should allow one room for the men servants to sit together in the evening, and not to go down to the towns and to the villages.

11,704. But of course the question whether the accommodation is adequate, and the question whether the premises are in a sanitary condition, are two distinct questions, are they not?—Quite so.

11,705. I was dealing for the moment with the sanitary condition. Do you think that the landlords are in fault in regard to the matter?—There is no doubt that they are to be blamed, as well as the farmers, to a certain extent.

11,706. I presume that the defective sanitary condition proceeds from the fact that there is nobody ready and willing under our present system to spend a sufficient sum of money?—That is it.

Mr. Griffiths.

11,707. Are you the medical officer of health for the district?—No.

11,708. Who is?—Dr. Rees, of Carnarvon.

11,709. Does he live at Carnarvon?—Yes.

11,710. And inspects this neighbourhood here?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,711. Carnarvon is in a different union is it not?—Dr. Rees is medical officer of health. He is inspector in Pwllheli Union, as well as in Carnarvon Union, but he is medical officer of health.

Mr. Griffiths.

11,712. Are there no reading rooms in the villages about here?—No, none whatever.

11,713. I have seen one of them as I came along?—Not in our district.

11,714. Are there none in your district?—No, there are none in our place.

Lord Kenyon.

11,715. Do you think that they would be successful if there were any?—I believe they would.

11,716. How would you propose that they should be managed, by the labourers themselves?—Yes, by the labourers.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

11,717. If a room could be got for them?—Yes.

11,718. To make it into a sort of club?—Quite so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

11,719. Do you find that the inspector, as a rule, is reluctant to carry out his duty?—No, I do not find that.

11,720. Are there many houses here in the neighbourhood of only one story, that is, with all the rooms on the floor?—Yes, several.

11,721. What do you say in regard to cottages of that kind?—They are very unhealthy, and very inconvenient for medical men to attend cases there.

11,722. You are in the habit of attending labourers and the peasantry. What do you say about their diet? Is it satisfactory for manual work?—No, it is not. Their food is almost in a raw state. That is a reason why I should suggest a school of cookery for the farm servants, to learn cookery, and to manage the house when they get married.

11,723. Are there many cases of drunkenness?—We happen to be, in our parish, very well up in the temperance cause. We have but one public-house with 1,400 inhabitants, and a quarry of 400 men working there.

11,724. I do not know whether you mentioned anything about village reading rooms. Are there any village reading rooms?—No.

Mr. Seebohm.

11,725. Is the Rural Sanitary Authority in your district the Board of Guardians?—Yes.

11,726. Who are elected to the Board of Guardians? I suppose a large majority of farmers?—Yes, farmers.

11,727. A very large majority of farmers?—A very large majority.

11,728. Then the difficulty is rather that the sanitary inspector is not well backed by the Board of Guardians. Would you say that that is the cause?—I would say that that is the cause.

11,729. Then supposing that you lessened the district, do you think that would make it more easy to get a board which would be above suspicion in the matter, and which would carry out the law?—I believe it would, because it would become a matter of self interest, and besides it would be one of great importance to the medical man of the place as well.

11,730. But is not one of the difficulties this, that every sanitary improvement that has to be made is a cost to the farmer?—Yes, that is a great difficulty again.

11,731. So that it is rather like judging upon their own cases, and being biassed against the expense?—Very much so. It goes to their pockets to pay in the rates.

Mr. Grove.

11,732. Do you know of any cases where attention has been called to an insanitary state of things and it has not been attended to?—Only the one I have mentioned.

11,733. But as a rule, as far as your experience goes, when attention is called to matters are they attended to?—As a rule they are attended to.

Professor Rhŷs.

1,1734. I have in my hand the annual report of Dr. Rees, the medical officer of health for 1891, and I see here in the Pwllheli Union some very bad instances mentioned. Is your parish within the Pwllheli Union?—Yes.

11,735. For instance, he says, "I also received "a complaint respecting the state of—." I need not mention it by name—"which was said to be "entirely unfit for human habitation. I find "that the ground floor chambers were rotted "away by moisture from the foundation and "the bedroom floor was as bad; the bed was "mouldy, and the sleeping rooms were danger-"ously dilapidated, besides being very damp. "The roof also was dangerously dilapidated. "Water flowed down from the walls and into "the bed. This house has since been entirely "renovated"—I believe this was about two years ago. If it is the same case as the one I mean, it was I who reported it, I believe. It was about two years before it was attended to, and the man there was suffering from Bright's disease.

11,736. I do not suppose there is any reason why I should not mention the place to you, as it is in print. It is Ty Fair, Bryn Croes?—No, that is not the place I referred to.

11,737. There are two or three very bad instances here, but they have been attended to since. But what I intended to ask you is this—whether this dampness and dilapidated state of buildings is a very common thing?—Yes, very common.

11,738. Still very common?—Still very common in some houses.

11,739. Not so bad as this I suppose?—I may say that this is somewhat exceptional, but the cases are far too common.

11,740. Whose fault is that, do you think?—Well, I reported this case, and I believe it was about two years before it was remedied. I do not know where the fault lies.

11,741. Whose estate was it on? You do not wish to say, perhaps. I will not press that question?—Thank you, but I may say this, that the landlord himself was not responsible for this house. It was his tenant that was responsible for it.

11,742. That reminds me of a question I wanted to ask you with regard to the labourer's cottages. Who lets them, the landlord or the tenant farmer, as a rule?—The tenant farmer as a rule, if they are on the farms.

11,743. Do you think the repairing is better attended to, or worse attended to than if they are let by the landlord himself?—It would be far better for the men to have the landlord direct let the houses to them, because, very often, perhaps the landlord lets these houses for 1*l.* to the tenant farmers, and they charge 3*l.* or 4*l.* for the house, and then they will not repair a halfpenny worth on it.

11,744. Did I understand you to say that the lack of accommodation or proper accommodation for the farm servants leads, amongst other things, to immorality?—I believe it does.

11,745. You suggested that the maid servants should be taught cookery and other things?—Yes.

11,746. Have you thought out any scheme by which that could be arranged in a scattered district?—To have proper night schools, and for the maid servants to get out on certain nights to go to the school, and to have proper persons to superintend them; I know of no other plan.

11,747. Then you would drive the men servants to a night school of their own, I hope?—Yes, if I could.

11,748. Now to come to quite another matter. May I ask you if you have ever given any consideration with regard to this district of Lleyn to the question of light railways? Do you think if you had a railway from here, we will say, through the more populous parts of this district to Aberdaron, it would be a good thing for the country?—I believe it would be a splendid thing for our place, at any rate. I am not so well acquainted with Aberdaron.

11,749. Where is your place?—Llanaelhaiarn, six miles from here on the road to Carnarvon.

Chairman.

11,750. I have one question put in by Mr. William George. "Are the farmers too timid to "insist on the landlords erecting proper buildings, "in your opinion?"—I believe they are, and their timidity can be seen from the fact that they do not come forward to give evidence before this Royal Commission. I believe they are too timid, most of them, to come and give evidence before this Commission, unless they are under a Receiver or have a lease of their farms.

Mr. Griffiths.

11,751. Do you think landlords can afford to build cottages and let them at 1*l.* a year?—Oh, I believe they do, that is, an old cottage that is on the farm.

11,752. It must be a very poor one?—Very, very poor, far too poor for any one to live in.

11,753. Do you recommend that kind of cottages?—I do not, but I should recommend the landlords to have those cottages in their own hands, either to do away with them or to repair them properly for the men.

11,754. You say that it would be better for a labourer if he held his cottage direct from the landlord?—Yes, I do.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

11,755. Which do you think would be the best for the farmer?—I do not see that the farmer should have anything to do with the letting of a cottage which belongs to the landlord.

11,756. Is it not convenient for him to have the labourers near the farm house? He would rather have power over the labourers?—Yes, it should be so, but of necessity these men, perhaps, do not work on the farm.

11,757. But I mean farm labourers that are working on the farm?—It is very few of those that are let in our place.

11,758. Then I was going to ask you this. You have spoken about the sanitary state of the neighbourhood. How about the water supply in the farmhouses and the cottages generally?—I can say about the places in our village that the water supply is something shocking. We have plenty of good water near us, and we cannot get it properly into the village. It is in a shocking condition.

11,759. What do you mean by that?—That in the village of Llanaelhaiarn the water supply is very bad, and could be made better.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,760. Do you know of a place called Llanengan?—I know it by name; I do not come from that direction.

11,761. Do you remember reading of a case that came before the Petty Sessions at Pwllheli here in November of last year, reported in the Carnarvon Herald of November 18th, 1892?—I do not. See 13,51 13,51

11,762. It appears from that case, which was a case of alleged arson, that the rent charged was 1*l.* a year, that the house was made of mud, and that there were only two rooms in the house, and that the partition between the rooms apparently was made of cloth and placed there by the tenant herself. Do you remember anything of that?—No, I do not remember, but I know of some very much like it in our place.

11,763. You do know of other mud houses?—Yes, I know of some.

11,764. In that case it appears that the house belonged to Mr. Assheton Smith, but was sub-let to Mr. Evan Roberts, a tenant farmer. Do you know Evan Roberts?—The houses I was referring to that belong to Mr. Assheton Smith were in Llithfaen here, near Pwllheli.

11,765. That is the description of the house as I gather from the case; there is nothing special about the facts; the magistrates dismissed the case of arson against the tenant. Do you know of other houses that answer the same description?—Yes, very much the same description.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Davies called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

11,766. Shall we take your evidence in Welsh?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read by the interpreter.]

"Mr. David Davies, farm labourer, Penrallt, Llangybi.

"I have been in service for about 39 years.

"I am now for some time working by the day and going home to sleep at night.

"The places allotted by the farmers to their servants to sleep are altogether improper on account of size and situation, being only small rooms with very limited head room, scarcely sufficient for an ordinary man to stand erect in. Other servants sleep in lofts above the cattle either in stables or cowhouses. There is seldom room in the farmhouses themselves; they generally are very small and without rooms upstairs. They try and place one bed in such a position so as to screen another. I have been sleeping one of six in a loft above cows, there was not sufficient room for a person to stand erect in. There were three beds placed in the room. The narrow space between the beds was all the room we had. I have been walking miles during the half year in order to sleep elsewhere than in this room.

"The farmer's food is not of the best. It generally consists of salted meat, which is kept for a year or so until it is hard and difficult to eat. It is not often that the farmer's family or the servants get fresh meat, but when they do get it it is only the head of a cow or pig when one is killed. Generally when a cow is killed for the farmer's use it is one which could not be sold to a butcher. If a cow is a good one it is always sold to pay the rent.

"The bread is better than it used to be, because they have failed to bake barley these last few years, and the farmers are compelled to buy wheaten bread.

"The butter is generally fresh and good, but the farmers can afford to give but very little to the servants, and little even to their own children.

"The children are worked hard from morning to night. They are taken from school altogether when very young, and during busy periods of the year they are kept at home from attending school so that they may perform errands.

"I have often had the cattle under my charge for the winter, and several times have the farmers' wives been asking me to give the best hay to the best milch-cow so that they might get butter in order to pay the rates and get some clothing for the children to protect them from the cold. I never saw women in my life working harder than the farmers' wives. They care for the food of several animals, pigs, hens, &c., and they also very often work on the land during harvest time. They mend old clothes, and alter them to fit the children, they stay up late at night and get up early in the morning.

"I have been forced to get up five o'clock in the morning and to work to 8 p.m. and during harvest time until from 10 to 11 p.m.

Chairman—continued.

"I have heard complaints made to the farmers about sleeping accommodation. The farmer often replies that he should be glad of a better place to sleep for himself and his servants, but it is of no use asking."

11,767. You say you worked from 5 a.m. to 8 a.m.?—Yes, I have been working those hours.

11,768. Is that what you do now?—Oh, no, it is from 6 a.m. to 7 p.m. now.

11,769. How did those hours get reduced?—We had several meetings some time ago. It is only a twelvemonth or two years.

11,770. How long are you allowed for dinner?—Only the time that it takes me to eat my dinner.

11,771. What would that be about, 10 minutes or a quarter of an hour?—Generally a quarter of an hour, more or less.

Mr. Seebohm.

11,772. Are there any labourers on the Board of Guardians?—I do not know that there are now.

Mr. Richard Jones.

11,773. Are the labourers, when they get on in years, very reluctant to go on the parish?—They prefer to do almost everything before they seek parish relief. They work as long as ever they can.

11,774. Is there great objection to going to the workhouse?—Yes, a good deal.

11,775. There is one thing I should like an explanation about. You have been working on the farms. For what animals do they utilise gorse here?—Horses, but they give it to cattle as well.

11,776. When do they "stock" the gorse, what time of the year?—Winter.

11,777. Do they put it through the chaff cutter?—Yes.

11,778. And they mix it with corn?—Yes, or mix it with anything, straw sometimes.

Mr. Griffiths.

11,779. What do you understand by saying that they kill a cow that could not be sold. Is it through disease?—I do not think through any disease, only that it is harder to fatten one animal than the other.

11,780. Is it because they get too heavy?—Some are so perhaps.

11,781. You say again that they fail to make barley bread. Why should they fail?—Because the barley is unwholesome.

11,782. Owing to the bad season that you have had?—Yes, bad seasons often.

11,783. Do you consider that it is the farmer's fault that you have no better sleeping accommodation?—No, I do not think so. They have no better place to give them.

11,784. How do you say it is no use asking?—The landlords refuse to provide better accommodation.

11,785. Surely the landlords are not so bad as that?—They have not so far provided such accommodation.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

11,786. Do you think an aged labourer should have a small pension, instead of going into the union workhouse?—Yes, I should say so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

11,787. Are you a member of a benefit society?—No, I am not.

11,788. Do the labourers generally in your district avail themselves of a club? Is there a club?—No, there is no such club or society in my district.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

11,789. Do the labourers in your district generally kill a pig for their own use?—One occasionally, but it is an exception.

11,790. Then in those cases where they do not kill a pig they send to the shops for bacon when they want it?—Yes, some.

11,791. Which do you consider the cheapest?—It is very difficult to say on all occasions. The circumstances are not the same always.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Pritchard called and examined through an interpreter.

The following statement of the witness was read by the interpreter.

"Mr. Evan Pritchard, Rhydau Cottage, Llannor, Farm Labourer.

"I am at present foreman labourer ('hwsmon') to Captain John Roberts, Tymawr, Llannor.

"I have been working as farm labourer in this district for the last 33 years, and as foreman for the last 20 years.

"The average wages of a foreman of late is 14*l.* the half year.

"We get board and lodgings on the farm in addition.

"I am a married man and sleep at home, which is about a mile off, but have all my meals on the farm with the other farm servants.

"Wages are now considerably higher than they used to be. I remember them as low as 8*l.* a term (half year), and I believe that they have been lower than that even. I heard one elderly farmer say that it used to be a matter of remark in the country if a foreman got 5*l.* the term.

"As to food, on the whole there is a change for the better as to this, but farmers vary considerably in their treatment of their servants.

"Generally speaking our meals are made up as follows:—

"1. Breakfast: Oatmeal bread in broth (browes) occasionally but not often; this is followed by tea.

"2. Dinner: Potatoes and salt beef or bacon; fresh meat very rarely, butter-milk to drink.

"3. Tea in some places, with a limited amount of bread and butter. In other places butter-milk and bread and butter.

"4. Flummery ('llymru') or porridge.

"Hours of labour.—These have recently been curtailed, in winter from 15 hours to 13 hours, except those that tend the horses and cattle, who work 15 hours still. During harvest-time we all work indefinite hours.

"Accommodation.—Lack of accommodation is our greatest grievance as farm labourers. In the first place there is no room at all on the premises to which the young men might go after working hours either to read, chat, or otherwise amuse themselves. They are not allowed to enter the house at all except for meals, and they are looked on as trespassers if they go there otherwise. The only other room to which they might go is the hay or stable loft in which they have to sleep, and this is totally unfit to spend more time in them than you can possibly help.

"These rooms are dark, cold, and draughty in winter, and hot and poky in summer.

"The consequence is, that many are driven either to the public-houses or to prowl about the country on fun or mischief bent.

"I think that the landlords ought to be compelled as a condition of receiving rent for their farms to provide suitable accommodation for the labourers that work the farm and make it produce any rent to him.

"It is impossible for the tenant to effect these improvements. It is as much as he can do under present circumstances to make both ends meet, though he and his family live and work hard and receive very little in return."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,792. Do you think that it would be of any advantage if some public body were given power to acquire land for the creation of labourers' cottages?—Yes.

11,793. What body would you suggest? Let me put it to you. Do you suggest that the County Councils or the proposed District Councils in the place of the Boards of Guardians ought to have the power?—I really do not know which would be the best.

11,794. I understand you to say that there is now a difficulty in getting really proper cottage accommodation at a fair rent?—Yes, in the country, without going to the village.

11,795. But are the houses in the village all that are to be desired?—No, they are not all.

11,796. Do you hear any desire expressed among farm labourers in this neighbourhood for portions of land, for small holdings of land sufficient to keep a cow on?—Yes, a good deal.

11,797. There is a good deal of talk about it?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

11,798. Are there many labourers that have land to keep a cow on?—Very few.

11,799. Do you think it would be advantageous for a labourer to have it?—Yes, so long as it pays.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

11,800. Do many young men place their spare money in the bank?—Some do and some do not.

11,801. Are there many privies for the labourers attached to the farmhouses?—No, there are not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

11,802. To whom do you attribute the want of accommodation for the servants; is it to the tenant or to the landlord?—To the men who designed the buildings—the architects.

11,803. Do you mean to say that there is no accommodation in the houses as they are, for the servant-men?—They do not allow the men-servants to be in the house.

11,804. But is there room for them?—No, if they were to be allowed to sleep or to be in the house there would be no accommodation for them—the men-servants.

11,805. And houses are still built in that fashion without sufficient accommodation for the men?—Yes. No one builds them with the intention that the men-servants should live in the house.

11,806. Have you any complaint to make? Is the bed-clothing changed frequently in the rooms where they sleep?—Yes, the bed-clothes are changed often enough in the places I have been accustomed to.

11,807. You have no complaint to make in that respect?—No.

Mr. Seebohm.

11,808. Are labourers generally hired at fairs?—Yes, that is the rule.

11,809. And they are hired for the half-year?—Yes.

11,810. Till the next fair?—Yes.

11,811. They cannot leave during the half-year?—No, I do not know that they can.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

11,812. Do they generally change masters at each fair?—No.

11,813. They will go on for several years with the same masters?—Yes, some.

11,814. And some only?—Yes.

11,815. And do they take into account the accommodation at the farmhouse before they hire themselves to a particular master?—I do not know how the other servants do, but I always do so myself. I take that into consideration.

11,816. Then, on the whole, do you consider that this hiring fair is advantageous to the labourer?—I rather think it is.

11,817. He gets his wages, whatever the weather may be, exactly the same all through the half-year, does he?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

11,818. Is it ever the case in this country that there is an unoccupied parlour in a farm-house—I mean to say which is only used occasionally?—Yes.

11,819. Often?—Yes, in almost every farm-house.

11,820. And if that was occupied, would it not give the men more accommodation on the ground floor?—They do not live there unless there is something exceptional.

Chairman.

11,821. I have two questions put in by Mr. William Humphrys: "How much rent do you pay for the cottage in which you live"?—4*l.*

11,822. "And who is your landlord"?—Thomas Ellis Erngoed.

11,823. "Would farm labourers prefer to feed themselves than to be fed by the farmers who employ them"?—Some prefer one way and others prefer the other.

Mr. William George called and examined.

Chairman.

11,824. Have you prepared a statement of your evidence?—No, I have not had time to write one. I will put in some agreements.

11,825. What are you going to speak to?—I am going to speak to the effect of the land laws upon the condition of the farmers generally. I have got something which I can read out.

11,826. Very well. You will not be very general; I mean you are not going to give very discursive evidence; you are going to keep to one point; are you not?—Yes.

11,827. I mean we have several other witnesses, and we do not want any theories. You must confine yourself to what you know, to facts and remedies, not theories?—Yes. I am a solicitor practising at Portmadoc, Criccieth, and Pwllheli. I come from a farming family, and turn a good deal amongst the farming class, and have an intimate knowledge of a large proportion of the farmers in the surrounding country. I had intended bringing before the Commissioners a series of facts within my knowledge, which prove the paralytic state of fear of their landlords in which a large number of the tenant farmers of these parts live; but as your stay here is so short, and there is other important evidence to follow, I must content myself with expressing the opinion that the present demoralised state of the Welsh farmer loudly calls for such protective measures as will not only secure his commercial interests, but by putting him on a footing of greater equality with his landlord, will be the means of infusing into him greater independence of spirit and developing in him a higher type of manliness. That the landlords of Wales have very absolute powers over the livelihoods of their tenants at the present moment needs no proving, and that they do not, metaphorically speaking, "hesitate to shoot" when it suits their purposes to do so is equally clear to my mind, and unfortunately for himself the Welsh farmer is an extremely vulnerable animal. His attachment to the soil and to the locality he was brought up in is proverbial, and it is a well-known fact that he will suffer any indignity almost rather than leave his farm. Mr. Walter Jones said on Saturday that he placed no value on mere sentiment, and everybody who like myself knows anything about his dealings with the farmers on the estates under his management will be prepared to give him credit for sincerity and consistency when he made this declaration. To show the nature of the authority exercised by the landlords over their tenants, I should like to put in a number of agreements of tenants in use in these parts, and to draw attention to some of the clauses. This is the agreement of the Nanhoron estate, Lleyn. (Producing it.)

11,828. Belonging to whom?—Belonging to the trustees of the late Mr. Lloyd Edwards. I will not go through it in detail now, but I have marked the passages I object to.

See 13,692.

11,830. I think you had better call the attention of the Commissioners to anything you find particularly harsh in those covenants?—Very well. This is the Trallwyn estate, belonging to Mr. J. E. Lloyd.

11,831. What is there hard, or what is there you want to call to our particular notice there?—I will call your attention to this one which is in my hand now—the Trallwyn estate.

Lord Kenyon.

11,832. What is the date of it?—This one I have in my hand is dated 18th September 1882. It is in the same form. "On change of tenancy "the incoming tenant to be allowed to sow "clover and grass seeds in the spring of the last "year's holding of the outgoing tenant, or to "pay to the outgoing tenant for such as he may "have sown at a valuation, and all the hay and "straw and green crops and manure of last "year that shall remain on the farm without "being put in the land to be sold to the in-"coming tenant at a fair valuation to be made "by two indifferent persons, one to be named by "each party, and if they disagree, an arbitrator "to be named by the landlord or his agent to "make his award final." I consider it unfair that the appointing of the umpire shall be in the hands of the landlord or his agent.

11,833. Then the next agreement?—Then as to the Nanhoron agreement there seems to be very little discretion allowed to the tenant as to the mode of cultivation; for instance, there is a fine of "30*l.* for every acre, and so in proportion "for every greater or less quantity of an acre, of "a meadow or pasture ground parcel of the "premises which the tenant shall plough up or "convert into tillage."

11,834. That is ploughing up permanent pasture?—Yes. Then there are in each of the agreements very careful provision for the preservation of the game. Here is in the agreement of the Nanhoron estate again, clause 11: "The "exclusive right and privilege of fishing, hunting, and fowling upon the said premises is "reserved to the landlord with full power to "himself, his friends, and all persons authorised "by him to enter upon the premises for the "above purpose, or in relation thereto;" and the next clause deals with the same question: "The tenant shall protect all game, wild fowl, "and fish upon the said premises, and warn off "all persons who shall hunt, shoot, fish, or sport "upon the premises without the consent of the "landlord, and shall give the landlord immediate "notice of any person offending." I do not think it is right to try to convert the tenant-farmers into game-keepers for the landlords. Then as to the provisions for compensation, clause 15: "The tenant to be entitled to fair "compensation on quitting for any of the following improvements which may have been made "by him, namely, for all new farm buildings "erected with the written consent of and at an "agreed cost with the landlord or his agent, "provided that such farm buildings are delivered "up in good and tenantable repair." I do not think that the tenant is on a footing at present to be able to go to his landlord and either demand that the buildings shall be made by the landlord, or that he will do them himself. He is too timid and too much afraid of his landlord to do that, and the result of such a clause as that in an agreement is that when a tenant has made the improvements he finds at the end of his tenancy that he has no legal claim; and then, here is a very stringent clause, clause 18:—"If "the said rent or rents, or any part thereof, "shall be in arrears for twenty-one days next "after any of the days whereon the same is "reserved as aforesaid, or if the tenant shall not "in all respects observe and perform all and "every the conditions and agreements herein "contained on his part, it shall be lawful for the "landlord to enter upon the premises and to "remove the tenant without making any allowance to him for any acts of husbandry, and "such entry shall not be construed to discharge "any rent or rents then due." For any trivial offence the tenant may commit against this agreement, he is likely to forfeit all the advantages that he otherwise might have had.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,835. Your point is, that he would not have the opportunity of giving the notice he would have to serve under the Agricultural Clauses Act, I suppose?—More than that, under this clause, if he had failed for instance to inform his landlord that there was a poacher on a certain day on his land, then he would be liable to forfeit all his rights in respect of the improvements he may have executed on the land.

Chairman.

11,836. Is this a lease or an agreement?—This is an agreement. Then there is clause 20. "The Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1875, "or any part or provision thereof shall not "apply to this contract nor shall any custom "of the country affect the same or be set up in "opposition thereof." I think that it is unnecessarily harsh to deprive the tenant of the benefit of an Act of Parliament passed for his protection as well as of the customs which have grown up in his favour. And there is a further forfeiture clause, the last in that agreement. "If the tenant "shall be adjudged a bankrupt or make any "composition or arrangement with his creditors, "or take any step or proceeding in order thereto, "or in liquidation, the tenant's right hereunder "shall be thereupon absolutely forfeited and the "landlord may immediately re-enter without "the consent of the tenant or any officer or "trustee, and without prejudice to any claim "for arrears of rent or damages for breach of "agreement." The harshness of that speaks for itself, especially so during these hard times for farmers.

Lord Kenyon.

11,837. What is the date of that agreement?—It is the form of the agreement. There is no date to it. It is in blank.

11,838. It is in use now?—I believe so. That is how it has been given to me.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,839. The reason I put that point to you is this. Of course if the agreement contravenes the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act so far as the claim for compensation is concerned, it is null and void, but as I understand your meaning, the Act is virtually got rid of, because the tenant, when the landlord resumes possession and the tenancy is determined, has had no opportunity of giving the two months' notice required by the Act?—No, and as a matter of fact, he is entirely ignorant of the provisions of the Act, so that he would not know of it, and I would state here as to the utility of the Agricultural Holdings Act to the farmers, my experience of this Act is, that it is entirely useless. I have been consulted from time to time in a large number of cases by farmers, and I cannot bring to mind a single case in which I have been able to tell a tenant farmer that he has a good claim under this Act against his landlord owing to these restrictive provisions, and more especially owing to the provision that the consent of the landlord is required beforehand, and a written notice given to him. Then on the Llanfair estate agreement there is a similar provision as to the game, "and the tenant is strictly to prevent all "trespassers in search of them," and it follows the other one pretty much the same.

Professor Rhŷs.

11,840. But does the same forfeiture or payment take place?—No, I think not. The forfeiture clause is this: "Should the tenant die, "become bankrupt, or insolvent, assign over "his effects for the benefit of his creditors or "compound with his creditors, or should his "effects be taken in execution for debt, the rent "for the whole of the current year to be "immediately payable, and the landlord to have "power to distrain for the same, and the "tenancy to determine on the 13th of November "then next ensuing." That is the forfeiture clause there. Then on the Penrhyn estate agreement: "All game, woodcocks, snipes, wild "fowls, and conies are also reserved to the land-"lord, with full power for him and those "appointed and authorised by him to preserve "and kill the same."

Chairman.

11,841. There is one question sent up by Mr. Wm. Humphreys: "Is not the agreement which "you made for the landlord of Ynysgainganol "more strict than any of the agreements which "you have referred to as to the selling of the "crops at the termination of the tenancy"?—I do not think it is, but in any event that would not affect my evidence if it is.

11,842. You do not think it is?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

11,843. One question on that. You, of course, were acting as solicitor in that case, and acting upon instructions?—Entirely so.

[It was arranged that this witness should conclude his evidence at a subsequent sitting.]

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. T. JONES called and examined.

Chairman.

11,844. You live at Criccieth, and you are chairman of the Pwllheli Union?—Yes.

11,845. You wish to give some evidence on the general pressure that bears on agriculture, on commons and farms in Criccieth and Llanstum-dwy parishes?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

11,846. Will you tell us what you have to say?—As owner of the land I farm and the portions let as accommodation land in an urban district, I farm 60 acres, which are assessed to income tax at 140*l.*; union valuation 27*s.* an acre; rates, tithes, and taxes amount to 8*s.* per acre in 1893. The average I receive for accommodation land is 4*l.* 10*s.* an acre; similar land is let by other landlords at from 5*l.* to 6*l.* This includes all rates and taxes and the keeping in repair by landlord. Dealing with land as affected by rates, the poor rate has decreased from 3*s.* 7*d.* in the £ in 1870 and 2*s.* 9½*d.* in 1880, to 2*s.* 2½*d.* in 1892. (In that statement it will be noticed that I contradict the evidence which has been given here to-day.) The School Board rate has increased from 8*d.* to 10*d.* in the £, and is 1*s.* 3*d.* in Criccieth parish this year. I consider that land should only pay one-fourth of the School Board rates, as under the Sanitary Acts. With regard to land as affected by game, rabbits, &c., this is a very general complaints by tenants whose farms adjoin their landlords' domains where the breeding of wing game is carried on, and as most non-resident landlords only graze or let for grazing, with no corn or green crop under cultivation, the birds naturally take to other lands where good food is plentiful. I consider that tenants ought to have the right to kill all wing or ground game that feed on their farms, as hardly any compensation is given for damages done to crops. Farmers or their sons who may occasionally kill game on their farms are fined to the full penalty, far more so than for taking the goods of other people. Then with regard to land as affected by elections. After the election of 1868 the tenants of Broneifion and Caellobrith had notice to quit from the landlord, and the night before the election the agent sent his head man to them both to say that unless they voted with him they would have to leave as others were bidding for the farms. The tenant of Broneifion was, after a long begging, allowed to retake it during his life, but at an increased rent; but the tenant of Caellobrith had to leave: he was allowed to stop in the house for a year only, and the land was let to the highest bidder field by field, and the house and building were allowed to tumble down. Then with regard to land as affected by the landlord's interference with the freedom of the tenants to do the best out of their holdings, without injuring the land, by stocking their farms with mountain sheep, or letting their winter grazing to others for "defaid cadw," that is, the grazing of mountain sheep in winter. The Gwynfryn and Ystymlyn estate about the year 1872 gave notice to their tenants to discontinue letting their farms for this purpose. The Gwynfryn estate withdrew the condition after a few years. This greatly affected those tenants whose farm boundaries are poor, and having no cash to buy sheep, and in particular the small tenement holders, who received payment in the same proportion per head or per acre as the larger farmers did, when a large tract of land was taken by a large sheepowner for grazing his winter stock upon. Many of the tenants received in this way one-half their year's rent or thereabouts. I believe this was the cause of one if not two tenants having to give up their farms, the damage done by game on their crops. With regard to land as affected by the wages of farm labourers, male and female, I may instance a farm of 225 acres, rent, 140*l.*, where four men and two women servants are kept, their wages amounted in 1886 to 112*l.*, and in 1892 to 144*l.* Three-years-old oxen on the same farm were sold in 1871 for 17*l.* per head; in 1886 for 19*l.*; and in 1892 for 13*l.* My two-year-old Welsh oxen sold in April 1878 for 14*l.* 10*s.*; in 1883, 15*l.* as yearlings in November; and in 1882 for 11*l.* 10*s.* The common land in Criccieth borough was sold mostly to adjoining owners under the Criccieth Improvement Act, 1873, except about 10 acres kept for public recreation, and the castle grounds to Lord Harlech, about six acres, for some supposed right which had been conveyed to him by the Crown. What that right amounted to, whether it was worth one penny or one pound, I could not tell. The common of Rhosllan in Llanstum-dwy parish was transferred or conveyed by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests about 1863, and apportioned to the adjoining landowners, and after enclosure let to the farms that previously pastured on it. Before this, about the year 1814, a row of six houses had been built, presumably by money lent or given by one Robert Owen, Brynffynon, to the parish. However, it is a fact that applicants for parish relief lived in them. These houses, after the common was enclosed, were claimed and have been owned by Mr. H. J. Ellis Nanney, but as far as I can find out the parish owned them, and Mr. Nanney lent no money to build them to the parish. About 1822 one John Humphreys lived in one of the houses. He died about 1871, and his daughter was evicted from the house in 1873. The rental of these houses is about 30*s.* a year. That, my Lord, is my statement.

Chairman—continued.

See 11,39 17,642.

Mr. Richard Jones.

11,847. You say that in the year 1878 you had 14*l.* 10*s.* for your two-year-old oxen and in the year 1892 you had 11*l.* 10*s.* Was there any difference in the cost of rearing these animals? Were you better to them in one year than another?—No, it was the same.

11,848. The very same?—The very same. The first lot was sold in November or in October, that is after grazing as yearlings, but last year they were sold in April and they had, if anything, better because I gave them flour-meal.

11,849. So that not only was it less price but it was a less price at an increased cost?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

11,850. You are the chairman of the Union, I think?—Yes.

11,851. Will you tell us what is your view with regard to the sanitary condition of things on this point. Do you consider that the board of guardians, being mostly or largely composed of farmers, is an obstacle to the carrying out of sanitary arrangements which would otherwise be carried out?—No, I never found them so, but there is a general apathy to prosecute or even to compel landlords to repair the homesteads. There is the same apathy in offering the workhouse to the poor. There is great disinclination to both, but we never had any instance that has not been carried out after pressure after a certain time.

Mr. Grove.

11,852. Have you a large number of ex officio guardians on your board?—No, I am thankful to say that they are all left except one, and we, are very glad that that gentleman stops with us.

Chairman.

11,853. You have a book showing the wages paid in your family for over a century?—Yes. (Producing same.)

Chairman—continued.

11,854. Will you kindly let our secretary make extracts from this?—Yes, so long as it is returned to me, because it is an heirloom.

11,855. This question is handed up to me: "If cattle have decreased so much since 1878, "how is it that you have raised the rent of "some of your land"?—I have not raised any.

11,856. You have raised no rent?—No.

11,857. That is a question by Mr. William Humphreys?—Will he mention the place?

11,858. He simply asks that question?—I have not raised my rents since the cattle have decreased from prices I quoted in 1886. I have lowered, if anything.

11,859. Then there is a question by Mr. Watkin: "Are the persons named by Mr. Jones "tenants of Caellobrith and Broneifion alive"?—No, they are not alive; but it is a true fact that they had notice to quit on account of their votes.

Re-examined, 17,329.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Richard Newell called and examined.

Chairman.

11,860. You have put your evidence into writing?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"I carry on business at Portmadoc, Barmouth, and Criccieth, as butcher, and I also represent Messrs. Webbs, seeds salesmen, and in the course of my business I travel constantly through considerable parts of North Wales, and have a very intimate acquaintance with a considerable number of farmers and their proceedings.

"I wish to give evidence, in the first place, on the insecurity of tenures, and to illustrate this more especially by referring to my own father's case.

"My father, up to the year 1860 or thereabouts, was a tenant of a farm called Cwm Meifod, Montgomery, a good-sized farm, belonging, to the best of my recollection, to a gentleman named France. My father was considered one of the best farmers in the neighbourhood, and as a proof of this, my father was told by the agent, and as a reward for his good farming, that Ystumcolwyn, a farm which was the largest and considered one of the best farms in the locality, would be let to him on the retirement or death of the tenant, who had no family. Shortly afterwards there was an agitation in the country against the Church rates, and my father attended one of these meetings and spoke against the rates. Thereupon an anonymous letter was sent to a relative of the landlord's, a brother who was also a clergyman, residing in Cheshire; and the consequence was that my father received notice to quit, and an intimation that the rent was increased by 50*l.* Just at that time the tenant of Ystumcolwyn died, and my father went to the landlord to remind him of his promise, and to ask him for the farm, but he refused his request point blank, no reason being given but that my father had offended his landlord, owing to my father's attitude on the Church question.

Chairman—continued.

The ultimate result was that my father had to leave the old home in which he and my ancestors had lived, and which had formerly been the property of the family, until the great depression which took place at the commencement of this century compelled them to sell it, nor did he get a penny compensation for the improvements he had executed on the farm, and he calculated that the money he lost at that time was 500*l.* at least.

"My father was well recognised in the neighbourhood as one of the best farmers, and the result of the treatment he got by his landlord was that his co-tenants got frightened and one by one left the estate.

"Having had this experience of the land system, my father determined that he would never again put himself within the grasp of the present land laws, and that he would not go to any farm before getting full security for any improvements he might effect, and after some difficulty and looking about he succeeded in coming to terms with Mr. Corbet* of Ynysmaengwyn, Towyn, about 100 miles distant from the old farm, whereby Mr. Corbet granted him a lease for 21 years at a rack rent of 340*l.*, an advance of 60*l.* on the former rent.* This lease was subsequently extended for four years. Having secured this lease my father farmed the place thoroughly, and executed considerable improvements, and some years afterwards, when the estate came to the market, he bought the farm for 9,000*l.*, his own improvements upon it being estimated at 7,000*l.*

"To show the poor condition of the farm when my father took it I may mention that amongst other stock which my father took with him from Montgomery were 21 Hereford calves well reared. Every one of these died on the new

* Mr. J. Corbett, the present owner of Ynysmaengwyn, has written to state that the Mr. Corbet here referred to was the previous owner of the estate, and no connexion whatsoever with the present owner (compare Qu. 16,256).

Chairman—continued.

farm after being left out to pasturage owing to the poor grass on the land. Also he did not reap as much corn from the land as he put into it as seed.

"In a few years afterwards, Earl Vane, the present Marquis of Londonderry, offered a silver cup for the best farming and root crops in the county of Merioneth and the upper part of Montgomery, and this cup my father won three years in succession, and at a meeting when the cup was presented to him he, at the urgent request of the meeting, at which the leading landowners of the county were present, spoke and attributed his success as a farmer entirely to the security of tenure which he enjoyed, and to the fact that he was not pestered with game laws which he knew from experience so much discouraged farmers and good farming in the locality, and that they could never hope to have good farming until they gave all their tenants the security he himself enjoyed. Unfortunately, however, the landowners present did not take kindly to this remark, and were much offended at my father's candour, and treated him with coldness ever afterwards, and made no change in their dealings towards their tenants.

"I should like to say a word as to the general condition of the farmers in this neighbourhood, and believe, as a result of my observation of them, and intercourse with them, that they are considerably discouraged by the present state of things, and that we must not expect any enterprise or improvement in farms until the land laws are radically altered so as to give the tenants security for the improvements they make on their farms.

"I believe the land is capable of producing double its present produce, as well as making the farmers much more contented and manly than they are at present, and raising farming from being a haphazard calling to one of science and industry.

"I wish to emphasise the fact that the Welsh farmer's sense of insecurity is a real practical thing which influences his treatment of the farm, and not a mere legal theory which he half believes in. Not only does he know that in law he has only a yearly interest in his farm, but very often the bitter experience of himself and his neighbours have taught him that some Welsh landlords do not scruple to exercise their arbitrary power over the tenant whenever greed or necessity impels them to do so. I will give a few instances to explain what I mean.

See 12,521.

"Instances of increases in the rent :—

"1. Penarth ucha, near Fourcrosses. This farm used to be looked upon as a high-rented farm before Mr. Humphrey Jones, the late tenant, took it. The rent was then 100*l.*, and several tenants were unable to live in it at that rent. When Mr. Humphrey Jones took it he commenced draining and improving it, and spent some hundreds of pounds in so doing. The next thing was a sale of the farm by the then owner, Mr. Price, Rhiwlas, and it is the common opinion that he got some 1,500*l.* more than he otherwise would on account of Mr. H. Jones' improvements. The farm was bought by Mr. Owen Evans of

Chairman—continued.

Broomhall, and the rent immediately raised to 173*l.* This was 20 years or so ago, and the increased rent has, I believe, been paid ever since. I need not say that the tenant got nothing for his improvements.

"2. Pentyrch ucha. The old rent was 80*l.* This farm also belonged to Mr. Price, Rhiwlas, and was purchased at the time of the sale of his estate by Mr. Ellis, Glasfryn. The usual result followed; the rent was immediately raised, in this case to 100*l.* It continued at this rent until the old tenant, Mr. Hugh Williams, died, when, without any reason at all, it was raised to 126*l.*, at which rent it still continues. I believe the present tenant complains he cannot get on, and intends leaving.

"3. Coedecaebach, owner Mr. Ellis, of Glasfryn. This farm was purchased by him 20 years ago and the then rent being 80*l.* The old farm was cut up into two parts, one portion being let at 60*l.* and the other, I believe, at 50*l.*, showing an increase of 30*l.* I may add that I am not aware that the owner did anything to justify this or any other increase in the rent.

"It has been stated by Mr. Walter Jones that there are no applications for leases, but when I have given an instance or two to show on what terms leases are granted, I do not think anyone need be surprised that so few applications are made.

"1. The first case I will mention is that of Mr. Robert Jones, Brynrhydd. He and his father before him had executed some improvements on the farm, but the buildings were still very defective and the farm in a comparatively low and unsatisfactory condition through lack of proper drains, &c. Being unable to get the landlords, the Madryn family, to do anything, Mr. Jones applied for a lease, which he ultimately succeeded in getting by paying an increased annual rent of 20*l.* Since then he has spent hundreds of pounds on the farm and considerably improved its value, and at least doubled its producing power.

"2. I would mention in the second place the case of Mr. Owen Jones, of the Inn Farm, Chwilog. The old rent was 60*l.* Part of the farm was taken away for the making of the railway and the railway station, but no reduction in the rent was made. Afterwards Mr. Jones went on to improve the place and applied for a lease, which he got on the terms of paying an increased rent of 100*l.* per annum, and he has to pay a further sum of 10*l.* per annum for a field which used to be included in his old 60*l.* tenement—thus showing a net increase to the landlord of 50*l.* per annum.

"Whilst treating on this question of improvement, I may give just one instance to show how important good buildings are to the proper development and treatment of a farm and how lack of these retard good farming in these parts. I refer to the farm of Bodval Hall, Lleyn. This is a large farm belonging to Mr. Assheton Smith. It is considered one of the most convenient farms in the locality, but the buildings are very defective, and owing to this deficiency the rental of the farm is considerably too high at present. The reason is this: stock has to be sold out of all season—often in the face of bad markets. Sufficient stock to answer to the acreage of the farm cannot be kept at the proper season. I have seen stock kept indoors and then having to be turned out into the rain and storm to take its chance because there were not sufficient buildings for their accommodation, thus causing a great increase in the consumption of fodder, whilst exposing the stock to the risks of the weather.

"I have been told that the tenant cannot get any buildings erected without paying 5 per cent. on their outlay. I consider that at least 1,500*l.* would be required to be spent to erect an efficient steading, besides the haulage, which I consider would amount to 200*l.*, and which the tenant would have to do himself. That at 5 per cent., together with a percentage on the haulage, would mean an increased rent of 85*l.* per annum, which any tenant would hesitate very much before undertaking under the present depressed state of agriculture.

"Even assuming that it is fair for the landlord to charge his tenant for putting the farm in an efficient state, I consider that 5 per cent. per annum is an exorbitant charge in the present state of the money market, and especially so for a wealthy landlord like Mr. Assheton Smith.

"With reference to the evidence given by Mr. Humphreys of Aberkin, and the improvements he has executed on the farm without any previous security, I consider his case an altogether exceptional one. In the first place it is generally considered by competent farmers who know the circumstances, which I understand from conversation with them that Mr. Humphreys gave between 700*l.* and 800*l.* to the tenant more than the value of the stock, this being in the nature of goodwill or payment to the previous tenant for the improvements he had made and his share in the buildings. If Lord Newborough had prohibited such a transaction, as is done by Lord Harlech, the previous tenant would have been at a considerable loss, as the house and buildings were exceptionally good, having only recently been built, the tenant doing all the haulage. Since then I estimate that Mr. Humphreys has improved the farm by 10*l.* per acre, or say 2,000*l.* Mr. Humphreys' case is altogether different from that of the bulk of the tenant farmers in Wales. He is considered to be on terms of intimacy with the landlord class, and presuming on his position as such ventured to do what other tenants are afraid of doing."

Lord Kenyon.

11,861. Do I understand you to say that Mr. Assheton Smith charges 5 per cent.?—I understand that to be the case.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID PRITCHARD called and examined.

Chairman.

11,862. Do you speak English?—I will try the best I can.

11,863. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

11,864. You have put your evidence in the form of a letter to our secretary?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Llwyn Benno, Pwllheli,
September 11th, 1893.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

"I BECAME a tenant on the Nanhoron estate in a small tenement called "Llwyn Benno," admeasuring 10 acres. It is situate a little over two miles from Pwllheli. When I first entered 20 years ago the land and buildings were in a very bad state and not fit for a family to live in. Thereupon my old landlord, R. Ll. Edwards, Esq., built a cowhouse and barn in one. Soon after he died, and F. W. Ll. Edwards, Esq., his son, came to possession of the estate, and I could not get the house rebuilt, nor could I get a reasonable lease to induce me to build; only 21 years was offered at first, and I only asked for 40, which was obtained from F. W. Ll. Edwards, Esq., after a hard struggle with the agent for eight years. By this time the place was re-valued twice, and in each case had a rise in rent, which amounts in all to 25 per cent. When I took the lease the place was at the last valuation made on the estate and no reduction made for building, &c., but F. W. Ll. Edwards, Esq., was taking that into consideration when an abatement was made to the tenants and giving me a return as well. But unfortunately F. W. Ll. Edwards, Esq., died about four years ago, and now the estate is under trustees and they will not give me any return, stating that the estate may make them return the same out of their own pockets. When I took "Llwyn Benno" prices of cattle and produce were much higher than they are now. I have spent in building and bringing the land into a state of cultivation from 550*l.* to 600*l.* My reason for taking a lease was to protect me in case they would undertake to sell part of the estate, and also that they could not raise on my capital and labour.

"I am, yours very respectfully,

"DAVID PRITCHARD."

Chairman—continued.

11,865. Have you anything to add?—I sent a letter to the trustee to advise him of my coming before you, and I have been under three different rates of rent in 6 years' time.

11,866. You say the rent has been raised twice?—The rent has been raised twice. In 1874 and in 1880.

Lord Kenyon.

11,867. Are you under a lease now?—Yes.

11,868. Then how have they raised the rent?—Before I took the lease.

11,869. They have not raised it since?—No, I am under the last valuation made on the estate.

11,870. You complain of its being too high now?—Yes, at the present time.

Mr. Richard Jones.

11,871. You were induced to take the lease in order to be secure?—That is so. There is a little discrepancy in the lease that I should like to point out. I have got it pencilled out. It is dated nearly two years back in the body of the lease to what it is on the outside.

Chairman.

11,872. That is a clerical error, I should take it?—I do not know, I am sure. It was some years after that I found it out.

11,873. A question is handed up by Mr. Owen Wynne. "Is the agent of the Nanhoron estate "a Nonconformist?"—Yes, I believe he is, and is a deacon as well and a staunch Conservative.

The witness withdrew.

Major Evans.—11,874. My Lord, I am one of the trustees of that estate. The agent is here, and if there is anything in the question raised by the last witness about the lease, he can be called in order to put it right.

Chairman.

11,875. I do not think we can go into that. It seems to me merely a clerical error.

Now Mr. Owen Edwards wishes to give evidence to rebut the evidence given at Dolgelly by Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts and Mr. Richard Davies.

Mr. OWEN EDWARDS called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

11,876. You wish to give evidence to rebut the evidence given by Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts at Dolgelly with reference to a farm called Ynys Gyffylog?—Yes.

11,877. To whom does this property belong?—Mrs. Revely.

Secretary.

11,878. The evidence given by Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts about that is: "In 1873 the rent was "again raised to 82*l.* I now pay 84*l.*, in "addition to the tithe, but in the last years I "have received 10 per cent. back four times."

Chairman.

This witness states that the rent was only raised once.

Secretary.

He says: "In the last years I have received "10 per cent back four times." Is that right?—That is right—rebate.

Chairman.

11,879. What does this rebut? Rebutting evidence is contradicting a statement. What part of Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts' statement does this contradict? We do not want a great statement about the estate. You come here to rebut evidence?—He says there that he is a loser of 20*l.* a year

Chairman—continued.

11,880. I understand you want to say that certain statements of Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts were not correct?—He does not state all the facts, my Lord.

11,881. What do you want to contradict?—He says that he was advanced twice.

11,882. He never said that. Now, where do you say he is wrong?—In the value of the land taken by the railway.

11,883. What do you say about that?

Lord Kenyon.

Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts said:—"When the "railway was made, as fields were cut up by it, "I had to close some large districts so as to "unite small portions of fields."

Chairman.

Is that wrong?—It is quite wrong.

11,884. Had he not to unite ditches?—Nothing of the kind. The landlord cleared and cut up all the main ditches in that part, because it was boggy land, and the landlord does it there every two years.

11,885. Then you say it is not the fact that he had to unite those ditches that were sold?—There were no ditches on it. It was flat, level land, and it was not foreshore. It is land embanked there 60 or 70 years ago, therefore it was not foreshore.

Secretary.

Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts spoke of it as a marsh.

Lord Kenyon.

He said: "A short time ago I brought under "cultivation five acres of the foreshore or marsh, "which was very damp and unlevel."

Chairman.

11,886. You say it was not foreshore?—No.

11,887. But it was a marsh?—A marsh, and it was embanked for the last 70 years.

11,888. Then it is not a foreshore, but it is a marsh?—A marsh.

11,889. You correct that statement, and you say it is not a foreshore, but it is a marsh?—It is a marsh, cultivable land, and we gave him pipes to drain it.

11,890. He says it is a foreshore or a marsh. You say it is not a foreshore, but it is a marsh. That is the difference between you?—Yes.

11,891. What else do you rebut.

Lord Kenyon.

You said something about drainage. Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts said: "I have been constantly "draining the farm. Almost every field was "drained by me."

Chairman.

Is that the case?—He made the drains. Six times he had pipes, six seasons.

11,892. You gave him the pipes and he made the drains?—Yes.

11,893. That is what he says: you do not contradict that?—I did not advance the rent. We did not charge him anything for it.

11,894. He does not say you did. Now what else do you contradict? What other portion of this gentleman's evidence do you come to contradict?—As to the income tax.

Lord Kenyon.

11,895. Cadwaladr Roberts says: "Up to "1890 I paid the income tax, but failed to get "my landlord to return it, though I frequently "asked him."

Chairman.

Is that the case?—Mr. Revely died about 1890.

11,896. Did he pay the income tax or did he not?—He did.

11,897. He says he did. Then you do not contradict that?—But it was an agreement between him and the landlord that he would pay it.

11,898. Never mind. He paid the income tax and he says so?—He did.

11,899. Did he frequently ask for repayment?—No, never, until Mr. Revely died. Then he made application, and then I told him to go to the solicitor and he was a trustee too, but I could not do it myself. So he went there.

11,900. What answer did he get?—Mr. Griffiths told me to allow it every year, so he had it allowed every year.

11,901. But he paid the income tax up to the time it was remitted?—Yes.

11,902. Then you agree over that?—Yes, my Lord.

11,903. Is there anything else?—Nothing else.

Mr. Richard Jones.

11,904. On this question of income tax, did you know that you did an illegal thing in binding that man to pay the income tax?—He chose it. Mr. Revely gave him the offer of having the farm re-valued the same as the other tenants. The whole of the tenants made a meeting, and they said they would be contented to pay the income tax instead of having the farms re-valued.

11,905. Did you know that he could break that agreement and recover the income tax by law?—Yes, we told them many times. The solicitor told them.

11,906. What were you before you were an agent? When did you become an agent?—36 years ago, but 18 years for this estate.

11,907. Had you any special training for being an agent?—Yes, I commenced with my father. My father was a land valuer and agent. In the first instance I commenced with him when he commuted the tithes. That is about 55 years ago. I commenced then and followed with him with other estates.

Chairman.

11,908. There is a question sent up by Mr. William George, "Have you any record of valua-"tions made by you, or can you tell us whether "the general result of your valuations was an "increase of rent?" Do you understand that question?—Yes, I do.

11,909. Have you any record of the valuations made by you?—Yes, they are very numerous, going over the last 25 years.

11,910. Was the general result of your valuations an increase of rent?—Well, in some cases they were lowered and in some they were the same, but when times were very prosperous there was an advance of rent, say from 5 per cent. to even in some cases 15 per cent.

11,911. Was the general result of your valuations an increase?—No, not in all cases.

11,912. But was the general result?—Yes.

11,913. It was?—There were not many estates, but there were some.

11,914. Did you value Carnguwch and Glasfryn fawr farms?—I did not value Glasfryn fawr, I was agent for the Glasfryn fawr estate.

11,915. Did you value these two farms?—Not Glasfryn fawr.

11,916. Were the rents raised?—Not as to Glasfryn fawr. We did not touch the valuation there.

11,917. In the case of Carnguwch the rents were raised?—Yes, that is Mr. Lloyd's of Trefan.

11,918. You valued that, and did you raise the rents there?—Yes, they were advanced.

11,919. Then there is a question by Mr. William George, "Were you a shopkeeper "before you became a valuer?"—I was with my brother.

11,920. In business?—Yes, sometimes, off and on.

11,921. How long were you off and on in business. A good many years?—Some years. The two of us had not enough to do.

Chairman—continued.

11,922. You have also come to make a statement as regards the evidence of Richard Davies given at Barmouth?—Yes.

11,923. What year was that in?—I cannot remember now.

11,924. Mr. Richard Davies never said that the landlord did not spend the sum of money mentioned in your written statement, did he?—Well, I was not there.

11,925. But what is the use of coming to rebut evidence that the witness did not give? You come here to rebut this evidence, not to put in a statement. Mr. Richard Davies never said anything about what the landlord said or what he had done. Have you read Mr. Davies' evidence?—Yes, part of it.

Lord Kenyon.

11,926. What did you read, a newspaper report?—It is about four years since we were agents of this estate, and we got these particulars from Mr. Roberts, the former agent.

Chairman.

11,927. What particulars did you get from him?—That the present tenant had the farm at his own value. He complained to Mr. Holland that it was too high for 150*l.*

11,928. What year was that?—I think it was about seven years ago. I believe so. He is there now about nine years. In about two years, when he was there, he complained to Mr. Holland.

Chairman—continued.

11,929. There is not one word about Mr. Holland?—It is Mrs. Holland now. Mr. Holland is dead.

11,930. Let me read you what this gentleman says, then perhaps you will be able to rebut something. "The following is a statement of "the rent of some farms in the neighbourhood. "Lasynys bach, 20 or 25 years ago the rent was "90*l.*" Is that the case? Do you know anything about it?—I know nothing about that.

11,931. "The rent in 1871 was raised to 150*l.*" Do you know anything about that?—That is the fact.

11,932. What is the present rent?—120*l.*

11,933. Very well. That is just what he says. Do you contradict any of that?—No, that was his own choosing.

11,934. But all this gentleman, Mr. Davies, says is that this farm 25 years ago was let at 90*l.* You do not know whether that is true or not?—I do not know whether it is true or not.

11,935. You do not contradict that?—No, I do not.

11,936. In 1871 the rent was raised to 150*l.* Do you contradict that?—No, that is right.

11,937. And at the present time it is 120*l.* Do you contradict that?—No.

11,938. Then what is there to rebut in this evidence? We are very much obliged to you for coming forward with a statement, but it has nothing whatever to do with the case. I have one question sent up. "Are you a Non-conformist?"—I am.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Carnarvon.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

The County Hall, Carnarvon, Carnarvonshire, Wednesday, 20th September 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. EDWIN GROVE.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. FREDERICK SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

MR. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Colonel the Hon. WILLIAM E. SACKVILLE WEST called and examined.

Chairman.

11,939. You are the principal agent on the Penrhyn estate?—Yes, I am the principal agent on the Penrhyn estate.

11,940. And also a County Councillor for Carnarvonshire?—Yes.

11,941. What district do you give evidence for relating to the Penrhyn estate?—For the Penrhyn estate in Lleyn, part of Eifionydd, parishes of Llandegai, Llanrhychwyn, Llanllechid, Llanddeiniolen, Bangor, Aber, Llanfairisgaer, Llanbeblig, Llandwrog, Caerhun, Gyffyn, Llanbedr, Yspytty, Penmachno, and Llanrwst.

11,942. What is the acreage of the Penrhyn estate in Denbighshire and Carnarvonshire?—It is impossible to say accurately on account of the great amount of mountain land not measured up; it is about 72,000 acres more or less, and of that about 48,000 acres are upland, and 24,000 acres lowland. This includes the portions of the estate near Bettws-y-Coed, about which evidence will be given at Llanrwst, and which comprises about 20,000 acres.

11,943. Have you anything to say about the manors, honors, or lordships?—There are two manors or lordships on the estate, namely, the manors of Aber and Yspytty Ifan, at which manor courts are held.

11,944. You have manor courts and a steward and a bailiff?—Yes, manor courts, and there is a steward for both, and a bailiff in each.

11,945. What can you tell us about the ownership?—Portions of the Penrhyn estate are Lord Penrhyn's absolute property, and part held in settlement, the present Lord Penrhyn being the tenant for life. I have no knowledge of mortgages or incumbrances, and if there are any they have no effect whatever on occupation or cultivation.

Chairman—continued.

11,946. Can you tell us anything about the Crown?—The Crown possesses the minerals on some parts of the property, but this produces little or no effect on either occupation or cultivation.

11,947. There are no copyholds?—There are no copyholds on the estate, and so far as I know there are no copyholds in North Wales at all.

11,948. With regard to recreation grounds and allotments. Can you tell us anything about that?—There are hardly any enclosures I know of during my time. It is difficult to see how allotments for the labouring poor could be apportioned under an enclosure. The labouring poor unless they are commoners would have no right over an unenclosed "common." There is no such thing as a common without commoners, and it is only commoners who can have a share in whatever rights of pasturage or turbary exist over it. It is clear therefore to allot anything to persons who formerly had no rights would amount to a diminution of the common rights previously enjoyed. In mountain enclosures with which alone I am acquainted the ground is totally unfit for spade husbandry, and I can hardly see who are to use recreation grounds on mountains where there are no inhabitants to enjoy them.

11,949. On Lord Penrhyn's estate is there no part of it where recreation grounds or allotments would be of use to the labourers?—Oh, yes, allotments, but not on enclosed lands. I can speak of allotments afterwards.

11,950. Any squatters' cottages?—There is only one on the whole estate that I am acquainted with. If there are others, as there might have been in former times, they were purchased at full value.

Chairman—continued.

11,951. Then as to waste?—There are considerable wastes in Llandegai, Llanllechid, and Aber parishes. They cannot be cultivated with the exception of the lower portions and then at very great outlay. In Llandegai and part of Llanllechid the sheep runs are divided among the adjoining farms. In Llanllechid the surface wastes (about 6,000 acres) were purchased by the late Lord Penrhyn from the Crown, and form a common "without stint." The freeholders and tenants many years ago came to an agreement by which every occupier of three acres and upwards could keep three sheep on the waste. I should like to say more about that. Every occupier of one acre on the lowland could keep three sheep upon the mountain, and Lord Penrhyn puts a shepherd on the mountain who sees that that regulation is attended to. In the manor or lordship of Aber also every tenant is allowed at the rate of two and a half sheep for every 1*l.* of rent paid, and there also a shepherd is kept by Lord Penrhyn who looks after that and sees that the numbers are not exceeded. Those who have no rights by having land in the manor are allowed to keep sheep by agreement on payment at the rate of 2*s.* a year for each sheep, a pony or a cow being also allowed for every 10 sheep. In the parish of Llandegai there is an enclosure consisting of about 1,500 acres of rough land, and there are 30 small holdings who are allowed to pasture upon it in accordance with printed rules handed in. In addition to this there are between 50 and 60 cottagers, mostly quarrymen in the Penrhyn Quarry, who rent pasture for a cow at 10*s.* a year on this land. A mountain watcher is paid also here by Lord Penrhyn. These restrictions on the overstocking of the mountain pastures have been found to be most valuable. Where they do not exist, as on the Crown wastes generally, the pastures are eaten down and become of little value. This will be seen at once by comparing the pastures in Llanfairfechan, Gyffyn, Dwygyfylchi, and Conway with those in Aber, Llanllechid, and Llandegai.

11,952. What is the effect of sheep runs on the rents of adjacent farms?—I should say as to the effect of rents on adjacent farms these sheep runs certainly make the adjacent farms more valuable, but as a rule the rents are not higher.

11,953. What is the general condition of sheep farming?—These sheep runs are an undoubted source of profit to those who use them, but it is a question whether they do not tend to the deterioration of stock.

11,954. We have not heard that before. You think there is that chance?—In the breeding of stock they are overrun by very inferior animals and consequently the breed is very often deteriorated.

Lord Kenyon.

11,955. Are the sheep limited?—Yes, in all that Lord Penrhyn is concerned with, as I just said, they are limited according to the pasture land below.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Chairman.

11,956. About the management. Can you give us any general statement about that?—No, I can lay down no rule about that. Bad tenants are likely to have a better chance of being allowed to remain on under a non-resident landowner. I have a reason to think that the conditions of tenancy are much affected by the size of estates or properties.

11,957. Of course there is no difference made about religion and politics?—No difference whatever is made in choosing tenants from language, politics, or religion. It is of course desirable that landowners and agents should be able to converse with their tenants, but it is to be hoped that as knowledge of English increases the inconvenience where it exists will be gradually abated.

11,958. Do you know anything about the general run of agents in your neighbourhood?—What they are?

11,959. Yes; whether they are practical men and have any special training?—Some have received special training and others have not.

11,960. Some know very little about land?—Well, I do not know. I do not know anyone who does not know something about land.

11,961. Some have had no special training?—They are not practical farmers themselves.

11,962. They are not good men?—Many are. Captain Stewart, for example, of the Vaynol estate, is a practical farmer himself.

11,963. Some are not?—Well, I am not a practical farmer. I have never had a farm.

11,964. Still you have some knowledge?—Yes, as being the son of a landed proprietor and being trustee of one of the largest estates in England. I have some knowledge therefore.

11,965. Now as to the date of entry?—The date of entry on lowland farms is the 12th November; on mountain farms, 12th May; in Lleyn, 29th September; in Yspytty, Penmachno, and Llanrwst 25th March.

11,966. There are yearly tenancies?—Yes.

11,967. Is there any demand for leases?—No, none whatever. They would be granted probably if asked for. Tenants consider themselves better off as they are than if bound by leases which would keep them to the same rent without power to quit, whereas they have now practical security of tenure.

11,968. I take it on Lord Penrhyn's estate once a tenant always a tenant?—Yes, unless there is some very strong reason indeed. They do not want leases, and except for very small holdings I have never been asked for them. Several for holdings of 3 or 4 acres have been given on condition of building houses and improving the land, and this system of leasing I consider should be encouraged.

11,969. Do you find many more changes of tenancy now than you used to have, or not?—No, I think there is no difference at all.

11,970. And any cases of hardship?—I am not aware of a single case of hardship, and I shall be only too glad if any case is brought forward to give the fullest particulars I possibly can relating to it.

11,971. As to planting of trees and so on, is any compensation given?—I always give compensation.

11,972. And for the timber cutting as well?—Yes.

11,973. You have no cases of mining, brickfields, or quarries. What are the usual terms of tenancy?—I will put in a copy of the agreement; here are two copies; one is the manor of Aber and the other is the usual one.

11,974. Do you put them in Welsh as well?—No, they are not translated.

11,975. Do you consider any of the clauses oppressive?—I have never heard anyone say they were.

11,976. Have you any penalising clauses?—There are no penalising clauses.

11,977. Nothing at all—nothing except as to cultivation?—That is all.

11,978. And I suppose the contents are explained?—They are always explained to the tenants and in my office and in Welsh if they cannot speak English.

11,979. Is the rent usually fixed at a gross sum or at so much per acre?—At a gross sum, but if a question arises as to it with a view to reduction I value the land per acre with a view to readjustment.

11,980. Then about the neighbouring estates you have nothing to say—No.

11,981. Is the rent of the smaller tenantry higher per acre than on larger farms?—I do not think there is very much difference.

11,982. And how about the usual rent of average lands of different qualities in your district?—It is very difficult to give an average because there is land of all kinds. Some land is let at 1*s.* 6*d.* per acre on the average of the whole of a mountain farm, including meadow land. Some of the best lowland, land at 25*s.* or 26*s.*, some accommodation land in Bangor at 50*s.* or 60*s.* even. Tithe is always included in the rent except in the case of town leaseholds.

11,983. Is the rent fixed on the basis of a valuation, or by proposal followed by private treaty?—The rents are very seldom altered except on changes of boundaries, &c., and as a rule a farm is relet on the same rent. Many have not varied for 40 or 50 years. If a re-valuation is required, I make it myself assisted by my subagents. I presume it may be said that the rent is fixed by private treaty.

Chairman—continued.

11,984. Of course you do not let to the highest bidder?—There is no such thing as bidding. I have never asked what rent a proposed tenant would be willing to give, but have told him what I consider a fair rent, and there is usually no difficulty in coming to an agreement. It is difficult to see how rent can be fixed in any other way than by mutual agreement. If you have a rent arbitrarily fixed, and a saleable tenant-right, the only gainer must necessarily be the sitting tenant.

11,985. Then you find out as much as you can about the capital the tenants possess?—Yes.

11,986. What do you think about the taking of a farm with borrowed capital?—I always inquire so far as I can as to the capital possessed by a proposed tenant, but it is not always easy to find out. The taking of farms with insufficient capital and borrowed money is the most fruitful cause of want of success in farming. The interest on the borrowed capital becomes of course an increase of rent and the owner is pressed for a reduction.

11,987. Is arbitration ever resorted to as a means of settling or readjusting the rent?—I have never in my experience had an arbitration as to rent, nor has it ever been asked for.

11,988. Have you raised your rents lately?—No.

11,989. Not for the last 50 years?—Of course some rents, as I have just said, have been changed. The estate has not been re-valued as a whole during the last 50 years, but some re-valuations were made on the Lleyn portion of it, purchased from Sir Robert Vaughan. A great deal of land has been purchased, and it is therefore impossible to compare the present rental with that of 50 years ago. No rents have been raised except in some instances for improvements, and this increase has in nearly all cases been remitted.

11,990. What permanent reductions have you made?—Since 1833 rents to the extent of about 750*l.* per annum have been permanently reduced.

11,991. And what abatements?—For 3½ years from November 1885 to May 1889, 10 per cent. to farm tenants. For one half-year to May 1892, 10 per cent., and on a portion of the estate 20 per cent. For one year to May 1893, 25 per cent. and 30 per cent. for part of year.

11,992. Have you any objection to state the income of the estate?—The farm income?

11,993. Yes?—That is about 21,000*l.* a year only.

11,994. Including mountain land?—Yes, the farm rent.

11,995. But all of the agricultural land?—Yes, including the mountain land, some of which does not let at 1*s.* an acre.

11,996. That is 72,000 acres?—Yes, and 21,000*l.* a year.

11,997. When rents are raised or reduced does the change depend on a re-valuation?—If I consider that a rent is too high from any cause, which generally is that a farm has been purchased from a small proprietor and is rented far higher than the old portion of the estate, I revalue the farm as above I had lately to do this in the case of a farm purchased by Lord Penrhyn near Bettws-y-Coed and made a considerable reduction of rent.

Chairman—continued.

11,998. Lord Kenyon wishes to know whether the income is now 21,000*l.* a year?—Last year.

Lord Kenyon.

11,999. Since it has been permanently reduced?—Yes.

Chairman.

12,000. What have been the chief fluctuations in prices affecting the rent within the last 50 years?—The price of stock is as low now as within my memory, but I am told on good authority that sheep are higher now than they were 50 years ago.

12,001. And pigs and horses?—They have been very high lately. Cattle have lately seriously gone down, and this is the main cause of the abatements of rent granted on this estate and of the permanent reductions which have been made.

12,002. When do you get the rents after they are due?—In Lleyn and Eifionydd about four months. In Bangor district about two months. In Bettws-y-Coed district five months. In Conway district five months.

12,003. Do you approve a preferential claim for rent?—I approve it, because it ought to produce the beneficial effect of preventing tenants getting long credit, and if abolished it would certainly lead to owners taking rent in advance.

12,004. Then what do you say as to the other charges on land or on income derived from land?—On all the property the tithe is now included in the rent, and no mention made of it, so that when an abatement is made the tenant gets it on the tithe as well as on his real rent. Land tax is paid by the occupier. There are only two very small chief rents on the property, and they are paid by the owner, but all the other quit rents were bought up by Lord Penrhyn years ago. All the rates in the parish of Llandegai are paid by the owner—the whole of the rates, including those of leaseholds.

12,005. What is the average size of farms in your estimate?—I cannot give any average. They vary from 3 to 600 acres, or more in the case of mountain farms.

12,006. Then about consolidation?—Some 40 years ago some lowland farms in Llanllechid parish, and to some extent in Llandegai parish, where some small farms were consolidated into a home farm by the late Lord Penrhyn, were consolidated, being arable land and fit for high farming. When consolidation took place the tenants were for the most part provided for elsewhere, but of late years no such consolidations have taken place, and I may perhaps be permitted to express an opinion in favour of small farms up to 50 acres, with a few of larger size for men of capital. The great objection to small farms is the excessive cost of farm buildings, which can only be properly borne by wealthy landowners. Even a freeholder of 50 acres only is not likely to be able to erect proper buildings, so that fixity of tenure would not meet this difficulty. In fact this question of buildings is what hinders the creation of small holdings. The cost of erecting them, and fencing, often amounts to more than the freehold value of the land.

12,007. Then what has been the effect of consolidation on production?—I cannot say it has any effect whatever.

12,008. And on the employment of labour?—The consolidation probably increased the number of farm labourers, as small farmers employ few or none.

12,009. And the fixing of rent?—Probably a reduction; but I have not the means of giving accurate information.

12,010. To what extent, if at all, has the subdivision or the sub-letting of holdings been carried out—under what circumstances, and with what results?—Some few farms have been subdivided with good results, in my opinion. Subletting is prevented as far as possible, but it is difficult to stop it, and it is undoubtedly sometimes practised, especially in the case of widows.

12,011. Do you think the large farmers are better skilled than the small ones?—Some of the large farmers are better skilled of course as agriculturists than the small farmers, whose farming consists of keeping a few cows and ploughing about a fourth of their land, if as much.

12,012. Then as to their condition in time of trade depression?—The smaller farmers have the advantage, those with two or three cows suffering nothing.

12,013. That rather traverses the general opinion of other witnesses, who think large farmers stand the depression better, because they have more capital?—That is not my opinion.

12,014. As to the ability to provide for families, of course large farmers can do that?—Yes.

12,015. Then as to the state of cultivation?—Grazing, oats, some barley, potatoes, and roots, but not to any great extent; no wheat. In Lleyn many more pigs are kept, and horses bred, than in any other part of the country.

12,016. Is there any scarcity of labourers, and if so are fences, ditches, watercourses, &c. properly attended to?—They are very badly attended to everywhere, and little heed is given to agents' remonstrances.

12,017. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

12,018. And is there any reclamation?—A great deal of upland in the parish of Llandegai during the last 50 years has been reclaimed, having been granted to quarrymen on lease at low ground rents. Such reclamation was only possible through quarrymen being able to employ their leisure time on it, and receiving wages on which they live.

12,019. Do you plough up much rough land, or drain marshy ground?—There is very little land capable of profitable reclamation, and such as there is being on the mountain sides would probably cost more to cultivate than the freehold value, but of course rough land in other parts has been reclaimed at the landlord's cost.

12,020. Do you embank any rivers?—When damage has been done by flood, as in 1879, repairs were done by the owner.

12,021. There is not much arable land laid down in pasture?—No, I think less land has been ploughed of late years, speaking generally.

12,022. What have been the improvements on Lord Penrhyn's estate?—I speak only of Lord Penrhyn's estate with which I am connected. All improvements are made by the landowner except when made by the tenant under the compensation clause contained in the agreement, of which I hand you a copy, and on the granting of certificates on the form annexed. I have given a fair number of these certificates during the past 15 years, and in some cases have redeemed them, usually on a change of tenancy. No difficulty has ever arisen, and I believe complete satisfaction has been given.

12,023. Have any improvements been made by tenants?—The drainage is sometimes done by tenants on their own responsibility, but they are compensated on leaving. Fencing and cleaning rough land in the same manner, but boundary fences are made by the owner.

12,024. What have you done in the way of drainage and so forth?—A great deal of drainage has been done by the landowner, but in some cases Lord Penrhyn gives the drainage pipes, the tenants doing the labour. This is done to a great extent on the Yspytty and Penmachno parts of the estates, where, during the last two years, 304*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* has been paid for pipes. No interest is charged to the tenants for the outlay.

12,025. I suppose you give pipes and drain materials?—Materials are given for some improvements, and the tenants provide the labour. Should a tenant leave, compensation is usually given for a fair proportion of the cost of the latter, according to the time of occupation after effecting the improvements. I may say, as regards haulage, the cartage and haulage is done on all the portion of the estate in the neighbourhood of Penrhyn and Bangor and the adjoining parishes at the cost of the landlord. There are two cases which have occurred on that portion of the estate in which claims were made for compensation for haulage done by the tenant, because they left a few years after the repairs had been executed, and they were both compensated on leaving.

Chairman—continued.

12,026. That is rather exceptional, because the custom of the country is that the tenant does the hauling?—On the other parts of the estate they do the hauling. They are generally asked if their repairs are to be done would they do the hauling, and they generally do. It is a matter of agreement. In Lleyn they do the hauling and in other parts. I should like to say that tanks for liquid manure have been constructed by the owner on several farms but are little used, and the pumps allowed to get out of repair. A great deal of lime has been given to tenants at different times when fences have been removed and fields squared. When a farm is relet the fences are usually remade by the owner. Much fencing has been done by the owner on the mountain sheep walks. Gates are given to new tenants.

12,027. Do you contract out of the operation of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—There is a clause in that agreement which has been used contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act. I suppose it is void at law, but the question has never come up, because I have never had any reference on this estate whatever to the Agricultural Holdings Act.

12,028. You do contract out of it?—It is nominally contracted out of, but the clause would not hold good, and if any one wished to go under the Act I should certainly allow them to do so.

12,029. There is no custom of the country?—No.

12,030. There is no custom about allowance to outgoing tenants in respect of growing crops, is there?—No, except what is provided for in the agreement.

12,031. Or tillage manure, or permanent improvements?—No.

12,032. What are the liabilities of the tenants as to the mode of cultivation?—I have no knowledge of any claim ever having been made on a tenant for injury to a farm through bad husbandry, or for dilapidations to buildings, although I have known farms left in a very bad state.

12,033. You have not known a tenant fail to get compensation?—Not if he was entitled to it.

12,034. Do you know any instance where compensation was given for the generally improved condition of a holding?—Yes, I do. I remember one case coming up, and also another case. Lord Penrhyn lately compensated a tenant because he left his farm when prices were low, and he gave him 100*l.*, the rent of the farm being 153*l.*

12,035. Then about disposing of their interests?—No such right is recognised. It is constantly attempted, especially when rents are low. The effect is disastrous and fatal to the maintenance of fair rents, for it must be plain that if an incoming tenant pays (say) 100*l.* for the outgoing tenant's interest his rent is at once raised by the interest on this amount. On this estate all improvements, as shown above, are paid for to a tenant on quitting, so that there is no excuse whatever for this. It is usually attempted by introducing a tenant with whom an agreement has been made to take the stock at a sum above its value.

12,036 Is Lord Penrhyn obliged to take the sheep on a farm when it is given up?—No, there is only one farm where there is an arrangement of that kind about sheep; that is up above Bettws-y-Coed.

12,037. You know nothing about the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I have never had any experience about it.

12,038 Can you tell us anything about game?—Game is preserved by the owner on portions of the estate.

12,039. Is there a great weight of game on the estate?—A great deal of grouse, and a good many pheasants about Penrhyn.

12,040. Do the tenants avail themselves of the Ground Game Act?—Yes, and no objection is made to their doing so as long as they adhere to the provisions of the Act.

12,041. What about the damage by the game?—Complaints are sometimes made, but they are told they can use the Ground Game Act for getting rid of all ground game. Very few requisitions for compensation have been made. I may add in some cases it has been shown that the damage attributed to hares and rabbits has been done by sheep.

12,042. Have you many hares on the estate?—Yes, a fair number, especially where there are coursing meetings every year.

12,043. How do the game affect the cultivation?—Not in anyway that I can see. The ground game can be destroyed by the tenant.

12,044. Then as to the law of trespass?—The tenants complain very much of the law of trespass. They say they cannot prevent trespassing from the difficulty of proving any damage done. I have constant complaints that their farms are trespassed over.

12,045. Then about the sporting rights over the Crown lands?—On this estate Lord Penrhyn has a right of sporting over all the Crown lands over which he has common rights. Lord Penrhyn rents from the Crown sporting rights over certain lands and waters in Festiniog parish which adjoin his property.

12,046. What attention is paid to forestry?—Nothing but plantations. The late Lord Penrhyn did a great deal of planting on the estate, but there is a matter about that which I should like to mention. The incidence of rating on plantations acts as a great hindrance to planting in many districts where plantations would be of great value for shelter and would improve agricultural land. At present rates are apportioned on the existing rateable value for agricultural purposes. Therefore for many years heavy rates have to be paid while there is no return for the heavy expenditure incurred.

12,047. That is to keep the wind off?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

I think you will hear in Anglesey a great deal about that.

12,048. Poultry farming you know nothing about?—There is very little poultry farming. I think there might be more.

12,049. Then as to the question of railway rates?—I hear complaints of the high rates.

12,050. Then is there any co-operation among farmers for purchasing or analysing farm stuff, for example, manures?—None, but it would be very desirable to carry out some co-operation of the kind. There is nothing from which the farmers suffer more than from the high price and inferior quality of the artificial manures they purchase, and I believe if only tenants would co-operate with one another and invoke the assistance of their landlords a vast amount of good might be done in this direction.

12,051. You think a butter factory would be an opening?—Yes, I think so.

12,052. As regards harvesting and sheep-shearing, do the farmers co-operate?—They assist one another. They go to one another's farms.

12,053. They do not insure, I suppose?—No, they do not.

12,054. Do you know anything about the benefit societies of labourers?—No; I do not think the farm labourers go in very much for benefit societies.

12,055. I suppose there have been some smashes of building societies?—Yes, grievous losses have been incurred in the quarry districts through failures in building societies.

12,056. You do not know much about the peasant proprietors and small freeholders?—No. There are very few peasant proprietors in the district here. There are more down in Lleyn adjoining Lord Penrhyn's property.

12,057. Are there any tenant farmers who have bought their own holdings?—I have no immediate knowledge, but large quantities of land have been sold by some of the large landowners, and to a great extent purchased by the tenants, but not on this estate, none having been sold.

12,058. Do the farmers and their wives work very hard?—They do. They take part, I think, invariably in the case of small holdings—I cannot say in some larger ones—with very good results.

12,059. I suppose you would say that the children do not get wages for work at home?—They do not get regular weekly wages in money.

12,060. What provision is made for them when they get on in life?—Well, the shape it generally takes is that they are helped to take farms on their own account.

12,061. Do you know frequent cases of that occurring?—Yes, I know several cases where it occurs—that they are helped on.

12,062. Could rents be maintained if wages were paid in respect of the children's labour?—I do not see that rents depend in any way on the children's labour, because some people have children and some have not, and there is no difference in the rents whatever.

12,063. We have been told that in some instances the rents could not possibly be paid without the children's labour, but you do not agree?—I have never heard anything of the kind myself, and as I say I know many farms, large and small, some with children and some without, and the rents are the same.

12,064. What proportion of the farm labour is hired as compared with that rendered by members of the household?—The hired labour is very small, except in cases of farms of over 50 acres.

12,065. With reference to hired labourers, where do they lodge?—They are lodged on the farm premises, as a rule.

12,066. What sort of accommodation do they get?—Well, it is not good by any means—not for the men servants at least.

12,067. And have the large farmers got cottages?—Some of the large farmers have a few cottages, but there are not many. I generally keep as far as possible cottages in good condition on the larger farms.

12,068. Then who live in the cottages—quarry men?—Very often. Very often a farmer will get a cottage, and put his labourer in, and when he leaves his service he will let it perhaps to a quarryman.

12,069. Do you know anything about the cash wages of labourers?—They are about 16*s.* to 18*s.*, if not lodged and boarded, and if lodged and boarded they are 26*l.* per annum—that is exclusive of board and lodging.

12,070. Wages have gone up?—Wages have gone up considerably during the last 50 years.

12,071. You have told us that they sleep in the outbuildings, which are not as they ought to be. As to female servants?—They sleep in the houses.

12,072. Are they looked after and protected as a general rule by the farmers?—I think so.

12,073. Can you tell us anything about the cottages on the Penrhyn estate?—Well, there is very little demand for agricultural purposes, but a very great demand for cottages for the quarry, and there are about 873 cottages on the estate, exclusive of those in Bangor, and, with scarcely an exception, these have gardens from one-tenth to a quarter of an acre each. They are chiefly occupied by quarrymen, and there are 130 garden allotments rented separately from 5*s.* to 10*s.* a year.

12,074. What is the size of those garden allotments?—About the same size—about one-eighth of an acre, or a quarter of an acre.

12,075. And you charge what for them?—From 5*s.* to 10*s.* a year.

12,076. What is the condition and construction of these cottages?—They vary. They are being continually improved. A great many of these cottages were built some 40 or 50 years ago by quarrymen upon lease at a low ground rent of 10*s.* a year, and then at the expiration of the leases when they fall in a rent of about 3*l.* or 3*l.* 10*s.*, according to their size, has been put upon them, and they are repaired and put in order when they generally have to be constructed as soon as it is possible to do them afterwards. It takes a long time with the number of cottages to do it, but they are gradually being re-constructed, and the repair of the cottages costs about 2,000*l.* a year.

Mr. Seebohm.

12,077. How long are the leases?—The original leases were for 30 years, but then the cottages were built at that time at an outlay of about 25*l.*, the landlord providing the materials, slates and things.

Chairman.

12,078. Then you have told us about the allotments and the gardens. I take it that all the cottages are let direct from Lord Penrhyn—Except those few on the large farms.

12,079. Just for the cowmen?—In some cases now they are really upon lease—leases of 60 years—the lessees undertaking to put them in order. I do not think I have mentioned about the other allotments.

12,080. The garden allotments you told us of, what are the other allotments?—I would not call them allotments, but there are a great number of small holdings of 3 and 4 acres apiece, where one cow, and in some cases two cows, are kept, and they are of very great benefit in the quarry districts, I consider.

12,081. No doubt?—Because the quarryman has his wages, and it is a luxury to him to have these small allotments—small farms.

12,082. Besides a luxury, it is a great advantage to him?—It is a great advantage to him; he can live on his wages, and he has this besides.

12,083. In case he gets thrown out of work?—Yes. His wife looks after the cow, and he is very well off. Then again lately I have made fresh allotments and fenced them, and let them with a cottage for about 8*l.* a year, where a man can keep one or two cows.

12,084. How many of those are there. Can you give any approximate number?—I can give you a list, but unfortunately I was not sure I should be called to-day, and I have left it at home.

12,085. You might send it in; it would be very interesting?—Yes.

12,086. As to proprietor farmers. By "proprietor farmers" I mean the farmers who have bought their own holdings?—There are a few proprietor farmers, and the small proprietors lead a very hard life, except in cases where they have means of their own, or have other occupations. It is difficult to get a living comfortably out of a few acres, even when no rent is charged; but I do know of men who get a living out of 10 acres.

Chairman—continued.

12,087. With their families?—Yes.

12,088. With reference to the standard of comfort you have told us, do you think the labourers are better of or worse off than small farmers?—I think they are far better off than small farmers. They get 26*l.* a year, and they have nothing to provide for themselves, except clothing.

12,089. Do the agricultural labourers in your district migrate much?—Not very much. I find I have got that information about small holdings. I will hand it in.

12,090. Thank you. I suppose nobody keeps farming accounts or diaries?—I do not think they keep them at all. I know one or two farmers who put down simply how much they pay out of pocket, and how much they receive for what they sell, but nothing much more than that.

12,091. When did the period of trade depression begin in your district?—I think it began about 1885 in this district, and continued till the middle of 1889. From that date to the end of 1890 times were universally allowed to be very good. Since that period the depression has been greater.

12,092. What is the principal cause of that?—I think the low prices of store and other cattle has been the real cause of late years—and bad seasons.

12,093. Is there any remedy that you can suggest?—I think better attention should be paid to dairy farming and dairy produce. We have heard a good deal already about butter, and I think the butter-making might be very greatly improved. I think the dairies themselves want improvement. I am doing all I can to improve dairies, but the structure of the dairies is very bad. I think there should be breeding of better stock, including ponies and horses and cattle. Even now there is a sale for good stock, but the inferior stock which they breed in most places has no sale whatever. No one will look at them.

12,094. Do any good horses and bulls travel the country?—Not very good.

12,095. Of course the relations are extremely good?—Well, I have had no difficulties for 15 years.

12,097. Some families have been for generations I suppose on the property?—There are about 167 farms which have been held by the same families for 50 years and upwards. In all cases where there are near relations available on the avoidance of a farm the tenancy is given to them unless there are very strong reasons to the contrary. There are some tenants who claim that their families have been on the Penrhyn estate for upwards of 200 years. Before I conclude this head I should like to point out that owing to the large number of small holdings in Wales (on the Penrhyn estate 342 are under 20 acres, and 71 between 20 and 50 acres out of 618 farm tenants in all) the conditions under which agriculture is carried on are to a great extent, and on the whole more favourable than in England. Many, indeed most, of the small holders on the Penrhyn estate are quarrymen in receipt of good wages, who keep one, two, or three cows on their land, and who are but very slightly affected by agricultural depression. They consume the produce of their stock to a great extent, and except for selling calves or young stock occasionally are independent of prices. Their holdings are, as it were, a luxury, while they depend on their quarry wages for their living—very little grain is grown. Those who have suffered most are the larger farmers, and of late the mountain farmers, the latter of whom depend entirely on the sale of stock, the prices of which are now at the lowest possible figure. This has to be met by temporary abatement of rents, such as have of late been granted by all the large landowners.

Chairman—continued.

12,098. Your dates of entry are different. You say some are on the 12th November?—That is the custom in the different parts of the country. We follow the custom.

12,099. Your rent days I see are rather different. Is that in order to get the rents in at about the same time? You say that in some places you give six months' credit, and in others only two months?—Yes; according to the circumstances of the district; and it depends upon fairs and things of that kind. It is to suit the convenience of the tenants really.

12,100. With regard to tenant-right, I did not quite catch what you said, that it would only benefit the sitting tenant. You mean the one actually in possession?—I meant the difference between the rent he pays and the market price of his farm, representing the sum of money which on going out of his farm the incoming tenant would have to pay. The incoming tenant would have his rent raised as it were by the interest on the amount he would have to pay, therefore he would be in the same position as any other man whose farm was let at the market value.

12,101. You said you thought the small farmers stood the depression better. What size farms would those farmers have?—I mean five, six, seven, eight or ten acres.

12,102. Any farmers of 50 acres?—No; but I think they would feel it less too. The larger they are the more they feel it, although they have capital to meet it.

12,103. In proportion up the scale?—Yes.

12,104. Have you done any improvements otherwise than buildings—I mean in the way of putting up liquid manure tanks or anything of that sort?—A great many of them have put up, but I am sorry to say they are of very little use, as the pumps are always getting out of order as they are not attended to properly.

12,105. That is not encouraging, is it?—No.

12,106. With regard to drainage, have you done much?—Yes, a great deal of drainage.

12,107. As to your agreement which you have handed in, you say you never heard or seldom heard of the Agricultural Holdings Act being used here. Do you consider your compensation clauses are better than the sections of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I think so myself.

12,108. And you think the tenants do too?—I think the tenants do; they certainly seem to think so.

12,109. You said that in one part of the estate there were plenty of hares where there was coursing. Does Lord Penrhyn get up the coursing meetings?—No.

12,110. It is done by the men themselves?—Yes.

12,111. You said there was a great deal of complaint with regard to trespass. Was that trespass in pursuit of game?—No, simply that people walked over their land to go the shortest way to wherever they are going.

12,112. You also spoke of the failure of certain building clubs. What is your opinion of the benefit clubs in the country?—There are very few clubs that are sound.

12,113. Do you think it would be a good thing to encourage the men to invest in a club that was sound?—Most certainly.

12,114. You think some more attention might be paid to them perhaps?—A great deal more I think; the loss from them and the grievous injury done no one knows.

12,115. I know it is very disheartening. You say that in most of the cases you are getting cottages away from the farms?—Yes; when I took up the agency I got a good many out in that way.

12,116. Do you think the farmers have any difficulty in getting lodgings for their labourers?—I do not think so.

12,117. You would give the preference to a labourer on the farm?—Yes, I would invariably, and take the cottage from him if he gave up the employment.

12,118. What are the cottage holdings?—A month's notice.

12,119. So that if a man went to work in the quarries you would give him notice?—No, I do not think I should, unless the farmer wanted the cottage. It would be rather a strong case for me to do so.

12,120. It would make you secure to the farmer his labourer in the cottage?—Yes, but there are so very few cases.

12,121. Did not Lord Penrhyn keep a pony stallion?—He did.

12,122, Was it of much use?—I do not think it was as much use as it might have been.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

12,123. Did he keep any agricultural stallion?—No, I do not think he did—not in my time—I do not remember any.

12,124. Is any attention paid to horse breeding at all?—No, very little.

12,125. We heard Mr. William Humphreys say that he thought the country about Pwllheli and Criccieth was very suitable for horse breeding?—No doubt it is, and the breeding of horses might be immeasurably improved down there. See 10,550–58.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,126. Did I understand you to say that the hundred of Uchaf forms part of the Penrhyn estate?—Yes, it does partly. I do not know whether the estate embraces the whole of the hundred.

12,127. Then the hundred of Uchaf comprises the parishes of Llandegai, Llanllechid, Llanfairfechan, and Dwgyfylchi?—I have really no information about the boundary of the hundred of Uchaf. I do not know it. I have no occasion whatever to know it, because I never heard anything about it.

12,128. You cannot answer my question?—I cannot. I say I have never heard of it. The question has never come up.

12,129. I find this in a leading article of the "Times" in the year 1849, the 10th of August: "It is said that for the last 50 or 60 years "Crown property in Wales has been looked "upon as a legitimate source of political cor- "ruption. We take the charges as we find them "when we state that within that period Crown "property of enormous value, in North Wales "has been appropriated by private individuals "with the privity and connivance of Crown "tenants, sheriffs of counties, lords of manors, "stewards of lordships, bailiffs of hundreds, "and Crown officers, who were ex-officio "guardians of the public rights. The sheriffs "of the counties have been invariably landed "proprietors, they have appointed as their "deputies almost uniformly their own solicitors, "who are likewise the acting law agents and "country solicitors for the Woods and Forests. "We do not of course mean to assert of our "own knowledge that objectionable transactions "actually took place in consequence of such "arrangements as these, but the arrangements "are very suspicious, and the charges are "openly made." Can you tell me anything as to those charges referred to in that article?—Nothing whatever. It is long before I knew anything about it. Lord Penrhyn is perfectly satisfied with his title, and his lawyers are.

12,130. Is it the case that the title to the hundred of Uchaf is derived from letters patent dated the 2nd of August 1784?—I am Lord Penrhyn's land agent, and I know nothing whatever about his title. My business is to look after his property.

12,131. I do not say it is not. I only ask you. If you object I will not ask you?—Questions of title I have nothing to do with. I look after his estate.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

12,132. You cannot tell me whether that lease by Royal letters patent has ever been renewed?—I do not know. It is not my business to inquire.

12,133. At present I will not ask you any more questions in regard to that. I suppose that somebody who does know will probably volunteer to give evidence before us. With regard to the size of farms, Colonel Sackville West, I think you said some of the holdings are very small?—Very small, two acres and two and a half acres perhaps.

12,134. What is the largest farm under your management?—I daresay it may run to 600 acres on the mountain sheep farms.

12,135. Are there many farms under 100 acres and above 50?—I think I have given you those particulars.

12,136. I daresay you have?—There are 342 farms under 20 acres.

12,137. As I understand it, there has been no change of rent generally throughout the estate?—Not in my time, or before that, I believe, from any time I know of.

12,138. How long have you been agent?—Not quite 16 years.

12,139. Are most of the farmers Welsh by race?—Yes, nearly all I should say.

12,140. And they all speak the Welsh language, I suppose?—Yes, all I suppose—every one I should think.

12,141. Are they mainly Nonconformists?—I never inquire what they are.

12,142. But you know the district?—Oh, I suppose they are. I presume they are.

12,143. I see this agreement put in by you purports to exclude the operation of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—Well, there is that clause in it, but I would rather it was not there. Probably I shall have it taken out. I do not want to exclude the Agricultural Holdings Act.

12,144. I suppose what you would say would be that the clauses providing for compensation are a fair substitution for the compensation contemplated by the Act?—I believe them to be so, but if a tenant wished to go under the Agricultural Holdings Act in preference to that, I should certainly have no objection.

12,145. I do not put any further questions as to the acquiring title or the rights of the Crown; as I understand it, you are not prepared to give any evidence at all on the point?—No, I do not know anything about it.

Mr. Griffiths.

12,146. Do you think it would be well for the farm labourers to have sufficient land to keep a cow?—Yes, permanent farm labourers who are really able to retain their employment; I should think it would be a very good thing indeed for them to have it. I am strongly in favour of small holdings.

12,147. Are there large stones on the fields?—Yes, a great many.

12,148. Have you ever had occasion to pay a farmer for clearing the stones?—I have, on leaving a tenancy, and I have given certificates on the form which I have handed in for clearing rough ground.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

12,149. You say more you think could be done in the way of poultry-rearing?—I think it might. I have no great knowledge myself, but it appears to me farmers might do more.

12,150. Do you provide them with accommodation?—Yes; if they want any for it I should be prepared to find them hen houses.

12,151. Are there any butter factories in North Wales?—No, there are none that I know of.

12,152. You say that some men live on land paying 10*l.* a year?—No, live on 10 acres of land.

12,153. Do they do anything in the way of supplying vegetables to the towns?—No, not at all, I think. There is very little vegetable growing here, I think. I wish there was more.

12,154. Are there any reading rooms provided for the labourers in this district?—Not that I know of anywhere, not in the country.

12,155. There is a complaint that labourers cannot stay in the farmhouses, and they have nowhere to go in the evenings?—I think it would be an excellent thing to provide reading rooms if they would use them.

Mr. Richard Jones.

12,156. When was this agreement drafted?—I found it when I came here, and I have not altered it. I cannot say when it was drafted, but it was a good many years ago. I daresay I could find out if necessary.

12,157. When was this clause written, "Subject to the provisions of the Ground Game Act, 1880"?—That was inserted after the passing of the Act.

12,158. I see according to the agreement the tenants shall leave the gates in good order; who provides the gates?—The gates are put up on the farm. When a tenant comes into a farmhouse he is given new gates, and he is supposed to keep them up himself afterwards.

12,159. But supposing he stays on for 40 years?—He would go on keeping the gates in order.

12,160. Would the gates last, do you think? No, but I think he would renew them. I think the reason for making him responsible is the great carelessness displayed with regard to gates; gates will be taken off their hinges to fill up a gap in the next hedge, and if a tenant is not responsible for keeping them up we should have to find him with gates probably every two or three years.

12,161. Do you think a gate under any circumstances would last 40 years?—I do not think it would, but he is bound under his agreement to renew it, and for that reason I think it is quite fair that he should renew it, and he should be responsible for making it last as long as he can.

12,161A. Will you undertake to say that a 10-acre farm in your district will give sufficient employment and support to a man, without other means of subsistence?—No, it is probably land adjoining sheep grounds, where he keeps a few sheep and makes his money with his sheep.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

12,162. Then he gets something in addition to this?—The small farms in these parishes here and in Llanllechid, for instance, have a right to keep, as I have already said, sheep upon the mountain, so that if he had 10 acres he would be able to keep 30 sheep on the mountain in summer.

12,163. That explains it; I thought 10 acres would be a very small amount to keep a man unless he is a casual labourer?—I would not say he could do it unless he had that advantage.

12,164. Would you mind telling us if there are many tenant farmers in arrears with their rent?—Very few indeed, and I have often gone and taken the whole of the rent, not one half-penny in arrear on the rent day.

12,165. You say that you find no difference in the farmers who have children and those who have none, that is so far as the payment of the rent is concerned?—Yes.

12,166. Do you know of any other difference in the circumstances of these people which would account for their paying their rents as punctually as those who have children?—But they all pay their rents punctually. I say that the whole of the tenants pay their rents punctually, with very few exceptions; there always will be three or four who do not, but with that exception the whole of them, whether they have children or not, pay them all.

Mr. Seebohm.

12,167. I want to ask you one question with reference to the agreement. I understand from you that you think it would be desirable if these old agreements were brought into full harmony with the existing law?—I do not think I quite said that. What I said was that if they chose to go under the existing law in preference to the agreement, I should have no objection.

12,168. But I think you stated so exceedingly explicitly as to this last clause?—Oh, I should cut that out to-morrow; I have no objection.

12,169. Is there any custom of the country?—No, not that I know of.

12,170. Not as regards sheep? Is there no mention in the agreement of the sheep? We have heard in many places that the incoming tenant was bound in fact to take the sheep, because they would not do anywhere else except on that mountain?—As a rule it is done by agreement. They are not absolutely bound to, but when a sheep farm becomes vacant it is almost the invariable custom for the incoming tenant to take to the sheep. I do not know of any case where it has not been done in my experience.

12,171. Do you think it would not be binding in law?—I do not think it would. I think I mentioned that I had one agreement. There is one farm in a distant part of the county over Bettws-y-Coed where I have an agreement signed by the tenant.

12,172. That is by special agreement?—That is by special agreement.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

12,173. But you think the custom would not be binding by law?—No, I think I may say it would be very desirable that there should be such a custom.

12,174. Or that it should be contained in an agreement, if it was desirable?—Yes, I think so.

12,175. Has there been any large emigration in former times from those districts?—No, rather the other way, because the quarries in these districts have attracted a considerable immigration.

12,176. Do you know intimately the farmers who are inhabitants of Aber?—Yes, I know them pretty well. I am constantly there.

12,177. Do you not think that there was an emigration from there about 40 years ago?—That I cannot speak to. I was not here in those days. I never heard of it. There may have been. You say about 40 years ago?

12,178. Yes?—That is about the time that Lord Penrhyn purchased the property, but I never heard of it.

12,179. It probably would be just previous to his purchasing the property?—It was about that time, but I do not see much evidence of it. I do not find the ruins of many cottages. It may be so; I am not at all sure.

12,180. You stated, I think, that Aber was one of the manors which had courts still held?—Yes.

12,181. Then have you court rolls?—Well, I know very little about it. I am not the steward of the manor, and there are no tenants, strictly speaking, of the manor. That is to say, the tenants who live in Aber are under no other liabilities than any other tenants. It appears to me that the manor of Aber is a very nominal thing. It is a matter of antiquarian interest.

12,182. But still there are court rolls?—I cannot answer it because I have never seen them.

12,183. Do you think that we could get the evidence from the steward of the manor?—Well, I got some questions about Aber sent which I received yesterday. I have sent them to-day to the steward.

Lord Kenyon.

12,184. Will you say who is the steward?—Mr. Barber, solicitor, of Bangor.

Mr. Grove.

12,185. Do you supply to each tenant a copy of the agreement that you make?—Yes, invariably.

12,186. That is always as a matter of rule; you always give them a copy?—Always. I hand them a copy when they sign the agreement.

12,187. Are the provisions of the agreement explained in Welsh, in case of need, by a clerk or someone?—Always. I have always an interpreter there who interprets them to the men.

12,188. Do you think that there is increased cottage accommodation wanted for farm labourers, or do you think that the estate, generally speaking, has sufficient cottage accommodation?—Certainly quite sufficient for the farm labourers. I think there is sufficient cottage accommodation for farm labourers. As I have already explained, the circumstances are very peculiar on account of the demand for cottages for the quarrymen.

12,189. Then you consider that there is no deficiency of farm labour upon the farms, generally speaking?—No. I believe farm labour may be a little scarce for the same reason, that the quarries are a great attraction to men.

12,190. Then you do not think it arises from the want of increased cottage accommodation?—I do not think so.

12,191. Does the question of game cause any unpleasantness between landlord and tenant on your estates?—Well, I have had really very little of it. I have had a few complaints.

12,192. And claims for compensation?—Not in my time. I believe there have been before, but I have had no claim that I considered really was a bonâ fide one.

12,193. Then you spoke of the owner paying the rates in one parish. I suppose that is exceptional?—That is a very exceptional case indeed. I do not know of any other instance.

12,194. And that only applies to that particular parish?—It only applies to that particular parish. The whole parish belongs to Lord Penrhyn.

12,195. I did not quite gather the purport of your reply as to the employment of children labour on farms. You seemed to fancy that it did not enable them to pay their rents. Now surely if it prevents them paying more for labour it is one factor in the payment of rent, is it not?—It may be, so far as their private accounts go, but I do not know in the least how they pay me the rent; they pay me the rent, and whether it is on account of their being able to employ their children's labour or not I do not know.

12,196. Just so, but still the probability is that if they are able to get their children's labour they are able to pay their rent better?—No doubt a farmer with three sons on the farm is very much better off than a farmer with no sons.

12,197. Do you think that the clubs if properly arranged and properly managed would be an advantage to the agricultural labourer, and even the small tenant farmers?—Most certainly; if they could have perfect security with benefit clubs, it would be of the greatest advantage possible.

12,198. Then why do you consider that they are unsound. Is it that the basis of the risk and contribution is not properly arranged, or does it arise from what I am afraid has happened in one or two cases at any rate in the quarry districts, that is, the dishonesty of secretaries and others connected with those societies?—I should say from both causes. I believe that they are actuarially unsound, most of them.

Mr. Grove—continued.

12,199. You think that the actuarial part may be not as sound as it should be?—Yes, that is what I believe.

Sir John Llewelyn.

12,200. Can you give the Court your opinion as to the effect of what we have heard of a proposed land court?—No, I have not been asked.

12,201. Will you kindly tell us your opinion about what its effect might be?—As to whether it would be good or not?

12,202. Yes?—Personally I believe it would be productive of more harm than good. It seems to me that a land court necessarily implies freedom of sale, and, of course, fixity of tenure. If a land court fixes the rent it is pretty certain to be—it must be—below market value, what could be got by a competitive rent. It would be no use if it was not. Then if that was arbitrarily fixed there would arise a value between the actual rent and the selling value of it, the market value of it. Now who would that belong to? If it belonged to the tenant for making his improvements he ought to have power to sell it. If it did not it ought to belong to the landlord. Therefore it implies the necessity for giving the tenant power to sell that margin. Then if he sells that margin it comes to the same thing that I have said before, that the next man has to pay the market value for his farm, counting the interest on the money which he has paid for that margin between the two. Fixity of tenure would necessarily follow because the landlord could not have the power to turn out the tenant who had had his rent fixed or else he would turn him out at once, possibly when the judicial rent was fixed, and see if he could not agree with another man to take it at a higher rent. Therefore I think a land court implies the whole. There is nothing between the two, between complete freedom of sale, complete fixity of tenure, and taking, in fact, the whole thing out of the hands of the landlord. Further than this, as to fixity of tenure, I have never heard it defined as to whether it is fixity of tenure on both sides, that is to say, whether a tenant is to be at liberty to throw his land on his landlord's hands at a most inconvenient time and demand compensation for the improvements which he has made without his consent, or whether the landlord is to have the same fixity of tenure and say, "You shall not go now."

12,203. First of all about fixity of tenure. Do you give leases?—Not to large farms, only for small holdings.

12,204. Has there been any application for them?—No, none. I think that that would be the best security of tenure.

12,205. Do you consider that there is any necessity for greater safeguarding the fixity of tenure?—I should like to protect the tenant as much as I could from the possibility of improvements which he has made himself being utilised by others through a sale of his property over his head.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

12,206. Under the First Schedule of the Agricultural Holdings Act, do you consider that that might be extended?—Yes, it might be extended.

12,207. Under that Act?—Under that Act, so as to give a tenant the security.

12,208. Greater security?—Yes, greater security for the money he had spent. I do not agree with Mr. Humphreys about it; I think that it ought to be spent with the consent of the landlord.

12,209. That is required under the Agricultural Holdings Act. The First Schedule required the consent of the landlord?—It does.

12,210. Has that been applied for in the case of Lord Penrhyn's estates?—It has never been applied for. Do you mean the consent?

12,211. Yes, the consent?—Oh, constantly.

12,212. That is what I am asking you. Has that consent been applied for?—Yes, constantly.

12,213. Has it been granted?—Always.

12,214. And never refused?—Never refused, if it is for a bonâ fide improvement.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,215. Have any instances come under your notice in which a new tenant has paid anything to the outgoing tenant?—I have heard of such cases, but you cannot prove it, because it is generally done by putting an increased value on the stock.

12,216. And any such things are rather concealed from you than otherwise as agent, I suppose?—Invariably.

Chairman.

12,217. Mr. Brynmor Jones is anxious to know about this Crown property that was enclosed, I think you said, some years before you were the agent. Would there be any objection to letting the Commissioners know under what circumstances they were enclosed, or will it be necessary to go up to the Woods and Forests for that information?—I do not know how it should be obtained. I really do not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,218. The Commissioners you see can go to the Woods and Forests?—But there were not enclosures made; they are not enclosures.

12,219. But so far as manors or hundreds, or any property, was formerly Crown property, any subject can only obtain them regularly by means of a grant from the Crown?—In the case of the wastes of Llanllechid parish, they were purchased in 1858 from the Crown by Lord Penrhyn.

12,220. Very likely, but you see the Commissioners can go to the Woods and Forests, and I have no doubt the Woods and Forests would allow us, being a body of men appointed for a public inquiry, to look at their documents?—I do not know as to what the inquiry is being made. That is what I am in the dark about. It is not the waste of Llanllechid, is it?

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

12,221. All the wastes that were formerly Crown property I am referring to?—I know of no other wastes that were formerly Crown property but the wastes of Llanllechid, and that was purchased in 1858 from the Crown. I know of no other wastes that were got from the Crown, and I do not fancy there are any.

12,222. I think I am expressing the general opinion of the Commissioners when I say that we shall be very glad indeed to get some information as to any grants from the Crown to landowners in this neighbourhood?—Do I understand that the Commissioners are going into the question of title?

12,223. Not as between two private individuals, but as between the Crown and private individuals?—But they are; they are investigating the title of individuals as to property granted by the Crown.

12,224. I do not think you ought to ask me questions. I am indicating what is in my mind, and you have volunteered to give evidence here?—Not as to title.

12,225. I thought you volunteered to give evidence?—I have no authority to speak to title.

Mr. Richard Jones.

12,226. When you erect farmhouses do you erect them sufficiently large to accommodate the men who are employed on the farm?—I do in the case where men are employed on a farm. In a small farm there are no men employed at all. In building a farmhouse for a farm of 20, 30, or 40 acres, I probably should not make provision. In the case of a farm larger than that, I should make provision for the women servants.

12,227. You have done so?—Yes.

12,228. Does the custom prevail upon Lord Penrhyn's estate of accommodating the men in the lofts?—Yes, it does. Generally over stables or something in that way.

12,229. Do you think that a proper way in the interests of morality?—No, I do not. I should much prefer seeing them living in their own cottages.

12,231. But in case several men are employed?—I do not think it is right, and I think the accommodation ought to be better.

12,230. Do you pay a little attention to that now when you build new farmhouses?—I am constantly making up the outhouses into proper sleeping rooms.

12,232. You say that grazing the mountains tends to deterioration of stock. Do you think that the mountains could be used for some more remunerative purpose than grazing stock. Would you go so far as to say that?—Well, I do not think they could now. I do not think you could grow grain upon it. It is perfectly true that a great deal of the higher portions of some of the mountain land were ploughed in former years, because you can see it, but I am quite sure it would not pay to grow grain there now; whether the climate has altered, or what has happened, I do not know.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

12,233. Then you would not go so far as to condemn the system of grazing the mountains?—No, it is the only possible use; I do not condemn it.

12,234. You say in respect of the establishment of a land court that free sale would necessarily be implied?—When I say a land court I mean a land court which fixes rents.

12,235. I suppose you believe that a tenant ought to get compensation for unexhausted improvements?—I certainly do. In speaking of this estate I am sure he always would.

12,236. Of course you are against free sale, or custom of the tenant-right?—Yes, for the reasons I have given.

12,237. But it does not necessarily follow that free sale would be implied in the establishment of a land court. It would depend to a great extent upon the powers assigned to a land court whether a tenant in the occupation of the land should appoint a successor, would it not?—Then I ask, if I may put it in the form of a question, how are you going to dispose of the difference between the market value and the rent?

12,238. You see I am not here to answer questions. I am here to ask you questions?—Yes, but I am putting it in the form of a question simply. My idea is, if I may put it in this way, that I cannot see any other way of dealing with the margin which exists between the rent and market value except free sale.

Chairman.

12,239. A question by Mr. Vincent: "Have "not your sub-agents special training?"—Yes.

12,240. "Do you agree with Lord Harrowby's "saying to the effect that a lease carries with it "the idea of termination, and a yearly tenancy "the idea of continuity"?—Certainly, I entirely agree with that. At the expiration of a lease, the whole arrangement has come to an end. A yearly tenancy gives you the idea of continuity.

Chairman—continued.

12,241. A question by Mr. Vincent: Do you know any instances of farmers' sons established in business?—Yes, I do know of instances. I do not think I can name them now, but I could get them.

12,242. But that does happen occasionally?—It does—in banks and so on.

12,243. A question by Mr. Vincent: "Are "you familiar with any large English estates"?—I have some knowledge as having been the son of an English landed proprietor, and I have also some knowledge as being a trustee of one of the largest landed estates in England.

12,244. This is also a question by Mr. Vincent: "Can you form any idea upon the "question whether the standard of valuation for "purposes of rental is higher in England or in "Wales?"—No, I think it is about the same, I should say—nearly the same.

12,245. A question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Do you hand in a statement showing the "detailed expenditure on buildings, &c. for one "year"?—I have a statement here which I could hand in, but it includes other expenses besides farm buildings. It gives the different farms and the different portions. One portion of it is as to the whole expenditure on the parishes in this neighbourhood. It does not include Lleyn, and it does not include Yspytty, and that part of the estate. The average expenditure in Lleyn is about 1,000*l.* a year, and the average expenditure on the other portion of the estate is from 800*l.* to 1,000*l.* They are not included in that return.

12,246. A question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Is there a butter factory on the Duke of West-"minster's estate near Eaton?"—I do not know, really.

12,247. "Is there another in Montgomeryshire?"—That I do not know.

Rev. ROBERT WILLIAM GRIFFITH called and examined through an Interpreter.

The interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"Rev. Robert William Griffith, C.C., Bethel, Llanddeiniolen.

"Cultivation of Land.

"No scarcity of farm labourers.

"The hedges and ditches are generally attended to, but might be improved. Some cultivated land is running wild, owing to the insufficient capital and insecurity of tenure. Not much waste land has been cultivated in my neighbourhood during my lifetime. There is much wet land that may be cultivated by being drained. There is less cultivation of land in recent years. More land is laid down in pasture now at the tenant's expense or loss. Less root crops are grown now than formerly. Hardly any fallowing. The cause is less labour that was necessary for the proper cultivation of the land, and which consequently reduces the produce.

"Improvements.—Hardly any improvements are made by the landlords to their tenant farmers. They are confined to their own parks and farms.

"On permanent buildings erected on farms by the landlords, they generally charge 5 per cent. interest on the outlay.

"All other improvements are done by the tenants, viz., drainage, buildings for stock, tanks for preserving liquid manure, fences, gates, and posts, manure, seeds, &c., &c.

"For building the landlord supplies the timber, slates, and lime. The tenant does all the haulage and labour. The landlord sometimes supplies the pipes, but the tenant has to do all other work connected therewith.

"Compensation.—Yes, where there is an agreement, but not otherwise.

"Respecting the Agricultural Holdings Act. The tenants acquiesce to the wishes of the landlords by contracting out of its operation. Consequently they derive no benefit by the Acts of 1875 and 1883.

"Farmers do not apply for consent for specific improvements, because they are too timid to ask and are afraid the consent would not be granted to them. I do not know of any one who has asked for any such consent.

"Allowances.—Growing crops are valued.

"For improvements and cultivation no allowance is made.

"Manure remaining at the expiration of tenancy is valued. Nothing for permanent improvements.

"Outgoing tenants get no consideration, but ingoing tenants get all the benefits.

"Sale of produce.—Tenants are not allowed to sell hay, straw, and manure.

"The outgoing tenant is not allowed to select the incoming tenant; sometimes they are allowed to submit names for the landlord's consideration.

"Game.—Yes, they are preserved. Hares, rabbits, pheasants, partridges, and grouse are preserved by the landlords in my district. Tenants generally do not avail themselves of the provisions of the Game Act. They are afraid of the landlords, and do not wish to incur their displeasure. Serious damage is done by the game to the tenants' crops. Compensation is granted in very few instances, but not adequate to the damage done. Some tenants do assist to beat coverts; whether they are forced to do or not I cannot say. They are supplied with luncheons. Owing to the game there is less cultivation. They cause a breach between the landlord and tenant. They are a great temptation to labourers and the public to become poachers.

"The right of sporting on Crown and common land is vested in the landowners adjoining the same. Almost every common is claimed as private property."

Chairman.

12,248. Is there much game where the rights of sporting are let by the owners to other sporting tenants?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

12,249. Do I understand you to say that the landlords contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—The landlords and tenants have so agreed; the landlords wish that it should be so and the tenants have followed.

12,250. Does that apply to anything beyond the 5th section of the Act?—I do not know everything with regard to all the sections of the Act, but that is what they have done in our neighbourhood.

Professor Rhŷs.

12,251. Do you know what the accommodation is for farm servants in the farm houses in your neighbourhood?—The accommodation is deficient at its best.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

12,252. Do you think that that leads to any serious evils?—It is possible that it may lead in that direction, but I could not be certain about it.

12,253. Your neighbourhood, I suppose, is fairly free from immorality; is that so?—My district is just like other districts generally.

12,254. But if the farmers had more accommodation for their farm servants do you think there would be less immorality?—Under some circumstances it is possible.

12,255. Do you know the nature of the food of the farmers in your district—the small farmers and labourers. Can you tell us whether their food is now better than it used to be, or worse, or the same?—It is a little better. Servants when I was a boy had barley bread entirely, but now they have what we call mixed bread, and white bread is brought to the table sometimes.

12,256. Do they not live to a very great extent on tea?—The workmen live to a great extent on tea, but if you are referring to agricultural labourers, they get a good deal of milk food.

12,257. You are an observer. Perhaps you will tell me what the result is—I mean the difference between those two sets of people?—Those who take milk food as a rule are broader men and stronger men.

12,258. What about the teeth of the people who live so much on tea?—I cannot say; I am not a dentist.

12,259. You have not observed perhaps that the young people who live on tea have no teeth scarcely in those neighbourhoods?—There is that to be said; young people in the neighbourhood seem to lose their teeth earlier than they did in former years. I do not know what may be the reason; it may be the drinking of tea.

Mr. Grove.

12,260. I suppose your friends are mostly practical farmers?—They are farmers and labourers also. I live in a mixed district where there are both—where they follow both occupations.

12,261. Are farmers generally acquainted with the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—The farmers generally do not know of the Act—only those who are leaders, and because there is a certain section, namely, the 55th clause under which when the farmers contract, the Act becomes of no value.

12,262. Do you know a farmer who has a copy of the Act in his possession?—Owing to this Clause 55 I think the leaders among the farmers do not take so much interest in the Act.

Professor Rhŷs.

12,263. It practically comes to this, that they take comparatively little interest in the Act?—I only spoke to one farmer, and that farmer, glancing at the Act, said, "There is the Act; it "is no good to me nor to anyone else at "Llanddeiniolen."

Mr. Grove.

12,264. Then as to the Ground Game Act; are they acquainted with the provisions of that Act?—Yes, they are pretty well acquainted with the Ground Game Act.

12,265. Have they any farmers' clubs or any organisation of any kind?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

12,266. To what estates do you speak, Mr. Griffith?—I speak of a district, and in that district there are three estates, the Vaynol, the Coed Helen, and Llanfair.

12,267. Do you know whether in the agreement on those estates there is a clause providing for compensation for improvements in substitution for the provisions made under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I have come here to give evidence on cultivation and not on compensation, so it is not proper I should give any evidence on that.

12,268. You say somewhere here that they have contracted out of the Acts of 1875 and 1883?—Yes, I say so.

12,269. Was there an agreement on these three estates which you have mentioned in which a clause for improvements was inserted instead of the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—That question will come under the heading of occupation, and there is a witness from my district who will speak to that.

12,270. Then you are not prepared to say anything upon it?—No.

12,271. You say that there is no scarcity of farm labourers in that district. Are there as many labourers employed on the land now as formerly?—No, not so many, because several farms have been consolidated, in some cases one, two, and three, and for that reason not so many servants or labourers are employed in my district.

12,272. Why is there less labour? Is it because there is more machinery used?—On the small farms they had to keep two or three labourers, but now that these farms have been consolidated the large farmer has not to keep so many servants, because he uses so much of his land for grazing.

12,273. Do you think that more labour could be profitably employed on the land?—I know a farm where a family lived where there were four servants and a boy always; now there is only one man to a boy, and a man occasionally helping.

12,274. Will you kindly tell us why there is less labour employed on the farm?—Yes, because the farmer there ploughs less and grazes more.

12,275. Then you wish the Commission to understand that the work is scamped on the farm?—I wish you to understand very clearly on that heading that there are some parts—some connexions—which I know of.

12,276. Do you think that the want of capital on the part of the tenant has anything to do with that?—No, the tenant has his pockets full of money.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,277. Are you at present a pastor of a congregation?—I am pleased to say that I am pastor of three congregations.

12,278. A witness at Pwllheli (his name was Mr. William Humphreys) said that many tenant-farmers held the same views as he did; but they did not come forward because they were afraid of their ministers and deacons. What have you to say in reference to that statement?—I have read the report of Mr. William Humphreys' evidence, and I feel that one of the Commissioners has taken every inch of ground underneath his feet. I refer to Mr. Brynmor Jones. See 10,504

12,279. Do you agree with the statements made by a good many of the Merionethshire witnesses, that the tenant-farmers find it extremely difficult to pay their rent?—I entirely agree.

12,280. From your knowledge of the tenant-farmers of this district, do you think that it is possible for them to save any money and pay their rent?—No; it is not possible now.

12,281. Are they hard-working and competent men as a rule?—Small tenants are really slaves.

12,282. And there are a great many small tenants, are there not?—Yes; a good number.

12,283. Do you find that the small farmers are very much attached to the holdings which they and their fathers before them have held, and to the district in which they are brought up?—That is a characteristic of our nation, that we are fond of our country and of our district.

12,284. Then, as I understand it, you think that under the existing state of the law even on the well-managed estates the lot of the farmer, especially the small farmer, is a very difficult one?—Their life is a very hard life.

12,285. Have you as county councillor, and otherwise, had to consider whether any further legislation might take place in order to improve the existing circumstances of the mass of the community?—I will answer that question in two words. First of all, I think that the landlords should reduce their rents, not to make abatements, but to reduce the rents. In the second place I feel (I have thought a good deal about it for the last 15 or 20 years) that we want a strong Land Bill.

12,286. Upon what principle would you treat the Bill?—Holland, France, and Germany have had reforms, and Mr. Gladstone has improved the Land Act of Ireland and the Land Act of Scotland, and we in Wales expect something in that direction. If I become a member of Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet I shall see to a good Bill being drawn up.

12,287. Do you think that there is a real desire felt for the creation of a land court?—Looking at the audience here to-day, I think I would like to see scores and hundreds of farmers here, but they are away,—they are at home, and they have requested us to come here to represent them, and to say that they wish for a Land Act—a Land Bill.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

12,288 A land court?—A Land Bill.

12,289. Do you remember the Bill that was brought into Parliament in the Session of 1892?—No; I do not remember its details.

12,290. Were you satisfied with it at the time?—It has shown me that there were better days to come.

12,291. You remember there was a Bill backed by Mr. Thomas Ellis and other gentlemen which came on for second reading on the 16th March 1892?—I remember reading the Bill, and I remember at the time that I was very satisfied, but I do not recollect its details now.

12,292. At any rate the sort of Bill that you understand the farmers who sent you here want is a Bill much on those lines, is it?—Yes; on those lines.

12,293. Have you had any discussion amongst yourselves at the county council as to whether increased powers ought to be conferred upon county councils to acquire land for public purposes?—Yes, an Act was recently passed; but not being compulsory, we were not able to do anything with it

12,294. What I want to know is, is there a general feeling amongst members of your county council that increased facilities ought to be given to county councils for the acquisition of land for the different public purposes compulsorily?—We have not spoken on the matter, nor have we divided; but those I have spoken to are very keen on that question.

Lord Kenyon.

12,295. I think you spoke of the Vaynol estate?—Yes.

12,296. Does the statement you made that the landlords charged 5 per cent. for improvements refer to that estate?—So it is said. e 13,631.

12,297. Has a letter been presented by the Vaynol tenants to their landlord thanking him for abatements of their rent, and for helping them to meet the bad times?—There was a reference to what you mentioned in the "Carnarvon Herald" by 12 men giving thanks for an abatement.

12,298. Do you mean that it was only those 12 tenants?—No; but I think it would be far better for those 12 to ask individually for a reduction for themselves and for other tenants.

12,299. But I understood it was a letter thanking him for having granted it; is that so?—It was, to thank him for an abatement.

12,300. Then that was the case; was it only those 12, or did they represent the tenantry generally?—I do not recollect the wording of the letter.

12,301. You cannot say, then?—No, I cannot.

12,302. Can you tell me whether times are very much worse now than they have been?—The farmers complain greatly when they try to sell during this period. I was told that between Maes at Carnarvon and Beddgelert there were tens, if not scores, of cattle that could not be sold at all.

12,303. You consider matters very bad this year?—They are very bad, and we want a reduction in the rents.

12,304. I do not want anything but an answer to my question. How far back do you put this depression; when do you think it began?—10 years ago, and before that.

12,305. You stated just now that you did not think that they could pay the rents and save any money. Have there been many cases of failure — bankruptcy — amongst the tenants during the last few years?—I do not know that there are, but they borrow money and do everything in order to pay their rents.

12,306. I mean I suppose there must come an end to it; they cannot go on borrowing money without coming to grief at some time?—No, they will not go on very far unless we get a Land Bill.

12,307. That is no answer to my question. Now there has been a 30 per cent. abatement, I think, on Lord Penrhyn's estate this year; do you think that sufficient?—I do not understand—I cannot answer that question. I do not know whether it is 10, or 20, or 30 per cent. that Lord Penrhyn should reduce. I do not know.

12,308. Do you mean that you cannot speak as a practical farmer as to what the rents should be?—I am not a farmer now.

12,309. Can you give any instances of consolidation?—Yes.

12,310. Will you give them?—The two Coed Bolyns, in the parish of Llanddeiniolen; the two Cefnllans, in the parish of Llanddeiniolen; and the two Glanrhyds, in the parish of Llanddeiniolen, during my lifetime.

12,311. Are these all during your lifetime?—Yes, they are all.

12,312. What was the size of them before?—Really I do not know; perhaps some of them were 25 acres, more and less.

Mr. Griffiths.

12,313. Did you not say just now that the tenant farmers had their pockets full of money?—Yes, with regard to one.

12,314. I thought it was a general answer?—One, and he will appear before the Commissioners in Anglesey.

12,315. Will you kindly tell me what is the reason why the tenant farmers do not come here to-day; it is not harvesting I should think?—Yes, I can tell you without any hesitation.

12,316. What is it?—Fear of the landlords and their agents.

12,317. Why do you consider the tenant farmers should have a stated reduction of rent and not an abatement?—An abatement makes them to have a dependent spirit, a "cap in hand," either asking or thanking always.

12,318. It is not that you want the rates reduced, is it?—I want a reduction in my rent, and then the rates will be reduced.

12,319. But do you understand that with abatements you cannot have a reduction of rates whereas with a permanent reduction of rents you may have a reduction of rates?—I understood that.

Chairman.

See 13,626–13,631.

12,320. There are some questions put in; one is by Mr. Vincent: "Did you say that the Vaynol "agreements contracted out of the Act of "1883"?—Is that Lord Beaconsfield's Act?

12,321. The Agricultural Holdings Act?—So I understood.

Lord Kenyon.

12,322. That is what you stated in your evidence.

Chairman.

12,323. "Have you seen an agreement?"—No.

12,324. "Do you know that every tenant has "a copy of his agreement in English, and in "Welsh where necessary"?—I think that question will be better answered by another witness on occupation.

12,325. Then, "May I ask whether what you "read in March 1892 was the Bill or the report "of the debate?"—The Bill found its way into my hands somehow. I cannot say whether it was a copy.

12,326. It was the Bill then?—A Bill found its way into my hands somehow, but I cannot say whether it was a copy or not.

12,327. "You say farmers cannot put away "anything in these days. Have not this year "and the last been quite exceptionally bad?"—Things have been getting worse for the last seven years gradually, but the last two years have been worse than the previous.

12,328. "Do you live in the neighbourhood of "the Vaynol estate?"—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

12,329. Then there is a question by Mr. W. J. Williams: "Are there many plantations for "game in your neighbourhood?"—In the parish of Llanddeiniolen there are a good number of plantations which have been planted during the last few years.

12,330. "Do you approve of large farms?"—No, Wales is too small for large farms.

12,331. Then a question by Mr. Vincent: "Was not 1889–90 quite a good year?"—No, the farmers complained.

12,332. Then another question by Mr. Vincent: "Can you give a single instance of intimidation "by landlord or agent in relation to this in-"quiry?"—No, I cannot give an instance; but a man has an instinct, and he understands what is in another man thereby.

12,333. If any such case comes before your notice it will be your duty to report it to us, and very serious measures will be taken at once. We are determined fully to carry out the Act for the protection of witnesses?—I wish to say that I, and the farmers of the country, thank Lord Carrington for his kindness.

12,334. It is not anybody's kindness, but it is the law of the land, which will be carried out. Then another question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Can you name any farms on which tenants "have made liquid manure tanks?"—Yes, they have—ditches.

12,335. But liquid manure tanks—"pydewau at gadw gofer neu buswail"?—Yes, the careful ones among them.

12,336. Then question by Mr. Vincent: "Is it "not the fact that Mr. Assheton Smith's tenants "in Lleyn gave him a vote of thanks for abating "25 per cent. on the 23rd August 1893?"—Yes, but they would thank more if they had a reduction.

12,337. "Did the 12 signatures represent the "body of the tenantry?"—I do not recollect the wording.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 12,395

Mr. OWEN EVANS called and examined.

Chairman.

See 11,028–11,042.

12,338. You wish to give evidence in rebuttal of certain evidence by Mr. Ellis Williams?—Your Lordship gave permission that I should hand in that evidence. It is the evidence of my father, written at his dictation, and signed by him. If the clerk of the Court will kindly read that I shall be prepared to answer any questions.

The following statement was read:—

"With regard to the statement of Ellis Williams, of Glyddyn, concerning Penbrynhuddigl, I, Owen Evans, of Broomhall, wish to state that in 1840 I was tenant of Tynycoed, a part of the Mostyn estate, and of which Penrhynhuddigl, a cottage and garden of half an acre, formed also a part at a rent of 2*l.* per annum. I added a portion of Tynycoed to it (about 3½ acres), increasing the rent to 6*l.*, free of rates and taxes. This cottage was sold, together with Tynycoed Farm, in October 1844, and purchased by the late Mr. Rowland Jones, of Broomhall. I resided at Tynycoed up to the death of my brother-in-law in 1869. My late wife then became the possessor of the Broomhall estate. I may state that I can speak and read Welsh fluently, and have lived in this neighbourhood all my life."

Chairman—continued.

12,339. I do not think there is any rebutting evidence in that. Mr. Ellis Williams did not deny that your father spoke Welsh?—No, I do not think he did, but it is generally said of landlords.

12,340. Perhaps it is, but you must keep to the rebuttal strictly.

The statement was continued as follows:—

"I have no recollection of at any time giving William Williams, the father, notice to quit, nor

Chairman—continued.

Owen Williams, his son. About 12 years ago Owen Williams married the tenant of Glyddyn, and left Penrhynhuddigl to live there of his own accord. I frequently employed William Williams and his sons in erecting buildings for myself, and on other estates of which I was then agent. I have no recollection of being asked for any compensation for anything done on the place, but I paid Owen Williams on leaving for everything that he wished to dispose of at the valuation of a neighbouring tenant farmer. The house has since been occupied by one of our workmen, and no gamekeeper has ever resided there. I never understood until Ellis Williams gave his evidence before the Commission yesterday that he had any grievance or complaint against me, and in 1885, when my son was married, he formed one of a deputation of four who came to my house with a wedding present to his wife.—Owen Evans."

12,341. Your father was tenant of Tynycoed, was he not?—Yes.

12,342. He let the cottage to the farmer Ellis Williams for 2*l.*?—Yes.

12,343. You agree about that?—Yes, a cottage and garden, a large garden.

12,344. Then, according to Mr. Ellis Williams' statement, your father added 5 acres of land to this cottage, and raised the rent to 6*l.* You say you added 3½ acres, and you raised the rent to 6*l.* You wish to correct the 5 to 3½?—Well, I think that is a clerical error, it must be. I have got the acreages of the fields on a rough slip of paper here; one piece is 22 roods; another 3 acres 18 roods; another 3 acres 14 roods; another 3 acres 4 roods; and another 1 acre and 18 perches.

12,345. How many acres did you add to the cottage when you raised the rent to 6*l.* The tenant says you added 5 acres; you say you added 3½, which is right?—We took this from a map here, and if it is a mistake on our part we adhere to what we say.

12,346. But you do not think the tenant has treated you badly in saying that you gave him 5 when you say you gave him 3½?—Oh, no, he has been liberal.

Mr. Griffiths.

12,347. Have you added those figures up?—No, I have not added them up.

Chairman.

12,348. Have your ever heard of your father mentioning the fact that he was annoyed because the pigs trespassed on his ground?—No; he thought of putting that into his statement, but thought it was useless afterwards; but the cattle were an annoyance to the neighbourhood; they were always in the highway.

12,349. Then the tenant was an annoyance to your father?—Well, he was an annoyance to the neighbourhood, inasmuch as the cattle were always in the road.

12,350. He gave him notice to quit?—He has no recollection of ever having given him notice.

Chairman—continued.

12,351. Does he deny that he gave him notice to quit; does he rebut that part of the statement?—Yes, he does.

12,352. He denies it?—Yes, he does.

12,353. He says that it is not the fact?—He has no recollection of giving it.

12,354. That is rather loose—"he has no recollection"?—Well, it is over 50 years ago.

12,355. Can he positively state that he did not give that man notice to quit?—No, he cannot, but to the best of his recollection he has never done it. He believes he has never done so.

12,356. He believes he has not done so, but he cannot positively say that he did not?—No, he cannot.

12,357. When Ellis Williams gave up the land he kept the cottage at 4*l.* rent; do you deny that?—Well, I am not quite sure about the rent, but I think it was probably 4*l.*

12,358. What compensation did your father give Ellis Williams when he took away the land that he has no recollection of taking away, and left him the cottage at 4*l.*; what compensation did he give to Ellis Williams?—I think you did not quite understand; my father does not say that he has no recollection of taking that piece of land away. He did do it, but he did not give him notice to quit before doing so.

12,359. What compensation did you give Ellis Williams when the land and the cottage parted company?—I do not think he gave anything at that time.

12,360. Then you agree there?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

12,361. He never asked for any?—He never asked for any compensation.

Chairman.

12,362. "We paid the rent to Mr. Owen "Evans regularly. Because of something or "other—I believe it was because our pigs "trespassed on Tynycoed, the adjoining farm "—Mr. Evans got angry with my father and "gave him notice to quit." That you say you have recollection of?—My father alleges that there was no ill-feeling at all between them, that is, nothing to speak about.

12,363. You have no recollection of anything of the sort?—No.

12,364. "The effect of this notice on my "father was that he never afterwards walked a "healthy step. He saw all his labour and money "spent in vain"—you know, he says he built the house. Do you deny that?—No, but it was a mud cottage as he says in his evidence. The house is only a small cottage, with two rooms and a loft over it, I think; and if it is inspected now it will be seen that most of the walls are built of mud still, only that there was a roof put on it and some thatching up.

12,365. What compensation was paid for the roof being put on and thatched up?—I do not think there was anything.

12,366. Then Owen Williams' brother, Ellis Williams, lived in the house for a considerable time afterwards?—Yes. I wish to point out that what he says in his evidence is that the house was built in 1840. In his cross-examination at the end I think he says that.

12,367. Yes, and he says, "My father went to "this place to live there about 62 years ago; the "house was one built of mud and roofed and "thatched with straw"?—At the end in his cross-examination he says the house was built in 1840. That cottage with the farm then belonged to the Mostyn estate; my father was only tenant; he could not give him a lease then, he had not the power.

12,368. I do not think there is any question about a lease or anything of that kind?—It was asked in the cross-examination whether he had asked for a lease.

13,369. And he answered that he could not get one?—He never did ask, because he knew very well that my father had not the power to give him one.

Professor Rhŷs.

The tenant explained that Mr. Evans had not the power to give a lease. That came out.

Chairman.

12,370. When Ellis Williams married and left, what happened then. Did they make application to go on with the house in the family?—No. Ellis Williams left and married this tenant of Glyddyn and went there to live, it being a larger place.

12,371. Then Owen Williams came — the brother to Ellis Williams?—Owen Williams always lived at this place. Ellis Williams had nothing to do with it except that he was the son of the old man. I do not know how he came to give evidence.

12,372. When Owen Williams left to go and get married and live somewhere else, did or did not Miss Williams, the sister, ask to be taken as a tenant?—I believe some of them came. My father was willing, I believe, for a daughter of Owen Williams, that lived there, as far as my recollection goes, to go on with it—the one that lived there with the father,—but Ellis Williams, who was the uncle and lived elsewhere, wanted to put another sister there, as far as my recollection goes.

12,373. Then you do not rebut the evidence that a sister to the Williamses asked to be allowed to stay in the house?—No.

12,374. And you do not rebut the evidence that she was refused?—No.

12,375. And you do not rebut the evidence that no compensation was paid for the house?—He never asked for compensation, but my father asked a neighbouring tenant farmer to value everything that Owen Williams wanted to sell, and he paid him he believes about 30*l.*, it may be a few shillings more or less, but about 30*l.*, he believes when he went away.

12,376. He has a perfect recollection of that fact?—Oh, perfect, yes.

Chairman—continued.

12,377. His memory is clear about that?—Oh, yes, and the man who valued it recollects it too.

12,378. Then all there is in the rebutting evidence is that he was paid 30*l.* at the end of his tenancy?—Yes, my Lord, but I wish to state that the house was built in 1840, and he did not leave it till 12 years ago; that would be in 1881; so even if he did improve it he had ample time——

12,379. He says he built it?—Yes, he built it in a way.

12,380. And that he improved the land very much; do you deny that?—Oh, there is no doubt he improved the land, but I cannot say to what extent.

12,381. You do not deny, either, that he got no recuperation for his improvement of the land at all?—No, I believe not.

12,382. He improved the land very much; you say you have no recollection how he quitted his tenancy; but anyhow he was your tenant; he improved the land and he got no compensation; then his sister was refused as a tenant; he says he got no compensation for the house, and you say that you gave him 30*l.*?—Yes.

12,383. Then the whole of the rebutting evidence, as I take it, is that you gave him 30*l.* as compensation for the house that he built 60 years ago?—Yes, and perhaps I may point out that even if he had had a lease he could not expect to get it much longer than from 1840 to 1881. He had ample time to reap the benefit of his improvements.

12,384. I do not say he had not; but he says he got no compensation; you say he got 30*l.* compensation. Then there is only that between you, except that he says he had 5 acres and you say he had 3½; and he says a gamekeeper lived in the house and you say one of your estate men did?—Yes. The acreage that I mentioned here, added up, comes to 4 acres and 14 perches.

12,385. Then practically it is about ¾ acre less than the man said?—Yes.

12,386. And what there is between you is that you say you gave 30*l.* and he says he got nothing?—I do not wish to make the statement more than is absolutely necessary. The 30*l.* was a valuation for what he wished to sell; he got about 30*l.*

12,387. But this is what he sold in the house?—No, not in the house—outside. For instance, he got 10*l.*, I believe, for hay, and 2*l.* for lattermath and other things.

12,388. Anything else?—I cannot tell you how the others were.

12,389. Then he got 10*l.* for the hay and 2*l.* for the lattermath and the rest for the house?—I cannot say what he got for the rest, but he got about 30*l.* altogether when he left, as far as my memory goes.

12,390. Your evidence is rather hazy as to what he got the rest for; did he get it for a cow?—Oh, no; he got it for improvements and things on the place that he left when he went away.

Chairman—continued.

12,391. I have made a mistake; the tenant does not deny that he got compensation on quitting his tenancy, but his grievance against you is that he got nothing for his house?—We agree on that, only I say that he was there long enough for what he did to the house to recuperate it to himself.

12,392. Then the only thing in the rebutting evidence is as to this difference of ¾ acre?—That is all the difference I think there is. With your permission, my Lord, there were two small points in the evidence given yesterday that I should like to refer to.

Chairman—continued.

12,393. Whose evidence was it?—Mr. Newell's and Mr. J. T. Jones'.

12,394. Will you put what you want to say in the form of a statement, and we will see whether we can take any notice of it?—Thank you.

Re-examined. 12,521.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Rev. Robert William Griffith recalled and further examined through an interpreter.

Evidence continued from 12,337.

12,395. The interpreter translated from the Welsh the following statement of the witness:—

"Suggestions:—

"First, land court, including security of tenure.

"Secondly, assistance to the farmers to buy the land.

"Thirdly, right for workmen to acquire houses and gardens near towns."

Sir John Llewelyn.

12,395A. May I ask upon that whether you mean with Government money?—According to the Irish plan, one part out of three. I suggest there should be right for workmen to buy land for houses and gardens near towns.

Professor Rhŷs.

He says, "Right to buy them for the workmen," I think.

Sir John Llewelyn.

As a compulsory clause in the Small Holdings Act.

Professor Rhŷs.

Yes.

The Witness.

"Freer access to the mountains to raise peat and to keep sheep. A fuller right in order to obtain opportunities to get water from the lakes for towns and villages. A greater right to make light railways or narrow-gauge railways to the villages and the outlying districts."

Lord Kenyon.

12,396. He means provided by companies?—Yes, a greater right to make narrow gauge railways or light railways to the vales and villages, the outlying districts and villages.

Sir John Llewelyn.

12,397. Do you mean greater powers to county councils?—Yes, to county councils, and that the landlords and their agents ought to be able to speak Welsh and not merely to say "No Welsh" when spoken to.

Mr. John Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

See 12,555–13,691.

12,398. The interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"Mr. John Jones, Ty Cnap, Llanwnda.

"Rent, 48*l.* formerly; present rent, 54*l.* I am the present tenant of Ty Cnap.

"My son, Henry Jones, was the late tenant. After his death I took possession of the farm. When my son took possession of the farm there were no outbuildings, and the house was in a very dilapidated state, and was nearly down. The landlord, the Rev. Constable Ellis, came there and saw it. He asked my son if he would alter the place by doing the necessary repairs and building outhouses, and that he would remember him (Henry Jones), as he (Mr. Ellis) was at that time receiving only a small income. Henry Jones commenced to build as requested.

"The landlord called upon him and told him to proceed with buildings, and that he would pay him. Henry Jones paid the rent through the bank, and the landlord sent the rent back to him on account of the alterations. I lived there with my son. My son being short of cash to go on with the alterations required, he asked me if I would advance him some money, which I did by selling some property I had at Carnarvon for 300*l.* My son died. I gave notice to the landlord at Llanfairfechan personally that as my son had died I intended giving up possession of Ty Cnap, and that I wanted Mr. Ellis to send a man there (to Ty Cnap) to value the buildings and the drainage done by my son at his request.

"He, Mr. Ellis, told me at Ty Cnap to proceed with buildings and complete the same. I said to him that I had no money, that I had spent all. Mr. Ellis stated that he would grant me a lease if that would suit me, and would give me the loan of 150*l.* to complete the buildings, but I would have to give him 6*l.* as interest yearly for the same. I asked him, would he give me a paper, so that I might be secured to get the lease. He would not, but stated that his word was sufficient. I had witnesses hearing the landlord promising the lease—my son Robert and my wife. I and my son Robert went to Llanfairfechan. I signed a paper that I was willing to accept his terms, viz., paying 6*l.* a year more rent until I would get the lease. Mr. Ellis ordered me out of his house because I told him that he was not doing right to promise a lease to me and he going to sell the farm. I told him he was lying or misleading me. I heard that the place was for sale.

"I was then nearly completing buildings. A great many people visited Ty Cnap to inspect it. I went to Llanfairfechan to Mr. Ellis to ask if there was any truth in what I had heard that the place was on sale; he told me to go home and not mind what people said.

"In a few days after I received a letter from Mr. Ellis saying he had changed his mind and that he would not grant me a lease. In a short time after I received a notice from Mr. Williams, late Glanbeuno, that he had bought the property. I went to Mr. Williams and asked him if he had bought the farms and buildings as they were.

"He said that he had bought everything as they were, and told me if I had any claim I was to see Mr. Ellis. I and my son Robert went to Llanfairfechan and saw Mr. Ellis when he ordered us out, and said he had sold it to Mr. Williams, and that if I had any claim he referred me to Mr. Williams. I was so annoyed that I went to Bangor and placed the matter before Bishop Campbell, and the result was that the Bishop could do nothing with him (Mr. Ellis). The Bishop sympathised with me in my loss. I still owe Eryri Works (timber merchants, &c.) 8*l.* for materials. I also owe for ironmongery 5*l.* or 6*l.* to Mr. T. O. Jones, ironmonger, Carnarvon. I had also borrowed 40*l.* at the Old Bank of Carnarvon which were advanced to me and my deceased son, which I had to repay. My landlord wanted me to sign a paper which he read to me and gave to me the purport of it in Welsh as he thought proper. He refused to give me a copy of it to go home with me. Valuation of repairs on buildings, &c. put in. [The document was handed in.] I am now paying by instalments the money advanced to me to complete the buildings at Ty Cnap. I estimated my loss at 300*l.* which I expended besides the extra 6*l.* that is charged as interest for the 150*l.* advanced to me. I am paying the same up to now. I do not include anything for my own time and work. This is actual cash spent. My opinion is this, that the landlord intended to sell Ty Cnap or else he would not advance me the 150*l.*, and as the previous rent was only 48*l.*, the rent charged, 54*l.*, would bring more in at the sale."

Chairman.

12,398A. Are you there now?—Yes.

12,399. What do you pay on the farm—the present rent?—54*l.* ever since I had the loan of this money, when he said I would have a lease and that I would not have to pay the 6*l.* after getting the lease.

12,400. Have you got the lease now?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

12,401. There is a misunderstanding He says it is in the hands of another person now?—The farm is in the hands of someone else, and I am obliged to pay him 6*l.* all along.

Chairman.

12,402. Are you the tenant of this Ty Cnap?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

12,403. Do you know what Mr. Ellis sold the farm for?—No, I do not, except that the man who bought the farm said that he paid dearly for the improvements I had made on the farm.

12,404. Can you give me the date of your son's death?—January 1884, so far as I can recollect now.

12,405. And the date of the sale?—I did not know it had been sold until I had the notice or warning—notice to quit. It was sold by private treaty.

12,406. You cannot tell me the date?—No, I cannot say beyond that I at the time expected a paper in order to get a lease.

12,407. You can tell me the date of your first payment of rent to Mr. Williams?—No, I cannot, only that it was sometime towards the end of the year 1884 or beginning of 1885.

12,408. That is quite near enough. I have no further questions to ask. It seems a very hard case.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,409. Have you consulted any solicitor?—Yes.

12,410. But you got nothing in writing from Mr. Ellis, as I understand?—No, he refused to give it.

12,411. It is a very hard case?—It is very hard on me—not paying anything to me for it.

Mr. Griffiths.

12,412. What is the total amount of what you consider you have lost?—I consider that we have lost from 250*l.* to 300*l.*, besides the labour of myself and my child, only getting food there.

12,413. Do you include the 120*l.* as well?—The alteration on the land and the building has cost about 450*l.*, or there are about 450 roods of drainage, and a portion of land like a common where gipsies used to stay has been enclosed at his request with a stone and mortar wall.

12,414. I do not quite understand you yet You have lost your own 300*l.*, you say, and then you borrowed from your landlord 150*l.* more?—He urged me to take the 150*l.* in order to finish it, and if I had a lease at the time that he gave the money there was a number of men ready to give me the money to go from there.

Professor Rhŷs.

12,415. For the lease?—For the lease.

Mr. Seebohm.

12,416. What was the date when the building was commenced?—I went in in November. There is no place to put anything in. I had to do something at once.

12,417. What was the year when this building was put up?—1880.

12,418. Was it completed in 1883, before 1883?—No.

12,419. Then having got the consent of the landlord to make that building, I do not quite see why it does not come under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I do not know what the Agricultural Holdings Act is.

12,420. You are still in possession of it?—Yes. I hold the place.

12,421. You hold it under another landlord?—Yes, Mr. Constable Ellis used to come yonder now and then and tell us what to do; he used to come from time to time all along.

Mr. Grove.

12,422. Did you ask the landlord for a letter when he told you to get on with the completion?—After the death of my son?

12,423. I mean when the landlord gave his consent for the building, did he then give a written consent, or a verbal consent?—He would not give a written consent.

12,424. Did you ask him for it?—My son was alive and asked him. That was before my son's death. Several times my son asked him, a man who lived there would not leave. They had sold all his things, and would not go from there, and we slept in an outbuilding—in a kitchen outside.

12,425. Then do you say that when the farm was sold by Mr. Ellis, you consider a higher price was paid because of these improvements that you had paid for and effected?—Certainly.

12,426. Did you consult a solicitor as to your claims—whether you had any claims?—Yes, after being at Bangor to see the bishop, we went to see Mr. Bryn Roberts and asked him.

Chairman.

I understand the Rev. Constable Ellis has been informed of this.

The Secretary.

Three days ago I wrote to inform him that the witness was coming.

Chairman.

Is the reverend gentleman in the room?

Mr. J. H. Roberts.—No, my Lord. He wrote to me this morning, and asked me to watch the evidence, and after I have had a copy of it I may have something to say in the matter. I have Mr. Ellis's letter to me, but I only got it a short time ago.

Chairman.

The evidence was sent to him.

Mr. J. H. Roberts.—No. I am prepared to-morrow to give Mr. Ellis's statement. He is in bad health himself, and is unable to attend. I will be prepared to give his statement, and perhaps verify it to a certain extent by my own knowledge.

Chairman.

Will you interpret that to the witness.

[The interpreter interpreted the statement of Mr. Roberts to the witness.]

The Witness.

Mr. Roberts knows a good deal about the concern.

Chairman.

12,427. Will you be present here to-morrow?—Yes.

Chairman.

12,428. Question put in by Mr. Vincent: "You say 'my landlord,' once or twice, towards "the end of your evidence. To which of your "landlords do you refer"?—My present landlord said that he had nothing to do with it, and then I went to my late landlord, Mr. Ellis, because I felt that he was responsible for the improvements which I had made, and I accused him of lying to me, telling me untruths, and leading me to poverty.

Mr. Seebohm.

12,429. Then you lost your right to compensation, simply because the consent of the landlord was not made in writing?—I got nothing.

Mr. Seebohm.

He practically answers "Yes" to that question.

Chairman.

12,430. The second question by Mr. Vincent is: "If I understand rightly, you complain that "Mr. Ellis broke his promise as to the lease, "rather than of the present state of the law. "Is that so"?—I do not know anything about the present state of the law beyond that he promised a lease, and Mr. Roberts, of Dinas, was to draw it up.

Re-examined. 12,455.

Mr. Evan Roberts called and examined through an interpreter.

The following statement of the witness was read by the interpreter:—

"Mr. Evan Roberts, of Bryn'r Odyn, Llandwrog, tenant.

"My father, Hugh Roberts, took the farm more than 80 years ago. Rent then 42*l.* Same acreage as now, 42 acres.

"The vicar of Llanengan was the landlord and his family, but it was sold by auction at Crown Hotel, Pwllheli, to Mr. Williams, Rhiw, Blaenau Festiniog; price then 1,420*l.*, 25 years ago.

"Improvements were made by my father and brothers; cultivating the land by clearing the stones, making drains, walls, erecting new gates, and bridges to cross the river.

"An advance in rent was made of 8*l.* in tenancy of two years; then another advance in a few years of 10*l.* After the death of Mr. Williams, Mrs. Williams advanced another 10*l.*

"Part of it, half an acre, was taken towards the garden, &c., for chapel of Bryn'r Odyn, without any deductions. Then it was sold by the executors of Mrs. Williams to Mr. Watkin, Muriau for 1,900*l.* I refused to pay more than 60*l.* rent. He wanted us to re-build, which I refused; then he gave notice to quit. I did not get anything for improvements. I could not pay the rent without the assistance of my brother Owen Roberts, who was working in the quarry, and he used to give me on an average 20*l.* a year. I could never manage to scrape together more than 50*l.*

"I am now working at Tyddyn Dafydd, and am more happy and comfortable that I have ever been.

"I consider 40*l.* enough rent on Bryn'r Odyn."

Chairman.

12 431. Are you a labourer, or have you a farm of your own?—I work now, since I have left the farm.

12,432. Do you work as a labourer?—Yes, as a labourer.

12,433. How old are you?—62.

Mr. Griffiths.

12,434. What do you recommend in this case? Do you expect us to do anything for you?—No. I do not think that the Commissioners could do anything for me, but I should like the public to know generally how I have been treated.

12,435. Why do you think the country ought to know?—To see whether we could have better Acts of Parliament from this time forward.

12,436. And to enable the tenants to have further compensation for improvements?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,437. I understand you to say, that though you worked hard you found it very difficult to pay the rent?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

12,438. Have you any sons to help you in the farming, or did you ever get labourers?—No; I had no sons. I had a man occasionally.

12,439. Did he live indoors with you? Did you find him in board and lodgings?—Yes; he came yonder to spend over Sunday.

12,440. I do not think that you understand my question. Did you find him in board and lodging?—No; only over Sunday he had his food and lodging.

12,441. I understand you were born on this farm, were you not?—Yes.

12,442. And did you work on the farm to help your father?—Yes, until I was 18 years of age.

12,443. Had you any brothers?—Yes, six.

12,444. And then, when your father died, you took on the farm, did you?—Yes. I was executor, so I took the farm on.

12,445. Did you have nobody to help you?—No, no one.

12,446. Did you find it possible to do the whole of the work yourself, do you mean?—No, I kept a man.

12,447. You said "only occasionally." That is why I asked you the question?—Yes, occasionally.

12,448. Do you mean you had him to assist you at harvesting, or do you mean that you took him on by the year, or what?—No, by the week.

12,449. What became of your five brothers?—They turned out to work for the quarry.

12,450. After receiving notice to quit, as I understand, you had to go and work as a labourer?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

12,451. Is this Mr. Watkin a landowner?—Yes. See

12,452. Beyond this farm he has others, has he not?—Yes, a little in my neighbourhood.

12,453. Do you know how big his estate is?—No, I do not know.

12,454. Has he any occupation besides being a landowner?—He was agent, but the estate has been sold.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Jones recalled and further examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

Evidence continued from 12,430.

12,455. Is that your signature to that receipt, across the stamp [handing receipt dated 26th January 1885 to the witness]?—I see my name on the document, but I do not know what it is. I have not the slightest idea what it is.

12,456. Is it your own handwriting?—Yes; I wrote that signature, but I do not know what the paper contains.

[At the request of the Chairman, the interpreter read the following receipt to the witness, first translating it into Welsh and then in the original English.]

"I, John Jones, of Ty Cnap, in the parish of Llanwnda, in the county of Carnarvon,

Chairman—continued.

acknowledge that I have received this twenty-sixth day of January 1885, from the Reverend Philip Constable Ellis, of Llanfairfechan, in the said county, the sum of One hundred and fifty pounds, in addition to the sum of Twenty-four pounds, formerly paid to my son Henry Jones, in consideration of money expended on buildings and repairs on the farm of Ty Cnap, and I hereby engage to pay interest for the sum of one hundred and fifty pounds at the rate of 4*l.* per cent. so long as I shall continue tenant of the said farm, and I hereby declare that I consider the two sums aforesaid of 150*l.* and 24*l.* as fully discharging all claims for compensation in regard of buildings and improvements which I may otherwise have had on the said Philip Constable Ellis, my landlord.

"(Signed) John Jones.

"26 January 1885.

"Witness, Ph. Constable Ellis."

I never heard it read before. This must be the paper which I signed before going home, and I asked him for a copy of it before signing it to take home to show to the family what I was signing, and he said these words to me, "Won't "you believe the vicar on his word?" I said, "I really don't know; they are free to tell "lies at times. It will be no worse for "you, Mr. Ellis, to give a copy of it, and keep "the money until I can go home in order to see "what it is."

The Witness.

I asked him if he was not ready for me to take the paper home would he allow a different man to come there to translate to me. His refusal was making me suspicious that everything was not all right, and he asked me, "Do "you think it is not all right?" "Yes," I said, "or else let me have a copy to take home," and then he told me to take him at his word, to believe him, and I said to him, it would be far worse for him for deceiving me than it would be for me for having been deceived.

Chairman.

12,457. Do you give us to understand that you did not know what you were signing?—No, I never knew until now, but I went to see a solicitor in this town, Mr. Allanson, to see whether he was right in refusing to let me have a copy when I made the row after selling it and everything.

12,458. Do you speak English?—No, I cannot. I can say, "How d'ye do?" and that sort of thing.

12,459. Was any person in the room with you and the clergyman when this transaction took place?—The servant came there to ask whether she might bring a piece of bread or something to me, and he told her to go out and shut the door after her.

12,460. Can you speak Welsh?—I could that time. There was yonder man constantly speaking with me.

12,461. Can you recognise the handwriting of that letter [handing to the witness a letter dated July 31st, 1882, and signed "Henry Jones"]?—A son of mine.

12,462. Was that written by your son Henry Jones?—His name is there. The one I think that signed it was Robert.

12,463. Was your son's name "Henry"?—Yes, the son who died.

Chairman—continued.

12,464. Do you acknowledge that that is your son Henry Jones's handwriting?—Henry Jones? There is a Robert Jones.

12,465. Do you acknowledge that that is your son Henry Jones's handwriting?—I cannot say that. I think that the handwriting is that of my son Robert. The hand that wrote this was my son Robert's.

[At the request of the Chairman the interpreter read the letter as follows:—]

"Ty Cnap,
Bontnewydd,
Near Carnarvon,

Reverend Sir, July 31st, 1882.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of yours (24*l.*) of the 26th instant.

The fact of your liberality, sir, goes beyond a shadow of doubt to substantiate that I have fulfilled my determination of doing what you would approve of, sir, as an 'appreciative landlord.'

I may state that I have alone, with the four pig-styes, cow-shed, and other two sheds which you have already seen, that I have by this completed an excellent and spacious 'hay-house,' which is through our Heavenly Father's remembrance, well, and partially filled with a ve y fine crop of hay. I have most zealously and honestly worked to get Ty Cnap to what it is now, and the fact of the kindness of your esteemed favour will strengthen my hand, sir, to work as willingly and honestly, if spared in years to come. I may mention that I am utterly at a loss to find words strong enough to tender to you, sir, trusting that I shall be long spared, and that the same will be favoured you, sir, to enjoy many long and future years. Will you be good enough, sir, to receive my best of thanks for the general kindness of Mr. Ellis, trusting that I am giving him, and his very worthy father, every and the best of satisfaction.

I remain, Reverend Sir,
Your very obedient servant,
Henry Jones.

Reverend Ph. Constable Ellis,
The Rectory,
Llanfairfechan."

[The interpreter, at the request of Sir John Llewelyn, interpreted the letter in Welsh to the witness.]

The Witness.

My son was the farmer in 1882. I had nothing to do with a letter of that kind. My son had such confidence in Constable Ellis that if he had told him to go and put his head in the sea he would have done so, he had such faith in him. It was two years afterwards that I became tenant, so I had nothing to do with that letter.

The Secretary.

That reply was not interpreted quite fully. He said, "All this happened two years before my son died."

The Interpreter.

Yes, he did say so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,466. Is this letter in your son's handwriting?—I cannot say. He has been dead 10 years. It has been done 12 years ago; I cannot say.

12,467. What did the vicar tell you at the interview in 1885 when you signed the paper?—When I signed the paper at Llanfairfechan?

12,468. Yes?—I have given part of the conversation by saying that I wanted the paper to take home.

12,469. I know; but you said a servant had come in and offered you some bread, and then the vicar said to the servant, "Go away;" that then the servant went away and shut the door?—She shut the door after her, and I asked him if he would not allow me to get anyone from the neighbourhood to come there and see what it was. He felt it a little, and he was a little angry with me, saying that I ought to believe him on his word, and I said to him that it is a very important thing to go and sign a paper there, that I did not know what it contained beyond what he was saying. I could not say what that paper contains now, if I had this town for saying so.

12,470. I did not want you to go over the whole conversation again, but I understood that the vicar did tell you what was in the paper?—Yes.

12,471. What I want to know is, what did he say that the paper contained?—I said that there had been a good deal of draining yonder, and he gave the money to me and I gave him 6*l.* interest.

12,472. I will put it in another way. Was the paper written out before you got there?—No. I had agreed with him to have a valuation and to go away.

Chairman.

12,473. Will you attend to the question?—I received his power to get the valuation and go away.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,474. You got the 150*l.*, did you not?—Yes.

12,475. You have been telling us that you had a conversation in the room with the vicar alone?—Yes.

12,476. Did the vicar write on this paper in your presence, or was the paper written out before the conversation began?—I think it was written when I was there.

12,477. What? that he took a pen and ink?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

12,478. When he had finished writing did he tell you what he had written?—Yes.

12,479. Did he translate it and read every word, or did he tell you, "The substance is this"?—He said, "The substance of the paper is this."

12,481. Now I really must remind you that that is not the substance of any paper that was written down there and then, but some paper that he had promised to give you, namely, a lease. Bring your mind to the question that I asked you?—This is what he said in this paper.

12,482. What? that he was to give a lease?—Yes. I would not have signed it had it not been for that.

12,483. Did he tell you that the paper contained a promise of a lease from him?—Yes.

12,484. Then why was a receipt stamp put to it?—That is too great a question for an illiterate man like myself.

12,485. You have heard of putting stamps upon receipts for money, have you not?—Yes, many times.

12,486. Did not the vicar tell you that this was a receipt for money?—No, I do not understand. He gave me a paper to get money in the bank.

12,487. A cheque?—Yes; some paper to go to the bank, the old bank in this town.

12,488. The stamp on this, I should tell you, is a sixpenny stamp, not simply a penny receipt stamp?—I did not put the stamp there. I did not know what stamp it was.

12,489. No; but the words at the beginning are, "I acknowledge that I have received 150*l.* and 24*l.*" Did the vicar tell you that it was a receipt for that?—No. He could say anything he liked to me. I was not able to read it.

12,490. But I am asking you what he did say?—He said that I could get the lease and he would get the 150*l.*

12,491. I am asking you what he said was in the paper. That is what I am on at this moment. We have not had a conversation about a lease till this moment, and there is nothing in this paper about the lease?—Does not that go very far to prove that he was deceiving me and telling an untruth, and when I said that he took hold of me by the shoulder and turned me out of the house. I have gone through more trouble than you would believe on account of this.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

12,492. Very likely. I am asking you a very simple question. This is what I want to get from you. What did the vicar say was in this paper that you signed?—As far as I understand I have said two or three times.

12,493. I understand that he did not say it was a receipt for the money?—No; it was a paper to tell me that I could get a lease.

12,494. Then why did you not ask for the paper to take away if it was a promise to you to get a lease?—But I did ask him about a dozen times.

12,495. And he would not give it to you?—No; he would not.

12,496. Did he tell you that it was not only a receipt but a receipt in full discharge for all claims for compensation?—No; he did not say that. May I say another word?

12,497. Yes?—I said to him when he took hold of me by the shoulder to put me out, that I would prefer Ty Cnap rather than 200*l.*; that if Ty Cnap belonged to one of the larger estates I should be more comfortable, as I should be at home then as long as I was able to pay for it, without his going to deceive me by saying that it was not to be sold.

Lord Kenyon.

12,498. Do you still consider that you owe Mr. Constable Ellis 150*l.*?—I do not know; I am obliged to pay the interest on them all along—all the time.

12,499. What! since you have left the farm?—I have not left the farm. I am there still.

Chairman.

12,500. Question by Mr. Vincent: "You "say the 150*l.* was merely lent to you"?—Yes, so he said, in order to finish the drainage and the building.

12,501. "Since then the property has changed hands?"—Yes.

12,502. "Has any request to repay the 150*l.* "been made to you since the property changed "hands?"—No; only that I pay interest.

12,503. The interest is still demanded?—Yes.

12,504. "Did you ever spend any money on "this farm, Ty Cnap, yourself?"—Yes.

12,505. How much?—The whole has cost about 450*l.*

12,506. Did you spend 450*l.* on it yourself?—Including Mr. Constable Ellis's 150*l.*

12,507. You spent 300*l.* yourself?—Yes; I sold a house which I had in the town to take the money to my son.

Chairman—continued.

12,508. Question by Mr. Vincent: "Do you "say that you have paid interest to Mr. Ellis "since the farm was sold?"—As long as he had it.

12,509. As long as he had it?—No.

12,510. You said just now you still paid interest?—Yes; in the rent.

12,511. You pay an increased rent?—An increased rent.

Mr. Grove.

12,512. When you owed 6*l.* to Mr. Ellis, was not the rent increased from 48*l.* to 54*l.* on purpose to cover that particular 6*l.* for interest?—I think there is another reason too, if I may say so.

12,513. Do you say yes or no to the question. That is what I want to know?—Yes; to Mr. Ellis.

12,514. Then 54*l.* is still charged for the same farm, is it?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

12,515. If you were to leave this farm, would you have to pay the 150*l.* then, or would it be forgiven—would it end?—Whoever goes there will have to pay the money certainly.

12,516. In the rent?—In the rent.

Professor Rhŷs.

12,517. You said there was another reason for including the 6*l.* in the 54*l.* May I know what that is?—Yes; there is another reason I am going to say. I think that he had an intention to sell the place, and so the rent was 54*l.* instead of 48*l.*, and when they came yonder to look at it, and the man who has bought it now, I asked him, "I have made this hay-"house it is worth 80*l.* to me, and these build-"ings." "But I paid Mr. Ellis dearly for it," he said, "for your labour."

12,518. That made the price of the farm when it was sold so much higher?—Of course.

Sir John Llewelyn.

12,519. Who holds the farm now?—Mr. Williams, who formerly lived at Glanbeuno, and now lives at Aberglaslyn Hall.

12,520. What price did he pay?—I only know that it was sold by private treaty. I one morning was expecting a lease, and what I had was the housekeeper bringing a warning to me—a notice to quit.

Re-examined, 13,691.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Owen Evans called and examined.

Chairman.

12,521. You come here to rebut some evidence given by Mr. Newell as to the farm of Penarth Ucha?—Yes.

The following extract from Mr. Newell's evidence was read:—

Chairman—continued.

"Penarth Ucha, near Fourcrosses. This farm used to be looked upon as a high rented farm before Mr. Humphrey Jones, the late tenant, took it. The rent was then 100*l.*, and several tenants were unable to live in it at that rent.

See 11,860.

Chairman—continued.

When Mr. Humphrey Jones took it he commenced draining and improving it, and spent some hundreds of pounds in so doing. The next thing was a sale of the farm by the then owner, Mr. Price, of Rhiwlas; and it is the common opinion that he got some 1,500*l.* more than he otherwise would on account of Mr. H. Jones's improvements. The farm was bought by Mr. Owen Evans, of Broomhall, and the rent immediately raised to 173*l.* This was 20 years or so ago, and the increased rent has, I believe, been paid ever since. I need not say that the tenant got nothing for his improvements."

[The witness's statement in rebuttal was read as follows:—]

"With regard to Mr. Newell's evidence as to the increase of rent of Penarth Ucha, it never belonged to the Rhiwlas estate. It was purchased by public auction in 1873 for 6,700*l.* It contains 125a. 1r. 3p., and was let to Mr. Humphrey Jones, the tenant, for 150*l.* Before the sale Mr. Humphrey Jones (father of the present tenant) implored my father to buy it, and agreed to pay the present rent for it. The buildings were good, but he wanted some more, and said he would pay 5 per cent. on the outlay. About 200*l.* was spent on buildings, but he was never asked to pay on this, and he has had abatements the last few years, the same as tenants on other parts of the estate. This yields about 2¼ per cent. on the purchase money. Tenant got 100*l.* from vendors before sale for improvements.—(Signed) O. Ll. J. Evans, September 20th, 1893."

Chairman—continued.

12,522. Mr. Newell was wrong in saying that the farm belonged to Mr. Price, of Rhiwlas?—Yes.

12,523. As regards that, do you object to the statement of Mr. Newell that the farm was improved 1,500*l.* by the improvements of Mr. Humphrey Jones?—I know nothing about that; that was before it was bought; that was when the land belonged to the late owners.

12,524. Whom did the farm belong to?—It belonged to the Plas yn Rhiw estate, Mr. Williams.

12,525. And you say, "Tenant got 100*l.* from "vendors before sale for improvements"?—Yes; the agent informed me of that yesterday; he showed me the books.

12,526. Did he show you the receipt?—No, he did not show me the receipt.

12,527. He showed you the books?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

12,528. You say the rent is 150*l.*, and he says the rent is 175*l.*?—That is so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Edward Humphreys called and examined.

Chairman.

12,529. Do you speak English?—Yes.

12,530. You live at the Royal Victoria Hotel, Llanberis?—Yes.

12,531. And you are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

12,532. What farm do you hold?—I hold the Parcia Farm, Llanfairisgaer parish, under Lord Penrhyn, and the Cefntreseiont Farm, in Llanrug parish, under Mr. Assheton Smith. The Parcia Farm is 180 acres, and is without right of sheep walk. The Cefntreseiont Farm is about 130 acres, also without right of sheep walk. I also hold, under Mr. Assheton Smith, the Victoria Farm, about 80 acres, with right of sheep run.

12,533. You wish to give evidence about the farms you hold?—Yes, and the neighbourhood.

12,534. Are there any recent enclosures of waste land in your district?—I am not aware of any in our district.

12,535. Do you think there is any unenclosed land in your district which could be cultivated with profit?—Not any that I am aware of.

12,536. I understand you have a right of sheep walk in connexion with the Victoria Hotel Farm, called Cwm Ffynon, and that the number of sheep is limited?—Yes.

12,537. Do you pay a separate rent for the sheep walk?—Yes, I pay a separate rent.

12,538. You offer some remarks as to the effect of unlimited rights of sheep walk?—Yes. Where they are unlimited the effect is bad, because a strong tenant keeps more than he ought to do; consequently the weaker tenant's sheep, as well as his own, suffer from the ground being over-stocked.

12,539 Do you think the rents of farms with sheep walks are higher or lower than those of similar farms which have none?—As far as I know the rent of the farms are similar, as the tenant pays a separate rent for the sheep walk.

12,540. Do you know anything about the different ways in which matters are managed on large estates as compared with small estates?—Well, I have an opinion about that as being a practical farmer in the neighbourhood for many years.

12,541. What is it?—Large estates are undoubtedly best managed, and, as a rule, land is let lower on large estates than on small estates. In regard to small estates, I believe the same could be better managed if compact rather than scattered.

12,542. Do politics, or religion, or language, make any difference between you and your landlord?—Certainly not. I do believe that the agitators endeavour to use these subjects to try to create irritation between tenants and their landlords, and they succeed in some cases.

12,543. What is the usual time for entering on a farm?—November.

12,544. Are leases or agreements most common in your district?—Agreements.

12,545. If leases are not common, do you know of any, or many cases, in which tenants have asked for them and been refused?—No, I have never heard of any.

Chairman—continued.

12,546. Do you think tenants are as safe under agreements as under leases?—Certainly they are, and in my opinion better off. A better feeling exists between landlord and tenant, and the landlord is more ready to assist the tenant, under an agre ment; but in the case of a lease the tenant is invariably referred to the conditions of the lease.

12,547. Do you produce your agreement?—Yes.

12,548. That is Lord Penrhyn's agreement?—Yes.

12,549. We have had that put in. Then, do you object to any part of your agreement?—No. I believe it is very proper that agreements should contain the clauses which they have in, but I do not know of any instance in which they have been strictly enforced as against good tenants.

12,550. Can tenants obtain a copy of their agreement?—Certainly; they always have a copy given them.

12,551. Are the agreements exp'ained to tenants?—I do not believe a tenant wou'd sign an agreement before reading it or having it explained to him.

12,552. Is the rent fixed at a lump sum, or at so much per acre?—At so much per acre, I believe.

12,553. Is there any uniformity in the rents of land of similar quality on the same or neighbouring estates?—I believe there is.

12,554. Is the rent of small holders generally larger than that of large farmers in proportion?—I believe they are a trifle higher.

12,555. What is the usual rent of average lands of different qualities in your district—on upland and lowland farms?—I believe it varies from 12*s.* 6*d.* to 30*s.* an acre, according to quality.

12,556. Nothing higher than 30*s.* an acre?—I do not know as to agricultural value, but there is land let for accommodation land which fetches a great deal more. In agricultural districts about 30*s.* is the highest.

12,557. We have heard that no services other than the payment of rent are required by Lord Penrhyn. We have also been told that on his estate land is never let to the highest bidder?—I should like to make a remark on that. The land is never let to the highest bidder, always to the most suitable tenant. In my case, when I took Cefntreseiont, I know the agent refused a much higher offer than the price at which it was let to me.

12,558. Then about reductions and abatements. I think we have had that, so far as it affects Lord Penrhyn's estates, dealt with already, but we shall be glad to hear what you have to say?—Parcia Farm rent was permanently reduced about 18 years ago 10*s.* an acre. I have had from both landlords abatements of various amounts at different times during years of depression. For the last two years I received 25 per cent.

Chairman—continued.

12,559. Have you anything to say about local rates?—They have increased. They are always paid by the tenant—invariably.

12,560. Your farms, I believe, have been consolidated?—Yes.

12,561. Have you anything to say about that?—Not further than that they were consolidated. Parcia was consolidated from three farms, Parcia, Hirdir, and Pandy. Cefntreseiont was previously Cefntreseiont and Cefncraswr.

12,562. Which are the best farmers, large or small ones?—I believe consolidation has caused the land to produce more, being better farmed.

12,563. Which provide the better for their families?—The large farmers.

12,564. And which can stand out longest?—The large farmers. They invariably have more produce for the markets per acre than small farmers. I do not think that less labour is employed.

12,565. Then as to subletting?—I do not know of any farmers in my district that sublet. The agreements are against it.

12,566. Then as to payment of rent; is rent demanded immediately it is due, or is payment postponed when request is made?—On both Lord Penrhyn's and Mr. Assheton Smith's estates the rents due in May are collected in July, and November rents in January; but at a request made to Mr. Assheton Smith he has further postponed payment to August and February on account of the depression.

12,567. Do farmers borrow money to pay their rents?—I have years ago heard of money being advanced on corn or stock to meet the rent.

12,568. Are labourers scarce?—Scarce in quarry districts.

12,569. What about the cultivation of the land?—I believe on some small farms land is not sufficiently cultivated, for want of enterprise in small farmers.

12,570. Have you in your district any land that is capable of being reclaimed profitably?—I am not aware of any.

12,571. What is the practice as to arable land being laid down with grass?—I believe that the best farmers in the country adopt the three years' system; that is certainly the best mode of farming, and they cut up less in the three years now of late years owing to their going more into grazing; but they cut up as much now—the best farmers—as they require for green crop generally, and they work it on the three year system.

12,572. Have not crops increased, and, if so why?—They have increased because they are more profitable, and they improve the land so much. They have a better chance of cleaning the land with green crops.

12,573. There is no fallowing in your district?—No; fallowing has fallen into disuse because of the better facilities there are now to obtain manure.

12,574. What do you say under the heading "Improvements"?—Drainage and irrigation are done partly by the landlord and partly by the tenant; buildings for stock are built by the landlords, the tenants supplying cartage. The other things are done by the tenant.

12,575. How do you compensate the tenants for improvements?—According to the agreement. The agreement provides for that.

12,576. What do you think of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I am aware that there is that Act, but I never took much trouble about it. I prefer dealing directly with my landlord than through an Act of Parliament.

12,577. What provision is made about growing crops; there is a custom of the country I believe?—That is provided in the agreement.

12,578. What is the custom as to the sale of sheep; is the landlord bound to take all the sheep on the farm?—I do not know that he is, but in most cases, especially where there are sheep walks, the tenant prefers having them.

12,579. Is he bound to take them?—No, he is not bound to take them, but he will consider it a very hard thing if he does not get them, because the sheep are there on their own walk; it takes a very great many years to accustom sheep to a walk, and it will be very hard on the tenant if he does not get the sheep accustomed to the walk, especially those that are on the breeding stock.

12,580. Is there much complaint about the game in your district?—I have nothing to complain of about game.

12,581. About freeholders, there are only a few that you know of in your district?—I only know of a few.

12,582. Are they better off, or worse off, than the tenant farmers themselves?—I consider them as a rule worse off.

12,583. Have farmers without any sons been able to pay their way with hired labour?—Yes.

12,584. Some that you know of?—Yes.

12,585. And you know of farmers who have set up their sons in business?—Yes.

12,586. Are you in favour of a land court?—My opinion is that the establishment of a land court would be a calamity to the tenants. It would certainly do away with all the good feeling now existing between landlord and tenant. I may say further on that, if I may be permitted; the statement has been made here to-day, in my hearing, that landlords intimidate the tenants, and that that has been the cause of their keeping away; I do not believe there is a single landlord in our country that has intimated any such thing to any of his tenants, but I believe that the irritators do try to impress upon tenants that there is a feeling of that sort between them, and they succeed, and therefore keep the tenants back, where, if they were to go to the landlord, they would be received with every great encouragement to come forward and state their complaints. I believe that the irritators do more harm between landlord and tenant than there would be if they were left alone.

12,587. Do you think that for any reason at all there is a sort of fear among the tenants in regard to their landlords?—It is entirely from what I say, that they are ignorant, many of them, and they have been told or led to believe that the landlord is tyrannical to them when it is not the case, and therefore they keep aloof from the landlord in that respect.

Chairman—continued.

12,588. Then I take it from you that there is that feeling?—There is that feeling, but it is caused entirely by the irritators, and not by the landlords.

12,589. You say there is that feeling?—There is that feeling—no doubt about it.

12,590. But it is not caused by the landlords themselves?—It is not caused by the landlords, certainly not.

12,591. But that feeling undoubtedly exists?—Yes, and is caused by irritators—those that make advantage by going about to prejudice the people in that way.

12,592. What is the cause of the present low prices?—That arises from different causes, I believe—the uncertain state of the country, and foreign competition together, and other things; the country has been in a very unsettled state.

Lord Kenyon.

12,593. Do you think that the landlords of this neighbourhood have tried to meet bad times—to meet their tenants?—Yes, they have.

12,594. They have done their best to help them?—Yes. That is proved beyond doubt by the letters that have been sent to Mr. Assheton Smith.

12,595. We heard it stated to-day that it was not believed that the tenants could pay rents without borrowing money; do you think that is the case?—I could not answer that. I suppose there are some tenants that have always been deficient in capital, and they feel it more than those who had capital at their command.

12,596. Do you think that the rents now are based upon a fair average of prices?—That will depend a great deal upon what the times will be in the future. If the time is going to remain as bad as it is at present, very bad, certainly the rents must come down—must eventually come down.

12,597. But do you think the present abatements are sufficient for their necessities?—Well, in some cases they would be, and in others not.

12,598. What would you consider would be necessary?—I would not like to make a statement as to what it ought to be.

12,599. Do you think that your agreement gives you sufficient compensation for improvements?—I do.

12,600. You do?—Yes, I am quite satisfied with it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,601. You have used two words, one of which I often hear, and the other of which I do not think I have heard before, "agitator" and "irritator." Who are these agitators and irritators?—There a great many of them going about.

12,602. Well, give them a name. Are they people who differ from you in politics?—I do not know about that. I do not know anyone's politics as irritators. There is no doubt it is to a great extent in politics, but still I do not know that I am bound to give my opinion as regards anybody else's politics except my own.

See 13,02 15,04

12,603. No, but you say there are agitators going about the country; do you refer to gentlemen who hold public meetings either in the daytime in the open air, or in proper public buildings in the evening?—I do.

12,604. You would call a Member of Parliament, for instance, who goes and addresses a public meeting an agitator; is that what you mean?—No, I do not.

12,605. Then what agitators are you thinking of?—Take, for instance, the leading men in strikes in general. I am sorry to say—I will say it, as I have gone so far—that leaders and ministers and deacons of religion have taken advantage in irritating and causing irritation among the tenants. I am not ashamed to say it.

12,606. Are you a member of the Church of England?—Yes, I am.

12,607. Do you mean that people improperly go about from house to house endeavouring to spread false reports. Is that what you mean?—What do you mean by false reports?

12,608. False reports about the attitude of the landlord, or the attitude of the tenants, for the matter of that?—Oh, yes, I do thoroughly believe it. It is done frequently in private meetings. I do believe that.

12,609. Private meetings?—Yes.

12,610. But do you object to two or three people being gathered together and discussing questions that interest them?—Not at all.

12,611. Supposing I were to meet two or three friends in some house in Carnarvon, and we talked over political and other matters, would you call me an agitator?—It would depend on what you had been talking about, and how you conducted yourself there.

12,612. Exactly, and if I expressed opinions adverse to those you hold you would call me an agitator?—Oh, dear no. It would entirely depend on what you had been talking about and the effect upon those concerned in it.

12,613. If I talk eloquently I am an agitator?—No, certainly not. There are eloquent men who talk upon principle, and carry it out thoroughly, but agitators do not talk publicly and fluently. They go about in private meetings, and take private opportunities for it.

12,614. It is not what they say, but the effect they produce, that makes them agitators. Is that what you mean?—Quite so; yes, that is so.

12,615. Now give me an instance, please?—I will not give you a personal instance, but it is a feeling all over the country. You may take, for instance, if you like, from what I stated, that tenants have a bad feeling towards their landlords owing to that being impressed upon them by the agitators.

12,616. I do not understand the sentence?—I do.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

12,617. I do not understand your sentence?—What part do you not understand?

12,618. I cannot get from you what an agitator is?—An irritator, then.

12,619. What is an irritator?—One that irritates an individual, and agitates things that are contrary to common sense.

12,620. Quite so; everybody who gets the best of an argument irritates the other man, does he not?—Those who go about and agitate things that are contrary to common sense and contrary to facts. For instance, it has been stated here to-day that the landlords have intimidated tenants, or frightened them from coming forward to give evidence in this Court to-day. I do not believe there is a single landlord in our country that is guilty of such conduct, but the tenants are told otherwise, and led to believe that their landlords are tyrannical to them, and that they use them harshly, when they are in fact their real friends.

12,621. Has any landlord to your knowledge written to any of his tenants to say that he will promise not to give a notice to quit whatever evidence they give?—I am not aware of it. I would not be at all surprised at it though.

Lord Kenyon.

12,622. May I ask on that whether you saw a notice in the paper by Lord Penrhyn offering to pay counsel for the farmers of North Wales?—I did hear of that. I had forgotten it when the question was put to me. I do not know that I read it, but I did hear of it.

12,623. Do you mean that some men stir up strife for their own advantage; is that what you mean by agitators?—Certainly.

12,624. For their own advantage?—For their own advantage.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,625. For their own pecuniary advantage?—For their own pecuniary advantage, yes.

12,626. Now how do you mean that they get a pecuniary advantage?—They are paid as leaders backing them up in things such as strikes and other things in the same way. They are paid for it.

12,627. Your mind is going to something that has nothing to do with the state of things in this county; there is no strike against rents or against the masters?—I am sorry to say there are strikes in this country.

12,628. I said in this county?—Well, in the adjoining county, Merionethshire, and we have had it in this county as well, and I do not believe the men would have held out one-tenth of the time if they had been properly advised by the leaders.

12,629. I thought you were giving your evidence—I so understood from what you said—in reference to agricultural matters, not dealing with labour questions; I was dealing with purely agricultural matters?—It has the same effect upon the tenant farmers as it has upon the workmen. They come together, they combine together. Many of the workmen at the quarries are tenant farmers as well.

Mr. Griffiths.

12,630. You are a breeder of black cattle, are you not?—I have bred some black cattle, and I do so at present 12,631. You have won many prizes at the shows, I think?—Yes, a great many.

12,632. You have often been called to judge in agricultural shows?—I have been judge in agricultural shows, not in Carnarvonshire; I beg your pardon, yes, at Pwllheli local show.

12,633. Do you consider that the farmers of this district pay much attention to the breeding of cattle?—Not so much as they ought to.

12,634. In the way of having good stock, I mean?—No, I do not believe they do pay as much attention as they ought to do.

12,635. You think they would do better if they bred better cattle?—Yes, I do thoroughly believe it.

12,636. Do any of the landlords of this district produce some good sires in horses and cattle to improve the breed?—Yes. Mr. Assheton Smith and Lord Penrhyn have done so. Mr. Assheton Smith is doing so with cattle now, and Lord Penrhyn has been doing it years ago. He has done a great deal in breeding horses, especially the late Lord Penrhyn—the late Lord Penrhyn and the present one too.

12,637. You spoke about laying down land to pasture; do the landlords generally pay the tenant for the seed and labour on the land?—Do you mean when the change takes place, when they leave the farm?

12,638. Yes; when you lay out the land for permanent pasture do the landlords assist you in getting seed for that?—No, I have never had any assistance in that respect, and I have never asked for it.

12,639. They do in some districts?—I have never had it here, and never asked for it.

12,640. Will your land go to grass immediately, as soon as you lay it down?—Well, it is always better to take the first crop in hay—one crop—it may be grazed afterwards.

12,641. It requires manuring, does it not?—That depends on the treatment you give it in the green crop. With the three years' system, and properly dealt with under the green crop, it will not want manure for two or three years. It will not require it, but it depends entirely on how it has been dealt with under the green crop.

12,642. Do you keep a dairy farm?—Yes.

12,643. May I ask what is the price of butter in this district?—Oh, it has been very high this summer, higher than to my recollection ever known. It has varied from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.* and 2*s.* 2*d.* in the market here in July.

12,644. I am very glad to hear it?—It has been so, I believe, quite an outside price.

12,645. Do you think that dairy farming is taken up by the farmers generally in this district to a sufficient degree?—No, I do not think so, but I think the dairy system which is now introduced into the country will be very beneficial to the farmers eventually.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

12,646. The dairy classes, you mean?—Yes, the dairy classes will be very beneficial to the country—very much indeed.

12,647. Do you think butter has improved by it?—It has improved, but not so much as it ought to. It has not been properly taken up. I believe it will be the greatest blessing that could occur to Carnarvonshire.

12,648. Do the landlords afford sufficient accommodation for proper implements?—No the tenants provide the implements.

12,649. But, as a rule, the dairy is at the back of the house, and there is very little room?—Yes. I cannot say I know very much about other farms besides my own.

12,650. Do you use a cream separator?—No.

12,651. A butter worker?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

12,652. You say you think the land court would be a calamity. Will you kindly explain that a little further?—I said so, and I say so again, that it would be a cause of creating a coolness and ill-feeling between the landlord and tenant. The landlord naturally would not be so ready to assist the tenant as he is at present under the system of agreement.

12,653. Supposing the tenant applies to a land court to fix a fair rent, and his rental is reduced 30*l.* on a rental of 100*l.*, would that be a calamity to the tenant?—If the tenant applying for it went to his landlord properly, and showed that the rent ought to be reduced so much, I have no doubt that the landlord would meet him and reduce the rent accordingly on a proper valuation, or subject it to a proper valuation according to what was wanted. I do not believe that a land court would be able to do so much justice between landlord and tenant as what the landlord and tenant will be able to do themselves.

12,654. Do you think there are no cases where farmers have gone to their landlords to complain that the rents were too high, and have been refused a reduction?—No, I do not know cases to that effect. Unfortunately the tenants do not go to the landlords with these things. They talk about them in other meetings and it brings the irritation that I have been talking of before. I believe that landlords are at all times ready to receive any complaints and to meet the tenants most liberally. The landlords of our country are a credit to our nation.

12,655. Are you in a position to speak of the landlords generally in that sense, or are you referring chiefly to your own landlord?—I am in a position to speak upon our principal landlords all over the county and some of the adjoining counties too.

12,656. You put them all in that class?—Yes, I do, the principal landlords; but I do not put many of these petty small landlords that have bought land at exorbitant prices lately—I do not put them in it at all.

12,657. But you must admit that there has been a good deal of land in Wales passed into the hands of small owners?—Of course there has.

12,658. What do you say about those?—That is a calamity to the country. It was expressed a short time ago by a witness here when he was turned out by the Reverend Philip Ellis, as he says—I do not believe he was turned out—he says he wished his land had been the property of a large landlord instead of what it was; he would have been better off. That is proof of my statement. I say there is no doubt about it that it is the blessing of this country and one of the staple foundations of our country, the principal landlords, the large landlords, and the greatest calamity is their selling the land and its going into small tenancies—the creation of small landlords.

Mr. Seebohm.

12,659. Mr. Richard Jones, I think, did not quite follow out to the end what he was really aiming at. I think he wished to show whether something like a land court is not necessary to deal with the small and the bad landlords?—It might be good with bad landlords, but I maintain that our landlords are good ones, and that the effect of it would be more to create a bad feeling between the principal landlords and tenants than to benefit the small tenants.

12,660 Can you put forward any remedy. How would you suggest that the tenants of bad landlords are to be protected?—I could not undertake to make a suggestion.

12,661. But you would think that they ought not to be left unprotected, would you not?—The protection that a man has, if he thinks a farm is too dear for him or any agreements do not suit him, is to leave it alone—not take it; that is the remedy.

12,662. Do you think it better to leave him to fight his own battle and leave it to public opinion than to have the State interfere?—Certainly, I do.

Mr. Grove.

12,663. You seem to say, generally speaking, that the landlords are all good, and that there are no causes for complaint?—I find it so.

12,664. Do you really mean that there are no causes of complaint, but that the irritators or agitators try to make the tenants think there are causes of complaint?—Quite so.

12,665. Without any causes actually existing?—Well, it is beneficial to the agitators themselves, because they derive a benefit from it.

12,666. From the agitation?—Yes, from keeping a hold over their people.

12,667. Then we understand the summing up of that part of your evidence to be that there are no causes of complaint but that the agitators try to make the tenants think there are causes of complaint?—Quite so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

12,668. Do you think there is much land owned by a number of small landowners; is the number of men owning small quantities of land large in the aggregate?—There is a great deal, and a great deal more of late particularly, because some of our landlords have been selling portions of their estate, Sir Richard Bulkeley, for instance.

12,669. And they have been bought up in small quantities?—Yes.

12,670. So that the number of small landowners would be increasing?—The number would be increasing.

12,671. Do you not think there is a necessity for further protection of their interests?—Well, I do not think an Act of Parliament would benefit them at all.

12,672. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I cannot say that I have studied it much. I know there is such a thing in existence, but I cannot say that I have read it thoroughly.

12,673. Has it been published in Welsh?—I believe it has. I have never seen it.

12,674. You think the tenant farmers of the district do not make themselves acquainted with its provisions?—I do not suppose they would; I am only speaking from opinion, I have no proof; I do not think there is one in twenty of them knows anything about it.

12,675. You have already told us that you think it very desirable that a man should be an occupier from year to year rather than a leaseholder, if he is under a decent landlord?—Yes, I think he is better off.

12,676. Do you limit that to large landowners?—I do not follow.

12,677. Do you think the same would apply with regard to a small landowner—that the man would be better off?—Not perhaps with the small landowners you talk of.

12,678. Then if he had the opportunity he might protect himself by a lease?—That would be his own look out; if he could not get satisfaction my advice to him would be to leave it alone, not to take the farm at all. He has got his remedy at hand.

12,679. Do you think if a land court was established it would make any real difference between the landlords and their tenants?—I do thoroughly think so.

12,680. It might have the effect of their selling their land and its getting into the hands of small landowners?—No doubt it would.

12,681. You think it would?—I think it would thoroughly, and cause them to leave the country which would be a great calamity.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,682. Arising out of the answers you gave to Mr. Grove and the answers that you gave me before I should just like to ask one or two more questions. You told Mr. Grove that you thought the agitators—I am using your own term—carried on the agitation for their own advantage?—Yes, certainly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

12,683. Do you imagine that any persons pay them?—Oh, yes, there is a fund made up to pay them and they get payment out of it.

12,684. You are a licensed victualler and a considerable farmer?—Yes, I am.

12,685. Do you really mean to suggest that there is a secret society?—A secret society?

12,686. Yes?—Well, I mean to say that there are clubs such as unions—the same thing as unions, which contribute towards paying their leaders, what they call their leaders, and their agitators. I do not know whether I am right with the word; you seem to be doubtful about the word agitator or irritator; what I mean is one who goes and impresses a certain feeling amongst the people.

12,687. As I understood it in our half jocular conversation, you used the word "agitator" not to mean a man who at a public meeting advocates a particular policy?—Oh, dear no.

12,688. You do not mean that at all?—No, not at all.

12,689. But you mean that there are men who go about and hold private meetings with the view of impressing certain doctrines upon their fellow citizens?—Yes, certainly.

12,690. And that in this county?—Well, yes, it is in this county, but it is in the adjoining counties too, I believe—there are joint leaders I mean.

12,691. Do you mean that these are simply the officers of some of the recognised trades unions?—Yes.

12,692. That is all?—Yes, that is all.

12,693. You do not mean to suggest that the tenant farmers have any secret combination?—No, I do not believe that the tenant farmers themselves have it, and I do not think there would be any of the bad feeling existing between tenant and landlord if they were left alone, but they are not left alone.

12,694. I perfectly follow you; then you say they are not let alone, but certain men for their own pecuniary benefit (that is what you said) come and endeavour to disturb the relations?—Entirely so.

12,695. What class of men are these?—I would rather not express an opinion of the class, because I do not know anything about their circumstances, but I know some individuals that do do so 12,696. And you think they are paid?—Yes, certainly I do.

12,697. There is some association then, is there?—Yes, under the names of trades unions, and under the name of labourers' protection, they are all in the same class.

12,698. And the state of things, I gather from you, is so bad that men are obliged to carry on their political work secretly?—I did not say anything to lead to that supposition, in fact I do not thoroughly understand you on it either. I do not think I ever said anything leading to that.

12,699. You have given your evidence very fairly, at least it has been clearly given; and that is the inference left on my mind?—What is the inference, please?

12,700. The inference left on my mind is that the tenant farmers in communicating with political allies, if you like, are forced to hold their meetings secretly?—I did not say anything of the sort.

12,701. But I understood you to say that the gentlemen whom you call agitators—though for ought I know the other gentlemen would call you an agitator—come and hold private meetings, and they do it for their own pecuniary benefit?—Yes, I said so.

12,702. Then the inference is obvious, that in this particular district a great deal of political work is done secretly?—I do not think it is secretly done.

12,703. Well, privately?—Perhaps privately, no one attends their meetings but members of their community.

12,704. What kind of community are you speaking of?—Say for instance, quarry labourers. We have had a great proof of that latterly in our adjoining county in Festiniog. I believe if the men had not been led by wrong leaders they would have gone to their work much sooner, and would thereby have saved a great deal of distress and poverty.

12,705. That is the inference I should draw from your evidence. However, your answers are there?—Could you draw any different inference to what I state?

12,706. I cannot tell you what inference I draw, it is for you to explain?—I am sure you can understand what I said. I speak in plain English.

Chairman.

12,707. Question by Mr. W. J. Williams: "Why are so many estates split up lately?"—For perhaps more than one reason, my Lord. I have thoroughly impressed myself to a great extent that a great many of the gentry sell their land, seeing the state that the country is falling into—the great dissatisfaction—the great Radical uproar that is taking place in the country.

12,708. Mr. R. D. Williams asks: "Can you "give me an instance of any of these meetings "of agitators and irritators?"—Mr. Williams knows them too well himself; he need not ask any question of me.

12,709. Is that the only answer you can give?—I do not want to enter into any personal statement, but the statements I made are correct and bear investigation.

12,710. You would rather not say. Question by Mr. Vincent: "What abatement did you "receive on the occasion of Mr. Assheton "Smith's marriage?"—A half-year's rent 12,711. These questions are by Mr. J. T. Roberts: "Is it not a fact that whenever a farm "in this country becomes vacant there are a "great number of applicants for the tenancy?"—Certainly it is a fact.

Chairman—continued.

12,712. What would be the result of a tenant going to his landlord for a permanent reduction in his rent where such would be proper; could he not be met with the answer that the farm would be let to a number of other persons at the original rent, with the result that the rent would continue the same?—The question and the answer are there together, my Lord. The person who is asking the question is answering it himself.

12,713. Would that be the result, do you think, to a tenant who went to ask for his rent being reduced by a landlord. I think that is what is meant by the question, what would be the result; what would a landlord say to a tenant under those circumstances such as you describe, who said, "I want my rent reduced"?—Well, really I cannot say, because it depends upon who the landlord was, and what ground this man would have for asking an abatement of his rent. There are a great number of circumstances there which have to be taken into consideration.

Chairman—continued

12,714. That you could not answer?—No, I could not answer.

12,715. Would a land court meet this difficulty?—I do not think it would, my Lord.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Daniel Jones called and examined.

Chairman.

12,716. I think you are a farmer?—Yes, I occupy my own farm, my Lord.

12,717. You are a freeholder?—Yes.

12,718. Where do you live?—At Glanrafon, in the parish of Clynnog.

12,719. You have been farming for 20 years?—Yes, my Lord.

12,720. What do you wish to speak particularly upon?—I am here as one of four delegates to represent the parish. The farmers have elected a committee to investigate matters for the purpose of presenting evidence to your Lordship and the other gentlemen. This they have done, and the evidence has been apportioned, and the part entrusted to my care commences with the management of estates.

12,721. What can you tell us about that?—We are of opinion that the management of estates is too often entrusted to men of other nationality than our own, inasmuch as difference of language between agents and tenants is a source of great inconvenience. And we are further of opinion that in the choice of tenants preference is undoubtedly given to men of the same way of thinking as the landlord in regard to politics and religion. Agents, speaking generally, have had no special training, and this we undoubtedly consider a great injustice towards the tenants, and often resulting in considerable loss to the owners, for in the absence of special training it is absolutely impossible for an agent to arrive at right conclusions respecting proposals made by tenants in respect of rent, improvement, and other matters. Agreements almost invariably provide compensation for improvements on the exhausting principle of the Act of 1875. This we consider most unjust as it enables the landlord to confiscate his tenants' improvements after a certain time. The required consent to effect improvements is often given verbally, which tenants in their ignorance accept, thereby forfeiting their right to compensation. Instances, however, have come to our knowledge of landlords paying for improvements notwithstanding the fact that the tenants had no legal claim to compensation. We are of opinion that the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, is almost a dead letter, and does not work satisfactorily, owing (a) to the difficulty experienced in obtaining the required consent to effect improvements, (b) and the great formalities to be observed in connexion with the appointment of a reference—quite sufficient to dodge a tenant of ordinary intelligence for at least 12 months when the agent is so disposed. (c) Another great defect in the Act of 1883 is that it allows the landlord to provide by agreement compensation for improvements less advantageous to the tenants than that prescribed by the Act. Now, gentlemen, that finishes what I have to say on behalf of the committee. Then if you wish to hear me as to the causes of the depression I will refer to that.

Chairman—continued.

12,722. This is your own evidence, I take it?—Yes; I am of opinion that the agricultural depression is caused by, in the first place, foreign competition; in the second place the enhanced price of labour; and in the third place the continual burdening of the land to an unjustifiable extent for giving effect to what are known as reforms. I say unjustifiable, for farmers have to pay rates on the assessed value of their land—the raw material—out of which they make beef and mutton. This I maintain is an injustice which in no other industry in the land would be tolerated for a moment. The remedies I suggest are, in the first place, the thorough amending of the law of landlord and tenant, in order to pave the way to the formation of a strong agricultural party in this country.

12,723. May I ask whether by the thorough amendment of the law between landlord and tenant you mean a land court?—Yes; I would go to that extent, my Lord.

12,724. That is what you mean by that?—Fair rent; I believe a fair rent is precisely that which a tenant agrees to pay, but when there is a fall in prices that rent, however fair, becomes unfair. Therefore I maintain that there ought to be some process by which the State could step in and settle the difference.

12,725 In the event of the landlord and the tenant not agreeing?—Yes; certainly.

12,726. That there should be some place they should go to, and adjust the difference?—Mr.

Chairman—continued.

Humphreys in his evidence spoke as if it was compulsory for the tenant to come into court. The proposed Land Bill says nothing of the kind. Simply a court is there when they fail to agree between one and another.

12,727. And if the landlord is not satisfied he can take the tenant into court, and if the tenant is not satisfied he can take the landlord into court. Is that what you mean?—Quite so. Then Colonel West in his evidence objected to the formation of a land court, or rather to the formation or passing of the Land Bill, because it included free sale of improvements. I think if Colonel West reads that Bill there is nothing of the kind included in it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

12,728. You speak of the burdening of the land. Do you include in that the rates?—I do.

12,729. If the rates were divided between the landlord and tenant, that would have to be taken into consideration in the rent, I suppose?—Yes, but that would not do away with my objections at all.

12,730. Your objection probably goes further?—Yes.

12,731. Would you tell me what your objection is in detail?—The land is rated on the assessed yearly value, and I maintain that the land is the raw material out of which the tenant makes goods.

Mr. Seebohm.

12,732. Might I just clear up that point about the rates. You think it is unfair that the burden, say, of a school rate should be placed upon the land as it is now, because practically it falls as an income-tax upon the tenant, that is to say, supposing that his rent is equally to his income from his land, it falls upon the whole of his income?—Quite so.

Lord Kenyon.

12,734. Do you say the agents in this part of the world, or some of the agents, have not had special training?—I do.

12,735. Could you tell me to whom you refer?—I refer to a great many. They are almost without exception men who have failed in other walks of life.

12,736. Almost without exception?—Almost without exception. I know a good many in Carnarvonshire, Denbigh, and Anglesea, and I cannot call to mind at the present moment any more than three whom I know have had special training.

12,737. But what would you call special training?—Experience in paying rents.

12,738. As a farmer, you mean?—Yes, and particularly how to make rent out of the land.

12,739. Would you consider it a special training if they went to an agricultural college and went through a course of agricultural training?—No, I would not.

12,740. Well, that is the ordinarily recognised course, is it not?—I should myself be very pleased to see college authorities who speak so much about farming take up a farm and publish a satisfactory balance sheet that would convince the public that there would be something in their teaching.

12,741. You see the agent has a good many things to do besides dairy farming and so on?—Certainly.

12,742. He has to build houses, and he has to survey, and if he were merely a farmer who knew nothing about surveying houses, or building, it would not do?—They ought to employ a man who knows something about farming, so that when farmers complain that the rent is too high he should go there and investigate the matter.

12,743. Would you consider that the man should be a man who has been a farmer?—On large estates they ought to have one such man who knows what farming is out and out.

12,744. Do you mean who has farmed with his own hands, or who has lived on a farm?—Well, who has served his apprenticeship on a farm, I may say. I wish, gentlemen, that it should be clearly understood that I do not for a moment think that the establishment of a land court is a cure for agricultural depression. With wheat selling at 24*s.* or 25*s.* a quarter, and only a corresponding value of almost every other commodity, I say it is absolutely impossible to produce the produce at present prices with landlord's rent free in many instances, and that therefore it is something beyond rent.

Mr. BRYNMOR JONES here took the Chair.

Mr. HENRY JONES called and examined through an interpreter.

The interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

See 12,720.

"I, Henry Jones, of Llys Arthur, Clynnog (one of the committee of farmers), say: That I have been brought up on a farm, and that I wish and desire to speak upon the question of encumbered estates.

"Encumbered estates we find less advantageous to tenants, rents on the whole being higher, and abatements at times of depression being more meagre. This tends to convince the tenants that sooner or later they will be disturbed in their holdings by the property being sold, hence want of energy on the part of such tenants invariably becomes conspicuous.

"Cultivation.—We regret to say that fences, &c. are not properly attended to; and that land is going out of cultivation and insufficiently cultivated in order to obtain the best results."

Mr. Griffiths.

12,745. Are you a tenant farmer, Mr. Jones?—Yes.

12,746. Have you any remedy to suggest with regard to these encumbered estates?—No, except that their existence is of great disadvantage to farmers.

12,747. But you could not suggest anything by which they could be remedied?—It would make it easier to reduce the rents if the Government would lend so much money at a less rate of interest upon them.

12,748. Do you think it would be well if the Government bought up these small encumbered estates?—Yes, if they took care that they should be fairly rented in the end, after all.

Mr. Richard Jones.

12,749. You mentioned something about cultivation. You say that fences are not properly attended to and that land is going out of cultivation and is insufficiently cultivated in order to obtain the best results. Do you mean to say that there is less labour employed on the land now than formerly?—Yes.

12,750. What is the reason?—There are several reasons. One reason is the poverty of farmers, caused by high rents and low prices. Another reason is that farmers are reluctant to venture to spend money owing to insecurity of tenure.

12,751. Is there any other reason. Is the cost of labour higher?—Yes, higher than it ever has been.

12,752. Do you consider the labour is as efficient now as it used to be?—Quite as efficient as formerly, but they do not work so hard.

12,753. Are the labourers as easily managed now as they were?—They are not difficult to manage now, but it has become the custom among farmers to take servants with less wages.

12,754. Are those servants they pay less wages for less skilled than a labourer who would get the highest pay?—Yes, they are, as a rule, unskilled, or else they have not proved their skill. An occasional farmer gets an advantage by having a good servant, without thinking of his having one—having a young man more skilled than the average—a better servant than he was expecting.

12,755. I suppose he sticks to one of that sort?—Yes, as long as he can, and then perhaps someone else sees that he is a good servant and is in a position to give him better wages.

Professor Rhŷs.

12,756. What is the parish in which your farm is?—Clynnog.

12,757. What sort of accommodation have you for farm servants?—They are very ordinary—nothing extra.

12,758. Where do the servant men sleep?—In a stable loft, as a rule, about a foot higher than the heads of the cattle.

12,759. Do you consider that arrangement satisfactory?—No, I do not think it is at all good.

12,760. Are you able to keep any control over your servants in the evenings in that way?—No, they are entirely at their own will.

12,761. Do you consider that leads to deplorable results at all in your neighbourhood?—Yes, often.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,762. Is there any difficulty in your district in getting labourers?—No.

12,763. You notice no change in recent years in the supply of labour?—The necessity is far less—it becomes far less.

12,764. But you do not find it more difficult in your district now to get labourers than it was formerly?—No.

12,765. Do many farmers' sons go as labourers?—Yes.

12,766. What are the usual wages now of a farm labourer who lives in the farmhouse, and is taken by the year?—From 18*l.* to 30*l.* with food.

12,767. Do you think in your district more of the labourers are hired by the year and live in the farmhouses than there are labourers who are hired by the week and who live away in their own cottages?—Yes, more by far; but we generally hire for six months.

12,768. Then what I may call the labourers who are supplied with board and lodging by the farmer are more common than labourers who live in their own cottages?—Yes.

12,769. What is the general condition of the farmhouses in your district? Are they comfortable?—Very few; there are yonder a few comfortable houses recently built.

12,770. Is the sleeping accommodation usually adequate—without overcrowding?—In the old houses the sleeping accommodation is very inadequate.

12,771. Are there a great many of the old houses left?—Yes.

12,772. I do not think we have had this before in this district. What are the sanitary arrangements in the older farmhouses? Are there proper privies or waterclosets?—They are very uncommon about the country.

Mr. Griffiths.

12,773. Is it not true that there is plenty of work, only little money to do it?—Yes; work that would pay for doing too

12,774. Is there as much manure applied to the land as there used to be. Do you use lime at all ?—Less lime is used now, and more of the cheapest manure they can get.

12,775. What is your opinion as to the efficacy of lime, whether it is better to use lime than the artificial manure. Which do you consider best to apply to the land ?—Yes ; lime is far better than artificial manure.

12,776. Then you do not use it because it is too dear, and you do not get an adequate return ?—Yes ; there are people who would be very glad indeed to use lime if they could afford it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,777. Question by Mr. Owen Wynne : " Who is your landlord ? "—My brother-in-law, Mr. Arthur Williams, of Brynaeran. I have a lease on my farm, and I farm my farm well, too.

See 18,543–18,550.

12,778. Question by Mr. George Owen : " Is " it not a fact that the Hon. Frederick Wynn's " rents in the parish of Clynnog are considered " very low ? "—Such has been the idea or the feeling ; but by now it is likely that those rents are too high.

12,779. Question by Mr. George Owen : " Is " it not a fact that Mr. Wynn's farms are rated " up to the rent ? "—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

12,780. Do you know the rate collector in Clynnog ?—I am his son.

12,781. Would you kindly tell us in what position the farmers are ? Are they much in arrears ?—They are not so far behind now. They have had a twelvemonth to clear their old arrears. They fought against the assessment of the parish.

12,782. Then the collection of the rates remained in abeyance ?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,783. Question by Mr. Vincent : " Do you " claim then that the present prices ought to " regulate the rent, and not an average of " prices ? "—No ; we fear that these will be the general prices from henceforth.

12,784. Just one question upon that. Do you think that the farmers in this district find it difficult to pay their present rents ?—There are many yonder who do. There are many in our parish who have been going to their neighbours to try and borrow in order to pay rent.

Mr. Richard Jones.

12,785. Has there been anybody going to your father, as a rate collector, to borrow money ?—To pay the rate on their behalf was quite enough for my father.

Mr. William Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

The interpreter read the following statement of the witness :—

Evidence of William Jones :—

" I, William Jones, of Brynhafod, Clynnog, tenant farmer, say that I have been a farmer for the last 20 years. I desire to speak upon the general condition of the farming population.

" Several tenant farmers have, in recent years, purchased their holdings under the hammer, on being sold by their landlords, and apparently without the necessary capital, and at prices representing interest considerably greater than their former rents ; therefore such tenants are a good deal worse off than yearly tenants.

Tenant farmers and their wives and children, as a rule, are very attentive to duties.

" Wages are seldom paid to the children, and it often occurs that parents are unable to make any provision for their children when settling down in life ; and in several instances it would be quite impossible to pay present rents if wages were paid to the children.

" Fifty years ago the wages of an agricultural labourer in this district was about 14*l.* a year, whereas at present it is from 25*l.* to 30*l.* a year, with board and lodgings in both instances.

" Sleeping and evening accommodation for servants is unsatisfactory, while labourers' cottages are fairly comfortable, with plots of land for gardens, in the majority of cases.

" Farmers, and particularly large farmers, are the classes mostly affected by the depression in agriculture.

Professor Rhŷs.

12,786. Would you mind mentioning the remedies that you have in your mind ?—Well, I would mention some remedies : a reduction in the rents of about 30 per cent., and a reduction in the rates, and to abolish the tithe altogether.

12,787. How would you reduce the rates ? How do you propose that the rates should be reduced ?—I would abolish several of the unnecessary officials, or offices, and reduce the very high rates.

12,788. Well, perhaps that might be some reduction, but do you think that would be very considerable ?—If we had a reduction in the rent first of all, then we would be rated according to the rent.

12,789. There are two sources of objection mentioned. You probably contemplated going still further by the words you used ?—Perhaps but just now I do not remember.

12,790. You said also with regard to the tithes that you would abolish the tithes. Would you explain that a little bit ?—Yes, I will explain that. I would give it towards assisting the rates, or towards education.

12,791. Then I understand that you would not abolish it ?—No, sir.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

12,792. You would alter the application of the tithes. Is that what you mean?—Yes, 12,793. I understand that. What other suggestions have you to make?—Henry Jones, the former witness, has taken my sermon, almost all.

12,794. Can you not glean something further?—I should try and improve circumstances by endeavouring to put some check on foreign produce if it was possible.

12,795. You heard Mr. Humphreys' remarks about the land court. You agreed with Mr. Humphreys, I suppose, did you not, that it would be a bad thing to have?—I did not understand Mr. Humphreys. I was up there and he was down here. I am a little bit of a Welshman, and he is a little bit of an Englishman.

12,796. Have you got any views of your own on the subject of a land court; if so let us have them?—I should not like to do anything that would cause any harm between landlord and tenant, and perhaps a land court might do that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

12,797. You say you know several tenants who have bought their farms and are worse off than if they were tenant farmers. What prompted them to buy their farms?—One reason was that they were afraid of losing their old homes.

12,798. And they bought them in order to obtain security of tenure?—Yes, it is so.

12,799. Could you tell us about what time these farms were bought?—Some recently and some some time ago.

12,800. Do you think there were more bought from the year 1875 up to 1878 than at any other period?—It is very likely that it was so.

12,801. That is after a period of prosperous times when farmers were beginning to put by a little money?—Yes, but I do not recollect such good times as farmers having been able to put a lot of money by, or some money by.

12,802. Do you not consider the years between 1872 and 1876 good times?—Yes.

12,803. Then you are contradicting what you said before?—No, I do not.

12,804. You say you never remember a time when farmers were able to lay by money?—I do not recollect such good times that they were able to put a lot of money by, but I do remember times when farmers were obliged to go and borrow money in order to pay rent.

12,805. It is a question of degree. You say that one of the remedies is a reduction of 30 per cent. in the rent. If you are opposed to a land court how do you think a reduction of rent is to be obtained?—What would be easier?

12,806. Explain, please?—That the gentleman should reduce on his own property?

12,807. There is no law to compel him?—No, there is no law; I know that.

12,808. Well, how are you going to bring it about then?—I am not going to bring it about but I would beseech them, I would implore them to do that, for the reason that we as farmers are of as great a value to the gentlemen as the gentlemen are to us.

12,809. Then you have no means of reducing this rent except by throwing yourself on the mercy of the landlord?—No. Our opinion as farmers is that we must have reduction in the land, or else the landlords must take the land, because the farmers will have failed.

12,810. Do you think that the farmers could let their farms at rents higher than they get already?—Oh, yes, I know they could, because they have the right if they wish to let them at higher rents.

12,811. Then how do you expect them to reduce the rents below what they claim at present if they can obtain more for them?—Certainly. Some farmers take the farms at higher rents as tenants and then after two years they become bankrupt.

12,812. Do you know that the landlord has a preferential claim for rent?—Yes, I know that.

12,813. And, of course, you are secure against loss?—But I should not care to see the gentlemen suffer no loss, when other creditors are unable to get anything.

12,814. Well, you are going now into another issue?—No, I do not think it fair. I have given my evidence on my section; there are four of us, delegates from Clynnog Parish.

Professor Rhŷs.

I should like the question put again.

Mr. Richard Jones.

12,815. Of course you are secure against loss?—We rather regard that as unfair that the landlord does not suffer any loss while other creditors get nothing.

12,816. Since you have gone into that issue I will just ask you this question; are you in favour of the abolition of the law of distress?—No, I am not disposed to do away with the law of distress.

12,817. But are you in favour of it?—I think the other way is to be preferred, that the landlord should have the preference, but that he should not have the whole.

12,818. You would modify it, I suppose?—I would make several remedies in my own mind but I am not able to explain.

12,819. You say that you would like to put a check upon what comes in from foreign countries. Do you mean a duty on corn and on other things?—I do not know that I would care to charge a duty on corn, but I should like to charge something in order that we might have better prices for our stock or for our cattle.

12,820. Do you think it will help you or help your landlord?—Certainly it would help me if I could get a better price for my stock.

12,821. But it is possible for the landlord to raise his rent accordingly?—Then I would give up the land.

12,822. I will ask you another question. Do you think that the farmer could be protected at the expense of other interests?—I do not understand the question.

12,823. I will put it in this way. Do you think the State could put a duty on corn or on foreign produce at the expense of other interests such as manufacturers?—I do not know about that. I merely suggested that it would be a good thing to put some duty but not much.

12,824. What do you think of the effect of such a policy on the price of food?—The price of food would be raised to a certain extent it is certain.

12,825. And if it was raised what would be the consequence or the effect on the price of labour?—It would be nothing to us what we give to our labourers.

12,826. Do you employ any casual labour?—I have servants always.

12,827. Do you buy implements?—I have a little.

12,828. Who makes them?—They are made in Carnarvonshire for the most part.

12,829. Are those implements made by workmen?—Not by many labourers.

12,830. Are they made by workmen?—Yes.

12,831. How do those workmen live?—On their wages.

12,832. Do they have food?—Certainly.

12,833. What would be the consequence; would they have to have more wages in order to pay for more food?—Oh, yes, a little. I might have to pay a shilling or two more for a mowing machine.

12,834. And if the labourer or the workman would have more wages what would be the effect on the price of the article?—The price would be raised.

12,835. How would you benefit then as a farmer if you have to pay more for every article, in case you get a greater price for your produce?—I sell cows and pigs and sheep every year, and I only buy an implement every 15 years.

12,836. But do you understand that, as a producer, you produce only one class of articles, and that as a consumer you consume several classes of articles?—Certainly.

Mr. Griffiths.

12,837. You say that the farmers who have bought their farms find it difficult to pay the interest on the money that they have borrowed?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

12,838. Do they have any interest to pay besides on the purchase money of the farm?—They must pay for their livelihood, for food, and clothes, and their servants' wages.

12,839. The lawyers charge something for conveying?—The lawyers have occasionally made high charges on deeds for small pieces of land

12,840. Do these deeds cost more money than is expected?—Yes, much more sometimes.

12,841. Do you think that the Government should have some simpler means to convey land that is purchased?—Yes.

12,842. Supposing you had a dispute; supposing your landlord thinks your farm is cheap and you think it is very dear, how are you to settle that question?—By going to my landlord in a friendly way and asking him for a reduction.

12,843. Certainly, but supposing he will not commute it?—I would have to consider what I would do.

12,844. Would you not do what Mr. Humphreys said just now, leave your farm, not take it if it is too dear?—If everyone did that, where would we go?

12,845. That is the very question I was going to bring you to. I suppose landlords can get plenty of tenants, can they not?—If we all went away there would not be a single tenant.

12,846. I am asking you the present state of things?—Yes, plenty in this district.

12,847. But can tenants get plenty of farms if they give up their farms?—No, I do not think they could.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,848. Question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "In "fact you would rather trust your landlord "than any Act of Parliament?"—Well, we have some good landlords and some bad landlords.

12,849. Question by Mr. Vincent: "Does it "occur to you that to reduce the rateable value "in a whole union will not reduce the amount "to be paid? Ratepayers would have to pay "more in the pound—that is all?"—It is a dark question to me.

Mr. J. R. Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

12,849*a*. The following statement of the witness was read by the interpreter:—

"The evidence of J. R. Jones, Maesglas, Clynnog.

"I, J. R. Jones, of Maesglas, Clynnog, farmer, say that I have been brought up a farmer. I desire to speak first upon the question of landlord and tenant agreements. In the year 1884 William Parry, of Cefncyfanedd, near Port Madoc, who was an uncle of mine, died. He was co-tenant with one John Meredith, who was deaf and dumb. John Meredith's family and ancestors (W. Parry's wife was a sister of John Meredith) had lived at Cefncyfanedd for generations. This farm was a poor upland farm with very poor buildings. About the year 1870 the tenants built anew all the outbuildings, including hay-barn, the landlord agreeing to provide timber and slates. In 1871, after the buildings were completed, the rent was raised from 16*l.* to 20*l.* 10*s.* a year. I produce an agreement of the estate. All the agreements on the Harlech estate are similar. After the tenant died I sent to the landlord for a copy of the agreement between him and the deceased; the landlord's agent declined the copy. I produce the letter from the agent, Mr. W. R. Lawford. He had agreed to meet me but he did not. I wish to point out clause No. 2 in the agreement as being oppressive; also clause 4 (penalty of 20*l.*, the use of manure by landlord without compensation, and the whole clause in fact); also clauses 8, 10, and 11. After the death of Mr. Parry, John Meredith was to have the option of purchasing from the executors of W. Parry at a valuation all Parry's rights, including Parry's moiety in the tenancy. W. Parry, before his death, had taken for granted that John Meredith or the executors would have the tenancy. The landlord (Lord Harlech) declined to give Meredith the tenancy. The farm was then let to a gentleman (Mr. Greaves, of Wern) for game purposes, &c. Both John Meredith and the executors lost the tenancy and had no compensation for the building or improvements. Meredith went to lodgings and died shortly afterwards. I have another agreement which I desire to hand in privately for the Commissioners to read.

See 13,337–13,373.

I desire now to speak upon a tenancy between myself and Mr. Acland, M.P. I took from him personally about four acres of land some seven years ago, and have been ever since the tenant in part or in full, for which I paid 15*l.* per annum. About two years ago, as Mr. Acland intended selling, it was agreed that I was to give up the land on one month's notice if the place were sold. In June last I found that the Reverend Howell Roberts, of Clynnog, had gone behind my back to Mr. Acland and offered for the place more than I paid. Mr. Acland gave him the tenancy without giving me any notice. I produce complete correspondence on this matter. I bring this matter forward to show that tenants require security of tenure.

"I wish to point out that the improvements effected by the tenants are unsatisfactorily paid for.

"The rents are fixed by the landlord. In the parish of Clynnog the rents are uneven and unfair even under the same landlord. Small farms, as a rule, are more highly rented. Rents during the last 50 years have been raised but not generally, whereas in recent years a permanent reduction of rent has been effected in few instances. Abatements have been made in recent years varying from 10*l.* to 20*l.* per cent. The price of labour in the last 50 years has doubled. The prices of animals compared with 25 years ago have decreased 50*l.* per cent. The price of corn has fallen in the last 25 years about 35*l.* per cent. The fluctuations mentioned above have seriously affected the rents.

"Rates also have increased and the present bases are considered unsatisfactory. Farms are very much overrated as compared with house property.

"Suggested remedies.—Free trade or protection everywhere generally—either one or the other. Equality of rating. Security of tenure to farmers and also full compensation for improvements. Further rents fixed on sliding scale according to the market value of production.

"I desire to mention that I consider it injurious for anything to happen to cause the landlords to sell their lands unless money is provided by the Government to assist the tenant farmers to buy their holdings and that at 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent. interest. Another thing I should suggest, that if there is disestablishment that the tithes should go to relieve local rates, because I consider that the man who pays should have the benefit."

Re-examined, 13,360.

Adjourned to to-morrow morning at 10.30.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

The County Hall, Carnarvon, Carnarvonshire, Thursday, 21st September 1893.

Present:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (Chairman).

Lord Kenyon.
Sir John Talbot Dillwyn Llewelyn, Bart.
Mr. David Brynmor Jones, Q.C., M.P.
Professor Rhŷs, M.A., Ll.D.
Mr. John Morgan Griffiths
Mr. Edwin Grove.
Mr. Richard Jones.
Mr. Frederick Seebohm, Ll.D., F.S.A.

Mr. D. Lleufer Thomas, Secretary.

Mr. William Arthur Darbishire called and examined.

Chairman.

12,850. You are, I believe, a quarry owner, land owner, estate agent, and you also farm 900 acres of land in Carnarvonshire?—Yes, I hold them on a farming lease under Mr. Hughes of Kinmel. I am not practically farming them, understand. I took them on a farming lease. I improved the land in order to sublet it. I only farm a very small quantity myself now.

12,851. And you sublet the rest?—Yes.

12,852. You are a tenant of 900 acres of land under Mr. Hughes of Kinmel, and you sub-let most of it. That is what it is?—Yes, that is so.

12,853. Will you kindly tell us what you wish to say?—With regard to so-called common rights on mountain land—the rights of pasturage on mountain land are appendages to upland farms; and are necessary to the proper cultivation of such farms. The invasion of those rights by the community generally has rendered those mountain pastures of less value, and is an injury to the farming tenant. The pasture in summer is over-crowded, so that the herbage becomes permanently deteriorated, and the land carries less and less stock. The breed of sheep especially cannot be improved. Rents which were possible to pay with the mountain pastures are impossible without it. The proper way to make mountain lands more useful to the country is, not to give every one a right to use them, but in the interest of all to restrict the freedom of all, and to encourage enclosures, or some system similar to the plan of free selection in Australia. The sale of tenant right is a custom disadvantageous to both landlord and tenant. To the landlord in keeping him in the dark as to the real rent paid by his tenants, and because any generous treatment or relaxation of rent is discounted to the disadvantage of the incoming tenant. To the incoming tenant, as requiring an outlay of capital in purchase of the tenancy just when he ought to have ample means to stock his farm. My experience is that the system of landlord and tenant does not work well unless the landlord provides all outlay which is required and is really desirable, and the tenant is called upon for no expense beyond revenue expenses, such as repairs, tools, implements, &c. If a needy landlord cannot, or an unenterprising one will not, provide such reasonable outlay, some outside authority should in my opinion be empowered to assess the value of such improvement when made by another person, and the landlord should be caused to repay that outlay, either in a lump sum or by a reduction of rent for a term of years. I have made efforts by way of improving the dairy production of Wales. I find that the cow-houses are very defective, also the barns and food-houses are very poor, and wholesome dairies in the proper sense of the word do not exist. No serious improvement in butter and cheese making will be established till considerable sums have been laid out on Welsh farms. Further, I have known cases of great hardship where tenants improvements have been sold with land by representatives of deceased landlords, and the purchaser has raised the rent to nearly three times the previous rent.

Chairman—continued.

12,854. Do you say three times the previous rent?—Yes, I have known a case of that; the tenant receiving no part of the enhanced value which the vendor realised.

12,855. Can you give us any instances of what you say; would there be any objection to that?—I do not like to give the names; but I know one small farm not far from Groeslon. It was sold to a quarry agent. I know, as a fact, it was let at a low rent, and it was sold. The tenant had sat at a very moderate rent indeed. I think it was something like 18*l.* a year; and he had built a barn and a cowhouse, which stood there on the land, and this was taken by the purchaser, the quarry agent, who immediately raised the rent to 54*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* That is a case in point. I do not wish to mention the names.

12,856. You are prepared to pledge yourself, as an honourable man, that these are cases which you are prepared if necessary to produce evidence about?—Yes, that is one about which I could produce evidence if necessary. It was discovered by me in the process of appealing against the poor rate.

12,857. As regards the general statement, you are perfectly prepared to pledge yourself that it is absolutely true?—I will give you another example which happened to myself. I will not give the name of the vendor, but I bought a small property from him for 800*l.* It was in good order. There was a good building on it, or an old building considerably improved, and I paid 800*l.* for it. The vendor took the whole of that money, and when I came to enter upon it I found the tenant had really during the last four or five years repaired and renovated the house. I appealed to the vendor to repay him some of the purchase-money. He would not. I paid the tenant some money myself in consideration of his outlay.

12,858. You, as a new landlord, had to do so in fairness?—As a good neighbour, not as the landlord at all. That is a case I am certain of.

Mr. Grove.

12,859. There was no legal obligation upon you at all in any way?—No, certainly not. There ought to have been an obligation in that case. In that case I say I ought to have been able to cause the vendor to pay some of his advanced price to the tenant who had made the improvements. I also wish to give this evidence, that, being a trustee for the sale of land, I am not empowered in my own capacity as trustee to allow a tenant for improved outlay of that kind, which he may have made without consulting me beforehand. I could not do so.

Chairman.

12,860. Of course, if you did it as trustee, you would be liable to pay it out of your own pocket?—Yes. If there was a law authorising the course I have recommended I could do it as trustee without any question. Those three cases have happened within my own knowledge. I have made some such outlay on my own farm to some considerable extent, and am told that at the expiration of my lease or holding, the unexpired value of my buildings shall be paid me. I can give another example. The planting of trees is a great improvement in an exposed situation: I offered to my landlord to pay the farm rent of land, to plant trees in certain situations, on condition that at the end of my tenancy I should be repaid one half the valuation of the trees at that time. My offer was refused. I did, however, plant one or two shelter plantations. That is a case in which I think I should have been entitled to plant, and I should have been entitled to require my landlord to pay me back. I have experienced the difficulty of dealing fairly with land, owing to the expense and delay in getting rid of a dishonest or negligent tenant. I think it would be for the general good if it were possible to obtain redress cheaply and quickly in such cases. A tenant contracts to keep not more than 100 mountain sheep; and after a great deal of trouble I find that he has for sometime kept over 400. The subletting of land is an abuse almost universal in Wales, and cannot be prevented promptly and effectively under present modes of procedure. In many instances this system is a source of great disorder.

With regard to Annual Returns to the Agricultural Department.—It would be a great improvement if the annual returns were made compulsory, and wilfully incorrect returns were considered fraudulent. I know from my own experience that they are absolutely unreliable for those 900 acres that I sublet; they tell the most ridiculous falsehoods. The returns are not worth the paper they are put upon. With regard to rents, I say that rents have risen in the last 40 years in most estates, owing mainly to the increased facilities which the farmer now possesses of bringing his produce to market. The occupation of a farmer in Carnarvonshire is now much more a commercial one than formerly, or than in some other parts of the country; he must watch markets, buy or sell, or refrain from buying or selling, with an eye to the future. It would be impolitic and unjust to afford relief to tenants at will unless similar relief is afforded to leaseholders.

Lord Kenyon.

12,861. You think the sale of tenant right would be a disadvantageous custom?—I think it would be extremely so. I have found it so.

12,862. Who would benefit by such a sale?—The outgoing tenant does, if he can make a hard enough bargain. He uses the desire of the incoming tenant to acquire land under a good landlord and makes money by that. He makes money out of the excellence of the landlord's generosity and kindness, in fact.

12,863. You say the landlord should provide all outlay which is required. How would you propose to deal with this case—the case of a landlord who could not afford to do improvements and a tenant who could?—I think the tenant ought to be authorised to do that by an outside authority, who should say that the outlay is such as may fairly be considered an improvement to the estate—an outlay on capital account—and the tenant or any friend should be allowed to do it, and the value of that should be assessed. Then I think, the needy landlord should be required to reduce the rent immediately until that is repaid to the tenant. I do not think the tenant ought to wait until the end of his term.

12,864. Would you propose also in the case of a landlord who could not afford to do the improvements that he should be able to borrow money at a cheap rate of interest to do it?—He may get it wherever he likes.

12,865. I am aware of that under the Settled Lands Improvement Act, but it is fenced about with great difficulties. Do you think any improvement could be made in that Act?—I have not had any experience of that, but I have taken that position between my landlord and the tenants. I own a quarry in the neighbourhood, and I found there was great distress amongst the tenants, and they did not bring their produce to good markets, and they were in a poor way altogether, and they quarrelled about their sheep, and I took the whole of Mr. Hughes's land for the purpose of acting the part I thought he ought to have done, that is, making the outlay. I have certainly doubled the stock upon his land. It has been an amusement to me, although I have lost money upon it—there is no doubt about that. I have done exactly what I think the landlords ought to do, and what if the law were improved a tenant ought to be encouraged to do, by being certain of getting his money back or something at once.

12,866. May I ask if the land is sublet at a higher rental than you pay?—Practically no. I pay all the rates and taxes, do all improvements, which Mr. Hughes never did, and which landlords do sometimes. I am slightly out of pocket by it.

12,867. You act the part of a landlord almost?—Yes, I do.

12,868. As you think a landlord should act?—Yes, quite so. I sublet nearly the whole of the land, but it is with the landlord's consent. He knows perfectly well I am doing so.

12,869. Then you mentioned one or two instances. I want a few more details. In the case of your own you said you paid 800*l.*, and you had to repay money to the tenant for improvements?—No I did not, but I knew him, and I knew his wife, and I did give something to him, because I thought it was a very hard case.

12,870. Would you mind saying the acreage of that holding?—It is very small; about 13 or 14 acres. It is called the "New Inn" by Clynnog. It is the oldest house in the county I should think, and this tenant had taken it and repaired it and made it a little public-house.

12,871. You consider you paid full value for it?—I paid very high value indeed.

12,872. With regard to planting trees. Occasionally I have known cases where, when an offer has been made to plant trees for protection the tenant says, "that is the best part of my land"?—That may be.

12,873. Have you ever experienced that?—In such case I think an outside authority ought to decide between the two. But in my case it is a very exposed situation with very heavy winds indeed from the south-west. There is no doubt about sheltered plantations being very good where judiciously put in. The agent of the landlord approved my performances very much indeed, but he would not make any reasonable arrangement.

12,874. What do you mean by an outside authority. Do you suggest a Land Court?—Yes, I think so; a Land Court.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,875. Have any instances come under your notice, Mr. Darbishire, in which something has been paid for what may be called the goodwill of a tenancy?—Attempts have been made to do it where I have been the landlord, but I have always put a stop to that. I have taken over what is claimed for tenant right improvements.

12,876. Have you reason to believe that formerly such payment was common on the estates where the landlords were particularly kind to their tenants?—I think it is a common practice now.

Mr. Griffiths.

12,877. To what cause do you attribute the reduction of rates? You say the rates are reduced?—I did not say so. I said that rents were increased.

12,878. I thought you said rates had been reduced?—No, I did not say so, or anything of the kind. Rents have been increased in the last 40 years.

12,879. I understand you to say that rates were reduced as well?—No.

12,880. Who generally does the improvements on the farms around you; the landlord or the tenant?—I think on Mr. Assheton Smith's property, the other side, they are done by the landlord, and I think on another estate, belonging to Mr. Gwynne Hughes, they are done partly by the tenant and partly by the landlord; but I think under fair arrangements.

12,881. You know of instances where good farmers do a good deal themselves, I suppose?—I have not come across them myself because it has been always the other way, but I believe that is the case that farmers do make very considerable outlays without any security whatever. I do not know it of my own knowledge.

12,882. What is it that you consider the cause of the low prices, at present, for stock?—I think it is a combination of circumstances. I think the land in Australia and New Zealand, and the United States and Canada, is brought so much nearer by means of improved steam traffic; it competes with the land in this neighbourhood. That is the main cause.

12,883. What caused you to compensate the tenant of this land which you purchased?—Because my name is Arthur Darbishire and I am a good neighbour.

12,884. You think it is right that the tenants should be always compensated?—I think they should, or rather I think they should not be compensated, but that they should be repaid their outlay. I have said I think the principle should be that the landlord should be the capitalist partner and the sleeping partner, and the farmer should be the working partner.

12,885. What difficulty do you find in getting rid of a bad tenant?—One has to give him a year's notice, and there is always a great deal of soreness and difficulty about it. In fact, practically, it is very often an eighteen months' notice, and the tenant under such a notice is quite sure to be none the better, but rather the worse during that time. I think there ought to be an immediately direct appeal, and the tenants should be admonished or fined and made to pay compensation immediately—they do such great harm when they really try.

12,886. If I rightly understand, you consider that the tenants who have leases should have compensation in these bad times, as well as those who are yearly tenants?—I think exceptional difficulties ought to be considered in the case of a leaseholder as well as an annual tenant. Of course the terms of the lease ought to be considered in any case of relief of that kind.

Mr. Richard Jones.

12,887. What is your opinion of subletting in general. Would you recommend it?—I shold not recommend it. It is a great deal too dangerous a power to be put in the hands of anyone who wishes to make money out of the operation. I am quite sure, in a very large number of the farms in Carnarvonshire, the real rent paid is a very great deal more than ever comes near the landlord's pocket. I am quite sure of that.

12,888. What is your opinion about consolidation?—Larger farms.

12,889. Yes.—I do not quite follow you.

12,890. Do you recommend consolidation of farms in the interest of the tenants and the landlords, and the community in general?—I do in certain cases. I think that an upland farm, as I call it, cannot be worked as a small farm at all. I think there is a great deal of land in the valleys of Carnarvonshire and so on which might be let in 30 acre farms, and to better advantage than in larger farms.

12,891 You think that upland farms would not pay for cultivation. It would be more profitable to graze them?—I think it is more profitable to graze them, especially with mountain sheep. You cannot do any good at all with a small farm where mountain sheep have access to it.

Mr. Seebohm.

12,892. Do I understand you to say that the only way to prevent a good-will from arising which you object to, is for the landlord to be the partner who pays for and owns the improvements?—Yes, that is so.

12,893. But you think that in order to carry that out, in order to get rid of the difficulty of the consent of the landlord always being required, there should be what you call an outside authority?—Yes.

12,894. You say that you think a Land Court would be the ultimate result?—Yes, I suppose so. I do not know what a Land Court really is; but something of that kind.

12,895. Has it ever occurred to you whether it would be possible to have a public official who might be called in to hear both sides; to examine into a case and give advice to the parties, and act as a sort of mediator so as to keep litigation as far as possible away?—Is not that exactly a Land Court, except I should give him authority to preside and decide. I should make him a Land Court.

12,896. A Land Court involves to a certain extent litigation and a lot of formality?—Then I do not mean a Land Court, if that is so. Then call it a Court of Arbitration, or something of that kind. But if there are two different opinions they may be stated before some man who is to decide between the two, and that to my mind is a Court, is it not.

12,897. But a man hesitates before going to a public Court and making it an act of litigation. Might it not be of advantage to have an expert, who without deciding the question should give his advice, and act as a sort of mediator between the landlord and the tenant, so as to get rid of the difficulty without going to the Court?—Quite. It is always possible to avoid going to Court by friendly arbitration. Why should it not be?

12,898. Has it occurred to you that a public referee, or whatever you might call him, in each district would be a great advantage in that respect?—Yes, I think it would—a man with a judicial mind, who should listen to what was said.

Mr. Grove.

12,899. When you purchased the property you have alluded to for the sum of 800*l.*, and you gave certain compensation to the late tenant, may we take it that you previously requested the owner to remunerate that party?—I did. I requested the vendor to consider his case, and give him something out of the very large purchase money I had paid him.

12,900. And the facts were brought clearly to the mind of the vendor as to the money spent by that party?—Yes, so far as I could. I cannot answer for his mind at all. I do not think it was a very clear one.

12,901. I apprehend in bringing the matter under his notice, you would naturally give him the clear facts of the case?—So far as I knew them.

Mr. Grove—continued.

12,902. You say, Mr. Darbishire, you think "it would be for the general good if it were "possible to obtain redress cheaply and quickly "in such cases," that is, get rid of a dishonest, badly inclined tenant. In what way would you suggest that that might be obtained cheaply and quickly?—I think that this Land Court or outside authority ought to have sufficient technical knowledge to enable the landlord to show that the tenant was injuring him, and so inflict a fine upon the tenant. May I give you an example of what I am trying to do without a Court I sublet my land on condition that each small farmer shall keep only a certain number of sheep, so as not to overdo the whole quantity which my farm is entitled to put upon the mountain land. I have tried to get them to speak the truth about the numbers they have, and they will not do it, and now I make them sign an agreement that for every sheep over a certain number, which is their property, they shall pay me 1*l.* every year. Of course it is a ridiculous rent, but I do not see any other way of fining them for it. If they agree, then they will have to do it.

12,903. Then you say that "rents have "risen in the last 40 years in most estates, "owing mainly to the increased facilities which "the farmer now possesses of bringing his pro- "duce to market." Are those increased facilities railways as a rule?—Yes.

12,904. And have the land owners on the land generally contributed to the cost of those railways?—That I cannot say at all.

12,905. You could not say whether they had been large subscribers?—No, I daresay not.

12,906. And are the railways that you allude to dividend-paying railways?—In Carnarvonshire it is almost all London and North Western. That I believe is a dividend-paying railway.

12,907. So that even if the landlords did contribute to the making of the railway, they are probably getting a fair amount in the shape of interest for the money they have contributed?—I think so.

12,908. Have you put in a copy of the agreement which is generally used in the district, with which you are acquainted as between landlord and tenant?—I have not.

12,909. Can you put in a copy for our guidance?—I can send you a copy of the one I use.

12,910. Is it such as you think is a fair agreement between the two parties?—Oh, yes, or I should not put my name to it. I will send you a copy.

12,911. As to cottage accommodation, do you think there is sufficient cottage accommodation as a rule, or is it rather bare?—I do not think the cottages are very good, and some of them are very ancient upon my particular farm. And there is one of my difficulties: the landlord will not encourage me in any way to improve them. I have done a great deal which I shall absolutely lose.

12,912. Do you think if there were more cottages it would settle more labour upon the land permanently?—I do not think that. I live in a quarry district, where it is the quarries that require the labour. There are more labourers living on the land really, than could possibly be accommodated on the farms.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Professor Rhŷs.

12,913. You touched upon the question of railways just now. Have you at all given any consideration to the notion of what they call light railways to out of the way places?—As to their being advisable outlays?

12,914. Yes, or a good thing to have?—I do not think so. I do not think they are any value at all in Carnarvonshire.

12,915. You do not think for instance it would be any use having one down the peninsula towards Llanengan and Aberdaron?—I do not think so. I do not believe in light railways at all. I think there ought to be a good one, or none at all. The effect of a railway is to cut off all the ancient modes of travelling for a very considerable area around it, and I think in a district like Lleyn, where the population is rather sparse, it is much more important to keep up the ancient mode of travelling by means of horses and cars to a given centre than to try to run a railway in one direction, which would kill all the modes of communication which had hitherto been kept up.

12,916. With regard to a man of judicial mind to help in arbitrating matters between landlord and tenant, do you think that would work satisfactorily if the landlord and tenant had the choice of not accepting his arbitration?—No, they would have to accept his arbitration.

12,917. Then that would be a sort of Land Court?—Yes. Of course the Land Court would be the compulsory and last resort. There is nothing to prevent amicable arbitration before a recognised authority in the first instance. I do think there should be a compulsory adjudication as a last resort.

12,918. And both landlord and tenant, either of them, might initiate in the matter?—Oh, yes, I think so.

12,919, I mean you would not say it was only the tenant that could go to this Court, but the landlord might also go?—Not about this matter of outlay; but about other things I think they ought. About the misdemeanour of a tenant I think the landlord would probably initiate that, or any breach of covenant, and so on. It is extremely difficult to bring forward a breach of covenant for repairs now, except at great trouble, and great expense, and causing great soreness. But if there was a Land Court there would not be that difficulty, and it would be treated more as a commercial matter.

12,920. I ought to have first asked what functions you would assign to the Court?—I think redress of disputes between landlord and tenant on either side to put it as broadly as I can.

12,921. Anything else; we have heard a great deal about fixity of tenure, security, and so on?—I do not think anything of them. I do not see why a farmer should be wanting to be fixed in his tenure at all. When it does not pay him he ought to be free to go, and the same with the landlord. I do not believe in fixity of tenure.

19,222. If that were done, if he had fixity of tenure in that way, there would necessarily arise what is called a tenant right, would there not?—Yes, that is one great reason why I object to fixity of tenure, because I think the relation ought to be a commercial one. I do object to fixity of tenure.

12,923. That leads up to another thing I thought of asking you. With what estates do they have what is called goodwill now, so far as you know?—I cannot speak of my own knowledge; but I think it must be pretty clear to anyone that Mr. Wynn's farms are always sold for a consideration. I do not know it on my own authority, but I feel pretty sure it is so.

12,924. You think it is so, as a matter of general notoriety?—Yes.

12,925. Any other?—I cannot really say. I do not like to say anything not within my own knowledge; but I think in one or two instances money has been paid.

12,926. We have had reasons to think that this goodwill was really a way of trying to get compensation for improvements?—Very possibly; I have no doubt it is.

12,927. You say that ought to have come from the landlord, do you not?—I think some of it ought to have been recovered from the landlord; but it is done in the dark, so that it is impossible to define it. I think my mode of clearing the matter up would be to the great benefit of all parties concerned.

Chairman.

12,928. There are two or three questions I must trouble you with. First of all there is a question by Mr. George Owen, "Did you sell "this property to Mr. Acland, M.P."?—That is the property I am referring to, 800*l.* I gave 800*l.* for it, and sold it to Mr. Acland for 500*l.*, I think.

12,929. "If so at what price"?—I really cannot remember. I think about 500*l.*

12,930. "Has he sold it again"?—I believe he has.

12,931. "At a higher price"?—I daresay.

12,932. You do not know what price?—I do not know about that. It is not my business.

12,933. Then Mr. Owen Wynne puts in this question: "Do you know if the tenant, whose

"farm you bought, was under covenants to "repair"? I think that is the case you said you remembered?—Yes.

12,934. Do you know whether he was under covenant to repair. You do not know what his agreement was?—He was an annual tenant. He had an agreement. He was bound to put the place in order, no doubt; but he had spent a great deal more than he was bound to do.

12,935. His agreement was an improving agreement?—Yes.

12,936. He was under covenant to repair?—Yes.

12,937. Then Mr. Vincent puts in this question: "Have you ever come across, and can you "give us the result of any cases of sale of "tenant right in Ireland, I mean in parts not "affected by the Ulster custom"?—Well, I have never been in Ireland, or had anything to do with Irish land from a farming point of view.

12,938. You do not know anything about it?—No.

12,939. "May I take it that you think that "the main thing wanted to prevent injustice "is adequate compensation for all reasonable "improvements"—compensation from the landlord to the tenant?—But I put it the other way, that the outlay should be made by the landlord.

12,940. And not by the tenant?—And not by the tenant. I put it stronger than that.

12,941. "May I take it also that the majority "of hardships occur when sales take place." Is that your opinion?—That is a vague way of putting it. I think it is a very great hardship for a tenant who is a working partner to be obliged to find not only capital for his stock and his implements, but also to build a building on which the return is perhaps 4 per cent. If he is only an annual tenant it is difficult to say when he will get the return for it. If he has a lease for 21 years he has to make 10 per cent. over and above the next door farmer who has not made the outlay.

12,942. Mr. George Owen asks: "Would you "kindly give the name of the quarry agent "who bought the property just referred to in "your evidence and trebled the rent on the "strength of the tenant's improvements." I think you said you would not give it?—No, why should I? It is only a personal matter, but if it is absolutely necessary I will, although I do not see why I should.

Mr. THOMAS WILLIAMS called, examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

See 13,550–13,620.

12,943. You are a corn and coal merchant living at Port Dinorwic?—Yes, my Lord.

12,944. Do you give evidence in Welsh?—If you please, my Lord. The evidence has been translated, and it is correct.

The interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"Evidence of Thomas Williams, coal and corn merchant, Port Dinorwic.

"I wish to give evidence respecting two or three places in the parish of Llanddeiniolen. I will begin with Rhos wylfa or Parciau Rhos. About 70 years ago, or about that time this place was an open common. I believe that a gentleman of the name of Wright enclosed it. By what authority I know not. Before the place was enclosed those who lived in the neighbourhood used to turn their beasts into it without paying anything for it. Others would cut turf in the Common for fuel and other things and all gratis, free, for nothing. This is what I have heard from my parents and others of the parishioners who remember the place well before it was enclosed. My parents were the first farmers in the place and a part of the barn was separated off for them to live in. A good many years afterwards my parents built a house, a cross kitchen, a dairy, and a part of the old buildings, and I am not aware that they ever received anything in consideration of the expense, though the whole was done at their own expense.

"The rent was at first 36*l.* Soon afterwards the rent was raised to 44*l* 15*s.* without the landlord being obliged to spend anything on the place. After that it was bought by the estate of Vaynol. When the estate was valued the rent was raised to 49*l.* 10*s.*, owing to the labour and perseverance of my parents and the children who were obliged to work for their food and clothing until they reached the time for turning out in the world or getting married. I was bred and born on the spot, and I lived there till the end of the year 1887, when I was turned out without a halfpenny of compensation for all the improvements made on the place I sent a demand in for compensation for walls and drains amounting to 78*l.*, but I have not had it till this day and in all probability I shall not get anything as the agent has declined to answer my last letters to him. Also I was packed out of the estate office when I was there on business, and I can name or indicate the person who turned me out, and he told me very kindly that the landlord would not see me at all, though he was at the office at time. I was obliged to sell my stock when the price of stock was low, and I think that I lost about 150*l.* by that means compared with what I should have if I had been allowed to remain a year or two longer there. I have often been acting as beater in the shooting. I never received a penny of pay for that, but a little provision consisting of bread and cheese and a horn full or two of beer to each one who wished to have that. I was also asked to lend a team of horses to plough at the Vaynol without pay or thanks, which I considered a great wrong, as the owner had plenty of means to pay for it and also for beating.

"I was turned out of the place at the end of the year 1887 and they declined to give me a reason, though I asked the agent. The only thing he told me was that the landlord wanted the place. A new tenant went into the farm as I left, and in the course of four and a half years he was bankrupt, and he is to this day an undischarged bankrupt, although he had the farm for 15 months without paying rent for it and at the end of that time he was only asked to pay the rent for six months.

"The next place to come under notice is a farm called Tyn llan uchaf in the parish of Llanddeiniolen. It was a farm until within the last few years. By this time it had been divided into small holdings, and instead of 36*l.* rent as before that is now 72*l.* 4*s.* with 14 acres under wood.

"The next farm is Tyn llan isaf in the same parish, the rent of which was about 31*l.*, which is by this time divided between a number of farmers as well as small holdings, and the collective rents have reached the sum of 76*l.*, with some five acres under wood.

Chairman—continued.

"The next place is Fachwen in Dinorwic which consisted of one farm many years ago at a rent of 60*l.* The place has been divided into small holdings for the quarrymen to build and they have small holdings on lease of 30 years and it is said that they pay from 5*s.* up to 3*l.*, according to the size of the holding, but by this time it is supposed that the place pays about 400*l.* and the whole at the expense of the tenants. I know of other places where the rent has been doubled within the last three years, and that without the landlord having to spend a single penny, and I also know places that have been cultivated and enclosed out of comnon land by the tenants themselves, which is by this day 3*l.* 10*s.* an acre, which is undoubtedly an unreasonably high rent. Still the tenants stick to their homes until they have spent their last halfpenny rather than leave, which is characteristic of the Welsh. A great part of the estate of Vaynol is devastated by game, which causes a great deal of disagreement between the landlord and tenant. See 13,599 13,600.

"Frequently are the tenants summoned to come to the estate office to be accused of some alleged transgression, possibly in connexion with the game, and that perhaps the testimony of some keeper who wants to have promotion in his position.

"I am pretty certain that the farmer must have, and that soon the following things, or some other things to the same effect:—

"1st. Fixity of tenure.

"2nd. Arbitration or Land Court.

"3rd. Compensation for improvements.

"4th. The abolition of the Game Laws.

"I have plenty of facts in my possession that I could write or give evidence openly for a whole day."

Lord Kenyon.

12,945. You say you were turned out of your holding in 1887. Could you tell me what reason was given?—They refused to give a reason, only that the landlord wanted the place and wanted to get rid of me.

12,946. Had you a notice to quit before that?—Yes.

12,947. When?—Two years before I left the place.

12,948. And why was that notice to quit not carried out?—I had two or three reasons for refusing to go.

12,949. Why was the notice to quit given?—No reason was given.

12,950. Was it not on account of some trouble with regard to the game?—Perhaps that is what they took.

12,951. Did they they ever prosecute you for tresspassing in pursuit of game?—Yes.

12,952. Were you convicted?—Not for going after game.

12,953. You were not convicted for trespasses in pursuit of game?—I was convicted for taking a rabbit from a trap, and I felt that I had a perfect right to do that—I was not exceeding my limits.

Professor Rhŷs.

12,954. Is that the limits of your farm, or what?—Not going beyond the limits of my farm—the boundaries of my farm.

Lord Kenyon.

12,955. What was the date of the prosecution?—About 10 months after I had notice to leave, so far as I can recollect now.

12,956. You quitted your farm in 1887: is that so?—Yes.

12,957. And you had notice to quit in 1885?—Yes.

12,958. And the prosecution was 10 months after the 1885 notice to quit?—As near as I can remember now.

12,959. Was that the only dispute you had with regard to game, between you and Mr. Assheton-Smith's keepers?—That is the only time that anything was brought against me, that is, that I was taken to Court.

12,960. Then after that prosecution was another notice to quit served upon you?—A writ of ejectment was given me, for which I had to pay 11*l.* 15*s.* 0*d.* odd, and which I now hand in.

12,961. Did you leave on receiving this?—No.

12,962. Why not?—I made an agreement with the agent to remain there another year, in accordance with an application I made.

12,963. You made an application to stay on, and that was granted. Is that what I understand?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,964. Upon payment of costs, I suppose?—I had to pay the costs, at any rate.

Lord Kenyon.

12,965. Was this previous to the prosecution, or subsequent to it?—I do not understand the question.

12,966. Was this writ of ejectment served upon you before you were prosecuted?—I do not quite remember.

12,967. You cannot remember whether you were convicted of taking that rabbit out of the trap after or before this writ of ejectment was served upon you?—I cannot remember for certain, but I have the dates.

12,968. It is rather an important point, I think?—I would rather not say anything upon guess.

12,969. Was the farm offered to any members of your family?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

12,970. Why did they not accept it?—They had no capital, and it is likely that the agent knew that. If he did not, I told him so.

12,971. Did you ever apply for any compensation for damage done by game on your farm?—Yes.

12,972. Did you ever receive any?—Yes.

12,973. Did you receive what you demanded?—No, I do not think so.

12,974. Was it submitted to arbitration?—Once.

12,975. You received compensation more than once, then?—Oh yes, several times.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,976. Arising out of Lord Kenyon's questions: I see that this writ is dated November 17th, 1886. Had you been served with a notice to quit before that?—Yes.

12,977. And the year had expired, had it?—Yes.

12,978. I suppose on the 29th September 1886?—No, November 13th.

12,979. Then was it after this writ had been served upon you, that it was arranged you were to stay for another year?—What is the date of this writ?

12,980. November 1886?—I do not remember; I am not quite certain, whether it was before receiving that writ. I think it was after receiving that writ.

12,981. According to what you have told us, on the 13th November 1886, your tenancy terminated by the expiration of the time of notice?—Yes.

12,982. Then you got served with a writ?—Yes.

12,983. You have said in your evidence in chief that you did not leave the farm until 1887?—Yes.

12,984. What time in 1887 did you leave the farm?—At the end of the year, when the incoming tenant came.

12,985. Then it must have been arranged subsequently to the service of this writ upon you, that you should remain on for another year?—An agreement was drawn up, or, at any rate, something in the nature of an agreement that I should remain there for another year. The reason why I asked that I should be allowed to remain longer was, because my sister lived with me, and I had no place to go to, and it was according to her wish that I made an application to remain there longer.

12,986. I think we have got the dates near enough now. What was the date of this bother about the rabbit: was it before or after this writ was served upon you?—That is what I cannot remember.

12,987. How long was it do you think before you went out? Was it one, or two, or three years?—The trouble about the rabbit was about ten months after I had had notice to quit, so far as I can remember.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

12,988. Then that must have been before the issue of this writ?—So far as I can remember now.

12,989. You took the rabbit on your own farm, as I understand it?—Yes.

12,990. What was the information against you for. What was said in the summons that you got at the police court?—I was charged with having placed a trap on the line, and that I had taken the rabbit out of it. As soon as I had taken the rabbit out of the trap, two keepers jumped over the wall and took hold of me. The gamekeeper confessed that it was a new trap, and that it was his trap.

12,991. Do you remember whether the summons was under the Ground Game Act of 1880, section 6?—I do not remember.

12,992. That section says that no person shall, for the purpose of killing ground-game, employ spring traps except in rabbit holes?—I never used it.

12,993. Do you mean you never used the Act—never read the Act?—The trap.

12,994. Were you represented by a solicitor at the petty sessions?—Yes; Mr. J. T. Roberts.

12,995. It seems to have been, so far as I can make out, a summons under that section. Did you ever take advantage of the Ground Game Act. Did you use a gun?—No, never; only ferreted rabbits. I left the hares for the landlord.

Lord Kenyon.

12,996. Were not all the tenants on the Vaynol estate allowed to ferret rabbits before the Ground Game Act of 1880?—I do not know before what year.

12,997. Do you remember when you could not ferret rabbits?—I think I do.

12,998. When?—I cannot remember when. I know that I had permission to catch all the rabbits on the place.

12,999. Is this your handwriting. Did you sign that?—Yes, I signed this.

Chairman.

13,000. This document is put in by Mr. Vincent, accompanied with the question, "Did "you sign this document?"—Yes."

The interpreter read the following letter:—

"Parkia Rhos,
December 15th, 1886.

Sir,

We are very sorry for all the trouble and annoyance we have given you, and for the way in which we have behaved in this matter, and we beg to make a humble apology for what has taken place. We are most anxious not to be compelled to leave Parkin Rhos now, as we could not do so without sacrifice and loss in the sale of our cattle.

You have got judgment against us, but we humbly beg you will put nothing in force against us before the 12th November 1887, on which day we shall be quite ready to leave without any complaint whatever or any inconvenience to you, and pay the rent then due. If you kindly grant us this request, we promise to conduct ourselves to your entire satisfaction, and to do nothing to annoy you in any way. We undertake to adhere to the terms of our former lease of 15th March 1869, and to keep and leave the farm-buildings in good order and tenantable repair.

(Signed) THOMAS WILLIAMS.
MARGARET WILLIAMS.
ELIZABETH WILLIAMS.

To G. W. Assheton Smith, Esq."

Chairman.

13,001. Mr. Vincent asks these questions: "After signing this agreement were you not "convicted of some offence against the Game "Laws?"—Once only was I convicted.

Lord Kenyon.

13,002. Was that prior or subsequent to your signing this?—I cannot remember; I have said that before.

Chairman.

13,003. Were you not still permitted to finish your year?—According to the agreement I had permission to remain till the end of the year, November 1887.

13,004. Would it have been a very serious loss to you if you had been turned out at once?—That is what I thought at the time. The prices of cattle were low, and I expected things to mend and that the prices would rise.

Lord Kenyon.

13,005. You say the prices were equally low in November 1887?—Yes.

Chairman.

13,006. Then it would lead to a serious loss to you?—We thought that we had lost about 150*l.*

Mr. RICHARD OWEN called and examined through an interpreter.

The following statement of the witness was read by the interpreter:—

"Mr. Richard Owen, printer, Llanberis.

"The common custom on the estate of Mr. Assheton Smith is to let small holdings and farms annually, the season ending in November.

"No leases are given on this estate. I do not know if they are asked for because it is understood that there is no chance of having them.

"The small farmers, with certain exceptions, are all in straitened circumstances, unable to pay their way, and when the rent day comes the shop-keepers of the place are obliged to suffer that month without receiving but a very small proportion of the money due to them.

No alteration is made in the rent when a quarry is opened on a farm. I have an instance of this to give, if necessary.

"Rents are fixed in all kinds of ways, as, for instance, as a lump sum, and also, in other instances, by the acre.

"There is no uniformity of rent for lands of the same nature on the same estate, nor any correspondence of rents between different estates.

"The rents of small farms are, in proportion, higher than the rents of large farms.

"When a farm becomes vacant, the rent may be fixed in more ways than one. If more than one candidate applies for the farm, generally the highest bid is accepted, if the candidate is acceptable, and the bargain is made privately

"For this reason fair rents are not fixed upon. I have an instance to give, if necessary.

"Arbitration is not resorted to for fixing or altering the rent.

"The rents have been raised generally in the course of the last 50 years, and, in certain instances they have been raised very greatly.

"Less than 50 years ago land used to be let containing pasture ground and a little meadow-land, for the sum of 3*l.* annually. There was on the land a house in which the tenants lived. The little meadow-land was of a poor description at the time, but it was improved by the tenant. A quarry was opened on the land which took away part of it, but no reduction of rent was obtained, but, in time, the rent was increased. The meadow-land was let on lease for the purposes of a quarry to be opened, when it passed to the Quarry Company, and they let what they did not want for the immediate purposes of the quarrying. The land belonged to the Trustees of the Poor of Ruthin, together with certain strips of land. The tenant took from the quarry-people additional land, and he used to pay 5*l.* a year for the whole. Then by degrees the rent was increased until it was 10*l.* Not a penny was ever received towards cultivating the land. Besides that, the pasture-land remained by itself, that is to say, not having been let to the Quarry Company, and 13*l.* 15*s.* 0*d.* used to be paid annually for it by the tenant, so the rent was increased from 3*l.* to 13*l.* 15*s.* 0*d.*, excepting that about two acres had been added to it, against which, one has to set off the fact that some of the ground had been occupied by the quarry that was opened on it. I have another instance, if necessary.

"In recent years, a reduction was made in the rents of tenants of a certain standing, namely, those who paid the rates and taxes themselves not upon a reduction but an abatement. Notice is given by the landlord of the intention to do so.

"When a change is made in the rents, that is generally done when a tenant dies or gives up his holding. There is hardly an exception that the rent is not increased for the new tenant.

"It may be said that nearly all the present holdings have been cultivated within the last 50 years.

"A great deal of stoney land and marshes could be brought under cultivation and to produce food for stock.

"No compensation is given for any improvement made on the land, but partial compensation is given for buildings, unless the tenant has been in possession of the land for 30 years after the building has been carried out, when it is considered that he has had the full benefit of the improvement.

"Nearly all the work on the small holdings is done by the husband, wife, and children, and the children never receive any wages for their work. It would be impossible for the present rents to be paid in most instances if wages had to be paid for the labour done.

"There is a great complaint amongst a great number of the farmers that there is a lack of proper roads to their homes, so that all necessaries of life become dear and difficult to procure.

"Some of the roads are unfit even as foot-paths and horse-paths, and it is out of the question to bring a cart along them; and the way in which the rents are raised when improvements are made on the land causes stoney ground and marshes to be left wholly uncultivated.

"But little common land is left unappropriated by the owners of surrounding estates. There is one instance not far from me where a notice was set up that the land was to be let, but that notice was only allowed to remain for a very short time, as it was pulled down by somebody from the neighbourhood. It is also said that a notice had been set up by the owner of another estate previously as to the same ground.

"I should suggest, in order to increase the return from land, that adequately long leases should be given, or that there should be full compensation for cultivating the land; that reasonable rents be fixed upon; and, in this neighbourhood, that the farms be made of proper size, so that all the land may be cultivated rather than that scores of acres should be left to be waste land and marshes."

Lord Kenyon.

13,007. What do you call a reasonable-sized farm?—A place to keep two or three cows, so that workmen can cultivate.

13,008. Would you cut up all the farms into that size?—I only speak of my neighbourhood.

13,009. With regard to the Charity for the poor of Ruthin, was the quarry opened on the charity land, and did the Charity get any benefit from the quarry?—Yes, the quarry was on the land belonging to the poor of Ruthin, but they derived no benefit from it.

13,010. The rent from the quarry did not go towards that Charity?—I have stated in my evidence that they let it on lease, or that they gave a lease.

13,011. What I want to know is, who get the benefit of the quarry?—I do not know the name of the Company.

Professor Rhŷs.

13,012. Are most of the tenants in the district of which you speak monoglot Welshmen?—Almost all.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

13,013. And are they chiefly Nonconformists? Some are Nonconformists and some are Churchmen.

13,014. In what proportions?—It is possible that there are more Nonconformists.

Mr. Griffiths.

13,015. Can you give any instance where farms have been let to the highest bidder?—I cannot give the details, but I can give an instance of such a thing.

13,016. Perhaps you will do so?—I will, without mentioning the place. 50 years ago, a family went to live on a part of Mr. Assheton Smith's land. They paid 2*l.* a year for it; they built a house at their own expense on it, and they lived there in the place for 40 to 50 years. The tenant died, and the widow determined to give the place up. I ought to have said this too, that the rent had been raised at the end of of 30 years to 4*l.* When the widow gave the farm up, it was open to be let, and it was let for 13*l.*

13,017. Before it was let for 13*l.*, was there any money expended by the landlord?—I do not know of a single halfpenny beyond that the tenant had put up a hayhouse three or perhaps four years before his death, and a portion of that was had.

13,018. And that was all?—And that was all.

Mr. Richard Jones,

13,019. You say in your evidence that the small farmers are in straitened circumstances; do you mean to say that the small farmers are worse off than the large farmers?—There are no large farmers, unless there may be one or two. I should say that the circumstances of the smaller farmers are worse than those of the larger farmers; but there are no large farmers, you might say, in my part.

13,020. But do you regard as worse off those farmers in places which are not sufficiently large to occupy the whole time of the farmer, where he is obliged to go out as a labourer, or the farmers in those places which are sufficiently large to give them employment all the year round?—I do not know of an instance where they work the whole time on the farm.

13,021. You say there is no uniformity of rent for lands of the same nature on the same estate, nor any correspondence of rents between different estates. Are we to understand that rent on the same estate is fixed in a hap-hazard sort of fashion. Is there no recognised principle?—I say what I have said on this question, and have given an instance of the rent having been raised from 3*l.* to 13*l.*, and other places of the same size have been let at much less.

13,022. Do you know of any valuations which have been made on these estates which you have been speaking of?—I do not know.

Mr. Grove.

13,023. When that quarry was opened, which you have alluded to, what quantity of land was taken?—A portion of land was taken right through the middle of the field, from 10 to 12 yards broad.

13,024. That was the breadth of it; what was the length of the field?—Indeed I cannot say; I did not measure it, beyond that they had made a road from the quarry along another piece of the land.

13,025. Was any tramroad made?—It was a tramroad.

13,026. Was the tramroad fenced?—No.

13,027. Do you think many grievances exist between landlords and tenants in your experience?—There is great complaint that they are unable to live on their holdings.

13,028. Did you hear the evidence of Mr. Edward Humphreys yesterday?—Yes. See 12,601–12,621.

13,029. Generally speaking, do you agree with it?—With regard to what particular?

13,030. Why the point specially brought out that there were no grievances existing; but that "agitators" and "irritators" were trying to create those grievances?—All that I can say with regard to that part of the evidence is, that there is not a syllable of truth in it. I have been present in every political meeting for the last 15 or 20 years among the Liberals, and no word was ever mentioned to create mischief between landlord and tenant.

13,031. Are you in favour of a Land Court?—I think that we must have something of that sort.

13,032. Would it, in your opinion, be desirable that the landlord and tenant should try first of all to settle terms between each other, and then go to a Land Court, if necessary, as a Court of Arbitration?—There is no doubt that it would be more peaceful—more quiet.

Professor Rhŷs.

13,033. We were told yesterday by Mr. Humphreys that there were a class of people, whom he called "agitators" and "irritators," who held private meetings and created mischief between landlords and their tenants, at least I understood it to be so?—There is no syllable of truth in it.

13,034. Do you know of any people of that sort who are paid to hold private meetings to create this kind of mischief?—Nothing of the sort.

13,035. He must have been alluding to something. What class of people did he refer to?—Well, to take into consideration his general character with regard to these matters, it originated in his own mind entirely. I can certify it—that there is neither a fund nor club to pay anyone for what he says.

13,036. But do you know whether there are emissaries from somewhere else paid by some society away from your neighbourhood to come there and hold these private meetings?—No, indeed I do not know.

13,037. And would you be likely to know if that sort of thing went on?—Yes.

13,038. You usually attend all kinds of political meetings, and meetings connected with the social state of the people about you; is that so?—Yes.

13,039. We have heard sometimes about intimidation of witnesses, or supposed intimidation of farmers by landlords; we have also heard of intimidation of the farmers by the ministers and deacons of their own chapels. Do you know anything of that; is there any truth in that?—No, indeed I do not. I did not know that they had the power to do so either.

13,040, May I ask you if you are a Nonconformist?—Yes.

13,041. You know how things are managed at your chapel—in your society, I have no doubt, do you?—Yes.

13,042. Would you say that the ministers were driven by the congregation, or the congregation by the ministers, which is the more likely?—I am afraid that the congregation governs the ministers.

13,043. You know, as a matter of fact, outsiders generally suppose that the Welsh people are driven by the ministers; is that true?—No.

13,044. Is it not the fact that if the ministers will not lead or appear to lead, they are left behind?—Left behind in what sense?

13,045. That the congregations—the people—will go on past them; they will leave them behind, and not take them into consideration?—Yes.

13,046. That is so, is it not?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

13,047. Do you occupy any land?—No.

13,048. Did you ever?—No.

13,049. Does the land near the quarries command a higher price?—I speak of that land.

13,050. Does it command a higher price because it is near the quarry?—It is very possible that it is so.

13,051. Some of it would be accommodation land?—Yes. They work in the quarry—almost all.

13,052. I understand you to advocate more subdivision of the farms?—Not generally, but in my district.

13,053. That is what I understood. Would that entail more buildings?—Yes.

13,054. Who would provide the money for those buildings?—I should say that the tenants would do their part. The rule is, that the tenant should do so, but he gets some things towards the building. I do not know whether he gets lime or timber or something of that kind. Then the place is valued for 30 years, that is, he is allowed to live there for that time.

13,055. Do you mean to say that there is 30 years of compensation?—No.

13,056. What was it you said before?—I do not know.

13,057. I will ask the question again. Who was to provide the money for more buildings?—The tenant who takes the place.

13,058. Without a lease?—Without a lease, but an understanding that he is allowed to live there for 30 years, and if he leaves before the end of the 30 years, he will get a portion according to so much a year until the 30 years are up, and then he gets nothing.

13,059. I take it that your opinion is, that that is insufficient?—Yes.

13,060. Can you get better terms under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I do not know.

13,061. Do you get that in writing?—What?

13,062. The understanding?—As far as I know, yes. I do not know for certain.

13,063. Supposing there was a compulsory clause in the Small Holdings Act, would that meet your difficulty?—A compulsory clause for what?

13,064. A compulsory clause in the Small Holdings Act for obtaining land by the County Councils for small holdings?—I think it would be a great reform.

13,065. Now I will go to the question of common land. Who appropriated the common land you spoke of?—I do not know personally, only from what I have heard. The last information was by Mr. Assheton Smith—I mean that notice.

13,066. When?—It is very often now.

13,067. Are you speaking accurately in calling it common land, or is it private land?—The people in the neighbourhood say it is a common and they take the notice down.

13,068. Is there a dispute as to ownership then?—I cannot say, beyond that I have heard also that the notice was put up by the Llwynbrain estate.

13,069. I understand you to say, then, that there is a question as to ownership?—That is the conclusion I come to.

Chairman.

13,070. There are some questions I have to put to you. First of all those by Mr. Vincent: "Has not the district about which you give "evidence been opened up by railways within "the last 50 years"?—A railway has been made.

13,071. "With regard to reclaimable land, do "you say that there is much land which might "be reclaimed at a profit, that is to say, so as "to return a fair interest on the expenditure of "capital?"—Yes.

13,072. "If so, where is the land?"—I know of a farm where there is a marshy place. That is let for 5*s.* an acre. The tenant some time ago improved about two acres of it, and the rent was raised from 5*s.* to 1*l.* an acre, so the rest was left without anything being done to it.

Lord Kenyon.

13,073. Where is that farm?—I should prefer not to mention the farm, for the sake of the tenant, that is all.

13,074. Then questions by Mr. Thomas Thomas: "Can you say to whom, the rent of 13*l.* "for Ty Du is paid now. Is it to the quarry "proprietors or to the Ruthin Charity?"—10*l.* of it is paid to the quarry proprietors, and the remaining 3*l.* 15*s.* is paid to the Ruthin Charity.

More than that too, as Mr. Thomas has asked the question: that land had a house the land for which they paid 3*l.* 15*s.* for. The house became thoroughly uninhabitable, and by to-day it is in ruins; yet the same rent is paid. They asked for a lease of the place, and it was positively refused, although the family had lived there for 60 years.

13,075. Can you say how many applied for Tyucha'rffordd, when it was let to John Roberts for 14*l.* ?—No, I cannot say.

13,076. What was the highest rent that was offered for the small farm ?—I do not know.

13,077. Then there is another question by Mr. Vincent: "Did you mention a farm on the "Vaynol estate of which the rent was originally "about 2*l.*, on which the landlord had spent "nothing, and of which the rent had been "raised?"—Yes.

13,078. What was or is the name?—Tyucha'rffordd.

13,079. Did you go to Mr. Farren's quarries and urge the men to disagree with their masters upon their leases, and to form a union?—I do not not know anything about his people, or about Mr. Farren, nor do I know where his quarry is.

13,080. Then you never went there?—I never went there, nor to any other place for such a purpose.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Edwards called, examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

See 21,294–21,386.

13081. Who is your landlord?—The late Sir Love Jones Parry; it is the Madryn estate.

The following statement of the witness was read by the interpreter:—

"Gwynfaes, Llanllyfni,

"Tenant, Mr. Thomas Edwards.

"About 40 years ago the tenant was William Owen. Rent 45*l.* He became very poor and his son followed him, who was a quarry agent; he died very poor. Richard Owen was obliged to build a house, or lose his farm, which house cost him about 250*l.*, with lease 60 years. He built a stable and cowhouse without any lease, which cost him 70*l.* I followed him and paid 460*l.* for the lease and buildings erected by him. I spent from 150*l.* to 200*l.* in buildings, walls, drains, and other improvements. I lived there for 9 years, when the farm was sold by auction for 1,700*l.* I did not get a penny for improvements. The land, about a quarter of an acre, was under the house which was bought for 35*l.* in the sale by me. The house does not suit the place without the farm. Present rent of farm 70*l.* without house. 6 or 7 years ago, I claimed 800*l.* compensation from the landlord Sir Love Jones Parry, and the reply I had from his agent was, that he could only grant me 50*l.*, which promise he afterward denied. I intended to buy my farm at the auction, and informed Mr. Williams late of Glanbeuno that I intended to buy, and I had spent 80*l.* on the property. However, Mr. Williams outbid me at the sale, and gave me notice on the first opportunity."

Sir John Llewelyn.

13,082. What was the date of the sale?—I do not remember the date—about six or seven years ago.

13,083. What is the 800*l.* claimed for?—For the house and the stable, and the cowhouse, and the buildings on the estate, and improvements on the land as well. I bought the house which had been made by the previous tenant. This is the agreement showing the amount of money I paid (producing agreement).

13,084. How much of the 800*l.* would be for general improvements under the First Schedule of the Act, and how much for buildings?—About 300*l.* spent on the buildings which are in my possession now, that is the house.

13,085. And how much for the general improvements upon the land?—I paid 70*l.* for the cowhouse and the buildings, which were without a lease in the middle of the farm, which go with the farm in the possession of Mr. Williams, and I built a hayhouse there, under the same roof, which cost 40*l.*

13,086. When did you build that?—I do not remember. Perhaps I built it four years, or perhaps three years before the sale. I cannot say for certain.

13,087. Did you get the consent of the landlord for the building?—The steward told me, when I came to an agreement with the tenant, who was there before me: "There it is to you, like a freehold property." So I did not fear spending the money on the land, and on the buildings.

13,088. Then you got nothing in writing to to show that?—No.

The interpreter read the agreement as follows:

"An agreement made between Richard Owen, of the Penybryn Farm, farmer in the parish of Llandwrog, in the county of Carnarvon on the one part, and Thomas Edwards, merchant, Redyw House, in the parish of Llanllyfni, in the county of Carnarvon, on the other part. I the aforesaid Richard Owen, Penybryn Farm, farmer, in the parish of Llandwrog, in the county of Carnarvon, do sell to the aforesaid Thomas Edwards, merchant, Redyw House, in the parish of Llanllyfni, in the county of Carnarvon, and that the said Thomas Edwards, merchant, in the parish of Llanllyfni, in the county of Carnarvon, do purchase of the aforesaid Richard Owen, of the Penybryn Farm, farmer, in the

I the aforesaid Richard Owen, of the Penybryn Farm, farmer, in the parish of Llandwrog, in the county of Carnarvon, do deliver and give up possession of the aforesaid leased house and land, also the taking of the farm and all other effects as aforesaid described in this agreement, to the aforesaid Thomas Edwards, merchant, Redyw House, in the parish of Llanllyfni, in the county of Carnarvon, on the 18th day of April, 1877, and on and after the above date the aforesaid Thomas Edwards is to receive all the benefits derived from the aforesaid leased house and land, together with the benefit derived from the aforesaid Gwynfaes Farm, and effects as aforesaid described.

RICHARD OWEN."

13,089. That is a sale of a lease?—No; it is not an agreement for the sale of the lease—it is an agreement for the sale of the lease and of the farm, and the taking of the farm together.

13,090. It describes itself as the sale of a lease?—But the taking of the farm is there too at the same time.

13,091. When did that lease terminate, if there was a lease at all?—It is not terminated yet. I bought the place freehold at the auction, the part which is under the lease.

13,092. The part which was under the lease you bought at the auction; is that so?—Yes; and containing the house on the ground as well.

13,093. Any land with the house?—Yes; less than a quarter of an acre.

13,094. Then if you bought the house at the auction, you bought the reversion only; you were already the owner of the lease?—Of course, yes; but I would not have bought the lease only that I had the taking of the farm. My house now is not half its value for any business that may be connected with it, except for the taking of the farm.

13,095. Then the land was sold separately, and not bought for yourself?—Yes; I had no chance to buy it.

13,096. You had a chance to do so: did you not tell us that you were a bidder?—Yes, I bid more than the farm was worth, in my opinion but another one outbid me.

13,097. Do you know what is the rent now paid for the rest of the land?—70*l.*

13,098. What was it before the sale?—45*l.*

13,099. And the price paid for it was 1,700*l.*?—Yes.

13,100. Has that land any house attached to it except your own?—No.

13,101. You still claim compensation for buildings that you made?—Yes; if it is any good my doing so.

13,102. When you claimed 800*l.* compensation, and the agent offered you 50*l.*, did you get that in writing?—No.

13,103. Why. Did you ask for it in writing?—Yes, I asked him two or three times. I asked the first time when he and the auctioneer were round looking after the farm, and he told me I should have something for my expenses. He did not say then how much I should have. On the morning of the sale at Pwelheli, it was about ten minutes or a quarter of an hour when I saw him; it was at that time when he said I should have 50*l.*, and there was no time to write anything. My house was the first to be put up for sale.

13,104. Did you ask him for that offer in writing?—Yes, many, many times, and I paid 15*l.* and 3*l.*—18*l.* instead of 35*l.* as a deposit. It was only six weeks since that I completed the purchase.

13,105. When Mr. Williams (I think it was Mr. Williams) outbid you at the sale, what price did Mr. Williams pay for the property?—Pay for the farm.

13,106. Yes?—1,700*l.*

13,107. That was after you had been there nine years?—Yes, about nine years.

Mr. Seebohm.

13,108. Your farm is on the Madryn estate I think?—Yes, it was, when it was my farm.

13,109. Was it under a Receiver of the Court of Chancery?—No, not at that time.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,110. I understand that the 150*l.* to 200*l.* that you spent in buildings, or drainage, and improvements, were spent not on the house and the small bit of land under lease but on the farm?—Yes.

13,111. And of the farm you were only a tenant from year to year, I understand?—That is so. You can see from these receipts (producing same).

13,112. Then the compensation you ask for from Sir Love Jones Parry was in respect of the money you expended on the farm?—Yes, partly.

13,113. What was the other compensation that you claimed; that was not in respect of improvements on the farm, was it?—The house that I have.

13,114. Yes; but then you were assignee of the lease of the house for the term of 60 years; and you bought the reversion, as I understand it, for 35*l.*?—Yes, I owned the house and lease; but I never would have given a halfpenny for the house on lease had it not been for the farm. When they were selling at the auction the house and the little bit under it was the first. I bought that. I bought that thinking that I would be able to buy the farm after it.

13,115. And you found yourself outbid by Mr. Williams?—Yes.

13,116. What was the purchase-money offered by Mr. Williams, and how many years' purchase did that represent?—It was 1,700*l.* given for it, and it was 45*l.* rent.

Lord Kenyon.

13,117. You are still tenant there at that rent?—No, I am not. I had a notice to leave the first opportunity Mr. Williams had.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,118. You now find yourself saddled with a house that is no particular good to you?—Yes, it is not convenient for me. I had informed Mr. Williams of my connexion with the farm through a respectable man from the town of Carnarvon. So the law is such now that it has allowed Mr. Williams and Sir Love Jones Parry to take from my pocket in effect 800*l.*

Lord Kenyon.

13,119. Who is Mr. Williams; where does he live?—Mr. J. A. A. Williams, late of Glanbeuno. I do not know what the name of his place now is; it is somewhere in the neighbourhood of Beddgelert—Cwmstrallyn.

Sir John Llewelyn.

13,120. You considered you paid too much?—For the rent?

13,121. Yes?—Yes, it is too high; no one could pay it.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

On resuming after the adjournment, the Chairman read the following telegram from Lord Penrhyn to Colonel West, who handed it to the Chairman for publication:—

"Statements having been made before Commission that tenants dare not give evidence for fear of their landlords, I cannot credit those statements, and as chairman of North Wales Property Defence Association express hope that tenants will not under any circumstances be deterred from giving evidence if they wish to do so.

"PENRHYN, Penrhyn Castle."

A similar announcement was also made in Welsh.

Mr. BRYN ROBERTS, M.P., called and examined.

See 13,374–13,381.

13,122. Witness.—I have been asked, my Lords and gentlemen, to appear before you to give evidence with respect to the appropriation of certain commons in the parish of Llanddeinolen, which have been appropriated to the Vaynol Estate. I have been asked to give evidence, because when I practised as a solicitor in this country some years ago, I was engaged in litigation with reference to one of these commons, and it was in the course of that proceeding that I became acquainted with the facts which I am about to narrate to the Commission.

In the year 1814 an enclosure award was made, in pursuance of certain Acts of Parliament, of 3,346 acres and 39 perches. The award was made in that year; of course, the enclosure would take place subsequently, pursuant to the award. The award was filed in the clerk of the peace's office in this county, and what I am reading from is a copy of extracts from that award that was supplied to me at the time of the litigation to which I refer. The Commissioner, who is making the award, recites, referring to the Act under which he proceeded, that it was enacted "That it should and might be lawful for "the Commissioner to set out parts of the "commons as he should think sufficient for the "purpose of common, of pasture, and turbary "for the use of the inhabitants of the said "parish," that is Llanddeinolen. Then he recites, that in pursuance of the Act, he has set out and allotted, "Certain portions of the "common and waste land as and for public "turbaries for the use of the parish." The turbaries that he set out are one lot, which is referred to in the plan attached to the award marked with the letter D, and No. 1 on the plan marked C, and is known as Fownog-y-go, containing in statute measure, 66 acres and 38 poles.

Chairman.

13,122*a*. Have you got the plan?—Yes, I have; that is a copy of it.

13,123. Have you got the award as well?—I have the copy that I am reading from.

13,124. Then we have all we want. That is the plan [handing in same].

Lord Kenyon.

13,125. This is a certified copy. You certify this?—I can only say that I got it as a copy from the office of the clerk of the peace, and it is no doubt correct. Then there was one other lot which he likewise apportioned, marked with the letter D. That lot is not on that plan, because the litigation to which I refer had reference only to the one I have mentioned.

Chairman.

13,126. To D. No. 1?—Yes; therefore I only went to the expense of getting a copy of it so far as it is referred to that lot, but inasmuch as I am dealing with the award now, I am putting the whole award in, so far as it affects the three commons. The other allotment was marked with the letter D, and No. 2 on the plan marked C.

13,127. Whereabouts is that?—I can tell you, my Lord, from my own knowledge of the place, but it is not marked on the plan.

13,128. Then it does not matter?—It contained in statute measure 21 acres, 3 roods, and 6 poles.

Lord Kenyon.

13,129. Has this got a name?—There is no name given it in the award, but it is known in the neighbourhood as Lletty Llwyd; if I remember right, that is the name. It is part of the farm called Garnedd. Then the third allotment is marked with the letter D, and No. 3 on the plan marked A, containing in statute measure 1 acre 3 roods, and 5 poles. Dealing, first of all, with the 21 acres of Lletty Llwyd, that has been appropriated about 35 years ago at least by the Vaynol estate.

Chairman.

13,130. How long ago?—It must have been more than 35 years ago, because it was done in the lifetime of Mr. Griffith Ellis, a former agent of the Dinorwic Quarry, and he died, I am told, about 35 years ago.

Chairman.

13,132. That is the 66 acres?—That is the 66 acres; was open to the public, and used as a common of pasture and turbary until the year 1879 or 1880. I think it would be probably somewhere at the beginning of 1880. At that time Mr. Assheton Smith, by his agents, gave notice to the residents in that neighbourhood that they were not to send their cattle on to that land. There was one small tenement, occupied by a widow named Ann Roberts, belonging to the Vaynol Estate, situate close by this common. She had a grown-up son with her, assisting her to farm. Possibly he may have had some other occupation in the quarry as well. I am not quite sure of that. They resisted the order that had been issued from the Vaynol Estate, on the ground of public right. An action for trespass was accordingly brought by Mr. Assheton Smith in the county court against the tenant for sending her cattle to this common. The tenant's son and daughter went to the county court and disputed the right of Mr. Assheton Smith to the land.

Lord Kenyon.

13,133. What was the date of the action?—It would be either in 1879 or 1880. This was before I came into it, and therefore I do not know exactly the date of this. Thereupon the county court judge called upon the solicitor of the estate to prove their title; and inasmuch as it was an action of trespass they had to prove their title if the right was denied. He said that the objection had taken him by surprise and asked for an adjournment, as he was not prepared. An adjournment was granted, and thereupon the tenants came to me and asked me to appear for them at the adjourned court. I arranged to do so. Before that court sat—to the best of my recollection, it was before; it must have been—Mr. Assheton Smith abandoned the action, and took another course. A notice to quit was served npon the tenant in respect of the holding.

Chairman.

13,134. On the widow?—On the widow, in respect of the small tenement called Trosgol.

Mr. Grove.

13,135. The same cottage?—The same tenement; it was not a cottage, it was a small tenement; I believe they had seven or eight cows; at least, that is my impression; it was a fair number of acres.

13,136. Notice to quit was served on the widow?—Notice to quit was served on the widow. She still maintained her ground and insisted upon her right to send her cattle to the moor. After the expiration of the notice to quit they took proceedings before magistrates to recover possession of Trosgol. They failed, owing to a defect in the service of the notice. They afterwards took proceedings, I think it was in the County Court—I am not quite sure—yes, it was in the County Court. The tenant of course, instructed me to defend to the utmost possible extent the proceedings that were taken against her, because no ground whatsoever was alleged for ejecting her, except the fact that she maintained this public right.

Lord Kenyon.

13,137. At what date was that action?—This would be about the same time, in one of those two years.

13,138. 1879 or 1880?—1879 or 1880. We held them at bay for a considerable time by taking every possible technical objection I could invent. I did it so intentionally, because I thought it was a very gross case, and that I was morally entitled to defend these people to the very uttermost. Then afterwards Mr. Assheton Smith took a different course. In August 1880——

Chairman.

13,139. The widow was still in her house all this time?—She was there all this time—in her little farm, Trosgol. In August 1880 there suddenly appeared in the "Standard" Newspaper one morning an account of an application made on behalf of Mr. Assheton Smith for an exparte injunction against a number of persons living in that neighbourhood, among whom was Mr. Roberts, asking for an injunction to prevent them from——

13,140. Of whom was the injunction asked?—On behalf of Mr. Assheton Smith.

Chairman—continued.

13,141. But to what Court did Mr. Assheton Smith apply for this injunction?—To the Chancery Division of the High Court.

13,142. An exparte injunction was applied for by Mr. Assheton Smith?—An ex parte application was made for an injunction by Mr. Assheton Smith to restrain the defendants.

13,143. To restrain several persons?—Several persons, nine or ten altogether, from sending their cattle to this common. The ground upon which it was asked was this, that they were interfering with the grouse. The application was made either on or after the 5th day of August, because the writ in the action was issued on that day, and it was urged as a reason for the immediate granting of an injunction exparte, without notice, that it was important to stop the trespassing before the 12th, when grouse shooting commenced. According to the report that was given in the "Standard," the judge asked how long these cattle had been in the habit of trespassing, or had been sent on the moor. The answer was, "For several months." Thereupon the judge said that they ought to have come sooner and given notice to the other side, inasmuch as they had plenty of time, instead of asking for an ex parte injunction without notice, and he declined to give it. The writ was then served upon the parties, and they instructed me to appear for them. I did so, and Mr. Assheton Smith went on with the action and delivered a statement of claim which I have here. He claimed, as Lord of the Manor of Dinorwic, an injunction to restrain the defendants from sending their cattle or sheep on the turbary. (Witness handed in copy of the statement of claim.)

All these people were comparatively poor people, villagers in the village of Llandinorwic and they determined to fight and continue fighting for some time, until the beginning of the following year, when they came to the conclusion that it was hopeless with their means to fight against Mr. Assheton Smith, with his means.

13,144. They were all poor people and they determined it was no use to fight Mr. Assheton Smith. Is that it?—Yes, and then they abandoned any further defence. Since then this moor has been in the exclusive possession of Mr. Assheton Smith.

13,145. But was the legal permission granted then? Did anything come of this application of Mr. Assheton Smith?—Oh yes; judgment went as a matter of course.

13,146. He got judgment?—They got leave to withdraw their appearance; then of course he got judgment by default.

13,147. He got judgment by default and then he claimed the land and has had it ever since?—Yes, noboby has ever ventured to send any cattle there ever since.

13,148. Has he ever interfered with the turbary?—I am not aware.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,149. All that is alleged in the statement of claim is that he is in possession of the moors, lands, and closes, surrounding the common of turbary?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

13,150. And the point seems to be that he denies there is any common of pasture?—Yes, that is so.

13,151. Was there a good defence to the action, in your opinion?—Oh, complete, in my opinion. I have no hesitation about it.

Mr. Seebohm.

13,152. Did the award, in setting apart the 66 acres for the turbary, prevent the right of pasture as well?—Oh, no.

13,153. Was it exclusive?—No, it does not exclude that. I will deal with the question of right at once. At first, when Mr. Assheton Smith first raised the question, it was the tenant's daughter that discovered this award; it was known in the neighbourhood, or at least believed, that there was a public right to this land, and it was the tenant's daughter that found this award in the office of the clerk of the peace, and discovered these very portions from which I have read; and then after that Mr. Assheton Smith did not claim the right to exclude them from taking turf—from taking peat; that was after that defence was taken; but the award awards other allotments amounting to about 70 acres of this common to Mr. Assheton Smith, that is, Mr. Assheton Smith of that day, expressly on account of his manorial rights; and that is stated to be equivalent to one-fifteenth of the total common.

Mr. Brynmor Jones

13,154. What you say is that the award as to this 66 acres does not deny the right of any person who theretofore had possessed or who might have acquired a right of common of pasture?—Quite so. Then of course his contention would be this: "My rights as Lord of the Manor are left untouched." I grant that. So are the rights of the commoners therefore also left untouched, and they had the right to go there as well. In fact the award commences with a recital which I read of the Act, under which the award is made, and it says this: "And it is "thereby further enacted that it should and "might be lawful to, and for the said Commis- "sioners to set out and allot such part or "parts of the commons and waste lands as he "should think sufficient for the purpose of "common, of pasture, and turbary, for the use "of the inhabitants of the said parish, as in and "by the said several in parts recited Acts, "reference being thereunto respectively had "may more fully and at large appear."

13,155. Would you read that part of the award relating to 66 acres?—Yes; "and I do "hereby set out and allot the three next several "pieces or parcels of land, part of the said "common and waste lands, as and for public "turbaries for the use of the inhabitants of the "said parish, according to the directions of the "said in part recited amended Act, (that is to "say)"—then it describes the three lots.

13,156. Then the very words that are used there recognise the character of this land as common or waste of the manor?—Undoubtedly, in my view. In my view all that that award does is this: It gives a right of common of turbary, even if it did not before exist, because it expressly allots that.

13,157. It was waste of the manor before, and then it leaves it waste of the manor?—It remains waste of the manor afterwards, exactly in the same terms. The only question that could arise on the matter would be whether the Lord of the Manor's rights had not been excluded by virtue of an express allotment of other parts of the common to him in lieu of his rights, but that would be an additional ground in our favour and one on which it would not be necessary for us to rely upon. At this time the judgment in ejectment had also become due against this Mrs. Roberts in respect of her yearly tenancy of Trosgol, and she was on the point of being evicted. Probably that is the explanation of the collapse of the defence, because she came then to the conclusion that she had better not fight any more against Mr. Assheton Smith. She completely surrendered—took his terms with respect to everything; and I learned afterwards that the son who had fought so very determinedly carried his surrender so far as to become a Churchman and a Conservative; and they remained afterwards in possession of the farm. That is all, I think, I have to say as to that. I ought perhaps to mention this with respect to Llettyllwyd. That was got possession of without any difficulty at all, because a large number of people who used to use it as a common were Mr. Assheton Smith's tenants, and of course knew perfectly well the futility of fighting against the landlord, but Mr. Rice William Thomas, of Coed Helen, has also property and tenants in the neighbourhood, and some difficulty—of course I cannot give you this from my own information but from information I learnt at that time, on making inquiries into what took place 35 or 40 years ago—some difficulty was had in frightening these people from using their rights. However, most of them (there were only three or four of them) were either working in Mr. Assheton Smith's slate quarry or they had sons, brothers, or other relatives doing so, and pressure was placed upon them by the then agent of the quarry, and they desisted. Mr. Griffiths Ellis, the agent, who then was living, died more than 35 years ago, and that allotment of 21a. 3r. 6p. called Llettyllwyd has been in the complete and exclusive possession of the tenant of Garnedd as part of the farm and used for growing hay crops, and I am told that potatoes and corn have been grown on patches of it. Anyhow the public have never had any access to it since the time I have mentioned. I draw the attention of the Commission to this case chiefly for this reason—as indicating the necessity for tenants to have security of tenure and protection against capricious eviction. Had a Land Bill or any Bill giving that security been in existence, none of these commons would have been lost to the public.

Complaints have also been made with respect to the Vaynol estate in the parish of Lland-

deiniolen as to hardship which has been felt by a large number of working men who have enclosed pieces of waste from the mountain and other similar places in past times. They have built their homesteads with their own money and dug and reclaimed the land. Most of them, if not all, were workmen in Mr. Assheton Smith's quarries. The former owners of the estate always recognised a custom which, as far as I can judge what the Ulster custom was, was something very analogous to the Ulster custom. They permitted the men who had built these homesteads and reclaimed them to dispose of them to other incoming tenants and get large sums, equivalent to the value of the improvement in the shape of goodwill from the incoming tenants. That was recognised on the estate until somewhere about the seventies—1874 I think would be the date, of course it might be a little before or after that. From that time forward that custom which had always obtained in that part of the parish was put an end to. The tenants were all put under the agreements which Mr. Assheton Smith has with his tenants, by which permanent improvements such as buildings and so on are taken to be exhausted at the end of 30 years. There was also a farm, called Fachwen, cut up in or about the year 1842 by the then Mr. Assheton Smith. It was divided into about 30 holdings, and distributed among quarrymen almost if not all—probably all. The estate undertook the expense of building the boundary walls between these portions of land. The occupiers did everything else; they built the houses in which they lived, they built all the outbuildings, and dug and reclaimed the land. I believe about 10 or 12 of the holdings out of the 30 were reclaimed land; but the rest were waste. This same custom prevailed with respect to these holdings also, the same as those holdings that have been enclosed from mountain lands.

Lord Kenyon.

13,158. What was the date of that subdivision?—It would be somewhere about the year 1842—about 50 years ago, I should say.

Mr. Seebohm.

13,159. You mean the custom as applied to the new holding?—Yes. These men had all built their homesteads and cleared the rough ground, and so on, and even when a tenant wished to leave or died, he or his personal representative was allowed to sell the tenancy, and a large sum of money would be given on account of the improvement that had been made, because the former Mr. Assheton Smith did not raise the rent on account of the improvements, but the rent was continued as it would have been had the land not been improved and built upon by the tenant. Therefore there was a very considerable value in the goodwill. Great complaints, of course, were made at the time that that custom was abolished or not adhered to. Homestead buildings had been built; many of the men had built them themselves, and others had paid to their predecessors on coming to the tenancies, and they considered that 30 years was a most unreasonably short term for buildings of that kind to be considered an exhausted improvement.

13,160. So that in 1874 the same custom was applied as to the squatters?—Yes. There is a reference which corroborates the view I have taken of this practice that I have mentioned in the life of the late Mr. Assheton Smith, who was the previous owner, the immediate predecessor of the present Mr. Assheton Smith, except for the interposition of, I think, about a twelvemonth in which the widow of the late Mr. Assheton Smith owned the estate; she only lived about a year after; the late Mr. Assheton Smith, if I remember right, died about the year 1857 or 1858. He was the well-known sportsman and hunting man. His life was published with the consent, and I believe, at the request of his family, who supplied the materials, no doubt. That life contains a description of the excellent way in which things were carried on on his Welsh estates. It describes this custom that he had permitted by which large portions of land had been reclaimed from waste, and dug and recovered by the tenant. It goes on in these words (this is at page 76 of the third edition) "In this way nearly 2,000 acres of "land are now under cultivation which for-"merly were covered with furze and heather. "The occupiers are allowed to sell their estate "to their fellow labourers. Some few have "availed themselves of this permission, but for "the most part they remain on their little "farms after ceasing to work" (that means, no doubt to work in the quarry), "and enjoy in "their old age a comfortable retirement."

Great complaint has also been felt—and that is in recent times—with respect to a preference which has been universally believed by the Nonconformists in that neighbourhood to have been given to Churchmen and Conservatives in the case of applications for vacant houses and tenements. I do not think there ever has been any complaint of any Nonconformists being evicted on account of their non-conformity, nor has there been usually, as far as I am aware, (and I do not think there has been at all) any complaint of, say, a Nonconformist's son, living at home with his father, assisting him, not being allowed to succeed his Nonconformist father. But complaints have arisen in cases where they say the houses or the tenements naturally become vacant by the death of tenants who had no wives or sons living at home, and therefore the estate authorities had to seek for tenants from among strangers. Chiefly, since the year 1880, principally after the election of that year, the feeling has been universal in that district that it was hopeless for a Nonconformist to apply for a tenement or a house on the Vaynol estate if there was a Churchman competing.

Lord Kenyon.

13,161. What is the district?—The district near the quarries. This, of course, naturally had its effect to some extent, not very large, but still to an appreciable extent, on the chapels. Weak people—people of slight principle were disposed to leave the chapel in the hope that when any chance of advancement came they would have a better opportunity of securing that advancement. The complaint became so general and so serious that some years ago—I cannot give you the exact date, because I am speaking roughly from memory, but I should say it was about three years ago or possibly more, the monthly meeting of the Calvinistic Methodists held in Dinorwic chapel took note of it. Perhaps I ought to mention that the monthly meeting is the county governing body of the Calvinistic Methodists, which is the largest denomination in this part of the country—I mean in the quarry districts. It is a perambulatory assembly; it meets every month in different chapels, and goes the circuit of the whole district once in about three years. When it visits a particular chapel it is the universal custom always to inquire as to the success or otherwise of the cause in that particular chapel. At a monthly meeting held at Dinorwic chapel at the time that I refer to, public protest and complaint was made as to the disability which the Calvinistic Methodists there strongly believed that they suffered under, in connexion with this matter. That protest and complaint was published in the papers; and inquiries that I have made among members of the denomination, to which I myself belong, result in information that there is no complaint felt now.

13,162. That you say was since 1883—about three years ago?—About three years ago, as far as I can judge. I am only guessing roughly now—three or four years ago.

13,163. You said it was mostly felt in 1883 to start with?—It would be from 1880 to somewhere about the year 1890 I should think.

Sir John Llewelyn.

13,164. You do not think that that exists now; but do I understand that it was a separate resolution; has there been another resolution?—No, there has been no other resolution. That was the only complaint that I referred to. I do not say, of course, whether it was in pursuance of that public complaint or not; I believe that public complaints had been made before that; and I think that the practice was tapering off, so to speak, perhaps, before that formal complaint took place.

13,165. But you say that resolution was passed about three years ago?—To the best of my recollection.

13,166. Then you were going to say something subsequent to that?—I say that during the last two or three years, from inquiries I have made of late, as to whether any complaints now exist of a feeling of disability or disfavour shown to Nonconformists on that estate I am told no, that they think that that has passed. Then, my Lord, I had intended to make some reference to my own opinions as to the legislative remedy.

Chairman.

13,167. That is embodied in this Bill I take it?—Yes; your Lordship has the Bill.

Sir John Llewelyn.

13,168. The copy I have is in 1890?—It has been introduced into the House every year.

13,169. My copy is 1890?—That is the only one I had. I sent all the copies I had to the secretary; but the Bill was introduced, I think, first in 1887.

Chairman.

13,170. Do you wish to say anything on the subject of the Bill?—I should like to say just a very little as to the reason why I think that security of tenure is necessary. In my view it is necessary for the protection of Welsh tenants that there should be some change in the law giving them security against capricious eviction. A very strong feeling exists among all tenants, as far as my experience goes, whether the estates to which they belong are well or badly managed. They all desire to get greater security of tenure. I do not think that there is any desire to have absolute fixity of tenure, but the tenants at large would be quite content that the landlord should be entitled to evict for all such causes as reasonable landlords do evict for. In framing this Bill I was as careful as I could be to endeavour to specify every reasonable cause of eviction that any good landlord would feel himself justified in putting in force, and to allow eviction on due notice on any of those grounds, but the object I think that is necessary is to prevent absolutely capricious eviction. If I were asked whether capricious or vindictive eviction is often resorted to I should say no, it is not, but the power to resort to it is enough and a great deal too much. It destroys all independence in tenants, and makes them, as in the case of that Fownog-y-go which I have shown, totally unable to resist the will of the landlords on any subject whatsoever. Having regard also to the fact that in Wales the landlords are Churchmen and Conservatives, although I wish to make no charge against them upon that, simply to name the fact, the tenants are always all or mostly all Nonconformists; most of them are also Liberals by conviction and Tories by profession. Therefore in my opinion it is necessary, in a self-governing country like this is now, that the men who are the ratepayers should be in a position to exercise their civic rights without fear. There is also the additional fact that nearly all the landlords and most of the agents also are English in tongue, whereas the tenants are chiefly Welsh in race and mostly Welsh in tongue, although many of them can understand and some speak English, still they are not at home in the language and never feel at ease when they have to speak with a man who addresses them in English. For those reasons I think a Bill is necessary. I think also that the right to compensation should be given irrespective of the improvement being made with the consent of the landlord. In my view either it should be as provided in the Bill, viz.. stated, that the refusal to consent should be made the subject of arbitration, or, which I think would be quite as good a plan, that the value of the improvement, whether consented to or not, should at the quitting of a tenant be paid for according to the then additional value that it gave to the farm. Of course if a tenant, as in the case I think I heard suggested at Pwllheli, builds a conservatory or glasshouses, it is absurd that a landlord should be obliged to pay anything of the kind; but I would say in such a case that the landlord should only pay what the additional letting value of the place was to a farming tenant at that time by the improvement.

Lord Kenyon.

13,171. As shown by the rent?—As shown by the rent, capitalising the increased rent that could be got by reason of that improvement. That would thereby give the full benefit to the tenant of an improvement. If he drained, say, a field which was rendered three times greater in value at a very small outlay, I think it is not fair that he should be only repaid the small outlay; he ought to get the increase in value that he has made by his enterprise, and so exactly in the same way if he spent three times the value of the improvement upon the improvement, he ought not to get the money he spent, but ought only to get the increased value of the improvement, and that I think ought to be secured to him, whether he gets consent or not. I practised for many years—for 19 years—in this country as a solicitor, and being a liberal solicitor, of whom there were not many at the time I commenced practice, my assistance was generally sought in cases where tenants came to difficulties with their landlords, and I got a considerable knowledge then of where the shoe pinched, and I found it was always in a case of this kind. It rarely occurred, in fact I may say never, on these large estates unless they were sold. As long as a place continued on these large estates there was no difficulty; of course the difficulty remained of their being completely under the thumb of the landlord, of whom they were not much afraid, of the agent, of whom they were a bit more afraid, and of the gamekeeper, of whom they were very much afraid; but when some of these estates were sold, then the purchaser naturally said: "I have paid "for this place as I have got it, I have paid for "it as it stands"; and he would not be disposed to give much consideration to the tenant. All the cases, very nearly without exception, in which my assistance was sought for were cases arising in that way, where properties had been sold, and very, very cruel injustice had been done. That is all I have to say.

Sir John Llewelyn.

13,172. Are you justified in saying that the son of Mrs. Roberts, of Trosgol, became a Churchman in consequence of his mother's being permitted to remain on the farm?—I did not say so.

13,173. I am glad to hear from you that you did not say so?—No, I did not.

13,174. I rather thought you did say so?—Well, I could not say that it was in consequence; I say that at the very time that he abandoned the action, and threw himself entirely on the mercy of the landlord, at that time, or just afterwards, became a Churchman and a Conservative. Of course—I will be frank with you—the belief there is that he did so in order to propitiate the landlord.

13,175. With regard to capricious evictions, your Bill is aimed at preventing capricious evictions, and restraining the right to capricious evictions. Do you know of any other cases in your neighbourhood of what you call capricious eviction, or attempt at capricious evictions?—Well, I would say that the Tynllwyn eviction was decidedly so.

13,176. You have already told us that there was common?—Oh, no, certainly not. As a rule, undoubtedly, on all these large estates there is no danger whatsoever.

13,177. My copy of the Bill that you backed is rather old; I have had it in my possession some time. Have you materially altered it during the last year, or did you bring in a Bill in exactly the same terms?—In the last year, the Bill was in the hands of Mr. Ellis, the Member for Merionethshire, and he made some alterations in it.

13,178. The Bill that I have has on the back of it, "4th December, 1890," but inside it says, "Anno Domini, 1891"; that is a Bill with your name on the back?—Yes; that was the Bill that I introduced; then in the Bill that was introduced last year, the alterations were these. I proposed that the court, or the tribunal which is to fix a fair rent, and reasonable conditions of tenancy, should be arbitration; in the other case, it is a land court—Government officials.

13,179. I quite follow you?—I do not mind which; I rather prefer my own idea, but I am not at all wedded to it.

13,180. I think there is a difference between the two, and the one I have is the one with your backing upon it. Section 15 of the Bill of 1891 is this:—"The tenant may bequeath his "tenancy by will, without the consent of the "landlord, and the administrator of a deceased "tenant may, without such consent, assign the "tenancy to any person or persons entitled "under the statutes for the distribution of "personal estate and effects of intestates, for "the personal estate and effects of the de-"ceased tenant, or any part or distributive share "thereof"—that is free sale?—Oh, no.

13,181. You think not?—Oh, certainly not. I am strongly opposed to free sale.

13,182. You are opposed to free sale?—Strongly.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

13,183. I am very glad to hear it. I rather gathered from what you said about the custom changing in 1870, that there had been freedom of sale before that?—No doubt; it was a custom similar to the Ulster custom.

13,184. In Llanddeiniolen?—Yes, it was the Ulster custom in that neighbourhood of Llanddeiniolen, but I think that is a pernicious custom so far as it gives the right of free sale.

13,185. Then you think that 15th section does not give free sale?—Oh, certainly not. It is voluntary. If I may be allowed to say it, it is confined to bequeathing by will or an assignment to one of the next-of-kin in cases of intestacy; that is a voluntary gift; that is not selling it.

13,186. Going to the next-of-kin?—Of course he could bequeath it to anyone he liked, but it is a gift; a bequest is not a sale, it is a gift.

13,187. And it does not give the right to sale?—No; the legatee or next-of-kin cannot sell. He is in exactly the same position as the deceased was in. The administrator is not entitled to sell in the open market, but simply to allot to one of the next-of-kin. I should like since you mention the matter to give the reason why I object to free sale.

13,188. I should like it very much?—It is this. Inasmuch as land is limited in quantity and the number of people desiring to hold it is increasing every year there is naturally a possibility, which has led to such evil in Ireland, of land being let at its competitive values, that are far in excess of the actual living value of the land. Now, I consider that if we restrain a landlord from doing so, we ought also to restrain the outgoing tenant from doing so. I do not think we ought to deprive the landlord of the right of exacting the utmost farthing in order to give it to the outgoing tenant, because that would result in a competitive rent in the same way. If I am allowed I should like to illustrate it in this way. Assuming that there is a small tenement of 50*l.* a year rent, and that that is a fair rent on the property as it stands. If the outgoing tenant is allowed to sell his goodwill and gets 500*l.*, as he may possibly do, for it, that 500*l.* would have to be borrowed by the incoming tenant, and he must pay interest upon it. If you put 5 per cent. interest on 500*l.* he will have to pay 50*l.* to the landlord and 25*l.* interest for the money he borrowed: his rent would therefore really be 75*l.* I say that ought not to be, and I would not therefore allow a man to sell; but I have put in clauses providing for complete compensation for all improvements made by him. But the incoming tenant or the successor ought to have the right to live as the outgoing tenant himself was allowed to have.

Mr. Seebohm

13,189. May I follow the inquiry just one step further. After what you said with regard to the sale of goodwill, I need not ask any questions about that; but as to the calculation of what amount should be given with regard to improvements and the ascertaining of what the fair rent should be, and ascertaining all the rights in a very difficult case. You rather prefer arbitration to judicial proceedings?—Yes, I do.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

13,190. Is that on the ground of non-publicity—not dragging everything out in court?—No, it is first of all on this ground. I think, when you make a reform it is desirable to make it as far as possible on existing lines. The universal practice now between an outgoing and incoming tenant is to refer all questions as to compensation to be paid for anything to arbitration; so the method of arbitration is one with which the tenants are already perfectly familiar. So also on the question of the rent. All landlords now, as far as I know large landlords, never dream as a rule of valuing their own estates, or having their agents value them. As a rule, I know when there is a re-valuation, a public valuer is appointed. I see no objection whatsoever to letting the tenants themselves have a voice in the selection of that public valuer. That is all that I do in this Bill, provide that the tenant and landlord shall agree as to a valuer; if they cannot agree, they each appoint one, and the county court judge appoints the umpire. Therefore, that practically is a very slight deviation from the existing practice. It really is very little more than making legal what is done in practice now on good estates.

13,191. Can you give me any idea of the cost of an arbitration?—Well, it is not large unless my fraternity comes in. The cost of an arbitration in the case of an outgoing tenant is very small. As a rule the outgoing tenant selects two farmers, neighbours, and the incoming tenant selects two, and they decide on view. I take it that expert arbitrators generally prefer that method themselves. I do not think two land valuers would sit in a court like this, and listen to other gentlemen telling them what they say is the value of the farm; they would go and see it for themselves, and act upon their own judgment; and doing that I think would not cost so much. Of course I may mention this: that the object of the change that was made last year was, I think, with the view of obviating the cost, and putting the cost on the State—having a tribunal. Of course I have no objection to that course, but of the two, I think that as a start at any rate it would be well to try the other method as being a less violent wrench from the existing system.

such experts as those in connexion with the Board of Agriculture, or more locally could be called in at very little expense, do you think that that would answer the purpose of at any rate deferring the cost of arbitration or of judicial proceedings to extreme cases only?—Oh, I think very likely—very likely indeed.

13,193. Do you think that is a suggestion that would be worth consideration?—Having a sort of friendly advisers of an official character?

13,194. Quite so?—Yes, I should say it would be very valuable indeed.

Mr. Richard Jones.

13,195. Do you think that there is anything in the conditions under which land is held in Wales to justify separate legislation from England?—I think so, distinctly, chiefly for the reasons I have mentioned, the differences in Wales between landlord and tenant, viz., the difference of race, the difference of tongue, the difference of religion, and the difference of politics. Where, as in England, landlords and tenants converse in a common tongue, there is very much greater freedom of intercourse between them. Any man knowing Welsh and knowing English will discover it instantly. Let him go to a Welsh neighbourhood, let him go there and talk English, and he will find the people distant and constrained to some extent with him; let him drop out a Welsh word, and instantly, at once, they change, as rapidly as could be; that is because there is a sort of feeling that they are more thoroughly understood, and that they can understand their interlocutor far better than when they had thought they were being questioned by an Englishman, although they may be able to speak English to some extent, and understand English very well. Then there is also of course this. In politics—I do not put it from the party point of view; I would say the same where the landlords were Liberal—if the landlord were a strong party politician and the tenant were equally strong on the same side—by conviction, I mean, not by interest, but by conviction—you would expect not so great a necessity for having security of tenure as you would otherwise. It is very much the same with respect to religion, although I hope that is a matter that will lessen after certain changes which we anticipate may take place; but at present it is a very grievous one.

13,196. Is there anything in the character of the farms or in the method of farming that justifies separate treatment?—Well, that requires a knowledge of farming in England as well as of Wales, and I am not competent to answer that.

13,197. What is your opinion as to abatements of rent; do you think they are satisfactory?—No doubt that depends, of course, very much upon a question that is very difficult to determine at the present moment, and that is whether the present depression in agriculture is due to permanent or to temporary causes. Of course abatements are given now under a belief that the depression is due to some temporary causes; but if it turns out that they are permanent in their effects, the abatements ought to be made permanent also, and I believe would be.

13,198. Do you think the principle of making abatements in rent is a good one?—No; I do not. I think that the proper course is really a fair rent covering good and bad seasons alike.

13,199. You think they are unfair because of this, that as a rule on estates they are made on the assumption that rents are made evenly on every farm?—Well; no doubt they are made on that assumption.

13,200. But they are unsatisfactory because of that?—But that is not a matter that is due to the abatement. The unsatisfactoriness of that is due to the original inequality of the rents of the different farms, because that hardship equally applies where there is no abatement. Take the case of two neighbours having the same quality of land, one pays 1*l.* an acre, and the other 25*s.*; it is a hardship of course that the 25*s.* rent does get a bigger abatement, but it is equal in hardship where there is no abatement required at all. He has either in those years to pay 5*s.* more, or the other man pays 5*s.* less if the land is equal in value.

13,201. Then you consider that the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, has proved a failure?—In my opinion completely—well, almost completely. I think there are very few cases in which tenants have been able to get much under that. As a rule I think that in most cases they can get quite as much from the general feeling of honour of the landlord as they can by that Act. As one reason, never do the tenants get consent beforehand to make an improvement. They make the improvement, believing no change ever will take place, and it does not, as long as the same landlord lives, or perhaps his own son inherits. It is only owing to some unforeseen circumstances, a sale or something of that sort, which no one would have dreamed would occur, that suddenly the necessity for it arises. When they are going to make an improvement, the tenant does not like to go to the landlord and say, "May I make it," and then if the agent says, "Yes," he does not like to say, "Well, will you put that in writing." He prefers to make the improvement without, and in 99 cases out of 100 it makes no difference. But my complaint is that matters of that kind ought not to be left upon the goodwill of landlords. If it is right it ought to be made legal, and not left to the goodwill of the landlord, because then temptation is given to exercise a certain amount of vindictiveness on certain occasions. It may not be much done, but a right-thinking man does not want the power to perpetrate an injustice.

Mr. Griffiths.

13,202. I have not read a word of your Bill, and I have only to ask you a few questions. Would you confine the appointment of these valuers and umpires to men living in the locality or say in the county, or would you make it open to Scotchmen or Englishmen and men from a distance?—In all legislation we must allow something for the common sense of people who will put the legislation in operation. I do not think it would be wise to put in too many minute restrictions of that kind. Every man would appoint those men likely to carry weight with their brother arbitrators, and it is only men in the neighbourhood who would be likely to carry that weight. Therefore it would be to the advantage of every one to appoint men in the neighbourhood. I leave the ultimate appointment to the county court judge. I do not say that I would actually say that it must be a man living in the neighbourhood, but I would trust to the discretion and judgment of the judge that he would see the importance of that unless very strong grounds were shown.

13,203. My reason for asking you that was that men from long distances, I think, cannot do it as well. Say for instance, I came here to value, I do not think I could do it as well as a man in this neighbourhood?—I heartily agree with that—that it would be absurd for a man from Montgomeryshire to come and value land in Anglesey. But I am quite confident that the county court judge would see the absurdity as well as myself.

13,204. Then when the umpire has decided a case, do you fix any time for that decision?—Yes, I have put seven years in the Bill, and I have put this further also, that even after the end of seven years (I do not want these matters to be constantly arising) if either side gives notice requiring a fresh investigation, and after that fresh investigation takes place there is a change of less than 10 per cent., that the person requiring the change should pay the whole cost of that investigation.

13,205. Then in that case you do not deprive the landlord and the tenant of making their own bargain?—Not in any way, and I am perfectly satisfied that in the vast majority of cases it would be done; exactly the same as in 999 cases out of 1,000 men pay their debts without being county courted. The courts of law are the foundation of all payment, but they are rarely resorted to in business.

13,206. We had an instance two or three days ago where a tenant considered his rent too high, and the landlord considered it quite low enough. You want some one just to come in and settle the question if they cannot agree?—Yes. There is perhaps one matter I might mention in connexion with the Bill which I have omitted. I do not know whether I might do so now or not.

Chairman.

13,207. Yes?—The point I wanted to draw attention to was this. I think it is important, as I have said before, to make as little change as possible in the existing system, provided that the evils I have referred to are secured against. Therefore why I was saying I objected to free sale is this, that my Bill as it stands will not lessen, in my opinion, the selling value of the land in any way whatever, because most people who buy land buy it, and certainly the persons who give high prices are people who buy land, for their own occupation. Those persons will give exactly the same price as they do now, because under my Bill they would be entitled to take possession of any land they bought for the purpose of their own occupation [Clause 10 (b)]. Therefore the evil that has been objected to very much in Ireland, of say, landlords, who had mortaged their estate on the assumption of a rent that was supposed to be paid, and who found themselves entirely squeezed out of every penny by a reduction in the selling value is obviated— the selling value would not be affected in any way.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,208. You told Mr. Griffiths that you were by the Bill allowing the landlord and the tenant to make any arrangement they liked. That I take it is only as to the amount of rent, because I see Clause 18 of the Bill invalidates and voids every contract which is inconsistent with the clauses of the Bill?—Yes, but there is a provision for that in Clause 7.

13,210. By Clause 9 you specify what may be the grounds upon which alone a landlord can evict?—Yes, they cannot exclude that by an agreement. I understood the question was directed to this—whether I compelled tenants and landlords to always go through the expensive process of an arbitration when there was no necessity for it.

13,211. You put it in this way, in fact, subject to the protection afforded to a tenant against capricious eviction, by Clause 9, the landlord and tenant may agree without going before valuers or going before the court?—Yes, undoubtedly there is a clause upon that. Let me on that point refer you to Clause 7. "The parties to a "contract of tenancy may, after the passing of "this Act, agree in writing upon the conditions "of tenancy and the rent of the holding, and "such agreement or a copy thereof, may, within "twenty-one days after the execution thereof, "by all the parties thereto, be registered in the "county court, and thereupon such agreement "shall have the force and effect of an award of "referees fixing judicial conditions of tenancy "and rent of the holding under this Act."

Sir John Llewelyn.

13,212. Does that mean, either side can apply again under seven years?—No, not under seven years.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,213. In the Bill of 1890 it is five years?—That is a matter for committee.

13,214. The agreement under Clause 7 must not be inconsistent with Clause 9 I take it?—No. The conditions of tenancy meant there are the conditions as to cultivation.

13,215. By looking at the interpretation clause it seems to work out so?—"Conditions of tenancy" shall mean agricultural conditions or restrictions for the purpose of securing the proper cultivation.

13,216. Is there not some little ambiguity about that interpretation when you come to look at Clause 18—if you read Clause 7 and Clause 18 and the interpretation clause together. What I mean is this: May the landlord and tenant according to your idea make some special agreement as to the method of agriculture, say rotation of crops?—Undoubtedly. Those are conditions of tenancy, and therefore those could not be altered for the five or seven years or whatever is the limit given. But they could not put in an agreement a condition of this kind: "The landlord may evict whenever he likes." That would not be a condition of tenancy at all, because the condition of tenancy is confined and restricted to the conditions of agricultural cropping.

13,217. For instance the landlord could not evict where there is no breach of the judicial conditions of tenancy under the Act?—Quite so.

13,218. The ultimate tribunal that you propose is the county court?—For fixing only the umpire in case of disagreement.

13,219. It is perfectly clear that for the purpose of carrying out the scheme embodied in this Bill you are bound to have some tribunal or another?—Yes.

13,220. You fix upon the county court?—Yes.

13,221. You think there is no need to create a court for that special purpose?—I do not feel strong upon the point at all. My chief object was to make a proposal that would not secure very great opposition, and I felt quite sure if I went in for a land court that it would so frighten timid landlords that there would be no chance of getting anything like it. I thought this would not excite so much opposition, and I thought it would be equally effective.

13,222. You have given very clear evidence as to the Welsh feeling existing in the district. Do you think it necessary that the county court judges should be Welsh-speaking judges?—I think it is desirable, but I may state this; that a knowledge of law and a thorough acquaintance with the practice of law is the most important qualification of the two, and I never would be willing to let an inferior lawyer who had not had a large practice, be appointed a county court judge because he knew the Welsh language. I would sooner myself appear before a man who did know the law, and not Welsh, than a man who knew Welsh, and was not a lawyer. I think, you ought to secure a man now who knows the law, and has had plenty of practice and can speak Welsh.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

13,223. I gather as to the district for which you speak, that the farms are rather small farms, and on the bigger estates they are occupied by persons whose families for generations have been connected with the particular holding?—Well, on the old large estates, that, no doubt, is the common case.

13,224. Do you find that there is any complaint as to persons not getting access to the mountains, and to the more beautiful parts of this county?—Well, I have not heard much complaint of people not being allowed to travel across the mountains. I have heard complaints very much of persons now being prohibited from fishing in streams and lakes, where, from time immemorial, they always used to fish.

13,225. Is there any suggestion from any class of persons in this county for the improvement of the communications, by railways, for instance, or tramway?—Well, of course, my knowledge is confined chiefly to this district. We have a pretty good supply owing to the quarries being in the neighbourhood; they make railways and tramways, and so on, to a greater extent than it would be possible to have, if you had regard to the agricultural conditions alone.

13,226. Is there any foreshore difficulty along this Carnarvonshire coast. We had evidence tendered to us at Swansea, as to seignioral rights over the foreshore, giving rise to difficulties in preventing the improvement of the locality. Have you had anything of the sort up here. Have you heard any such complaints?—No, the foreshore rights here, are nearly always in the Crown, as a rule. I know at Bangor, the Bishop of Bangor is Lord of the Manor there, and, of course, where there is a Lord of the Manor, the foreshore belongs to the Lord of the Manor; but generally they belong to the Crown, and the practice of the Crown is to let the foreshores to whomsoever wants them, but first of all giving an option to the landowner.

13,227. I think the ferry and the foreshore at Bangor belong to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners?—Yes, by virtue of the manor vested in the bishop as Bishop of Bangor, which is now vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, of course.

13,228. Is there any complaint as to their action, I mean the action of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners?—I am not aware of any.

13,229. Do you know anything about the ferries over the Straits?—Yes, I have very often crossed them.

13,230. I mean as to the legal position?—I could not say, except I know that there is an exclusive right of ferry existing, but I believe it is derived from the Crown.

Lord Kenyon.

13,231. I want to carry you back to that Llanddeiniolen turbary. I have an extract here from the "Carnarvon and Denbigh Herald" for 18th March 1882, which does not quite tally with your account in one small detail. You said in respect of the application of December 14th, 1881, that the poor people determined to give up as they could not afford to fight Mr. Assheton Smith. The paper I have here, says this: "Out "of the nine defendants, seven of them, including "Robert Jones and Richard William Thomas, "had entered appearances, but having entered "appearances, they probably had repented of "their misdeeds, and they took out a summons "to have their names struck out with costs. "That was objected to, and they amended their "summons, and submitted to a perpetual in- "junction, and an order to pay the costs of the "action. They apologised for their acts, and "the plaintiff, although injured by their acts, "waived any claim for damages. That order "was made to the learned counsel by his Lord- "ship sitting in chambers on the 24th February "last; thus, there were only two defendants "left upon the record, viz.:—Robert Jones and "Richard William Thomas; they had never "appeared, and against them counsel now "moved. Mr. Assheton Smith did not desire "to claim any damages from them, but it was "necessary that he should now move that a "perpetual injunction be awarded against the "defendants to restrain them and others from "trespassing on the plaintiff's moor, situate "at Fawriog-y-go, in the parish of Llan- "ddeiniolen, and from sending any cattle, sheep, "or horses thereon, or from going in or upon "the plaintiff's turbary, at Fawnog-y-go, so far "as the same had not been enclosed, except for "the purpose of getting turf in the unenclosed "portion, and from permitting any cattle to "stray there. He also stated that the costs of "the plaintiff in the action against the defen- "dants Robert Jones and Richard William "Thomas, including the costs of that action, "should be taxed and paid by the defendants."

13,232. Is that all correct?—Perfectly correct, and I think it is perfectly consistent with what I said.

13,233. There were two defendants left in the action?—But they never appeared at the outset; according to that account, they had never appeared.

13,234. I pass on to this: "His lordship had "then considered that he ought not to grant an "exparte injunction before service of the writ, "but his lordship in chambers had directed that "the costs of this unsuccessful motion, although "no order had been made upon it, be paid by "the defendants who had brought about the "application for the motion by their own pro- "ceedings. The Vice-Chancellor, instead of "saying 'not claiming damages,' I think that "you are certainly entitled to say 'that the "'plaintiff gives up his claim for damages.'" Is that so?—Certainly.

13,235. I thought you said they determined not to fight, as they could not afford to do so?—That is so, and all that was done on their application to be allowed to withdraw their appearance to the action. A man served with a writ is not bound to appear at all; if he does not appear at all judgment goes by default, but if he appears a statement of claim is delivered, and then he has to put in his statement of defence, which he cannot withdraw except by leave. If he did not withdraw that then they would be entitled to go to trial; and if the witnesses have to be taken up to London instead of settling it in this way, at a cost of 8*l.* or 9*l.*, it might run into 800*l.* or 900*l.* Of course, if they had chosen to go to London and fight and win, all right; but as they were not going to do that, it was better for the defendants to let the plaintiff have judgment upon his own terms as cheaply as possible.

13,236. I have very few further questions to ask you, and I may say I am very much struck with your evidence. Do you think if your Bill had been passed this Commission would not have been appointed?—I am quite certain of it.

13,237. You said you thought 30 years was not sufficient for time value of buildings?—Certainly not.

13,238. What do you consider sufficient?—I do not think any term ought to be put. I should consider the value of the building at the time the man left. If it had been there 300 years, if it was worth anything at all, let him be paid the actual value at the time of quitting.

13,239. Then you said something with reference to Mr. Assheton Smith putting in Churchmen at one time. I think you said there was some complaint about that. Were those Churchmen Welshmen or not?—I take it almost to a certainty they would be Welshmen. I never asked the question, but I have not the least doubt of it.

13,240. Would he not have a right to put in Churchmen?—Yes, a perfect right. That is what we complain of, that he had the right. I should not object to it so much, supposing that landlords were some church and some chapel, mixed the same as grocers are, because then if one landlord favours his own denomination, another landlord would favour another, and everybody would in a rough sort of way get fair justice. But where you have all the landlords belonging to the Church of England denomination, and Conservatives, it becomes very rough on those who do not belong to that Church and party.

13,241. Do not you know some Nonconformist landlords?—Very few.

13,242. Surely you know some?—I should say not scarcely any in Wales here.

13,243. In Anglesey?—Yes, there are in Anglesey two or three, but they are great exceptions.

13,244. Do they balance it in Anglesey by appointing Nonconformists in preference to Churchmen?—I do not think so in the least myself, because I think there are rarely to be found any farmers who are Churchmen, except very few, except some of recent years become so for considerations which are well known. But on the estates which you refer to you will find that they were purchased not very many years ago, and every tenant on the property then has been left in occupation ever since, and I am certain there has been no consideration whatsoever of any man's religion; I am certain it never occurred to anyone.

13,245. In my own part of the world, in Flintshire, I think Churchmen are in the majority?—It is certainly not in Anglesey. There are very few Churchmen there. With reference to Anglesey, I cut a letter out of a paper called the "Chronicle" bearing upon this matter. The "Chronicle" is the Conservative paper. It is an extract from the "North Wales Chronicle" of May the 7th 1887, and it is under the head of Llangwyllog, Anglesey. It is a letter sent. They do not make themselves responsible for it, but they put it in this way. "It "is rumoured that the desirable farm called "Hafod (200 acres) in this parish is now vacant. "It is to be hoped that Sir Richard Bulkeley "will this time give the preference to a Con- "servative and a thorough Churchman should "one apply for the farm, otherwise the Church "in the place will suffer considerably. Between "emigration on the part of Churchmen, and the "filling up of farms in the neighbourhood of "late by extreme Radicals and chapel-going "people, the Church has suffered considerably. "For the past 40 years dissent has made its "mark; and if due caution is not taken soon, "it will be useless to ring the church bell. The "future success of churches to a certain degree, "particularly in such a county as Anglesey, "depends upon the action of Conservative "landlords. They are a power in the country."

13,246. Had there been a complaint with regard to Churchmen getting a preference on Sir Richard Bulkeley's estate?—I do not think it has ever been a complaint on Sir Richard's estate at all; I think in the past, at any rate, not a single tenant on that estate felt he was under a disadvantage by being a Nonconformist. I only mention it as showing that among a large section of Churchmen that feeling has been very prevalent within the last 25 years—I do not think it existed before then or 30 years at any rate.

13,247. You say most of these difficulties occur with regard to tenancy, not with regard to Church, but when estates are sold?—That is most frequently the case.

13,248. Do you think something should be extracted from the vendor for improvements made so that he realises more by his sale?—Certainly. It is he who gets the value.

13,249. Do you put anything in your Bill with regard to that?—Yes.

13,250. You have something about it?—My Bill applies to it, because if my Bill passed then the man who is purchaser of a farm can only hold it on exactly the same terms as his vendor previously held it; and as the vendor could not evict except for the specified causes the purchaser could not do so either. The purchaser if he evicted would have to pay compensation according to the value of the improvement irrespective of anything given beforehand as purchase money to the vendor; therefore it would be utterly immaterial to the tenant if his farm were sold every six months.

13,251. Would not that make a great deal of arbitration to be gone through, in the case of a sale; for instance, would not a man who bought an estate have very improved value?—Yes, but the cost of arbitration is far less than the cost of confiscation.

13,252. In answer to Mr. Jones, you said that you thought there was some reason for some legislation for Wales?—Yes.

13,253. Do you think that would be at all on account of the Welsh landowners having failed to meet their tenants in bad times more than the English landowners have?—I do not make that charge.

13,254. It was suggested in a newspaper, and in fact it was suggested in another place?—Well, it has never been suggested by me. I have never made that suggestion.

13,255. Do you think the Welsh landowners have treated the tenants as well as the English landowners have treated their tenants?—I think so far as the landlords themselves are concerned they have. At the same time, I think they get better rents than the English landlords do.

13,256. Because the conditions in Wales are better?—No, I think it is for another reason because the standard of comfort of the Welsh tenant is lower than the English tenant. I think that is found in England now, that in the Midland counties and in the Eastern counties, the depression of trade has been such that the English farmer has been absolutely unable in a great number of cases to carry on the farm. The complaint exists in those counties that they are overrun by Welshmen and Scotchmen who come and pay more, and they are able to do that because the standard of comfort is lower and they work harder than the English tenants.

13,257. Do you think it enters into the case that the farms in Wales are on an average rather smaller?—No doubt they are smaller.

13,258. And the Welsh farmer works more himself and employs less labour?—Yes, no doubt, and works very hard too.

Chairman.

13,259. These are the questions put by Mr. Vincent, "Have any cases become known to "you, or have you not heard on good authority, "that some mortgagees have been calling in "their money expressly because of the agita- "tion on the land question, or if you dislike "the word 'agitation,' because of the rise of the "question?"—I know of one. May I further explain that very many years ago, at the outset, a gentleman who has very very strong opinions on the land question from the landlord's point of view, and who was frightened, called in a few mortgages. I think he has not done so at all of late years. He also sold one or two farms then, but he has ceased to do so.

13,260. That is the only instance you can call to mind?—Yes. I pointed out to the gentleman that if the Bill were passed it would not—as I have pointed out to the Commission to-day—affect the value of land in any way, inasmuch as under the Bill a landowner is entitled to resume possession if he wants the land for his own occupation (Clause 10) so that purchasers who buy for their own occupation would not be deterred in the least by the passing of the Bill.

Lord Kenyon.

13,261. Have you backed the Bill presented in 1892?—Oh, yes.

13,262. It is not quite the same as this?—It is the same in principle, except that a land court is substituted for arbitration. It is simply the machinery that is altered, the principle is identically the same. There is another difference, which is new, that some arrangements are made there for the regulation of common sheep walks. That is not in this Bill at all.

Chairman.

13,263. That is the only instance you know?—That is the only instance I know.

13,264. "You say 'some persons of weak "'principles' deserted Nonconformity. Surely "you admit that a man may change even his "religious opinions conscientiously?"—Undoubtedly, but when that change is exactly contemporaneous with his own interest, it is rather open to suspicion.

13,265. With regard to the custom of tenant right, I understand you to say it existed, but that if it were brought into existence again it would be injurious; do you say that?—The custom of tenant right, and of free sale, no doubt did exist in that particular locality immediately surrounding Dinorwic quarries on the Llanddeiniolen parish. It is only the free sale that I object to.

13,266. You object to that?—Yes, I object to that. I think that inasmuch as the landlord is not entitled to exact a competitive price, the outgoing tenant ought not to be allowed to exact a competitive price either.

13,267. Mr. Vincent asks. "Were not the "agents acting in the public interest when "they put an end to it?"—No, I think not.

13,268. In that case do you think the agents were acting in the public interest when they put an end to this custom of tenant right?—No, my Lord, for this reason, that they did not pay the actual value of the compensation in any way. They simply restricted them to the 30 years. I am told that very farm of Fachwen is now worth ten-fold to Mr. Assheton Smith, compared with what it was in the year 1842, when it was cut up. Perhaps that may be exaggeration, but certainly manifold—but that is what is stated to me—and that would be almost entirely due to the work of the tenants except the cost of the boundary fences.

13,269. Mr. Vincent also asks, "Do you "say that it is a hardship that the rents of A. "and B. for land of even quality should not be "uniform, even if neither of them is excessive"?—No, my Lord, it is no hardship whatever. It is an advantage to the man under-rented, but that is no hardship to the other man if his own rent is a fair rent. I assume that both are fair rents—the highest is not too high. Of course it is only a loss to the landlord who lets the other at the under value.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,270. When you speak of a landowner you mean a gentleman who is able to live with his family upon the rents without having any other occupation?—Yes; whose main source of income is from land.

Chairman.

13,271. Then questions put in by Mr. Owen: first, "Do you think if land courts were esta-"blished landlords would still continue to ex-"pend money in improving their property"?—There would be no reason whatsoever why they should not, and if they did not the tenants would—it would make no difference to the public.

13,272. "Do you not think their friendly in-"terest in it would diminish"?—Not in the slightest degree. I may state this, my Lord, that I sent a copy of the Bill the year I first introduced it to the principal landowners and the land agents. The year it first appeared I met the land agent of one large landed proprietor, who told me that it would not affect their estate at all if my Bill was passed—that they managed their estate entirely on the principles of that Bill.

The witness withdrew.

Captain Niel Patrick Stewart called and examined.

Chairman.

13,273. I believe you wish to give some rebutting evidence with regard to William Owen's statement?—Yes, I do.

13,274. He said that "Mr. Jones, the sub-"agent of Mr. Assheton Smith's estate, called "several times to press for father's vote, and "ultimately my father wrote two letters, one to "Vaynol to Mr. Jones, the sub-agent of Mr. "Assheton Smith's estate, and the other to Lord "Penrhyn's agent, saying that it was unneces-"sary for them to call again, as he was a Liberal "and intended to vote accordingly. Soon after

Chairman—continued.

"this we began to feel the resentment of the "family, and the next step was the service on "my father of six months' notice to quit, dated "10th May 1869, which is still in my possession." Mr. William Owen is here. Do you want to say anything about that?—I can only say that the two agents, Mr. Millington, who was the principal agent, and Mr. Jones, the sub-agent, are both dead, and of course they cannot speak for themselves. It is very easy to make assertions against dead men. It was long before my time, and I have nothing particular to say on that part.

Chairman—continued.

There are a few mistakes made by Mr. William Owen which I should like to correct. The first mistake he made was in stating that his father had no agreement. His father had an agreement, and I now produce it. (Handing it in.)

15,275. That agreement is dated the 16th March 1869. When he was given notice to quit was the 10th May 1869, so that agreement is a month or two before he was evicted. Can you produce any agreement before that time?—No. That was when the agreements were first issued on the Vaynol estate.

13,276. A month or two before he was turned out?—I found it in my office. It was signed by Mr. John Owen, and I bring it here. His son says he had no agreement.

13,277. You see that is an agreement in March, and he was turned out in May of the same year?—No, he was turned out in November.

13,278. The notice to quit was in May, so he had his agreement a little over a month before he got notice to quit?—Yes. I should like to remark that that clearly shows that Mr. Assheton Smith, or those who were acting for him at that time, had no intention of turning him off from any caprice or whim, or anything of that sort. I should like that to be very clearly noted, if you please.

13,279. Will you explain that?—Well, I think it has been spoken about as a capricious eviction by Mr. Bryn Roberts, who spoke a few minutes ago.

13,280. How does an agreement a month or two before he was turned out show it?—Surely it shows it was not intended to turn him out when he had an agreement, and a counterpart, signed by the landlord handed over to him. It clearly shows that there was no intention by the landlord to turn him out at the time.

13,281. It was done after the notice to quit was given, and they gave him the agreement in March, and the notice to quit in May?—Yes.

13,282. And that shows a very good feeling, you think?—Yes; to my mind it conveys that idea. It was long before my time as I have said. It conveys the impression to my mind that there was no intention at all.

13,283. Mr. William Owen said this: "Mr. "Assheton Smith would pass my father on the "road without looking at him, though prior to this "he was very friendly with my father, and when "there were rejoicings going on at Vaynol on "account of the coming of age of Mr. Assheton "Smith, all the larger tenants except my father "were invited there." Do you know anything about that?—No, I know nothing about that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,284. Is it not the fact that agreements were given in the March to all the tenants on the estate?—Yes.

13,285. Was there anything particular in the manner of giving the agreement?—No. The agreement was given to Mr. John Owen in the same manner that the rest of the agreements were given on the estate at the same time. It has been stated that this man has been turned off owing to his politics.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

13,286. The allegation was, I think, that in consequence of political differences in 1868 notice to quit was given?—Yes.

13,287. I understood that to be the allegation. Well, if the agreement was given in the spring of 1869, that shows that in March 1869 there was an intention to retain him in his farm. Is that what you say?—That is what I contend—that that was the intention—that nothing could have been in the mind of Mr. Assheton Smith and those acting for him to turn the man out if they had put him in possession under the agreement in March.

13,288. This is an agreement in March 1869?—Yes.

13,289. Is this an agreement of an ordinary character at that time?—It is the ordinary agreement which was served out to all the tenants on the Vaynol estate at that time.

13,290. Can you say why in March 1869 the agreement was given to him, and in May 1869 notice to quit was given to him?—The only reason I have heard is that Mr. Assheton Smith wanted to take the farm into his own hands as a home farm.

Chairman.

13,291. I do not see that there is anything in this, because he particularly stated that he had an agreement?—No, he particularly stated that he had no agreement.

13,292. Did he?—Yes.

13,293. It may have been so, but I do not recollect it. It may have come out incidentally?—It was in answer to a question, I think.

13,294. Very well, we can see whether that is so afterwards. What else do you wish to say?—The second mistake he made was in saying that his father had never received anything for the generally improved condition of the land, and there he was in the wrong. Over and above the valuation of stock, crop, and improvements he was paid a sum of 200*l.*

13,295. Yes. He said: "Some compensation "was paid to my father on his leaving, but "nothing at all adequate to it." Those were his words?—But this question was put afterwards, whether he was paid a sum for the generally improved condition of the farm. He said he was not paid anything for that, and I make a difference between this payment of 200*l.* and the other payments made to him for permanent improvements.

Lord Kenyon.

13,296. How much was he paid altogether?—I will take that in one moment. The money was voluntarily paid him for giving up peaceable and quiet possession to his landlord, who wanted the place for his home farm. Mr. Owen stated that his father was only paid partly for haulage; but it would appear from the accounts which I have here, and which I shall be happy to show you, that he was paid for every load he ever carried, and his own account for every load he carried must have been accepted by the carriers; he was also paid for clearing rough ground; he was paid for walling, fencing, and draining; he was also paid for road-making; he was also paid for hives of bees; he was paid for poultry—he was paid for hens, he was paid for chickens, he was paid for pigeons, and he was paid for everything on the farm; and the whole sum amounted to 3,749*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* I have heard it frequently said that Mr. Owen made a fortune owing to the very handsome way in which he was treated. These are the accounts. These I put in first of all. This is the original valuation of the stock and crop signed by the valuers (handing in the documents).

Chairman.

13,297. Your assertion is: that he made his fortune when he went out of the farm, and his assertion is that he lost over 2,000*l.*?—Well, we agree to differ. This is the valuation signed by the valuers; there were four valuers appointed. They signed their names: there was Thomas Owen, Richard Morris, John Rae, and Mr. Edward Humphreys. Those gentlemen were appointed to make the valuation, and everything was left to their discretion. They were left, as far as I can understand, every amount of latitude, and this is the result of their valuation. I want to show that not only was it a valuation for stock, but that it was also a valuation for permanent improvements made by the tenant, and these were not estimated by the agent for the estate. The permanent improvements made by the tenant were not arrived at or estimated by the agent of the estate; he had nothing at all to do with it; it was entirely put in the hands of these four gentlemen as valuers. They estimated the amount of permanent improvements to which the tenant was entitled; they measured up the walls and they measured up the drains; they took Mr. Owen's account of the number of loads that he carted, and the valuation was arrived at in that way; so that having been arrived at by men of experience mutually appointed, I have no reason to think that the valuation was not a fair one and a right one. Therefore I think Mr. Owen should not say that he was inadequately paid.

Sir John Llewelyn.

13,298. Does that valuation differentiate between farm produce and unexhausted improvements?—It does; all the different items are shown separately.

13,299. Is that all you have to say about Mr. William Owen?—That is all.

Mr. Griffiths.

13,300. Will you give me the total of what you consider Mr. Owen has had?—He has had altogether 3,749*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.*

13,301. For the amount of the valuation?—For the amount of the valuation, as shown in this book. He was paid sometime previously 200*l.*, but the total amount is 3,749*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.*

13,302. In respect of the valuation?—Yes.

Re-examined. 13,374.

Mr. William Owen recalled, and further examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

13,303. Do you know your father's signature?—Yes.

13,304. Is that his signature? (handing receipt to witness)?—Yes, it is.

The interpreter read the receipt as follows:—

"Received the 13th day of October 1869 of George William Duff Assheton Smith, Esq., the above-mentioned sum of 3,533*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* the amount due from him to me as per the foregoing particulars, and in full of all demands whatever.

"As witness my hand,

"John Owen.

"Witness,—

"Edward Griffith Powell."

13,305. Did you understand the contents of that?—Yes.

13,306. Do you consider that the 3,533*l.* was a proper and sufficient sum, or do you say it was not a proper and sufficient sum?—No; it was not sufficient by 2,000*l.*

13,307. You still adhere to your original statement that you consider yourself a loser by being turned out of the farm to the extent of over 2,000*l.*?—It is entirely impossible to disprove it. The stock are included in this, the cattle and the sheep.

Captain Stewart.—Yes, that is right.

Chairman.

You gave him 200*l.* for his outlay?

Captain Stewart.—For the improved condition of the farm.

Chairman.

For the improved condition of the farm. Put it in that way if you like. Apart from other permanent improvements then, you gave him for the stock 2,495*l.* Then for his chickens, his hens, his bees, walls, drains, and the various other things that you have enumerated, you gave him a sum of 1,051*l.*, and that is what I think he complains of. He maintains that he has lost under your predecessor's management

Chairman—continued.

2,000*l.*, and what I understand him from this to say (we will ask him the question) is, that he thinks that for his repairs, his bees, his poultry, &c., he ought to be paid 3,000*l.* instead of 1,000*l.*

13,308. [To the witness.] Do you think that is enough?—No. That is my complaint, that we did not get enough for the repairs by 2,000*l.*

Captain Stewart.

13,309. For "improvements" I suppose he means, not for "repairs'; draining, fencing, and so on?

[The interpreter put the question to the witness.]

—For draining, and building, and cultivating the land, and all such improvements as those. I do not complain at all about the prices so far as those four men could see them, but it was impossible for them to see them.

Chairman.

13,310. Did you estimate the cartage alone at 1,051*l.* as per estimate put in?—For 10 years only, not for the whole; another five years should be added to this sum.

13,311. You claim 1,000*l.* for the cartage alone for 10 years?—Not carting alone; there are other things in.

13,312. You still maintain that you are 2,000*l.* out of pocket?—Yes, more than that.

Lord Kenyon.

13,313. Did you complain to Mr. Assheton Smith or Mr. Assheton Smith's trustees at the time?—We told the valuers that we had lost a good deal.

13,314. But did you not agree to the valuers beforehand?—We agreed to them as the lesser of two evils.

13,315. And did your father sign the receipt as "having received the before-mentioned sum "as due from him to me as per the foregoing "particulars and in full"—I suppose it means "discharge"—"of all demands whatever"?—That he had received that sum—not further than that.

Mr. Griffiths.

13,316. Will you kindly tell us who chose the valuers?—Mr. Assheton Smith chose two of them, and my father the other two.

13,317. Was there an umpire called in?—No.

13,318. Do you understand anything of valuations yourself?—I was there at the time.

13,319. Are you competent to judge?—I ought to be.

13,320. Do you know anything about pricing?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

13,321. Have you ever been employed as a valuer?—Yes, about home.

Professor Rhŷs.

13,322. By whose valuation do you make out that you lost so much? Is that your own valuation or your father's?—All of us together—my father and all of us together.

13,323. Was your father well known as a man who knew a great deal about farming?—Yes, he was very well known.

13,324. Did he ever value himself?—Yes, and wrote a good deal about farming.

13,325. What did he write?—He had been winning in writing essays for the Eisteddfod on farming.

13,326. Did he publish a book on the selection of cattle?—Yes.

13,327. Is that book still in vogue?—Yes, a good number ask for it.

13,328. In fact your father was one of the leaders in the improvements of agriculture—in spreading improved ideas about agriculture in these parts,—was he not?—Yes, certainly he was.

13,329. And the traditions have been kept up in your family?—Yes

13,330. If I mistake not, your brother is a lecturer on agriculture now at the University College of North Wales?—Yes.

13,331. So that it would not be true to say that you would have no right to an opinion as to the value of improvements on your farm, would it?—No, it would not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,332. What I understand you are really complaining of is the basis of the valuation?—Allow me to say this; a piece of land was for two years drained and the stones removed from its surface, and during those two years we did not get more than 10 loads of hay.

Professor Rhŷs.

13,333–4. Ten tons?—Ten tons between hay and grass. The land was large enough, 25 acres, and in the two and three last years we were at Tynllwyn it produced over 40 tons of hay. It was impossible for the valuers to see such things, and I could mention several other parts on the farm besides that which were the same.

Mr. Grove.

13,335. Did your father keep any books showing the money that he spent on these improvements year after year?—It would appear to me that he did from the paper handed in.

13,336. It appears to be one of those cases where a little book-keeping might have been useful?—There is another thing. The first thing that I mentioned at Pwllheli was that he had been turned away owing to his having voted. I believe that this book or document will throw some light upon that. [Handing in book.] We do not desire to say anything but that which is a fact.

Chairman.

This was a very usual thing in England, at any rate before the Ballot Act, everybody marked the way that he voted then.

The Reverend HOWELL ROBERTS called and examined.

Chairman.

13,337. What do you wish to come before the the Commissioners with regard to? — With respect to rebutting the evidence of Mr. J. R. Jones against Mr. Acland and myself yesterday.

13,338. It was the evidence given by Mr. Jones yesterday?—Yes, Mr. J. R. Jones of Maesglas, Clynnog.

13,339. Shall I read through before the Commissioners what Mr. Jones said?—If you please.

13,340. Mr. Jones' evidence yesterday was this, "I desire now to speak upon a tenancy "between myself and Mr. Acland, M.P. I took "from him personally about 4 acres of land "some seven years ago, and have been ever "since the tenant in part or in full, for which I "paid 15*l.* per annum. About two years ago, "as Mr. Acland intended selling, it was agreed "that I was to give up the land on one month's "notice if the place were sold. In June last I "found that the Reverend Howell Roberts of "Clynnog had gone behind my back to Mr. "Acland and offered for the place more than I "paid." I do not understand that. I suppose that means practically that he offered a higher rent. Is Mr. Jones in the room.

Mr. J. R. Jones.—I am.

Chairman to Mr. J. R. Jones.

Do you mean by "Offered for the place more "than I paid" that he offered a higher rent?

Mr. J. R. Jones.—That is so.

Chairman.

13,341. "Mr. Acland gave him the tenancy "without giving me any notice. I produce "complete correspondence on this matter. I "bring this matter forward to show that "tenants require security of tenure." Mr. Roberts, will you tell us what your version of that is. What have you to say?—May I read the evidence as I have written it.

13,342. Yes, if you please?—The evidence of Mr. J. R. Jones of Clynnog, as I read it in the 'Liverpool Courier" of to-day. I did not hear it before because I was not here yesterday—

13,343. Is what I have read substantially what you read?—It is not quite the same; but it comes to the same thing. Mr. J. R. Jones and three other farmers from Clynnog had been authorised to appear before the Land Commission as representatives of a committee chosen by the farmers of the parish. The Committee was made up of Conservatives as well as Liberals, and the evidence to be given by the representatives here was presented to the Committee and unanimously agreed upon. However the case brought in here against Mr. Acland and myself was not presented to the Committee for its opinion at all, and he (being a representative) has gone (as he says of me) behind the back of his committee in bringing this case before the Commission. I wished to state this in order to strip his evidence of the importance which otherwise might appear to belong to it. He is alone responsible for the evidence. Now, with regard to his attack upon me. He says that "In June last witness found that the Reverend "Howell Roberts had gone behind his back to "Mr. Acland and offered more for the place "than he paid for it."

Chairman—continued.

13,344. More rent?—More rent. In the result, Mr. Acland gave him the tenancy without giving witness any notice of it. I do not know whether it is quite right in the "Courier" as to that. Is it called "tenancy" down in his evidence?

13,345. It is "In June last I found that the "Reverend Howell Roberts, of Clynnog, had "gone behind my back to Mr. Acland and "offered for the place more than I paid. Mr. "Acland gave him the tenancy without giving "me any notice"?—In reply, I may state that I never asked for the tenancy, nor offered any sum whatever for it to Mr. Acland. There was no tenant then, nor had there been for six months.

13,346. What date was that?—That was in June.

13,347. June this year?—June this year. John Jones had been tenant for the year before, but he left the land, or rather he was to leave, however he did not leave at Christmas.

13,348. When did he leave it?—He kept the fowls there for six months, and took possession of the coach-house without the consent of Mr. Acland.

13,349. When did Mr. Jones give up his tenancy, do you say?—He ought to have given it up about Christmas last year. Mr. J. R Jones' tenancy was up at Christmas. Mr Acland would have no tenant, and that was well known, as he wanted to sell the farm. Mr. Acland was his own tenant, and he had the hay standing then, which was then standing on the farm and the grounds of Plas y bryn, his own house. I first asked the agent of Mr. Acland if any other person wanted the hay. I could not do better than that, I think. He said he knew of no one. He told me to write and ask Mr. Acland, and so I did, and I asked him the same question, whether he had any other person who wanted the hay, and if he had not, would he sell the hay to me. This was in June this year. I did not know then that Mr. J. R. Jones or anyone else wanted the hay, though I made the inquiries mentioned. Neither Mr. Acland nor his agent ever mentioned the name of Mr. J. R. Jones to me at all, so that I did not get behind his back as he stated, except in the same manner or sense as I went behind the back of all other human beings who had exactly the same claims to the fields as J. R. Jones himself. Again, he said he "desired to speak of a tenancy "which existed between himself and Mr. Acland. "Witness took from him a piece of land of "about four acres about seven years ago, and "he had been the tenant ever since. He paid "15*l.* per annum."

13,350. Is that in Mr. Jones's evidence?—That is not quite the same, I see.

12,351. One moment. Have you quite gone off this question of the hay? Is this quite a different thing altogether?—I have been dealing with his attack upon me, personally, my Lord.

13,352. Is this a separate question?—It is the same question with regard to Mr. Acland. It is plain that J. R. Jones has purposely attempted here to mislead the Commission to think that he was a regular yearly tenant. Well, I am afraid I am not quite right there, since it is not exactly the same as it was in the paper, is it?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,353. I understood Mr. J. R. Jones to say that he was a tenant from year to year of these four acres?—Yes, so it is in the "Courier."

13,354. But it is that he had been a tenant from year to year, and he is entitled to notice?—

Chairman.

The exact words Mr. Jones uses are these: "I "took from Mr. Acland personally about four "acres of land some seven years ago, and have "been ever since the tenant in part or in full, "for which I paid 15*l.* per annum."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Yes, that is what he said.

Chairman.

I suppose that means that Mr. Jones certainly considered himself a yearly tenant?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,355. On that statement alone it would appear that he was tenant from year to year?—Yes. Mr. Acland let him his land sometimes part, and sometimes the whole of the little farm at irregular intervals—so Mr. Acland writes in a letter to Mr. Jones himself—for a distinct period of time in each case, and not from year to year.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Chairman.

13,356. One moment; we will find the letter from Mr. Acland?—It is the first in the correspondence with Mr. Jones, I think.

13,357. This is Mr. Acland's letter:—"June "21, '93.—Dear Sir, I am sorry that you should "feel in any way aggrieved at my selling "my hay crop to Mr. Roberts. It is true "that you have from time to time, and at "irregular intervals had the feeding on the "land attached to my house for your cattle. "But you will remember that some months ago "I refused when you asked me to let the land "to you. I am surely entirely at liberty, with-"out doing any kind of injustice to anyone, to "make the arrangement I have made with Mr. "Roberts.—Yours faithfully, A. H. D. Acland."—The tenancy came to an end each time without notice on either side; no notice was wanted on either side. He speaks about a month's notice. The last time he let the fields to him was to end last Christmas, and when he applied to Mr. Acland last March for the land he refused to let it to him.

13,358. That letter shows that?—Yes.

13,359. That is the letter of March?—Yes; I am sorry to say; and yet it is my duty to do so, in defending the character of an honourable man like Mr. Acland, that this J. R. Jones, taking advantage of the absence of Mr. Acland from the neighbourhood, has continued to make use of his land and buildings for over six months without his consent. Mr. Acland might have charged him a heavy compensation for doing so. But now, when he should have felt grateful to Mr. Acland that he did not do so, he has the face to present before a Royal Commission a complaint against Mr. Acland which is thoroughly unjust and untrue. I hope your Lordship and the other members of the Commission will not meet with such an instance of ingratitude anywhere else in the Principality.

Mr. J. R. Jones recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

13,360. Have you anything to qualify in what you said last night?—I think those letters —the correspondence from beginning to end, my Lord—will clear the whole matter up. Being a tenant at intervals during the last seven years, I will explain it in this way. Mr. Acland changed his mind, and it was understood that should Mr. Acland want one of the four small fields, we were to come to an agreement between me and him and let him have one, and settle how much was to be deducted from this 15*l.* I have been in possession of the land for the last seven years, as I state there, either in part or in full; that means, having four fields, or sometimes three fields—a matter to be settled between me and Mr. Acland. Then, stating that my time was up last Christmas, an agreement was made between me and Mr. Acland.

Chairman—continued.

13,361. Where is that agreement?—Well, I have not had a copy; I wish that I had. It is true that I had one, and Mr. Roberts will not deny it, I think. Mr. Acland thought of selling this land, and I also thought of buying, and I bought just a part of it at least as a residence. Then it was agreed between us for the convenience of Mr. Acland and the purchaser, whosoever he might be, that I should give up this land at one month's notice. That I agreed to, though my time was taken from year to year—the end of the year, and the year was up, true, at the first New Year's Day. I never received one month's notice at all, so I have been in possession of the land, and, as already stated, kept a few fowls there. As for no cattle being there at the time, I will explain that in this way. There never have been any cattle there any other year, during the time, at that period of the year, as it was rather a wet place, and Mr. Acland desired that I should not turn cattle there so as to break it up. That has been so this last year exactly the same as every other year. I have had fowls there before and I have never had any notice to give it up, and the first thing I heard of was that Mr. Roberts had taken the place. As to going behind my back, there was another gentleman who thought that this place was to be let; he went and made inquiries; I suppose to the same agent as Mr. Roberts went to, who was really not the agent. One of the letters there refers me to another agent, to which I did refer, as my correspondence proves, and I met him here at Carnarvon. It was agreed I should take up the stones. I have done so. As Mr. Acland thought of selling, I grazed my own land, and thought of keeping that with hay, but I found to my surprise, after grazing my own land and being a heavy loser by it, though Mr. Roberts was instructed to go to the agent, and he has been inquiring of the very same agent, the one at Clynnog, who is not the agent at all, as Mr. Acland proves. If Mr. Roberts states who the agent was, I think it will clear the whole matter up. It was impossible for me to go to this agent and say anything; as it was there I was told to go to Mr. Parry. As for the fact being well known that I wished to continue my tenancy, I have stated in one of my letters to Mr. Acland, and I think the correspondence proves that. Mr. Roberts afterwards came to me personally and said he was very sorry he did the thing. It was a place he thought of keeping cows at; he thought of keeping a cow or two. Mr. Roberts had a large farm close to that, and he had to live and come to a small house, and I wished to keep a cow.

13,362. I am sorry to interrupt you, but the Reverend Howell Roberts told us that he never asked Mr. Acland for the tenancy, and all he wanted was the crop of hay?—But Mr. Roberts told me personally—he is here now—that he thought of keeping the cows.

13,363. He might have thought of it. Let us keep to the point. He never asked Mr. Acland for the tenancy?—Well, that may be; that is not a tenancy—selling a crop. I cannot say that.

13,364. That is all he asked. Then I am afraid I must ask you another question. Mr. Acland says "You will remember some months "ago I refused when you asked me to let the land "to you," and that is dated June 21st, 1893, some months before that Mr. Acland distinctly refused to let you have the land?—It was under an understood condition.

13,365. Under no condition at all. He says "But you will remember that some months ago "I refused when you asked me to let the land to "you. I am surely entirely at liberty without "doing any kind of injustice to anyone to make "the arrangement I have made with Mr. Roberts," just to sell the crop of hay. I cannot see where there is any difficulty at all about it. Mr. Acland refused to accept you as a tenant. You do not deny that?—I do; I have not got such a refusal, my Lord, because I was in possession, and I was to have this one month's notice.

13,366. Do you not remember that?—No, not a refusal of letting it but under this understanding: Mr. Acland was not going to let the place for a tenancy as he wanted to sell, so that I was to take it whether it was a month or two, and to give it up in one month's notice if the place was sold.

13,367. There may have been a misunderstanding between you, but Mr. Acland distinctly refused to let you the land. Naturally you were not his tenant, and he has let someone else take the crop of hay off the field?—I think, my Lord, if you will turn to one of the letters you will find that as Mr. Acland wanted to sell I made an offer to buy the whole place, the land and the residence. Then, as we could not come to terms respecting that, I asked Mr. Acland if he would let me the land and offered for the land and the residence 50*l.* a year. In answer to that letter Mr. Acland said he would not let, but he wanted to sell.

13,368. Did you answer this letter of Mr. Acland's?—I think there is an answer of mine there.

13,369. Did you not write this on the 22nd of June, in reply to Mr. Acland's letter of the previous day: "Yours to hand this morning, "in which you remind me of your letter some "months ago refusing my proposal"?—That was a proposal of 50*l.* for 10 years, for the whole place which he declined.

13,370. Which he declined?—Which he declined—for 10 years.

13,371. He refused to accept you as a tenant?—As for 10 years under lease. My letter refers to that.

13,372 I do not say for 10 years. He refused your proposal altogether. Do you not say you offered to take the land for 10 years and he said no; therefore you were no longer his tenant. Therefore he let his crop of hay to the reverend gentleman who took it all?—I was a tenant so long as I did not get this one month's notice: that has never been handed in yet.

13,373. You were not a year to year tenant—you were a tenant for a time. I do not think we need go into this; there is a misunderstanding. I do not think we can continue this; we have a great deal to go through, and we quite understand you may not have understood it, but Mr. Acland distinctly refused to accept you as a tenant; your tenancy ceased; he was perfectly right and he let his crop of hay to the reverend gentleman who either has or has not taken it. I do not think we can go any further than that.

Chairman—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Captain Niel Patrick Stewart recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

See 13,122–13,158.

13,374. You desire to say something upon the evidence of Mr. Bryn Roberts this morning about commons?—All I have to say about that is, that not being a lawyer I must really decline to go into any any discussion in this Court, seeing that a question of title is involved. The whole matter has been threshed out in the judicial courts elsewhere—in the law courts in London—and Mr. Assheton Smith has obtained a permanent injunction and the defendants have had to pay his taxed costs. He is perfectly satisfied in the matter.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,375. Do you say that the matter was threshed out and that the action went to trial?—The action went to trial, I believe.

13,376. To trial?—Yes, as I understand—well, I do not know.

13,377. No, the defence was withdrawn. There was no threshing out of the matter at all?—Well, Mr. Assheton Smith has got a permanent injunction and he is perfectly satisfied as he stands. Not being a lawyer I cannot go any further into the matter now.

Chairman.

13,378. You express Mr. Assheton Smith's satisfaction at the result of the proceedings so far as he is concerned?—Yes, he is perfectly satisfied with his title.

Sir John Llewelyn.

13,379. He claims a private title?—Yes, as lord of the manor.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,380. But excuse me, this very matter is dealt with in an award under an Act of Parliament which has been put in?—You are dragging me now into a discussion which I am not prepared to enter into.

Chairman.

13,381. We had better pass away from that, I think, and go straight to your evidence in chief. You are estate agent for Mr. Assheton Smith?—Yes. The estate is the Vaynol estate consisting of 35,936 acres. I have been in charge for nearly 19 years.

13,382. Are you permitted to state the rental?—I will hand it up to you.

13,383. You would rather not state it publicly?—I do not feel quite at liberty to state it.

Chairman—continued.

13,384. Not like Lord Penrhyn?—I was not aware that Lord Penrhyn had stated the rental.

13,385. Yes, he told us what the income of the estate was?—I have not mentioned the matter to Mr. Assheton Smith. I would rather hand it up to your Lordship. Shall I do so now?

13,386. You cannot do it without his permission of course?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

13,387. If Mr. Assheton Smith gave his permission, you could send it to us to-morrow?—Yes, I shall be glad to do so.

[After obtaining Mr. Assheton Smith's permission, witness wrote to the Secretary stating that "his income from land is 20,349*l.* a year."]

Chairman.

13,388. Now, will you proceed?—There are about 1,600 tenants—farm tenants and cottagers—exclusive of urban tenants. I have been in charge of the estate for 19 years nearly.

13,389. Are those 1,600 all the tenants, or are there any others?—Those are all tenants connected with the land—the farm tenants and what I might call crofters, and also cottagers. With regard to "recent enclosures whether by "Act of Parliament or otherwise and their "effect on the neighbouring population." I should say that in the parish of Llanengan 221 acres of land were allotted to this estate under the Enclosure Act of 1811.

Professor Rhŷs.

13,380. That is Llanengan at the other end of this county?—It is. The land is now common to our tenants in the neighbourhood for grazing purposes, and they have always enjoyed the right free of any additional rent. Also in the parish of Llangian, at Mynytho, there is a tract of land common to our tenants surrounding it, for which they have never been asked to pay rent.

Chairman.

13,391. Where there are rights of pasture over "sheep runs," in whom are such rights vested?—Land available for profitable cultivation is already pretty well utilised for that purpose. Existing mountain lands could not, in my opinion, be more profitably turned to account than as at present, viz., as sheep farms. The sheep runs on the estate are vested in the owner, who charges a rent of from 6*d.* to 9*d.* per acre. Sheep runs are frequently held by two or more tenants in certain given proportions, and they regulate the number of their sheep accordingly.

Chairman—continued.

13,392. Then you say rents on adjacent farms are not affected in any way?—Yes.

13,393. Then as to the general condition of sheep farming; we have heard a great deal about that from other people; have you anything to say?—Sheep farming, though profitable some years ago, is not very lucrative at present. The price of mutton is low, and so is the price of wool, and a succession of severe winters has caused serious losses in mountain sheep. There is also much preventible loss occurring. Rams are allowed to walk with the ewes all summer instead of being kept in confinement till, say, the middle of October. The consequence is that lambs begin to come in February and beginning of March, when the hills are frequently covered with snow. The ewes have no milk, and the lambs die as soon as they are born, resulting in a heavy per-centage of loss in the lamb crop. Many of the ewes die also.

13,394. Then you say there are very few absentee landlords?—There are very few absentee landlords in this county.

13,395. Is there any difference of language, politics, or religion between the landlord and the tenant?—A difference in language, politics, or religion does not affect the relations existing on this estate between tenants and landlord or agent.

13,396. Then what about agents; what about yourself, you are a practical agent?—I have had a very fair agricultural training. I have farmed in three different counties in North Wales, and I have farmed very largely in Scotland.

13,397. You consider yourself a practical agriculturist?—I do.

13,398. Then what is the usual date of entry in your district?—The 12th November, as to land. Our tenants under their old agreements are entitled to only six months' notice, but twelve months' notice is always given since the introduction of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

13,399. You say farms are let from year to year?—Yes.

13,400. Is there a great demand for leases?—No demand, but leases would be readily granted by the landlord if applied for by eligible persons.

13,401. Do tenants readily accept leases?—No, they prefer not to be bound under leases, and in these bad times they are fortunate to feel themselves free. I think landlords would probably not sympathise with leaseholders to the same extent as they do with tenants from year to year.

13,402. Then, as to changes in tenancy?—Changes in tenancy are not becoming more frequent. We have very few changes on this estate.

13,403. Have any cases of hardship arisen" Do you know of any?—It is hardly for me to say, and should it be said by others that cases of hardship have arisen, I hope to have an opportunity given me of explanation.

Chairman—continued.

13,404. On resuming the occupation of a field or plot for the sake of planting, and so on, do you give notice?—Yes, due notice is given in terms of their agreement and a permanent abatement of rent granted and compensation paid if tenant is entitled to any.

13,405. Do you compensate for timber cutting?—We do.

13,406. You put in a copy of your agreement?—Yes (handing in agreement).

13,407. Are any of the clauses considered oppressive?—I have never had any complaints.

13,408. Are penalising clauses common, and are they often enforced?—Never; in fact we have no penalising clauses, if I understand the phrase rightly.

13,409. You give tenants a copy of the agreement?—We supply them with a copy of the agreement, and if necessary a copy in Welsh as well.

Mr. Grove.

13,410. Whether they ask for it or not, is a copy of the agreement always given?—Always; there is no tenant appointed on the estate without an agreement, and if he is a man who does not understand English we always supply him with a Welsh copy. I have got the Welsh copy here if you would like to have it in (handing in same).

Chairman.

13,411. Now how is the amount of rent fixed?—By valuation.

13,412. Is the rent fixed on a gross sum?—Fixed at a certain sum arrived at by the valuer at so much per acre. The valuer goes over the farm and fixes the value for every field in the farm. He adds up the whole and arrives at the end in that way.

13,413. What do you think about the rents on your estate as compared with neighbouring estates?—I say first of all that all lands on this estate having been valued by the same valuer and at the same time, there ought therefore to be uniformity of rents on the estate.

13,414. Is the rent of the smaller tenantry higher per acre than on the larger farms?—Slightly higher I should say in proportion, but small farms are more expensive to maintain in repair, there being a greater number of homesteads. The slightly increased rental does not therefore benefit the landlord.

13,415. What is the usual rent of average land of different qualities in your district?—Upland farms 4*s.* to 12*s.* per acre or thereabouts. In lowland farms 12*s.* to 25*s.* Very few farms on the estate being let at the latter figure except accommodation lands.

13,416. Now about right of pasturage over a common. Is that taken into account when the rent is fixed?—No; commons are thrown in free of rent. A common is not valued by the valuer.

Chairman—continued.

13,417. You say there are no services?—No services; rent only is demanded.

13,418. Is the rent fixed on the basis of valuation?—It is.

13,419. You say farms are never let to the highest bidder?—Farms are never let to the highest bidder. Fair rents have been fixed by the employment of an experienced valuer of good reputation.

13,420. Then what about tenants with insufficient capital?—Of course landlords do their best to get tenants with sufficient capital, but this is not always an easy matter. Tenants frequently take farms far beyond their means, and have to borrow money at a high rate of interest—interest in fact becoming a second rent. This keeps them in low water for years, sometimes for life. The landlord also suffers of course when the tenant has not capital to do justice to the land.

12,421. Is arbitration ever resorted to?—No, the rents being fixed by a valuer of good reputation it is perfectly easy to readjust them when any field is taken from a farm. For instance, I know exactly on looking up the valuation book what rent to deduct for any particular field

13,422. Then about the fixing of rents in the last 50 years?—24 years ago it was considered the rents wanted equalising, and a valuation was then made, a professional valuer of great experience having been appointed. His valuation resulted in a gross increase of 10 per cent. This is the only valuation made within the last 70 years at least, so that with abatements of 10 per cent. allowed of late years the rent may be said to be the same as they were 70 years ago. With the 25 per cent. allowed on the last two half-years the rents are now lower than there is any record of. When the estate was re-valued some holdings were reduced in rent, but the general result was 10 per cent. of increase.

13,423. Then about permanent reductions and temporary abatements?—Permanent reductions have been made on several farms. With regard to abatements from May 1886 to 1889 10 per cent. was allowed. In 1888 55 per cent. was allowed. In 1892 10 per cent. on rent, and tithes was allowed. November 1892 rents postponed to following March, and 25 per cent. allowed. May 1893, rent postponed to August, and 25 per cent. allowed. Total amount of abatements from May 1886 to May 1893, 20,589*l.*

13,424. You have given notice, I suppose, to tenants of such abatements?—Yes, about three months' notice.

13,425. When you raise or reduce your rents what do you do?—Well, they are very seldom touched at all except when a tenant dies out.

13,426. Does the change depend on a revaluation?—The rents having been fixed by a valuer 24 years ago have as yet undergone little alteration. Some years ago when things were flourishing, a slight increase was made to a new tenant occasionally, but in most instances such increase has been reduced again, or improvements given as an equivalent.

13,427. Need we go into the chief fluctuations in prices affecting rent within the last 50 years?—Well, I have only a very few words. I cannot go back so far as 50 years, but I remember in 1885 and 1886 when rinderpest was raging on the continent prices went up to abnormal figures owing to the embargo placed on the importation of foreign cattle. Prices continued high for several years, and there were times of prosperity to the British farmer. At that time the importation of meat from America was unimportant, but since then it has increased enormously, particularly in live stock, thousands of cattle arriving in the Mersey alone every month. To this is mainly due in my opinion the low price of beef and mutton which has prevailed for several years. Until the population of America Australia and New Zealand increases to such an extent that the imports from these countries diminish, I see little hope for the British farmer. I share in the belief, however, that we have seen the maximum of wheat imports, and have arrived at a point from which they must diminish, and if this view should prove correct, I have no doubt there are better days in store for our farmers.

13,428. Then about the payment of rent. How soon after it falls due is the rent usually paid?—From two to three months.

13,429. Do you approve of the preferential claim for rent?—It helps the tenant so far as his relations with his landlord are concerned. The landlord is in a position to be more easy with the tenant, and grants him more indulgence than otherwise he would.

13,430. Then the tithes and income tax are paid by the landlord, and the rates by the occupier, you say?—Yes.

13,431. Have local rates increased within the last 25 years?—Yes, but I cannot say to what extent. The increase is paid by landlord and tenants alike on their respective occupations.

13,432. Now about your average size of farms?—Taking the average of our farms would convey an imperfect idea, as we have many mountain farms. We have a great many lowland farms of from 30 to 60 acres. I may add to that that we have something like 500 holdings below 10 acres or thereabouts.

13,433. As to consolidation have you anything to say?—On this estate there has been consolidation to no appreciable extent. I do not think there are more than half-a-dozen instances or so on the whole estate. The object being to have one homestead instead of two, where two homesteads lay almost together, only done at the death of a tenant, except in two instances when other farms were given to the tenants. Farms have been divided and cut up to a much greater extent than consolidated on the Vaynol estate. I can remember but one instance of an upland can being consolidated.

13,434. Then what have you to say about sub-division and subletting of holdings?—It is difficult on a large estate to entirely prevent subletting, and more or less of it goes on on most estates. A clause in our leases forbids it, but tenants frequently transgress, and I have known instances of subletting at double the rent paid. Then I can give instances if you wish it. I have the instances here if you choose to take them. If not, I will supply them at any time.

13,435. Do you think that large farmers suffer the most, especially in times of trade depression?—I do, because they have more at stake.

13,436. As to their inability to provide for their families you say no line can be drawn?—No.

13,437. Then as to scarcity of labourers?—Labourers are getting more scarce I believe, and very much higher paid. Some farmers keep their fences ditches and watercourses in good order, others sadly neglect them.

13,438. Then, is there much land still waste which is capable of profitable reclamation by ploughing up rough land?—A good deal could be done in that direction.

13,439. Could be?—Could be.

13,440. And could be done in draining as well?—Also in draining. The landlord supplies drainage pipes free of charge.

13,441. At whose expense is pasture laid down?—The tenants in this county on every estate that I know of lay out their pastures.

13,442. Do you give them seeds?—Oh, no. I have never heard of any landlord in this part of the world doing it, or in Scotland, or in any county of North Wales that I have been to.

13,443. Root crops, you say, are much about the same?—Yes, increasing slightly; but more roots could be grown with advantage to the tenants.

13,444. Fallowing has gone out, of course?—I would like to read my reply to these questions. The nature of farming changes from time to time according to circumstances. When grain is low more land is put under grass, and when stock is low more grain is grown. The system of fallowing is becoming obsolete in these parts, and none too soon. It is simply a premium on laziness, and farmers in these times cannot afford to let land lie dormant merely for the purpose of cleaning it.

13,445. What improvements are generally made in your district by the landlords?—Building, and contributing materials for repairs, such as timber (including manufactured doors and windows), slates, lime, flooring and ridge tiles, landers, chimney pots, planting for shelter in exposed situations, supplying pumps where there is a scarcity of water, lime for agricultural purposes at reduced prices, pipes for draining free of charge, &c.

13,446. And what improvements are made by the tenants?—Draining, liming, building, and repairing, the landlord contributing. Tenants do most of the horse and cart haulage. What I want to point out is that a vast amount of material is sent by rail and ship for which the landlord always pays.

Chairman—continued.

13,447. Then, in the case of co-operation in improvement, how is that arranged?—In building the landlord provides timber—manufactured doors and windows——

13,448. That is pretty much a repetition of your previous answers?—That is so.

13,449. Then in case of improvements compensation is usually paid by agreement?—Yes; our estate agreements provide full compensation to the tenants for all improvements done with the landlord's approval.

13,450. The agreement has been put in. Do you contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, we do not.

13,451. You have never had any applications for specific improvements?—Never; our tenants consider they are better secured under the terms of their agreements.

13,452. But is such consent readily given when asked for?—It is never asked for, but would not be refused unless the proposed improvement was deemed injudicious and unwise.

13,453. Then what do you say about the custom of the country?—All our tenants being under agreements, with clauses covering valuation of crops, unexhausted manures (farmyard and artificial), tillages, &c., we do not go by the custom of the country.

13,454. The agreement covers all the rest?—Yes.

13,455. Have there been any cases in your district where an outgoing tenant has failed to obtain sufficient compensation for his improvements?—I am glad to say tenants have left the estate who frankly admitted they had been fairly and liberally dealt with, but a few could probably be found who would say they had not received "sufficient" compensation. Who is to be the judge of what is "sufficient"? Thousands of pounds have voluntarily been paid to tenants on this estate who could not claim a farthing under their agreements.

13,456. Then you say there is no right recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of their interest in their holdings?—No; if a tenant has made certain improvements under his agreement giving him an interest in the holding he is entitled to be compensated by the landlord, who reserves the right to appoint a new tenant.

13,457. Then about the sheep on the farm, is the landlord obliged to take them?—The sheep stock is usually taken over by the incoming tenant, either at valuation or by private treaty as may be arranged. There is no compulsion. Sheep bred on a farm are usually worth more to the incoming tenant than they would fetch in the market, so he generally arranges to buy the stock on the ground.

13,458. You do not think much of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Well, there are great difficulties, such as estimating the true value of unexhausted manures.

Chairman—continued.

13,459. Then about game preservation; have you any trouble about that?—The game is usually preserved near Vaynol. Tenants on this estate were allowed to kill rabbits long before the Ground Game Act was heard of. They do not destroy the hares, as in the event of damages being done by them the tenants are properly compensated.

13,460. Is there much damage done by game to the crops?—There is a little, but not to a serious extent. Tenants are always compensated for any loss sustained by them. I estimate the amount, and if they are not satisfied the matter is referred to valuers mutually appointed. In only two instances have the tenants been dissatisfied with my valuation. The matter having therefore been submitted to two valuers, they fixed the amount at a trifle less than I had offered the tenants before.

13,461. The tenants of course do not beat the covert, and it does not affect cultivation to any extent?—No.

13,462. What have you to say about the relations between landlord and tenant?—The kindly relations between landlords and tenants are not affected, because if damage is done it is fully compensated for.

13,463. In your petty sessional district what proportion do offences against the game laws bear to other offences against property?—A very small proportion. I say that I think game preserving affects the public beneficially.

13,464. Is the law of trespass in other respects satisfactory?—I think so, but I may not be a competent judge.

13,465. Who exercise sporting rights over Crown lands and commons?—The parties authorised by the Crown under lease or otherwise do so.

13,466. No attention is paid to fruit culture?—Very little, I think.

13,467. You have got some market gardens, and garden allotments?—I believe market gardening and garden allotments, are receiving a little more attention. We have a considerable number of garden allotments on this estate, many of them made recently.

13,468. Poultry farming?—Poultry farming is followed to a considerable extent.

13,469. Then is there any butter and cheese making?—Yes, great facilities are now offered by the Agricultural Department of the University College, Bangor, and are very largely being availed of.

13,470. Field experiments?—Field experiments are carried out in different parts of the counties of North Wales. Demonstrations are held in butter making, and extension lectures are being delivered in various parts of the country. Schools are established for dairy purposes. Botany is being taught.

13,471. Then as to railway rates?—Railway rates are said to be too high.

13,472. Is there any co-operation among farmers for farming operations generally—threshing, harvesting, sheep-shearing, and so on?—For such purposes neighbouring farmers assist each other.

13,473. Do farmers insure their stock, and so forth?—I am not aware that they insure to any great extent.

13,474. Are there in your district many peasant proprietors or small freeholders who have inherited their holdings from their ancestors?—There are a good few.

13,475. They have not decreased?—No; peasant proprietors have increased, and are going on greatly increasing by purchasing their farms when opportunity presents. "Inherited" freeholds have not increased, and I cannot say that they have diminished. The next generation can say "inherited" freeholds have increased tenfold.

13,476. Have many tenant farmers bought their holdings?—There are a vast number, because opportunities present themselves, portions of several large estates having been sold by auction.

13,477. And good prices were realised?—Very good prices were realised. The remainder of the question I am unable to answer.

13,478. You do not think the condition of freeholders has improved, as compared with yearly tenants in their neighbourhood?—I do not think their condition has improved. I believe they were more comfortable as tenants, having the landlord to assist them in improvements, and granting an abatement of rent in hard times.

13,479. "To what extent do farmers and their "wives take part in the manual labour of their "farms?"—There are farmers with and without wives. Some farmers work hard, and are most industrious, others take things easy, and some are downright lazy.

13,480. Do the children work at home?—Where there is a large family one or two of the sons and daughters frequently help their parents. The others go into service, or into some trade or profession. Assuming that a son remains on a farm helping his father, he usually succeeds as tenant. Frequently they are remunerated, and receive wages. When they do not, they are assisted to like farms on their own account.

13,481. Do parents make provision for their children if they can?—It depends on the parents' means. Many are well off, having done well, and others have not.

13,482. You think present rents could be maintained if wages were paid for children's labour?—They certainly could. We rarely have a farm vacant for which there are not 20 to 30 candidates. On many farms there are no children, and many tenants get on well, if not better, without them.

13,483. Do you say anything about the proportion of farm labourers?—It is impossible to give an answer generally to a question put in this form. In the first place, no two farms are alike in this respect. One may be all hired labour, and another with no hired labour. On one farm there may be many members of a household and on another only the tenant or his widow.

13,484. Then, with regard to cottages?—The number of cottages is gradually being increased. About 100 additional cottages have been built within the last 15 years.

13,485. Sometimes, I suppose, on farms and sometimes in villages and hamlets?—They are sometimes on farms and sometimes in villages and hamlets. The condition and construction are fairly good on the whole.

13,486. Then about gardens, allotments, or small holdings attached to cottages?—Cottages, as a rule, have gardens attached to them. A considerable number of garden allotments have been formed in this estate of late years.

13,487. You generally let the cottages on your estate direct?—On this estate the cottages are generally in the hands of the landlord, and let by him direct. Some cottages go with the farms on which they are built and are occupied by married labourers.

13,488. Have you anything to say about the migration of farmers or labourers?—I have never heard of any migration of farmers from this district. I have heard of a few quarrymen going to America, but many of them return. I have also heard of some labourers going to work in the coal mines in South Wales.

13,489. You do not suggest any remedies?—No, I prefer hazarding none. I leave that problem to wiser heads.

13,490. Then what do you say as to the general relations between landlord and tenant?—Speaking in a general way, the landlord and tenants on this estate are on most friendly and harmonious terms. The best evidence I can give as to this are the letters and the address presented to Mr. Assheton Smith within the last few months, and signed by many hundreds of his tenants. [A book containing this address was handed in.] I think there is a letter inside that.

13,491. Was this address presented on the landlord's marriage?—No, that was given in March last.

13,492. Then can you give us any particulars about the moneys spent in repairs?—I can.

13,493. Then give us the particulars and details of moneys, if you please, spent in repairs?—From 1857 to 1866, that is 10 years, 70,497*l.*; that sum includes 780*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.* compensation to tenants for unexhausted improvements; 1867 to 1876, that is 10 years again, 89,506*l.*, including 2,541*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.* compensation to tenants for unexhausted improvements; 1877 to 1886, that is ten years, 98,941*l.*, including 2,430*l.* 18*s.* 3*d.* compensation to tenants for unexhausted improvements; 1887 to 1892, that is five years, 48,422*l.*, and that sum includes 569*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.* compensation to tenants for unexhausted improvements. The total amount expended from the year 1886 is 307,866*l.* The total amount paid to tenants for compensation for unexhausted improvements is 6,321*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.* Interest charged occasionally, but not frequently,

Chairman—continued.

2½ per cent. to 5 per cent., according to circumstances. The whole amount on which interest has been charged is 8,193*l.* 6*s.* 7*d.*, and the total amount of interest charged thereon is 386*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.*, being a little over 4½ per cent.

13,494. I suppose you have had families on the estate for generations?—There is a list here which I should like to put in first of all. I ought to explain that, in order to arrive at this, I sent out a circular letter with a fly-leaf attached to it with a half-penny postal stamp on it, and inviting the tenants to reply. I sent out some 700 of these to the principal tenants; they were not all principal tenants, there were some medium and some small tenants, and out of that number I received 660 replies by circular letter, and the result is as follows:—

Occupations held under				20 years	44

The number of families in occupation over 50 years is 451 out of the 660 replies that I have received.

Mr. Griffiths.

13,495. You say labourers are rather scarce; is the reason that they have not cottages in the country?—Oh, no, I do not think so. I never heard that given as a reason.

13,496. You think there are sufficient cottages on the farms?—Well, the number of cottages are increasing year by year, and they are becoming more comfortable year by year.

13,497. Do the cottagers pay any attention to bee-keeping?—Very little.

13,498. I saw some bee-hives the other day round in this part of the country?—Well, you do find a few bee-hives here and there in this part of the country; but there are very few in other parts of the country.

13,499. Are the garden allotments a success?—Oh, a decided success. We have over a hundred of them.

13,500. Are they used by labourers or by quarrymen?—They are generally in the neighbourhood of towns. There is a large number in the neighbourhood of Carnarvon here, and we have recently laid out a number of garden allotments in Pwllheli. They are all very much appreciated, and it is a very good thing to encourage.

13,501. What quantity of ground do they cultivate in each allotment?—I do not think there is more than a quarter to half an acre each.

13,502. Is it all cultivated by manual labour?—Yes; it is all done by spade work.

Mr. Seebohm.

13,503. I see there is this clause in the agreement: "The lessee shall not be entitled to claim "compensation for improvements mutually "agreed upon between landlord and tenant and "at the joint expense of both parties." In case of the death of the tenant or his leaving his farm very soon after having done a large amount of haulage, would you not think that was a thing for which he should be compensated?—There is not a year that passes in which the tenants are not compensated for improvements which have not been executed under the terms of the agreement. We have paid a great number of thousands of pounds (I think I have mentioned it here) for improvements which did not come under the terms of the tenants' agreements. That is because they have not asked for and obtained the necessary consent.

13,504. But this is not a question of necessary consent. This is where improvements are mutually agreed upon. The question of haulage we have had up several times. It does not seem to be compensated for in the agreements?—No.

13,505. Would it not be fair to compensate them for it?—Well, I think as a rule that the haulage is done by tenants in this part of the world, that is, near home. When we send materials, for instance, to the other end of the county (Lleyn), we always send it by ship or rail, and we pay the haulage ourselves. I think it is a good custom, and it is according to the custom of the country.

13,506. Supposing the tenant does haulage, would you not think it fair that he should have some compensation for it?—I think the agreements might be improved in more points than one.

13,507. You do it in isolated cases?—Yes, we do it very frequently. We did it in Tynllwyn. The tenant was paid for the numbers of loads that he carried, although the man could not be checked in any way. May I be allowed to rebut some evidence?

Chairman.

Mr. Brynmor Jones wants to ask you some questions; then we will take your other evidence.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,508. I think you will agree to a great deal of the evidence we have had to the effect that farms are not very large?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

13,509. The number of small holdings is numerous on the estate, is it not?—I do not think there is an estate in the Principality which has more small holdings than the Vaynol estate.

13,510. That is what I thought. The tenants all speak Welsh?—Nearly all. They speak English nearly all pretty well; but when we are transacting business matters I have always had an interpreter to translate between us.

13,511. Are any of the farmhouses allowed to decay and fall in?—No; very few instances of that. We have a few instances, but not very many.

13,512. Are there labourers' cottages on this estate?—We have a vast number of quarrymen's cottages.

13,513. I suppose they would come under the category of labourers?—We have about 500 quarrymen's cottages on the estate with small plots of land attached to them as a rule, varying from 3 to 10 acres.

13,514. I do not know whether you remember the case of arson that was referred to at Pwllheli?—No, I did not hear it.

13,515. The point has really nothing to do with the alleged arson; but the point I was making at Pwllheli was this, that it turned out there that the house was a mere mud cottage with two rooms?—Oh, yes, I did hear about that. See 11,76

13,516. You were in court?—No, I was not in court. I heard nothing about that, but I think there was an instance of that when I was last in Lleyn some months ago. I think it came before the magistrates. I do not know whether there was a conviction or not. That was the case of a little cabin sublet by a tenant.

13,517. That is so?—Yes. I believe it was the case of an outhouse, and the tenant allowed a woman or two women to come and squat there, and that is how it occurred.

13,518. Are there not other cabins of the same kind on the farms?—I am not aware I do not know of a mud cabin on the whole of the Vaynol estate.

13,519. Except this one?—Well, that I have never seen. I only heard and read reports about it.

13,520. What are the sanitary arrangements in farmhouses, speaking generally? Are there waterclosets or privies?—Yes, in the best class of houses there are.

13,521. And in some none at all?—And in some none at all. There is always an outside privy.

13,522. Do you know anything of the late Lord Newborough's estate?—I cannot say that I do. It is an adjoining property. That is all I know about it.

13,523. Do you know whether it was the policy of the late Lord Newborough to consolidate as much as possible these small holdings?—I cannot say that. I do not know. I can only say that the buildings on the Newborough estate are very good, they are about the best I should say in this county.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

13,524. But you do not know whether it resulted in the consolidation of these small holdings?—No, I am not aware.

13,525 May I take it that you agree with the evidence of several tenant farmers that it is extremely difficult to pay the rent, even after allowing the abatements?—Yes, in these times there is a difficulty no doubt. These are very hard times.

13,526. Is that even the case with hard-working tenants?—Oh, yes, in the case of all.

13,527. I suppose most of the farmers, seeing how small their holdings are, work themselves. They are not mere superintendents but work themselves?—There is a certain class of farms which are not sufficiently large to maintain a family or even to maintain a farmer. He probably farms 8 or 10 acres, and he goes to work somewhere in the neighbourhood because the farm is not sufficiently large to keep him constantly employed.

13,528. How long has your experience been as a land agent?—Nearly 19 years.

13,529. It is said that you were in the army?—No; in the militia.

Chairman.

13,530. Mr. Vincent puts these questions: "Have you ever taken prizes for the breeding of stock?"—Yes, a large number. I may say that I have won prizes for the best managed farms as well.

13,531. "Is it correct that you won the gold "medal of the Highland and Agricultural "Society of Scotland for a report written by "you as to the relative advantages of dipping, "pouring, and smearing of sheep?"—Yes.

13,532. "Seeing that one of the witnesses "(Daniel Jones) said yesterday that land agents "were frequently men who had not succeeded "in other lines of life, would you mind telling "us what your experience has been?"—I am pleased to say that my experience has been a very happy one: the happiest years of my life have been devoted to farming. I may say that during the 14 years I farmed previous to becoming agent I had trebled my capital with farming.

13,533. Mr. Vincent asks: "Do you think "agents are frequently men who have not "succeeded in other lines of life"?—I can only speak for myself.

13,534. This question is put by Mr. W. J. Williams: "Is it not a fact that an advance is "made upon every new name placed on the "books of the Vaynol estate, and thus causing "a continual state of advancement?"—It is entirely wrong.

13,535. This question is put by Mr. J. R. Hughes: "Is it the custom when a tenant dies "that the holding will not be let to the widow, "except some workman at the quarry be a "co-holder?"—I have never known a widow on a farm not to succeed on this estate.

13,536. Do you put a workman in the quarry as co-owner?—With regard to quarry cottages

Chairman—continued.

I ought to say this: These cottages and quarry holdings have been made specially for quarrymen working at Dinorwic, and we like to see them kept by the quarrymen, so that when the husband dies we like to see the widow take in a son or nephew, or if that cannot be done a lodger, in order to make each cottage the home of a quarryman.

13,537. Is that an invariable rule?—That is what we generally do.

13,538. That is the custom?—Yes.

13,539. This is a question put by Mr. Owen Elias: "How many years is it since a valuation "has taken place on the Vaynol estate?"—Twenty-four years.

13,540. "Is it a practice with you in letting "a farm to a new tenant to advance the old "rent?"—No, it is not the practice, it is done occasionally; it just depends on circumstances. Sometimes we pay a tenant hundreds of pounds compensation for improvements, and then when we take in a new tenant we do advance the rent a bit.

13,541. I do not know whether you can answer this: "What difference does that make "in your rentals?"—What difference does what?

13,542. The raising of rents to new tenants, annually?—I do not admit that we raise the rents annually to new tenants. I say it is rarely done, it is done in cases where compensation is paid to the outgoing tenant. I look upon it as improving the land. If you pay more money to improve it you ought to derive more money from it. If we spend money on permanent improvements, and it is let to a new tenant, we expect a slight increase of rent in such a case.

13,543. "Has the above caused great differ-"ence in value of some class of farms?"—I do not quite understand the question.

13,544. Very well; I do not know that you need answer that. Then this is a question by Mr. T. W. Williams: "In your opinion, which "costs most, the materials for building, or the "haulage, and labour and stone?"—They are supposed to be just about equal.

13,545. "When a tenant leaves do you com-"pensate him for his labour and haulage?"—It "depends upon what arrangement was made "with the tenant at the time.

13,546. That is not an invariable custom?—No.

13,547. This is a question by Mr. R. R. Jones: "What leases do you grant on small holdings "which tenants cultivate at their own cost "from mountain land?"—Leases have never been asked for.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,548. Is it the case when a farm is vacant that there are very many applicants?—Yes; it is.

13,549. Twenty to 30 applicants?—Oh, that is quite a common thing, even for a poor farm.

Chairman.

See 12,943–13,006.

13,550. Now we will take the rebutting evidence you wish to give. What portion of Thomas Williams's evidence do you wish to rebut?—Every figure he has given is entirely wrong, and entirely misleading.

13,551. Where shall we begin?—At the beginning. He told you for one thing that he did not know why he was sent out of his farm. As he declined to tell you, I had better do so. He was sent away because he was a most inveterate poacher. He poached over and over again, and Mr. Assheton Smith forgave him over and over again, and the third time he forgave him Thomas Williams gave a most solemn declaration he would not poach again. However, he did poach again, and it was then we turned him out.

13,552. The poaching case was after sunset, when he was taken up for catching a rabbit on the railway line?—That was not this case at all. I do not think the case he was convicted for was on the railway line.

13,553. That is what he told us. That he took a rabbit on the railway line, and two keepers jumped over the wall and collared him?—I forget the details; but I have the date of the conviction here.

13,554. He took a rabbit on the limits of his own farm, he said, and two keepers jumped over the wall and took him into custody?—I cannot say anything with regard to the details of the case, but he was convicted.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,555. But why did the keepers take him into custody?—The case came before the magistrates at the time, and he was convicted.

Chairman.

13,556. You do not rebut that?—Do you mean about being on the railway?

13,557. You do not rebut that he on his own farm, on the railroad, took a rabbit out of the trap, and that two keepers came over the wall, and took him into custody for that?—The man was convicted before the magistrates, and I cannot say more than that.

13,558. We want to know what the case is. Do you rebut that part of his evidence?—I should like to get a copy of the evidence before the magistrates' clerk. I can give the date of the conviction.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,559. Just notice the point and see if his statement is untrue. What he said was that he simply took the rabbit from the trap within the limits of his own farm. The point we are making is this, that the action of the gamekeepers in seizing his person seems rather violent?—I hardly see how you can pass an opinion on the case without hearing the evidence.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

13,560. What evidence?—The evidence given by the keepers.

13,561. The question is, do you contradict the evidence given by him to us?—I say the trap was first of all Mr. Assheton Smith's trap, and therefore he first of all stole the trap to catch the rabbit.

13,562. Was he seized?—Yes.

13,563. For what?—Poaching. Surely they had a right to do that. It was not the first, second, or third time; he was found to be constantly poaching.

Chairman.

13,564. Is it or is it not the fact? You seem to know that he was taken up by Mr. Assheton Smith's keepers for taking a rabbit out of a trap?—It depends upon where the trap was.

13,565. I do not want you to answer if you do not know. You told me it was Mr. Assheton Smith's trap, therefore you seem to know something about it. Was he, or not, taken up by Mr. Assheton Smith's keepers for taking a rabbit out of a trap on his own farm?—He was taken up for poaching, and convicted for it.

13,566. You do not wish to say anything about Mr. Assheton Smith's trap?—No, I do not.

13,567. You simply say that he was taken up for poaching?—Yes, for repeated acts of poaching. When the November term was out, and the time had expired, he refused to turn out. There was a good deal of disagreeableness then, and he pleaded very hard to be forgiven, and even then he was forgiven. He was forgiven, I ought to say, on his signing a letter of apology which was written out by me, and has been put in evidence. He pleaded very hard to be allowed to go on for another year, because the price of cattle was very low at the time.

13,568. What does your evidence rebut?—I will rebut a lot of his figures now with regard to Parkia Rhos, that is his own farm. He says the rent was 36*l.* That is wrong, the rent was 45*l.* 12*s.*

13,569. Was the farm ever in his occupation at 36*l.*?—It might have been 36*l.* one hundred years ago. I do not know. This is a property we purchased in 1867.

13,570. When was the rent raised to 44*l.* 15*s.*?—It must have been before Mr. Assheton Smith purchased the estate.

13,571. When was that?—In 1867. Thomas Williams stated that the rent was 36*l.* at first.

13,572. But afterwards the rent was raised to 44*l.* 15*s.*, and it was 45*l.* in what year?—When Mr. Assheton Smith purchased the property in 1867 the rent was 45*l.* 12*s.*

13,573. He says 44*l.* 15*s.*; there is not much difference about it. Then he goes on to deal with Vaynol; when the estate was valued the rent was raised to 49*l.* 10*s.*, he says; do you rebut that?—No.

13,574. He says, "Owing to the labour and "perseverance of my parents and the children "who were obliged to work for their food and

Chairman—continued.

" clothing until they reached the time for " turning out in the world or getting married. " I was bred and born on the spot until the end " of the year 1887." You do not rebut that? —We allowed him to go on.

13,575. "I was turned out without a halfpenny of compensation." Do you rebut that? —Yes.

13,576. How much was he compensated?—He was compensated for game damages several times.

13,577. Was he compensated when he was turned out?—Not for improvements.

13,578. You do not rebut that?—No, I say he was not entitled to improvements.

13,579. He does not say he was. He says he was turned out without a halfpenny of compensation for any of the improvements made on the place?—I should like just to say that he was not entitled to any compensation.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,580. He sent in his claim?—Yes.

Chairman.

13,581. He says he was turned out without a halfpenny for all the improvements he had made on the place. You gave him no compensation? —No, because he was not entitled to any.

13,582. He sent in an account for walls and drains?—Yes, he did send it in.

13,583. And he has not had anything to this day—that is right?—Yes.

13,584. He says, "And in all probability I shall never get it"?—No, I do not think he is likely to get it.

13,585. " As the agent has declined to answer my last two letters"—do you deny that?—Yes.

13,586. You did reply?—Yes, I believe he never wrote me a letter which I did not answer.

13,587. " Also I was packed out of the estate " office when I was there on business, and I can " name or indicate the person who turned me " out, and he told me very kindly that the land- " lord would not see me at all, though he was at " the office at the time. I was obliged to sell " my stock when the price of stock was low, " and I think that I lost about 150*l.* by that " means"?—I do not know what he lost.

13,588. " Compared with what I should have " if I had been allowed to remain a year or two " longer there"?—I know he expressed his gratitude for being allowed to remain an additional year, and this is a letter he sent to Mr. Assheton Smith on the subject dated 20th December 1886. He was turned out in 1887:—

Parkia Rhos,
Llanddeiniolen,
Dear Sir, December 20th, 1886.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th instant.

I beg to state that I am greatly obliged to Mr. Assheton Smith for his kindness and good wishes in this matter, and to let me stay on for another year.

I remain,
Yours respectfully,
Thos. Williams.

13,589. You let him stay on to that time?—Yes. I ought to state further that his sisters had the offer of remaining in the farm after their brother had gone.

13,590. Will you just remind us of that when we come to that. Then: " I have often been acting " as beater in the shooting. I never received a " penny of pay for that." I do not think we need go into that?—Tenants are never employed as beaters, but sometimes for the love of sport they go out in the company of Mr. Assheton Smith, but they are never employed.

Professor Rhŷs.

13,591. Would not a poacher be able to beat? —He might if he was honest enough.

Chairman.

13,592. Do you deny that he ever did beat? —Oh, no; he may have been out beating.

13,593. Then there is nothing to deny. " I " was turned out of the place at the end of the " year 1887." Do you deny that?—He was turned out entirely.

13,594. And " they declined to give me a " reason, though I asked the agent."

13,595. You give the reason now?—I give the reason now.

13,596. But did you tell him that he was a poacher at the time?—Yes, frequently. It was not one or two acts at all.

13,597. Then you gave him as a reason why you turned him out that he was a poacher?—Yes.

13,598. You say that?—Yes.

13,599. "The only thing he told me was that " the landlord wanted the place. A new tenant " went into the farm." Is there anything else? —He goes into figures with regard to some other farm; take the Fachwen Farm.

13,600. " It consisted of one farm many years " ago at a rent of 60*l.*" Is that right?—No; it is quite wrong.

13,601. What is it?—Instead of being 60*l.*, the rent when we purchased the property was 188*l.*

13,602. He says many years ago?—If he means a thousand years ago, of course I cannot say.

13,603. No, he says " which consisted of one " farm many years ago at a rent of 60*l.*" Have you any reason to doubt that?—I think so, because in 1840 the rent was 188*l.* It must have been a great many centuries ago, of which Thomas Williams could know nothing, that the rent was 60*l.*

13,604. I suppose that is all hearsay. " The " place has been divided into small holdings for " the quarrymen to build, and they have small

Chairman—continued.

" holdings on lease of 30 years." Is that right?—No, they have no lease, my Lord.

13,605. Small holdings on no lease you say. "It is said that they pay from 5*s.* up to 3*l.*, " according to the size of the holding"?—No, I do not know any so low as 5*s.*

13,606. A few shillings up to 3*l.* Is that about right?—Up to 5*l.*, some of them are.

13,607. " But by this time it is supposed that " the place pays about 400*l.*" Is that right?—No, that is wrong. The rent now received is 362*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*

13,608. Well, you say it is 362*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*?—When a man goes into figures, I like him to be accurate, my Lord.

13,609. Of course he had not got the book?—But I would like to explain this, that Mr. Assheton Smith, after he purchased the property expended money on it; he expended 1,573*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.*, whereas Mr. Williams said the tenants did all. He paid for the property 13,500*l.*

13,610. Never mind that. All I want is the rebutting evidence. I do not want to go into that. He says that the place pays about 400*l.* and you say it paid about 362*l.*?—362*l.*, and the rent at the time we bought it, instead of being 60*l.*, was 188*l.*

13,611. " I know of other places where the " rent has been doubled within the last three " years." Is there anything else to rebut?—I think there were some other farms.

13,612. I hope I am not making any mistake, but I want you to have an opportunity of rebutting anything he says, not as to statements of Mr. Assheton Smith himself, we had that in your evidence in chief. He says, " A great part " of the estate of Vaynol is devastated by " game." Is that true?—No, it is very untrue.

13,613. Then " farmers must have fixity of tenure." I suppose you would rebut that. Also they should have arbitration or land court, compensation for improvements, and the abolition of the game laws?—Our agreements provide compensation. It is amply provided for.

13,614. I do not think there is very much more in his evidence. May I ask you, is there anything else you want to rebut. There are some questions put in; the first is by Mr. Williams. " When did Mr. Assheton Smith " become proprietor of Parkia Rhos—before " 1860?"—In 1867, he became proprietor.

13,615. Mr. Vincent asks: " When Parkia " Rhos became vacant, were threatening letters " written?"—There were.

13,616. What were they about—threatening letters who to?—They were threatening the incoming tenant, my Lord. This is one of them. I should like it read [handing letter in]. That is a copy of it.

13,617. Do you really wish this read?—I think so, my Lord.

13,618. " William Owen, do not covet thy " neighbour's house. It is a fearful state of " things that such as this must be sent to a " leader in the church of God. What a face " you have, you devil!! to advise others." Who was this written to? It is an anonymous letter with a coffin at the end. I really should not like to read it?—It was written to the incoming tenant, my Lord.

13,619. We will take it that the incoming tenant got an anonymous letter calling him a devil; the letter was not signed, and there was a coffin at the base of it?—He was intimidated, my Lord, to such an extent that he declined to go to the farm, and I think that fact ought to be known. He was intimidated to such an extent that he was afraid to take the farm, and he never did go there.

13,620. He was intimidated to such an extent by this letter that he declined to take the farm. Mr. Vincent wants to know, " Will you give the date of the conviction"—I take it that is the rabbit controversy?—On the 26th of March 1887.

13,621. Then Mr. J. R. Hughes asks: " Were " leases granted on small holdings previous to " Captain Stewart's time, and have any of these " leases fallen in during his term?"—No.

13,622. They were not granted before you came?—No, my Lord. I am not aware of any leases being granted.

13,623. There were no leases which have fallen in?—No. Some leases in towns have fallen in.

13,624. But not in the estate?—No, my Lord.

13,625. Captain Stewart, you must clearly understand this, that rebutting evidence cannot be long statements saying what had been done and what has not been done, or going into the history of the people; we must have it that this is wrong or that is wrong, this is not true, and so forth; we cannot have a discursive statement going back into ancient history?—I understand that.

13,626. Then, as to the Rev. Robert William Griffith, what have you to rebut about him?—There was one thing he said that is not correct, and that is, that the Vaynol tenants had contracted themselves out of the Agricultural Holdings Act. That is untrue and misleading.

See 12,320, 12,321.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,627. Not quite so, for this reason. Though there is no formal statement in the agreement that the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883 shall not apply, yet you do substitute for the compensation given by the Act of Parliament the compensation contemplated by the third and fifth sections of that Act?—Having clauses substituted—that would hardly justify him in saying that the Vaynol tenants had contracted themselves out of the Agricultural Holdings Act

13,628. That depends upon whether the agreement that your substitute is or is not fair?—I will tell you, if you will allow me, what the tenants think of that clause in our agreement. In 1875, when the first Agricultural Holdings Bill came out, I invited the tenants and I sent circular letters to them asking them to consider well the clauses contained in the new Act, and also the clauses contained in the Agricultural Holdings Act, and if they preferred to go under the Agricultural Holdings Act, that Mr. Assheton Smith was perfectly agreeable. They considered the thing and formed committees in different parts of the estate, and a deputation came down and waited on Mr. Assheton Smith and on me, and they came to the conclusion that, all things considered, they were better off under the agreement.

Chairman.

13,629. He says: "Respecting the Agricul- "tural Holdings Acts; the tenants acquiesce to "the wishes of the landlord by contracting out "of its operation. Consequently they derive "no benefit by the Acts of 1875 and 1883." Instead of the words "contracting out of," you wish to say that they conform to the wishes of the landlords?—They had their choice and decided to remain under their agreements.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,630. This is the best drawn agreement I have seen upon the point, because it says: "It "is hereby expressly agreed between the parties "hereto that the above-written indenture of "lease shall be considered within the meaning

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

"of the 5th and 3rd sections contract of "tenancy and agreement in a lease of the "Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883"?—I am glad you say so.

13,631. I can easily see how the Rev. R. W. Griffith came to be mistaken about it?—Then, I think, he makes a mistake about the interest. He said the interest charged was 5 per cent. Well, he ought to say that the interest varies from nil to 5 per cent. There are cases in which we have spent hundreds of pounds on farms and have not charged one single halfpenny percentage; in others, we charge 1½, or 2, or 2½ per cent., but his remark that we charge 5 per cent. is entirely misleading.

See 12,6

Chairman.

13,632. In some individual instances it is nothing, and in some instances it is small, and in some it goes up to 5 per cent.?—Yes. There is a farm within half a mile of Mr. Griffith's house, or three-quarters of a mile, on which we have in the last few years spent 1,500*l.*, and for which we have not charged a single halfpenny.

13,633. Is that all?—That was all.

Mr. THOMAS WILLIAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

13,634. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

See evidence of next witness.

"Thomas Williams, 73, Pool Street, Carnarvon, butcher, late of Dolypandy, Bontnewydd, near Carnarvon, says:—

"I occupied the farm of Dolypandy for 32 years, and it had been occupied by my ancestors for generations. The landlord was Mr. Assheton Smith and the rent 12*l.* 12*s.* During the last few years of my tenancy I spent 168*l.* 1*s.* on repairs and re-building and drainage. I produce a statement showing how this amount is made up. [The statement was handed in.] Captain Stewart, the agent, authorised the expenditure of this money and promised to compensate me. About three years ago the farm was sold by auction. I offered 590*l.* for it, but it was knocked down at 640*l.* A few weeks before the sale by auction Captain Stewart came to the farm and spoke to me about the improvements I had. He told me how to make out a statement of the amount I claimed and to send it to him. I made out a statement accordingly, amounting to 168*l.* 1*s.*, and took it to the estate office myself. He was not at home on that day. After the sale I went to the estate office and saw Captain Stewart. He spoke to me about the account and said he could not settle with me until after he had received the sale money. I went there again in a few weeks and asked Captain Stewart to settle my claim. He then asked me if I thought I could recover the money. I told him I thought I could, and I added that I was surprised to find that he was less than his word. He refused to recognise my claim, and I then consulted a solicitor, but I was told that I had no claim as I had nothing but the agent's word authorising me to carry out the improvements, and I ought to have had an authority in writing."

Re-examined. 13,652.

Captain Stewart.—May I be allowed to rebut, my Lord?

Chairman.

If you please.

Captain NIEL PATRICK STEWART recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

See above.

13,635. What do you wish to say?—I say that the statement by Mr. Thomas Williams is entirely wrong.

Mr. Thomas Williams.

No, it is not. He may die on the spot.

The Witness.

I understand him to say that I had promised and then receded from that promise. I beg to say that that is entirely untrue.

[Professor Rhŷs interpreted the evidence from this point to Mr. Thomas Williams.]

Chairman.

13,636. Did he show you this claim of 168*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.*?—He did, and I went over the farm and went through all the different items.

13,637. Did you promise to pay it?—No, he was not entitled to a farthing. He said he made a certain number of drains, but he could not show them to me. He told me that the drains were there, but I could not see them. I told him to open the drains at both ends so as to satisfy me that they existed. I had the clerk of works for the estate with me. I told him that after Mr. Thomas Williams had opened the drains so that he could satisfy me that there were drains there at all, I would send him over to measure them up. I mentioned the date when I would send the clerk of the works, giving him a week or a fortnight. The clerk of the works went over at the date specified and did not find a single drain opened up. Unless he (Williams) could prove to me that the drains existed I refused to pay him. Then he took the matter to a firm of solicitors in Carnarvon. I had a great amount of correspondence with them on the subject and then he went to another firm. I had some correspondence with those solicitors and then the matter dropped, but I ought to say that the first firm of solicitors pressed the arbitration clause upon us, which we agreed to, and this document was drawn up. I do not know what the technical term for it is. I think it is a reference to arbitration. [The witness handed in the document.] He appointed his valuer and I appointed another, and when his valuer came to look into the case I believe he found it so bad that he declined to proceed at all with it or to take it up. The reference did not proceed, and the matter dropped to the ground.

13,638. I want to ask you one question, Captain Stewart, if you please. There is a bill here for 168*l.* Did he put in this statement to you?—He put in a statement to me.

13,639. And all this you refused to pay?—There is a new house that he claimed for there, that we built ourselves. It cost us 200*l.*

13,640. Did you pay him anything at all for the building as per the claim?—No, we paid him nothing, my Lord.

13,641. Did you go over the building to see whether this claim was admissible?—Yes, I went over it very minutely, over the whole farm.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,642. Did you know that he was expending money on repairing and rebuilding?—No, he had not spent money; we built the house for him, it cost 200*l.*

13,643. You did have conversations with him from time to time?—Yes; a great many interviews.

13,644. Where they in Welsh or English?—I should not like to be sure about the 200*l.* May I be allowed to consult the clerk of the works about it. I did not know that this case was to come on. It was not on the list.

13,645. It does not matter about the amount; but you had interviews with him. Were they in Welsh or English?—Oh, he talks English very well.

13,646. Did the tenant do the haulage?—Yes.

Chairman.

13,647. Was he paid for that haulage?—No; he was not. I will tell you the reason why he was not paid: because he badgered us with one firm of solicitors after another to such an extent.

13,648. We only want to know whether he was paid, or whether he was not?—He put us to such an enormous amount of expense in the matter, that we did not consider he required much consideration at our hands.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,649. Then I understand you would have paid him the compensation if he had not gone to a solicitor?—Well; if he had gone differently about it, we might have been kinder to him. Still I want it to be clearly understood that he was entitled to nothing.

13,650. But did not you give him to understand that you would pay for the haulage, or give him something for haulage?—Most decidedly not; I did not.

Mr. Griffiths.

13,651. Are you certain, Captain Stewart, that these drains were not made?—The few drains that were there I was told by neighbours were there before his time altogether; the previous tenant had made them. It was of all the farms on the Vaynol estate the least improved; it was the same wild wilderness that it was when I came to the property 19 years ago; there was no improvement at all. He is a lazy useless man.

Mr. THOMAS WILLIAMS recalled and further examined.

Professor Rhŷs.

13,652. Have you anything to say on what you have just heard?—Yes.

13,653. Will you say it?—Captain Stewart came to my place when I saw in the paper that it was to be sold. He came there to see the place. He said he would not like to be unfair to me.

13,654. What else did he say?—He ordered me to make out the bill, and said that I should measure everything, and I did so. When I built those last pigstyes I told him to measure them himself. I went there after the auction to ask if he had any other place for me, and he replied "Not just now;" and after I had talked with him a little, he asked me if I would put in the bill, and I said, "Yes," and he said, "All right."

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. H. ROBERTS called and examined.

Chairman.

e 12,398, 455.

13,655. Are you a solicitor?—Yes.

13,656. You come forward to contradict the statement of Mr. John Jones, of Ty Cnap, as regards the Reverend Mr. Constable Ellis?—Yes.

13,657. What can you tell us about that; what do you rebut?—First of all, Mr. Ellis is very ill, and he wrote to me saying I knew more about this matter than anybody else; he was not able to leave his room, and he sent me some papers and asked me to come here. I happen to have had some business relations with Mr. Ellis as solicitor, and I happened then to live immediately adjoining Ty Cnap, just across the road, and, as John Jones himself has said, I was pretty well acquainted with the whole transaction. John Jones has alleged in one instance that there were no buildings on the farm when his son went there, and afterwards that he was encouraged to build——

13,658. He says, "When my son took pos- "session of the farm there were no outbuildings; "the house is in a very dilapidated state, nearly "down." Is that so?—No. First of all, I prepared the agreement under which he went in.

13,659. What year was that?—The year 1880. The house was new in the greater part. There was an old cottage converted into outhouses; there was a cowhouse and stable, and I think a barn as well. However, this agreement recites this: That he (Henry Jones) is to pay 50*l.* a year for the first two years, and 60*l.* afterwards, and "Inasmuch as the rent for the two first years is "to be less than afterwards, the tenant shall "forthwith on his obtaining possession put the "house and all outbuildings in good repair." That was the first allowance. There was a 10*l.* reduction in rent——

13,660. Do you say it was in very good repair?—The outbuildings were in bad repair, and the house was in good repair.

13,661. The outbuildings were so bad that Henry Jones was given an allowance of rent to put them in repair?—Yes, and within the first year or so Mr. Ellis informs me that he gave him 24*l.* in cash.

13,662. Is there anything to prove that?—Mr. Ellis himself writes to me so.

13,663. But nothing else?—I do not know that I have a receipt for it.

13,664. No receipt?—I do not know that I have. Mr. Ellis writes me a letter which perhaps under the circumstances, my Lord, you will allow me to read presently.

13,665. Certainly?—Then he alleges a most curious transaction. He says that no compensation whatever was paid to him, but that a loan was given to him and that he paid 4 per cent. interest on it, and that he pays that interest to this day; leading you to infer, as I understand, that it was simply a loan transaction, he continuing to pay interest after the place was sold to him, and his remaining under liability to pay the principal.

13,666. What I understood him to say was that it was added to the rent?—Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,667. The document put in by Mr. Vincent calls it a loan. I agree with you that it is singular?—I have not got that agreement now. However, call it what you will, it was not a loan. It was prepared by a clergyman.

Chairman.

13,668. It was a sum of money given, and a certain per-centage was charged?—Yes. Henry Jones, the son, became tenant. He applied for the farm. He was a butcher in Carnarvon; he represented that he was a man of means and could improve the farm and fatten cattle; that he would do himself good as a butcher and improve the land as well. He was an active man, but unfortunately soon after he took the farm he became ill, and eventually died. Rushing as many men in Carnarvon and many town men do, into land, he rushed also into expenditure upon it, I am afraid injudiciously, and he did expend some money upon it. Mr. Ellis tells me, and I believe it is the fact, that he remonstrated with him and told him he was wrong in spending so much money on the place, that it did not want it, and that he was overdoing it, but nothing came of it until Henry Jones died, and then John Jones, finding himself short of money, was in a difficulty what to do. There was a question of his continuing tenant, but he could not continue tenant without money; and he then applied to Mr. Ellis for his consideration. I went over the farm with Mr. Ellis and himself. We afterwards determined that it should be valued exactly on the lines Mr. Bryn Roberts has described here to-day. A mention of a lease was made. After Henry Jones's death, it was mentioned or suggested as one of the modes of compensating him, but when that was talked of it was distinctly thought that that lease should be a personal lease, not assignable. But in the event of the lease having been given we found that he had not got means, and I think I myself suggested that a money payment would be better. That was resolved upon. Mr. R. J. Davids of this town, a surveyor, went over, and was told to value liberally upon the basis of paying John Jones or awarding John Jones a sum that would represent the increased value of the farm to the landlord or to an incoming tenant. A sum of 150*l.* was paid to him upon that basis, upon Mr. Davids' valuation. I think his actual valuation was a little less, but 150*l.* was paid. From that date no improvements upon buildings were made; the whole thing stopped. I think there are some little improvements since in respect of a very small patch of ground near a road; with that I have had no business relation myself, though I know pretty well the facts. The whole question was finished at that time. Then John Jones says in his evidence that at the time this arrangement was made he was sure Mr. Ellis contemplated selling and also that he thought that his expenditure added to the price of the land when sold. The fact of that is this. Mr. Ellis had no idea of selling at the time. He was tempted to sell by an offer by Mr. John A. Williams, who wanted to buy, and he had no idea of selling until that date. That was about two years after the settlement.

13,669. I think you are pretty well agreed as to the facts after all. The only difference is this: you say it was not a loan, but that this 150*l.* was advanced by the reverend gentleman to his tenant, and his rent was raised from 48*l.* to 54*l.*; that is so, is it not?—I do not think so, quite. Four per cent. would not be that difference.

13,670. The previous rent was 48*l.*, and it is now 54*l.*?—The surveyor, I believe, represented the increased rental value of the farm by that much.

13,671. Very well. Then, 150*l.* was given by the reverend gentleman to his tenant, and that Mr. Ellis thought compensated him for the 300*l.* as well, in addition, which he laid out on the reverend gentleman's farm by selling some property that he had at Carnarvon previously?—That disagrees altogether with what the man said, that he spent 300*l.*

13,672. That is his statement; do you rebut it?—Our valuation was that he spent 150*l.*, or gave that in value to Mr. Ellis, and that is what was repaid him.

13,673. He told us that he sold his property at Carnarvon for 300*l.*, and that he spent it on Mr. Ellis's property; is that rebutted?—I cannot rebut it, but I do not believe it is the fact.

13,674. Then he has a grievance, because he only got 150*l.* He claimed 450*l.*; he gets 150*l.*, and the other 300*l.* he is out of?—He has no grievance if Mr. Bryn Roberts's statement is correct. He has had the compensation covered by the lines recommended by Mr. Bryn Roberts.

13,675. Mr. Bryn Roberts has nothing to do with it. It is Mr. John Jones, not Mr. Bryn Roberts. Mr. John Jones sells property at Carnarvon for 300*l.*, and puts the money into the reverend gentleman's land—so he alleges. At the end of the tenancy he receives 150*l.*, which is either called a loan or not—we will not say anything about that—and that is all he gets. His allegation is that he is 300*l.* out of pocket on the transaction. That is his statement?—Well, it is not the fact. As far as we can make out it is not the fact. At any rate we compensated him fully for all the benefit he has done to Mr. Ellis. Moreover, when leaving, there was another sum of 25*l.* for him, a half-year's rent, which he refused to take. I have no knowledge of that latter thing beyond hearsay, because I was not interested in it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,676. There is a document put in, and he says that what Mr. Ellis said about the contents of that document was something quite different from what was read out to him yesterday?—I have here a letter in Welsh written to him which will put that right.

Chairman.

13,677. Is Mr. John Jones in court?—Yes.

13,678. Then we will have this part of your evidence translated to him?—As to the allegation that there was a promise of a lease, that is utterly inconsistent.

13,679. You have just told us you offered him a lease?—Not offered; it was suggested as an alternative.

13,680. But that is his statement?—There was a talking of a lease, but there was no offer of a lease. The idea was how this man was to be compensated. A lease was thought of. That was thrown overboard by Mr. Ellis himself for a better idea, as he thought, of giving some money compensation.

13,681. He says: "Mr. Ellis states he would "grant me a lease if that would suit me; he "would give me a loan of 150*l.* to complete the "buildings"?—He speaks of it as a finally settled thing, it was only on the tapis.

13,682. All he says is: "I had no money; I "had spent all." Do you rebut that?—I do not know anything about it.

13,683. Then "Mr. Ellis stated he would grant "me a lease." You have distinctly told us that he offered him one?—No, he did not offer him one.

13,684. He appears to have gone very near it. "He would grant me a lease, if that would suit me." There is not much difference of opinion on that. You say he talked about it, and Mr. Jones says that he said he would give him a lease. Then he says: "He said he would give "me a loan of 150*l.* to complete the buildings." Is that so?—Everything had been completed at that time.

13,685. Then what was the loan of 150*l.* for?—It was a gift to represent the increased value of the farm.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,686. Excuse me; do not confuse the two times. What the witness said, my Lord has just read, and then he went on with the buildings, and he saw Mr. Ellis, and ultimately he got 150*l.*, 24*l.* having been already paid; he does not say the buildings were not erected when that interview took place, and when that paper was given. What he complains of is, that he thought all the time that he was going to get a lease, and that he went on with the building. Then he gets 150*l.*, 24*l.* having been already paid. He sees the reverend gentleman, and he gets him to sign a document. He says he did not know in the least that what he signed made him give up all claim to compensation?—That is not really the fact.

13,687. In the document there is nothing about increase of rent, but it is expressly stipulated that there is to be interest. It is very oddly drawn.

Chairman.

13,688. It is so long as he holds the farm, and then an increase at 4 per cent.?—Increase of rent, that is the meaning of that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,689. If Mr. Ellis was so little able to express himself, it is very likely that what he said reasonably led this man to think he was to have a lease?—May I state this: The 24*l.* was paid immediately, or soon after, his entry. The whole compensation question was one transaction, at one date; and at that time all the buildings were finished.

13,690. Then why did he want 150*l.* to complete the buildings?—But he had completed. I was there myself and knew it. May I put in a copy of a letter in Welsh, written at the time, which is consistent with that?

The letter was then read in Welsh and then translated into English as follows:—

John Jones, Llanfairfechan,
"DEAR SIR, August 30th, 1884.

I HAVE thought a lot as to the value of the work of renovating the old buildings at Ty Cnap and of erecting new ones, also the cost of the posts and walling in connexion therewith by the high road and of lowering the road, sinking a shaft and fixing a pump, and I certainly believe that the enclosed valuation "(that is, Mr. Davids' valuation)" gives the full value thereof.

Everything has been made in a most easy manner, and unnecessary, and the materials are of the worst kind.

Moss slates are never used now, but they are the kind put by you on part of the house. There is no, or next to none, new work done on the old stable, cowhouse, or barn nothing more than pointing between the slates. The woodwork is of the poorest kind, and as far as I recollect none of it is painted. The hayshed is already out of repair and the wood-work without either paint or tar.

I am prepared though unnecessary the work was to give 150*l.* on condition that you pay 4*l.* per cent. interest and sign an agreement acknowledging this sum as well as the 24*l.* previously given to Henry Jones, as a release to me from all obligation to you in respect of the money spent by Henry Jones and yourself in buildings, repairs, and such like at Ty Cnap.

I expect you will without delay after you receive the money see that strong gates are put up on every gap."

Professor Rhŷs.

That translation is not quite accurate. Twice the Welsh word afler is translated "unnecessary"; it should be "untidy."

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN JONES recalled and further examined.

[The evidence of the previous witness was explained to this witness in Welsh.]

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,691. Do we understand that you still state that Mr. Ellis encouraged you to build by the promise of a lease?—That is all. I should not have done it after the death of my son if it had not been that it was promised.

Chairman.

Mr. Roberts says a lease never was promised; this witness holds out and says that it was promised. I am afraid we cannot settle it. We must leave the matter there.

Mr. J. H. Roberts.—But, my Lord, the thing was done at the time. There no talk of a lease until after the work was done.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

It is no good your going on saying that. This gentleman says that he never would have gone in for the buildings at all if Mr. Ellis had not led him to suppose that a lease would be granted.

Mr. J. H. Roberts.—But I know it not to be the fact.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Very well; the public will decide between these gentlemen.

Mr. J. H. Roberts.—May I read the letter Mr. Ellis sent me?

Chairman.

I think we must finish this, if you please. We cannot go any further into it. We have heard both sides.

Witness.

May I be allowed to ask Mr. Roberts a question?

Chairman.

No, I think not.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Llanrwst.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

The Concert Hall, Llanrwst, Denbighshire, Friday, 22nd September 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Colonel CHARLES A. WYNNE FINCH called and examined.

Chairman.

13,692. What district will you be good enough to give evidence upon?—I have property in two counties, Denbighshire and Carnarvonshire.

13,693. What size properties are those?—The acreage in Foelas, that is the Denbighshire property, is about 9,000 acres more or less, and in Cefnamwlch about 5,600 acres, but I should tell you the rental is very much the same in both, although the acreage is disproportionate.

13,694. Are there many manors or lordships or honours in which you are interested?—There is a manor in the county of Denbigh.

13,695. Can you tell us anything about that? Is there anything you wish to state about that manor?—No, nothing particular.

13,696. Can you tell us anything about the rents of adjacent farms?—Do you mean adjacent to my own property?

13,697. Yes. The general condition of sheep farming, is there anything you wish to say about that?—It is not so good as it was formerly; the profit is not so large from it.

13,698. Where agents are employed, have they received any special training for the supervision of agricultural land?—My own has special training.

13,699. There is no inconvenience or hardship?—No.

13,700. What is the usual date of entry in your district?—Lady day on the Denbighshire estate; the 11th October on my Carnarvonshire estate, the old Michaelmas day.

13,701. I suppose farms are let yearly?—Usually, with very few exceptions.

13,702. There is no demand for leases?—No, and when I have granted them they have rather thrown them up, and do not seem to care for them.

13,703. You say no cases of hardship have arisen, and you give compensation, I suppose, when you resume occupation, invariably?—Yes.

13,704. And for timber cutting and mining and quarries and brickfields?—Yes, for damage done for timber cutting.

Chairman—continued.

13,705. Will you kindly give us a copy of your agreement?—I will (handing).

13,706. You do not consider any of the clauses oppressive?—I certainly do not, or I should not have put them in.

13,707. Are there any penalising clauses?—No.

13,708. They get a copy of the agreement, and the contents are explained to them always?—Always.

13,709. You fix your rent at a gross sum?—At a gross sum.

13,710. Is the rent of the smaller tenantry higher per acre than on larger farms?—Yes, owing to the expense of keeping up buildings.

13,711. You take into account the right of pasturage?—Certainly, that is a most profitable thing.

13,712. Are there any services other than the payment of rent?—No.

13,713. And the rent is fixed on a basis of a valuation?—On the basis of a valuation.

13,714. You have never let to the highest bidder?—No, certainly not—as highest bidder.

13,715. Have rents been raised generally in individual cases within the last 50 years?—My estates were re-valued before I came into possession of them in the year 1870, and some were lowered; the majority were naturally raised; some were left as they were. On the whole, there was a net increase at that time in 1870.

13,716. Then about permanent reductions. Have you had any permanent reductions?—I have made some permanent reductions of late, amounting in all to 122*l.*

13,717. And temporary abatements?—Temporary abatements of rent I have made for a long time.

13,718. Can you put in anything about that?—I will give you the percentage, my Lord since the year 1886, when I began to make my abatements.

13,719. Yes, that would be very interesting. You put that in?—I will if you wish it. In 1886, I gave 10 per cent on the year; in 1887,

Chairman—continued.

I gave the same; in 1888, I gave the same, 10 per cent. in each case. In 1889, I gave 10 per cent. for one half-year only; in 1892, I gave back 15 per cent. on the year; in 1893, I gave back 20 per cent. on the year.

13,720. Then where rents are raised or reduced, do you have a valuation?—Yes, I have them valued.

13,721. What have been the chief fluctuations in prices affecting rent within the last 50 years?—The price of stock when the re-valuation was made in 1875 was very high. The price of wool, in which a large business on my Denbighshire estate was then done, was very high. The price of wool has gone down since, and the price of stock has, as we know, diminished very much. That is all I have to say.

13,722. I must ask you about the rent. How soon after it is due is the rent generally paid?—Rents due at Michaelmas are paid in the following January. The Lady day rents are paid in July.

13,723. That is the quarter after they become due?—Yes, the quarter after they become due.

13,724. How about preferential claims for rent? Have you anything to say about that?—I hardly know what is meant by preferential claims for rent.

Lord Kenyon.

13,725. The landlord's claim for rent has the preference over other claims.—Exactly so.

Chairman.

13,726. How about the charges on landor on incomes derived from land? How are the tithes paid?—The tithes are paid by the owner.

13,727. And is the land tax paid by the owner?—By the occupier.

13,728. And the chief rent by the owner?—I have been puzzled to know exactly what is meant by that again.

13,729. Then the local rates?—They are paid by the tenants, except the cottage tenants, and these are paid by the landlord.

13,730. And, of course, the income tax is paid by the landowner?—The landowner.

13,731. What is the average size of farms in your district?—Do you wish to deal only with Denbighshire or Carnarvonshire? In Carnarvonshire they average about 60 acres, and there are 88 holdings of three acres and upwards. In Voelas, the Denbighshire estate, the average size is about 120 acres, and there are 65 holdings of three acres and upwards.

13,732. Then there is not much consolidation is there, in your district?—I thought there had been only one, but I find on looking back that there have been two consolidations, although they have been in quite a small way—a small farm added to a large one.

13,733. What has been the effect on rent of that? What should you say generally?—That I am not prepared to say, but it has not been an increase.

Chairman—continued.

13,734. As regards the sub-division and sub-letting of holdings, can you tell me anything about that?—I purchased a farm called Bryn-y-gwerfel, near the village of Pentre Voelas, in Denbighshire, some years ago, and this farm was sub-divided and let as accommodation land to the people in the neighbouring village, with great advantage both to the land itself, which they have taken a great deal of trouble about, and great convenience to the tenants.

13,735. Sub-letting you do not allow?—I do not allow it; it is not recognised.

13,736. Then we come to 1883. Is there any scarcity of labourers?—I do not find any scarcity of labourers.

13,737. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—I have a farm in my own hands.

13,738. There is no land going out of cultivation?—None that I know of.

13,739. Nor waste land reclaimed?—Nor waste land reclaimed.

13,740. You think there is some land still waste which is capable of profitable reclamation?—Yes.

13,741. And there has been no arable land laid down to pasture?—No.

13,742. And the root crops are about the same?—There has been a slight increase of the root crops.

13,743. Then about improvements. What improvements are generally made in your district by the landlords?—Practically all the improvements are made in my district by the landlords, Denbighshire and Carnarvonshire too.

13,744. Can you tell me what the landlord supplies?—The landlord supplies draining pipes for draining, occasionally lime for the land.

13,745. And the tenant lays the pipes?—The tenant lays down the pipes under supervision, to see that he does not try to drain uphill.

13,746. The buildings are erected, I suppose, by landowners?—Entirely.

13,747. And as to tanks for preserving liquid manure, there is not much of that?—They will not have them; I have offered them and they do not care about them.

13,748. Then fences?—The fences are supposed to be kept by the tenants, but I have frequently had to send my own men to put up the fences on a farm to help the tenant. In the sheep country it is difficult to keep the sheep from straying.

13,749. Do you supply the tenants with grass seed?—No.

13,750. Then, as to co-operation in improvements, you say, I think, the landlord supplies material and labour in all cases for building and repairs. Does the tenant do the haulage?—The tenant does the haulage.

13,751. And in the case of improvements partly or wholly effected by a tenant, is there any compensation?—Always, my Lord, by agreement.

13,752. You do not contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No.

Chairman—continued.

13,753. Or out of the custom of the country?—No,

13,754. Do they write often for your consent for improvements?—Very seldom.

13,755. You would give it, of course, if they did?—I should be very glad to do it.

13,756. Now, about the custom of the country, as to the allowance to outgoing tenants in respect of growing crops?—Growing crops are taken and paid for by the incoming tenant by agreement as a general rule.

13,757. Then as regards tillage and cultivation?—There is no winter tillage to pay for, as the incoming tenant has early access to the farm to do what tillage is necessary.

13,758. The manure and produce is taken over by valuation?—Yes.

13,759. And the permanent improvements?—Are generally carried out by the landowner, otherwise the allowance is made to the outgoing tenant.

13,760. You do not interfere with good tenants in the way they cultivate their farms?—Certainly not.

13,761. He does the small affairs himself?—He is supposed to do them; he does them under pressure.

13,762. Have you had any outgoing tenants who have failed to obtain sufficient compensation in your opinion?—None that I know of.

13,763. Is compensation ever given for the generally improved condition of a holding?—No.

13,764. Is there anything about tenant right you would wish to say?—I know of no recognised special tenant right, but I should be always ready to approve of any arrangement of the kind if I thought well of the incoming tenant.

13,765. What is the custom about the sale of sheep on your sheep farms?—They are taken at a valuation.

13,766. Is there an obligation in this part of the country to take the sheep? Is it absolutely necessary for the landlord to take them? Is he obliged to take the sheep or not?—That I cannot say.

13,767. Not like in Scotland? There is no custom that you know of?—No.

13,768. Then about game preserving. What do you say to that?—The rabbits are killed down by myself as much as possible, for obvious reasons; they do so much harm to the plantations. Hares are scarce, and are getting scarcer every year. On my Carnarvonshire estate I should say there are practically hardly any hares at all. I shot one last year, and birds, although preserved, are not reared artificially in either place.

13,769. And your tenants avail themselves of the Ground Game Act?—They do.

13,770. Under those circumstances there is not much damage done, you consider, by the game to the crops?—No; I consider there is very little damage done.

13,771. Then, as to the relations between landlord and tenant. Do you find that game has never caused any bother at all?—None, in my opinion.

Chairman—continued.

13,772. Can you say anything about the law of trespass?—The law of trespass is hardly sufficiently stringent to protect the tenants, especially in this district, against the tourists and the cheap trippers—not so much the tourists as the cheap trippers, when the excursion trains come—from doing damage to gates, fences, and plantations.

13,773. Has any attention been paid to agricultural education in any way?—Various agricultural shows have been held, at which prizes for horticultural produce, poultry farming, and bee-farming, have been given.

13,774. Is there much butter and cheese-making in this part of the world?—Yes, my Lord, there is a good deal of butter made, but it is not very good butter. They do not avail themselves of the instructions that have been given. I have subscribed to lectures given by the Bangor College, but none of my tenants, I think, have attended them.

13,775. Is there any complaint about the railway rates?—The railway rates do not seem to assist the farmers much, but that is a question I can hardly go into.

13,776. Then as to co-operation. Is there any co-operation for farming operations between landlord and tenant?—Not that I know of. Threshing and sheep-shearing they help each other at, and the tenants are often part owners in the machine that threshes the corn.

13,777. They do not insure much?—Never, that I know of.

13,778. There is no combination amongst landowners and farmers, and labourers, too, to fix wages?—None that I know of.

13,779. Do the agricultural labourers belong to benefit societies?—At Pentre Voelas they belong to the Odd Fellows, many of them, to which I subscribe, and the same applies to a village, called Sarn Meyllteyrn, close to my estate in Carnarvonshire—the same society, Odd Fellows.

13,780. Are there in your district many peasant proprietors or small freeholders who have inherited their holdings from their ancestors?—There are a certain number.

13,781. Can you tell us at all how they compare with your tenants?—I cannot say.

13,782. I suppose tenant farmers and their wives take part in the manual labour on their farms?—They do.

13,783. And we are told the children work very hard as well?—They do, sometimes.

13,784. You think the present rents could be maintained even if they paid wages to the children?—I think so.

13,785. Can you tell us anything about hired labourers? They are usually lodged, I believe, on the farms?—They are usually lodged in the farmhouse or on the farms.

13,786. And some in cottages?—There are some also in cottages.

13,787. Tell us what you think as to the general amount of the labourers' cash wages?—I pay 18*s.* a week myself all the year round, including harvest, and the men find themselves.

Chairman—continued.

It is hardly possible to say what the usual pay is; I do not know it myself. It does not come under my knowledge in any way, but it is lower than that, and then they give them extra pay during the harvest and find them in food.

13,788. We are told they generally have their meals in the farm kitchens?—Yes, I have often seen them.

13,789. And sleep in outhouses?—Sleep in beds, generally over the stable, in an outhouse, not over a stable necessarily.

13,790. Outhouses?—In outhouses.

13,791. What is the state of present cottage accommodation as compared with the past?—It has improved very greatly. As fast as I am able to do so, I improve my own cottages.

13,792. What is the state of cottage accommodation with regard to thorough cultivation?—I think it is sufficient. Several labourers on my Denbighshire estate have refused to work in the neighbourhood, and go to Festiniog or Penmachno quarries, 16 or 6 miles off respectively, sometimes returning for Saturday and Sunday to their home and leaving their families there the rest of the week.

13,793. You think the condition and construction of the cottages around you is suitable?—The new ones, I think, certainly are.

13,794. What about gardens and allotments?—I have allotments on Pentre Voelas, and have had them for many years, 40 or 50 years.

13,795. Are any small bits of land attached to the cottages?—Almost in every case.

13,796. You generally let the cottages yourself direct to the tenants, not through the farmer?—Not through the farmer if I can help it; it used to be done, but it is never being done now with my consent.

13,797. Has there been any considerable migration of farmers or labourers from your district within the last 50 years?—They constantly migrate to the quarries and the great centres of population.

13,798. You never heard of diaries or farming accounts being kept much?—Never.

13,799. What do you think is the principal cause of depression which we have heard so much about?—The importation of Australian wool and the frozen dead meat from New Zealand and Australia and live cattle from America, which keeps down the prices.

13,800. Have you any remedy to suggest for improving the prices?—Improved methods of agriculture, special attention being given to breeding good stock for which there is always a demand.

13,801. I think I need hardly ask you what the relations are between you and your tenants?—I should like to say I consider them friendly.

13,802. Would you tell us what money you have spent in repairs and improvements, since 1872, I think you said it was?—I have a tabular form, my Lord, if you like to have it.

13,803. Just tell us what the general result is?—You want the total expended?

13,804. Yes, since 1872?—I have this table made up since 1872 on each estate. The total is 25,413*l.* 7*s.* 6*d* for both estates since 1872.

Chairman—continued.

13,805. Will you allow us to have that return?—I think I have sent you a copy of it. (Copy sent.)

Lord Kenyon.

13,806. Here is also another table called "Yearly Account to Michaelmas 1892"?—Yes, I have a copy of that in my hand, and you will see every year what has been expended on each estate.

Chairman.

13,807. We are very much obliged to you for giving your evidence, and probably you will not mind answering any questions put to you by the Commissioners?—Certainly not.

Lord Kenyon.

13,808. The estate, with the exception of those permanent reductions, is rented or re-valued in 1870?—Yes; those reductions, I believe, bring down the present rental to very much what it was in the year 1870.

13,809. When it was re-valued?—When it was re-valued.

13,810. It is practically reverting to the old rental?—Very nearly, not quite.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,811. In which parishes, Colonel Finch, in this county, does your estate lie?—Do you wish me to enumerate the parishes?

13,812. Yes?—Cerrig-y-druidion, Pentre Voelas, Llanrwst, Capel Garmon, in Denbighshire.

13,813. And your Carnarvonshire estate?—And the Carnarvonshire estate in the parishes of Tydweiliog, a small holding in Nevin, Edern, Llaniestin, Sarn-Meylltern, Llangwnadl, Aberdaron, and Bryn Croes. I am not sure of Bryn Croes.

13,814. I see they are situate at the south-west end of the county, a good long way from here?—A long way from here.

13,815. Are there any manors in that part, in the peninsula, of the county?—There are none that I have anything to do with.

13,816. You are not lord of the manor, therefore?—No; if there are no manors, I could not be lord of them.

13,817. What is the average size of the farms, do you think, in that district?—I have given it once this morning, and I would refer to it again if you tell me the number of the question.

13,818. It does not matter if we have it on the notes; about 88 acres, I am told. Are the tenants nearly all Welsh?—Very nearly all Welsh.

13,819. When a farm falls vacant is there considerable competition for it?—Not so much as there used to be.

13,820. Still, you have no vacant farms now?—I have a farm in my own occupation.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

13,821. No farm that you wish to let, and cannot let?—No.

13,822. Are there any wastes of considerable extent?—Not on my property.

13,823. Was any of the property enclosed within your time?—Not within my memory.

13,824. Do you find that there was an enclosure under the Enclosure Act?—In Carnarvonshire?

13,825. No, in your property?—There was an enclosure in my Denbighshire property some years ago, before my time.

13,826. Can you give me the date of that?—I cannot give you the date. It was before I succeeded.

13,827. That would be before what year?—Before the year 1874.

13,828. You said, I think, there was no tenant right. I rather inferred from your answer that in fact incoming tenants did very often pay something to outgoing tenants for the holding?—Not that I know of. I did not say so.

Lord Kenyon.

13,829. Does this last table refer to one year's expenditure?—Might I see it? (Document handed to witness.)

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,830. I take it it is one year's expenditure?—That is my last year's expenditure, the largest I ever had, I think.

Mr. Griffiths.

13,831. Is the hauling on your estate generally done by the tenant, Colonel Finch?—Hauling for what?

13,832. Buildings?—Yes, for his own buildings.

13,833. When a tenant leaves I suppose he is paid for what he has laid out in hauling?—Compensated for improvements?

13,834. Yes?—Yes.

13,835. I think you mentioned that the labourers benefit somewhat by the game laws?—Do they benefit by the game laws?

13,836. I think you say so in your summary?—I did not mean that.

13,837. You were asked whether the labourers benefit?—I should like to know the question.

Chairman.

I think the question is, How does it affect the labourers?

Mr. Griffiths.

13,838. That is the question?—Yes, I think that the law of allowing the tenants to kill hares and rabbits, the Hares and Rabbits Bill, is a benefit to the labourers. From my observation I should say they benefit by it.

13,839. In which way do they benefit?—They benefit by occasionally getting a rabbit, if that is a benefit to them.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

13,840. By having a good meal at a reasonable price, I suppose?—A good meal without a price, I rather mean.

13,841. Oh, without a price at all? Are the labourers generally allowed to kill the rabbits?—Well, they do sometimes.

Lord Kenyon

13,842. On their own holdings, you mean?—Oh, certainly, on their own holdings, but also the labourers on the holdings where they work.

Mr. Griffiths.

13,843. That is better still; I am very pleased to hear it. You speak again of trespass. How do you explain that trespass question? I do not quite understand it?—I said I did not think the law of trespass was sufficiently stringent in this district, especially to prevent the tourist people coming to see the place, and the cheap trippers coming by excursion trains from running over the fences and over the gates.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,844. May I ask what remedy you suggest for that—what alteration in the law? I think that is an important point?—I could not suggest an alteration in the law.

Mr. Griffiths.

13,845. Do you not think it is of benefit to the neighbourhood for the tourists to come?—The towns benefit, no doubt.

13,846. The hotels?—The hotels, no doubt.

13,847. Is there anything more than that they travel along, disturbing the sheep, the stock?—Yes, and by breaking down the fences they allow the sheep to get from one field to another. You will understand that.

13,848. I think you say that there is some attention paid to poultry?—Yes, there is.

13,849. Have they sufficient accommodation for that purpose?—Oh, I think so. I never heard any complaint.

13,850. Poultry farming is a most profitable thing, and I think we should look to the things that are most profitable on a farm at the present day, and I think poultry farming is very profitable alongside these towns?—No doubt it is.

13,851. Do you find farmers' wives slow to adopt the new methods of appliances for dairying?—I find not only that they are slow to adopt them, but they do not adopt them at all; so far as I can make out they do not attend the lectures, or seldom do attend lectures that are given; and the butter that they make generally has to be re-made before it can be used; it is so full of hair and dirt. I am speaking generally, not of individuals; there are some who make beautiful butter.

13,852. Quite so. You think there is room for improvement in that way?—Yes.

13,853. How is the cow pasture? Is there much dairying in this district?—Yes, there is a great deal.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

13,854. Are the cow pastures pretty well supplied with water?—I think most years very well; we are short this year.

13,855. Have you many farm cottagers that keep a cow or two?—Yes, most of them do.

13,856. Most of the farm labourers?—A cow, I will not say always two.

13,857. It is an inducement, you think, to keep them in the country and not in the towns?—No doubt a cow is of the greatest help to a labourer's family, and the children especially. It is a great inducement. I always give them a run for a cow when I possibly can.

13,858. Do any of the large estates here keep entire horses for the use of the tenants?—Yes.

13,859. Do the tenants avail themselves of them?—Not as much as they might do.

13,860. They would rather employ an inferior animal?—Yes, and not have the trouble of going or sending for the good one; at least, that is my idea.

13,861. And the landlords generally keep bulls and entire horses?—Not generally, but some of them do.

13,862. At a moderate price, I suppose?—At a very moderate price.

13,863. And yet they will not avail themselves of them?—Not as much as I think they might.

Mr. Richard Jones.

13,864. Generally speaking, Colonel Wynne Finch, your opinion of the farmers' wives is not a high one?—Oh, on the contrary; I have a very high opinion of the farmers' wives, but not of the way they make butter. I did not say a word against the farmers' wives. Forgive me, if you thought so from my evidence you are entirely mistaken.

13,865. In other respects you find them industrious and intelligent?—Oh, very industrious and capital mothers.

13,866. What is your opinion generally with respect to the farmers themselves?—That is a very large question. Would you mind putting it a little more definitely.

13,867. Are they industrious and intelligent?—They are industrious as a rule.

13,868. And intelligent?—Yes.

13,869. But I see you qualify that statement rather in one of your answers here. You say that the landlord supplies the draining pipes, the agent supervises the direction of the drains, and the tenant lays down the pipes and is expected to keep the end open, which he rarely does?—Which he rarely does. I have found that.

13,870. From lack of care?—From indolence, a little indolence in not taking the trouble; it wants so little trouble to keep the outfalls open twice a year, perhaps, but as a rule I cannot get them to do it, though I have served them with a printed notice asking them to see to that detail.

13,871. You say in another place that there is no land going out of cultivation, but some which might be better cultivated?—Yes, I do; I think so.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

13,872. Have you any estates in England?—Yes.

13,873. What is your opinion of the Welsh farmers compared with English farmers?—I do not see that you should press me to answer that question.

13,874. I am simply asking for your opinion?—I have not a sufficiently large number of tenants to make it possible to compare the one with the other. I have three tenants only in England, if you wish to know, and I do not know that you could expect me to put those three against a large number of tenants in Wales and draw any conclusion. My three England tenants are very intelligent; one has been to Australia, and one has been all his life on the farm, and was born on the farm which he is in.

13,875. Have you erected any farmhouse lately?—We are in England. Are you talking of England?

13,876. No, on your Welsh estate?—Yes.

13,877. Do you provide accommodation for the men to sleep in the house?—No. I provide accommodation—not necessarily for the men. There is accommodation for a certain number to sleep in the house. Of course I cannot be there to see that they do.

13,878. Have you given this question any consideration?—Yes, I have.

13,879. Well, generally speaking, do you think there is sufficient accommodation in the farmhouses to accommodate the men; that is, to give them sleeping apartments?—Well, in some farms there is; some not.

13,880. Do you not think that in the interests of morality and good order, there should be sufficient accommodation in every farmhouse for the men to sleep inside the house?—It would be a very good thing if there were, no doubt.

13,881. But you are not prepared to say that it is done generally on your estate?—I build farmhouses with sufficient accommodation. It rests with the tenant to use that accommodation according to his own ideas.

Mr. Grove.

13,882. Col. Finch, I think you stated that you always give a copy of the agreement to each tenant from the office?—I do.

13,883. Whether they ask for it or not. I mean is it a rule?—I believe it is always given.

13,884. Is it a rule of the estate office that a copy is always tendered to the tenants?—Oh, yes, always tendered.

13,885. Do you think there is sufficient labour for the proper development of the land on your estates?—You mean by that question, do they employ sufficient number of labourers?

13,886. Yes?—No, I think they could with advantage employ more in many cases; I will not go further than that.

13,887. Do you think that arises from the want of cottage accommodation in any way?—No, I do not, because, as I said, I have cottages.

Mr. Grove—continued.

I am talking now of Pentre Voelas, a village a few miles from here, and there are cottages where quarrymen live who work at Festiniog, which is 14 miles off, and it suits them to live there with their wives and children, and to go for a week, or four or five days a week, whatever the time may be, when they are working, to the quarries, and come back for Sundays and Saturdays.

13,888. I suppose you would agree with the fact, would you not, that proper cottage accommodation would settle labour more on the land than perhaps it is at the present moment?—It might help to, but the tendency, as I said in one of my answers, is for the people who get cottages to go where the higher rates of wages are, and not to work on the farm, leaving their families in comfortable cottages.

13,889. I gather that you do not get any unpleasant relations with your tenants because of the game question?—No, I have had no trouble.

13,890. Do you often get claims for compensation for damages by game?—Very seldom. have had them.

13,891. Is there any butter making taught by the County Council in Denbighshire?—I cannot say that I know, but there have been butter making classes at Llanrwst,—in this very town —which my tenants' wives have not come to as I hoped they would.

13,892. Are your rents paid pretty punctually to you?—Yes.

13,893. Without any large amount of arrears? —In very few instances. In some instances there are arrears certainly.

13,894. I think you say that if the children were paid wages the farmers could still pay their rents. Did I gather that to be your answer?—I hoped they would. I hoped they would suit the wages to the children. Do you mean young children or sons and daughters?

13,895. I am just taking the answer to one of your own questions?—I think that they could, certainly.

13,896. You think then that if some part of the income of the father were devoted to paying wages to his own children—his own son as we may say——?—His own son.

13,897. That he would still have sufficient left to be able to pay his rent without any trouble?—I hope so, because I think he would get better results. I said just now that I think the farm suffers in some cases from not being made the most of. There are few farms you could not say that of.

Lord Kenyon.

13,898. Mr. Richard Jones asked you about the accommodation, as I gathered, in your new farmhouse that you have built?—Yes.

13,899. Could you put in a ground plan of that house showing the accommodation?—Of the tenant farm?

13,900. Yes. I think it might be of value to us as showing a specimen of the farm built now a days?—I could let you have a plan.

Chairman.

I think it would be a good thing.

Lord Kenyon.

13,901. If you would let your agents supply a copy of the ground plan, please do so?—I will in a few days.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,902. I have one question to put to you, and it is this: I see that these parishes are somewhat remote from the nearest railway, somewhat remote from Pwllheli. Has it occurred to you that an improved railway communication might improve the district and relieve the distress?—Very much so. Nothing could be more advantageous. You are speaking now of Cefnamwlch estate—my Carnarvon estate?

13,903. Yes?—It would be an enormous advantage to the whole of that district. I am not speaking in a narrow way about my estate, but about the whole of the district, which I know well.

13,904. Some of us drove down to Nevin and saw the country?—I have often thought it would be a great advantage to get a railway in that place.

13,905. Would a light railway be any good; it would be better than nothing at all?—Much better than nothing.

13,906. Are the roads good there?—The main roads are fairly good, and better than they have been for some time. The bye-roads are so bad that I have heard complaints made. I should not weary you, perhaps, if I told you what occurred to me. A man who lets cars was driving me from Pwllheli to Cefnamwlch. He said he had driven a cattle dealer from England the day before, a very long drive, and had not got home till late at night, and this man said, "These roads are so bad that I shall not come here again." My driver went on to say—he was a very intelligent man—that the people who were responsible for the roads in this place ought to do better. My own carriage broke down last year, so that I thoroughly agreed with him in that respect.

13,907. Has there been a railway suggested in this district?—A railway has constantly been proposed, so far as I can remember, for the last 50 years, from Porthdinlleyn.

Lord Kenyon.

13,908. I suppose the difficulty is about finding capital?—I think it is always so. The grand idea was with regard to a port to Ireland. When that was knocked on the head the scheme fell through.

13,909. The gradients are easy in that district, are they not?—Perfectly easy. I have often talked to engineers about it, because once in every three or four years this crops up, and they have come to consult me about land in the district. Nothing could be easier than constructing a railway to Porthddinlleyn.

13,910. You would take great interest in it?—Yes, I should take great interest in it.

22 September 1893.] Colonel CHARLES A. WYNNE FINCH. [Continued.

13,911. You would probably take your land out in shares?—That would depend upon the result of this Commission.

Chairman.

14,098. 13,912. There are a few questions handed in which perhaps you would not mind my putting to you. The first question is: "Did one of "your tenants, Mr. Rowland Jones, of Hafod "yr e-sg-ob, erect his farmhouse at his own "expense on lease"? Do you remember that?—Yes, I recollect that he built a farmhouse on lease—I think so. I know the house; it was built on lease.

13,913. Was the lease on the house only, or on the farm?—It was only a building lease, my Lord, so far as I recollect.

13,914. Then the second question is: "How "became it for the tenant to erect the house at "his own expense"?—How came he to erect it?

13,915. I suppose it is; how did that come about?—He was a capitalist, my lord.

13,916. "Is the tenant anxious for you to "purchase the house, and have you declined to "purchase the same"?—At this moment I do not recollect ever having had an application from him to purchase it.

13,917. You never had an application?—I do not recollect it.

13,918. This question is put in by Mr. Vincent, "May not your agent, who is here, show "the exact amount of the reduction of rent"? I think that is put in, is it not?—I could not give it without asking him, and I was unable to give the figures exactly.

13,919. Will you kindly send that in?—Certainly.

13,920. Then a question by Mr. Owen Wynne, "What do you think would be the effect of a "land court?"—I cannot think that it would do otherwise than make the relations between landlord and tenant rather strained. That would be the first opinion I should form. I have not thought further than that.

13,921. Mr. Vincent asks, "Is there not a "case on your estate in which the effect of con-"solidation was to reduce the rent"? I think you gave us that, did you not?—I could not give it you in figures. I said that there was no material alteration in the rent, I thought.

13,922. "Though sub-letting is not permitted, "are there not cases in which it goes on"?—Yes, my Lord, there are.

13,923. "If so, what is the effect"?—The effect is not good. It generally means that the tenant has not been able to cultivate it well, to do his duty by the land, and has tried to get somebody else, I should say.

Chairman—continued.

13,924. Do you think it would be true to suggest that your tenants or those of any other landowners have any reason to be afraid to come forward?—No, certainly not; nor any other landlord that I know of.

Sir John Llewelyn.

13,924*a*. May I ask you one question arising out of that, about the sub-letting, Colonel Finch? You say you do not consider its effect is good. Is that because of increased rent?—The middlemen, I think, come in there.

13,925. I suppose the men to whom it is sub-let are called upon to pay higher rent?—I should not know that.

13,926 Why, then, do you say that the effect is not so good? I took it down that you said that sub-letting is not allowed in your agreements, but that it is done?—It is not allowed, and it would not be to the advantage——

13,927. It would be to the advantage of the middleman, but it would not be to the advantage of the tenant?—There would be two people to take a profit off the farm.

13,928. Then you said that its effect is not good?—No, it is not good. In small cases where I found it, I found that the farm has deteriorated. I have noticed that, and found that the man was perhaps in difficulties and had sub-let the farm.

13,929. I only wanted to arrive as to the reason in your mind why you thought it was not good?—Yes, that is my idea.

Mr. Griffiths.

13,930. May I ask you whether you and your agents speak Welsh?—I do not speak Welsh, and my agent does not speak Welsh.

13,931. Do you think it is just to the tenant?—It would be an immense advantage if we could speak Welsh.

13,932. They cannot approach you so fully, from what I have heard in this part?—Oh, yes, indeed. Do not think that. I have always people about who are constantly interpreting. My agent has a clerk who interpets for him and I have people about the house when people come to me who are always there to interpret. See a correction, 14,097.

13,933. Still they are not always at hand?—Yes, they are, in my own house.

13,934. They may meet you on the road and speak to you about this?—True, they might meet me on the road, but if it were important enough for them to come to me they would find an interpreter. Re-examined, 14,096.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. OWEN HUGHES called and examined through an interpreter.

The Secretary read the following statement of the witness:—

"Mr. Owen Hughes of Pantyffridd, Llansaintffraid, Glan Conway, Farmer.

"This witness was for many years tenant on the Bryn Eisteddfod Estate."

Lord Kenyon.

13,935. Was she the daughter of the late archdeacon?—Sister of Archdeacon Jones.

See 15,363–15,379.

"His evidence will be to the effect that no adequate compensation is paid to outgoing tenants; that the rents are very much too high. He will also speak to the state of agriculture generally in this district."

Chairman.

13,936. I will ask you the questions. How long have you been tenant on this estate?—20 years.

13,937. Do you consider that adequate compensation is given to outgoing tenants on this estate?—No, I do not know of any that have received any compensation whatsoever, with five or six exceptions.

13,938. Have you got an agreement at all?—Yes.

13,939. Will you produce it (the witness handed in an agreement)? Can you give any instances of tenants having been made to leave their holdings and receiving no compensation on this estate?—I can.

13,940. Please give them?—I will give one instance to prove the state of things generally. The tenant of Ty Du, Glan Conway, had been on the estate for 27 years.

Lord Kenyon.

13,941. The same estate?—The same estate.

Chairman.

13,941A. What happened then?—They turned the widow away.

13,942. What do you mean by that? Do you mean a man was on the estate for 20 years, and then he turned the widow away. Did he die and was the widow turned out?—The widow remained there for a few years after his death, and then she was turned away.

13,943. Under what circumstances?—I cannot give the full particulars, but the son was doing something in going off to the game.

13,944. Did she receive any money when she left?—No, none.

13,945. Where were you before you were under Miss Jones?—I was not farming previous to that. I commenced when I was 25 years of age, in the year 1862.

13,946. Which farm was it which was sold by your landlord?—The farm that I went into after that one. I was going to leave that farm.

13,947. Which farm?—I was leaving Vron Farm on Miss Jones's estate.

Mr. Richard Jones.

13,948. You were a tenant of Miss Jones of that first place, Vron Farm, for 20 years; you took another farm at the same time, and because you took this other farm, you received the notice to quit from your landlord of the first farm. Are those the circumstances connected with this case?—I lived at Vron up to 1882. I had taken another farm in addition to 1881. I received a notice to quit the first-mentioned farm owing to the fact that I had taken the other farm in addition.

Chairman.

13,949. Then was the other farm sold by the landlord?—Yes.

13,950. Was it Vron that was sold?—No, it was the second farm, Nantycowarch, that was sold.

13,951. You were turned out of one farm and then you took another, and then the second was sold?—Yes.

13,952. What compensation did you get when the second farm was sold by your landlord?—I received none at all.

13,953. What loss do you consider you have sustained by it?—As much as I had spent there. I had drained a little, and I carted towards buildings, and gorse, and clearing waste land.

13,954. How much do you think you are out of pocket, how much have you lost?—I ought to have received something like 30*l.* for the work I had done there.

13,955. You say in your statement that you are in favour of a land court?—Yes, if that would be a fair one on both sides.

Sir John Llewelyn.

13,956. What is the name of the other farm you went to after leaving Vron?—Nantycowarch. Here is the agreement (handing it in).

13,957. Is there any part of this agreement that refers to compensation for unexhausted improvements?—No, there is not; but there are fines in it for not cultivating the land as it ought to be cultivated.

13,958. How long were you in this Nantygarnedd?—Eight years, from November 1881 to November 1889.

13,959. And you consider the value of the unexhausted improvements was worth 30*l.* to you?—Yes, that is what I consider.

13,960. Did you make any application for that sum from the incoming tenant or the landlord?—Yes. I did ask the solicitors acting for the vendors if I could get some compensation.

13,961. What was their answer?—They were not giving me a notice to quit or turning me away, but they left it between me and the purchaser.

13,962. Then did you make any application to the purchaser?—No; it was of no use. The farmer had bought the farm as it was.

Mr. Grove.

13,963. Do you consider that the farm sold at a higher price because of the improvements you had made?—What I mean is, including the value of the cartage and of draining that I did.

Mr. Grove—continued.

13,964. Have you deducted anything from that sum for the benefits which you derived from the expense which you laid out?—Yes; the land that I had drained paid me something.

13,965. In how many years do you think you would reap the full benefit of any money you laid out in draining, how long would it be?—I ought to have 20 years or more.

13,966. Could you recover anything for these improvements according to the terms of your agreement?—No, I could not.

13,967. Could you recover anything in accordance with the custom of the country?—No, I do not think so.

13,968. Why did you not proceed under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I contracted out of the Agricultural Holdings Act in the agreement.

Mr. Griffiths.

13,969. Do you consider that you lost any money in the first farm that you let?—Yes; I had drained a good deal more on that part.

13,970. In which way, what did you do?—I had drained the other farm and made fences on it to the value of 46*l.* 11*s.* 11½*d.*

13,971. Did you get no compensation for that?—Yes.

13,972. What did you get?—30*l.*, but not from the landlord.

7,079. 13,973. Was it as goodwill that you had it?—Yes. It was the sale of the improvements to a new tenant owing to the fact that I was allowed to choose a new tenant.

13,974. Did the landlord in that case find the pipes for draining?—No. It was stones that we used.

13,975. Then you did the whole of the drainage?—I paid as much as that for the cutting of the drains and new fences.

13,976. Then what did you pay for the stones?—I have not put that for the stones. I and my servants did that part of the work.

13,977. Then it would amount to a greater sum, a good deal, if you had put the carting in of the stones?—Yes, very much more; but I kept an account in detail of everything I paid.

13,978. And that amounted to 46*l.* 11*s.* 11*d.*?—Yes, I had a lease of the farm for 14 years.

13,979. Why did you not have a lease of the new one?—The estate was under trustees, and they had only life interests.

13,980. How was it you did not get more than 30*l.* from this incoming tenant?—Because I could get no more.

13,981. You say the other farm was sold so cheap, why was that?—Because the market for land was low at the time. It was in the market for three years.

13,982. Did the landlord find you pipes for draining, or stones, in the second farm?—No. It was I carried stones from the farm for the purpose.

13,983. Were there any buildings on the farm?—Yes, a little; what was necessary.

13,984. Then you consider that you have lost in both the farms?—Yes, I do. I was coming out of the first pretty well because I was allowed to sell the crops rather than have to keep them on the land so as to give manure to the incoming tenant.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

13,985. What about this widow you spoke of? Had she made any improvements on the farm?—Yes, her husband had drained and made new fences, and made stone walls about the place.

13,986. And did she have compensation?—No, none.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

13,987. You know a great many tenant farmers in this district, I suppose?—I know the major part in the Vale of Conway.

13,988. And you know the way that they live?—Yes, to some extent, because we live somewhat similar to each other.

13,989. And you have known the district all your life, as I understand?—Yes, I live in the same neighbourhood that I was born.

13,990. During the years then that you have known this neighbourhood, would it be true to say that the tenant-farmers have found it very difficult to pay their rent?—Yes, from the great depression that commenced in 1884.

13,991. Before that, you think the tenant farmers were able to save a little?—From 1863 to 1871 there was a series of bad seasons—dry seasons. From about 1872 to 1881 it was a fairly good time.

13,992. Have most of the farms been in the possession of members of the same family for many years?—No, not now. When I commenced farming, members of a family would be found on many a farm that had been there for 100 and 200 years.

13,993. Are the present tenant-farmers in this district chiefly persons who speak Welsh only?—Yes, quite so.

13,994. Welsh only?—Welsh only, with a few exceptions, except that they and their children understand English, and their children can speak it.

13,995. Do you habitually use the Welsh language on your farms for business purposes and for ordinary labourers and so forth?—It is Welsh we use, and if we were able to speak in English to them, the labourers, they would not understand us.

13,996. Then you would describe this as a Welsh district?—It is a thoroughly Welsh district.

13,997. Are most of the tenant farmers Nonconformists?—Oh, yes, by far the larger number.

13,998. Is this agreement which you put in, the agreement on the estate of Margaret Grace Jones, an agreement under which you took a farm yourself?—Yes, after the lease expired.

13,999. Was this the harsh clause which you were referring to in answer to one question—"The tenant to pay in addition to the said rent "a further sum of 20*l.* for every acre, or for "any greater or less quantity than an acre, and

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

" so proportionally of meadow or old grass land " which he shall plough, break up, or convert " into tillage without such consent as afore- " said" ?—Yes, that is one of them.

14,000. Then in the same clause in the agreement there is a kind of penal rent of 10*l.* " for " every cartload of straw and other stuff sold, " and 5*l.* for every timber or other tree cut, " without consent." Those are the penal clauses which you refer to, are they ?—Yes, they are sure to be oppressive; I can prove so.

14,001. Have you ever known on this estate that those clauses have actually been enforced against a tenant who has broken the clauses ?—I do not wish to reply to that question now. A tenant will come forward presently to speak for himself.

14,002. This agreement was before 1880, so there was nothing very unusual or harsh in the reservation of the rabbits to the landlord. It must be taken now as read with the Act of 1880 ?—No, they had given the rabbits to the tenants long before that time.

14,003. The only thing that I see in the agreement is, that in the proviso for re-entry (which is a perfectly usual and proper one, although not entirely exceptional) there is this, " The tenant is to pay all rents, rates and " taxes which may arise or become due up to " the end of the current year of his tenancy." That strikes me as somewhat harsh ?—Yes, I consider that oppressive.

14,004. Do you remember any instance in which the landlord has entered and compelled the tenant after the landlord has re-entered to pay to the end of the current year ?—No, I do not know.

14,005. The last clause of all is, in my opinion, very harsh, " That in case an action of " ejectment is brought, the tenant is to pay the " landlord all the costs and expenses between " attorney and client, or double the taxed costs " of that action at the option of the landlord." That usurps the powers of the Court. Can you give any instance of it ?—No, I cannot. Everybody tries to beware of them.

14,006. Is this agreement still in force on Miss Jones' estate ?—So far as I know.

Lord Kenyon.

14,007. You said that you received notice because you took another farm ?—That was the reason which the sub-agent gave me.

14,008. Did you tell your landlady that you were going to take another farm ?—No, I did not.

14,009. Did she by any chance say that she thought you had not sufficient capital for two farms ?—No, they did not say so; what they said was that they would not let another farm to one who had a farm already.

14,010. Which farm did you propose to live on ?—At first I intended living in the old home, but to send my daughter and a nephew to the new farm. My daughter was 18 years of age.

14,011. You gave an instance of a widow who was turned away; was she in arrears ?—No; there were no arrears, so far as I know.

14,012. You said on account of the son being in trouble; was the son prosecuted for trespass in pursuit of game ?—No.

14,013. In this first agreement as to Nantycowarch that you put in it says, " No custom of " the country shall be taken into consideration " in making their award." Is there any custom of the country ?—No, not in our district.

14,014. Do they usually go under the Agricultural Holdings Act ?—We go under our agreement.

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,015. How have you spent this 30*l.* for repairs; in what way ?—For cartage and for draining a marsh.

14,016. Was it cartage to a new building ?—Carting towards a cowshed, carrying to repair the dwelling-house, and to make the walls of the yard.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,017. Did you not tell us just now that you received 30*l.* as a custom of the country when you went into the farm ?—It was on the first farm I got it.

14,018. Was it not by the custom of the country that you had this 30*l.* ?—No, I agreed with the incoming tenant.

14,019. Quite so, but is it not customary to do that ?—It is a rule when the landlord permits it, but it is seldom that the landlord permits it.

14,020. What remedies do you suggest for this state of things ?—If the Irish Act, providing for advancing money to tenants to enable them to purchase their own holdings, had been in operation, the whole of the Vale of Conway would be now owned by the men who occupy the holdings in it, and they would have nearly paid the whole for it. The Vale of Conway has all been sold. I have a note here of the estates that have been sold.

Sir John Llewelyn.

14,021. Has much of the land in the Vale of Conway been under the hammer ?—I have here particulars of the estates.

14,022. Then the answer to that is that most of it has ?—Yes, and much of it several times. " From 1850 to 1892. Number of estates sold " in the Vale of Conway. In the parishes of " Llanbedr and Caerhun: Mr. Assheton Smith's " estate, Caerhun and Llangelenin, Coed Mawr, " and Glyn Isa estates. Llangelenin and Gyffin: " Sir Richard Bulkeley's estate, and Lady Ers- " kine's estate. In the parish of Llanrhos and " Llangystenin: Llangystenin Hall estate, Pabo " estate, Marl estate, Deganwy estate. In the " parish of Llandrillo yn Rhos: Pwllycrochon and " Craig y don estates. In the parish of Llansant- " ffraid: Llanerch estate, sold to Bryn Eisteddfod, " Hendrewaelod estate, Bryn trallwyn, and " portion of Lord Mostyn's estate. In the " parish of Eglwysbach: Bodnant Hall and

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

" Maes adda estates. Township of Macnan : Sir " Watkin Williams Wynne's estate. In the " parish of Llanddoged and Llanrwst : Plas " Madoc and portion of Gwydir estate."

Mr. Griffiths.

14,023. Do you then consider that the Government do not deal so fairly with the Welsh tenants as with the Irish ?—No ; the measure with which the Irish are dissatisfied would please us very much. We should like the Irish sparings.

Sir John Llewelyn.

14,024. I am very much interested in your last answer. I think you said, if I caught you rightly, that you thought the tenants would largely have paid the advance made by the Government by this time. Is that your opinion ?—Yes, I believe they would have repaid it, and the money would have been more secure for the Government than money advanced upon drainage and irrigation.

Mr. Seebohm.

14,025. Supposing that the tenants had purchased 20 or 30 years ago, do you think a very large proportion of them would have kept their holdings, would have been holding the land now ; or would not the land hunger, or the high competitive prices paid for the land by these small holdings, have brought them into the market over and over again ?—Many who did buy their farms 40 years ago have sold them, because they could get more for them.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Roger Hughes called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

14,026. Where do you live ?—Eglwysfach.

14,027. Are you a County Councillor for the county ?—Yes, for two parishes.

14,028. Do you wish to speak with reference to the Bodnant Hall estate ?—Yes.

14,029. Who is the owner of that estate ?—Henry Davis Pochin, Esq.

14,030. When did he buy this estate ?—About 18 years ago.

14,031. Were the rents put up after the purchase of the estate ?—On the whole estate, with the exception of one farm.

14,032. What was the result ?—All the tenants have gone, almost all.

14,033. Who farms that land now ?—New tenants.

14,034. Did the landlord ever farm the land himself ?—Yes, 10 farms at once.

14,035. How long did that state of things continue ?—It varied, some more or less, some for four, five, six, and seven years.

14,036. Can you give any illustration of increase of rent ?—I can give four instances.

14,037. With the result of such increase ?—Yes.

14,038. Please put them in ?—Ty ucha. The rent in the time of Mr. Hanmer, the owner previous to Mr. Pochin, was 100*l.* ; to the following tenant, a son of Mr. Richard Edwards, 120*l.* Thomas Edwards occupied it from 12 to 13 years, and he went from there perfectly poor.

14,039. Then the second instance ?—Penllyn. Robert Williams was a tenant in Mr. Hanmer's time. The rent was 70*l.* Mr. Pochin for some years cultivated it. It was let to a certain William Roberts for 116*l.* William Roberts only occupied it for about three years. Mr. Roberts left it, and Mr. Pochin cultivated it or farmed it himself for two or three years afterwards. It is now let for 100*l.*, after two fields have been taken from it—mountain fields.

14,040. Then a third instance ?—Gardd. 75*l.* was the rent in Mr. Hanmer's time. He became bankrupt owing to circumstances peculiarly his own.

Chairman—continued.

14,041. And what then ?—He became bankrupt, because he became security for his son—for private reasons. Then Mr. Pochin came in and cultivated the farm for some years, and then it was accepted for 100*l.* rent, but it is on Mr. Pochin's hands now.

14,042. Then No. 4 ?—The fourth instance is Henblas. Forty years ago the rent of that farm was 48*l.* Its present rent is 88*l.* Those are the instances of the farms that I have.

14,043. Do you know a farm called Goleugell ?—Yes.

14,044. What was the rent of that farm ?—40*l.*

14,045. Did the rector of the parish buy it for 990*l.* ?—Yes.

14,046. Did he refuse to relet it to the old tenant under 60*l.* a year ?—That is what he was offered. That was the offer to the old tenant.

14,047. Did the tenant have to leave ?—Yes, or else he had to take it for that rent.

14,048. And sell his stock ?—He sold a good part of his stock, and he obtained a place in another farm to take the rest.

14,049. Had that tenant improved the farm ?—Yes, he had cleaned off or reclaimed some fields, which were gorse and bushes altogether.

14,050. Was he a Nonconformist ?—Yes.

14,051. What do you consider the condition of farms generally ?—They are in a very bad state in our parish, generally speaking.

14,052. Are you in favour of a land court ?—A land court, or some place where a farmer may appeal to when there is any disagreement.

14,053. Are the tenant farmers coming forward readily to give evidence ?—No, they will not come ; they are afraid of coming.

Lord Kenyon.

14,054. Has the rector of the parish got another tenant of that farm, or does he occupy it himself ?—He has another tenant.

14,055. At what rent?—I am not sure. I have not been told that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,056. Did you hear the evidence given by Mr. Owen Hughes, the last witness?—Yes.

14,057. Do you agree with the general evidence that he gave as to most of the tenant farmers being monoglot Welshmen and being Nonconformists?—I cannot say that in our parish.

14,058. Which is your parish?—Eglwys fach.

14,059. Are there many English tenant farmers in your parish, then?—I do not remember that there is a single one.

14,060. Then I may take it that the tenant farmers in your parish are practically all Welshmen?—Yes, all.

14,061. Habitually using the Welsh language?—Always.

14,062. And Nonconformists?—Almost all.

14,063. Do they find it difficult to pay their rent?—Yes, they find great difficulty. I do not say that there are not half a dozen farms in the parish getting their rent comfortably without much trouble.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,064. About how many farms are there in the parish?—Over 100, at any rate.

14,065. And you say there are only six that are able really to pay their way fairly?—Yes, without getting extraneous help.

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,066. What sort of a farmer is Mr. Pochin?—He is a very good farmer.

14,067. Then we are to understand that when the rent of Penllyn was 70*l.* and Mr. Pochin had it in his own hands, he expended a lot of money in improvements to make it of the value of 116*l.* a year?—If it had paid, the tenant, William Roberts, who was a good tenant, would not have gone from there in three years.

See 15,036.

14,068. Then do you wish the Commission to understand that Mr. Pochin lets his land to the highest bidder?—That is the rule. The security for rent comes in from two sources to the landlord. First of all he can take possession of the stock, and secondly there has hardly any farms been let in the parish without a tenant having one or two sureties.

14,069. Have you anything further to say?—I have nothing in particular to say with regard to that estate.

Mr. Grove.

14,070. Why are the tenant farmers afraid to come and give evidence?—They are afraid of notice to quit.

14,071. Do they understand the provisions of the Witnesses' Protection Act?—Some know, but they have no faith in the Act. They know of the Act, but the farmers do not think that the law can protect them at all.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,072. You mentioned just now that some of the farmers had extraneous help to pay the rents. What do you mean?—Borrowing money in the banks and running into debt with tradesmen.

14,073. When did Mr. Pochin buy this estate?—About 18 years ago.

14,074. You said that he lets his farm to the highest bidder, as I understand?—Yes, and it is so.

14,075. Who owned this estate before Mr. Pochin had it?—William Hanmer, Esq.

14,076. Do you know how long that gentleman and his family owned that estate?—Some centuries. They were an ancient family.

14,077. Was that family in the habit of letting the farms to the highest bidder like the present owner?—I do not understand that they did so.

14,078. You have heard from your parents and other people in the country what was the custom?—Yes.

14,079. They did not let it to the highest bidder?—No, they looked for the best tenant. With regard to that estate there is only one tenant on it since Mr. Hanmer's time.

14,080. The consequence of carrying out that system is that they have got rid of the old tenants? Is that it?—There is only one tenant.

14,081. They have got rid of them all excepting one?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

14,082. Were the repairs upon the estate in good order when it was sold?—No.

14,083. Has the present owner spent much money in repairing these buildings?—Yes, the outbuildings especially are very good on the whole of the estate.

14,084. Do you not think that would have a material effect in the rise of the rents?—That was rather done when the landlord cultivated the farms himself.

Chairman.

14,085. I have one or two questions by Mr. Vincent. "Mr. Pochin says the increase of "rent on the whole of his estate at the time "when he came in was not more than from 10*l.* "to 20*l.* Do you contradict this?"—I contradict that in one farm.

14,086. Do you contradict what Mr. Pochin says?—I contradict the whole of that sum from one farm.

14,087. "Does not Mr. Pochin give abatements?"—Yes. He did so at the last rent audit—a 10 per cent. abatement.

14,088. "Mr. Pochin is not a Churchman, is he?"—No, I do not think he is.

14,089. "Can you name any single case of "intimidation by any landlord, or of any form "of threatening?"—With regard to this inquiry?

14,090. Yes?—No, nothing has been said publicly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

14,091. Or privately? — Not as far as I know.

Chairman.

14,092. Then there is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne. "Are you a practical farmer yourself?"—No.

14,093. "How much land do you hold?"—No land.

Chairman—continued.

14,094. Then there is another question by Mr. Vincent. "You may show a greater "increase on one farm, but do you know that "some farms were not reduced?"—No, I do not know of one on that estate.

14,095. Then there is a question by Mr. David Jones. "Can you produce the agreement re- "ferring to the tenancy of Goleugell submitted "by the rector to the intended new tenant?"—I can produce a copy of the agreement (handing in same).

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Colonel CHARLES A. WYNNE FINCH recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

14,096. Do you wish to correct anything?—Yes, two answers that I gave inadvertently to questions put to me.

13,932. 14,097. If you please, what were they?—One was about the question of the language. I said that my agent's clerk spoke Welsh and was able to interpret. He is an Anglesea man who does not interpret because he does not speak Welsh sufficiently, and he has never acted as interpreter. I had confused him with the last clerk who did speak Welsh.

13,912. 14,098. Is there anything else?—I was asked about a certain Rowland Jones who had built a house on a 60 years' lease, and the question was put to me, as I understood it, whether he would be allowed to buy it.

Chairman—continued.

14,099. Yes, I remember the question?—It was the other way, that Rowland Jones wished me to buy up his lease.

14,100. He asked you to buy it?—He asked me to buy up the lease, and I declined to do so.

14,101. He asked you to buy the remainder of the lease?—He asked me if I would buy the remainder of his lease, which I declined to do.

14,102. Is that all?—That is all.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. HENRY CURR called and examined.

Chairman.

14,103. You are agent to the Earl of Ancaster?—I am.

14,104. And you look after the Gwydyr estate?—Yes.

14,105. As well as the Drummond Castle estate?—Yes.

14,106. How large is the Gwydyr estate?—It is 32,937 acres.

14,107. Nearly 33,000 acres?—Close upon 33,000 acres.

14,108. And for what district do you give evidence?—Llanrwst.

14,109. Bettwsycoed district and Gwydyr?—Yes. I may mention that the whole estate is in Carnarvonshire, except about nine acres in Denbighshire.

14,110. Have you had any squatters' cottages?—One case.

14,111. Then we need not go into that?—I may mention it was over 20 years ago, and it was surrendered and a lease for life granted at a nominal rent.

14,112. Then, of course, politics, language, or religion make no difference between Lord Ancaster and the tenant at all?—No.

14,113. Have you some sub-agents?—Yes.

14,114. Have you and the sub-agents received any special training for the supervision of agricultural land?—I have been trained in a land agent's office, and my assistant, the local agent, has been trained in my office in Scotland.

Chairman—continued.

14,115. What is the usual date of entry in your district?—30th November.

14,116. And, of course, your farms are let on yearly tenancies, like they are all over this part of Wales?—Yes from year to year.

14,117. What do you say about leases?—Well, I offered leases when I came here first. I recommended the tenants to accept leases, but they declined to accept them, because they preferred annual tenancies under agreement. One lease was granted before my day, and, when it expired, the tenant preferred to hold on under a yearly agreement.

Mr. Seebohm.

14,118. Do you know how long ago that was?—I have been agent 20 years, and it was about two years before I came here that the lease was granted.

Chairman.

14,119. You have no cases of hardship, and no damage was done that was not compensated for?—No.

14,120. Will you put in your two agreements?—Yes; these are the two (handing them in).

14,121. Have you any penalising clauses in your agreements?—We have, but they have never been acted on; and I may mention that under the agreement the tenants were bound to pay interest on buildings and drainage and other things, and to do the carriages; but virtually they have never been asked to do so.

14,122. They have never been asked to do it on the Gwydir estate?—Except when they have horses and are able to perform the carriages, but very few perform the carriages.

14,123. Practically, on the estate the haulage is a dead letter?—Practically, very little is done.

14,124. Will you tell me how the rent is usually fixed?—At so much per acre.

14,125. And, of course, you charge the small tenants a little more than the big ones?—Yes. The rental of farms and lands prior to 1869 was 5,901*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* In 1869 there was a re-valuation by two valuers appointed by the late Lord Willoughby. It has not been valued since. The rental now is 6,650*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*, or an increase of 759*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.*

14,126. Is the rental now 6,000*l.* a year?—Of all the farms and lands. Of course, you have ground rents, and you have mineral rents as well.

14,127. That is the Willoughby estate, the Gwydyr estate?—Yes.

14,128. What is the usual rent of average lands of different qualities in your district?—Well, it is very difficult to answer. Upland farms, principally grazing, range from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.* 10*d.* per acre. Upland farms, partly grazing and partly arable, from 3*s.* 8*d.* to 9*s.* per acre. Low and sideland farms from 15*s.* 1*d.* to 1*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* per acre. Lowland farms, consisting mostly of excellent meadow land, from 1*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* to 2*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*

14,129. Then I think you have told us about the rents. They were fixed by valuation about 23 years ago, in Alberie, Lord Willoughby's time?—Yes.

14,130 About the selection of tenants. You let them to the highest bidder, I suppose?—No, I select them

14,131. And you try to find out about the capital?—Yes.

14,132. And arbitration, is that ever resorted to? Do you find that necessary?—No, it is never required.

14,133. Have the rents been raised generally?—No, they have not.

14,135. That is since 1879?—Since 1879.

14,136. Then you have a valuer appointed by the owner for raising rents?—We have not raised any rents; but any question that arises as to the rent, the local agent, who is a competent man, goes over the farm, sometimes I go with him, and we fix the rent ourselves. There is no difficulty.

14,137. When do you exact the rent when due?—Rent falls due half yearly on 30th May and 30th November. The rents due on the 30th May are received in September, and the rents due on the 30th November are received in January.

14,138. And Lord Ancaster pays all the tithes?—All the tithes.

14,139. Land tax and everything?—Yes.

14,140. About the small holdings, what can you say about them?—A number of small holdings have been consolidated where the tenants have died, or left voluntarily. In some cases this has proved beneficial. In others, where capital was insufficient, it was not beneficial.

14,141. And were they upland or lowland farms?—Principally upland.

14,142. And about the rent, what has been the effects of consolidation on rent?—No alteration. There has been some saving in the cost of buildings where the buildings were all bad, and where new buildings were required, one set of buildings were erected sufficient for two farms.

14,143. You do not stand any sub-letting?—No.

14,144. You think the large holdings are better farmed than the small ones?—Yes.

14,145. Now about the state of cultivation, what is it?—Principally cattle and sheep-breeding and grazing.

14,146. Is there any scarcity of labourers?—No, we have not found any difficulty in that way.

14,147. Did embanking rivers cost anything to the estate?—A very large amount.

14,148. What river was it?—The Conway and other rivers as well, the Llugwy and the Lledr to a certain amount, but principally the Conway.

14,149. Then as to the improvements?—The expenditure on new buildings and repairs to buildings, since 1872, 40,460*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.*, exclusive of the value of home timber, which has been largely used, and which is not included in the above sum. No interest has been charged on expenditure and buildings, except in a few cases where hay-sheds have been erected. We charge interest on hay-sheds, because all wanted hay-sheds.

Mr. Seebohm.

14,150. I see in the agreement you have a right to charge 5 per cent., but you do not charge it?—We do not charge it. Then the expenditure on wire fences since 1872 has been 8,035*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* Those fences have all been erected at the request of the tenants. As a general rule, the tenants pay interest on the cost at 5 per cent., the owner keeping the fences in repair without any additional charge. I wish to mention in connexion with that, my Lord, we have erected about 138 miles of fences. When I came here there were no wire fences, and I recommended the tenants to adopt the wire system to prevent the hounding of sheep. Dogs were in all directions hunting after sheep and very much injuring them, and I recommended the erection of wire fences, and I pointed out to them that in Scotland the tenants there in many cases erected the wire fences entirely at their own cost, and I advised the tenants at that time to apply for fences, and I would recommend their erection, charging the tenants 5 per cent. interest, and I think for all who applied for fences, we erected wire fences, and they agreed to pay interest at 5 per cent. on the cost, the owner keeping the fences in repair free of cost to the tenant.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Chairman.

14,151. 138 miles of wire fences?—138 miles of wire fences, and the cost is 8,035*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*; and I may tell you that the interest we actually get is 254*l.*, because we have in some cases made no charge; so the interest on the money spent on fences would amount to 401*l.*, and actually we get 254*l.*; but I think that in all cases where interest is paid it has been paid most willingly by the tenants; they consider wire fences to be a great advantage.

14,152. What have the tenants done besides that in improvements?—Well, I cannot say that the tenants have improved the property in any way.

14,153 and 14,154. Has any draining been done at all?—Old Lord Willoughby maintained for many years a large staff of men at Gwydyr, who drained the land for the tenants, so that all the land was then drained by surface drains or tiled drains. Since then very little has been done. Some tenants have drained small portions. Lord Ancaster supplied the tiles, and they did the labour; but that has been to a very, very small extent.

14,155. How does the Agricultural Holdings Act come out?—Well, your Lordship will observe if you look at the agreement that we provide for compensation so far as it is not inconsistent with that, and I think the terms we offer are much more favourable than the Agricultural Holdings Act gives, that is to say, we allow seven years for lime and five years for undissolved bones, and so on; so the terms there are not only considerably better than the terms of the Agricultural Holdings Act, but they are specific; and they enable the tenant at once to see what claim he has if he should leave the estate.

Mr. Seebohm.

14,156. They have the right to fall back upon the Act?—So far as they are not provided for. The agreement provides that, so far as the Agricultural Holdings Act does not apply, those things will come under the agreement.

Chairman.

14,157. How about the custom of the country?—The custom of the country does not apply. But with regard to Question 100, I say, no, they do not, because they always ask the landlord to do them; that is to say, they never ask for any written consent of the landlord. Consent has never been asked.

14,158. Then as to the custom with regard to the sale of sheep?—Well, the agreement provides for that. Breeding ewes will be taken by the landlord, or the in-coming tenant, at a valuation. That is all that is necessary.

14,159. Then there is no game kept on the estate at all?—Very little game, and I only saw one hare in the course of my perambulations in the course of 15 years, I think.

14,160. And what game there is the tenants have?—No. The game is let, such as it is. There is very little game on the place.

14,161. Whom is it let to?—A large portion is let to Colonel Grove.

14,162?—Is there any difficulty as to that?—No difficulty. I never heard of any.

14,163. You never heard any complaints?—No. So particular are we that we pay for rabbit trappers. There is a man kept by Lord Ancaster whose sole duty it is to trap and kill the rabbits, so as to keep them down.

14,164. Have you planted a very large number of trees?—A very large number of trees.

14,165. Is there any instruction given in butter and cheese-making?—There have been in the neighbourhood here some lectures given on butter-making.

14,166. They seem to have been well attended?—Yes. The agricultural lectures have been given at Dolwyddelen and Trefriw. The attendance averaged from 40 to 80.

14,167. That is a fair average?—Yes.

14,168. Are the railway rates high?—Yes.

14,169. There is nothing about co-operation except that the tenants assist each other in the sheep-shearing?—That is all.

14,170. The farmers do not insure?—No, very few. The proprietor insures the buildings at his own cost.

14,171. You can only give two instances, can you, of tenant farmers who have bought their own or other holdings, can you?—Yes. Mr. Jones, Berth du, purchased from the owner of Gwydyr, at a public sale, the farm of Cae-Melwr, in the neighbourhood of Llanrwst, at the price of 4,150*l.*, being 33¾ years' purchase. Mr. Robert Jones, butcher, Liverpool, purchased Pen-y-garnedd at 59⅔ years' purchase; the whole land sold brought 39 years' purchase. These are the two farms, but separate portions of land were sold at the same time. See 14,487–14,524.

Chairman—continued.

14,172. They are outlying farms?—Yes, and the whole land sold brought 39 years' purchase in 1884.

14,173. About the tenants, they work hard, I suppose?—Oh, yes.

14,174. Very hard?—Yes.

14,175. Harder than they do in England?—I have very little knowledge of England.

14,176. Harder than they do in Scotland?—No, I do not think they do.

14,177. About the same?—About the same.

14,178. The children, do they work hard too?—Oh, yes, I believe they do.

14,179. Then you say the holdings are so small, generally, that hired labour is not required, except during the hay harvest, is that so?—That is so.

14,180. And the labourers live on the farm premises, just as we have heard?—Yes.

14,181. Very few in cottages?—No.

14,182. Is the accommodation for the labourers in the farm premises as it ought to be?—I think so, from the extent of the farms.

14,183. It is better on your estate than it is, as we have heard, on others. We have heard some very bad accounts?—I have not seen the other estates here.

14,184. Do you think it is decent?—Oh, I think so. It is quite as good as they have in Scotland, and in some respects better.

14,185. Have the cottages been increased?—Well, I do not know that there is much increase, but the cottages have been repaired and improved, and some new cottages erected in place of old ones.

14,186. You have generally gardens, and in many cases allotments?—Yes.

14,187. Held from Lord Ancaster himself?—Himself.

14,188. What do you think about the improvements in the state of tenant farmers?—That is to say, the houses of the tenant farmers?

14,189. Yes?—Well, they are very much improved. New houses, well constructed, of suitable accommodation; generally five rooms and upwards. I think they will be found as good houses probably as you will find anywhere for the same class of tenant.

14,190. And there has been no migration, or not very much?—Very little.

14,191. They do not keep dairy and farming accounts, I suppose?—No, I believe not.

14,192. Then I suppose the importation of cattle and sheep, and, principally bad seasons, have tended to cause depression?—I think so.

14,193. I need not ask you what the general relations are between landlord and tenant?—Oh, I think they are very satisfactory. We have had addresses presented to the proprietor from the tenants.

14,194. Then we have got already your evidence about the money spent in repairs and improvements, and I think that is all I have to ask you?—I will just simply say that the total sums expended on new buildings and repairs to buildings on the Gwydyr estate since 1872 is 40,460*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* Sum expended on farm fences since 1872 is 8,035*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* Sum allowed to tenants by way of abatement, commencing in 1879, is 10,984*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* Ditto for unexhausted manure and for carriages, 227*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* Sum paid for the tenants for tithes, 557*l.* 4*s.* 11*d.* Altogether 60,265*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* The interest on that sum at 5 per cent. would be 3,013*l.* The increase of rent that Lord Ancaster has got is 759*l.*, showing a reduction on the whole rental of 2,254*l.*

Chairman—continued.

14,195. A reduction of 2,254*l.* on the whole estate?—Yes; that is how it works out now.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,196. I seen in the agreement put in, in Clauses 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, there are penalties expressed to be recoverable as liquidated damages, provided for breaches by the tenants?—Yes.

14,197. Do you remember any instance in which you have had to enforce a claim against the tenants?—No, not within the last 20 years.

14,198. Looking at this agreement, this is the first time, I think, that we have had so clear a requirement with regard to compensation. It is expressly provided by Clause 14 that "the "Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, shall not "apply to the contract of tenancy of the said "lands and premises, except in so far as com-"pensation for improvements provided to be "paid to the tenant under the said Act is not "secured to the tenant by this agreement"?—Yes.

14,199. So that the general effect is this, that you offer a substituted agreement for compensation, and that if that agreement does not apply then you allow the tenant whatever rights he has under the Act?—That is so. We considered it was more beneficial to the tenant, the terms that we offered, and as simplifying a settlement very much.

14,200. Quite so; and so far as your agreement does not go far enough, you do not exclude the operation of the Act?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,201. I think you stated in your paper that there is not much poultry farming?—No.

14,202. Have you provided suitable buildings on the different farms for poultry?—When we have been asked we have always provided them. We have always been very liberal in building.

14,203. Tenants cannot keep poultry without they get buildings on their farms?—We have always been willing to provide buildings when we have been asked. It is more important to get good houses for the tenants. I have no doubt that Lord Ancaster will be very pleased to do anything he can to help the tenants in any way.

14,204. What has been the result of these classes or lectures on cheese and butter making?—I cannot say, but I think they are beneficial. From my experience in Scotland, I think they have done a good deal of good. I cannot speak from experience here, but in Scotland the classes for butter making have done a great deal of good.

14,205. Would you give preference to a tenant who is well educated and has some knowledge of science in farming to a tenant who knows nothing about it?—Oh, yes; we prefer an educated man.

14,206. I think I have heard some complaint by the young men I have seen here, that they find the aged men will not allow them to use appliances nor to put into practice what they have learned in these classes?—Well, my experience is, that the best way to introduce improvements is to have some new tenants imported who would, but that is very unpopular. In Scotland, when we introduce new tenancies, I have found they use improved machinery and approved appliances.

14,207. Do your tenants and agents speak Welsh?—No, we do not speak Welsh, but we have always had the mine inspector, who generally has acted as interpreter, and the local agent has a Welsh clerk, who also speaks Welsh.

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,208. Would you enforce the seventh clause in the agreement on a tenant?—Would you tell me what the clause says? I am afraid I have not a copy. This is a previous agreement I have in my hand. There may be a difference.

14,209. "The tenant shall not take two successive crops of hay off any portion of the premises without having previously top-dressed the same with at least 15 tons of good farmyard manure per acre, or an equivalent of artificial manure, to be approved of by the agent of Gwydyr"?—Well, we have never interfered with the tenant, as a rule. Both here and in Scotland, where the tenants are honest men, we do not interfere with them at all, and in a special year like this, no question is raised. We have never been required to act upon those clauses. Those clauses are intended very much for rogues who should happen to come to Gwydyr.

14,210. With regard to the eleventh clause, what is the objection to a tenant keeping a goat?—Oh! because they destroy so much. They injure trees. It is found wherever goats are introduced, they bark the trees and destroy all the woods.

14,211. I suppose you are aware that this clause is not in accordance with the provision of the Agricultural Holdings Act, that the tenant is to give seven days' notice at least when he intends to apply lime and bones to the land?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

14,212. What is the object?—The object is to secure that a proper check should be made. It is necessary to have a proper check. There are not more than 42 and not less than 7 days, ample time to give an agent notice, so that if he thinks proper he can send someone to see that the bones are properly applied. I know cases where bones have been purchased and the receipts have been given and produced and the bones have never been applied to the land at all.

Mr. Seebohm.

14,213. On the question about the tithes; you said that 557*l.* had been paid for tithes. Do you pay the tithes now without increasing the rent?—Altogether. Lord Ancaster commenced a few years ago to pay the tithes. He has paid the tithes in addition to giving an abatement. He pays the tithes now.

14,214. He has made a reduction in fact?—Yes, but I mentioned it as part of the expenditure for the benefit of tenants, because under their agreements they are bound to pay the tithes.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,215. What kind of crops of hay have you had this season?—In Scotland?

14,216. No, here in Wales?—Not good.

14,217. Half the usual quantity?—I am not able to say, because I was not resident here at the time the crop was gathered.

14,218. Because in my part of the country we had scarcely any at all. Have the tenants here any silos?—Yes, they have; and Lord Ancaster's local agent took out a patent for a silo and it can be seen at Gwydyr; it is an excellent silo, and has been used year by year. I do not know whether the tenants have taken advantage of it, but it is an excellent silo, worked by water pressure.

Chairman.

14,219. Mr. Vincent asks you this question, "Do you expect that the cottages on Lord "Ancaster's estate are any better than those on "the estates of the other large landowners about "here?"—No.

Re-examined, 14,356.

Mr. Robert Roberts called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

14,220. You are a tenant of Lord Penrhyn?—Yes.

14,221. Are you a tenant of his Lordship now?—Yes.

14,222. Have you spent any money on your farm?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

14,223. Was your farm re-valued?—No, not re-valued.

14,224. When did Colonel West value your farm?—Five or six years ago.

14,225. What did he say at that time?—He said he could not help it, that I had spent the money, and that he was reducing the rent on his estate at that time, but he said that he could not reduce my rent.

14,226. Were the rents on the estate generally reduced at that time?—The rents of several were reduced, but not the rents of everybody.

14,227. And do you think that your rent was reduced on account of the money that you had spent on the farm? Do I understand you to say that?—No, my rent was not reduced at all. I have still the same rent.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,228. I do not think he quite understood the question—"On account of the money that he had spent?" (The question was repeated by the interpreter.)—Yes. I think he would have had to reduce a good deal, had it not been for the fact that I had spent a lot of money.

Chairman.

14,229. Have you any damage to complain of from game?—They trouble us a little yonder; they do everywhere, so far as I know.

14,230. But not very much?—No, not very much.

14,231. Are you allowed to keep a cat?—No one prevents us; no one has ever told us not to keep a cat.

14,232. Were you ever prevented from keeping a cat?—No; no one ever told me not to.

14,233. What is your opinion of the position of tenant farmers?—I think that their position or state is very bad.

14,234. Are you in favour of a land court?—I think every one who has an instinct for cultivating the land is in favour of it.

14,235. Are you yourself in favour of it?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

14,236. How long have you been in Tai hirion?—30 years.

14,237. Has the rent been altered in any way?—No, the same rent since I am yonder.

14,238. How much money do you allege you spent on the farm or permanent repairs?—I have spent money on drainage and hedges. I had the land as a mountain. There was neither a wall nor anything on it.

14,239. How much do you say you have spent upon it in putting up hedges and drainage?—I have spent 600*l.*, or more than that.

14,240. Anything upon farm buildings?—Nothing on the buildings.

14,241. Then it is for the hedges and drainage?—Yes.

14,242. Is there anything in your agreement with your landlord about that?—Yes, there is a clause as to compensation for them, but the clause is only for 20 years.

14,243. Then do you consider that a land court would give you better terms than that?—I could not say whether the land court would give better terms. I am not able to say that.

Professor Rhŷs.

You say that you have not been prevented from keeping a cat?

Chairman.

He withdrew all about his cats.

Mr. Richard Jones.

He admitted that this took place some time ago, but he does not withdraw it.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,244. I want to ask him whether the landlord sends round the rat killer, and has the wages of the rat killer debited against the rent?—Yes, that has been so.

14,245. What were your cats doing when it was necessary to have a man to kill the rats?—I cannot say why the cats did not kill them.

14,246. Had you cats?—Yes.

14,247. The cats preferred the rabbits, perhaps?—They are fond of rabbits. We lose the cats when they become a good size—when they know what is what.

Mr. Seebohm.

14,248. There never was anything in the agreement about the cats?—No, nothing.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,249. Have you the same courage to improve your farm now as you used to?—No.

14,250. Why?—Because they have dealt so harshly with me.

14,251. Are you afraid they will come and value your farm again?—I do not know about that. I should not care to venture to spend money like that again as I have done.

Lord Kenyon.

I did not gather from the witness whether he said out how much he thought he had spent.

Chairman.

Yes, he did.

Professor Rhŷs.

He said 600*l.*, or more.

Lord Kenyon.

14,252. May I ask what the acreage is, and what the rent is?—180 acres without the wood. The rent is 145*l.*

Chairman.

Colonel West, you wish to make some rebutting statement about the rent. Shall I put the questions, or will you come into the box first?

Colonel West.—I would rather the questions be put first.

Chairman.

14,253. Questions by Colonel West: "Did "you receive a sum of money from the late

Chairman—continued.

"Lord Penrhyn in compensation for the loss of "two horses?"—Yes.

14,254. "What was the amount"?—I only received 30*l.* from the late Lord Penrhyn on one occasion, as compensation for two horses, valued at 120*l.*

14,255. "Did Lord Penrhyn give you a "mowing machine, value 22*l.*?"—Yes.

14,256. "Did he give you also the whole "of the seeds you required for one year"?—He ordered them and I paid.

21,429.

Chairman—continued.

14,257. "Did you receive 30*l.* from the "present Lord Penrhyn in 1889 to compensate "you for a horse you lost?"—Yes, I had 30*l.* from him.

14,258. "Did you sign a receipt?"—Ye .

14,259. "Was the tithe which you had "previously paid, paid for you in 1886?"—Yes, it has been paid always since they have taken it.

Colonel West re-called and further examined.

(The evidence of Colonel West was translated by an interpreter into the Welsh language to Mr. Robert Roberts.)

Chairman.

14,260. Colonel West, do you want to make some statement about the rent, first of all?—Yes, my Lord.

14,260*a*. Only as to that, is it?—As to the whole question of why his rent was not reduced.

Mr. Robert Roberts stated that his rent was not reduced in 1886 at the time that other rents were reduced, and that I made a re-valuation, but did not change his rent. I wish to state that I made a great many valuations at that time of different farms on account of what I considered the inequality of the rents, and I re-valued them with regard to what I believed to be the real value of the farms, and I did not consider that the rent which he paid was too high a rent for the farm. The farm consists of 219 acres. It is 13*s.* 3*d.* an acre. The rent is the same that it was when Lord Penrhyn purchased the farms, one of which he purchased in 1861 and the other in 1868. He (Mr. Roberts) came as tenant from Anglesey, and took both the farms at the old rents, and since that there has been no alteration except that in 1886, when he says that his rent was not reduced. Lord Penrhyn took upon himself the payment of tithe, being 15*l.* a year. Therefore it is the fact that in 1886 his rent was reduced by the sum of the tithe. When he took the farm, the house and buildings were rebuilt at a cost of from 1,000*l.* to 1,500*l.* He has received in abatements since 1886 the sum of 105*l.* 10*s.* I understand from his evidence that he claimed to have made certain improvements upon the farm, and I looked at the improvements at the time, and I did not consider that they were of any value. He has made no claim for any sum of money. If he will send me in a claim for any amount that he has expended I shall be glad to have the improvements valued in the fair course of valuation, and he shall be paid whatever that valuation may be. He has never made any claim as yet.

The only other matter is that of the rat catcher which he mentioned. Some years ago, for the benefit of the tenants, I asked them whether they would have a skilled rat catcher at a small sum, the remainder of the cost being paid by the landlord. The arrangement went on for a short time, I think, not more than a year or so. Two or three tenants complained about it, and I immediately stopped it. That is all I have to say, my Lord.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,260*b*. I understand that you admit that you did have some conversation with Roberts about his improvements?—He pointed out to me some drains. That is all that I know of.

14,261. You did have a conversation with him?—About some drains which he said he had made.

14,262 Did you have a conversation with him about the improvements?—Yes, about the drains.

14,263. About the improvements was my question?—In my mind they were not improvements.

14,264. Drainage is not an improvement?—No, they were badly done.

14,265. Is drainage an improvement?—Not if it is badly done. It makes the land a great deal worse in many cases.

14,266. I wish you would kindly answer my question?—I say it is not an improvement if badly done.

14,267. Did you have a conversation about things that he said were improvements?—Nothing else that I remember of any kind except these drains.

14,268. Did you have a conversation with him about things that he alleged to be improvements?—No, not that I remember.

14,269. Not about anything that he said to be improvements?—No, except these drains.

14,270. Except these drains?—Yes, except these drains as I have repeated.

14,271. But you do not answer my question?—Will you put it again, please?

14,272. Did you have a conversation about some things or other that Roberts alleged to be improvements?—I did not, except the drains, which were alleged by him to be an improvement.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

14,273. Then your answer is rather inconsistent, surely?—Well, I shall be glad to know how.

14,274. I asked you a very simple question, Col. West. Is it not the fact that he said he had expended money on improvements, and that you said you could not help that, but the tenant had spent his money, and that it was your duty to value the farm as you found it?—No, I did not. I valued the farm as I found it, but—

14,275. Stop a moment. It was your duty to value it as you found it, was it?—It was.

14,276. You did not tell him so?—Well, I daresay I did tell him so.

14,277. But a moment ago I put the words to you and you said no?—That I did not tell him that I was bound to value the farm as it stood?

14,278. You told him so?—Well I have no recollection really of what I told him one way or the other. I daresay I told him. It was my duty to value the farm as it was, and I may have told him so, or I may not. It certainly was my duty to do so.

14,279 Quite so. Then even if he had effected very considerable improvements, you said it was your duty to value the farm for the purpose of determining what rent he ought to pay without regard to any improvements that he had made?—By no means whatsoever. When I value a farm I value the farm as it is, and then I ascertain how much of that value is due to the tenant's improvements. If I find that the whole of any increased value which I should put upon the farm, as compared with what it was before, is due to the tenant's improvements, I do not put any increased value whatever upon the farm.

14,280. But you are the judge of that?—I am the judge of that.

14,281. You do not refer to the question of what the rent shall be to some impartial person?—Not unless the tenant wished to do so.

Lord Kenyon.

14,282. If he wished to do so you would?—I should at once refer it to an impartial person, but I have had several cases of valuation of that kind in which the farm has been immensely improved by the tenant and in which I have not put any additional value upon it.

Mr. JOHN PRITCHARD called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

See 21,387–21,428.

14,283. You are a tenant on the Belmont estate?—Yes.

14,284. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Lenthall.

14,285. Has your landlord erected farm buildings for you?—No, nothing.

14,286. Were you obliged, in consequence of having no buildings, to lay down the whole of your farm into permanent pasture?—Yes.

14,287. Up to that time did you sustain a considerable annual loss?—I lost a good deal while I was cultivating the land

14,288. Have you anything to complain of with regard to rabbits?—Yes, they trespass a great deal, and I am not allowed to lay traps in order to catch them.

14,289. Do you not know there is an Act called the Ground Game Act?—I have heard of it.

14,290. Why did you not take advantage of it?—I cannot.

14,291. Why not?—Because the keeper watches everything. I cannot set a trap in the holes in the walls.

14,292. Why not, is it on account of the keepers?—Because the keepers say that there is a danger of the pheasants and partridges going into the traps, and that the law of Britain compels us to set the traps in their holes, or not at all.

14,293. Are the workmen's cottages in a good state?—They have all fallen into ruins.

14,294. On Mr. Lenthall's estate?—Seven workmen's cottages have fallen into ruins on his estate, three of them on my own farm.

14,295. Do you consider the condition of farmers satisfactory in the locality?—Not nearly satisfactory.

Chairman—continued.

14,296. Are tenant farmers compelled to carry coal for the landlord?—Yes, and at one time work in the hay harvest too.

14,297. At the present time, I mean, has that been done this year?—Yes, they compelled the tenants to carry coal this year.

14,298. And work in the harvest?—No.

14,299. Not now?—Not now.

14,300. Only to carry coal?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

14,301. Do you know the Ground Game Act?—No, not perfectly.

14,302. Do you use traps to catch rabbits?—No, the keeper steals them.

14,303. Then you have used them?—Yes, I have used them, but I had greater loss from losing the traps than I gained by catching the rabbits.

14,304. Why did you not prosecute the keeper for stealing the traps?—He said that I could not prosecute him because I had to lay the traps in the rabbit holes or not all.

14,305. Do you know the keeper took them?—I know that the keeper took some of them, and from that fact I conclude that he took all.

14,306. Did you put them in the holes or in the runs?—In a place where they run through the wall.

14,307. Does that mean a stone wall?—No, through earth and gorse or bushes.

14,308. And there are a great many rabbits troubling there?—Yes, very many.

14,309. Much other game?—No, not much trouble from other game.

14,310. What rent do you pay for the farm Pen-y-garth?—50*l.*

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

14,311. What is the acreage?—From 35 to 36 acres, including the waste land and all, and the waste land would be three to four acres, wood and so on.

14,312. Then you do not consider the Ground Game Act to be a sufficient protection?—No, not nearly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,313. You do not know much about this Act relating to the rabbits?—No, I do not.

14,314. You do not take any interest in it?—I take an interest in it, but I have never seen the Act myself. I have heard people speak of it.

14,315. If you could get it in Welsh, would you read it?—Yes, I would with great pleasure.

Mr. Grove.

14,316. Just one question. When you took the present farm did the landlord promise to erect any buildings for you?—Yes, but I am under the third landlord now.

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,317. If this place is all laid down in pasture, will you kindly tell us your method of farming?—Grazing it for sheep and cattle, and getting some hay for the winter for the cattle.

14,318. I thought you said you had no buildings?—I have one cowhouse to keep four or five milking cows in. I have been entreating my landlord for the last 10 years to get a few more buildings, and the answer I had was that if the farm did not correspond to the building he would take a field or two from it, and it was at that time that I changed my plans with regard to the way I would farm it, for fear he might take the best fields from me.

14,319. The consequence is that every autumn you sell out cattle, it does not matter what the state of the market is, because you have not buildings to shelter them in the winter?—I must clear them all with the exception of about four cows, and I keep two calves during the winter, and that is all.

14,320. Did you go to the expense of laying down this farm with permanent grass?—Yes.

14,321. Can you tell us how much an acre it would cost?—No, I cannot say now. I have not considered that.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

14,322. Supposing that you received notice to quit, could you recover anything for the expense that you went to in laying down this farm with those grasses?—No, nothing.

14,323. I see according to the number of acres of the farm and the rent that your place is rented at about 22*s.* an acre; that is, not including the waste. What is the average rental per acre of the adjoining farms?—On one side, 12*s.* an acre. A little below me you get into better land that reaches from 35*s.* to 2*l.* an acre.

14,324. How does your land compare with that land which is from 35*s.* to 2*l.*?—It is far worse land.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,325. Do you suggest any remedies?—I agree with the friends who have spoken about that point before this.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,326. Who are they?—Those who have spoken last. We must have them, otherwise we will become bankrupt.

Lord Kenyon.

14,327. Was there a clause in your agreement compelling you to cart coal and work with the team in harvest?—I never had an agreement. I never signed an agreement. They have tried, but the reason I gave was that I cultivated my land better than they asked.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,328. The reason for what?—My reason for not signing an agreement.

Chairman.

14,329. Question put in by Mr. Geo. Bovill: "If the tenants did carry coal, were they not "paid?"—No, nothing. I have also been carrying coal, although I never signed.

14,330. "Did they not know when they took "their farms that they would be expected to "do so?"—Yes, quite well.

14,331. Question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "If "you had no agreement, was not all the game "in your own hands?"—I expect it was, but I did not like to offend my master, so I left everything to him.

Mr. OWEN OWEN called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

14,332. What is the name of your farm?—Maesygarnedd.

14,333. Do you know who your landlord is?—No, I do not.

14,334. To whom do you pay the rent?—The solicitor who acts for the mortgagees.

14,335. Where did your father, Mr. Elias Owen, live?—Dolwyddelen. The first part of his life at Tanycastell.

14,336. Who was his landlord?—Lord Willoughby, of Gwydyr estate.

Chairman—continued.

14,337. Did he leave his farm on the Gwydyr estate of his own accord?—No.

14,338. Why did he leave his farm?—He was obliged to leave three farms at the same time. He held three farms.

14,339. Why did he leave there?—Simply owing to principles.

14,340. What were those principles?—He was a Liberal.

Lord Kenyon.

14,341. What date was that?—In the year 1868, at the time of the election.

14,342. Had he expended any money in improving his holding?—Yes, a very great deal.

14,343. How much do you consider he spent?—So far as I can make out 400*l.*, to say the least.

14,344. How much did you get?—Not a farthing.

14,345. Where did you go after you left the farm?—Somewhere in the neighbourhood of Llanrwst.

14,346. What do you consider the state of agriculture in the neighbourhood of Capelgarmon?—It is deplorable in the true sense of the word.

14,347. Do you know anything about the rent of the farms?—Yes.

14,348. Can you tell us anything about the rent of the farms in the district?—I can say, in the first place, about the farm in which I live.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

14,349. Will you tell us about that?—There have been changes in its rent. It has been let at one time for 36*l.*, then it was raised to 40*l.*, then to 50*l.*, then to 60*l.*

14,350. In how many years?—That would mean from 35 to 40 years, perhaps.

14,351. Do you consider that the tenants ought to be protected by a land court?—Yes, by all means.

14,352. To secure fair rents?—Yes.

14,353. And fixity of tenure?—Yes.

14,354. And compensation for improvements by tenant farmers?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

14,355. How long ago was it that the evictions from Tanycastell took place?—In 1868.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined, 14,358.

Mr. Henry Curr recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

14,356. Have you anything further to say about this?—I merely wished to state that I called upon Mr. Warren, of 99, Great Russell Street, London, my predecessor, two months ago, and asked him the question if there had been any political evictions in his time, because, I said, if there had been any it would be desirable that he should attend here; and he said there had been none. Of course, he may be able to attend in London, and would, no doubt, contradict this if necessary, but I think it right not to lose a moment in stating that Mr. Warren told me distinctly that there had been no political evictions.

Professor Rhŷs.

Has the statement been made that there has been political evictions?

Chairman.

Yes, Mr. Owen Owen says that he was evicted by Lord Willoughby de Eresby, in 1868, because he was a Liberal.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,357. Would Mr. Warren's own personal knowledge go back as far as that in connexion with this estate?—I understand so; I understand that Mr. Warren was agent then. Mr. Beech, however, was the local agent. I do not think it possible that Mr. Beech could have done this without the knowledge of Mr. Warren in London. I think Mr. Warren was consulted in all cases. Mr. Beech is now dead, so it is impossible to get his evidence.

[This evidence was translated to the Witness Owen.]

Re-examined. 15,628.

Mr. Owen Owen recalled and further examined through an interpreter.

Mr. Grove.

14,358. You believe your father was evicted for political reasons?—Yes, I believe without any hesitation; I have facts to prove it.

14,359. Who was the agent?—Mr. Beech.

Chairman.

14,360 and 14,361. Have you anything further you wish to say?—I have this much to say: That other persons had the notice like my father. Another thing, the farm was let to a Churchman and a Conservative, and the farm was refused to my father, although he offered to pay a larger amount than it was worth, because he had sunk so much money in it.

Chairman—continued.

14,362. A question is handed up by Mr. Vincent:—"Will you name the other persons "who were evicted for political reasons in "1868?"—Richard Evans was one.

See 15,599-15,618, 15,627.

14,363. Of where?—Of Cwmpenamnen, on the same estate. Then, John Thomas, of Penygroes, was another one.

14,364. What Penygroes?—Penygroes, Dolwyddelen. Then John Jones, of Glan y gors, Dolwyddelen; John Williams, of Llan, Dolwyddelen. I have more names, all evicted at the same time.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Williams called and examined.

Chairman.

14,365. You are a tenant farmer?—My name is David Williams, of Tyhwntirafon, Llangerniew. I am a tenant of the Hafodunos estate, the property of Henry Robert Sandbach, Esquire.

14,366. What do you wish to speak about?—I was asked by the farmers of Llanfairtalhaiarn, in a public meeting, to tell the Commission how the farming trade was. I told them that I had got nothing against my master, that my master was one of the cleverest gentlemen in the country, and that I could not say anything but good of him. Since he bought the estate, 60 years ago, he has paid double money in improvements on the estate, in buildings, out-buildings, cottages, draining, and everything outside of the estate. Therefore, I have nothing to say now, except generally, about the agricultural trade.

14,367. You have nothing to state about game?—A little about rabbits, and one keeper.

14,368. He is a disagreeable man?—The keeper?

14,369. Yes.—I cannot call him a man at all; he has a spice of the devil, whatever.

14,370. Have you anything to complain of about the rabbits on your farm?—There is some damage by rabbits in some parts, not very much; but this keeper was catching rabbits all round the summer, making gaps in the fence, and allowing my sheep to go over the fence.

14,371. Have you complained to your landlord?—I did not complain to the landlord. Mr. Roberts, a neighbour, asked me for two men on the fair day in August, in Abergele, to help to get the hay. I offered three, but he said two would do. My two boys went there, and, unfortunately, the sheep dogs followed them; and I saw the dogs jumping about in the shop and sending the hares away in every direction, although I believe the dogs did no harm. Then I told the Major, who is one of the cleverest men in our country, and the Major came to my house some Friday evening in July. This keeper, who was close by, found out that the Major had been to our place, and he asked my second boy, "Well my lad, what did the "Major do about the dogs?" The boy said he knew nothing about it, and the keeper said, "Well, I know your father has been complaining "about the dogs. My lad, you had better find "out for a wife; you will be from your place "and be without a home, and if you have a wife "you will have to get a home in the summer; "you shall be safe from here; we must have a "new tenant before the spring." Then I see at once that the keeper was the master, and not the master.

14,372. Have any houses and buildings on small holdings been allowed to fall down?—Yes, I cannot blame the landowners for letting the farms, the same as many of the landowners do, to the highest bidder. I have got a list belonging to General Wynne, in Coedcoch. General Wynne is a clever gentleman, an old gentleman living in the country. He has got 20 farms, which have gone down greatly since the time of his father. At that time it was more profitably let for grazing than for farming: in fact, the tenant farmer could not afford to pay the rent which a grazier could pay for the land. I believe that grazing is doing incalculable injury to the country, because the graziers could—I do not say they can now—but they could give more rent than the farmers could stand to pay for the land.

14,373. Are we to understand that these buildings have fallen into ruin on these 20 farms?—Very nearly. There is one place where the tenant married lately, and in taking the farm he found the house was not fit for him and his wife to live in.

14,374. Would you rather speak English?—I had better speak Welsh than English, I am a Welshman.

(From this point the witness was examined through an interpreter.)

14,375. What are these 20 farms?—Farms to keep horses, and on other farms they keep two or three cows. The 20 farms I refer to are as follows:—

General Wynn, Coed Coch,
Rhosmarch ucha,
Peu y Gareg,
Glyn liws,
Pentre Ffwdan,
Gareg fawr,
Tyn y ffynon,
Tyddyn Howel,
Dol y Gorlan,
Glyn dawn,
Tan llwnfan,
Park,
Ty mawr,
Cefn llaethfan,
Wern,
Pennant,
Pen y Bryn,
Tyn twll,
Fron ucha,
Bryn dawn,
Pengwarn,
R. W. Wynn, Esq., Garthewin,
Hen Gefn,
Bryn-yr-aur,
Tymawr,
Caeeithin,
Pen y bwlch,
Llanfair parish,
Hendy, cottage with half an acre of land,
Dafarn bara ceirch,
Tan y coed,
Bethgarth ucha,
Llyn gloyw,
Ffridd y gwynt,
Pistill gwyn,
Coed Cochion,
Carreg Ifor,
Dderwas, let as grazing land.
Tyddyn Ucha, consolidated with another farm.
Tan dderwen, consolidated with Plas Llewelyn (Scotch tenant).

Chairman—continued.

14,376. They used to be farms and now they are all let for grazing, is that it?—They have gone down and they are now let with other places.

14,377. And all the buildings on them and the houses have tumbled down?—There are hardly any buildings on any of them. My farm adjoins Lord Newborough's land close by in Denbighshire.

14,378. Do you consider the condition of farmers satisfactory?—No, it is perfectly unsatisfactory—entirely unsatisfactory.

14,379. Are you in favor of a land court?—Yes, I want something in order that people might be able to live.

Mr. Seebohm.

I want to be quite clear about one answer that you gave. You spoke of 20 farms. I want to know whether it is the graziers that now have them or whether they have been added to other farms?—They were added to other farms.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,380. Are you a Nonconformist?—Yes.

14,381. Are most of the tenants on this estate Nonconformists?—Well, they are Nonconformists and Churchmen too, they are mixed.

Lord Kenyon.

14,382. And you get on very well together—the Nonconformist tenants and the Churchmen tenants get on well together?—Oh, yes, my master is a Churchman, and I am before this time whatever, quite friends with him, and I hope that this will not keep us from the way. I have more than that that I could tell you.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,383. Are there many Nonconformists on the estate now as compared with what you remember?—There are more Churchmen on the Hafodunos estate, I must say that.

14,384. More than there were?—More than there were 50 years ago and 40 years ago too.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,385. But they are Welshmen?—Yes, they are Welshmen, all of them are Welshmen now, the Scotch have all run away, each one of them after getting the good times—after getting the fatness. There is one thing I should like to tell you, gentlemen, if you please: the price of cattle is coming down so—I did not hear anybody bring that out.

Chairman.

14,386. We have heard all about that?—I saw my neighbour buy two yearlings at 4*l.* in Llanrwst Fair. That shows that there is no chance for the farmers to live. It is on record that there are hundreds and hundreds in Denbighshire, who used to live by selling wheat. Wheat is now sold in the market about 5*s.* a cental, that is 100 lbs., and there is no possibility of any farmer paying half the rent of the land according to prices of corn as they are now. Then again the wages are doubled.

Chairman.

I do not think we need trouble you about that. We are very much obliged to you for your evidence, but we have had all that before.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. MORRIS OWEN called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

14,387. You are a tenant of Mr. Wynne of Garthewin?—Yes.

14,388. Do you speak English?—I prefer Welsh.

14,389. When did your father, the late Mr. Owen Owen, take your farm?—About 40 to 45 years ago.

14,390. What was the rent?—30*l.*

14,391. Was any unenclosed common land added?—Yes.

14,392. Who fenced, pushed and limed it?—My father.

14,393. What was his rent raised up to?—5*l.* to start with.

14,394. What is it now?—5*l.* afterwards, and it was raised to 50*l.* and it is now 70*l.*, taking the tithe.

14,395. It started from 30*l.* I understand?—Yes.

14,396. Can you live on this farm and pay the rent?—No.

14,397. Then what will you have to do?—Give it up.

14,398. Will they pay you for your improvements?—I do not think so.

Chairman—continued.

14,399. Then you would be in favour of an Act of Parliament which would compel the landlord to pay you for your improvements?—Yes, I would.

14,400. Have you an agreement?—Yes.

14,401. And are you satisfied with it?—No, it is unsatisfactory.

14,402. Will you put it in?—Yes; the agreement was handed in.

14,403. Are you the only instance or are there other instances of increase of rent on this estate?—All the farms were raised the last time, and once only one farm besides ours.

14,404. Then you are not satisfied with the holding?—No.

14,405. And you do not consider the tenant farmers' condition satisfactory?—No.

14,406. What remedy do you suggest?—I cannot say what would be best.

14,407. Do you consider that there ought to be a land court to fix rents?—Yes, but to get a better man than there was the last time, when the rents were raised.

Lord Kenyon.

14,408. Have you given a notice to quit yet?—No.

14,409. Have you applied for a reduction?—Yes.

14,410. Have you received any answer?—Yes.

14,411. That you will have no reduction, is that it?—Yes.

14,412. Have you had any abatements?—Yes, 2*s.* in the £ the last two half-year audits.

14,413. Is that all?—That is all.

14,414. Ten per cent. on each half year?—Yes.

14,415. One of the clauses you complain of is, I suppose, that about the landlord having the right to sow wheat?—Yes, that is one clause.

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,416. You are prepared to speak as to the status of the farmers. Can you supply the Commission with any striking instance of the reduced circumstances in which farmers are at the present time—any striking instance?—I could say that we are all as farmers very much reduced to what we were some time ago, owing to the present depression.

14,417. You could not give any striking instance?—No, I cannot speak of one more than another.

14,418. Are you a Nonconformist?—Yes.

14,419. What are the tenants generally on this estate; are they Nonconformists or Churchmen?—Nonconformists, I think, most of them are, but I do not think my landlord cares what they may be.

14,420. Is that the case in other estates in Llangerniew?—I cannot say about that.

Mr. Grove.

14,421. If the farmers felt more safe, do you think they would spend more money in improvements on the land?—They would.

Chairman.

14,422. There are two questions I have to ask. One is sent up by Mr. Owen Wynne. "Will you explain what you mean by a land "court?" What is passing in your mind?—Something to protect us as farmers.

14,423. But you have no very defined idea of the duties of the court?—No, I have not.

14,424. "Do you think if there was a land "court, landlords would have any further "interest in improving their estates?"—I do not know how a land court would affect them, but there is plenty of room for them to make improvements.

14,425. The question is: "Do you think if "there was a land court, landlords would have "any further interest in improving their "estates"?—Plenty of room for them to take interest in their land.

14,426. Then there is a question by Mr. Vincent. "Had not Garthewin the reputa-"tion formerly of being the lowest rented "estate in Wales?"—Perhaps it may have been so in the time of Colonel Wynne.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

14,427. Will you tell us where you live?—Felinuchaf, Llanrwst.

14,428. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

14,429. On the estate of Mr. Joseph Evans?—Yes, I have been there, on what was Mr. Evans' estate.

14,430. Was your farm sold in 1890?—Yes.

14,431. Who bought it?—I did.

14,432. Had you done a great deal to the land?—Yes, I had improved the land very much.

14,433. Was it an expensive purchase?—Middling.

14,434. What price was it, and what was the acreage?—About 20 acres of land and a small mill. The price was over 1,100*l.*

14,435. Do you consider that the work on your farm increased its value and made it dearer to you to buy?—Certainly. It is of far greater value than when I had it.

14,436. What was the rent?—I had been paying 67*l.*

14,437. Then you think you had been paying over again for the improvements that you did yourself?—It is very probable that it fetched a higher price than if it had been a worse farm.

14,438. Do the tenants feel secure in your district?—No.

14,439. Is that on account of so many estates having been sold in the neighbourhood?—It is very likely. People do not venture to till or cultivate their lands, because they are for sale.

Chairman—continued.

14,440. Do you consider that land is rented high or low in the district?—Too high by far.

14,441. You are an experienced farmer?—I have been farming myself for the last 32 years, and I was brought up on a farm.

14,442. And your sons have assisted you to a great extent?—Yes.

14,443. You are not satisfied with the present condition of things?—No, not by a long way.

14,444. What do you suggest as a remedy?—To receive a large reduction in the rents.

14,445. Are you in favour of a land court?—As far as it will be a benefit to the farmers.

Sir John Llewelyn.

14,446. What do you think of the suggestion that Government might advance money for the sitting tenant to buy?—I have never thought of that, so I cannot give my clear opinion relating to it.

14,447. What do you think the land court would do?—I believe that the land court would be fair towards the landlord and towards the tenant.

14,448. Have you thought how valuations would be arrived at?—I think the valuations ought to be less by 40 per cent. than they are.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

14,449. Who ought to appoint the valuers?—Both parties ought to have the choice of valuers.

14,450. Do you think that valuation by mutual agreement or by a land court would be the better?—Mutual consent, I think, would be best, so far as they were able to agree.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,451. And then if you failed in the attempt at valuation by mutual consent, you would fall back on some other authority?—Yes, I think I would.

14,452. Then you would try a land court?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,453. Which do you consider the more profitable branch of your business, keeping a mill or farming?—I could not say. The farm is a small one, and the mill is a help with the farm, and the farm is a help with the mill.

14,454. Is a mill worth as much now as formerly?—No, not so much.

14,455. Would you have given 1,100*l.* for that mill and the land if it had not been for the improvements which you had effected on it?—It is my old home, and I have spent a good deal over it for a small place, in manuring for instance; and I daresay I would give that if it was far worse, because it was my old home.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,456. Had you the money to pay for it?—The farm has been paid for.

Lord Kenyon.

14,457. When did you take the farm?—About 32 years ago.

14,458. Has the rent always been 67*l.*?—No, not always.

14,459. What was it when you first took it?—67*l.*

14,460. What was it when it was sold?—I have been paying 60*l.*, the 7*l.* having been reduced before Mr. Evans bought it.

14,461. Was there a separate rental for the mill and for the farm?—No. It was one rent. Mr. Evans raised my rent.

14,462. You only paid 17 years' purchase. I do not know whether you think that very dear?—Yes.

14,463. You think it is very dear?—No, not very dear.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM JONES called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

14,464. Used you to be a tenant of Mr. Jones, on the estate of Bryn Eisteddfod?—Yes.

14,465. Have you any children?—Yes.

14,466. How many?—Seven.

14,467. Was there a re-valuation of your rent six years ago?—Yes.

14,468. What was it at first?—65*l*

14,469. What did they raise it to?—They raised it 18*l.*

14,470. When was that increase of rent?—I do not recollect the year, about six years after I had gone to the farm.

14,471. When did you go to the farm?—The year 1850, I think.

14,472. Did you improve your farm by draining?—Yes.

14,473. Could you live at the rent of 83*l.*?—No.

14,474. Then what did you do; did you give notice to quit?—Yes.

14,475. Did the steward ask you to do anything before you left the farm?—Yes.

14,476. What did he ask you to do?—He asked me to fallow two fields.

Chairman—continued.

14,477. How big were those fields?—The two were 25 acres.

14,478. Did he say anything would happen if you did not do so?—Yes.

14,479. Did you fallow those two fields?—No.

14,480. What happened in consequence?—I was fined.

14,481. How much?—10*l.*

14,482. Do you consider that the conduct of your landlord has caused you great loss?—I do.

14,483. Did you get any compensation?—No, the 10*l.* was taken from me.

14,484. Are you in favour of a land court?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

14,485. At what date did you give the notice to quit?—I gave the farm up in 1862.

14,486. All this happened 30 years ago?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN GRIFFITH called and examined through an interpreter.

* 14,171.

Chairman.

14,487. Were you a tenant of Lord Willoughby in Denbighshire?—Yes.

14,488. Is your farm in Lord Willoughby's estate now?—No.

Chairman—continued.

14,489. How is that?—He has sold it.

14,490. Did it go at a high or low price?—I should think it was very high, judging by the rent.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,491. What do you mean by that answer?—The rent is very high; the purchase money also was high.

Chairman.

14,492. Are you still the tenant?—Yes.

14,493. Was your rent increased when the farm was sold?—Yes, by taking the best part from it.

14,494. And no abatement of rent was given in consequence?—No, nothing but 7*l.* once.

14,495. Can you work that farm now at a profit?—No, I cannot.

14,496. Will you have to leave it?—Yes.

14,497. Without any compensation?—Yes.

14,498. Have you lived long on that property? Are you fond of the place?—It is 18 years ago since I came there. I am fond of the place, but one expects better times.

14,499. Do you consider that circumstances of this sort are prejudicial to good farming?—Yes, as long as things are so uncertain as they are.

14,500. Would you be in favour of a land court?—Yes, if the landlord and tenant are unable to agree.

Sir John Llewelyn.

14,501. If you were confident of fair compensation, would you wish to stay on?—Yes.

14,502. At the present rent?—No.

14,503. At the rent you paid before?—Before the sale, do you mean?

14,504. Yes, that is my question?—It would be a good thing if it had not been sold.

14,505. How would you wish a fair rent arrived at?—That somebody should be appointed for that purpose, that there should be a court for that purpose, supposing we were oppressed in that way.

14,506. Do you say you are oppressed?—Yes, I am oppressed now.

14,507. Are there more than those two points, one the fair rent, and the other compensation for improvements?—No, not so far as I know, indeed.

Mr. Grove.

14,508. You say that part of your farm was taken from you?—Yes, the best part.

14,509. How much? What was the acreage which was taken?—From 18 to 20 acres.

Mr. Grove—continued.

14,510. Was there no proportionate reduction in your rent at that time?—No, only in this way, that it has been increased 2*l.* per acre, and the farm was under that before then.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,511. Had you notice that this land was going to be taken?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,512. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Jones of Berth Ddu.

14,513. Is he a farmer?—He is dead now, and the children are there.

14,514. Why should it go to such a high price? Did you bid against him?—Yes, until it reached a certain sum.

14,515. What is the reason that tenant farmers are so anxious to buy?—They think that they will be more secure afterwards to some extent.

Lord Kenyon.

14,516. What was your rent?—170*l.*

14,517. It was—what is it?—150*l.*, after taking the 18 or 20 acres of best land from it.

14,518. I want to know the original rent, before it was raised in Lord Willoughby's time?—For the whole?

14,519. Yes, in Lord Willoughby's time, before the sale?—170*l.*

14,520. What is the rent now?—150*l.*

14,521. It has not been actually raised, but so much land taken away. What was the acreage of the whole farm?—84 acres, taking all the buildings, the yard, and so on.

14,522. What was the sale price?—4,000*l.* or 4,500*l.* or something like that.

Chairman.

14,523. Did you make any improvements?—Only to keep it as it is. It was in quite a good condition before.

14,524. Mr. Vincent is informed that you made no improvements. Is that the case?—I grind everything that I get from the land and turn it back to the land, and pay about 60*l.* for oil cake and so on.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. RICHARD JONES called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

14,525. You know this neighbourhood well?—Yes.

14,526. Can you tell us anything of Mr. John Owen, of Cae Coed?—Yes, I know him well.

14,527. He was until lately a tenant of that farm?—Yes.

14,528. Whose property was it? Who was landlord?—Mr. Joseph Evans.

14,529. Did he do all the cartage and materials for new buildings?—Yes, the whole of it.

Chairman—continued.

14,530. Did he get any remuneration?—No, nothing.

14,531. Was the property sold?—Yes.

14,532. Was it sold after the new buildings had been constructed?—Yes.

14,533. And Mr. John Owen got no compensation?—No, nothing beyond that he bought the place.

14,534. The tenant purchased the farm when it was up for sale?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

14,535. Had he done anything in the way of drainage?—Yes; years back, a good deal.

14,536. Did he receive any compensation?—No, nothing.

14,537. What do you consider the state of farmers? In what sort of condition are the farmers in this district?—It is very hard on many of them.

14,538. Do you consider small holdings profitable?—There are hardly any of them; they are all gone.

14,539. They are all sold?—Yes.

14,540. I suppose you are of opinion that selling an estate and confiscating the improvements of the tenant is a very hard thing?—Yes, certainly.

14,541. It prevents them from farming properly?—Yes. There has been a good deal of land left to run wild in consequence of that.

14,542. Because the farmers are so uneasy?—Because there is no security of tenure.

14,543. Are the farms let high in the neighbourhood?—It is bad land taking it altogether, mountainous, hilly.

14,544. Is the letting high in consequence of any adjoining commons there may be?—Yes, there are some farms which are much higher than they would be if it had not been for the common.

14,545. Do you recommend a land court?—I should think so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

14,546. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, I have got it.

14,547. Have you read the schedules?—I read it all as it came out at first.

14,548. Do you think the extension of the schedules would be satisfactory?—That Act is of no good yonder. All the landlords have contracted themselves out of it.

14,549. They cannot contract themselves out of it, can they?—All the landlords gave notices at the time the Act came into force that it was not to take effect on their respective estates.

14,550. They can only contract themselves out of it to the extent of substituting another improved schedule?—The farmers perhaps do not understand that.

14,551. I take it from you that they do not trust to that Act?—No, the Act is of no avail yonder.

14,552. You think that the want of compensation prevents good farming?—Yes, and want of confidence in their tenancies, because they fear they would be turned away through their farms being sold or their rents raised on their own improvements.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,553. I think you mean the want of confidence felt by the tenants?—The fear the tenants have of losing their places. There is one estate of Lord Newborough's, belonging to his grandson, who is now under age. Those tenants are afraid of spending any money on their farms, because they believe that the rents will be raised when he becomes of age.

Sir John Llewelyn.

14,554. Would you be satisfied with the provisions of Mr. Bryn Roberts' Bill?—I cannot answer that question, because I have not seen the Bill.

14,555. I think it gave seven years' safety in point of time?—Provided there was also security for compensation, it would do.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,556. What sort of roads have you to Gwytherin now?—They are a little better than when you used to come yonder; the roads up the hill are still steep yonder. We are endeavouring just now to get a new road constructed, so as to avoid the steeper hill-sides.

14,557. Who bears the expense of that?—The parish, the Highway Board, the County Council, if we can secure the land free from the owners of the land.

Mr. Grove.

14,558. Are there any farmers' clubs in your neighbourhood?—No.

14,559. Do the farmers generally know anything about the Agricultural Holdings Act?—They know that such an Act exists.

14,560. I would advise you, Mr. Jones, to read Section 55.—Thank you, I will.

Mr. Seebohm.

14,561. Do not you think that there would be some advantage in having the Acts of Parliament which affect the tenants translated into Welsh, and put so that everyone could read them at the Post Office in every village?—Undoubtedly it would be an advantage to them.

Lord Kenyon.

14,562. Are you a farmer?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. LEWIS ROBERTS called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

14,563. Where do you live?—Gelli, Capel Garmon.

14,564. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Morgan, the rector or vicar of Capel Garmon.

Chairman—continued.

14,565. Are you properly rented, in your opinion?—No.

14,566. Has your landlord increased your rent from time to time?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

14,567. You think he has raised your rent as you improved your farm?—Yes, all along, from time to time.

14,568. Are the farmers in your neighbourhood highly rented?—There are some.

14,569. Taking them as a whole, are they?—Yes: they will be the same as Balaam's ass, running from one place to another, unless things change.

14,570. Are they satisfied with their position?—No.

14,571. Do you consider that their position is insecure?—Yes.

14,572. Are most of your friends in favour of a land court?—Well, they are hoping for something that may save their homes.

Lord Kenyon.

14,573. Your rent has been increased. Will you tell me what the rent was and what it is?—18*l.* to start, and it is 36*l.* now, including the tithe.

14,574. And the size of the holding?—In name it is 60 acres, but there are only 13 or 14 acres of it that you can cultivate or do anything with.

14,575. What is the rest?—Rocks and heather.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,576. How many times has the rent been raised?—By now it has been raised three times.

14,577. Is it glebe land?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,578. Has the vicar, or rector, or whatever he is—the parson—any more glebe land besides this farm?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

14,579. What about the rent of those places, are they let high?—That was 40*l.* 40 years ago. It is 60*l.* now.

14,580. Is there any more?—No; except small houses and gardens, and his own farm.

14,581. Were you bred and born on the place?—Yes; and have lived there about 52 years.

14,582. How about the other tenant?—I am afraid he was put in gaol for rent.

14,583. When did he leave?—I have lost the papers. I could not be sure.

14,584. I do not quite follow what you mean?—There are four or five persons who have been yonder after that, and it is this last one who has raised it lately.

14,585. Is it under the present parson that this other tenant has been put into gaol?—No; that was when we went to this farm, about 60 years ago. It was in my predecessor's time. It was the old woman; the old man had died.

14,586. Was the tenant of the other farm bred and born on the farm?—I do not know. He was too old for me to know.

14,587. What are you, Nonconformist or Churchman?—I go to church sometimes.

14,588. What is the other tenant?—He goes to church now, I think.

14,589. Is it made a condition that you are to go to church when the farms are let?—I am afraid it is. Yes, it is.

Lord Kenyon.

14,590. Do you ever go to chapel?—No; I have not been going for many years now. I go to church when I go anywhere.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Robert Hughes called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

14,591. Where do you live?—Cae'rfaban, Maenan.

14,592. Have you a lease of that farm?—Yes.

14,593. Do you consider the rent is too dear now, in these bad times?—Yes, far too dear.

14,594. You find that it is impossible to make it up?—Yes.

14,595. You consider the tenant farmers are not quite fairly treated?—Yes.

14,596. In the matter of compensation for improvements?—Yes.

14,597. Do you think insecurity of tenure is a very bad thing?—Yes.

14,598. You would like to see a land court?—Yes, very much indeed.

14,599. So as to settle all questions between landlord and tenant?—Yes; if that is an improvement.

Mr. Seebohm.

14,600. You state you have a lease. How many years has it to run?—Ten years.

Mr. Seebohm—continued

14,601. Then you have security of tenure?—Yes; but if things remain as they are now I shall not be able to pay for it.

14,602. Supposing there was a land court and the rent was fixed for seven years, and then bad times came, would you not be in just the same position as having a seven years' lease?—I would not take another lease, at any rate with things as they are now.

14,603. Would you go to the land court to have your rent fixed for 10 years?—Yes, if that was satisfactory.

14,604. Then if bad times came it would not be satisfactory?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,605. Suppose that the land court fixed the rent for a period of six or seven years, would you give to the landlord or the tenant in the meantime power to appeal in order to have that rent altered in case prices went up or down?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,606. Would you like a clause in this Land Bill that would meet the case of a farmer who has a lease?—Yes, I should like it very much; or to get rid of it altogether, taking times as they are now, at any rate.

14,607. When you took your lease, I suppose the prices were so high that you could not meet the demand?—They were double what they are now, in fact, more than that even.

Lord Kenyon.

14,608. What is the acreage and rent of your farm?—They consider it 102 acres, but there are 12 acres, or more than that, that are no good at all to me.

14,609. What is the rent?—80*l.*

14,610. Have you received any abatement?—No.

Chairman.

14,611. There is one question by Mr Vincent. "Would you also permit the landlord to go to the "land court when times are good in order to "have the rent raised"?—Well, if things went that way, I would.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS WILLIAMS called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

14,612. Who is your landlord?—I do not know. I am not quite certain. I think Mrs. Louisa Ashley, the Cyffdu estate.

14,613. Do you know whether your father's rent has been increased or not?—Yes.

14,614. Has he drained any part of his farm?—One third part of it at least was gorse, rushes, and dry mountain grass and marshy land.

14,615. Your father has drained some part of that?—He did, that was 29 years ago.

14,616. Do you think that the farm is too dear now?—My father has been buried four years ago, and it is too dear for me to live in it now, but they have reduced 10*l.* in the rent.

14,617. You cannot make both ends meet? It is still too dear?—Although I have struggled early and late, in time and out of time, I have been unable to pay my expenses.

14,618. Are you in favour of a land court?—I am in favour of something that will save oppressed Wales from being famished. May I be allowed to say a word without your asking me?

14,619. What do you want to say?—When my father took the farm 29 years ago, he asked me to come home from service to assist him. We worked hard yonder in order to make the farm look much better. After we had done that in so many years the landlord and someone else with him, came and said that the farm was by far too cheap. My father took it afterwards with 10*l.* increase in the rent. Three of us, two brothers and a sister, worked for the best part of our lives, until I was 40 years of age, to assist him, and we never received anything from the farm to be able to clothe ourselves. When we wanted a suit of clothes, I used to go somewhere for a week at the harvest time, or to go and buy a cow, in order to get 10*s.* profit on it, and if it had not been for the fact that I was able to make something from dealing in cattle and sheep, I believe that my father and mother would have been in the workhouse. I went to the new landlord after the old landlord had been buried, and he had reduced the rent by 10*l.* I took a lease of it, when I had it myself, and they promised that they would put the buildings and everything in order for me. They did not abide by that promise. I had to do it myself last year, and I live in such a high place that when there is any snow, I have often turned in bed in the morning with a covering of snow on the bed, and walking downstairs from my bedchamber have left my footprints the whole way down. My small family and my mother depend upon me for their subsistence, and it is wonderful, were you to see the place, that anyone should be able to get a morsel from it, much less pay for it. I do not wish to say anything about my landlord nor his agents. I have always found them pleasant and kind. My history is but the history of scores of my fellow men. Some few months ago a farmer's wife came to me crying and asked me for the loan of 2*s.*, in order to buy food and she had also been before this. Heaven is witness that I am telling the truth.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Richard Jones.

Can we have the name of the landlord?

Secretary.

It is Mrs. Louisa Ashley, of Cyffdu estate.

Lord Kenyon.

14,620. You do not state what your rent was?—My father took it at 30*l.* It was raised to 40*l.*, and we paid that amount, if I remember rightly, for 14 years. The receipts for the rent which we have at home show that now.

14,621. And it is now down to 30*l.* again, is it? I do not want the details?—Yes, 30*l.*

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID JONES called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

14,622. Where do you live?—Tai'n y foel, Capel Garmon.

14,623. What is the name of your landlord?—Mr. Kurtz the Coed-celyn estate.

14,624. It is in Chancery, I think?—Yes, in Chancery.

14,625. Has it ever been put up to auction?—Yes.

14,626. And bought in?—Yes, it was not sold.

14,627. Then in the present state of insecurity you cannot possibly live?—No, it is a disadvantage.

14,628. You want a fair rent in consequence of depression?—Yes.

14,629. You have to pay an additional 5*l.* rent?—Yes, for the wood.

14,630. What is the size of your holding, and what is the rent?—33 acres, and the rent is 33*l.*

14,631. 1*l.* an acre?—Without including the wood, to which I referred just now.

14,632. Are you in favour of a land court?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

14,633. If there was an opportunity like there is in Ireland to buy your land with Government money, would you take advantage of that?—I cannot answer that.

14,634. How long have you been there?—Seven years in next November.

14,635. Has it been in Chancery all that time?—Yes, so far as I know.

14,636. The insecurity prevents you doing any permanent improvements?—Yes.

14,637. Do you think the land court would give you better security?—Yes.

14,638. I suppose Chancery still wish to sell the farm?—I daresay they do.

Mr. Seebohm.

14,639. How is it after all we have heard about the land hunger, that this farm when it is put up to auction is not sold?—They ask too much for it, undoubtedly. It has been bought in.

14,640. Is the rent that you are paying more than 3 per cent. upon the price at which it was bought in?—I do not know what was the price at which it was bought in.

14,641. It is a very unusual thing, is it not, for a farm to be put up for sale in this part of the world, and to have no purchasers?—Yes, it is rather unusual.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN EDWARDS called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

14,642. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

14,643. Lord Penrhyn is your landlord?—Yes.

14,644. The rights of sheep-walk in this district are without stint?—Yes.

14,645. Unlimited rights, of course, are bad; we need not go into that, we have heard that so often. Do you know any difference in the rents of farms with sheep-walks as compared with farms that have none?—I do not think there is any difference.

14,646. You prefer to be a tenant on a large estate, and such estates are exceedingly well managed in the district?—Yes.

14,647. Politics and religion make no difference?—No, not at all.

14,648. No. 17: "Do you object to agreements, or not"?—No, because I have confidence in my landlord.

14,649. The agreements are always explained?—Yes.

14,650. You generally confirm the evidence of the Hon. Colonel West, the agent?—Perhaps I did not understand it.

14,651. Has the rent been raised on the estate on which you are?—No.

14,652. Are labourers scarce?—No.

14,653. Do you make any improvements as a tenant on the Penrhyn estate?—I do my best all along.

Chairman—continued.

14,654. But the landlord, Lord Penrhyn, makes most of the improvements on your farm?—He assists.

14,655. What improvements do you make?—When I drain I do the work, and he supplies the pipes.

14,656. Do you make no improvements in your house or buildings or stable, or anything of that sort?—Merely the cartage, the work of the horses.

14,657. Do you get paid for the haulage?—No.

14,658. Do you consider that fair?—I would not consider that fair, especially if I was leaving soon afterwards, unless I got compensation.

14,659. Do you contract out of the custom of the country in your agreement?—We have no custom of the country.

14,660. Have you any trouble about game?—We do not complain much about the game, because we have liberty to kill the rabbits, which are the most destructive animals.

14,661. Do you think a land court would be a good thing?—I do not think so. I do not ask for it, because I think it might perhaps tend to raise our rents, and it would spoil the generosity which our landlord displays towards us.

14,662. You are quite satisfied with Lord Penrhyn?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

14,663. Do you know of farmers without sons who have managed to pay their way?—Yes

14,664. What is the cause of the present low prices?—I have nothing to say, unless it is the foreign produce.

14,665. Foreign competition?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

14,666. Do you think there is any better way than a land court of considering these matters?—If it was possible that there should not be any ill-feeling or wrong feelings between tenants and their landlords, if every evil between those two could be exterminated, I think it would be better.

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,667. Are you satisfied that you are making a living out of your farm at the present time?—No, I am not by any means praising ——

14,668. I want a direct answer to my question. I ask you if you are satisfied that the place is paying you?

Lord Kenyon.

What was his answer to the question?

Professor Rhŷs.

He is not satisfied with the way they fare now.

Secretary.

He says, "By no means do I praise now the "present circumstances in which the tenant is "situated."

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,669. My question is this: Are you satisfied that you are making a living out of the farm at the present time? Are you satisfied with your living?—No, I would not be if I had to pay the rent in full, but as I get an abatement I am quite satisfied.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

14,670. Under those circumstances you depend upon the generosity of your landlord for your living?—Yes.

14,671. How does that affect you? How does it affect your independence? Do you feel independent under these circumstances?—As he assists when things are hard, I believe that he will continue to do so.

14,672. Do you think Lord Penrhyn could get more for that place?—I never knew that Lord Penrhyn was trying to get more for any place of his, but allowed tenants to remain in their place.

14,673. What is your opinion? Do you think he could get more rent for the place you live in?—There are many of us farmers so rapacious for land that I would not be surprised if he could get a better rent. I do not say that the rent is too high, taking things as they are now, so long as things are as they are now.

14,674. You have told us that you think that a land court would raise your rent, do you not?—For fear it might raise the rent.

14,675. Have you any objection to a land court if it fixed a rent according to the value of stock and products at the time?—Our lands are not very high per acre, and I am afraid that if men were sent from England to our mountain lands here that they would raise the rents, and it is very likely that they would come when our lands looked at their best.

14,676. Would you have any objection to local valuers, men who were acquainted with the circumstances of their neighbourhood?—You will never get any impartial valuers scarcely. I would never trust that things would get better through a valuation. I would prefer trusting my landlord.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,677. Are you a Nonconformist or a Churchman?—I am a Nonconformist.

14,678 Have you any children working on the farm?—I have six children, but they have not been able to work much yet, they are so young; the eldest is about 14 years old.

Mr. DAVID JONES called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

14,679. You farm 490 acres odd with the right of sheep-run under Lord Penrhyn?—Yes.

14,680. You are quite satisfied with the way matters are arranged on large estates?—Yes.

14,681. Politics, religion, and language make no difference between you and his lordship?—Politics or religion do not make any difference.

14,682. Just say "Yes" or "No" to these questions; then we can get on better?—No.

14,683. You believe the tenants are safer and more free under agreements than under leases?—I believe we are much safer and more free under agreements.

Chairman—continued.

14,684. Is any other service besides the payment of rent rendered by tenants in respect of their farms?—No.

14,685. Do you know whether farmers have to borrow money to pay their rents?—I do not know.

14,686. Labourers are not scarce?—No.

14,687. There is no land going out of cultivation?—No, my Lord.

14,688. What is the practice as to the sale of sheep, either to an in-coming tenant or to the landlord?—They are bought by private bargain between the in-coming tenant and the out-going one, or by arbitration fixed by them.

14,689. Then what opinion have you as to the establishment of a land court?—We do not approve of the idea of a land court, as we are so handsomely treated by our landlords, and met in every way possible under every depression and adverse circumstances.

14,690. You are perfectly satisfied with Lord Penrhyn?—Yes.

14,691. What do you believe to be the cause of the present low prices?—Well, I cannot say, but foreign competition and things of that sort.

Lord Kenyon.

14,692. I want to ask you, do you represent the others at all?—Yes.

14,693. Do you represent the majority of the farmers on Lord Penrhyn's estate?—No, those in the Yspytty district.

14,694. You represent, I understand, the majority of Lord Penrhyn's tenants in the Yspytty district?—Yes.

14,695. In what sense do you represent the other tenant farmers?—I do not know that I understand the question properly, but a meeting was held yonder, and I was asked to come down to give evidence.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,696. How many tenants were there there?—Seven.

14,697. How many tenants are there in the Yspytty district?—I do not know?

14,698. Are there 100?—No.

14,699. Are there 50?—I could not say, if the cottages were included.

14,700. How many farms are there?—I have not counted them.

14,701. But there may be about 50, as I understand?—No, there are not.

14,702. Twenty-five?—I cannot say; the agents know.

14,703. When was this meeting held?—The 20th of this month.

14,704. The 20th September?—Yes.

14,705. That is two days ago?—Yes.

(The witness handed in a document, which was read as follows:)

"Yspytty, September 20th, 1893.

"In a meeting held by the farmers of the "Yspytty district, chairman, Mr. J. W. Williams, "of Fedw, it was determined to send a repre- "sentative to the meeting of the Land Com- "mission on the 22nd September at Llanrwst." (Signed, in the same handwriting, apparently, some of them, at any rate), "R. Roberts, Ochr- "cefn; J. Williams, Fedw; G. Owen, Plasucha; "G. Roberts, Hendre; E. Jones, Hafod Ifan; R. Roberts, Hendre Isa."

14,706. Are you a Nonconformist?—Yes, I am.

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,707. I will ask you one question, Do you think the surrounding landlords are all as good as Lord Penrhyn?—Capel Garmon is not very far, and the people here say that they are not.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

14,708. Would you like to see some means employed to compel them to be as liberal as Lord Penrhyn?—I should like to see every landowner as kind towards his tenants as Lord Penrhyn is.

Mr. Seebohm.

14,709. There are estates where there is not the same protection that there is on Lord Penrhyn's estate?—Undoubtedly there may be, but I do not know very much about them. I never was off Lord Penrhyn's estate; I always was on it.

14,710. You would say that the feeling of farmers was that the capital of the farmer ought to be protected by the law with the same care as that of the landowner?—I am not able to give an opinion as to that, for the reason that we feel every confidence in Lord Penrhyn for anything that we may want.

14,711. I quite understand that, but if there are tenants of other landlords whose capital in their land is not so well protected, is it the feeling of farmers that they ought to be protected?—I wish well to everybody, but I do not know anything about that.

Mr. Grove.

14,712. To give full weight to your evidence I should like to know how that meeting of farmers in that particular district was called together?—I cannot say, beyond that it was at the last Llanrwst fair that they came to me, and one of them, Mr. Edward Jones, of Hafod Ifan, asked if it would not be better for us to have a committee, so as to send a representative to this Commission.

14,713. So that you do not know that each farmer in this district had a notice to attend that meeting?—No, only the chief farmers, the largest farmers; and those whose names are here represent them.

Chairman.

14,714. Some questions are put in by Mr. David Jones. "Are Lord Penrhyn's farms "cheaper than farms on other estates in this "district"?—It is very difficult to say that, but Lord Penrhyn's character makes us stick to them longer.

14,715. "Do you consider there are farms in "your district that are too dear"?—Under the present circumstances I must say they may be.

14,716. "Do you know that there are farmers "in your district who hold different views on "the land question to yours"?—I cannot say that, but I explained my views to those who were present at that meeting, and they all held the same views as I did.

14,717. Then question No. 4 has been answered. Question No. 5 is: "Do you mean to say that "your fellow farmers have sent you here to "give the evidence you have given"?—Yes, as this document says.

14,718. Then did they know what you would say?—Yes, this paper which had been written then was explained to them (referring to statement).

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,719. The paper had been already written, had it?—Yes, it had been written before the meeting, in order that they might have an opportunity of seeing my views; and if they were not content with my views I was not going to come down here.

14,720. Who wrote the paper?—I did.

14,721. How long before the meeting?—A day or two, or perhaps more, before that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

14,722. Who helped you to draw it up?—No one.

14,723. Was there anyone else present when you wrote it down?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,724. Did you get a copy to write it from?—No.

Major SAMUEL SANDBACH called and examined.

Chairman.

14,725. Where do you live?—Hafodunos, Abergele.

14,726. Are you agent for your father?—I am agent for my father, and owner of two neighbouring farms. I have farmed 800 acres for eight years.

14,727. Your father's estate is about 5,000 acres?—Yes.

14,728. Have you any objection to stating the rental?—No, it is about 3,000*l.*

14,729. Do you wish to call any attention to an enclosure of 1843? That is a long time ago. Was it an important enclosure?—I do not think it is important. I am ready to answer any question about it. It was done by Act of Parliament, and I think that it was of the very greatest importance, in this way perhaps, that it afforded increased employment in the neighbourhood in the making of drains, fences, roads, and plantations; the land was improved, the climate was improved, and general prosperity has resulted from that enclosure.*

14,730. What was the acreage of the enclosure?—I cannot tell you from memory, but I have the document here.

Mr. Grove.

14,731. About? Have you any idea? Was it 100 acres or 200 acres?—I should think it was 400 acres, but I am speaking without pledging myself to the accuracy of that statement. Eight acres were allotted for public turbary, two acres for recreation ground. These 10 acres are the only portion of the enclosure that are now uncultivated, and they are used by the immediate neighbours for cutting rushes, the use of peat for fuel having fallen into disuse.

Chairman.

14,732. Now let us get on to the "occupation" question. What is the usual date of entry in your district?—Before I answer that question, I should like to say that differences of language, politics, or religion only in very rare cases have any effect upon the management of an estate. I never ask an intending tenant what his politics are or religion is, as I am only concerned with his farming capacity, and his having sufficient capital to work his farm satisfactorily. I do not know how many Churchmen and how many Nonconformist tenants there are on Hafodunos, but the latter are certainly in a majority.

Chairman—continued.

14,733. What is the usual date of entry in your district?—November 30th upon the land. May 1st upon the houses and buildings, and the farms are let on leases from year to year.

14,734. Are there any oppressive clauses in your agreement?—Perhaps I had better hand in a copy of the agreement, but I should like to say that compensation is almost invariably given in resuming a plot or any portion of land for any purpose, planting or any other purpose, and if damage is done in timber cutting, I always make a special note to that effect in selling timber, that the tenant must be compensated.

14,735. That is very good. You do not think any clauses are oppressive in the agreement?—I do not think so, but I think they prevent a bad tenant absolutely ruining a farm when under notice to quit.

14,736. Ploughing up permanent pasture and so on?—Yes, ploughing up permanent pasture.

14,737. You give the tenants a copy of your agreement?—Always.

14,738. And in Welsh if they want it?—I have not a Welsh copy.

14,739. Can you tell us what the amount of rent is?—It varies from half-a-crown to 25*s.* per acre; the average is 12*s.* per acre.

14,740. Is the rent usually fixed on a gross sum, or at so much per acre?—The rents were fixed by a valuation, I believe, in 1835, when the estate was bought by my grandfather, but there has been no valuation since. In the case of a new tenant the old rent is usually taken as a basis, and any necessary adjustment is then made.

14,741. I suppose they stick on pretty well. You do not have many changes?—Very few.

14,742. And then the rents of the smaller tenancies are higher a little bit on account of the buildings?—If it is higher that is the cause.

14,743. Then you never let to the highest bidder of course?—Never.

14,744. As to the tenants possessing sufficient capital, you must do the best you can to find out, I take it?—I think most Welsh tenants have insufficient capital for the amount of land they farm.

14,745. What do you think they ought to have on going into a farm?—I think they ought to have at least 5*l.* an acre.

* Additional note from witness's summary of evidence:—

Wenlli Common, Swch yr hafod, Bryniau gleision, and Cefn Brynsiwan, in the parish of Llangerniw were enclosed in 1843 by Act of Parliament.

Eight acres were allotted for public turbary and two acres for recreation ground. These 10 acres are the only portion of the enclosures that are now uncultivated, and they are used by the immediate neighbours for cutting rushes, the use of peat for fuel having fallen into disuse.

Chairman—continued.

14,746. Is arbitration ever resorted to?—It is never resorted to.

14,747. And you have not raised the rents?—No rents have been raised except on improvements.

14,748. Now what do you say as to permanent reductions?—Permanent reductions have been made at various times, ranging from 10 to 40 per cent. A temporary abatement was once given in 1882 of 10 per cent., but I do not approve of it. That is before I had anything to do with it.

14,749. You think you ought to reduce the rent altogether?—I think a rent ought to be reduced permanently if it is to be reduced at all. And I do not believe in percentages either all round, because the tenants' circumstances vary very much.

14,750. Now what have been the permanent reductions since 1883?—The permanent reductions since 1883 have amounted to 543*l.*, or 17 per cent. upon the former rental.

14,751. When you reduced the rents, did you have a re-valuation?—No, the estate has not been re-valued at all. Rents have never been raised except by way of interest upon capital expenditure by the landlord, in that case 5 per cent. is the usual charge.

When rents are reduced it is not in consequence of a valuation, but because of bad times, and owing to the serious drop in the value of stock and produce. Sometimes a tenant is helped far more by having a shed built, or a hay-shed erected, or some wet land drained than by having a mere reduction of rent, or money returned to him. And in every instance of this kind the tenant is not asked to pay interest upon the capital expenditure, though the landlord spends far more upon the improvement than a percentage or rent reduction would cost him. Sometimes so many tons of lime or manure are given. In 1864, Roxburgh at Caerllo had 70*l.* 17*s.* worth of lime. In 1865, 167*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.* worth of lime, and 60*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* bones.

14,752. How long are the rents paid after due?—Rent used to be paid from one to two months after becoming due, except in the case of "back rents" which are always six months in arrear, and paid about eight months after they are due. These are being abolished as opportunity offers; I mean in the case of new tenancies. For the last two years more time has been allowed the tenants, and audits have been held in June and December for the rent due respectively at Lady Day and Michaelmas.

14,753. You think a preferential claim by the landlord is fair?—I think it is necessary. It enables landlords to accept tenants who have not very much capital. It makes tenants look upon their landlord as their best friend and the man to help them when in trouble and other creditors insist upon being paid. A landlord can give a tenant more time, and frequently the money intended for rent goes to pay an importunate creditor, the crisis is tided over, prices improve, and the tenant by the credit he thus gets, is able to take advantage of the rising market, and once more become solvent, and pay up his arrears.

14,754. I understand you to say that tithes and income tax are paid by the owner, and the occupier pays the land tax, the chief rent, and the local rates?—Yes, that is so.

14,755. You say the local rates have increased during the last 50 years?—Yes, they have.

14,756. Now about the size of the farms, what is the average size of the farms in your district?—They vary from three acres to 450. I should say that the average is about 100 acres.

14,757. You have consolidated some of them?—Yes, there have been six or seven farms added to other farms.

14,758. Has that increased the production?—Considerably.

14,759. And given more demand for labour?—It has increased the production and given more demand for labour, and it has in every way improved the place, I think.

14,760. And has it reduced the rent or not, do you think?—I think it has reduced the rent, because of course one set of buildings is done away with, and therefore the tenant has paid rather less for one farm than previously two tenants would have paid for two farms. I do not know whether you would like me to mention anything with regard to the population. The population of Llangerniew parish has not altered very much. In 1851 the population was 1,036, and in 1891 it was 946, so that it has been reduced by about 100.

14,761. I think you say you have mixed cultivation?—Mixed cultivation; raising of stock principally; a certain amount of corn, but very little wheat is grown.

14,762. What do you say about labourers?—Labourers are very scarce and becoming more so every day.

14,763. Very scarce?—Yes, farmers are complaining very bitterly about the scarcity of labour and the high wages they have to pay. I attribute that to the slate quarries in the neighbourhood, as much as anything, where they get better wages.

14,764. Have hundreds of acres of land been reclaimed by the tenants?—Yes, some hundreds.

14,765. Do you give compensation for reclamation?—Yes, always.

14,766. And ploughing up rough land?—Ploughing up rough land has been done.

14,767. And draining?—Draining has been either done or paid for by the landlord. It has not been done by the tenants; never is.

14,768. You have no root crops?—We have now. I may say root crops were practically unknown in the district 50 years ago, and fallowing has quite died out.

14,769. And what improvements are generally made in your district?—Improved farming has resulted from increased knowledge on the part of the farmer and the example of a good landlord, and the effect has been considerable profit to the farmers.

14,770. As regards improvements, are they always made by the landlord?—The tenant may do such things as grubbing up gorse banks, or ploughing up rough land.

14,771. Can you hand in any particulars about drainage or buildings, or tanks, or protection from river encroachment?—I could hand in a schedule prepared. This schedule gives the rents and the amount expended during the last fifty years, and during the last five years.

14,772. And the return to tenants; the abatement of rent as well?—I have not put that down.

14,773. The reductions; not abatements?—Not abatements; an abatement was only given once in 1882, an abatement of 10 per cent.

14,774. You have told us what the improvements are. The tenants co-operate very little?—I think the only case where a tenant co-operates with the landlord is in haulage for a building, or hauling pipes for draining.

14,775. Do you pay for hauling?—No.

14,776. Never?—Never.

14,777. Not even if the man went out of his farm in two years?—Yes, in that case, but we never have such a case; in that case the tenant would ask for and would be compensated.

14,778. Then you do not contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—We do not contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

14,779. And you have no custom of the country?—No; if consent were asked for we should give it readily enough for improvements.

14,780. Has any case occurred in your district where an outgoing tenant has failed to obtain sufficient compensation for his improvements?—No, I do not know of any case in which an outgoing tenant has failed to get it.

14,781. You have no tenant right?—No; as regards that question, I should say a tenant has no saleable interest in his holding. If he has made improvements he obtains compensation from his landlord, but nothing from his successor for interest or goodwill, only for such crops as may be left on his holding, and these are generally sold at public auction. I recently refused a tenant, who was willing to pay 50*l.* to an outgoing tenant, and also a considerably higher rent than the old rent, mainly because I would not appear to recognise any such right, and I accepted another tenant at the old rent.

14,782. What is the custom as to the sale of the sheep on sheep farms by an outgoing tenant to an incoming tenant, or to the landlord?—Sheep on a sheep-walk are generally taken over by an incoming tenant or the landlord, at a valuation, but I know of no custom authorising this. It is purely a matter of convenience and bargain.

14,783. Then about game preserving, what do you say?—Rabbits and hares cannot be preserved. There is a moderate amount of game, but I should like to say that there was a clause

Chairman—continued.

(you will find it in that agreement) before 1880 authorising the tenant to kill rabbits from the 1st of February to the 1st of April, which was inserted in that agreement in my father's time, long before any Ground Game Act was thought of 14,784. You have no trouble with the tenants about the game?—No, none at all. I have had only three claims within 10 years, and I should say in answer to your question whether tenants are expected to beat, certainly not, but they love a bit of sport, and gladly come and see what is going on, and assist, but they would be insulted if they were offered money for coming out; they come out for pleasure.

14,785. Then, further, about sporting rights, you say that the Crown lessees exercise sporting rights over Crown lands and commons; and there is agricultural education in your district?—As regards fruit culture, I should like to mention one gentleman. I do not know whether it has been brought out, but there is the case of a farmer in this neighbourhood, a landowner whose name, I think, should be brought forward, Mr. Tinsley, who has shown what can be done by enterprise in the way of strawberry growing, and growing peas. He grows several miles of them, I believe.

Mr. Grove.

14,786. Does he get them before the ordinary market?—No, he has three different zones or heights—three belts. He has a farm running up from the valley to the top of the hill. He has a succession of fruit, the lower belt would come in before the ordinary market, and the main crop is half way up, and then he has a very late strawberry crop growing high up in the hill. That is Mr. Tinsley, of Pennant.

14,787. Is there any instruction given in butter and cheese making?—I should say as regards forestry, a great deal of planting has been done. We planted 300 acres of plantation. As regards butter making, you have already heard, I think, that Bangor College have given a good many lectures in the district. They have given a dairy demonstration here for the last three years at Llanrwst show, and for two years I gave prizes for a butter-making competition at that demonstration. We have had two courses of lectures at Llangerniew, near here, well attended, and we hope to have another course this winter. We have carried on field experiments at Hafodunos, the report for which I hand in (handing same).

14,788. Are the railway rates high?—Yes, they are indeed. I think they ought to be reduced.

14,789. Then what do you say as to combination?—There is a combination of labourers, which I think ought to be noticed, for harvests. At Llangerniew during harvest the best labourers are always put forward on the Monday morning to bargain with the farmers at what they call a "cross," and when the bargain is made, no labourer will take less wages than that. The result is that the inferior men either get no work at all, or the farmer has to engage them at a wage higher than their value.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,790. Do you say that is going on still?—That is going on still.

14,791. At Llangerniew?—At Llangerniew; it went on this year.

14,792. On the Monday morning, you say?—On Monday morning during the harvest.

Chairman.

14,793. And you say that lasted a week?—Yes.

14,794. And then it began again on the next Monday?—Yes. Then as to friendly societies, we have a Vale of Cerniew Friendly Society; it has a membership of 170 and is very flourishing. There are numerous friendly societies, but they are being absorbed by the large bodies, such as the Oddfellows and Foresters. As regards provident institutions, I cannot say, but I have heard that the inhabitants, of this district lost 2,000*l.* in the Liberator Society, so that they must have money to invest.

14,795. Are there many proprietor farmers?—There are many about, Llannefydd and Gwytherin, but yeoman farmers, small farmers.

14,796. Do the tenant farmers buy their holdings as a rule?—Well, at the sale of which you have heard to-day, of Mr. Evans' property, several of the tenants bought the farms, which they had previously occupied; I believe I do not know, but I believe they most of them borrowed money to pay.

14,797. I think we know all about tenant farmers and their wives, and how they work, and what the children do, and they get no wages, and all that?—I should like to give you a case: 25 years ago a farmer took a farm at Hafodunos with little capital but several sons. They prospered. His eldest son took a large farm in 10 years upon an adjoining estate, and is now well off. Three years ago the father took another farm adjoining his own upon this same estate, and worked it with a younger son who married this year and has agreed to take a farm upon Hafodunos. Another son keeps a shop in Liverpool. I think they are an exceptionally hard working family, and I think they have prospered more than ordinary Welshmen would have done. Then, in another case, a widow and her son took over a farm when the husband died, and now the son has taken another farm upon Hafodunos and the widow works the old farm with a younger son, and they are both doing very well. With regard to Question 158, as to whether rents are to be diminished according to the number of children of a man, I say, he has only to breed fast enough, and at rent time his landlord will have nothing, because the allowances for children's wages will more than counterbalance the rent.

14,798. Can you tell us anything in respect of the state of cottage accommodation?—The cottage accommodation is nearly double what it was. During the past 60 years 3,802*l.* 14*s.* has been spent upon cottages at Hafodunos, and between 1835 and 1869, 426*l.* 11*s.* was spent upon the building and repairing of the elementary school, the fabric alone. I think the supply of cottages is ample.

Chairman—continued.

14,799. Are they in fair repair?—In very good repair. In the village of Llangerniew there are two publics, two shops, and 22 cottages, and there are also cottages in convenient places all over the estate. They are all in thorough repair, and solidly built of stone and slate. All the cottages have gardens and some have land as well. The rule is for all cottagers to hold of the landlord direct, but there are one or two exceptions. I will hand you copy of our cottage agreement (handing same).

14,800. How long do they hold for? When could you turn them out?—Three months' notice.

14,801. Have you anything to suggest for the improvement of things?—I put down five things which I think would assist. First, a lightening of the heavy local rates, which now handicap farmers and the land generally; everything is now put upon land, every rate is charged upon land; personal property does not contribute half what it ought. I would put a small duty upon all imported flour, wheat, and corn. I would advocate the branding or labelling of all imported foreign meat. I also advocate improving railway accommodation. I think we ought to have light railways. I do not see why Ireland is to have all the benefits and Wales to have nothing. I think if railway companies will not make them, we ought to be aided by a State guarantee, and local committees should be empowered to make a railway, of course, under proper supervision.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,802. Would you be satisfied with the county council?—Yes, I should.

14,803. Or some public authority?—Yes.

14,804. Your idea is that there should be some subvention from the central Government so to speak, and the county council might have power to control and carry out the undertaking?—I think the county council have enough to do already.

14,805. There is no Governmental office in Wales at present which could undertake the control of that?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

14,806. What is the fifth remedy?—The fifth is the equalisation or lowering of railway rates. At present it is cheaper to send produce from Liverpool to London than it is from here to Liverpool. It is an anomaly. Railway rates since the 1st of January this year have been very much worse.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,807. Have you any idea what a light railway would cost per mile?—No, I have not gone into the subject.

Chairman.

14,808. I have not asked about your relations with the tenants; I suppose they are very satisfactory?—I think so; I am perfectly satisfied with them.

14,809. And as regards money spent in repairs and improvements, can you tell us anything about that?—Well, I have put in some figures. I should say we have spent over 100,000*l.* the last 60 years. The estate was bought exactly 60 years ago.

14,810. You have given us the details?—Not entirely. Every farmstead has been entirely rebuilt or large additions made to the existing buildings. All wet land has been drained. 300 acres of plantations made for shelter, which have softened and improved the climate. 100 miles of old banks and hedges have been pulled down and grubbed up, and the fields remodelled, and new quick fences made; mostly planted and protected at the landlord's expense; but in all cases the landlord has provided the quicks, also posts and wire to protect the hedges until grown. Watercourses and ditches have been made and paved, and much land from waste common turned into good sound arable land. I should like to mention that 16 miles of road from Abergele to Llanrwst was made entirely at Mr. Sandbach's expense, at a cost of over 12,000*l.*; it was made under a public Act, but he found the money for it.

14,811. I daresay you have many families who have held under you, and been on the land for a vast number of years?—Yes, we have. I can give you them in a moment. I should like to give this table:—

Tyddynbach, 400 years.
Tynypwll, three generations.
Tyddyn dolben, two generations.
Tyddyn ucha, two generations.
Tyucha, two generations.
Gribin, 90 years, and before that at Maesol, 110 years.
Ffrwynos, two generations.
Pontysylltu, three generations. Stephen, 1834 to 1849; Thomas, 1849 to 1864; Stephen, 1864 to 1893.
Tyhwntiravon, two generations. Owen Williams and David Williams.
Nantyrachbach, two generations.
Hendre, three generations. Richard Morris in Howard Rent Roll up to 1845; Robert Morris, 1845 to 1863; William Morris, 1863 to 1893.
Gell, three generations.

Mr. Seebohm.

14,812. Those are selected farms?—Twelve farms on which the tenants or their direct ancestors have been for more than two generations.

14,813. 12 out of how many?—Out of 43 or 50 there may be.

Lord Kenyon.

14,814. Have you thought of a land court at all?—I think a land court would be the very greatest bane to this country in every way. I think it would deprive tenants of the good feeling which they now have towards their landlord, and I think it would deprive landlords of any interest or wish to improve their holdings, their farms, and their land, and it would generally stir up strife and trouble, and lead to no end of contention. I do not see either how it would work. I do not see how you can settle land rents by means of a court; they are much better settled by mutual agreement between the landlord and his tenant.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,815. Just one question or two only. I see that the clause you refer to about the rabbits is the last one in the agreement, and it provides that the tenants are not to shoot rabbits?—It provides that the tenants are to kill rabbits by nets or ferrets, but not to shoot them during those two months.

14,816. I see what you mean. You put the clause limiting them from the 1st February to the 1st April from shooting them, but they may shoot them at other times of the year?—No, at other times of the year the rabbits were reserved to the landlord.

14,817. This seems to have been before the Ground Game Act, 1880?—Yes, of course it was; that is what I say.

14,818. Did you ever enforce the penal clauses in this agreement since you have been agent?—No, never.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,819. Do you and the landlord of this estate do anything in the way of improving the sires, horses and cattle, and that like in the district?—There have been several sires kept. My father had a thoroughbred some few years ago and Lord Penrhyn had a horse called "Cadraoc" who has served mares in this country free of charge.

14,820. Did not the tenants avail themselves of that?—To a certain extent, but not so much as they might have done.

14,821. Have you any reading rooms or anything of that sort in the villages?—We have a young men's reading society in the schoolroom. We have no room apart. Our elementary schoolroom is used for all meetings of that kind in the village, and there is a reading club which my sister manages and gets books down for, and that kind of thing. Any young man in the district goes there after 6 o'clock.

14,822. It is open to the public at large?—No; there is a slight subscription; I think it is 3*d.* a year.

14,823. You spoke with regard to strawberries. Have you any idea what per acre this gentleman used to make of his strawberries?—I should not like to say.

14,824. You have some idea. Why I ask you is that I know of something similar in my own neighbourhood?—I really cannot say. I have not asked him.

Lord Kenyon.

14,825. Does he pay rent for the land or is it his own land?—It is his own land.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,826. Does it pay?—It pays him.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,827. Is the place wired over?—No, they are grown in the open.

14,828 Do you consider 10 per cent. a sufficient reduction for a tenant for the present year?—I think that every case ought to be treated on its own merits. Do you mean a general reduction of 10 per cent. on rents on a property?

14,829. Yes, but this is an exceptional year?—It is an exceptional year, but still, on some farms a man has had good crops and on other farms a man has had bad crops. It has been most partial. Even on Hafodunos, on one side of the river there have been heavy showers, whereas on the other side there has been no rain for a couple of months at a time. So you must treat each case on its own merits. It is impossible to make a general rule.

Mr. Seebohm.

e 14,375 14,830. I think Mr. David Williams is your tenant?—He is.

14,831. He gave some evidence about the consolidation of holdings; were they on your estate?—I did not understand any evidence given by him to refer to our estate, but there have been certain farms consolidated.

14,832. I think he said twenty farms had been consolidated?—No, that was not on our estate; that was as to grazing; that was on a neighbouring estate.

Lord Kenyon.

They were Coedcoch and Garthewin.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,833. You gave us instances where two or three families appeared to have done well. Do you suppose those are exceptional cases, or are they fairly general, do you think?—I took them as more or less typical, but I think that in the first instance I gave, the family are exceedingly hard working, and have succeeded more than ordinary Welsh tenants do.

14,834. Do you think there was anything special in their holding that would be favourable to them?—Oh, no, their holding was just the same as any other farm.

14,835. As to this question of fruit culture, would you suppose that the same things could be brought to apply more or less to the ordinary farmer, as Mr. Tinsley has developed it, to their benefit—more or less I say?—No, I do not think so. I think Mr. Tinsley is a most enterprising man, and then it takes more time and trouble and attention than any ordinary farmer would give.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

14,836. You do not think it would work on those lines?—On those lines I do not think it would work at all.

14,837. Do you think that the ordinary farmer in this district could improve his condition at all by fruit culture or to some moderate extent?—Not in ordinary years.

14,838. You spoke of railway rates being high. Do you happen to know whether railway rates are charged above the maximum powers of the companies under their Acts of Parliament?—I cannot say that I know what the maximum powers are, but I can say that I used to have a special rate for grain from Liverpool to Abergele of 7*s.* 6*d.* a ton, and last week I got a bill according to which the rate has increased to 15*s.* 5*d.*

14,839. That is about 110 per cent. advance?—Exactly.

Lord Kenyon.

14,840. That is the London and North Western?—The London and North Western Railway.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,841. Who insures the farm buildings on your estates—the tenant, or the estate?—They are not insured at all.

14,842. You have been enlarging a good many houses, I think you said. Where do the servant men mostly sleep? We have heard a great deal about this question in other places?—The servant men mostly sleep in the farm-houses.

14,843. In the houses?—No, not exactly in the house, unless there is special provision made for it. They generally sleep in a loft or in an outbuilding.

14,844. Has the farmer any control over the servants, do you think? We have heard complaints in other places of the servants prowling about at night and so on. Is there anything of that sort in your district?—Yes, I have heard complaints from many farmers of the same kind. I had an application only the other day for some shutters, because young men would prowl about and open the windows at night.

14,845. Whose windows?—The windows of a farmhouse, in order to get into it.

14,846. What windows of the house?—They were the windows of the back kitchen.

14,847. Do you think this arrangement is not quite satisfactory of the servants sleeping in these open lofts and outhouses?—I do not think they would submit to be locked up, if that is what you mean, by the farmer at night. I do not think Welsh labourers would submit to that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. E. J. WILLIAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

14,848. You have heard the evidence of the last witness. I dare say there is a good deal of it that you confirm ?—Yes.

14,849. Is there anything you particularly wish to call attention to ?—Yes, local taxation.

14,850. Very well, we will take that ?—I should very much like to see the principle asserted by the Local Government Act of 1888 carried further; that is, the principle that local taxation should be subordinate to Imperial taxation. There is one other thing I would like to point out with regard to the rates. I disagree with most of the witnesses. I say the rates have decreased. They were in 1872 in one district here 3*s.* in the £; in 1882, 2*s.* 8*d.*, and now in 1893 they are 1*s.* 6*d.* So that the local rates have actually decreased by half, through the Government subventions, and through the operation of the Local Government Act of 1888. If the principle enunciated there were carried out fully, I maintain that local taxes should be converted into Imperial taxes, so that all property, both personal and real, should be rated. Now, funded property escapes, and all the burdens are on the land, as Mr. Sandbach says.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,851. Do you mean that you want to get rid of the levying of rates altogether, and to convert all rates into Imperial taxes ?—I do. I maintain that what are now levied for local purposes are really for Imperial purposes. The main roads have been taken from the ratepayers; that was previously a local charge; it is now an Imperial charge; it comes from the funds of the county council.

14,852. Then I understand your point to be that you would extend that principle still further ?—I would extend it, yes.

Chairman.

14,853. You are a land agent and a county councillor and a tenant farmer, and you occupy under two landlords ?—Yes, I do.

14,854. You are agent for 25,000 acres of land ?—Yes.

I do not think we need take you all through your answers to the scheduled questions.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,855. If I might speak personally, the matter I should be most interested in would be to learn your views as to the causes of depression, and the remedies you suggest ?—I think that has been very well threshed out all through, whatever.

Chairman.

14,856. You agree with what has been said to-day about it ?—Well, to a certain extent. The causes are, I think, foreign competition, and the want of capital. I do not think the latter point has been brought forward. There is a very great want of capital amongst the tenants. I can speak as to that for two or three counties.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,857. I think you mention in your answers that the cultivation of land is deficient ?—No. I mention here the breeding of inferior stock, and that foreign competition makes the inferior cattle almost thoroughly unsaleable. More facilities for marketing the stock should be given to the Welsh tenants, I may say, all through Wales, but certainly in Carnarvon, Lleyn, and all those places, where the tenants are awfully handicapped.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,858. You want light railways in those parts ?—Yes, certainly.

Mr. Griffiths.

14,859. What is your opinion with regard to sheep and cattle, fat stock, pigs, and so on. Should they be weighed, do you think ?—I was going to recommend that. First of all, more capital, and then that there ought to be some check to foreign productions; and weigh-bridges ought to be fixed all over the country.

14,860. So that the farmer might get the value of his beast ?—Yes. We now have grand prizes for pigs. What is the reason ? Because they do not import any from America. Immediately they get rid of their swine fever in America our pigs will become not worth the breeding.

Chairman.

14,861. Pigs are high now ?—Pigs are high. Butter sells well.

14,862. Do you think, on the whole, as a land agent of great experience, that rents are fair over the district ?—I only wish to be understood in this light; I do not wish to speak except for the estate with which I am connected.

14,863. On that estate are the rents fair ?—Yes.

14,864. They are quite fair ?—Oh, yes.

14,865. And you think the tenants could live at the rents ?—They have been adjusted, too. There have been permanent reductions of from 36 to 40 per cent.

14,866. That is very unlike what we have heard. This is the first we have heard of that ?—I will give you the instances now. First farm, reduced from 50*l.* to 30*l.*; second, from 70*l.* to 60*l.*; third, from 46*l.* to 35*l.*; fourth from 124*l.* to 105*l.*; fifth, from 46*l.* to 38*l.*. sixth, from 35*l.* to 20*l.*; seventh, from 44*l.* to 35*l.*; eighth, from 92*l.* to 60*l.*; ninth, from 49*l.* to 42*l.*; tenth, from 62*l.* to 44*l.*; eleventh, from 85*l.* to 55*l.*; twelfth, from 30*l.* to 27*l.*; thirteenth, from 50*l.* to 32*l.*; fourteenth from 17*l.* to 11*l.* (I may say that the two last are recent purchases, previously they were held by a small landowner.) Fifteenth, from 60*l.* to 50*l.*; sixteenth, from 10*l.* to 6*l.*; seventeenth, from 32*l.* to 22*l.*; eighteenth from 67*l.* to 44*l.*; nineteenth, from 62*l.* to 52*l.*; twentieth, from 60*l.* to 52*l.*

Lord Kenyon.

14,867. On what estate are these ?—On Lord Penrhyn's.

Chairman.

14,868. That seems a wonderful estate ; there is no doubt about that. But do you, or do you not, consider, as a practical man—you must be able to answer this question, as you go about a great deal—that the tenant farmers in this country are over-rented or not?—Well, I will take our neighbouring estate, that I know something about; that is Colonel Wynne Finch's. I think there are some reasonable rents there.

14,869. On the large estates you think it is satisfactory ?—I believe it is. There are a good many small landowners that give very good terms to their tenants, and have very good tenants. They behave well to their tenants, and their tenants cultivate well.

14,870. Well, I do not think I need ask you anything further on your statement. There are one or two questions handed up. One by Mr. Vincent. " Do you say that the persons who " gave evidence to-day are representatives of " the substantial farmers of the district ? "—I do not think they are—with very few exceptions.

14,871. All the people we have seen to-day seem to be very poor ?—Not all; there are a few; but a schoolmaster, certainly, is not a representative of farmers.

14,872. Those we have seen are in low water, you think ?—Quite so.

14,873. All the farmers we have seen have got reason to complain ?—Perhaps.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,874. Do you not think that many of what are called the substantial farmers are afraid to come forward ?—No.

Chairman.

14,875. You do not think that ?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,876. They have no security of tenure ?—Well, it is better than security of tenure. Yearly tenancy is always better.

14,877. The men you are referring to are expending their capital and giving their life's work under tenancies from year to year ?—No.

14,878. Is not that so ?—No, I think the Commission is misled. There is very little capital expended.

14,879. Have they got leases ?—Leases are not prevalent here, I believe.

14,880. Then the point I am putting to you is this: that the substantial farmers you are referring to, and who may be presumed to be doing fairly well, may be sent away by a notice to quit in one year ?—Yes, but a good sensible landlord would not do that. He is as proud of a good tenant as the tenant is of a good farm.

14,881. But do you think that the tenant farmer might very likely say, " Well, I shall do " better not to give evidence ? "—No, I do not think so.

Re-examined, 22,683.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Conway.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

The Guildhall, Conway, Carnarvonshire, Saturday, 23rd September 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERICK SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

The Reverend W. VENABLES WILLIAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

See 27,597-27,614.

14,882. You represent the Colwyn Local Board, I believe?—I do, my Lord.

14,883. We shall be very glad to hear what you have to say, but it seems to me hardly to come within the scope of our inquiry. You say the London and North-Western Company have made an application to the Office of Woods and Forests to purchase a strip of land on the foreshore?—That is so.

14,884. Then you say you wish to prevent that encroachment on the foreshore, because the strip of land would interfere with visitors coming on to the shore at all, and it would cut the visitors off from the sands?—Yes, my Lord.

14,885. I think that hardly comes within our province; it is a question of public convenience or a question of the convenience of the railroad and the visitors here?—Not the visitors only.

14,886. Just tell us what you have to say upon it?—May I be allowed to read the minutes of the Local Board bearing on the subject? In the first instance a meeting was held at the Board Room, Station Road, Colwyn Bay, on the 8th of August 1893. There were nine or ten members present; I need not give their names: "A letter was read from the estate agent to "the London and North-Western Railway Com- "pany, stating that he had sent to Mr. Culley, "of the Office of Woods and Forests, a plan "showing a strip of land (approximately) a "chain wide, from the Colwyn Bay Hotel to "the westerly mouth of the tunnel at Pen- "maenrhos, as that which the company would "be willing to purchase. Letters dated the 1st, "3rd, and 5th instant were read from the Office "of Woods and Forests, and enclosing with the "letter dated the 5th inst. a tracing of the plan "sent to that office by the railway company, "showing the foreshore land the company "desired to purchase. Proposed by Mr. Thomas "Parry, seconded by Mr. A. C. Walker and "carried unanimously: That this Board protest "against the railway company taking any "portion of the foreshore for railway or any "other purposes, and that the matter be "strongly represented to the Office of Woods "and Forests, also to the county council for "county and the Member of Parliament for the "county division, as being fatal to the interest "of the inhabitants of Colwyn Bay. Proposed "by Mr. James Wood, seconded by Mr. John "Robert and carried unanimously: That a "deputation be sent at once to the Office of "Woods and Forests and the London and "North-Western Railway Company to urge "upon them that the proposed purchase as by "plan of the foreshore sent with their letter of "the 5th instant would be fatal to the interest "of this district, and if considered necessary, "that the deputation meet the railway com- "pany upon the same subject. Resolved "unanimously that the deputation be the "Chairman, Messrs. Thomas Parry, James "Wood, and the clerk. Ordered that the clerk "write to the Office of Woods and Forests, "stating that this Board protest against the "railway company taking any portion of the "foreshore to enclose for railway or any other "purpose, and that this Board had only re- "cently completed an approach to the foreshore "at a cost of 8,000*l.*, which will be of little use "if the company are allowed to purchase a "portion of the foreshore, and that a portion "shown on the plan as required by the com- "pany has been purchased by this Board for "that office, and that in the event of the "company acquiring the property it would be "fatal to the interest of the district. 14,887. Did this deputation go up?—It did.

14,888. Whom did you see?—We saw Mr. Culley, who is now no more.

14,889. When was that?—About a month ago.

14,890. Was any answer given?—The answer was this, that the matter would be in abeyance until we had had an interview with the London and North-Western Company, which we applied for to Mr. Hull. The estate agent was away for his holidays, and would be until the end of this month, so that really we have not had an opportunity of interviewing him on the subject. But as I have stated, Mr. Culley promised the matter should be in abeyance until then. The strip of land which the London and North-Western Company are seeking to purchase extends from Penmaenrhos eastwards.

14,891. You have not got the plan of it?—I am afraid I have not. It is in the county of Carnarvon up the boundary of the county of Denbigh.

14,892. How far?—I should think altogether it is a couple of miles.

14,893. We will take it that it is a couple of miles?—Yes. That would include the two counties of Carnarvon and Denbigh. Possibly in the county of Denbigh there would be three-quarters of a mile more or less.

Chairman—continued.

14,894. And this strip of land is a chain wide?—A chain wide.

14,895. Does that cut you off entirely?—At high water it would be utterly impossible for any people to walk along the shore.

14,896. You could not keep any bathing machines there?—No.

14,897. It does not cut off the approach so much as it narrows it?—It narrows it very much.

14,898. The sea comes up too high, and in fact it would wash away anything you put there?—Yes, it would.

14,899. I think the Commissioners quite understand that?—You have the epitome that I handed in.

14,900. Yes, I think you have given us that clearly and concisely. The matter remains in abeyance until you have seen Lord Stalbridge, the chairman?—We have first to see Mr. Hull, I suppose.

14,901. The matter is in abeyance, and up to that time nothing can be done?—Our great anxiety is, of course, to protect the interests of the public.

14,902. In the public interest we hope the best will be done one way or the other?—Thank you. Of course it is in a sense a protest to be taken cognizance of by the Commissioners.

14,903. We quite understand, and we are much obliged to you for coming to tell us that. It will not be necessary to hear anyone else?—I do not think so, my Lord.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. H. D. Pochin called and examined.

Chairman.

14,904. You are the owner of Bodnant Estate?—I am.

14,905. The acreage is about 3,000 acres?—Well, from 2,500 to 3,000 acres.

14,906. You want to give evidence about your estate?—I am prepared to give any evidence the Commissioners desire to have.

14,907. Do you make any difference with your tenants in consequence of religion, politics, and language?—None whatever. It is not known to us at the time a man makes application for a farm what religion he professes or what his politics are.

14,908. Is your agent a competent farmer, do you consider?—When I purchased this estate some 20 years ago I made inquiry as to the most competent land agent in this district, and I was recommended to Mr. William Bell on account of his essential fairness to both tenants and landlord, and I engaged him to take the entire management of my estate.

14,909. You let, of course, from year to year like everyone else?—Yes, it is let from year to year, excepting applications are made for leases.

Chairman—continued.

14,910. Have you any leases on the farm?—One, and I am prepared to grant leases to anyone who wants them.

14,911. Will you put in a copy of your agreement?—I have it here [handing]. I should explain to the Commissioners although that is a form of agreement in use, it is not adhered to on either one side or the other.

14,912. Is your agreement a dead letter?—Practically.

14,913. Do you ever give notice to quit?—I have only given one notice to quit—the circumstances of which I shall be glad to state to the Commissioners—since I have been in connexion with the property. Many of the tenants have dismissed themselves. The chief reason for giving up their tenancy has been the becoming security for other tenants, not on my estates of course, but for friends of their own. They are, I think, very improvident in that respect.

14,914. Do you wish to say anything about the notice to quit—how that was?—Yes; the notice to quit was in respect of a tenant referred to in some evidence given before the Commissioners the day before yesterday—Mr. Williams, of Penllyn Farm. He paid me a rent of 75*l.* a year. He had a farm of mine consisting of 150 acres, but by slovenly and, I think, discreditable management he had only got, when he had notice to leave, 100 acres of land that was serviceable to him; the rest was bracken, gorse, and other rubbish of that sort.

See 14,026–14,095.

14,915. May I ask you a question on that. Mr. Roger Hughes told us that when you bought the estate the rents went up?—Some of them, I dare say, but I should explain that Mr. Bell, being very much more experienced in land in North Wales than I, was instructed to value all the farms when I came into possession, he being a skilled farmer.

14,916. And the result was that the rents went up in many instances?—In some instances, but in others they went down.

14,917. Did your tenants remain on the estate?—Oh, yes, after his valuation. They remained for a greater or less length of time; some of them for five or six years, and some of them for seven, eight, or ten years; but none of them left in consequence of Mr. Bell's re-valuation.

14,918. But they did leave for some reason or other?—Yes, they did after, say, the first 10 years.

14,919. Is it a fact that they all went except one?—No, it is not a fact.

14,920. I am speaking under correction. I think that is the evidence given?—It was. Four of my largest tenants are persons who were tenants on the property when I bought it 20 years ago.

14,921. Have you any of the old tenants on the estate now?—Yes, four of them.

14,922. Out of how many?—Out of 25.

14,923. Only four left out of 25?—That is all.

14,924. How long have you had the estate?—20 years.

14,925. You have got rid of all the tenants except four?—They got rid of themselves.

14,926. We will put it in that way. All the tenants have got rid of themselves except four?—Yes, except four.

14,927. About 21 went and four remained?—Four are on the property now. I should like to finish my evidence about Williams, if you please, my Lord. Williams was my tenant. Hughes is the man who gave you the evidence.

14,928. He gave four instances of the tenants having to leave, and I suppose one of those four instances is Mr. Williams?—Yes, it is. I tell you the property had been badly managed in my view of the matter, inasmuch as he had 150 acres that ought to have been in profitable service to him, and it was reduced when he left to 100 acres.

14,929. What do you mean by that. Did it go back into mountain land?—Yes, it went back to gorse and bracken and all sort of stuff over the farm and he had but 100 acres of land which was fairly serviceable to him. I then gave him notice because I was dissatisfied with his sloveniy management. If you please, my Lord, when I say "I," I mean Mr. Bell, my agent.

14,930. Mr. Bell represents you?—I never engaged or dismissed a tenant in my life. It was Mr. Bell, my agent. who acted in that matter.

14,931. You washed your hands of it entirely and put it in the hands of Mr. Bell?—But I am responsible for Mr. Bell's doings, of course. I am quite prepared to take that.

14,932. I quite understand?—Well, I took the property into my own hands, and I spent upon the property 1,800*l.* to undo his misdoings.

14,933. Was that on Williams's farm?—Yes, that was on Williams's farm—the farm that I say had been brought into such a condition that there were only 100 acres of profitable land to him, so that I had absolutely to make an outlay of more than all the rent he had paid me for 12 years in setting aside his misdoings; and that is the history of Mr. Williams that Mr. Hughes made so much of to your Lordship the other day.

14,934. Is there anything you have to say about the other three instances. He gave Mr. Williams and three other instances?—Of tenants leaving?

14,935. Yes?—What were they?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

14,936. He gave an instance in relation to a farm called Henblas, rented 40 years ago at 48*l.* and he says now it is 88*l.*?—Very likely. As to Henblas, I do not remember so intimately the circumstances of the case as I do Williams's, but I am quite sure that he was not dismissed; he had a brother with whom he farmed, I recollect, some property away, and he wanted to join his brother. That is my impression.

Mr. Richard Jones.

14,937. Kindly give the name of the place where Mr. Williams lived?—Penllyn Farm.

Chairman.

14,938. Is this true: "The tenant in the time "of Mr. Hanmer was Robert Williams." That is the person you are speaking of?—Yes.

14,939. "The rent was 70*l.*"?—75*l.* I think.

14,940. "Mr. Pochin for some years cultivated it"?—Yes; that is when I spent the money, as I say.

14,941. "Then let it to a certain William Roberts for 116*l.*" Is that the case?—Yes, very likely.

14,942. "William Roberts only occupied it for three years"?—Well you recollect that was done in consequence of the money that had been spent on it.

14,943. Mr. William Roberts kept it for three years?—He says he is now dead, but he is not dead. He is a farmer within two or three miles of this place.

Chairman—continued.

14,944. "Mr. Roberts died." He is alive, you say?—Yes.

14,945. "Mr. Pochin farmed it himself for two "or three years afterwards"?—Yes, I did.

14,946. "It is now let for 100*l.* after two "fields have been taken from it." Is that right?—Yes, to a man who was previously a tenant of mine on another farm.

14,947. "Another instance is Garth." Do you know Garth?—Yes.

14,948. "The rent in the time of Mr. Hanmer was 75*l.*"?—Yes; that is mountain pasture.

14,949. Is that the case?—To a large extent.

14,950. For 75*l.*?—I am not prepared to dispute it; I am not prepared to assent to it, because really I do not know.

14,951. That is the gentleman who became bankrupt owing to lending money?—Yes; lending money to his brother, I think.

14,952. The fourth instance was Henblas. "The rent of that farm 40 years ago was 48*l.*" Is that the fact?—I do not think so, but I cannot speak positively. I should say, my Lord, I was exceedingly anxious Mr. Bell, my agent, should have been here, because he knows so much more about the details of this estate than I do; but he is very ill indeed, and he is now in Scotland, and could not possibly be present.

14,953. I am sorry to hear it.—But I should say of Mr. Bell that he now manages some ten or twelve large estates.

14,954. I want to bring you back to this farm. The statement is that 40 years ago it was 48*l.* That you do not know?—I do not know.

14,955. What is the present rent. Is it 88*l.*?—Very likely; I think it is.

14,956. That is an increase of 40*l.*?—I had that farm in my hands for a long time. Perhaps you will allow me to explain the reason why I took the land in hand. There was a great deal of it badly farmed, in a bad condition and dirty, and not creditable either to me or to the tenant, and I thought the land question in North Wales would have been very well settled if landlords would have taken the property into their own hands and brought it into a creditable condition by farming it themselves.

14,957. I am sorry to interrupt you; but this is rebutting evidence, and we must confine you to that at present?—Very well.

Mr. Seebohm.

14,958. You meant to re-let it again after you had put it right?—Yes, after I had put it right and made a creditable farm of it.

Chairman.

14,959. How is the rent fixed on the estate?—When there is a farm to let, it is fixed by Mr. Bell going carefully over the farm and fixing the rent. I always assent to his fixing whatever it may be—higher or lower.

Chairman—continued.

14,960. You take it for granted he is right?—I take it for granted he is right.

14,961. Will you explain about the reductions and abatements on your property?—That is when the rents are paid.

14,962. No; what reductions have you made. Has it been all increase of rent, or have you made any reductions?—There have been reductions.

14,963. Can you put in a statement of them?—No, I cannot, I am sorry to say.

14,964. You say you will explain what happened with regard to the readjusting of rent when the estate was bought. I think you have told us?—Yes, I have.

14,965. Then rent falling due in March is paid when?—It says on the statement in June.

14,966. And the rent falling due in September is paid at Christmas?—Yes, at Christmas.

14,967. What is the average size of your farms?—Some are 30 acres, and they run up to 150.

14,968. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—None.

14,969. And is there any reclaiming of waste land?—Yes, I have reclaimed a piece of waste land rather high up—1,000 feet above the level of the sea—and I have spent a good deal of money upon it, and it brings me in such a poor per-centage return that I should not be disposed to do the same again.

14,970. Who does the improvements on your estate?—I do every one of them, down to finding a gate when it is wanted. I have never known a tenant of mine really make a gate of his own and put it up.

14,971. About embanking the rivers; have you had anything to do in that respect?—Yes, I have, and I have done them as a matter of course at my own expense.

14,972. Do you preserve the shooting very strictly?—Not very strictly, I am not a sportsman myself. My friends shoot occasionally, but it is not very strictly preserved. I have done the best I could to get the tenants to clear off all the rabbits, but I find they will not do it. If they want a rabbit for their own table when special necessity occurs they get it then.

14,973. Have you gardens to all the cottages?—Yes, large gardens.

14,974. Is the result satisfactory. Do they cultivate them?—I have no market gardens. They are all pleasure gardens.

14,975. The gardens of the cottages?—The gardens of the cottages are not kept up at all to my satisfaction, nor do the tenants cultivate their gardens in the way I think they ought to do for their own profit and benefit. I never meet my tenants on any occasion without urging upon them the fact that they always ought to have for their family a dinner in their gardens, with cauliflower and onions, and other matters of that kind; but I think they get on very badly. There is not one of my tenants who really manages his garden as I think he ought to do in his own interest.

Chairman—continued.

14,976. What combination is there amongst the landlords of the district?—Not the slightest. I think we compete with each other rather actively.

14,977. Can you give us any information about the farming population. I suppose it is pretty much what has been told us in evidence before?—I think the farming population are pretty well off in my district. I come more intimately in contact with my labourers in my garden, and they are all well housed.

14,978. You have built a good many cottages?—Yes, I have built altogether on that estate 22 houses for labourers and farmers.

14,979. And is their condition pretty good?—Their condition is very good. I am particularly pleased with the way in which my labourers keep the new houses that I have built for them.

14,980. Can you express any opinion about the feeling between yourself and your tenants?—So far as I know it is very good. I have never had an application for a reduction of rent from any of my tenants. I have given them reductions when they have paid their rent, but I have never had anything like a general application to reduce rents.

14,981. What do you say about the desirability of legislative interference between landlord and tenant?—I think the chief want we have is to be let alone. Let us alone. If we must let tenants have our land for sixpence an acre, I am ready to do it, but I do not want legislative interference. It will be objectionable, I am sure to the tenant, and I believe objectionable to the landlord.

14,982. You are certain it will be objectionable to the tenant?—It depends of course upon what the legislation is; but speaking generally, I believe the State cannot interfere between a landlord and his tenant with advantage to the tenant or advantage to the landlord.

Lord Kenyon.

14,983. Have you any objection to saying what you paid for this estate?—Well, you know, I have been constantly making alterations and improvements upon it, and I believe that my outlay to-day is about 86,000*l.*

14,984. I mean the original sum you paid for it?—36,000*l.*

14,985. Could you tell me what the rent roll was when you bought this estate?—I do not know. I was told then, of course, the usual statement I dare say—but there was not very much in it—that all the tenants were very low rented, and that is the reason I asked Mr. Bell, as an expert, to go over this, and settle definitely the amount that was fair as between landlord and tenant.

14,986. Could you tell me what the rent roll is now. Have you any objection to do so. I do not want to press the question if you have any objection?—I cannot tell you exactly what the rent roll is, but I know the income to me is between 2½ and 3 per cent.—the net income, that is all I get, and it is the poorest investment I ever made in my life. I have made a great many investments; I never made anything so bad as this.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

14,987. Do you mean 2½ or 3 per cent. on the original purchase money or the money you have spent?—I mean on the money I have spent.

14,988. On the 86,000*l.* which you say you have spent?—Yes.

14,989. The statement yesterday that I took down was that all the farms had been raised with the exception of one. Do you traverse that statement?—Yes, that was not so. At least, I do not believe it.

14,990. What was the result of the valuation. Was it a net increase?—It was a slight net increase, but my own impression is that the increase did not amount to 50*l.* on the whole of the estate. I think I could put it less, but I feel sure it did not amount to more than 50*l.* on the whole estate.

14,991. The difference between you and the neighbouring landowners seems to be this, that the tenants do not seem to have stayed on your estate, and they seem to have done so on the neighbouring estates. Can you account for that. You seem to have been very unfortunate in keeping tenants on your estate who were there when you came. You only kept four tenants out of 25?—I do not think that was unfortunate. The tenants, all but one, left of their own accord, and they left very largely from having become security for their relatives and friends, which brought them into the bankruptcy court, and then of course they had to leave.

14,992. Is that the only reason you give for their leaving?—That is the only reason that I can give you, and I believe it is a correct reason.

14,993. They did not state to you that they found the rents too high?—They did not.

14,994. Do you look upon this estate which you bought some 20 years ago in the light of a commercial transaction?—That is done too much, I think. Land used not to be made a commercial transaction of as it is to-day, but Parliament has taken away all the amenities of the land, and it is a matter of bargain between the landlord and tenant as to what they shall get for their rent. I do not work it in that way, but I know it is worked in that way very much.

14,995. Will you kindly repeat that?—They look upon it as a commercial transaction, as a good and profitable investment.

14,996. You mean those who have bought their estates recently, I suppose?—Those that are buying them generally.

14,997. That would not refer to hereditary landlords?—Yes. Well, I regret that, I say, very much. I like very much the old guild spirit that I used to recollect, and I know its action upwards of 50 years ago, and I find nothing so good. A tenant then looked upon himself as being a member of the family of the landlord, and the landlord looked upon the tenant very much in the same way. All that thing has now died out.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

14,998. Then you would like a feeling of security among the tenants?—Yes, and friendly feeling between one and another and all working for the general good.

14,999. Do you think that exists on your estate now?—I do. I am not at variance with any one of my tenants, and I do not think they are angry with me for anything. I do not receive any complaints; that is the best criterion I can have.

15,000. What you complained of with regard to the tenants was that you found that they farmed badly?—They farmed badly, a great many of them farmed badly, and, as I say, I thought the land question was to be settled by landlords farming their own farms and employing tenants on the estate as officials.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,001. You say that the State cannot interfere between the landlord and the tenant with advantage to the tenant?—No, I do not think it can. Of course, they may give our land to the tenant if they like; the State can do anything, but they cannot with any degree of justice benefit the position of the tenant.

15,002. Are you aware that in the Highlands of Scotland, in consequence of legislation, the rents have been reduced to the extent of 28 per cent.?—They would have been reduced without legislation. With regard to sheep farming on the hills of Scotland; sheep farming has not been profitable to those who have been induced to follow it of late, and whether legislation would come in or not, I think makes no difference. I think the rents would have been reduced, as they will be reduced here, and everywhere else, if we continue to receive the large amount of food stuff from abroad. We have so economised the cost of carriage; steamships now that work for 2 lbs. of coal per horse power per hour in my time cost 12 lbs. of coal per horse power per hour, and that is what has brought down the great value of farm stuff in this country.

15,003. Do you go so far as to deny that that reduction was not made in consequence of legislation?—I believe not. What would have been the case if we had not had legislation of course is guesswork, but I believe that the rents would have been reduced apart from any legislation at all.

15,004. Does it not strike you as extraordinary that such a large reduction should be made, and that coincident with legislation?—Oh, we shall have, if things continue, a very large reduction here, too. The amount I cannot say.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,005. May I ask whether you have experience of estates in other parts of England and Scotland?—I have a small estate in Leicestershire.

15,006. Comparing the character of the estate in Leicestershire and the character here, do you think the circumstances are very different?—Very different; at least the rentals are very different. What I get 1*l.* 5*s.* for or 1*l.* 6*s.* here, I get 1*l.* an acre more for in Leicestershire. That is due to several circumstances. They are nearer the market as a rule than we are here. But there is very much an emanation from the past in both one and the other.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

15,007. Do you find any difference in the class of tenant? Would the Leicestershire man be a much more independent man and make his bargain more freely—make a free contract with you, and stick to it, and stand upon his own feet?—Yes, I think that is so, more than it is here. While the tenants are hardworking here they do not bring the amount of intelligence, I think, to bear on their farm that they do in Leicestershire.

15,008. Would you say that the farmers of Leicestershire remain in their farms in the same hereditary way that they have done here for generations?—Not so much. I do not find it anywhere. Take Lord Spencer's estate for instance, and that I used to know very well. Lord Spencer had hardly a tenant that had not been with him on the property for 200 or 300 years.

15,009. Where was that?—Lord Spencer in Northamptonshire. Now I believe very recently he has had a good deal of his property on his hands unlet.

15,010. And there is that great difference, is there not, that here, where a farm is to let, there are a great number of applicants even in these bad times?—Yes, there are a number of applicants. Some of them are not worth consideration, being without a penny in the world. Those we dismiss at once. When we want a tenant we look at a man's previous farm if we can, to see how he has managed it. Then we ascertain as well as we can what money he has, and if he has got sufficient money to manage the farm he has it as a matter of course.

15,011. You have been trying on your estate to introduce a rather better class of tenants?—That was my object. When I announced to my agent, Mr. Bell, that I would like to have all the farms which fairly fell out from death or any other cause, and that I would like to take it into my own hands, the object was, as I say, to do something towards the settlement of the land question, and, secondly, to get the estate into better farm arrangements.

15,012. So that they might be let?—So that they might be let with certainty of fair results to the tenant and fair results to the landlord.

15,013. Then does the result of your whole experiment lead you to suppose that a man, for instance, who had used his money in commercial transactions and who looked upon his purchase of land as a simple commercial transaction again, would find that he could not apply his commercial principles to land without making a great many allowances?—That is so, because I believe in the present condition of things a farmer works himself; now the landlord cannot work himself. He gets his wife to help him, and his family, and when he manages the estate with such a small amount of wages as that, he can fairly make both ends meet.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

15,014. But if anyone who bought a large tract of land in this district, for instance, had applied strictly commercial principles to it, he would very soon find that he was quite on the wrong line?—I think as a money-making matter it would be so; as pleasure it might be very nice, but as a money-making matter it would not; indeed, I tell all my friends when they talk about buying land, "Well, you can buy it "as a matter of pleasure, but as to profit, give "up all notion of that."

15,015. But I meant that if you were to apply strictly commercial principles you would find that you were doing injustice to a small class of tenants who were not in a position to act upon strictly commercial principles?—That would follow.

Mr. Grove.

15,016. As to reclaiming the waste, your experiment in that direction does not, you say, encourage you to do anything more?—Not at all. I cannot get a return of 1 per cent. for my money.

15,017. Can you say what acreage you claimed and how much it cost you, just for our guidance?—I think it was about 80 acres which I am referring to now.

15,018. And the cost of it?—I cannot give you the exact cost now, but I could give you the result.

15,019. At any rate it gave you 1 per cent. on the outlay?—Well, about that. I would not like to say definitely; it might be 1½, but I feel sure it is not more than that.

15,020. Do we gather from you that fixity of tenure would be of no benefit to the tenant farmers?—Well, they would meet that. I have one tenant who has a long lease, at least a lease of, I think, 20 years or about that—I am not sure about the time, but he has a lease. Then I think I have always treated him fairly. When I have made a reduction of 10 per cent. to my ordinary tenants, I have made a reduction of 10 per cent. on his farm.

15,021. Although it is under lease?—Although it is under lease.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,022. I understood you to say that land which paid about 25*s.* an acre here would be worth that much?—Yes, a fair rental.

15,023. What sort of land would that be, by the way?—Mixed land.

15,024. Low land?—We have no permanent pasture hardly on my estate, except just about my house.

15,025. I understood you to say that that sort of land would command about 45*s.* in Leicestershire?—Yes, I say that would be about the relative amount of rental.

15,026. Is there much land in Leicestershire let at that rate per acre?—I think so. Yes, there is. It is the highest-rented county, or it was at one time; what it is now I do not know, but I speak of three or four years back, and then it was the highest-rented county in Great Britain.

15,027. You know Northamptonshire, too, I understood you?—Yes.

15,028. Would you say that that applied as much to Northamptonshire?—Not quite so readily.

15,029. I thought you were somewhat beyond the mark from what I know of Northamptonshire?—Yes, I dare say that is so.

15,030. You say that you seldom or never receive any complaints from the tenants?—Yes, that is so.

15,031. But they would make their complaints if they had any, I suppose, to Mr. Bell?—They would, but Mr. Bell would be certain to mention it to me.

15,032. Are the tenants mostly Welsh-speaking?—Yes, mostly.

15,033. Does Mr. Bell speak Welsh?—Yes, he knows Welsh. He does not know the language intimately, but he knows it sufficiently to talk to my tenants, or hear what they have to say.

15,034. He is not a native Welshman, I think?—No, he is a Scotchman. He has been in this country, I think, 35 or 40 years managing estates.

15,035. You think if there were any complaints they would reach you?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,036. In answer to Mr. Seebohm you put a different construction upon the question of letting to the highest bidder. I understood Councillor Roger Hughes to have said yesterday that Mr. Pochin let his land to the highest bidder?—No, never. See 14, 15,037. It is not to the highest bidder?—No. What we want first is a good farmer; secondly, we want a man who has got sufficient capital to manage his farm; and thirdly, we look to how he has managed the farm that he is then engaged upon, and all those elements must be satisfactory before we would accept him as a tenant.

15,038. Then you deny the statement that you let it to the highest bidder because he is the highest bidder?—Oh, totally.

15,039. He also said it was the rule that you required one or two sureties. Is that so, when you take the tenant?—Oh, that is very rarely the case. I dare say it has been so when we have had reason to believe that a man is impecunious. We say, "Well, you know, you "cannot have this farm unless you can give us "some security."

15,040. Can you tell me what interest for his capital a tenant would look for in farming his land?—I do not know. Farmers are very bad book-keepers.

15,041. You, the landlord, do not get much more than 3 per cent.?—I do not get 3 per cent. from my estate.

Chairman.

15,042. One question I have to trouble you with, which is put by Colonel West: "Do you "mean to say that land is dealt with com- "mercially on any large estate in North "Wales"?—I do not quite know what the question means.

15,043. Do you mean to say that all the large landowners in North Wales deal in the same spirit which you have described with their tenants; I think that is the question?—Not many, because I do not think they can. I do not think if a tenant is a very bad tenant that they like to turn him out, because they know the cost to them of having the land on their hands would be 8*l.* or 9*l.* an acre, and then if he dismissed the man who farmed a 1,000 acres he would have 8,000*l.* to find, which is not convenient to a good many of us.

Chairman—continued.

15,044. As far as I understand you, you say they do not deal commercially with their tenants, for this reason, that if there was a large farm suddenly thrown up, it would be inconvenient to them to stock and to farm it themselves?—It would be impossible in many cases.

15,045. And that is the reason, in your opinion, why large landowners do not deal commercially with their tenants?—Yes, I think that is the one reason—the great reason.

15,046. That is the great reason, in your opinion?—Yes, in my opinion.

Mr. Hugh Owen called and examined.

Chairman.

15,047. You want to give evidence respecting a portion of the estate in the Vale of Conway that lately belonged to Sir Richard Bulkeley. Was that the portion that Sir Richard sold?—It has been sold.

15,048. Before we go to that, I will ask, do you farm your own land?—A little.

15,049. You are a freeholder?—I am a small freeholder now.

15,050. Of how many acres?—14 acres.

15,051. Did you buy it yourself?—I did, my Lord.

15,052. And it is a portion of Sir Richard's estate?—No, it belonged to General Owen Williams, of Craig y don.

15,053. Are you prepared to tell us what you paid for your holding?—It cost me through everything nearly 900*l.*

15,054. What—14 acres of land?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

15,055. Purchase money?—The expenses and everything.

15,056. May I ask you what do you mean by "the expenses"? Does that include improvements or anything?—No.

15,057. Simply lawyer's expenses?—Lawyer's expenses, and the loss of my own time.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

15,058. What is the amount of money put in the conveyance to you?

Professor Rhŷs.

15,059. In buying the land?—Well I cannot tell you exactly at this moment. I bought it twice.

Chairman.

15,060. At auction?—Yes.

15,061. You bought one portion first, and then another portion?—Yes.

15,062. So many acres first, and then the other part?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

15,063. Kindly tell us a little about the estate that you referred to, belonging to Sir Richard Bulkeley?—When I was a boy, about 45 or 50 years ago, there were 15 farms in that neighbourhood.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,064. Was that Anglesey or Carnarvon?—In Carnarvonshire, in the Vale of Conway. About that time those 15 farms were made into 7. On the 15 farms there lived 19 tenants. At a farm called Llwydfan Isa there were two tenants, joint tenants living in the same place in two houses, I expect, and they were relations carrying on the farm, each dividing his share of labour on the farm. At another place, Tremorfa, they did the same, and at another place called Erianws there were two, and at another place called Maes, there were two, and that made 19 families, and 19 families lost their homes, except seven.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,065. Except seven families, or seven persons?—Seven families.

Chairman.

15,066. Then 12 families had to turn out?—Yes, it caused a great deal of trouble to the families, and through the country at the time. It was considered very hard treatment to do so. A cousin of mine, a cattle-dealer, tenant of Tandderwen——

15,067. That being one of the seven farms?—Yes, later on.

15,068. What date was that?—I cannot remember exactly the date, but it was many years ago now.

15,069. About 40 years ago?—Not 40. It would be, I dare say, 30 perhaps—thereabouts, or it may be a little longer. This was made up of two farms, Ty Canol and Tandderwen. He spent on that farm, he told me himself, over 600*l.* in improving it, pulling down old hedges—zig-zag broad hedges—and making straight new ones instead, and he cultivated the farm well and cleaned it thoroughly, laid it down with good seed, and after that used it as a grazing land, and he used to feed cattle, and consumed a great quantity of Indian meal and oil cake, and so forth. When he was doing this he had his rent raised on two occasions.

15,070. You have not got his original rent, have you?—I have not got the rent at all. I cannot remember. I speak from memory—from what he told me of these facts.

15,071. His rent was raised twice?—His rent was raised twice. This land was sold by auction.

15,072. In what year?—Well, I cannot say. It is only about four or five years ago.

15,073. That is a portion of the estate that was sold by Sir Richard?—The whole of the estate was sold at that time.

15,074. This farm was sold with the estate about five years ago?—About that time my cousin, the tenant, died. The farm was 72 acres, and it was bought by Mr. Hughes, of Llanfairfechan, for 4,150*l.* There is no doubt that that farm, on account of the improvements which had been done, and the good condition it was in—it being, no doubt, the best in the Vale of Conway—reached from 500*l.* to 600*l.* more on that account, and nobody received a farthing of compensation.

15,075. Did your cousin's family go on with the farm, or did they go out of it?—No, only just at the time he was under notice to quit, I believe. He then died, and the place was sold, and the trustees farmed their term out after him.

15,076. The vendors gave him notice to quit?—Yes, I believe so.

Lord Kenyon.

15,077. On account of its being put up for sale, I suppose?—Yes.

Chairman.

15,078. And when he died the farm was sold, and his family were not kept on as tenants?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

15,079. I did not understand when your cousin took his farm. How long did he have it?—I cannot say exactly the time. It would be 25 or 30 years ago. No doubt other tenants whose farms had been sold lost something in this way, but I cannot enter into that. He was, no doubt, the best farmer of the lot.

Chairman.

15,080. You did not hear of any of the other tenants receiving any compensation?—No.

15,081. Would you have known if they did?—I believe so.

Chairman—continued.

15,082. You would have heard of it, probably?—Yes, no doubt I should have done.

15,083. Have you anything to say about the nature of farming on the Voelas estate?—Yes. See g rally, 13,69 13,93

15,084. That is Colonel Wynne Finch's?—Yes.

15,085. What do you know about that?—I went up to Voelas Hall in the year 1865, to be foreman of carpenters and of labourers when the hall was rebuilt. I was there four years as foreman. After that was finished I went away from that neighbourhood for four years, when I returned to take the management of the buildings on the estate of Colonel Wynne Finch, or at least it was his father's estate when I came the second time in 1874.

15,086. What were you then when you came back in 1874?—I was to take charge of the building on the Voelas estate.

Lord Kenyon.

15,087. What you call clerk of the works, I suppose?—Well, I did act as an architect, and superintend the work and see it was carried out both on the estate and at the Hall, and soon after I got there Charles Wynne Finch died.

Chairman.

15,088. That was the father of the present tenant?—The father. Directly after I got there this one succeeded him. Colonel Wynne Finch was in the Army at the time. That neighbourhood is mountainous country, and is very much exposed. Most of the fences are walls and turf. A great deal of the land is marshy or boggy, and other parts are very thin and poor. They only grow barley and oats; they grow very little barley, and that only for their own consumption. I consider that a great improvement might be made on this estate by drainage. I ought perhaps to have said that I think Colonel Wynne Finch said yesterday that the number of holdings on that estate was about 60, if I recollect right, and I may say that during the 12 years' time I was in his service I had work done in about 40 of these.

Lord Kenyon.

15,089. Forty holdings?—Forty farm premises.

15,090. Out of the 60?—Yes, and I might say that this present landlord's father did very little on the estate in the way of building or any other improvements. His father again, took upon himself to alter the Hall, and he did but very little on the estate. When this present landlord got the estate it was in a very wretched condition throughout, except a very few places. You heard what he spent, and you heard that he had the estate re-valued about 20 years ago, he said. See 13, 15,091. Yes, 1870 he said?—That was done before he came by his land agent, Mr. Trethewy, who was an Englishman. In that re-valuation he said that some had reductions in their rents. Very few had it. I know of only one; it may be that there are two or three, but I know one had his rent reduced 10*l.*, and that was one of his largest tenants, the tenant of a farm called Hafodymaidd. I may say that in going about there I had such a practice of going over the land, walking almost in every direction through it, that I had a chance of knowing well what the land was, and as I myself had been a ploughboy at one time, I took more notice of farming generally. My friends were farmers too, and so I used to take notice. I felt very much at the time that it was a pity the agent did not speak Welsh. He was a clever man and a very agreeable man in many respects, but I was very sorry that he was not able to converse with the inhabitants in their own tongue, as there were very few of them who could understand English, and others spoke very poor English, and very often I had to interpret between them as well as I could.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,092. Do you mean Mr. Trethewy when he re-valued?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,093. The agent and valuer?—The agent and valuer. He was the valuer himself, I believe. I remember being on this farm, which had just been reduced in rent 10*l.*, with Mr. Trethewy, the agent, and the farmer, and when we were out on one of his fields he pointed out a boundary wall to him between him and his neighbour—a neighbouring landlord, it was another estate—to a large wall that he had built. I should have stated before, perhaps, that we had his barn re-roofed and re-slated, and portions of the walls repaired and new pigstyes built in, which he wanted very badly. After that was done, the 10*l.* reduction was put on again, and when I was with Mr. Trethewy and the tenant on one of the fields, the tenant, as well as he could—he was not a good English speaker—pointed to this wall he had built, the boundary wall, and which he had stopped building. The tenant said to him, "I intended to build that wall right down "to the road," and a great distance it was, "but," he said, "when you raised my rent it "disheartened me, and I could not afford to do "it, and I was obliged to give it up; and there "it is still." I thought that was very hard. That man had built I do not know how much; perhaps I should be wrong in saying he had built miles of walls with stone which he had got up from the ground. He was an excellent man, and had made great improvements in that way. I thought to myself if that man had been given a present, or some acknowledgment to encourage him in his work, instead of raising his rent, things would have been very different. I might say as to other buildings which were made, that

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Colonel Finch did not tell you yesterday how his rents were increased after buildings had been erected when he was the landlord. Almost the whole of the farm premises which were repaired and rebuilt, or built anew, had their rents raised.

Lord Kenyon.

15,094. Colonel Wynne Finch said that on the valuation the rents were raised on the whole?—Did he? I am afraid I did not hear it.

15,095. He said so in his evidence, and he has handed in a statement as to his rents. I only draw your attention to that. I did not want to interrupt you?—Yes, the buildings were in a wretched state. I remember going into one farmhouse in Pentre Voelas. It was a thatched place, and when I was standing by the front door, the only door it had to go in, the eaves were no higher than my head, and there was a loft over that building under the thatched roof, and to prevent that coming down they put props here and there inside the house as columns to keep the thing up, and so it had been for years. It was only on a poor farm—it is very poor—consisting of a great deal of waste land and thin land; and there were living there a widow, three sons, and two daughters, all at home doing their best, and it was a very hard living. I do not think anybody could have had harder fare than they had. I might make several remarks on other farms as well, and I consider myself that the rents were very uneven according to the land, and with regard to Mr. Trethewy, who was an Englishman, though he was a fair man, so far as he could get at things—I have no fault whatever to find with him—I always thought that if he could understand Welsh thoroughly, and be more amongst the tenants, and if he could see to their grievances, &c., that it would be always easier to approach him, and I thought this was a great drawback on that estate. They were encouraged by giving the pipes. Some of the tenants asked for pipes to drain the land, and they had them, provided that they should do the drainage according to the directions of the agent, and so they used to do it. Very few availed themselves of it at first. It was almost quite a new thing in the country; very little drainage had been done in that way, which was really necessary, as on many parts of our farm they could not take a cart in without getting fast there; and in 1884, if I remember right, they stopped giving pipes—anyhow, I do not know what they are doing at present. If they had been encouraged with the draining at first, you would find one farmer taking an example from the other, and the first would not like the other farmer to be a better farmer than him. If that had been kept on and encouraged in that way when things were better in the market than they are at the present day, I think the state of the farmers to-day would be far better. I have no doubt the land there can be made to produce one-fourth more than it does at present.

Chairman.

15,096. Do you want to say anything about game; do you know anything about game?—Yes.

15,097. Will you just shortly tell us what you think about game, and if you think there is too much game anywhere that you know of?—In one part of the estate—in the middle part of it, near the keeper's house and the hall, where the most depredations, and the farmers' land there suffered most, except those round the border of the mountain. At the present time they suffer a great deal from grouse. Farmers, when the harvest is late, suffer a great deal of loss in that way, and those suffer in the middle of the estate more; and, of course, the keeper is always considered the best, who can best stock his land with game. He had good keepers there for that, which is as much as to say at once that a good keeper means something bad for a tenant-farmer. And again, the way they destroy the vermin and cats, which kept many things down; that causes a deal of injury to the tenant-farmer. A tenant farmer, when he has no cats, cannot tell the loss he gets in his barn, in his stack-yard, in his stable, in his pigstyes and everywhere.

15,098. With regard to outbuildings; have you anything to say about that?—I think they are now in a pretty good state of repair as a whole; but the complaint in that neighbourhood is that they are short almost everywhere. Everywhere they want to go on with more buildings: being such a bleak place they require more, and I think if they had more it would be a great advantage.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,099. You gave an account of your cousin's difficulties in leaving the land when it was sold. Did he hold under an agreement?—I believe he did.

See 15,066,

15,100. Did that agreement give him no claim for compensation?—He said it did not.

15,101. Did he make any application to the landlord at the time?—I do not think he did,—not to my knowledge.

15,102. When you were superintendent of the repairs upon Colonel Finch's estate, Mr. Trethewy was the agent, I understand. You say that he was a clever man?—Yes.

15,103. Do you think that he did substantial justice?—I believe as far as his knowledge went, that what he could put an end to, as far as his years and experience went, he did,—as far as it was within his power; but he always dealt harshly with them.

15,104. With regard to the instance you gave of a widow with three sons and two daughters living in a thatched cottage, was that one of the houses that you superintended the repairs of?—Yes.

15,105. How long ago was that? Was that in 1874?—It was after 1874.

15,106. I thought 1874 was the year you went back again?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

15,107. How long after that?—About five or six after that.

15,108. Would you put it about 1885, 1886, or 1887?—Somewhere about 1880.

15,109. Several years ago?—Yes.

15,110. Were they evicted from their holding?—No.

15,111. What was the complaint then? You mean that the complaint was, that the house had been allowed to get into such a state of disrepair?—Yes, and that the rent was raised after rebuilding.

15,112. The rent was raised after rebuilding?—Yes, on such a poor farm.

15,113. To what extent?—I believe, as far as my memory supplies me, about 7*l.* I may be wrong; I am not certain of that.

15,114. Would that be in respect of the new buildings?—Yes.

15,115. They remained on as tenants?—Yes.

15,116. You say you began as a ploughboy?—Yes.

15,117. You will pardon me for saying, you look in very good circumstances now?—Well, I am not in bad circumstances, I am happy to say.

15,118. You present an extremely good appearance?—I do not think I have to thank anybody but myself for it.

15,119. You thought land was a good investment; you wanted land for yourself?—I wanted a place for myself to settle down.

15,120. And you were a purchaser at the sale?—Yes.

15,121. Was that five or six years ago?—It was in 1884.

15,122. Have you had then much connexion with the land since those days when you were superintendent upon the estate?—Since when.

15,123. Since those days. Have you been there ever since?—I had land when I was upon the estate during my engagement.

15,124. So much salary with a house, and land for cow, rent free?—I had other land which I paid rent for; it was in all, 17 acres of land.

15,125. That is just what I want to know. You have been an occupier of land?—Yes.

15,126. Were you on that estate for any length of time?—I was there 12 years, at first I was there four, during the rebuilding of the hall.

15,127. Sixteen years in all?—16 years in all.

15,128. Are you living down in this neighbourhood now?—I live in this neighbourhood now, within two miles of this town.

15,129. Holding other land besides your own freehold?—No.

15,130. Only your own freehold?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,131. How long is it since your connexion with Colonel Wynne Finch's estate—the Voelas estate has ceased? How long is it since you have ceased to have any intimate acquaintance with the estate?—It was in 1886 I left.

15,132. You do not know whether there has been much rebuilding of farmhouses on the estate since?—I do not know much about it since I left.

15,133. What I wanted to ask you was about the accommodation at the farmhouses. Where were the servant-men housed?—Well, generally they were boarded in the kitchens, had their meals in the kitchens, and mostly slept out in a hayloft, I mean a stable-loft outside. Most of them did so.

15,134. What did you think of that accommodation?—Well, it is not fair nor good for that class of people to be treated in that way.

15,135. Was there room for them to sit in the evenings in the kitchen?—Not always very comfortable. They could not afford to give them a candle.

15,136. Could not afford to give them light?—Well, they would not, I mean, not in long winter evenings.

15,137. They would not give them light there?—They would grumble if they were burning their master's candles.

15,138. In fact they did not expect them to spend the evenings in the kitchen, did they? They did not encourage them to stay there?—No, they were not encouraged. I believe years ago, a long time before I went to that neighbourhood, that farm servants, some of them, used to knit in the evenings. That was a very long time ago.

15,139. They sat with the family?—The servant girls were obliged to knit hard every evening. It was given to the servant girls as a task to knit a stocking in the evening.

15,140. And then the servant-men would sit in the kitchen with them in those days?—Very often they would ramble about somewhere.

15,141. I was coming to that. If they could not sit in the kitchen, there was no accommodation in the loft excepting just for sleeping?—Oh, no, there was not.

15,142. Where did they spend their evenings as a rule?—I cannot tell you—rambling about very often with each other. That is the only chance farmers' servants had to see each other.

15,143. To see each other?—Yes, to see their friends. Some of them would go to see their parents in different places

15,144. And some to see somebody else?—And some to see somebody else; of course they require that.

15,145. We have heard that that led in some neighbourhoods to considerable evil?—No doubt it did so there.

15,146. It did there, you think?—Yes, I believe so.

15,147. Do you think the accommodation is so far improved as to tend to lessen that evil now?—Well, I do not think as far as the accommodation has improved that it will tend to improve that.

15,148. You do not?—I do not.

Mr. Grove.

15,149. Is it usual now for the servant-men to sleep in those lofts over the stables, as they did many years ago?—Yes.

15,150. Are those lofts warmed in any way in the winter-time?—Well, some are warm and others are very cold.

15,151 If they are not warmed it must be very cold in the depth of winter?—Yes, especially up in that country.

15,152. I want to know whether they are artificially warmed in any way in the depth of winter?—No, not the sleeping place.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,153. You stated, I think, that on Sir Richard Bulkeley's estate 12 farming families had to leave when the consolidation took place?—Yes.

15,154. What became of them?—Well, I cannot recollect, or tell you exactly.

15,155. I do not mean individually; but do you think they emigrated?—No, I do not think anybody emigrated to a foreign country.

15,156. Not to America?—Not to America or to any other place; but they shift as well as they can in their places.

15,157. Was there some emigration to America 30 or 40 years ago?—Oh, yes.

15,158. Tell me when it was, and why it was?—I cannot tell you much about that, but I can remember parties leaving when I was a boy in that neighbourhood.

15,159. Farmers?—Farmers.

15,160. Not many?—No, not many.

15,161. Do you think it took place where there is this sort of consolidation in a mountain valley?—No, I do not think so. I think it only occasionally took place.

15,162. Not wholesale?—No, not to my knowledge.

16,163. And of late years, has there been more or less emigration to America or elsewhere?—Well, I do not think there is a very great deal of difference especially from the farming districts.

15,164. I suppose the fact of the existence of slate quarries and mines, and that kind of thing in North Wales opens a channel for employment apart from farming, and prevents emigration?—Yes, as well as the improved farming here; and another thing (which I believe is now the backbone of agriculture in these districts) is the presence of visitors along the coast here.

15,165. Tourists?—Yes. The farmers can sell their produce, such as cattle, sheep, eggs, poultry, and so forth. They can get a market for it, and they can get good prices; and if it was not for that, I do not know what would become of them. Besides that, there are a great many workmen employed in building all along the coast, which, of course, is a great help to this part of the country.

15,166. So you would say the other sons who were not likely to succeed to the family holding have sufficient access to other employments in Wales itself, so as not to make it necessary for them to emigrate largely to America or elsewhere?—Well, I cannot tell you exactly about that.

15,167. How long was Mr. Trethewy agent on the Voelas estate?—Well, I fancy he was about 20 years.

15,168. And is he still agent?—He is not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,169. You say that on the one estate, the first estate, two families managed a farm jointly. Does that system prevail now in this neighbourhood?—No, not to my knowledge.

15,170. Did it work satisfactorily?—Yes. There were two of those parties that did well. They were relations, and they lived peaceably together and managed well.

15,171. But generally speaking would you recommend it?—Not at all.

15,172. You say that your cousin lost 500*l.* or 600*l.* owing to the improvements he had made on that farm, which he did not recover?—Yes.

15,173. Could he not recover that sum, either by the agreement with his landlord or by custom of the country?—He told me himself that he was afraid he would not get anything; but just at that time he died when the farm was sold. He was in bad health for years.

15,174. Was there no table for compensation in the agreement?—No, I do not believe there was, according to what he told me about the agreement.

15,175. Do you not think he was at fault in going to such an expense without ample protection with regard to compensation?—Yes, of course, it was a fault on his part to do so, but he and Sir Richard were great friends, and they did business in other respects with each other. Sir Richard is dead, but of course he was not there at the time of the sale. It was the present Sir Richard who sold it; but it was his grandfather that let him the farm.

15,176. Do farmers generally in this neighbourhood improve their farms relying entirely on their confidence in their landlords?—Well, they do a little—not very much. I think great improvements might be done on land about here, but now most of the estates in this neighbourhood have been sold.

15,177. Are the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act in operation here?—No. In those estates that have not been sold, I do not think that they do anything with. They contract themselves out of that Act altogether.

15,178. But they cannot contract themselves out of it?—Well, there is something done, I do not know what it was or how it was. I do not know of any instance where anybody took an advantage of that Act whatever.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

15,179. Your cousin died five years ago I think you said?—Yes.

15,180. The Agricultural Holdings Act was in operation then?—Yes, it was.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

15,181. Have you made any inquiries why the executors or administrators did not make the claim two months before the year ended, under the Act?—No. There was no claim made.

15,182. How long have these families you are referring to 45 years ago been on the same holding?—They used to be for ages at that time. My father was born on a small farm belonging to Lord Newborough, within two miles of this town on the side of the Conway river, and his grandfather was there before him, I do not know how long before then, and my cousin was the last tenant of the farm. After his death, I applied for the farm as a tenant, and on Lord Newborough's estate it was the custom for some of the friends of the deceased to have the farms after, and only another relative of the deceased and I applied for the farm. I went to the agent—the present Hon. Frederick Wynne's agent—and he told me there was another applicant, and that the best thing we could do was to decide which of us should withdraw. The other applicant came to me, and he was not willing to withdraw, nor would I so we left the matter in the hands of the agent for the time. My cousin did not live on the farm then. He had let the house and he used the land as accommodation land. He treated that very much similar to the other farm I referred to. However, because I was a Liberal, I was refused as tenant of that farm.

15,183. This district, the Vale of Conway, is still very Welsh, is it not?—Yes, it is rather Welsh, I consider.

Lord Kenyon.

15,184. I think I heard you say that you thought farming might be improved in the district, is that so?—Yes, in the upper district of the Conway, by drainage and carting lime, although it is very far to cart lime to that neighbourhood, and is very expensive; but it pays well to do it.

15,185. In the holdings you spoke of that were consolidated, was it on account of the buildings falling into disrepair?—I did not know what Sir Richard's object was.

15,186. Were the houses pulled down?—Yes, many of them. There is no trace of them at the present day, and on two of those farms, Gwiwan and Bachlaw, there were five cottages. There were five cottages called—one Tyddyn Isa, two under the name of Caerllwyn, another called Gwiwan bach, and another called Bachlaw bach, and there is no trace of any of them, nor any of the other farms. I know where they were.

15,187. I want to see whether it was owing to want of capital. The houses were not rebuilt, or anything of that sort?—No, I cannot say anything about that.

15,188. It does not signify. Do you think Sir Richard lost any money in consequence of bad farming, and that they sold lower in consequence? You stated your cousin's instance where it was sold, I see, in consequence of good farming. Do you think there were any instances in which he lost money by bad farming?—I could not tell that.

15,189. You have stated that you were foreman of Colonel Wynne Finch for some time. Do you think he received any return for the money he spent on his farms beyond improving the holdings and being on better terms with his tenants?—No, I do not think so.

15,190. You say he raised the rents at one time?—He raised the rents.

15,191. But we are told the rents have come back to what they originally were?—I do not know.

15,192. I suppose the value of the buildings is not exhausted yet?—I do not know.

15,193. Have you ever occupied a farm near a grouse preserve where the grouse do not do any harm?—No.

15,194. I mean you do not speak from your experience of damage done by the grouse?—I think so myself.

15,195. You think so yourself?—Yes; scores of times I have seen them coming on the corn.

15,196. The harvest must have been very late?—Oh, no. They come down very late. They are on the stubbles at the present time.

15,197. They would not do any harm to the stubbles?—No; but if it was a bad season and the harvest was late and the corn was standing, they would do a great deal of damage; and they are so tame that when they are carrying the corn they feed on it close to the cart before it is loaded.

Chairman.

15,198. There is a question by Mr. Vincent. "I believe it is the fact that, in cutting down "expenses, Colonel Wynne Finch has ceased "to employ a permanent carpenter. Is that "so?"—That was his excuse to me. When I was leaving, I complained that I had given him the best of my time for a trifle.

15,199. I do not think we need go into that; but he does not employ a permanent carpenter?—No.

15,200. Then Mr. Vincent puts another question—"With regard to the precise figures "which resulted from his revaluation of 1870, "I suppose you would admit that Colonel "Wynne Finch is more likely to be accurate "than you are?—Yes.

15,201. That is your admission?—Yes.

15,202. Mr. Vincent puts this further question—"Do you say seriously that grouse do any harm "except in very severe weather if corn is very "late out?"—No, not very much harm, only when the seasons are late. They will do no harm whatever this year.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,203. You were going on to say a good deal about drainage. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I do not.

15,204. Because that has a special schedule all to itself with regard to drainage. Would it not be a very good thing if the Agricultural Holdings Act was printed in Welsh?—I think it would, and distributed amongst the farmers generally.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

15,205. You wish to speak as to the desirability of having security for compensation. Is that so?—Yes.

15,206. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

15,207. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Humphrey Ellis, Tai'r Meibion.

15,208. Is Mr. Humphrey Ellis a large or small landowner?—A small landowner. He bought two farms, and I occupied one.

15,209. What do you think is necessary for the security of compensation to tenant farmers?—Security for tenure would be one great part.

15,210. And are you in favour of a Land Court?—Yes, indeed.

Lord Kenyon.

15,211. Have you any complaint to make against your present landlord?—I have no complaint beyond that he lets the game, and that the rent of the farm is very high taking into consideration the state of things.

15,212. Have you asked for an abatement?—He does give an abatement of 2*s.* in the pound.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,212*a*. You live near Aber?—I live near Roe Wen, just here—about three miles from this place.

Lord Kenyon.

15,213. What is the size of this farm?—45 acres.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,214. Do you make use of your right to shoot or kill the rabbits and hares?—Yes, I give permission to a man living near us to kill the rabbits.

Chairman.

15,215. Mr. Owen Wynne asks, "Is not your "landlord a tenant farmer himself"?—Yes.

15,216. "And a Nonconformist"?—I believe he is.

15,217. Have you anything more to say?—I have a complaint with regard to the previous farm I occupied.

Chairman—continued.

15,218. When did you hold that?—My father had been there 50 years, and it is about three years since I left that farm.

15,219. What happened on your leaving?—The executors of Mr. Joseph Evans sold the place.

15,220. Mr. Joseph Evans died, and the executors sold the farm. Did you get any compensation?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,221. What is the name of the place?—Ty Ucha.

Chairman.

15,222. Did you put in any claim for improvements that you had made?—Yes.

15,223. How much compensation did you claim?—I did not claim any particular sum.

15,224. Were you given notice to quit?—Yes. As they were going to sell, I got a notice to quit.

15,225. And you left?—Yes, and went to where I am now.

15,226. You asked for compensation?—Yes.

15,227. And got nothing?—No; the agent said that he could get nothing from the trustees; he said that he was very sorry for me, but if he started with me he did not know where it would end.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Hughes called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

15,228. Will you give your evidence in Welsh or in English?—In Welsh.

15,229. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes. My brother and I are co-tenants.

15,230. On whose estate?—Benarth Hall, Conway.

Lord Kenyon.

15,231. Under whom?—Mrs. Edwards, the wife of the late Dr. Edwards.

Chairman.

15,232. Is she a large landowner?—No, it is a small estate.

15,233. How many farms?—Four or five.

15,234. How large is your farm?—38 acres.

15,235. What do you pay for it?—43*l.* 14*s.* 0*d.*

15,236. Do you think that rent too high?—Yes.

15,237. Has it ever been raised?—Yes.

15,238. How many times?—My father paid 11 guineas, and my grandfather, too. I have the receipts (handing them in).

15,239. How many years ago is that?—There is a receipt dated 1803 there.

15,240. When was it raised from 11 guineas?—After my father's death.

15,241. When did he die?—In December, 23 years ago.

15,242. Do you consider the rent has been raised on your improvements?—Yes, all our buildings were thatched.

15,243. What condition is it in now?—My father built a house which cost him 200*l.*, and built a stable and other buildings, too.

15,244. At what do you estimate the whole cost of buildings?—The house was 200*l.*; I cannot speak as to the other buildings.

15,245. About 300*l.* would you say?—Yes, certainly 300*l.*, but Sir Richard Bulkeley was the landlord then.

Chairman—continued.

15,246. Are you in favour of a Land Court?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,247. Were those buildings which cost 300*l.* entirely built out of the tenants' money?—Yes, my father built them.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,248. Was the rent advanced at a valuation?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,249. Was there any re-valuing?—Only the steward valued it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,250. Were there any buildings erected on the place by the landlord?—No; he raised one corner of a cowhouse, and he wanted us to share the cost with him, but we refused to do so.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,251. Is that all you mean? Do you mean that it was never finished?—No; they finished it, and we put the roof on.

15,252. Thatched it?—A zinc roof on the straw.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,253. What was the part that the landlord did?—He raised two corners of the cowhouse—the mason's work.

15,254. Do you consider that the rent was advanced from eleven guineas to 43*l.* 14*s.* 0*d.* in consequence of that repair?—It had been raised before that.

15,255. Was it raised all at once or by degrees?—It was raised to 55*l.* to start with, and then we were going away, and he reduced the rent by 5*l.*

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

15,256. Is that an upland farm?—Yes, it is an upland farm.

15,257. How far from the market town?—A mile from here.

15,258. Would not the increase of Llandudno account for the raising of the rent?—No.

15,259. Have you not a better market for your produce now than they used to have in 1803?—Well, I do not remember that year.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

15,260. Is this your statement (indicating)?—I cannot write.

15,261. But is that your evidence?—Yes, that is my evidence which was written at my request.

[The following statement of the witness was read by the Interpreter.]

"Mr. John Jones, Shop, Mochdre, near Conway.

"I formerly held a farm named Penhower, near Bangor, on Lord Penrhyn's estate. The incidents I wish to relate occurred in 1875–6.

"One morning I was proceeding through the cornyard of one of my fields; there was a heap of swedes in the cornyard, and an old cartwheel lying on the swedes, and there I noticed a dead hare, which, on looking more closely, I found secured in a snare fastened to the old wheel. I took the hare from the snare and threw it close up to the adjoining fence, and the very moment I did this two of the gamekeepers came upon me and accused me of having set the snare. I told them I knew nothing whatsoever about it. My servants were called, and one of them admitted that it was he that had set the snare.

"Soon after this I received a note summoning me to the Estate Office, and I went, when I received a notice to quit my farm. Some time after this, the sub-agent came to my place (Penhower) and asked if I had begged Lord Penrhyn's pardon. I asked him, 'Pardon, for what?' and he replied, 'For the offence with regard to the hare.' I told him I could not beg for pardon for an offence of which I was not guilty, and I added, 'Tell Lord Penrhyn that he 'cannot drive me to starvation.'

"In the following summer I sent to the Estate office to ask if they would send two valuers of their own, to act with two other valuers I had selected, to assess the damage done by the game in that season's crops, but no attention was paid to my request. I sent my two valuers at a proper time to assess the damage, instructing them not to make the valuation a high one, as I preferred that their valuation should be made rather under than over a fair estimate. They assessed the damage at 119*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*, and I sent my claim for that amount to the Estate Office, and the reply that I received was that I would not receive any compensation. I feel sure that my loss from the damage of the game amounted to a somewhat similar amount for each of the eight years during which I held the farm.

"When the notice to quit matured I had to leave without having any definite idea where to go to—with a wife and 13 children, the eldest being about 18 years of age, and the youngest two years old."

Chairman—continued.

15,262. You say you lost about 120*l.* a year over the game?—No, I did not say that—it was the year I left there.

15,263. The game did you 120*l.* worth of damage, as well as what you claimed for compensation?—Yes.

15,264. Do you mean by 119*l.* 10*s.* the damage done by the game alone in one year?—Yes, that was the valuation of the two farmers of the damage done by game alone during that year.

15,265. Then you also say that it was much the same every year you were there. You estimate the loss at 120*l.* a year for eight years from the game?—No, excepting the year when the damage was assessed.

15,266. You claimed 119*l.* 10*s.* for compensation?—I sent a bill down to the office.

15,267. And besides that you think you lost 119*l.* 10*s.* from the ravages done by the game?—That was the valuation of the two farmers.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,268. What is the acreage of your farm?—100 acres.

15,269. And what sort of land is that 100 acres mostly?—It is corn land.

Mr. Richard Jones.

Are you referring to the farm he occupies at present, or the farm he held under Lord Penrhyn?

Professor Rhŷs.

I am referring to the farm on which the damage done was 120*l.* a year.

15,270. Then the game damage was over 1*l.* an acre?—Yes; I sent to the office to request them to send a man or two to value with my valuers, and they refused. Then I asked two men to go and value the damage as well as they could.

15,271. What was your rent?—117*l.*

Mr. Seebohm.

15,272. Was that one case the only reason why you had notice to quit?—No.

15,273. What were the other reasons?—That had not occurred when I received the notice to quit. I was going through the rickyard on the morning, when I saw a hare in a snare by a cart-wheel——

15,274. I want to know whether there was any other reason for your receiving notice to quit?—I refused that——

15,275. Was there any other reason?—No, there was no other reason except this case.

15,276. You had had no previous disputes?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,277. In fact, according to that valuation the game had done more harm than the amount of the rent?—I did not interfere with that nor with anything, except that people persuaded me to have somebody to value the damage.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,278. What crops did you raise on this farm?—The ordinary produce of farms; hay, swedes, potatoes, barley, and oats.

15,279. Then practically the rabbits destroyed one-third of the whole produce of the farm?—According to the valuation of those men. I was turned away because of the hare.

15,280. Have you a copy of the valuation?—No, I have not. I took it to the office, and I have not seen it since.

Lord Kenyon.

15,281. What sort of game was it that did this damage? Was it hares or what?—Rabbits, hares, partridges, and wild ducks, and every kind of game.

15,282. What did the wild ducks do?—They had 12 acres of ground for preserving game near a field of mine of 9 acres of barley.

15,283. What was there in those 12 acres? Was it a place where pheasants were reared, or what?—All kinds of birds, as far as I know.

15,284. Were they artificially reared, or were they not?—No, they were not. They sowed some buckwheat.

15,285. What was reared upon the 12 acres?—It was an old marsh.

15,286. What sort of game did they rear on this old marsh?—Ducks for the most part on the marsh.

Chairman.

15,287. There is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "I suppose the old cartwheel had been "lying on this heap of swedes and in the court-"yard for some days"?—Yes, it had been there for some time. It was put on the straw in order to prevent the wind from blowing it off.

15,288. "How did you come to look so "closely at it on this particular morning"?—I passed by it and saw the hare on the ground.

15,289. Then a question by Mr. Vincent: "How long ago was this exactly"?—1876.

15,290. Was that long before Colonel West was the agent?—I cannot say how long. I came away from the county.

15,291. Who were the two valuers?—William Roberts, of Y Fedol, and John Roberts, of Y Tyddyn.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,292. Had you the right then to kill rabbits?—No.

Chairman.

Does Colonel West wish to say anything about this.

Colonel West.—It was before my time, and I know nothing whatever about it, nor have I ever heard the case mentioned in any way whatever. I can give no information about it.

[Colonel West's statement was translated to the witness.]

The Witness.

Mr. Pennant Lloyd was the agent when I was there, and Mr. Johnson was the other agent.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Lord Kenyon here took the Chair.

Mr. Hugh Williams, called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

15,293. Are you a tenant farmer on the Bodnant estate?—Yes, of Eglwysfach.

15,294. Under Mr. Pochin?—Yes.

15,295. Are you farming another farm of about 70 acres in the neighbourhood?—Yes.

15,296. Under whom do you hold that other farm?—Mrs. Garry, of Liverpool.

15,297. What is the size of Eglwysfach?—70 acres.

15,298. Is your son also a farmer holding land in the neighbourhood?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

15,299. Are you well acquainted with the condition of farming in the district?—Yes.

15,300. Will you state what you know as to permanent buildings. By whom are they erected?—Mr. Pochin built the permanent buildings.

15,301 He is the landlord?—Yes.

15,302. Has there been a large quantity of land reclaimed?—A little wild land has been brought into cultivation.

15,303. By whom?—By Mr. Pochin.

15,304. Do you think farms are better managed on large or small estates?—There is not very much difference, I suppose.

15,305. Do you think that religion or language makes any difference between tenants and their landlords?—No, not at all.

15,306. Is the usual time for entering on a tenancy November and March?—Yes.

15,307. You have a lease?—Yes.

15,308. Will you state what the lease is?—15 years.

15,309. Are leases common?—No.

15,310. Do you know of any case of a lease being refused?—No, I do not.

15,311. Are they often asked for?—No, I do not think so.

15,312. Do tenants consider themselves as safe under a yearly tenancy as under a lease?—Yes.

15,313. Does your landlord interfere with your system of cultivation?—No, not at all.

15,314. Are the rents of small holdings somewhat lower than the larger ones in some cases?—Yes.

15,315. What would be the reason for that?—It is easier to go to small farms with less capital.

15,316. What is the usual rent. You say you can state the usual rent of agricultural land in your neighbourhood?—From 12*s.* to 30*s.* an acre I should think.

15,317. Are any other services than the payment of rent required from you?—No.

15,318. Do you suppose the landlord requires a man with capital to farm his land, and is that man accepted as the tenant?—Yes.

15,319. Have the rents been increased during the last 35 years?—The rents were raised at the time when Mr. Pochin bought the estate.

15,320. Have you anything to say about subletting?—Generally speaking, very few farms are sublet in our neighbourhood.

15,321. Do you know of any cases?—No, I do not know of any cases.

15,322. Is the rent usually paid at the rent audit, namely, the March rent at Midsummer, and the September rent at Christmas?—Yes.

15,323. Do you think land is going out of cultivation?—No, I do not think so. I think it is better than it has been.

15,324. Who usually does the improvements?—Mr. Pochin improved several farms.

15,325. Is the rent paid usually less than what the interest of the money paid for the purchase of land would amount to?—I am not sure that I could answer that.

15,326. Will you state what you consider the causes of the present low prices of agricultural produce?—I do not know, unless it is that so many cattle and corn come from foreign countries.

15,327. Can you give us your opinion as to the establishment of a Land Court whether it would be good or bad?—It would be a good thing on some estates perhaps.

15,328. Would it be a good thing for both landlord and tenant?—I cannot say.

15,329. What do you think on Mr. Pochin's estate?—I do not think it would make any difference at all.

15,330. Have you any remedies to suggest for the present state of things?—No, I have not.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,331. Do you hold two farms now?—Yes.

15,332. One is Eglwysbach?—Yes.

15,333. What is the name of the other?—Llwyndu.

15,334. Does your son hold a third one?—Yes, he rents it.

15,335. Is it unusual in the district to hold more than one farm?—No.

15,336. You do not agree with the other witnesses who have said that it is?—There are not several yonder.

15,337. That is not an answer to the question?—Well, perhaps it is an unusual thing to hold two farms.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,338. You farm on Mr. Pochin's estate I understand?—Yes.

15,339. You have heard Mr. Pochin's evidence this morning. Did you follow it?—I did not understand it properly.

15,340. I understood him to say that the cottagers who had gardens did not cultivate these gardens satisfactorily, to the credit either of themselves or the landlord. Do you know anything about them?—There is room for them to improve, certainly.

15,341. He also said that the cultivation, when he bought the estate, was very slovenly carried on. Do you remember anything about it?—Yes.

15,342. Was it so?—It was so.

15,343. What was the cause?—A good deal of land had become wild, gorse and so on.

15,344. Why?—The tenant had become too impecunious to cultivate the land.

15,345. There was a lack of capital on the part of the tenant. That is what your testimony comes to?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,346. Then that agrees with what Mr Pochin himself said?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,347. With regard to the gardens of tenant farmers, are they made full use of?—There are only small gardens yonder, and we can do nothing better than grow things for our own use as farmers.

15,348. Would you say that they are well gardened?—They would pay better, would they not?

15,349. That is not an answer. Would you say that they are well gardened?—No, they do not cultivate them well.

15,350. They to a certain extent neglect them?—Yes, I should say so.

15,351. They might grow fruit and vegetables to great advantage?—Yes, they could if they had been accustomed as gardeners.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,352. You say, Mr. Williams, that language and religion make no difference on the estate. Do you not think it would be of advantage to you, and that it would be easier for you to approach your landlord or your agent if they were able to speak Welsh?—Yes, it would.

15,353. Mr. Pochin told us this morning that the tenants on his estate were satisfied with the existing rents, and that they never made any applications for reductions. What do you say to that question?—We have made but little application for reduction to him, but we have been accustomed to get from 5 to 10 per cent.

15,354. Are the tenants generally satisfied with that abatement?—So far as I have heard.

Lord Kenyon.

15,355. There is a question put in by Mr. Vincent: "What do you mean by a Land Court"?—I have answered that question before, have I not?

Lord Kenyon—continued.

15,356. I do not think you stated what you meant by a Land Court?—I think it would be a good thing under some circumstances, at any rate.

Lord Kenyon.

That is not an answer to the question.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,357. Have you thought of it at all?—Yes, I have thought of a Land Court, but I am not able to express my mind upon the question. It is in my mind, but I cannot express my thoughts.

Lord Kenyon.

15,358. Do you mean you have not really considered it?—No, I have not thoroughly considered it.

15,359. "Do you think if there were a Land "Court the landowner would have any interest "in expending money on his estate so as to im-"prove it?"—They say in effect that they would not, do they not?

15,360. It is not your opinion; that is theirs. What is your opinion?—I think a Land Bill would be beneficial.

15,361. But that is not quite an answer to the question. The question was, whether you thought the landlords would spend more money on their estates in improving them. Do you think they would or not?—I cannot answer the question.

15,362. Another question put in by Mr. Vincent: "What do you mean by a Land Bill?"—Is not a Land Bill the same thing as a Land Court?

Lord Kenyon.

I do not think it is worth pursuing.

Mr. JOHN DAVIES.

Lord Kenyon.

15,363. You are a tenant farmer?—I am a tenant farmer at Brynmynen.

15,364. And you hold 55 acres?—Thereabouts.

15,365. That is without a sheep run, under General Wynne of Coedcoch, and you wish to give evidence as to your own property and the district generally. Is that so?—Yes. I may also add that I am resident agent to Miss Jones of Bryn Eisteddfod, the adjoining estate, and have been there for over 32 years, and if there be any question raised about that estate I am ready to give evidence.

15,366. Do you wish to give rebutting evidence to any evidence which we had yesterday?—I think the man who gave evidence yesterday (Mr. Owen Hughes) is not satisfied with the report of his evidence. I do not know what his evidence was.

Lord Kenyon to the Secretary.

Did you communicate with them as to the witness's evidence yesterday?

Secretary.

No. This is the point. Mr. Owen Hughes gave his evidence yesterday, and complained to me to-day that certain daily papers had not given a correct report of his evidence. I told him that that was perfectly immaterial.

See 13,
14,

Lord Kenyon.

Did you furnish Mr. John Davies or Miss Jones, of Bryn Eisteddfod, with a copy of the evidence?

Secretary.

No, certainly not. There was no charge made against them.

Witness.

It appears that he charged Miss Jones that she had turned him out of his farm without any compensation, but his statement to me to-day was that he had 30*l.* compensation from the new tenant, and he had also the privilege of choosing the tenant. I think that is good compensation.

Lord Kenyon.

15,367. Your complaint is only against the report in the paper, as I understand it, and not against the evidence. Is that so?—I had no opportunity to see his evidence except in the papers, but I have it here. It is something similar to what I am saying now about Vron Farm.

15,368. What was the name of the witness?—Owen Hughes.

15,369. He stated that he had notice to quit for taking another farm?—That was so.

15,370. I do not think he said that he had no compensation.

Sir John Llewelyn.

No, he said that he had 30*l.* out of 45*l.* paid by him.

Witness.

On account of Vron.

15,371. Yes?—I have no more to say than that.

Lord Kenyon.

15,372. He had 30*l.* then?—I am not aware of that. He bargained with the incoming tenant. We had nothing to do with it.

15,373. You have nothing to rebut in his evidence?—No.

15,374. Have you anything more to rebut in any other evidence?—I do not think so, my Lord.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,375. It was in respect of Ty Du that he got the 30*l.*?—I do not know about that. I can say this: that there was no permanent improvement done in either of these cases; I am not aware of any.

Lord Kenyon.

I think there was very little charge.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,376. He said he had 30*l.*, but it was in respect of Ty Du?—I am talking of Vron. I do not say anything about Ty Du.

Lord Kenyon.

15,377. Then you wish to give evidence as to your own farm?—Yes, my Lord.

15,378. Have you any statement to make?—No, not a particular statement.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,379. It is quite right, and this rebutting evidence is quite to the point. He stated that he received no compensation and that he did receive 30*l.* in respect of compensation on another farm?—He had nothing to do with Ty Du.

Lord Kenyon.

15,380. In respect of Vron did he have compensation?—It appears he had 30*l.* from the incoming tenant, and he sold the crop under valuation as well, I believe, to the incoming tenant.

15,381. Are there any recent enclosures of waste land?—I am not aware of any.

15,182. Are there any unenclosed lands in your district?—No.

15,383. Any rights of sheep walk?—No.

15,384. Have you any instance of either politics, or religion, or language causing any difference between landlord and tenant?—I have no instance, but I may add that at least 19 out of 20 tenants on this estate are Nonconformists, and they have never been asked about their politics. I can ascertain that from what I know and from what I heard from the agent. He never asked any applicant about his religion or politics. I am speaking now of Coed coch.

15,385. You speak now as a tenant farmer?—I do, my Lord.

15,386. You speak of the Coed coch Estate?—Yes.

15,387. The usual time for entering is in November?—Michaelmas as well, upon some portion of the land—especially stubble land.

15,388. And agreements are more common than leases?—They are, my Lord.

15,389. Have you any agreement?—I have.

15,390. Have you anything to complain of in that agreement?—No, I have not as a whole.

15,391. Are you aware of an instance of a tenant asking for a lease?—I do not know of any case. I think as a rule that farmers do not care for a lease, especially during the present depressed time. I think they would rather not have a lease. Under an agreement they can apply to the landlord at any time, and the landlord very liberally meets their wants.

15,392. Then you think the tenants are safer under an agreement; is that so?—Well, they are quite safe. I do not say that they are safer, but speaking from my own experience, I may say we have had some leases on the Bryn Eisteddfod Estate and we have had a deal of trouble about them. They have all failed, every one of those who had leases, and we have had trouble with them.

15,393. Can tenants obtain a copy of their agreement in Welsh as well as in English, or not?—Well, I do not think that they are prepared in Welsh, but I think they have been explained to them. As a rule, they are not very particular about the details of their agreements.

15,394. They do not pay much attention to them?—No, they do not, my Lord.

15,395. The rent is fixed as a lump sum, you say. You believe that the rent on small holdings is higher in proportion than on large holdings?—I do.

15,396. Can you give any reason for that?—One reason is this: there is but very little expense on a small holding and they have got the house included, and as a rule, upon what I call small holdings they can go and work out the farm, and I think they can well afford to pay higher rent than on a large farm.

15,397. Are holdings let to the highest bidder?—No, my Lord, I do not know of any instance.

15,398. Will you state what you know as to the raising of rents and as to abatements?—I can say this, my rent has not been raised at all. I have received abatements of 10 per cent. several times, and I may also add for the other estate of Miss Jones, that she made an abatement a few years ago of 10 per cent. and she never raised the rent. Last year she made again an abatement of 15 per cent. upon the rent and the tithe rent charge, 25 per cent. in all.

15,399. Do you know of any case of consolidation of farms in the district?—I do not know of any case.

15,400. Did you hear the evidence of the witness this morning who knew of 15 farms, I think it was, that had been consolidated?—No, I do not know much about this side whatever.

15,401. It was 45 or 50 years ago?—Well, I should not mention about 40 years ago. It is not in my district.

15,402. Will you state what you know of the practice as to sub-letting?—As a rule they are bound by their agreement. They cannot sub-let, but practically when they do sub-let a field or so, they get double what they paid and more. I can prove that of my own knowledge.

15,403. Could you mention any instance of that?—Well, I hardly like to.

15,404. You hardly like to?—No.

15,405. Will you state the practice as to the time of payment of rent being postponed?—It had been postponed on each estate without being asked for, and when a request has been made I should think that it has been postponed on Coedcoch estate as well. It would have been postponed this time, but I do not think that the tenants asked for it. I found when we postponed the rent on the Bryn Eisteddfod Estate some of the tenants were quite ready to pay up to the day.

15,406. Do you know of any instance of farmers having to borrow money to pay their rents?—I do not know of any instances, but I have no doubt they do in some cases.

15,407. Do you agree with the evidence which we heard to-day or yesterday; that farmers in this neighbourhood generally farm with insufficient capital?—No, not as a rule, my Lord.

15,408. What do you consider sufficient capital in your district?—It is rather a difficult question to answer.

15,409. How much per acre?—I did not really consider it.

15,410. Are labourers scarce?—Rather.

15,411. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—Not to my knowledge.

15,412. Any waste land?—No.

15,413. Is arable land being laid down to pasture?—Yes, in some instances, but it is not as a rule.

15,414. Will you state why that is the case; you say not much?—That the land has been laid down?

15,415. Yes, you say not much?—One reason is this. There is no expense upon pasture land, whilst arable land, especially corn, at the present time, would never pay for labour and seed.

15,416. Are there more or less roots than there used to be grown?—I think it is about the same generally in my district.

15,417. Fallowing is given up, I suppose?—Fallowing has never been practised in my district because our land is a light soil.

15,418. Will you specify what improvements are done by the landlord and what by the tenants?—The landlord is to drain the land and put up buildings for stock, providing gates and posts, and so on, and water supply in general.

15,419. What about the tenant?—Nothing more than the seeds and manure, I mean as a rule.

15,420. Do you know of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I do.

15,421. And that it is illegal to contract out of it. Is there any trouble in the district about game?—Not particularly.

15,422. Do you know of any instances?—No, I do not know of any in my district, because game is not so abundant and they are not preserved to any extreme extent whatever.

15,423. Are there any freeholders in your district?—There are some.

15,424. What is your opinion as to their state compared with the tenant farmers?—I believe that some of them are comfortably off; but as for the others who are obliged to borrow money and pay a high interest; they pay more rent in interest now than they did before to the landlord.

15,425. Then you think in that case they are not so well off. Is that so?—They are not so well off, as a general rule, I mean.

15,426. Freeholders who have not had to borrow money for their holdings are better off, you think?—I should think they may manage better than the others. I do not say they are better off as far as that than tenant farmers.

15,427. And farmers' wives and children work on the small holdings, I suppose?—Yes, as a rule.

15,428. We have heard about their being paid wages or not being paid wages. Can you make any statement about that?—Well, I can. I think I may know as much as anyone about that. I live amongst small farmers It is the custom of the children to work at home, and in some cases they are set up afterwards in life, and in some cases the parents apprentice their children to carpenters or other callings.

15,429. They help them on in life. Is that so?—Yes; and in some other cases they work for many years and turn out for nothing. I think it depends principally upon the skill of the parents.

15,430. Will you state your opinion as to the establishment of a Land Court?—I did not study it at all, but I would rather face my landlord and the agent a great deal than any court in England and Ireland.

15,431. Then you are not in favour of a Land Court?—Well, I am of that opinion. It is not wanted in my district, I should think.

15,432. Will you state what you believe to be the causes of the present low prices?—My opinion is this: foreign competition.

15,433. Can you suggest any remedies?—No. We have to meet unfavourable weather, high wages, and heavy taxation, especially tithe rentcharge, which, in my own case, is one-fifth of the whole rent.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,434. I see, according to the agreement, the tenant binds himself to do all the haulage towards new buildings, but there is no provision here for compensation for haulage in case he leaves. What is the custom: supposing that a tenant had been hauling towards new buildings and that he left in the course of a year, would the landlord give him anything for his trouble and expense?—I cannot point to any particular case.

15,435. He could not recover anything according to the custom of the country?—I do not think there is a custom of the country upon that, because their agreements bind them. I do not know of any custom of the country in my district, at least it has no effect if it is in existence.

15,436. He would have to rely entirely upon the generosity of his landlord, whether he would give him anything?—It depends entirely.

15,437. Do you think the landlords generally would do so in a case of that kind?—Well, I do not think that they would do generally, but I could trust to the generosity of several landlords that I know. Taking them altogether, I do not think so.

15,438. You would not like to rely upon the honour and justice of any landlord?—I should not do their work on that account. As a rule on both estates when tenants ask for a new building, or an addition, they are quite willing to draw the materials, and what the landlord or landlady laid out, they never charge any interest upon.

15,439. But supposing that a tenant leaves in the course of a year, he would have but very little benefit and advantage from the improvements, you see.—No.

15,440. The cost to him would be more than the benefit he had derived from the erection of the buildings?—Yes, but if this tenant again leaves on his own account he knows his circumstances well enough, I should think.

15,441. Yes, but some unforeseen circumstances may occur: supposing, we will say, that the tenant himself died, and that his children were not able to keep on the place; take a case of that kind?—I have no instance of that happening in my district.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,442. But it is possible?—Oh, yes, possible.

15,443. It is certainly a possible case?—But I have no instance of it before me. What I said before the Commission I do not hesitate over from fear of any contradiction.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,444. You say, "I think that less corn "is raised now, and there is more grazing"?—I do.

15,445. What is the consequence of that, so far as stock is concerned. Is there more stock kept on the farms now than usual?—Yes, I think there are a great deal more sheep kept on the farms than usual.

15,446. More cattle?—And besides that, I can buy foreign corn cheaper than I could grow it myself.

15,447. And more cattle?—Well, quite as many, I should think; but in this district we cannot keep them in the winter, without some arable land, without some hay and straw—we cannot keep our cattle and stock.

15,448. I am asking you a direct question: are there more cattle and horses kept, for instance on the farms?—Well, of course, when the arable land diminished, we kept less horses, because we did not want them.

15,449. You kept more cattle then?—How can we keep more cattle when we have no winter keep for them. We keep more sheep; they can live out in the winter, but cattle cannot; we must have fodder for them.

15,450. I think you said you raise more roots?—No, I did not say so—about the same, according to the arable land, I mean.

15,451. Then the demand for buildings or for shelter for stock is not greater than it was years ago?—No.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,452. One question about emigration: Do you know this district well? Have you known it for a long number of years?—I have known it for all my life.

15,453. How far does your knowledge extend—right away to the Menai Straits? Does your knowledge extend all along the coast?—It extends over a large area of the country.

15,454. Was there ever a time in your recollection when there was much emigration?—Not of a great many from this part.

15,455. Do you think the language is a great difficulty in emigration? Are people stopped from emigrating because they do not know the language spoken in America, for instance?—No, I do not think that the language has anything to do with it, because I know a great many Welshmen who emigrated to America. My own brothers went there; they did not hesitate about the language or anything.

15,456. Were they tenant farmers, or sons of tenant farmers?—Sons of tenant farmers.

15,457. Then you think there is a gradual emigration?—I think it has been falling off for some years.

15,458. There was more in the old days?—There was more in the old days from this district. There are very few emigrating now.

15,459. Was there much consolidation of farms, say 50 years ago? Was there a time when landowners did consolidate farms?—No, I do not know of any instances in my district, and there are to my knowledge but very few cases—very few indeed.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,460. You said just now, I think, that you do not know that the agreements are to be had in Welsh on the estate that you have to do with, and you further said, I think, that the tenants did not show any very great anxiety to know exactly the terms of their agreements?—I think I am right in saying so.

15,461. I quite believe you: that has been my impression for some time?—Because there is a copy of an agreement now, which has been in my possession for some years, signed by the landlord, and the tenant knows very well that it is to be got at my place, and I mentioned it many times; he never has taken it. Here it is now. I have got several besides this one.

15,462. That quite confirms my suspicions all along; but do you not think, if they were more anxious to know exactly what is in their agreements, that that would be pleasanter for both landlord and tenant?—Yes, no doubt about that, but at the same time they have a guess about their agreements, and what they are tied down to, but they do not farm according to this agreement. Even I myself do not.

15,463. But how is that?—It has never been enforced. There are several clauses here that I objected to. I have confidence in the landlord and the agent, and they have never been enforced, and never had been enforced to my knowledge.

15,464. But do you not think that rather tends to mystify the tenants. They do not know exactly what is in it, and then they get under a misapprehension, and afterwards think that they have been promised this, that, and the other, which is not in the agreement. Do you not think it would be better if they would study their agreements?—No doubt it would. They would know what is in their agreement, but, as I said before, to my own knowledge they are rather careless about their agreements.

15,465. Then that leads to a good deal of misunderstanding and grumbling at the end?—Well, I have not a case. As I said before, I have been on this estate over 32 years, and I have no case of any dispute in that respect.

15,466. On the other hand, why is not the agreement made up to the usual practices? Why do they not bring the agreements into some sort of conformity with what you consider should be right?—I may add this. There is only one agreement on several estates—I cannot answer for more than two; there are only the same agreements say, for the lower part of the country that there are for the upper part of the country. You cannot expect upland farmers to farm quite in the same way as those that plough, and sow wheat, and all that, but the agreement is exactly the same.

15,467. I quite see that; but that only points to this, that you ought to have two sorts of agreements, one for the upland part and one for the lowland part?—Quite so, but it does not signify under the present circumstances at all. We cannot expect the upland farmers to farm according to this.

15,468. It would not be reasonable at all; but the logical conclusion is that you should have two agreements, is it not?—Yes, quite so. If they asked for it, no doubt they would have it.

15,469. The state of things is a little unsatisfactory on both sides, I think. If they cared more for knowing exactly what is in the agreement, and if the agreement was posted up a little more to date, there would be fewer of these complaints, I fancy?—Most likely, but I think myself, about this agreement on Miss Jones's estate, it means that good farming should be followed. I am of that opinion. Although I farm a farm under Miss Jones, I do not think that I am prepared to say that I am farming up to every clause in this agreement, and I do not think that they expect me to do so on either estate.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,470. It would not be a good thing for all farms even on the same estate to be cultivated exactly in the same way?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,471. The restrictive clauses would be aimed against very bad tenants, and are put in in the case of any very bad tenants?—Well, in some cases of course they are good. They are tied down, and they cannot sell all the crop, and when they are leaving they cannot plough all the farm.

15,472. Those restrictive clauses would only be put in operation against a very bad tenant, I suppose?—Yes.

15,473. You have no bad tenants; they are all very good tenants?—No, I know of a great many poor tenants, so far as that goes, but they have been clinging to their farms for many many years, and as long as they pay their rents I think their landlords are very lenient and let them go on as long as they can.

15,474. Are the restrictive clauses put into force?—Never. In that way this agreement is a dead letter.

Lord Kenyon.

15,475. I see there is one special service clause in your agreement, "The tenant shall, at his "own expense, haul all materials for the repairs "and improvements, and shall also draw four "tons of coal to Coed Coch yearly." Have you ever found that a harsh clause?—No, I do not call it harsh at all. I am doing it willingly, although I am bound to do it; but they never press me up to that figure. They ask me, "Is it "convenient to fetch a load of coal at such a "time with one or two carts." If it is convenient I send two, or I send one. I do not object to it. I think the tenants are quite willing to do what they can for the landlord.

15,476. It shows a nice friendly feeling? Yes.

15,477. It is considered to be money's worth?—It is money's worth in one way, but it is easier for the farmer to do the work than pay for it.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

15,478. I see it goes on to say, "At such "times as required so to do or, in lieu thereof, at "the option of the landlord, shall pay to the "landlord 10*s.* 6*d.* per ton"?—Yes.

15,479. Would that ever be enforced?—Never.

Mr. Ellis Pierce called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

15,480. Are you a tenant farmer?—No.

15,481. What is your profession?—I am a bookseller.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Ellis Pierce, Dolwyddelen.

"Farmers are afraid to state what they will.

"Complaints as to game.—Soon after the Ground Game Act became law I penned several letters, which appeared in the 'Baner' newspaper in a series at the close of 1880 and early in 1881, commenting on the various grievances of tenant farmers, including those of Lord Penrhyn's at Ysbytty and Penmachno. In a short time after, a letter was written and handed over to John Roberts, Pant Glas, asking him to go round to have it signed by John Jones, Plas Penmachno; Cadwalader Williams, Ysgwyd Frith; Griffith Owen, Dylasau; Edward Jones, Hafod Ifan; Robert Roberts, Ochr Cefn, and by himself. It was stated in the letter that all the contents of my article on the Penrhyn estate contained everything except facts. The letter was signed by the six, on behalf of all the tenants, though none of them read it nor heard anything about it until it appeared in print, taking their word for it. It was impossible but that the six knew that all I wrote consisted of absolute facts. They, however, signed the document, but whether the contents were ever made known to all the six I am not able to say.

"Grievances complained of.—(1.) Griffith Pritchard, Talar y gerwin, Penmachno, who has been on the farm ever since 1870, and the family of the wife before it came into possession of the honourable family of Penrhyn. All the buildings are in a bad condition. The tenant did all the repairs himself, or paid for the work to others. He asked several times for some consideration from the local agent, but with no avail. He asked once for some wires to put up some few yards of wire fence. The agent replied that he was in the habit of getting wires from Thomas Jones, and that he could get it there too, possibly—by paying for it. He was, as well as others, asked to sign to pay tithe with rent; but he was not willing to alter the old system of paying to the clergyman himself. A word came one morning that his farm would be let to another tenant unless he would sign to pay tithe with rent.

"(2.) William Hughes and his sister, Pen-y-bont of Penmachno. Most of the bottom and best land is inundated by water, the bed of the river is filled up by gravel. The land for some distance is nothing but a bog. The cowhouse and the outbuildings are on the lefthand side of the river. Most of the grass land, the pasture and all the sheepwalk on the righthand side. The hillside is very thin land, no soil whatever, always with its bone through its skin cold and bleak. It is called 'Oernant' (cold hollow). They had no cowhouse, shed, nor any kind of building on that side where there was one much wanted to feed the cattle. All the buildings that they used to have, were all in ruins. They had to feed the cattle near the house on the side of the river where the manure was not required. In some seasons the river used to be too high to cart it over where it was wanted until it would be too late. They were short of buildings to feed the cattle during the winter months. They had to turn out the cart and other implements of husbandry to make room for the cattle, which consequently used to rot in a short time, and have to be replaced by new ones. The family have been on the farm from time immemorial. They gave up the farm because they could not get the rent reduced. They were a little behind with rent as it is nearly twice what it ought to be, especially with the accommodation they had. They had to leave without payment for the manure of 13 head of cattle and a horse they fed during last winter. A new tenant came from Eifionydd, and was hoodwinked in some sense, as he could not know much of that farm. A large shed for the hay and new buildings to feed the cattle were built on the south side for the incoming tenant this year. The rent used to be 114*l.*, including the tithe 121*l.* yearly.

"(3.) Robert Roberts, Bryn Eithin, could get no repairs. The stars and the moon could be seen through the roof of the so-called farmhouse he lived in. All the outbuildings were in a dilapidated state, and not fit to store cattle. He had to leave. He incurred the displeasure of the local agent by charging for ploughing some land for him at Rhydlanfair, instead of doing the work gratis as others are in the habit of doing as it is understood.

See 22,736, 22,745.

"(4.) Henry Williams, Vron ddu, was asked the loan of 200*l.* by the local agent who was going to farm Rhydlanfair, the farm he still farms under Lord Penrhyn. Henry Williams at the time was not prepared to give him the help he wanted. What cash he had, he could not get at such a short notice. The agent said he would bear him in mind. Not long after Williams lost a considerable amount of money by some unlucky transactions. He soon after had a notice to quit, but succeeded to get his farm back upon the understanding that he was to pay two years' rent in advance,* which he did, as far as I can understand.

See 15,537, 22,758.

"(5.) Mrs. Jones, Bryn-ddraenen Eidda. Part of the land, the best fields, were taken away from her without any reduction in the rent, and it was added to Ty-nant farm.

"Landlords occasionally wronged by valuers.—It is often the case when valuers come round that they depend on someone to instruct them as to the real value of different farms on the estate. In some instances those that instruct them have no kind feeling towards several neighbours. Those that are friendly will have favour, and those that are not are scorched.

"Land farmed by the landlord. — Dyffryn Mymbyr, Capel Curig, some years ago when the last tenant, Mrs. Roberts, died, came on the hands of Lord Penrhyn to farm. I notice every year that many tenants from the estate at Ysbytty and Penmachno are in the habit of going there to shear the sheep. Some of them walk over the mountain, and the others make use of their own horses. I am not able to say how much more labour is done by tenants on the estate. This is done probably to show that farming is a profitable undertaking with no reduction in the present rents, if labour can be got after this fashion. The landlords, at or least the agents, are in a position to get the tenant to commit suicide in some sense. They can get them to do any work for their landlords as well as for themselves, free of charge. If they refuse, they have to bear the consequences. The tenants of Col. Wynne Finch are in the habit of carting all the coals for Voelas Hall, but nobody carts for them unless they pay for the cartage. It is the same with every other labour."

See 22,766.

Lord Kenyon.

15,482. There are some questions handed in by Mr. Vincent. The first one is, "Then I "understood your first grievance to be that you "wrote letters to the paper, and somebody "said they were not true." Is that your first grievance?—That was the statement to show that tenant farmers are afraid of coming forward, because they are forced to keep back.

13,483. That is your answer to that question. Is that your first grievance, "That you wrote "letters to the paper, and somebody said they "were not true"?—Quite so.

15,484. Secondly, "Why do you bring for-"ward all these grievances?"—Because I was asked to do so by tenants.

15,485. The third question is, "Do you pre-"tend that the people who have left their "holdings need be afraid of Lord Penrhyn "or anybody else?"—That I cannot answer; but I know that they are afraid.

15,486. The people who have left their holdings, he says?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,487. Have repairs been done upon the buildings that you complain of?—In the first instance there were no repairs.

15,488. You speak of the moon and the stars shining through the roof?—That is the case in Bryn Eithin; that is another one.

15,489. Have the repairs been done there lately?—Yes, since the time the new tenant came.

15,490. I should like to know something about the allegation that Henry Williams was asked for a loan of 200*l.* Is Henry Williams, of Vron ddu, able to come forward himself upon that point; it is a serious charge?—That I do not know. All that I know is, it is reported, and it has been said by the clergyman of the district.

15,491. You only know it by report?—By the clergyman.

15,492. It is a very serious charge against the estate. Is Mr. Henry Williams, of Vron ddu, a clergyman?—No.

15,493. You do not know of your own knowledge?—Well, I cannot say positively about this; but I can say positively about other things.

Lord Kenyon.

15,494. You said you would give the name of the sub-agent at the end of your evidence. I do not think you have given it?—Williams.

15,495. What is his Christian name?—E. J Williams.

15,496. Where does he live?—Rhydlanfair; it is stated in the paper.

15,497. Rhydlanfair, where? — Rhydlanfair, half way between Bettws-y-coed and Pentre'r-foelas.

Sir John Llewellyn.

15,498. Would this sub-agent have the power to give a notice to quit, and afterwards put a tenant back in his farm?—That I cannot say. All I know is that he had notice to quit.

15,499. Then do you also know that he did pay two years' rent in advance?—It was said so.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,500. You mentioned just now that you wrote letters to the "Baner"?—Yes.

* The witness afterwards notified to the Secretary that he was under a misapprehension when he stated that Henry Williams had had to pay "two years' rent in advance." He should have said "two rents," those rents being paid half-yearly.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

15,501. And then some people went round your neighbourhood to get signatures to a letter to contradict that. Was that so?—It was in another neighbourhood, not where I live now.

Lord Kenyon.

15,502. In Yspytty?—Yspytty and Penmachno.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,503. Among those names, did I understand that there were two men who gave us evidence yesterday; you mentioned somebody of Dylasau?—That man is dead.

15,504. It was not anyone who gave evidence yesterday?—No.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,505. You stated that you gave this evidence in these five cases upon report—upon what you had heard said; you did not say that you had direct personal knowledge of the facts?—I have of several of them.

15,506. Of which of them?—I have of Bryn Eithin.

15,507. What is the name of the person?—Robert Roberts. He has left; he is at another place.

15,508. In how many of these cases have you personal knowledge?—All but that one you refer to of Henry Williams.

Sir John Llewelyn.

In his evidence in chief he says he does not know; that it is common knowledge, I think, he says.

Witness.

Yes; it is specified in my paper.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,509. What do you mean by knowing of your own knowledge; do you mean you have talked, for instance, to Griffith Pritchard, and that you have heard from him direct from his own lips exactly what you have stated?—No; it is like this. It is similar to the case I pointed out in the letters to the "Baner"; I was absolutely writing the truth; but they denied, and they knew that it was true.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,510. Mr. Seebohm has not read the letters in the "Baner," so that is not quite enough, is it?—What I mean is this. Perhaps, though it is true, they will say otherwise.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,511. What I want to get at is, whether this evidence you have given here to-day is evidence which we ought to place any reliance upon. In such cases as this, where a man himself comes forward and makes a charge we can question him, and try to get at whether there is another side of the question; but if you simply state facts for another person, who himself cannot or will not come forward, we have not that opportunity, and, therefore, we only put on our record a one-sided statement, it may be, of the case?—Well, let us go one by one with them, and then I will be able to verify what I have said. Just commence with the first one, and then go to the second, and so on.

15,512. I do not want to go over all this individually with you, but I want to know whether you have sufficient personal knowledge of each one of these cases to warrant us in putting it upon our record as a fair statement of facts, without the person himself coming to give us the facts, and without our being able to ask him any questions?—I can assure you I have as far as I have gone.

15,513. It is perfectly possible that you may have stated the truth, without stating the whole truth; there may be other facts which you do not know?—I believe I have been very chary with it—not saying too much.

15,514. Mr. Williams is still living in this neighbourhood?—Henry Williams?

15,515. The sub-agent?—Yes, he is still alive.

15,516. Is he still the sub-agent?—He is still the sub-agent.

Lord Kenyon.

15,517. Two or three further questions have been handed up. One by Mr. Vincent, "Have "you not had an action for libel brought "against you?"—Yes.

15,518. With what result?—Well, I lost; but all I said was this,—It was a historical tale that I wrote——

15,519. That is quite enough. Then a question by Colonel West, "Are you prepared to state "about the loan of 200*l.* to Mr. Elias J. Wil- "liams outside this Court?"—That I could not say—no.

15,520. No?—No; I stated that at first as far as I could say.

Professor Rhŷs.

He means to say he said it was only common talk.

Lord Kenyon.

15,521. I will ask that question again, because I did not quite clearly understand your answer. "Are you prepared to state about the loan of "200*l.* to Mr. Elias J. Williams outside this "Court?" Are you prepared to say outside this Court what you have stated inside?—I stated plainly that I could not stand to it—that I heard it from the clergyman.

Sir John Llewelyn.

The words in his evidence in chief were these: "As far as I can understand."

Lord Kenyon.

15,522. You only give it as common report; it is nothing of your own knowledge, is it?—Yes. I was not there at the time, you know.

15,523. It is a very serious charge to bring against a man. Then I have some questions sent up by Mr. Owen Wynne, "Is it not a fact "that you have a personal grievance against "Mr. E. J. Williams?"—Not the slightest.

15,524. You have none?—No.

15,525. "Why did you not give your evidence "at Llanrwst yesterday, when he and you were "present, and you were on the list to give "evidence at Llanrwst?"—It was the fault of them not calling me.

15,526. The fault of the secretary?—Yes.

Secretary.

We had so many witnesses at Llanrwst that I consulted certain people, Mr. George Owen among others, and thought it better to have this evidence taken here. I take the whole responsibility of this evidence being given at this sitting.

15,527. You were prepared to give evidence at Llanrwst?—I went down there.

The witness withdrew.

Colonel SACKVILLE WEST recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

15,528. Do you wish to say anything upon the evidence of the last witness?—I am rather taken aback by this evidence; of course I had no means of knowing what it would be. Mr. Williams, who knows more about many of these things then I do, is not present, or he could answer very much more fully than I can; but I will do my best, as far as my knowledge goes, to answer the various cases he has mentioned. I leave Mr Williams to answer afterwards for himself. The first allegation he brings is about Griffith Pritchard, of Talar-y-gerwin, and that appears to be principally about the state of the buildings. I do not suppose the Commissioners will wish me to go into the matter—whether the buildings are in good repair or not. It is a matter of time to put all buildings in repair, and some tenants have to wait for some time before I can do so on so large an estate. As to Mr. Griffith Pritchard of Talar-y-gerwin, his buildings are in a bad state, but probably will soon be put in a better repair.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,529. May I ask here if you go over your estates and do the repairs to building in turn, as fast as you can?—Yes, every year. On this particular portion of the estate there has been from 800*l.* to 1000*l.* spent on buildings every year for many years.

15,530. And you go on all through the estate?—We go on from one to another; some tenants are left for a long time, perhaps, before they are reached. Then, he mentioned that Griffith Pritchard, of Talar-y gerwin refused to sign the new agreement as to the tithe. There was no pressure whatever put upon any tenant. In the year 1886, when Lord Penrhyn took upon himself the payment of the tithe, there was no pressure to sign; the tenants were all asked to sign and with hardly an exception on the estate they all signed; indeed, I think everyone signed. I am not sure whether Griffith Pritchard has signed the agreement, but there was no pressure put upon him to enter into the new arrangement, which was a very favourable one to the tenants.

Of course, under the new law, the landlord would have to pay the tithe and the tenant would have had to pay the landlord if he had not entered into the agreement. These agreements were made in 1886, before the Tithe Act, and a portion of the tithe was added to the rent, but at a figure very much below the value of the tithe. No pressure whatever was put upon Griffith Pritchard, and he paid his rent every time without saying one word to me, and the tithe was included in it. Then, as to William Hughes and his sister, of Pen-y-bont, the grievance appears to be as to the bad state of the buildings. When the father of the tenants went into the farm—(he went there before my time, or I may have been there while he was a tenant, I will not be certain as to that)—the whole of the buildings were put in exceedingly good repair: new buildings were made completely. I am sorry to say they were very badly kept and were left by the tenants in an extreme state of dilapidation, insomuch that a very large sum has been spent and is still being spent upon putting in repair the buildings and the fences in consequence of the state in which they were left by the last tenant. They got very considerably in arrear of rent, and it was quite impossible that they could go on. They left the farm, and it was let to a new tenant from the neighbourhood of Tremadoc, who took over the whole of the stock at a valuation—a proper valuation I believe by valuers. There was no difficulty whatever made about it; they entered into the farm and they were perfectly satisfied with what they got for their stock.

15,531. Were any of those valuers appointed by the incoming tenant?—Yes, I believe so.

15,532. Because the witness Pierce hinted that the tenant was hoodwinked?—I do not understand what he means. He said the new tenant was hoodwinked.

15,533. Yes?—How that could be, I do not understand. If he was hoodwinked I suppose he means that he paid too much for the stock.

15,534. He said the new tenant was hoodwinked, but the new tenant had his own valuers?

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

—The new tenant had his own valuers or valued himself, I do not know which; but he paid for the whole stock, the whole of the sheep, that is to say, on the farm, and whatever else there was—not for the cattle, he only paid for the sheep. The buildings were left, as I say, in a very bad state, and a very large sum indeed is now being spent on the buildings and the fences, without any interest being charged for the same. Then, as to Robert Roberts, of Bryn Eithin, he left entirely of his own accord, and I never heard that he left on account of his having incurred the displeasure of the local agent. That I cannot answer for, because the notice was sent to me; he left and he never mentioned one word of grievance against the local agent when he left. With regard to the next case that he quotes, that of Henry Williams, of Vron ddu, that is the case of the loan. I will not say anything about that after what we have heard.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,535. Can you say anything about two years' payment in advance; could that possibly have happened without your knowing it?—No; it could not possibly be. It is totally untrue as to the payment in advance. I never asked such a thing, nor should I be likely to ask such a thing on this estate.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,536. If you had doubts about a tenant, I suppose rather than that you would have some security?—Yes. He certainly did not pay two years in advance. I have no recollection of his paying anything in advance.

15,537. Do you sometimes have sureties?—Only in, I think, one or two cases in all my experience have I had regular sureties. Then, the next grievance was about John Jones, of Bryn ddraenen Eidda, who, it was said got no compensation for land which was taken from him. I found two farms adjoining one another which were very unequally rented, and the boundaries of which were very bad. I re-arranged the boundaries and re-adjusted the rents according to what I believed to be the actual value then of the farms, after the re-adjustment of the boundaries, and the consequence was, although one farm possibly was a very little reduced, the other perhaps was a little raised; but there was no change whatever made in the total rents of the two farms. It was simply a re-adjustment of boundaries.

15,538. But you see, in that case you might hear of a grievance on the part of the one whose rent was raised, and you would hear nothing of the other man having a reduction?—No; I should hear nothing of that.

15,539. But you see there is a possibility of the other man saying that his rent was raised?—Yes, but he assented to the valuation. The witness Pierce does not say it was raised; all he says is that the best fields were taken away without any reduction in the rent.

15,540. Well, it comes to the same thing?—But it was a matter of arrangement to suit both parties really, and I paid for the cost of the fences which had to be erected. I do not understand at all what he means when he says that "those who instruct the valuers have no kind "feeling towards several neighbours." I have nothing to say about that, because I do not understand it. I think that is all I need go into as regards his grievances. The grievance that he talks about as to the Yspytty and Penmachno farms as to their helping at Dyffryn Mymbyr I prefer not going into at all, because I do not understand it. It is a matter of arrangement in the farms that the people help one another at the sheep-shearing times and other times, as we have heard before.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Ellis Pierce recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

15,541. Have you any thing further to say?—Only that I know about that tithe business. I was going over to Penmachno at that time when a certain person came and told me plainly in the house that he was to sign to pay the tithe with the rent, or else his farm would be let to another.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Secretary.

I recollect now that I did specially give notice to Mr. George Owen yesterday that this witness would be taken here, and not at Llanwrst, owing to the very large number of witnesses to be taken yesterday.

Mr. George Owen.

Yes, that is quite correct.

Mr. Thomas Williams called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

15,542. You are a tenant farmer?—No, I am not farming now.

15,543. What is your profession?—I am a retired farmer.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

The following statement of the witness was read by the interpreter:

"Evidence of Mr. Thomas Williams, Mr. Ellis Williams, and Mr. Robert Williams, relating to the parish of Dolwyddelen. A portion of the Gwydir estate, in the above parish. Acreage, 14,456 acres.

See 15,628.

Occupation.—Farms let from year to year. Tenancy terminates on 30th of November. No farm held on lease to our knowledge. No demand for leases. The tenants are not changed now. We do not know of any instance of a tenant receiving notices or corresponding compensation when a portion of his land was taken from him for planting trees, building, &c., and of no example of a change in the rent when part of the land is taken for opening a quarry. A few are slightly compensated, others receive no compensation.

The land is held under agreements, and generally the farmers do not receive a copy of such agreements.

The rent is fixed at a gross sum, and not at so much per acre, and consequently the rents may be very uneven. The rents of smaller buildings are higher as compared with those of large farms. There is no spot in the parish called a common, although it is hilly; and the farms are taken by private treaty. An out-going tenant has permission to name an in-coming tenant, if everything is satisfactory.

No rent is fixed by arbitration, but by re-valuation of valuers appointed by the estate. This was done twice during the last 50 years, with a general rise in the rent. Abatements of 15 to 20 per cent. have been made during depressed times for 27 years, during the 50 years referred to, but no general reduction in rent was made.

See 15,555, 15,630.

Information of a proposed abatement is conveyed a fortnight beforehand at the foot of the notice sent to state the place and day the rent will be received.

We are able through the kindness of the family who own the Gwydir Estate towards their tenants in times of depression to give the following table to show the "good times" and the "bad times" with regard to the prices of cattle during the last 50 years:—

TABLE.

Bad Times.	Good Times.
From 1833 to 1853.	From 1854 to 1876.
„ 1877 „ 1882.	„ 1883 „ 1885.
„ 1886 „ 1889.	„ 1890 „ 1891.
„ 1892 „ 1893.

The rent is not asked for when it falls due, but within two or three months afterwards. The preferential claim acts injurously on other creditors. Tithes, chief rents, and the income tax, are paid by the landlords, and the local rates by the tenants. The only increase in the rates made lately was in the case of the water rate. It is paid by farmers generally, although they do not obtain any direct benefit from it, and they pay the highest sums.

The size of farms vary from 6 to 3,000 acres, and there are some instances of consolidation of holdings on uplands, which, in effect, lessen the produce, decrease the employment of labour, and reduce the population.

Cultivation.—Proper attention is not paid to fences, walls, and ditches. Five per cent. is paid to the owner for wire fences, which are extremely useful to farmers. Land is going out of cultivation, and is of less value. Not a single important change has taken place during the last 50 years in the way of farming. All the buildings are now made by the owner, and fences, posts, &c., are readily obtained, and they have only to be conveyed and put in their places. Very few improvements now are effected by the tenants, and we do not know of anyone who has asked for a written consent to make special improvements, mentioned in the Agricultural Holdings Acts (1875 and 1883).

The agreement shows the circumstances between the coming and going of tenants. There are instances of tenants leaving without compensation for improvements and whether compensation was given for general and not for specific improvements, we do not know. The tenants have no right to hand over their interests in their tenancy to other tenants; but there are instances of permission being given. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act the landowner is not subject to it, and the Act is not satisfactory, because of its permissive principle.

Game Preserving.—There is no cause to complain of the game, and as far as we know, the keepers and the farmers have the best friendly feelings now, and all those who choose to take advantage of the Ground Game Act (1880), please themselves.

Agricultural Education.— Very little attention is paid to agricultural education, which is a great loss to farmers and to agriculture, and what is worse, the "fathers in agriculture" are opposed to education and experiments of any kind, and they oppose their own sons' ambitions in that direction, if such education and experiments suggest themselves to an occasional farmer's son. We do, in spite of this, invite more attention to be paid to agricultural education, and that one of the colleges should have authority to grant certificates in agricultural examinations, whereby capability and merit should have the first offer for a farm, for the benefit of the landlord, the tenant, and of the country. If education is beneficial for different trades, preaching, &c., why not beneficial for the art of farming land, keeping cattle, sheep, &c., inasmuch as it may be said the brain creates each one of them. Some instruction was given this year in dairy work and butter-making.

Co-operation.—The only co-operation existing among farmers now is for thrashing and shearing. We do not know of anyone here insuring their interests of whatever nature, with the exception of the owner insuring the buildings. We have no rule for engaging labourers, and very few of the farmers, comparatively speaking, contribute towards benefit societies, life insurance societies, &c.

The General Condition of the farming population.—There are only two farms half freehold in this parish, and we have no tenant here who has bought his holding. The tenants, their wives, sons, and daughters, take part in the work of the farms, and the children do not receive wages for their labour, only food and clothes, and the present rents would be impossible if wages were paid for the labour of the children. Many of the sons work harder than the labourers, and are obliged to attend to some duty after the workmen or labourers have finished their day's work, during the harvest, &c. Most of the servants are young and inexperienced men. The farmer derives very little comfort, less than the labourers under certain considerations, owing to his over-anxiety for his circumstances and his obligations. Many farmers have left the neighbourhood during the last 50 years, some to America, and others to the chief towns. Diaries and farming accounts are very imperfectly kept. The commencement and the end of the depression (with the exception of the end of the present depression) are given elsewhere.

Causes of the depression.—1. Imports; foreign goods, beef, mutton, &c., and it is to be feared these are sold at the same price as, and in the name of home meat.

2. Defective cultivation of land so as properly to produce the crops, rather than use it as grazing land.

3. Strikes, differences between capital and labour, which compel the working class to live on less food, clothes, &c., and, as a rule, money does not remain with the working class, because they live up to their wage, 'byw ati,' as is said.

The abolishing of duty on foreign corn affected the farmers on low lands, and the result is the low price of corn. They left the land in order to keep cows and sheep, and now foreign countries send large supplies of cattle, sheep, wool, &c., from land unrented (for the most part), and so much of this goes on, that the chief trade of the farmers of the British Islands has been blocked up, and especially Wales, because the farming of cows and sheep is the backbone of the produce of the country, so that the brunt of the present depression falls most on upland farmers.

Remedies.—1. The chief remedies for increasing profit from the land, is to farm it well, but somehow not many do that, in consequence of insecurity of tenure, and want of capital. Some of the heavy burdens which are constantly borne by farmers should be lightened, e.g., rates, rent, tithe, &c., with a view to improve agriculture; and we do not believe it fair to rate only the house, garden, and buildings of the farmer.

2. To start or organise some scheme for labelling foreign goods, so that they should not be sold to British subjects in the name of home goods. This ought to be done at once.

3. To reform the law of primogeniture, by making it obligatory on every heir to give 20 per cent. (more or less) of the rents yearly, for repairing and building on their estates.

4. Giving more opportunities for obtaining agricultural education in—

"(a.) Cultivating different kinds of lands, and to supply the proper kind of manure to the peculiar nature of the soil.

(b.) Breeding cattle and sheep.

(c.) Dairy-work, and making butter and cheese.

General relations between landlord and tenant.—The relation between landlord and tenant is perfectly friendly as long as the latter can meet the demands of the landlord, and the occasion when it shows itself most, is when halfway through the eating of the rent dinner.

We ought to have stated that labourers' wages have risen more than half what they were 50 years ago.

We do not approve of fair trade, but fair rent, security of tenure, and payment for improvements, and this is the best remedy, in our opinion, for agriculture and the country generally."

(Signed) Thomas Williams,
Pistyll Gwyn, Dolwyddelen
Ellis Williams,
Bertheos, Dolwyddelen.
Robert Williams,
Tan y Castell, Dolwyddelen.

Dolwyddelen,
Septr. 16, 1893."

15,544. Do you wish to give evidence for all those three gentlemen, or will they all three give evidence?—I should like to mention this. The farmers of Dolwyddelen had a meeting, and they asked us to come over here just to put that before you; that paper was prepared for all three.

15,545. You, I understand, represent the three, and the farmers of Dolwyddelen generally?—The other two are here if you like to call them.

Sir John Llewelyn.

14,546. It is a new suggestion and one that I am very much obliged for and shall very carefully think over—your suggestion under the head of "Agricultural Education" that "one of "the colleges should have authority to grant "certificates for agricultural examinations, "whereby capability and merit should have "the first offer for a farm." That is a new suggestion, and this is, I think, the first time that the Commissioners have heard of it. The question I was going to ask arising out of it was, whether young farmers of your neighbourhood go to college?—No, not any of them.

Lord Kenyon.

15,547. Would they attend the college at Bangor for instance if there were anything of that sort?—I cannot say whether they would or not, but we thought it would be a good thing if they did. The thing is to have a practical knowledge of farming.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,548. Is not the practical knowledge better than the theoretical knowledge?—Well, I should think so.

Professor Rhŷs.

14,549. You want both?—The two would be very good.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,550. Is there any inequality between the rents of the farms you have been referring to?—I cannot say they are the same according to the land; some are higher than others.

15,551. Some are too high?—Yes, I should say some are too high.

15,552. Have they been raised during the last 50 years?—Yes, I have heard there have been two—only one I remember. There has been one valuation in our parish.

15,553. Has there been any reduction?—No. I do not know about that.

15,554. Any abatement?—Oh, yes, there has been abatement. That is stated in the paper.

15,555. How much per cent., do you know?—Well, it is 20 now I think. I do not know exactly what time it commenced. I am not paying rent myself, but perhaps Mr. Curr can say.

15,556. Is there any common land in your parish?—No, I do not know of any.

Professor Rhŷs.

See 15,638, 15,639.

15,557. Do you know of any houses that have been taken which were built for a charitable purpose?—Well, indeed I am rather dark about that, but I know the parish had some houses and they do not have them now.

15,558. What is the history of that, do you know?—The history is this. When the parish kept their own paupers they built a row of houses at the top of the village.

15,559. Which village was that?—Dolwyddelen. I do not answer for any other place, you will understand.

15,560. I do not know anything about it, but the question has been put into my hand?—Yes. Those houses were built to accommodate the paupers and to save paying rent for other houses, and the paupers have been there years and years. Now those houses, I think, are under lease to the owners of Bwlch Quarry—I cannot be certain, but I think that the owners of the quarry that we call Bwlch Quarry have a lease of those houses, whatever the parish lost by them.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

15,561. How did they get the control over them—how did they get the power over them—who gave them that power?—Through the consent of the estate, I suppose—no doubt about that.

15,562. Who gave them the lease?—Nobody had authority to give a lease—only the estate.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,563. The churchwardens?—No, the churchwardens had nothing to do with it.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,564. Who built those houses do you think?—The parish built the houses.

15,565. Not the estate?—No, not the estate.

15,566. What I want to know is, how the estate came to give the lease?—Because there was not a lease on them, they were on trust; the parish never had a lease; they built houses on trust; we call it "on word of mouth" ("ar air").

15,567. On the word of the landlord or the agent?—Well, the late Lord Willoughby.

15,568. They were built without any lease?—Yes, no lease at all.

15,569. And now they are under lease—they are leased to the Bwlch Quarry you say?—So I say.

15,570. What are they used for now?—Oh, they let them to tenants.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,571. Do you not think that they were under the overseers and churchwardens?—Now?

15,572. In old times?—Yes, the overseer arranged everything and looked after everything in those days.

15,573. And do you not think that the churchwardens and overseers gave the lease?—No, I do not. I know that they did not give the lease

15,574. You spoke about fair rents. What do you mean by fair rents?—To bring them down.

15,575. But our difficulty is this. We have got this land hunger, and I suppose that if the farms were put up to public tender the rents would be very much larger?—Oh, I do not know about that. I know the condition of most of the tenants.

15,576. When a farm is to let we are told that there is great competition for it?—It is so, certainly.

Lord Kenyon.

15,577. The market value of the holding is something greater than a fair rent?—Yes.

15,578. What do you mean by fair rent?—What the farmer can pay for so as to have a little for himself and his family. I should like every farmer to have an interest on his stock too, because if he has money he can have interest on his money.

15,579. On his capital, you mean?—Interest on his capital.

15,580. Such a rent as would enable a farmer to have, in the first place, interest on his capital, and, secondly, a living?—Yes, a living in the place, because I consider that every farmer in the parish I represent is doing worth his living.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

15,581. Have you any suggestion to make as to how a fair rent should be got at?—No, I have not, unless they would allow two valuers, one for each side—one for the tenant and one for the landlord.

15,582. It had better be at the beginning of the tenancy?—No, it would do good now as well.

15,583. Then for how long would that rent last?—Well, I do not know how long it would last. In our parish of Dolwyddelen I have known the rents to remain the same a very long time.

15,584. If good times came you would have the rent raised?—No, I do not think I would like that. I would consider the market, the high prices and the low prices, the same as it is now, and then put the rent according to just the middle of the market.

15,585. Then you would have to vary from year to year?—No, I do not mean that.

15,586. Every five years?—No, I cannot state any definite number of years. The rent of a farm should be such that in the good times they can put a little by to meet the bad times.

15,587. And you would keep it pretty much always the same?—Yes, keep it the same.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,588. I should like to ask one other question with regard to these houses. Did the parish pay any rent for them when they were used for paupers? Was any rent paid for them then, do you know?—Yes I think so; some ground rent we call it.

15,589. How long did that last; do you know?—I do not know indeed. It lasted for years and years.

15,590. Do you know at all how much it cost to build those houses?—They were built before I can remember, and I have been here now a long time.

15,591. Are you in favour of a protective duty?—No, not at all.

15,592. You are not?—No.

15,593. Do you suffer from game on your estate?—No; nobody complains about it.

15,594. You do not complain?—I did not hear anybody complain. I only answer for our parish, for what I hear.

15,595. Are you acquainted with the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Well, yes, a little.

15,596. Have you studied it?—No.

15,597. You cannot say, then, whether you think it would answer your own circumstances or not, or help in any way?—No, I cannot go into that at all.

15,598. You have not much knowledge of it?—No, I did not take much notice of it.

15,599. Do you remember 1868 and 1869; I suppose you do?—Oh, yes, well.

15,600. Were there any tenants turned out after the election there, or just before the election?—Yes, after the election.

15,601. Some were turned out?—Yes.

15,602. What sort of tenants were they?—Oh, good tenants.

15,603. Churchmen?—No, Nonconformists.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

15,604. What were the tenants that succeeded them; were they Nonconformists too?—Well, I daresay they were, some of them; I forget now what they were.

15,605. How many were turned out, do you know?—No, I cannot go into particulars like that.

15,606. Half a dozen?—I do not know that there were more than half a dozen turned at once away. I did not count them.

15,607. We will say in 1869?—Yes, 1869 I think was the time they were turned out.

15,609. Several?—Will you kindly count them as I name them? Elias Owen, Tan y Castell; Richard Evans, Penamnan; John Williams, Llan; John Thomas, Pen. y groes, William Williams, Fedw; and the Reverend Eli Evans, Ty isaf. Eli Evans had a warning, but he would not go.

15,609. Did he have a rise in his rent?—I cannot tell you. I should like to mention this. The Willoughby Estate at that time was under trustees to my knowledge.

15,610. Not in the control of the present owner?—Oh, no, nor of his mother either. After Lady Willoughby, the mother of the present owner, came into possession of the place she settled everything with Eli Evans, and everything was put right. I do not mean after he became owner of the estate, but after his mother became owner of the estate.

15,611. Have you finished your instances. You have given five who were evicted?—Well, I cannot remember more now so as to be sure of it.

15,612. I do not want you to say anything that you are not sure of?—Those five that I have mentioned I think belonged to the Liberals at that time. There was some money collected, and they all had that money to help them in their trouble. There was a Liberal fund.

15,613. A fund got up by Liberal politicians and their friends?—Yes, drawn up by Liberal politicians, and those five were assisted—I do not say Eli Evans; but the five had money from that fund.

15,614. They had assistance from that fund?—Yes, from that fund.

15,615. Then I suppose the case created a good deal of excitement at the time?—Oh, it made such a row in Dolwyddelen all over the place.

15,616. Was it written about?—Yes, written about in every paper.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,617. Was that 24 years ago—1869?—Well, I thing that election was in 1868. I think it was in March, and the notices to quit came in May.

15,618. Do you know of any similar instances since the Ballot Act came into force?—No, I do not know anything—I never heard anything about it. I do not recollect that I heard of any one.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,619. Then you are not afraid of that now?—No, I am not afraid of it whatever, and there is nothing on the estate now against it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ELLIS WILLIAMS called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

15,620. You are Ellis Williams of Bertheos?—Yes.

15,621. You have heard the evidence of Mr. William Thomas Williams?—Yes, I have heard the evidence of Mr. Williams and I agree with it.

15,622. And have you anything further you wish to say?—No, nothing further. Everything I thought of saying was written down.

15,623. Do you mean in that paper you have there? Is it a copy of this which I have here?—Yes, in the paper. It is a copy of the same evidence.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

15,624. We thank you very much for coming here, and we may take your evidence as being the same as that of Mr. Thomas Williams.

Mr. ROBERT WILLIAMS called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

15,625. You are Mr. Robert Williams?—Yes.

15,626. And do you corroborate the evidence you have heard of Mr. Thomas Williams?—Yes, I agree with the whole of it.

15,627. And I think you have something further you wish to add yourself, have you not?—Yes.

The interpreter read the following statement of the witness.

"A summary of the evidence of R. Williams, Tancastell, Dolwyddelen.

"The rent and buildings.

"In the year 1867 I received the tenancy of Ty ucha'r ffordd after my late father. The rent at that time was 19*l.*

"In the year 1869 the rent was raised to 25*l.*, besides taking away from me a dwelling-house in connexion with the farm, from which I received 3*l.* 10*s.* rent, and a strip of land was taken away without making any change in the rent, which had been raised to 28*l.* 10*s.*

"All the buildings were put up by my father, which had by this time become dilapidated, and although we made several requests to have them repaired, nothing was done.

"In the year 1882, the agent asked me to take another farm, Tanycastell, in connexion with mine (namely, the late Elias Owen's farm, relating to which, evidence was given by Mr. Owen Owens before the Commission at Llanrwst), and if I only took the two consolidated farms, I should have all necessary buildings, but nothing but promises were received during the last 11 years.

"It was not without much hesitation that I consented to take Tanycastell owing to its unreasonable rent, which was raised from 20*l.* to 40*l.* 10*s.* in the year 1869, and as the estate did not promise to repair the buildings of my old home, I consented to take the two, thinking I should have suitable buildings to carry on the business of the farm, and hoping I should have a reduction, as the rent had been raised under exceptional circumstances, for other persons, and not for us."

I also wish to corroborate the evidence of Owen Owens, as given at Llanrwst yesterday, and as reported in the "Liverpool Courier" for to-day.

See 14,3 14,3

Lord Kenyon—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. HENRY CURR re alled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

15,628. I understand you want to make some statement with regard to some evidence which has been given by the tenants?—Yes. On one or two points I think the tenants made mistakes. First, with regard to planting, we have always paid compensation for land taken for planting. With regard to quarrying, the lessees are bound to settle with the tenant for all damage which may be caused to his land.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

15,629. You have had no examples and instances of that?—No.

15,630. The tenant says he does not know of any?—Then there was mentioned the abatement of 5 per cent. Now for six years 20 per cent. has been paid; for two years 15 per cent. paid, and for two years 10 per cent.

15,631. This has all been given before?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,632. I think his Welsh evidence was correct on that. He said from 1*s.* to 4*s.* in the pound?—Yes; but we have never paid 5 per cent.; never less than 10, and only two years 10.

Lord Kenyon.

15,633. A reduction?—An abatement.

15,634. The abatement was 2*s.*?—For two years we paid 10 per cent., for six years 20 per cent., and two years 15 per cent. Then there was a complaint about the preference to the proprietor.

Professor Rhŷs.

16,635. He said 1*s.* to 4*s.* in the pound?—From 1*s.* to 4*s.*

15,636. From 2*s.* to 4*s.* would be right?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

15,637. What do you say, then, as to the complaints about the preference to the proprietors?—I would point out if that preference was done away with, we would ask, as we do in Scotland, for beforehand rents or security for payment of the rent. This would not be to the advantage of the tenant, although it might be some advantage to the tradesmen dealing with the tenant.

15,638. That is a matter of opinion?—Quite so; but that would be my view. Then, in no case has anyone claimed compensation for improvements that has not received them in my time within the last 20 years. In the statements they referred to tithe. All tithe is now paid by Lord Ancaster, and no part is charged against the tenant. With regard to the parish-houses, I was told when I came to the estate that the parish-houses belonged to the estate—were built by the estate. That may be or may not be, but they are not let on lease with the Bwlch Quarry, but are let from year to year. They are let at 3*l.* a year.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,639. It was admitted that rent was paid by the parish for them, and that they were used for paupers?—They have not been required for paupers for many years; but were let from year to year at 3*l.* a year.

Lord Kenyon.

15,640. I take it Lord Ancaster is satisfied as to these cottages?—Yes. Then, with regard to Tan-y-Castell, all I can say is that the previous tenant did very well in the place; and this man took the farm of Tan-y-Castell at the same rent. Probably we have not been able to make his buildings satisfactory to him, but gradually we have been going over the whole of the estate. He has got something done for him, and, no doubt, he will get more. I think those are all the points.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,641. About the evictions, what do you say?—With regard to the evictions I can say this: that 1869 was the year the valuation of the estate was made; and I suspect it was supposed in some of those cases the tenants were evicted from political motives, when really they had not been able to arrange with regard to rent. Of course, it was before my day, but Mr. Warren assured me no case of eviction had taken place for political opinions.

15,642. You say that?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,643. In fact the Liberals, who happened to be turned out then, may have been five out of a considerable number?—No, I do not say that. I am not aware that there may not have been more changes than have been mentioned.

Lord Kenyon.

15,644. All you say is, there have been no evictions from political motives?—No.

15,645. Your tenants stated there were?—Yes, Lord Ancaster's tenants stated so.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,646. I understood one of them to say there were five turned out at the time?—Yes.

15,647. You are not aware that there were more?—No, and I do not believe there were any.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,648. There were no Conservatives turned out to your knowledge?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

15,649. Do I understand you to say that prepayment of rent is required in Scotland now at times?—In all cases.

15,650. Is that because there was no preferential claim?—What was called the right or law of hypothec has been done away with.

15,651. No preferential claim can be made in Scotland?—Yes.

15,652. That is the case?—Yes.

15,653. I ask for information?—Yes, that is right.

15,654. That is a very interesting piece of information?—It is necessary, because the present proprietor has no security for his rent.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,655. Leases are much more common in Scotland?—Almost universal.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,656. Nineteen years' leases, are they not, usually?—I may mention that in recent years there has been a break of five years. Nineteen years' leases are granted of arable lands and 11 years of sheep farms, with power to either party to put an end to the lease at the end of any period of five years by giving notice; that is because these bad times may improve or get worse.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,657. Notice on either side?—On either side.

15,658. It is from five years to five years really?—Really it is so; but still the leases are 19 years for arable farms, and 11 years for sheep farms.

15,659. Would not a lease from five years to five years meet almost the same points as Mr. Bryn Roberts put?—No. The break is really for the benefit of the tenant. In good years the landlord does not give notice to terminate at the end of five years, whereas the tenant can get out of it free in five years if the times are bad.

15,660. What I understood Mr. Bryn Roberts to say was, that if rent was agreed upon between the landlord and tenant, by getting it registered in the county court, they could practically have it enrolled for six or seven years, I forget which it was. Here, by having a lease from five years to five years, you get that same advantage without any magistrate or court?—Lord Ancaster would have been quite willing to grant a lease with breaks during the last 20 years.

15,661. On the whole of your Scotch estates, have you considered that leases from five years to five years worked well?—Yes, on the part of the tenants. I have had no experience there of a break being taken advantage of by the landlord. The old leases are 19 years, and I may say the proprietors have not in any cases given notice. In one or two cases tenants have intimated that they would take advantage of the break—in one or two cases out of 200 tenants.

15,662. I do not quite understand that you answered my question,—that on the whole that system worked well in Scotland?—It does.

15,663. And what would be the reason why it would not work well here?—I have no reason to suppose it would not work well here.

Lord Kenyon.

15,664. Simply it is not the custom of the country?—Simply it is not the custom of the country.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,665. And you think it is not judicious to introduce it here?—In my opinion the tenant is better off here. He is a perpetual holder as a general rule instead of being disturbed, as he might be if a leaseholder; at the end of five years, the rent is re-considered and perhaps there is an increase of rent.

15,666. Do they go on for many generations in the same family?—Oh, yes, for hundreds of years.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,667. They are generally larger farms in Scotland than they are on the average in Wales?—Yes, they are as a general rule.

Lord Kenyon.

15,668. You said in Scotland a preferential claim does not exist. Which do you consider the best for the tenant?—Oh, undoubtedly the preferential, and many of the tenants know that now, and they regret very much that they did not know it before the Act passed. They see the old law benefited them.

15,669. They see that in Scotland?—Yes, in Scotland. It benefits the manure merchant, the blacksmith, and other tradesmen, there is no doubt; but the tenant must find security or pay rent beforehand.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,670. Have those persons who have this long lease for 19 years an abatement?—Oh, yes, they have had the same abatement as the tenants on Lord Ancaster's Welsh property, except the tenants who have had leases within the last few years at reduced rents. They have had no abatements.

Mr. John Blud called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

15,671. You are a market gardener and a dealer, and you wish to give evidence as to the conditions under which you hold a piece of land, cultivated as a market garden; is that so?—Yes.

15,672. Where is it situated?—In the parish of Eirias, near to Colwyn Bay.

15,673. In Denbighshire is it?—Yes.

15,674. Have you some statement to make?—Yes

Lord Kenyon—continued.

15,675. Will you read it?—The piece of land I hold is about seven acres in extent. I rented it from its former owner Mr. Frost, of Min y Don, Old Colwyn. It was then farmed by himself. I took it at Christmas 1890. I took it by special agreement, at a rental of 5*l.* per acre, the landlord to pay all tithes and rates, &c. In the the ag eement, the landlord reserved the right to sell the land at the expiration of six months, but agreed in the event of doing so, to allow me the current half-year's rent, and to take over all crops and fruit trees, and to give me reasonable compensation for unexhausted improvements.

15,676. Have you a copy of that?—No, I have not a copy.

15,677. It was a special agreement?—It was a special agreement.

15,678. Signed?—Yes.

15,679. And stamped?—Yes; and I may here remark that, had I been aware of the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act, that agreement would have been quite unnecessary, but I was ignorant at the time of its provisions. Had I known of it, there would have been no necessity for this special agreement.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,681. For the seven acres?—For the seven acres. But I may here state that there is a very valuable bed of sand adjoining the road from which sand has been taken for the purposes of building up the town of Colwyn Bay, and that no doubt adds very much to its value. The land was fairly good when I took to it and adjacent to the town, but of a light sandy nature. My expenses for working this field, including rent, manure, seeds, horse, and manual labour, but not reckoning my own time, amounted per year to about 15*l.* per acre, or 100*l.* in all. For the years 1891 and 1892, my crops generally were excellent. This year crops are very much a failure owing to the drought. That is especially so with regard to peas and green vegetables. The potatoes are very good. I planted a number of fruit trees, but they have not borne any fruit, but ground fruit, such as strawberries and raspberries, have done well. Last year I gathered strawberries from the third week in June till the third week in August. This year I commenced to gather strawberries the second week in May, or as early as they were being gathered in the South of France. I have the list from Covent Garden every week as a trader, and I take particular notice.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,682. This was a very early year, I suppose, here?—Yes, about six weeks earlier than last year, but there are spots in the district of Colwyn Bay that are very well sheltered and equally as early, in my opinion, as Cornwall or Jersey. After I had held the land for 12 months and found it productive, I wrote inquiring if the land was still on sale at the price named in the agreement, namely, 1,300*l.* but received a reply stating that it would be 1,500*l.*, and that no less would be taken. I naturally came to the conclusion that owing to the money and labour I had spent on the land, the owner wanted 200*l.* more. Last autumn the land was sold to a Mr. Koffler, a Jewish gentleman, who I believe is a land speculator, for nearly 1,500*l.* I cannot speak to the exact amount, but I believe it is over 1,400*l.*, and I have heard that it is very nearly 1,500*l.* This came upon me as a surprise, as I did not get any notice except from Mr. Koffler himself that he intended to purchase the land, but it was sold subject to my agreement, and as I felt I could not put any confidence in the present owner as a landlord, I agreed with him to give up possession at the end of this month; the terms we agreed upon being rent free from Christmas last, and 50*l.* to be paid me for the fruit trees and other improvements. I may here say that I consider having it rent free from last Christmas to the present time equal to a full year's rent, because I have had the opportunity of getting a year's crops, and I have not the winter's expenses. On the whole, I consider that I have been fairly well remunerated for my labour with this field, but of course, by keeping a shop, I have been able to dispose of the produce to the best advantage. But on the other hand my working expenses have been heavy, owing to my having to pay for horse hire, and my general health not having been good. My experience has proved to me very conclusively that there is hardly any limit to what land will produce, provided it is properly cultivated, and especially is this so, in a sheltered district like Colwyn Bay. I could point you to a few gardens belonging to gentlemen in the district which have been taken from the barren hillside and which have been made to blossom and bring forth abundantly. I may state that I have gathered strawberries myself, and I have also seen cherries, very fine fruit, which would this year have taken the top prices in Covent Garden Market, which have been gathered as early as they were sent from the South of France. My opinion is that if you increase by better cultivation production, you at the same time indirectly create a demand for that increased production. That is if you spend, of course, wisely 50*l.* or 100*l.* in the better cultivation of a piece of land, the trade of the country benefits by that amount and you increase to a corresponding degree a demand for that which you produce. I spent money on this field, because I had some security. Farmers generally, I believe, would do the same, providing they had fixity of tenure and security, or compensation for improvements made, but they have no security. Goldsmith tells us that the Swiss peasant is happy round his log fire at night, because he sits down the monarch of a shed, but the Welsh tenant farmer is only a tenant at will; he is not even monarch of a shed, and whether in the hands of a good or a bad landlord, the rich capitalist can buy up his farm, and he must clear off bag and baggage without any compensation.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn

15,683. That is not the case under the present law, is it?—But the present law I believe is not compulsory; it is optional and the landlord can contract himself out of the Act I believe.

Lord Kenyon.

Oh, no, it is clearly compulsory.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,684. The fifth clause distinctly forbids him contracting himself out of the Act. However, I do not want to interrupt you; I am very interested in your statement?—But I understand that he asks for permission for the land to be cultivated as a market garden. I believe so.

Lord Kenyon.

The consent of the landlord is necessarily required for that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,685. For some things—for market gardening?—Yes. Well, I think it shows the necessity of making the people round about acquainted with these different Acts. I once had a conversation with an Irish gentleman and I was astonished with his intimate acquaintance with the different Acts that had been passed for Ireland, and he told me that the father in the district came round when a new Act was passed and explained it to the peasantry clause by clause. I think if we had someone to go round after this Commission, in the same way, when we get a new Act with reference to the land, and to explain it to the people, it would be a very good thing, and it would be of advantage and benefit to all. We spend money on the improvement of our ships and our machinery and on everything except the development of the land and its resources. It seems to me that every barrier which the evil one himself could devise has been devised to prevent money being spent on the better tillage of the ground. What is wanted, too, are Land Courts and a compulsory and generous scheme of land purchase. If the Government would provide for the Welsh farmer facilities for the purchase of his holdings he would at once be inspired by new hopes and would work with greater energy and success. The late Government has freely placed at the disposal of the Irish tenantry money to purchase their holdings on the security of their tenant right. I hope, as the result of this inquiry, they will do the same for Wales. This is very much a socialistic idea—this land-purchase scheme; but still we are all socialists now, I believe, more or less.

Sir John Llewelyn.

15,586. You think what is good for Ireland would be good for Wales?—Yes. Another matter which I wish to call attention to is the unearned increment question or betterment principle. There is land in the Colwyn Bay District the value of which has been increasing ten fold, because an industrial population has grown up around it. I consider it unjust to the community that one man should be able to reap values that have accrued by the labour and industry of many. Such values, I hold, ought to be taxed to the utmost, and where a tenant is disturbed on account of the land being sold for building purposes that tenants should be very liberally compensated for disturbance. This would in some way prevent capitalists, by reason of their money power, being able to buy up and devote to pleasure that which by Providence has been intended to afford sustenance and support to many. Another matter I wish to call your attention to is the deplorable condition, sanitary and otherwise, of the farm holdings in Wales. I am well acquainted with an estate of the Duke of Sutherland's, in Shropshire, and I have often remarked the good buildings and the comfortable homes and the material prosperity of the Duke's tenantry as a whole, especially the cottier farmers, and have marked the contrast to the wretched homesteads in Wales where the houses are many of them unfit for habitation. The buildings for cattle are still more wretched, and all seem to have been built in a hap-hazard way, without any view to comfort or utility. The sewage, which should go to enrich the land, is allowed to find its way to the nearest stream from which the people often get their drinking water. The farmer's roads, too, are bad, in fact everything seems to conspire to discourage and dishearten the tenant farmer. To sum up, I consider the agricultural depression to be nothing more than a want of common justice in our land system, in many cases a want of capital and perhaps sometimes a depression of brains.

15,687. How long have you been in Wales?—Seven years.

15,688. You might have bought your land for 1,300*l.*?—Yes.

15,689. If you had then bought it for 1,300*l.*, now you might have sold it for 1,500*l.*?—Yes. I may say that the present holder has bought it for 10*d.* a yard and he is asking now 3*s.* I do not know whether he will get it.

15,690. People who develop a place like Colwyn Bay get what I think it is fair to call an unearned increment if they earn it—the people who have developed the place?—The people who have developed the place; I agree with you.

15,691. If you had been a freeholder instead of merely a short leaseholder, of seven years or less, you would have been probably one of those people who would have ended in developing Colwyn Bay, and your increment would then have been an earned one?—To a certain extent.

15,692. You would have made the land so much more valuable, but you would have earned the increased value in the land?—But had not the population grown up around it my efforts would not have been the sole cause.

15,693. But the efforts of the people who developed Colwyn Bay would have been successful?—Yes, and I should consider they should each share in the increased taxation.

15,694. You would not call it unearned in the case of the people who develop the place, not only Colwyn Bay, but many other places along the coast?—But I look upon it in this light, that people who have an estate, practically have made no special effort, but the population has grown up around and the land has simply gone up in value, and I think they should pay a proper share of their taxation of that increased value.

15,695. You think it would be a good thing if there was a fund instituted by Government from which you could borrow the money to become your own landlord?—Yes, I think it would be a good thing.

15,696. Not only your own land, personally, but with regard to other occupiers of land in the country?—Yes, I think that is so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

It is a useful Socialistic view. I cannot see that any people would suffer from it, and I can see a great many who would benefit by it.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,697. Supposing, for instance, that the tenant farmers of Wales had been the actual owners of their property before these bad times came, say 20 years ago, upon whom would the burden of the bad times have fallen?—The question is whether the bad times would have arisen if we had had a better cultivation of the land.

15,698. But then we have lost in the prices of corn, and we have lost, too, in the price of animals owing to foreign competition and one thing and another?—Something has been said to-day about giving the agricultural class a better education. As a dealer I can see this, that there is an indisposition on the part of the Welsh tenant farmers to cater to the taste of the English people along the coast. I speak with regard to dairy produce. A great deal of the dairy produce that comes into Colwyn Bay is Danish butter, and it is simply bought because of its uniformity of quality, which is generally good, while the butter from the dairy farms near is not good; it may be from the want of proper dairy accommodation, and it may be from the want of management, and the want of education.

going up while the prices of their produce have not. They would have been really better off. Had they owned land, as Mr. Frost did, along the coast, they would have been ready to sell, I have no doubt, at the increased price of the land.

15,700. And there would have been so many sellers, but not many purchasers?—It must be noticed that the wealth of the country keeps on increasing in a certain way; there are many buyers of the land, and there is always a land hunger among the people to a certain extent; there is plenty of demand for it.

15,701. Let me put another question upon a different point. There are, say, 200,000 tenant farmers in England and Wales, and about six millions of families who are not tenant farmers. To enable all those 200,000 tenant farmers to buy their land, the risk of the transaction would be laid upon the others who are not tenant farmers. Would you not think, looking at it from a Socialistic point of view, that, for instance, the labourer would have just as much right to say, "Lend me money to buy my cottage," and the shopkeeper to say, "Lend me "money to buy my shop." Why is the tenant farmer to be the one who is so specially favoured by Government?—Because the land is a different property. The land has duties as well as rights, I believe. It is a different property to any other kind of property.

15,702. I only want to bring out your views upon the question?—Perhaps it does follow that if the Government lent money to the Irish tenant farmer to purchase his holding on the security of his tenant right that the tenant farmers of England and Wales should have their opportunity. With regard to other property, I do not think it does follow, because every other property is different from land.

15,703. I quite admit that, but then you see we really have been treating Ireland as though they were children; we have treated them as persons who could not make free bargains and all that kind of thing. Supposing we were to treat the Welsh farmers in just the same way, would it be as good for them 50 years hence, as if they had been put upon their own mettle and had to educate themselves, and fight their battles on their own footing, as it were. I think it would be better. For instance, as I have pointed out, you cannot spend money in the cultivation of land without really creating a demand for that which the land produces. The money which is spent upon the better cultivation of the land goes to help and feed every other industry in the country. I think that is mutual all round, is it not?—Yes. Those of us who have read John Stuart Mill and other books know that money well spent does produce itself and labour too, though we cannot go into those questions now.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,704. You think it would be best for them to look after themselves than to have legislation for them?—I do not think so.

15,705. But you said just now that you had not read the Agricultural Holdings Act, and I take it that you are a leader in your neighbourhood?—No.

15,706. I should take it you have been discussing these questions a good many times before, and you admit that you have not read the Agricultural Holdings Act. What about the small farmers round about the country, who do not understand English even—many of them. Do you think that they would know what is in these Acts that concern themselves?—When I said just now that I thought they should be left to look to themselves on the land, I meant that they should be left to themselves, but that they should be given a fair chance of helping themselves. As regards looking after them and educating them in these matters, I think they should be educated.

15,708. But what I am pointing to is not anything like that. Here are people who have agreements, and do not take the trouble to ascertain what is in those agreements. Then when the expiration of their term comes they think they are entitled to something which by their agreement they are not entitled to: then come disappointments and complaints, and so on. How are you to educate them to prevent these things taking place?—I am not here to propound a scheme.

15,709. Well, I should like to have your view, as you seem to me to have considered many of these things before?—I believe it would be very feasible and very easy to educate them as to these different Acts. The reason I have not read the Agricultural Holdings Act is because I have not been directly interested in the land. I have taken a general interest in these questions, but it is a very rare thing for one to read an Act of Parliament right through. Directly I become interested in the land, then I become fully acquainted with the provisions of the Act.

15,710. But you have seen, probably, from the evidence that has already been given, and from what you have heard, that there is a great deal of doubt, and that people are hazy about their obligations and rights?—I believe they are ignorant of many of these things, and that they want educating them.

15,711. How would you suggest they should be educated? You could not bring it under the head of technical education, you know?—We have men appointed by the Government educating the people with regard to bee-keeping and dairying, and horticultural work, and I think they ought to appoint a man to come, say once in 12 months, and inform the people of the provisions of these Acts. I think it would be a very easy matter.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,712. Do you think if all these Acts affecting the agriculturalist had first by law to be translated into Welsh, and then placed in every post office throughout Wales, that that would do something towards taking away this ignorance?—Yes, I think some such scheme as that would answer. At the same time I think these Acts should be made compulsory.

15,713. You are not alluding to the Agricultural Holdings Act, are you?—I believe the tenant has to obtain permission to work his garden

Lord Kenyon.

I suggest you should read it.

Professor Rhŷs.

I do not think you have quite finished your study of it?—There are provisions as to those matters, but that does not, of course, prove that is satisfactory.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. C. H. Darbishire called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 27,646–27,654.

15,714. You are chairman of the Penmaenmawr Local Board, I think?—I am.

15,715. And county councillor for the district, Dwygyfylchi?—I am.

15,716. And county magistrate, quarry owner and manager. What do you wish to speak about?—I wish to speak on behalf of the Penmaenmawr Local Board, with reference to the Crown wastes and commons, of which there are some in the parish of Dwgyfylchi, and over which there is no recognised authority to control the wage of the surface, more especially to preserve and maintain all the public rights over the whole of these common wastes and ffriths, to prevent encroachments, and to regulate the rights of pasture, so that they may be the greatest possible advantage to the general public.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

15,717. Have these Crown lands been parted with in any way, or have there been Enclosure Acts by Act of Parliament or otherwise?—The Crown only has rights over the minerals. The manorial rights have been sold.

15,718. There are rights that have been sold?—The manorial rights have been sold, but that does not interfere with the rights of the public turning on cattle. What was sold was only what the Crown was able to sell. The rights of the public to turn cattle and sheep on still remain. This Crown property is of two kinds, one is what they call the "Ffrith fawr," which is enclosed, and has been enclosed by encroachments. The encroachments were made during the early part of this century, each tenant and each farmer choosing a selected place that suited him to wall round, and as these encroachments gradually grew round what they call the "Ffrith," the squatters eventually combined to fill up the gap by a fence or wall, and so enclosed a large area.

15,719. Are they enclosing the Crown land, or the land over which the people who bought the land had rights?—They encroached on any Crown rights whatever they were, and they encroached on what was public property.

15,720. Which was common?—Which was common, and the tenants and others built the wall round this encroachment, and so enclosed a large piece of ground called the Ffrith fawr.

Professor Rhŷs.

15,721. How long ago?—The early part of this century. The people who originally made the enclosure are since dead, and the representatives have attempted in many ways to enforce their rights, but they have never succeeded thoroughly. But still, there is no recognised authority to maintain the public rights, whatever they are. Indeed, there are encroachments being made at the present time. The late Mr. Sudbury purchased a portion of these manorial rights that have been sold by the Crown, and attempted to prevent an encroachment being made by the tenant of Trwynwlfa, that is within the last few years. The fence was pulled down, but was put up again, and there is no recognised authority to prevent this. Indeed, Mr. Picton, M.P. for Leicester, on one occasion lately put a question in the House to the Secretary to the Treasury, with reference to an encroachment on this very Ffrith fawr. The reply was, that the Crown only dealt with minerals, and had no concern whatever with the public rights over the surface. Now the Penmaenmawr Local Board wish me to put forcibly before this Commission, that it would be very desirable, if it were possible, that some authority should have power. It is just the guarding of these public interests, whether over the common lands, or the footways, or the ways of communication, wherever they exist, that ought to be provided for by some recognised authority. It is hoped, that in the District Councils Bill the power and duty of guarding these public rights will be entrusted to the local authorities, who as representatives of the people are naturally the proper authorities to accept the responsibility of maintaining the public rights, and seeing that they are not lost to the public, or interfered with except for public benefit.

15,722. This question arises from the ancient properties and rights of a monastery or an abbey here, does it not?—No, there is no abbey at Penmaenmawr.

15,723. There was one lately described in the papers as discussed by the Conway people. This is not the same then?—No.

15,724. There are more burning questions than one, of this kind?—I dare say. It is not in our district.

Mr. Seebohm.

15,725. I understand that some time back, it may be hundreds of years back, all the mountains in North Wales belonged to the Crown. Is that generally understood to be so?—I cannot say.

15,726. Then do you understand that now the mountains are almost always the property of individuals, subject to public rights?—No, about us they are not. About us they are the Crown wastes, and the public use them.

15,727. In whom do you suppose the freehold is vested; in the Crown, or in the Lord of the Manor or the owner of the estate?—Indeed I cannot answer that question. I do not know who the freeholder is. The Crown owns the minerals.

15,728. But then I think you said that they parted with everything except the minerals?—I think that what they parted with were only the rights of shooting over it. My father happened to buy it. He gave 680*l.* for the Crown rights over the surface, whatever they were, but those Crown rights did not interfere with the public using the surface freely, either as passing over it wherever they liked, or turning cattle thereon.

15,729. Then the Crown, one would suppose, ought to represent the community?—It ought. Mr. Picton, M.P. for Leicester, asked his question, but could get no assistance from the Crown in any way whatever to prevent these encroachments.

15,730. Did he apply to the Office of Woods and Forests?—He asked a question in the House of the Secretary to the Treasury.

15,731. The difficulty in the matter seems to lie in, who are the persons who are responsible for protecting public rights in these wastes. Of course if the freehold remained in the Crown the Crown would be the authority, one would suppose, which ought to protect the public rights; but if they have parted with their freehold in the mountains to the individual estates in the neighbourhood, they have parted with their power to deal with the question, except through Parliament?—I suppose that is so. They will not do anything.

15,732. We understood from you that you think the whole question should be gone into, and the public rights somehow or other protected by local authority?—By a recognised authority. And in the District Councils Bill it is hoped that some sort of provision will be made for that.

15,733. Do you happen to know the Valley of Aber?—I know it from having been up it.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

15,734. Have you ever heard there was once a great number of tenants in that valley 40 or 50 years ago?—No, I never have done.

15,735. Do you think the little farms high up in the mountains have almost always originated in encroachments?—Yes, certainly, high up.

15,736. And the number has increased during the present century very largely?—Up to a certain date. I forget exactly, but I think it was 1837 there were a great many encroachments, and the Crown gave title on the payment of 5*s.*

15,737. That shows at that time the Crown was the owner of the freehold?—I suppose it does.

15,738. Has there been anything since, do you suppose, to take it out of the hands of the Crown?—I do not know. This is a plan of the ground wastes which would show many encroachments on to it. [Handing plan.]

15,739. Is that Penmaenmawr? — This is Penmaenmawr.

15,740. Which is the Ffrith fawr?—This is the Ffrith fawr.

15,741. The red?—The red.

15,742. It takes the top of the hill?—Yes, that is the enclosed Ffrith. There are all these ffriths as well. [Pointing.]

15,743. You think these originated in encroachments?—Yes, the way in which this was formed by encroachments was this way, going round there. [Pointing.]

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

15,744. Which ultimately the Crown recognised by making them pay, I think you said, some sum?—No, not those particular ones. The Crown gave certain title deeds to other encroachments, but not these particular ones, as far as I know.

15,745. So that they have really their title of 60 years user?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

It is a very important point. I think we shall have to consider the question from the point of view that has been put before us, and I think very properly put before us.

Lord Kenyon.

15,746. Have you made any application to the Office of Woods and Forests?—We have not especially, but Mr. Picton, M.P., did in one particular instance.

15,747. And he could not rouse any particular interest in it?—No interest whatever.

15,748. And I think you said you hoped the District Councils Bill will have some power over it?—We hope so. I believe Mr. Picton, M.P., is going to move an amendment to that effect.

Lord Kenyon.

Thank you very much for your very interesting evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Towyn.

NINETEENTH DAY.

The Assembly Room, Towyn, Merionethshire, 4th October 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Dr. RICHARD THOMAS JONES called and examined.

Chairman.

15,749. Are you a registered medical practitioner and a member of the County Council?—I am.

15,750. What parishes do you wish to speak about?—My evidence relates to five parishes: Llanfair, Llandanwg, Llanbedr, Llandecwyn, and Llanfihangel-y-traethau, comprising an acreage of 31,954 acres.

15,751. Are you well acquainted with the district?—Yes, my Lord.

15,752. Is it mountain land and pasture land for sheep?—Chiefly mountain land and pasture land for sheep and cows, with a small quantity of arable land. The farmers have asked me to attend and give evidence for them, I may say.

15,753. I suppose they are the ordinary sort of farms that we have heard about with sheep runs? Are they the usual sort of farms?—Yes.

15,754. Do you think the sheep runs ought to be divided?—In some cases. The rights of pasture over sheep runs belong to the landlords, and the pasture land is apportioned to the tenants whose farms adjoin the mountain, and is bounded by stone fences. They add to the value and rent of the farms, and are always specified whenever farms are sold. In some instances the sheep run should be divided and apportioned among a larger number of farms.

15,755. Are the majority of the landlords in these districts resident or absentee?—They chiefly reside out of the district, large landlords especially, and the majority of small landlords as well.

15,756. What can you say about the agents?—Some of the agents are thoroughly practical men; some of the agents are not. See 15,839.

15,757. Of course there are yearly tenancies. Are there any agreements that you would like to put in?—I have three which I will hand in, but I have mislaid one. [The witness handed in three agreements.]

Chairman—continued.

15,758. Are there any clauses that you consider oppressive in those agreements?—Yes, the following: the reservation of game by the landlord for himself and his assigns; the clause whereby the tenant has to do all the cartage in connexion with buildings without any remuneration; that no manure, unthreshed corn, or straw is to be taken off the farm, but to be left to the incoming tenant or landlord; six months' notice; the tenant to keep all buildings in good repair.

15,759. Do you consider that oppressive?—Yes, I do.

15,760. What other services are required by the landlord in addition to rent?—To send a horse and cart to do one or two days' cartage, and keeping a dog, and acting as game beaters for two days on Lord Harlech's estate.

15,761. Now, as to acting as game beaters for two days; is that a custom on Lord Harlech's estate?—Yes, my Lord. See 15,8 17,610–17,616.

15,762. Can you substantiate that?—Yes.

15,763. How do you do it?—By the evidence of the men. I have often met them at the work, and the evidence given by the farmers.

15,764. Are the labourers required to beat, or the farmer?—The notice is sent to the farmer, and he generally sends a man or two to represent him if he does not go himself. In some instances they go themselves.

15,765. Have you anything to say about the raising of rents?—The rents have been varied upon almost every estate, but the additions have been by no means uniform.

15,766. Have you anything to put in to that effect in figures?—No, I have no figures, but the increase of the rents has been from 10 to 30 per cent.

15,767. Have you any figures to prove that?—No, I have no figures to prove it.

15,768. What causes you to make that statement?—The evidence is collected in three different places; the parishes of Llanfair and Llanbedr are collected together.

15,769. Then you have some evidence. Where is it?—I have not the particulars of the different parishes. These are only a few additional things.

15,770. What causes you to make the statement? Is it only a general statement, or have you any figures to prove it?—I have no figures with me to prove it.

15,771. You say there are instances of fluctuations in rent. Can you tell us anything about the way in which rents have fluctuated? You instance the rent of a farm of about 150 acres let at 104*l.*, and subsequently advanced to 170*l.*?—Yes, I know that farm well, and I got that evidence from the farmer himself.

15,772. What farm is that?—Well, the farmer in giving the evidence wished me not to disclose his name.

15,773. Just give us the instance of the fluctuation in rent with respect to the farm of 150 acres?—The rent of a farm of about 150 acres was 104*l.* some 30 years ago; it was subsequently advanced to 170*l.* The present tenant took the farm some seven years ago at 150*l.* In November 1887, 10 per cent. was returned; in May 1888, 10 per cent.; in November 1888, 5 per cent.; in May 1892, 10 per cent.; in November 1892, 15 per cent.; and in May 1893, 15 per cent. Previous to 1863 the tenant had built a place for his hay at a cost of 40*l.* After 1863 the tenant built another outbuilding at a cost of 60*l.*; he also drained the land at his own expense, besides greatly improving it with lime, manure, seeding, cake feeding, &c. The landlord in the years 1865 to 1870 spent about 300*l.* on the house and allowed a later tenant 20*l.* for repairs. The present tenant has the right of shooting all game, which was formerly reserved.

15,774. Now can you tell us anything about the size of farms?—I can give you the sizes in four parishes, Llandanwg, Llanbedr, Llandecwyn, and Llanfair.

15,775. Do they run from 50 to 250 acres?—Yes, that is so.

15,776. Do you know anything about the consolidation of farms?—I have the following examples: Tyddyn siocyn with Brwyn llynau; Caenest with Argoed; Pencerrig with Pencerrig; Aberdeunant with Aberdeunant and Blaenddol; Dolorcan Bach and Cefntrevor Isaf; Cefnrhun and Glasfryn.

15,777. That is during how many years?—I could not say the number of years, but it is within the last 12 years or so.

15,778. That is a consolidation of how many farms?—Six.

15,779. Six within the last 12 years over an extent of 31,000 acres?—Yes.

15,780. Then you have only six instances of consolidation in your district?—That is all.

15,781. Then what do you say about game preserving?—The game is preserved throughout the district. On Lord Harlech's estate there is a rabbit warren. There is a general complaint in the district that keepers are constantly causing damage by trespassing over farms, and that they are heedless of the complaints of farmers. The farmers suffer considerable losses by dogs being destroyed. In many instances valuable dogs have been lost in the district; nine in the above-mentioned rabbit warren within the last 15 years, valued from 15*s.* to 3*l.*

15,782. Sheep dogs?—Yes, my Lord. Last year Mr. Richard Davies, Lasynys Fach, recovered 3*l.* for a dog shot by Lord Harlech's gamekeeper. The Ground Game Act is not made use of to any great extent, as tenants are afraid to avail themselves of it. In many cases the shooting is let to shooting tenants. See 17

15,783. Then as to the haulage. I suppose the tenants do the haulage?—On some estates; not on all.

15,784. Are they recompensed for the haulage at the end of the tenancy?—No, except by one gentleman who has lately bought farms in the neighbourhood, R. H. Wood, Esquire.

15,785. Have farm labourers decreased or increased lately?—They have decreased. I could hand in a list of the cottages which have fallen into ruin.

15,786. Just read it?—This is a list of cottages fallen into ruins:—In the direction of Llanfair and Llanbedr, Cabwlch y Wrach, Dolwreiddiog bach, Pandy, Breibwll, Garthgeiliog, Hafod isa, Minfordd, Fedw, Gelli ywen, Ty' ncarlag, Tan y graig, Talgarreg bach, Henysgubor (3 tŷ), Beudycorn, Coedbachaubach, Tyddyn siocyn, Tycoch, Bronheulog, Tyddynllidiart, Rhiwgoch (22 houses). About Harlech: Gilar, Ty' nycornel, Glan y gors, Garthmoel (4 houses). Llanfihangel and Llandecwyn: Pencae'rgo, Breichiau (2) Hendre einion, Gelligreen bach Llanrwen, Muriau robin, Maesyllan, Blaenyddôl, Gwastadannes, Aberdeunant uchaf, Ty'n y gors, Ty'n y pant, Dolorcan Fawr, Cefnyrhun, Gafael crwm, Penybont, Penygarreg, Talyrhôs, and Blaenddol.

15,787. You agree with all we have heard about the children of tenant farmers working at home without wages?—Yes.

15,788. You say that is the ordinary custom?—Yes.

15,789. You say if parents had to pay wages they would be unable to pay rent?—Yes.

15,790. Is the rent ever paid with borrowed money?—Yes. I have often been asked for a loan of money myself, and so have others.

15,791. You have something to say about two brothers at Cefnrhun?—Twenty-seven years ago two brothers and a sister came to Cefnrhun possessing 300*l.* besides the stock. In April 1886 they were sold up for inability to pay the rent, and then became paupers. This farm was let to another tenant in 1886, and in 1887 it was re-let to him; in 1890 he was given notice to quit. In 1891 it was let to another man, tenant of an adjoining farm, who has had to leave through inability to pay his way. His stock was sold by auction on the 28th of September last.

Chairman—continued.

15,792. Whose estate was that on?—On Lord Harlech's estate.

15,793. What do you consider the chief grievances complained of amongst the farmers?—Insecurity of tenure; six months' notice to quit; trespass of gamekeepers; preservation of game by landlords to themselves and their assigns; rents being too high; and in some cases the prohibitive character of the railway rates; half-yearly payment of rent.

15,794. How would you like the rent to be paid?—I should prefer to have it paid yearly. Then inadequate compensation for improvements, and having to consume the green crop on leaving the farm.

15,795. Have you any remedies for that to suggest to us?—The first is a Land Court, not analogous to the Irish, but a court of appeal where a tenant having any grievances against his landlord might appeal if the landlord was unwilling to come to terms, and I think that this would bring the landlord and tenant nearer together, as many landlords would be more willing to listen to their tenants' grievances rather than go to a court of appeal.

15,796. Anything else?—Fixity of tenure; full compensation for unexhausted improvements; fair rent; fair railway rates, tenant to have absolute right to game, and the rent to be paid yearly.

Mr. Grove.

15,797. You speak of consolidation of farms. Why were they consolidated in your opinion. Do you think it was because the buildings fell into bad condition, and the landlord was not prepared to expend money?—I believe that was the reason in some cases.

15,798. Do you know of any cases of permanent reductions of rent? You have spoken of abatements of rent?—Yes, I know of two or three farms in which there have been permanent reductions.

15,799. What was the amount per cent. where the rent has been permanently reduced? Do you happen to remember that?—That evidence was given at Barmouth by a farmer.

15,800. That covers the same district that you speak of?—Yes.

15,801. As to these agreements which you have put in, could you leave copies of them with us?—Yes, I will.

15,802. You have called attention to what you consider to be oppressive clauses in these agreements?—In those agreements, and in one or two others which I have not a copy of.

15,803. Can you send them to the Secretary?—I will endeavour to obtain copies and send them.

15,804. You say that the farmers do not avail themselves of the Ground Game Act to any great extent?—Quite so.

15,805. I suppose they are acquainted with the provisions of the Act?—By hearsay mostly, I believe.

Mr. Grove—continued.

15,806. As a rule do you think farmers understand clearly the provisions of that Act?—Not very clearly.

15,807. What about the Agricultural Holdings Act. Is that an Act that receives attention at the hands of farmers. Do you know a farmer who has a copy of the Act in his possession, and who would refer to it if necessary?—No, I do not.

15,808. Generally speaking, you say the cottages having fallen into disuse has lessened the amount of labour on the land?—That and the wages being too high.

15,809. And do you say, generally speaking, you do not think there is sufficient labour on the land at the present time?—In many cases, if not in most cases, there is no sufficient labour to keep the land in good order; the tenants try to do with as few labourers as possible, in order to try and pay the rents.

15,810. Do you think that increased cottage accommodation would be likely to make more labour settle permanently upon the land?—Not unless there was room to keep a cow or two, or something of that sort—some accommodation besides the house.

15,811. Do we gather, so far as regards a Land Court, that you wish the landlord and the tenant to try to come to terms first. You would always give them an opportunity of agreeing, would you not?—Certainly. In many cases now, when a tenant complains or writes to the landlord, the landlord turns it over to the agent and nothing further is heard of it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,812. You say that one harsh clause in the agreement is this, that the tenant has to do all the cartage in connection with buildings, without any remuneration. Is it customary for the tenant to do the haulage on the estates in this neighbourhood?—Yes, towards buildings—to cart towards the buildings.

15,813. It is customary?—Yes.

15,814. And generally done on every estate?—Yes.

15,815. Would you consider it hard in any other case, except when a tenant leaves pretty soon after doing the carting to a building—I mean before he has had any of the benefit of the haulage, or the building at any rate, towards which he has hauled?—I should not consider it hard if he had the benefit afterwards to make up for it; that would amount to the same thing as compensation, I fancy.

15,816. You think he should be compensated for the carting done to the building?—Yes.

15,817. What do you think is the effect of absentee landlordism?—I think it has a very bad effect.

15,818. In what way?—The tenants do not know their landlords, and they cannot get at them.

15,819. They cannot approach them?—They cannot approach them. Some landlords are never there on rent day; even if they happen to be on the estate they go away for rent days. Other landlords are only there just for the shooting season—just for a week perhaps.

15,820. You think it would be better if they were here, so that the tenants could state their grievances personally to the landlords and not through the agents?—Yes, much better.

See 17,610–17,616.

15,821. I should like this matter cleared up with respect to Lord Harlech's estate. Do you say that when a tenant is in one of Lord Harlech's farms, it is a condition that he is to act as game beater for two days?—Yes, that is understood.

15,822. It is understood?—Yes. I cannot from memory now say whether it is down in the agreement, but it is an understood thing. I intended having a copy of the agreement, but it was mislaid somewhere, or lost in the post, and not returned to me.

15,823. You say that one tenant recovered 3*l.* for a dog which was killed. Was it after a law suit, or was it given to him?—Well, he complained at first, and I believe he told the gamekeeper that if he did not get compensation he would go to law about it, and after that, I think, he wrote to Lord Harlech himself, and Lord Harlech sent down for him to be paid; that is how it was, I think.

15,824. Do you think Lord Harlech would be ready to grant compensation in cases of that sort if he was written to?—I think so, if he was approachable.

15,825. Then you think he is unapproachable?—Yes, to a great extent.

Mr. Griffiths.

15,826. Are you a medical officer of health?—Not medical officer of health, but union medical officer. The medical officer of health resides at Carnarvon, and takes the Festiniog district as well, and part of Anglesey.

15,827. You do not come down this district?—No.

15,828. You spoke just now with regard to the tenants having all the game in their own hands. You would recommend that, would you not?—Yes; the opinion of the farmers generally in the district is that they should have everything on the farm, whether it is game or other stock, as they have to feed them.

15,829. Do you think if they had the game in their own hands there would be any game in the neighbourhood in a very short time?—I could not say that; on some of the farms it might perhaps be kept.

15,830. You said just now that when they came to shoot was the only time that you saw some of the landlords. Do not you think that that might be the means of driving the landlords out of the country altogether if the tenant had all the game?—It might be.

15,831. Do you think that if the landlords in this district were to give the game into the hands of the tenants, and do away with the keepers, that they would keep any game for the landlord?—No, I doubt it very much.

Chairman.

15,832. There are some questions put in which I must trouble you to answer. Mr. Owen Wynne asks: "How many acres do you farm?" Are you a farmer yourself?—No.

15,833. Then, he asks: "Have you much "experience in agricultural matters?"—I have been brought up on a farm.

15,834. Perhaps you can answer me this. I take it you are well acquainted with farmers—you live amongst them?—Yes.

15,835. And you know their ways and habits?—Yes.

15,836. Then, Mr. Vincent puts in these questions, first, "Do you say that men are com-"pelled to be at coverts on Lord Harlech's "estate without payment?"—Yes.

15,837. Then, secondly, "Have not the "parishes for which you give evidence been "opened up by railways in the last 40 years?"—The railway runs through four of them.

15,838. Then, another question by Mr. Vincent is: "You say, 'That the tenants are to have "'the absolute right to all game.' Would you, "then, perpetuate what are called the Game "Laws for the benefit of the tenant?"—I do not quite understand what that means.

15,839. Mr. Vincent says as you do not understand that question he does not press it. Then, Mr. Vincent asks: "Who are the owners re-"ferred to in the copies of the agreements put "in?"—One is the agreement of William Thearsby Poole, Esq., another is David Griffiths, Esq., and the third is D. W. Kirkby, Esq.

15,840. Then, Mr. Owen Wynne puts in another question: "Where the tenants have the "game now, do they not generally let it?"—Yes, they do.

15,841. When they have the shooting over their farms they generally let it?—Yes, they do.

The witness withdrew.

Rev. W. DAVIES called and examined.

Chairman.

15,842. To what denomination do you belong, if you please?—The Calvinistic Methodist.

See 16,162. 7,705, 7,706.

15,843. What districts do you speak of?—The district of Towyn and Llanegryn.

15,844. Just round here?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

15,845. You are well acquainted with farmers; I mean you have lived amongst them?—Yes, I have.

15,846. How long have you lived in this district?—34 years.

Chairman—continued.

15,847. And you are well acquainted with it?—Yes.

15,849. That is upon the question of the circumstances of the farmer?—Yes.

15,850. Can you tell us whether the rents have gone up or not?—The rents in the district generally are considerably higher than they were about 35 or 40 years ago. Here are a few instances: Rhoslefan, formerly 50*l.*, now 65*l.*; Llangelynin, formerly 29*l.*, now 35*l.*; Castellfawr 100*l.*, now 120*l.*; Nantcynog 30*l.*, now 40*l.*; Bryn 35*l.*, now 45*l.*; Nantpool 12*l.*, now 20*l.*; Tal y garreg 72*l.*, now 100*l.*; Tonfannau 163*l.*, now 200*l.*; Rhydygarnedd 110*l.*, now 140*l.* I may remark about this Tonfannau, the rent in 1875 was 163*l.* It has been sold since that three times, and it was advanced to 215*l.*, and when Mr. Wynne bought it last time he reduced the rent to 200*l.*

15,851. He reduced the rent on the last sale?—He reduced the rent on the last sale to 200*l.* Those belong to six different estates, and I think they are fair samples of the advancements in the farms of the district, taking Towyn district generally during the last 35 years, except on Peniarth and Peniarthuchaf Estates. It is seldom if ever an advance is made by Mr. Wynne or Mrs. Scott but when there is a change of tenant, and even then they are more moderate than many other landlords. I took a small farm of about 17 acres on Peniarth Estate in 1876. The rent to the former tenant was 28*l.*, and it was let to me for 32*l.*, and some expense was gone into by the landlord for repairs, probably from 40*l.* to 50*l.* But though there were no great advancements in the farms on the Peniarth Estate, yet most of the farms bought by Mr. Wynne—he has bought many lately, within the last 15 years—are much higher than they were 30 years ago. The advance was made before he bought them.

Chairman—continued.

15,852. He bought them with the advance?—With the advance. Some farms in the district have been let to new tenants at considerable reductions in these last years, and reductions have been made in a few cases to sitting tenants, but cases have also occurred in which the sitting tenants were refused any reductions, but when the farms were given up by them they were let to new tenants at reduced rents. Dyffryngwyn in the parish of Towyn is one instance; the sitting tenant was refused any reduction, but the farm was let to a new tenant for 20*l.* less rental. See 15,931.

15,853. Which estate was that on?—Miss Morris's, of Machynlleth, I think.

15,854. What was the original rental, do you happen to know? I mean what does the 20*l.* represent?—I have not put it down, but I have it, and I believe the old tenant is in the room. Another thing that works against the farmer in our district is the preservation of game. Thirty-four years ago it was very little preserved, if at all, but now it is reared and preserved very extensively, and both ground and other game do a great damage to the crops, especially on farms and fields near the covers. A neighbour of mine had a field of barley the summer before last, and it came very wet after he cut it, so that it remained rather long on the ground, and the field was in the proximity of a cover, and the young birds had just been brought there, and he says that half the barley was eaten before he was able to carry it off. Another farmer told me that it is useless for him to plough the fields near the covers as the game will spoil the crops. There are a great number of fields on several of the farms where carrots cannot be sown at all, as they will all be eaten by the rabbits. Owing to the destruction of the birds of prey, sparrows and other small birds abound most seriously and do a great damage to the corn crops. A very intelligent farmer told me the other day that he considers the damage done to his crops by the game, directly and indirectly, fully equal to 10 per cent. advance on the rent.

There has been a great advance in servants' wages during the last 40 years. A farmer in the district gave me a list of his servants, and the wages paid them in 1872 and 1892 respectively. In 1872 he kept six servant men and two servant maids, and the amount paid them was 75*l.* 4*s.* 0*d.* In 1892 he kept five servant men and one servant maid, less by two, and paid them 142*l.*, but the shepherd in 1892 provided his own board, and did not in 1872. If present wages are compared with those of about 1850, there is about 125 per cent. advance. Thirty or forty years ago all the married servants would take most part of the wages in kind, barley, wheat, and oatmeal, &c., but now they must all be paid in cash. The servants' keep also is now very much better and more expensive than it was in those years, but none too good at the present time. Yet, there is not a class of men in the country who lives upon a plainer board than the average farmer and his household.

Chairman—continued.

With higher rents, higher wages and better living, I reckon that the outgoings of the farmer in this district are fully as much again as they were 40 years ago.

There was a great deal of corn, especially wheat, grown in the district 30 and 40 years ago, and a farmer had a ready market for his wheat in the district. There was then no other than home flour used. I believe I was the first that began regularly to sell other flour in the district, and that was in 1860, but now there are hundreds of tons of flour sold every year. The farmers still grow wheat for their own use, but it does not pay them. The flour that was selling 30 years ago for 50*s.* is selling now for 26*s.* per sack.

Cattle, sheep, and wool, which are now the chief sources of the farmer's income in this district are very much lower than they were 20 years ago, and considerably lower than they were 30 years ago.

I have been supplied by a grazier who buys a great many cattle in the district with a list of the prices which he paid for the cattle of the same farms in 1872, 1882, and 1892. There were 11 farms and they had 41 head of cattle between them—the same number in each year; 490*l.* was paid for the 41 in 1872, 330*l.* 10*s.* in 1882 and 196*l.* in 1892. That is in the list. Three farmers in the district had for their wethers 24*s.* per head in 1872 and 13*s.* in 1892; another farmer had 24*s.* in 1872, 19*s.* 6*d.* in 1882 and 15*s.* in 1892; another had 30*s.* in 1872, 26*s.* in 1882 and 19*s.* per head in 1892.

One farmer had for his ewes 17*s.* in 1872 and 8*s.* in 1892. Another had 20*s.* in 1872 and 13*s.* in 1892.

Wool was selling in the district at 1*s.* 6*d.* per lb. in 1872, 1*s.* in 1882, 7½*d.* in 1892, and 6½*d.* in 1893. The prices of horses, pigs, and butter are good; but the income of the farmer at the present time from the stock and produce of his farm is less by fully 50 per cent. than it was about 20 years ago.

The farmers generally keep less servants than they did in former years, partly because much of the work is done by machinery. Formerly most of the farmers kept a man—some two men—for threshing, but that is now done by the machine, and there is no need to keep so many extra hands for the harvest, as much of the work is done by machinery, and besides wages are now so high that farmers try to keep as few servants as they possibly can. They also generally keep younger men, and many of the best men go the quarries and elsewhere where they get more wages, so that the staff of servants on each farm is not so strong as it used to be and less labour is bestowed on the land, which tells unfavourably on cultivation.

The greatest change in the farming of the district is that much less use is made of the plough for corn-growing, and more attention is paid to the green crop, so that a better stock is made, and more sheep and cattle fattened for the butcher, and there is a little more attention paid to secure a good breed of horses and cattle.

Chairman—continued.

But there is very little improvement in the cultivation—rather the reverse. There is a great deal less lime given to the land than there used to be, and very little artificial manure.

There is a great deal of land in the district which might be brought under cultivation which is left entirely to produce what it will of itself without any effort being made to improve it.

Since the drainage of the Dysyni Valley and some drainage done by the landlords on Peniarth Uchaf and Peniarth Estate more than 20 years ago, very little has been done to improve the land and make it more productive. When the times are good there is a feeling of insecurity, and when the times are bad there is a feeling of despondency among the tenants, that makes them unwilling to put anything into the land but what they can get out of it the next year.

Several cases have occurred in the district in which rents were advanced after the tenant had made expensive improvements. A farm called Rhoslefan in the parish of Celynin was taken by the present tenant for 50*l.* rental.

Chairman.

15,855. What estate is that on?—Then Mr. Anwyl and now Mrs. Royle owns it. There have been several farms belonging to the estate. A farm called Rhoslefan in the parish of Celynin was taken by the present tenant for 50*l.* He went to much expense in draining, and also reclaimed 20 acres of waste upland and brought them under cultivation and built a new shed. Some years after a valuer went over the farm and the rent was advanced to 65*l.* The tenant of Tal-y-gareg (which is a farm on another estate), who was an excellent farmer, agreed with his landlord to erect some new outbuildings, the old ones being in a wretched state. The expense was 140*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, and he was to be paid by instalments of 10*l.* on each rent audit—20*l.* per annum. In three years the landlord died, and he had only a life-interest in the estate. The succeeding landlord refused to ratify the agreement, and the balance of 80*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* has never been paid. In a few years the rent was advanced to the widow of the late tenant—and she had seven little children at the time—from 72*l.* to 80*l.* In a few years afterwards it was advanced again to 100*l.*, which is the present rent. There is an analogous case, very near it, but I have not the particulars of that. I wish to specify the case of one other farm which has been for generations—I may say hundreds of years—and is still in the holding of my own family. In the time of my grandfather the rent was 27*l.* Here are the receipts (handing in receipts).

Mr. Griffiths.

15,856. What is the name of the place?—That is Taltreuddynbach.

15,857. Is that farm in the occupation of your family now?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

15,858. 100 years ago the rent was what?—In the time of my grandfather (the first receipt is in 1795), it was 27*l.* Some years before his death it was advanced to 45*l.*

15,859. What year was that?—1799 I think the advance was first made. The landlady died about that time, and her son succeeded her. In 1807 my grandfather died and his eldest son became the tenant.

15,860. Was that your father?—My uncle—my father's eldest brother. The rent was advanced to 60*l.*

15,861. That was on your grandfather's death?—Yes.

15,862. The rent was raised to 60*l.*, and you produce the receipt?—My uncle made great improvements. He reclaimed a great deal of waste land and made it into several new fields. He built new stone walls around almost all the fields on the farm, built a large hay shed and some other buildings entirely at his own expense, and his rent was advanced to 77*l.*

15,863. From 60*l.*?—From 60*l.*

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,864. Do you know in what year that was?—I do not know exactly, but it was 60*l.* in 1846, I know that. It was after 1846.

Chairman.

15,865. In 1807 your grandfather died and the eldest son became tenant. Then the rent was raised to 60*l.*?—Yes, that was the first payment by my uncle.

15,866. Then your uncle made some improvements, built a large shed and some other buildings, and the rent was raised to 77*l.* What year was that?—I cannot specify exactly. The rent was raised between 1846 and 1864.

15,867. Then what happened?—The Cambrian Railway went through the farm and took a good portion of it, but no reduction or compensation was given to the tenant. My uncle died in 1864 and his widow became the tenant, and in 1873 the rent was advanced again to 97*l.* The widow died that year and her daughter became the tenant, and she held it for ten years, but finding that she was losing money every year she gave it up, and now her brother is the tenant, and the rent is advanced to 100*l.*

15,868. It was in 1880 that she held it?—From 1873 to 1883.

15,869. In 1883 her brother took it?—No, not then. Her brother-in-law took it, but he gave it up. I did not mention that. But now it is in the occupation of her brother.

15,870. Who took it in 1883 when she gave it up?—Her brother-in-law took it. He is in Liverpool.

15,871. Then was the rent raised to 100*l.*?—Not to him—97*l.* to him.

15,872. But it was 97*l.* before?—Yes, he had it for the same rent—the brother-in-law.

15,873. The brother-in-law took the farm at the same rent?—He took it at the same rent and held it for seven years.

15,874. Then who had it?—The brother.

Chairman—continued.

15,875. Mr. Davies, one of your family?—Yes, one of the family. He holds another large farm, Gorsygedol.

15,876. That was her brother, was it?—Yes, my Lord, and the rent to him was 100*l.*

15,877. That brings us down to 1890?—Yes.

15,878. What happened then?—The rent was advanced to 100*l.* The tenant does all the repairs on the farm and is allowed nothing towards them. About 60 years ago the landlord built a house, cowhouse, and stable.

15,879. The rent was raised to 100*l.* and nothing was allowed for repairs. There was nothing given back?—No compensation at all was given.

15,880. What is the state of the case now?—About 60 years ago the landlord built a house, cowhouse, and stable, but nothing has been done ever since by the landlord save letting the farm and receiving the rent.

15,881. And the rent is 100*l.* now, is it not?—Yes, 100*l.* now. The estate, I believe, is heavily mortgaged, and probably advances were made to cover the interest. But such cases, which are numerous over the country, make a profound impression on the tenantry.

15,882. What relation is this sitting tenant to you?—First cousin.

15,883. And he is in possession now?—He is in possession now, and the daughter that took it after the mother is my present wife.

15,884. The daughter who gave it up after seven years?—Yes.

15,885. You know all this absolutely for certain?—Yes, absolutely for certain.

15,886. I mean you can vouch for every word of this?—Yes, every word. Such cases, which are numerous over the country, make a profound impression on the tenantry, and have produced such a feeling of insecurity that almost all farmers are now very reluctant to spend any money in the improvement of their holdings and the Act giving compensation has done very little if anything to restore confidence.

The relation between landlord and tenant in this district is friendly; no bad feeling at all exists, but there is very little intercourse between them, and I feel certain that the landlords generally do not realise the great struggle the majority of their tenants have at the present time to pay their rents and make some sort of living.

There is no desire on the part of tenants to have a change of landlords—but there is a desire, a strong and a general desire, for a change in the land laws.

15,887. What do you mean by that—a sort of Land Court or a sort of Arbitration Court, or something of that kind?—What we want are fair rents according to the market, security of tenure and compensation for improvements, and some protection against the trespass of game. We look to our legislators to devise the means to secure these things for the tenants.

Mr. Griffiths.

15,888. You say that you consider that there is much money borrowed in this neighbourhood to pay rents?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

15,889. The farmers have a wish to be prompt in the payment of their rent?—Oh, yes, and they are.

15,890. Whatever the sum to be paid is they always try to pay it?—Yes, they try to pay the rent if they possibly can.

15,891. You also say that farms have been reduced to the incoming tenants, and a reduction has been refused to the old tenants?—Yes.

15,892. That is a rather hard case?—I have specified a case that was a very hard one, Dyffryngwyn, and there was another farm, Tyddyn y briddell, but I do not know the particulars about that other.

15,893. That shows in your opinion that the landlords really do not know the state the farmers are actually in?—I am afraid not.

15,894. Otherwise they would not allow an old tenant to go away and a new tenant to come in at a reduced rent?—Certainly not.

15,895. You have mentioned several years in which there has been a great advance, and you say in one place that there was so much advanced to build a dwelling-house, a stable, a cowhouse, and so on. Is that the only occasion on which the landlord did anything?—The only time, and then the tenant did all the haulage.

15,896. The haulage was done without any payment?—Without any payment at all.

15,897. Are there many similar cases in the neighbourhood?—There is a place just by where the tenant did just the same things. All the estate was advanced, and the advances were a great deal heavier on those farms where they had improved their holdings.

15,898. Do you think then that when new additional buildings are put up on a farm it would not be better for the tenant to have the rent increased, or to come to some terms with the landlord instead of carrying on the thing in this way?—Yes, I think it would be better.

15,899. To be paid for the haulage at the time even if he were to have a little additional rent?—It would be satisfactory, certainly, and he should be paid for his labour.

15,900. But in the case of his leaving the estate he is not paid at the present time?—The family is continually in the place.

15,901. And when the family is continually in the place of course they enjoy it, but the great grievance is that they have to leave the place?—Yes, certainly.

15,902. Having done much hauling?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,903. I have only one other question. I think you say your cousin occupies this farm which you have mentioned?—Yes.

15,904. Did he become a tenant of this farm to farm it for profit or pleasure, or was it simply a matter of sentiment?—He has a very numerous family, and he sent one son and one daughter there. He likes to have the farm to keep the sheep. He owns Gorsygedol; that is a very large sheep farm, and so they farm them together, as it were. The farm would not pay by itself independent of the other.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

15,905. I think that you said that he managed it from Liverpool?—That was a brother-in-law.

15,906. Now with respect to your brother-in-law, what prompted him to take the farm?—He took the farm for pleasure, to go there in the summer, and he told me he lost 100*l.* every year.

15,907. Do you think that this feeling did enter into the question: that the farm had been in the occupation of the family for so many years, and that he was desirous that it should continue in the family?—They are very much attached to the place.

15,908. You think that that feeling is strong among the Welsh people; that they cling to their places?—Well, it is very strong.

15,909. And you think that the landlords profit by it to some extent?—Well, I should say so in some cases, at all events. In that case, I think, the landlord did profit by it.

Mr. Grove.

15,910. You spoke of a farm, I understood you to say near to Bala, where the tenant did build some new buildings, and then there was a change in ownership, and then you say the agreement was not carried out to repay a certain amount per annum, 10*l.* a year, I think, that was to be allowed on the rent?—Yes.

15,911. When you say "agreement," was that a written agreement?—It was a written agreement between the landlord and the tenant, but the landlord had only a life interest in the estate.

15,912. Was there a solicitor consulted as to the terms of that agreement?—I think the agent at the time was a solicitor, Mr. Jones of Dolgelley.

15,913. Are there many changes in tenancy?—Yes, a great many in the district.

15,914. A great many, taking the district generally?—Yes, a great many.

15,915. Although here and there, there are families who have lived for hundreds of years almost continuously on certain farms, still you think, speaking generally, there are a great many changes in tenancy?—There are a great many. There have been a great many lettings. I think of the 24 tenants on the Ynysmaengwyn estate 18 or 20 have been there only about 15 years.

15,916. Then you put in certain receipts, starting with 27*l.* and running up to 100*l.* a year at the present time?—Yes.

15,917. Are the boundaries of that farm—is the acreage—exactly the same all the way through?—Exactly the same.

Chairman.

15,918. I have several questions handed up. One by Mr. Vincent: "Do you know that where "Mr. Wynne has bought land in this district "the present rental does not amount to more "than 2 per cent.?" Do you happen to know that?—I think I have seen it in Mr. Wynne's evidence,

Chairman—continued.

15,919. "Do you not know that Mr. Wynne "pays compensation for damage done by "game?"—Well, I do not know of cases where he has.

15,920. You are not aware of any?—I know of one case, at all events, where an application was made for compensation for damage, and it was refused.

15,921. "Have not the prices for stock "fluctuated very considerably, being sometimes "very high, in the last 10 years?"—Yes, they were very high.

15,922. "Are you aware that the drainage "operations on the Peniarth estate have ended "in a dead loss annually to the landlord?"—Yes. I have seen that, too, in the evidence given at Barmouth.

15,923. Then there is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "You say there is very little inter-"course between landlord and tenant. Do you "not frequently see Mr. Wynne, and have "conversations with him?"—Yes, I do very often.

15,924. Individually, you are on very good terms?—Yes.

15,925. You can always see Mr. Wynne?—Always, yes; but what I mean there is, that with regard to farms and farming there is no advice or counsel, or anything of that sort, given by the landlord to the tenant. When Mr. Scott used to live at Peniarthuchaf he used to call on the farmers and advise them, and do a great deal of good in that way.

15,926. Then there is another question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "On whose estate is the "farm you mentioned which has been so long "in the family?"—Mr. Wynne Griffiths, of Carnarvon.

15,927. A question has been handed up by Mr. Kirkby; the Commissioners think it is of a personal nature, and cannot be put. Then I have another question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "To whom did Mr. Wynne refuse compensation "for game damage"? Do you know that?—Yes, I know him; I have not permission to name him, but I can do so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,928. Could you send it in privately to the Secretary?—Yes.

Chairman.

15,929. You will get the permission of the tenant, and send us in the name?—Yes, I will.

Chairman—continued.

15,930. He will have no objection to its being known?—No, I do not think so.

Mr. Griffiths.

It had better be accompanied by a copy of the claim sent in.

Chairman.

15,931. Certainly. Then there is a question by Mr. R. Gillart: "Is it not a fact that the "owner of Dyffryngwyn and Tyddyn briddell "farms was compelled to keep these two farms "on hand for about 12 months and spent a "considerable sum upon repairs and improve-"ments before they were let to new tenants." Do you happen to know that?—She kept them on hand some time. I do not know how long. See 15,852 15,892.

15,932. You do not know whether she was compelled to keep them on?—The old tenant is in, and he is comparatively a young man. He is in Towyn here still, not having a farm. He would have taken it if he had offered the farm to him.

15,933. Do you know whether a considerable sum in repairs and improvement was spent on those farms?—Yes, I think there was.

15,934. There was a considerable amount of money spent upon them?—There was a certain amount.

Mr. Grove.

15,935. While she retained possession of them, while she held them?—Yes, and the farm was let afterwards at 20*l.* lower than to the old tenant.

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,936. What was the reason the old tenant left?—He gave it up for the sake of having a reduction. It was too high, and he could not pay it

Chairman.

15,937. It was too high and he gave up the farm?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

15,938. If I rightly understand you, there were improvements made and the rent was reduced 20*l.*?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. R. Foulkes Jones called and examined.

Chairman.

15,939. You are the headmaster of the Board school at Llwyngwril?—Yes.

15,940. You are well acquainted with the farmers of the district?—I am.

15,941. You know their condition and their circumstances?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

15,942. And you are quite competent to give evidence on their behalf?—Yes, I have been asked to come here by a committee of the farmers of the district.

15,943. You are well acquainted with their circumstances, and you are in their confidence and you have been asked to come and state their case for them?—Yes, this is the evidence given by the farmers themselves to me to be delivered here to-day.

15,944. To what district do you speak for?—The district of Llwyngwril—the district lying around the village of Llwyngwril.

15,945. What is the area of the district?—The district I speak of is about three miles long and about a mile broad.

15,946. Is it good land or bad land generally?—Very poor land, so the farmers say; very poor land for all crops.

15,947. Who are the principal owners?—The principal owners are the Countess de Morella, Mrs. Royle, and the executors of the late Miss Williams.

15,948. What do the tenant farmers think of their agreements; do they think them fair?—No, they do not; they think that several clauses of the agreement are unfair and oppressive. One is with regard to the quantity of lime which has to be put into the land, which is out of all proportion to what is necessary for the land.

15,949. Whose agreements are those?—I think all the agreements are about the same.

15,950. Have you got any agreement to hand in?—No.

15,951. I think the agreement of the Countess de Morella has been handed in before. Is this clause about lime insisted on?—Not always, unless a tenant leaves on bad terms with his landlord or agent.

15,952. Then, what happens?—Then, he is fined the full amount of the deficiency.

15,953. Do you know any instance of that?—It occurred in the case of Edward Humphreys, of Hendre, and David Owen, of Henblas, tenants of the Countess de Morella.

See 18,427–18,429.

15,954. Then, with regard to the sheep, is there anything wrong there, in your opinion?—Edward Humphreys, of Hendre, had to pay about 14*l.* for lime which he had not put into the land.

15,955. When he went out?—Yes.

See 18,430, 18,439.

15,956. Can you tell us anything about the sheep clause?—The agreement binds the outgoing tenant to sell the sheep, at a valuation, to the incoming tenant, but does not bind either the landlord or the incoming tenant to buy them at a valuation. It is unfair to the tenant in that respect.

See 18,440–18,445.

15,957. Is there anything you have to say about spare fodder?—Spare fodder has to be left to the incoming tenant, whether he prefers to pay for it, or not; he does as he likes. It has to be left on the land. It cannot be taken away; it cannot be sold.

See 18,445–18,451.

15,958. Then, is there anything you have to say about payment of rent in advance?—Yes, power is given to the landlord to demand the rent in advance. That is considered oppressive. That has been acted upon in the case of Morris Jones, of Carngadell, and Richard Williams, of Parth y Gwyddwch, both tenants of the Countess de Morella.

Chairman—continued.

15,959. The landlords ask for the rent in advance?—A half year's rent in advance.

15,960. Instead of giving, as they generally do, six months' credit?—Yes.

15,961. That is the custom of the country, is it not?—Yes.

15,962. Or three months?—From three to six months.

15,963. Then, about agreements. Is there any charge made for agreements?—On the Countess de Morella's estate there is a charge of 10*s.* made for a copy of the agreement, and when the tenant is not prepared to pay this charge he has to content himself with what he can recollect of a hurried translation by the agent. In other cases when the tenant has asked for a copy, though he has not been quite refused one, he has been put off by the agent saying that one copy kept by him is quite sufficient—one copy would do for both.

15,964. Can you say anything about improvements?—On the estate of Mrs. Royle the incoming tenant pays a reasonable amount of good-will for permanent improvements made by the outgoing tenant. This is the only thing approaching tenant right which exists in the district, no good-will being paid for permanent improvements on the other properties.

15,965. Who makes the permanent improvements?—The landlord as a rule, and he charges interest on the amount spent, adding it on to the rent.

15,966. Is haulage paid for?—Haulage is not paid for.

15,967. Not even if a tenant leaves a year or two after the work has been done?—No, I could not find a single case where any haulage had been paid for.

15,968. Now will you tell us what you have to say about rent?—About 1875 the property of Mrs. Royle was re-valued with a consequent rise in the rent of each farm. On the other properties no general valuation has taken place, but there has almost invariably been an advance in the rent when a farm has changed hands as well as to the occupying tenant. In the case of old tenants of Mrs. Royle the rent was raised on the tenants' own improvements. In some cases on other properties where no apparent rise in the rent took place the farm was actually dearer, as the railway had taken some of the best land, and the rent remained the same. There are a few cases of reductions owing to exceptional circumstances, such as Hendre, a large farm requiring much labour, for which it has been difficult to get a tenant. The general advance in the rents of this district during the past 30 or 40 years is from 25 to 35 per cent. On all the properties there have been in late years temporary abatements varying from 5 to 15 per cent. on most of the farms in the district. In addition to the rent, the tenants on the Countess de Morella's property are bound if called upon to

Chairman—continued.

See 18,452 do a couple of days' haulage with one, or a pair of horses, according to the size of the farm.

15,969. What is that haulage—hauling coal, or what?—Anything that is wanted for the estate work. No other service is required. It is the general belief of the farmers in the district that the only remedy for the present condition of things is protection to them from unjust and capricious evictions from their farms, the right to make necessary improvements, and to demand compensation for the same, and a land court or some other method to fix a fair rent.

15,970. What about value of produce; have you anything to say as to that?—Within the past 15 years there has been a great fall in the value of nearly all agricultural produce, as the following table will show:—

Wheat, which was 30*s.* is now 15*s.*; 2-year old cattle which were 15*l.* to 16*l.* are now 8*l.* to 10*l.*; cattle which were 12*l.* are now 6*l.* to 7*l.* 10*s.*; horses which were 58*l.* are now 35*l.*; sheep which were 21*s.* to 22*s.* are now 10*s.* 6*d.* to 12*s.*; wool which was 1*s.* 3*d.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* is now 6½*d.* to 7½*d.* Very slightly better prices are obtained for pigs and butter.

15,971. Then as to wages?—Wages have increased about 100 per cent. during the past 30 or 40 years.

15,972. Now as to consolidation of farms, or letting two farms to the same tenant?—There have been many instances in this district where two or more farms have been let to the same tenant, and the process is still going on. Such are Ynysfaig and Penrhyn, Bodwlan, and Tyddyndu, Rhiwgaeron, and Brynhirmawr, Nant and Brynhir Bach, Gwastadgoed and Didfarch. The latter of each of the above couples have the farmhouses in ruins.

15,973. That is why it was done, I suppose, the farmhouses were tumbling down?—Yes, and the next farm was added to it. The result is that the district is much less populous, the decrease in the whole parish being about 200 during the last 10 years, or some 18 per cent. The labourers are impoverished, and the land is badly tilled. The best size for the sake of the land and all concerned in its cultivation would in this district at any rate be holdings of from 40 to 50 acres.

15,974. What about labourers? Are the cottages in a good condition?—No, the cottages are as a rule in a very poor condition, without any gardens or conveniences.

15,975. No gardens?—Very few, and very small ones, those that have any.

15,976. You have told us that there are fewer labourers?—Yes.

15,977. And you say from 10 to 15 labourers' cottages are in ruins in your district?—Yes.

15,978. Is it easy to get freehold plots of land for cultivation, or for small farmers to buy for labourers' cottages, or anything of that sort?—It was impossible until this year to get freehold pieces of land at all in the district. One or two chapels are built on lease; the school is built on lease, and cottages for labourers were built on lease too, until this year, when the Countess de Morella sold her property in the village.

15,979. What is the condition of the land?—Some of the land nearest the mountain is going out of cultivation, because it pays better to graze than to till it, with the great reduction in the price of corn. There are no farms unlet here. The little land which is properly tilled is not deteriorating, but the fact is that the farmers cannot afford to properly till most of their land. During the past 30 years a great deal of land has been cleared of furze accumulations of stones, rocks, old walls, &c., and drained at the sole expense of the tenant in each case, for which he received no compensation when leaving his farm.

15,980. Is that a general statement, or can you prove that by any instances?—It is general all over the district that all these things are done by the tenant and no compensation is paid.

15,981. About mountain land, common, &c., is there much common in the district?—Not much common land now—open common

15,982. Where has it all gone to?—It has been enclosed to the different farms. Villagers used to go there for the supply of peat, and so on. That has been put a stop to by Mr. Wynne of Peniarth, acting as lord of the manor.

15,983. Can you go and cut peat now?—No, not any.

15,984. Suppose a bit of mountain is enclosed, does it generally raise the rent of the farm on that account?—Yes, the farmers say that the rent in almost every instance has been raised on account of the closing of the mountain.

15,985. About the farmer's children; I suppose you have got the same evidence as we have had, over and over and over again, that they work very hard, and that they do not get paid, and that they live a very hard life, and that they assist the parents in paying rents?—Yes, they do.

15,986. Do they consider that the parents could pay the rent if they had to pay wages to the children?—They could not.

15,987. Have the farmers to borrow money in these districts as far as you know?—Yes, they have.

15,988. You know that for certain, do you?—Oh, yes, they have been telling me themselves.

15,989. Where do they borrow it—of the banks?—They borrow it from one another. If one man is more able than his neighbour, he helps his neighbour.

15,990. They help each other?—Yes. They also go to the bank, and one goes security for the other to the bank.

15,991. Do you think there is any difficulty about religious and political opinions in the district; what do you say about that?—There are cases where Churchmen have been preferred to Nonconformists—cases where there were Nonconformist applicants for farms, and those have been refused and Churchmen and Conservatives have been put in instead of them. At the farm of Llwyndu the old tenant in the year 1880 was a Nonconformist, and had been for a good many years tenant of the Countess de Morella. This farm was sublet to him by the tenant. When the old tenant died this man whom the farmer sublet to applied for it, and he could not get it; it was let to a Churchman, at least, he was bred and born a Nonconformist; he came to our district, and he attended church; now he has left and has gone back to chapel again. Another case was that of a farm called Parth y Gwyddwch. There the tenant failed. There were several Nonconformist applicants, sons of tenants and tenants living in the district, but the farm was let to a tailor from Carnarvonshire, a Churchman and Conservative, who was assisted by the rector to stock his farm. He soon went to the dogs, and there is a Nonconformist there now. In the case of Henblas again a Nonconformist had all but taken the farm, when a Churchman and Conservative appeared upon the scene. The Nonconformist was told that he could not have the farm unless he was prepared to pay an increase of 5*l.* in the rent. As the farm was already dear enough he refused to take the farm on those terms, consequently it was let to the Churchman with the increased 5*l.* rent, but he is allowed 5*l.* in his lime bill every year.

15,992. Is that on the Countess de Morella's estate?—On the Countess de Morella's estate. Another case is that of Ty Croes. This was let to a Nonconformist on condition that he should attend church, but as the church he is supposed to attend is closed for lack of worshippers he presumably satisfies the conditions by not going anywhere.

15,993. Now about rises in rents?—There are instances in this district of rents raised during the past 30 or 40 years, Prysgae Ganol, Parth y Gwyddwch 35*l.* to 42*l.*, or an increase of 20 per cent.

15,994. What estate is that on?—Prysgae Ganol is on Mrs. Royle's estate. Parth y Gwyddwch is on the Countess de Morella's estate. There the rents were 35*l.* and they are now 42*l.*, an increase of 20 per cent. Then Alltgoch 57*l.* to 70*l.*, an increase of 22¾ per cent. Llwyndu 40*l.* to 55*l.*, an increase of 37½ per cent. Pantyffa 16*l.* to 22*l.* 8*s.*, an increase of 40 per cent. Carngadell 40*l.* to 52*l.*, an increase of 30 per cent. Borthwen 120*l.* to 200*l.*, an increase of 66⅔ per cent.

See 18,457.

See 18,464

Mr. Richard Jones.

15,995. Does the Countess de Morella reside in your district?—No. She was there last year, but had not been there before for between 25 and 30 years.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

15,996. Then she takes but very little personal interest in the property?—None as far as I can see.

15,997. Would she take any part do you think in the selection of the tenants, or would it not be left entirely to the agent?—I could not tell you really about that—whether she would take part or not; but all applications for the farms on her estate are made to the agents.

15,998. Who are the agents?—The agents are Messrs. Gillart of Machynlleth.

Mr. Griffiths.

15,999. You have spoken of hardships that the tenants have to endure. They have been obliged to purchase so much lime per acre?—Yes.

16,000. Can you give us the quantity?—I can give you some instances. There is a farm called Hendre; there the tenant has to put about 20 tons of lime in every year. Then there is a farm called Gors; about 13 acres is the whole extent of it; there the tenant has to put in six tons of lime according to the agreement.

16,001. Will you give us the acreage of Hendre?—I could not give you the acreage. I think you will have evidence about that case at Bala.

16,002. Then you consider it is unfair to have an agreement not binding on both sides?—Yes, I think it is. That is the opinion of the farmers too.

16,003. Does the landlady speak Welsh?—She is a Welsh lady. I do not know whether she could speak Welsh or not.

16,004. She is not very approachable I suppose to the tenants?—Oh, she does not reside in Wales at all.

16,005. When permanent improvements are made what percentage is generally added to the rent?—The farmers tell me that the percentage is from 4 to 6 per cent. added on to the rent.

16,006. Is it customary in the neighbourhood when land is taken away for a railway not to allow any compensation to a tenant?—No compensation was allowed when the land was taken by the Cambrian Railways Company—no reduction was made in the rent.

16,007. On more than one estate?—Yes, on more than one estate.

16,008. The tenant is not allowed anything?—The tenants are not allowed any reduction of rent; there may be one or two exceptions, but as a general rule the rent remains the same.

16,009. Do the farmers' children attend school as regularly as the children of labourers?—No, they do not.

16,010. Are they later coming to school in the morning?—Later coming to school, and they do not attend as regularly as the labourers' children do.

16,011. What is the reason?—They have to help their parents at home.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

16,012. You consider that as a rule then that Nonconformists are the best tenants, do you not?—No, I do not say that, but in the case that I gave, there is no doubt that the tailor from Carnarvonshire was not a good tenant either for the land or landlord.

16,013. Do you approve of a Land Court to settle rents?—Yes, that is the general feeling.

16,014. That is the feeling of the farmers that you represent?—Yes, it is.

16,015. That they would like to see a Court?—Some impartial tribunal appointed to fix rents between them and the landlord.

16,016. And to settle all questions?—Yes, they think they ought not to be at the mercy of the landlords.

16,017. You think that where there is a question between the landlord and the tenant, and they can come to a settlement, they should do so, but in the event of the landlord and the tenant not coming to a settlement they should have some court to appeal to?—Yes, certainly.

Chairman.

16,018. There are some questions handed up by Mr. R. Gillart. The first is, "Can you say "what manure the tenant of Hendre (Humphreys) "had applied to his land before he relinquished "the tenancy?" Do you know anything about that?—No. All I can say is that this man had to pay 14*l.* towards what he had not put in the land in the way of lime. Further evidence will be given about Hendre, at Bala.

16,019. "Do you know whether it is not the "fact that he over-ploughed the land?" Can you answer that question?—No, I could not tell you that.

16,020. "Can you give instances where the "landlady or her agent have compelled the "tenant to do two days cartage?"—Compelled them to do it?

16,021. Or in fact where they did it?—What I say is that there is a clause in the agreement binding the tenant if called upon to do it.

16,022. Is it generally enforced?—I do not think it is generally. The complaint is that they drop upon the tenant who happens to be nearest, and leave others alone.

16,023. But it is enforced sometimes, is it?—Oh, yes.

16,024. You have known it yourself?—It has been enforced in the case of the tenant of Ty Du.

Mr. Richard Jones

16,025. You said haulage was done "for the estate work." What do you mean by "for the estate work"?—Supposing the Countess de Morella had houses in the village the farmers had to cart towards repairing those.

16,026. Has she a home farm?—No.

Mr. Grove.

16,027. You mean something distinct from the benefit to his own farm?—Exactly.

Chairman.

16,028. Then, there is another question, by Mr. Gillart: "Can you give instances where the "rent was demanded six months in advance, "except in cases where the tenant was on the "point of leaving"?—No, I cannot. The two cases I mentioned are, I think, the only two. See 15,958

16,029. Do I understand that when the tenant was on the point of leaving a year before, his rent was demanded in advance?—Yes.

16,030. And there is a clause in the agreement empowering that to be done?—Yes, there is.

16,031. Then another question by Mr. Gillart: "Can you say whether there were "other applicants for Parth y Gwyddwch at "the time it was let to the Churchman you "referred to"?—Yes, that is so.

16,032. There were other applicants, and the Churchman got it?—I have heard some of the applicants themselves say that they had applied for it at the time.

16,033. "Is it not a fact that there was an "exchange of lands or fields when Henblas "Farm was re-let, and are you prepared to say "that the rent was advanced in consequence of "this"? Do you know anything about that?—There was an exchange of fields, but I have not included the rent charged on those fields in the rent I gave as the rent of Henblas.

16,034. Then there is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Are the majority of tenant farmers "in your neighbourhood Nonconformists or "Churchmen?"—Nonconformists.

16,035. Then a question by Mr. John Rowlands: "Do you know what kind of food is "given to children of farmers and labourers "who are sent to your school, and the way of "living of the farmers generally. Can you "give instances within your own recollection?" —Well I could not tell you about the labourers' children, because they live mostly in the village, and they eat at home, but some of the farmers' children, especially in the winter time, bring their food to the school.

16,036. What sort of food is it?—I have seen farmers' children in the school eating barley bread and a red herring divided between two or three of them and drinking buttermilk with it.

16,037. Then the poor children are very badly fed?—Very badly fed indeed. That is only an instance of the kind of food they get. That is the general food brought into the school by the children of small farmers.

16,038. It is not enough to keep the children in health, is it?—No, indeed, it is not. I have known a case of a tenant lately—a small tenant—he dressed himself on Monday morning, and did not undress himself till Thursday night; he was at it with the corn harvest all the time, and the wife and children were with him binding the corn for those nights—cutting the corn by moonlight; he could not afford any assistance, and he had to do it himself or let the corn be ruined.

16,039. And the children were helping?—The children and the wife and the farmer himself. That is on a farm on the Countess de Morella's property.

16,040. Then the children who come to your school are very badly or improperly fed?—Yes, most of the small farmers' children. I think the labourers' children in the village are better fed, going by the food I have seen come down to school.

Mr. Grove.

16,041. Then looking at the children in the school you would consider that they ought to show that they have been underfed. Do you think they do?—Yes.

16,042. I mean looking at them as you look at the children in the school, do you think there is any difference—any appreciable difference—between those that are badly fed and those that are well fed?—Given the same natural ability and the same natural sharpness at first, of course the children who are badly fed are a great deal more difficult to teach.

16,043. That may be so of course, but do you notice it?—Oh, you can see it, yes. Re-examined. 18,480.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. David Edwards called and examined through an interpreter.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of Mr. David Edwards, Pantyffa, Llwyngwril.

"My farm, Pantyffa, is on the property of Mrs. Royle, Bala; and Mr. John Williams, of Gwernhefin, Bala, is the agent.

"The farm comprises some 20 acres of dry, thin land, very poor for all kinds of crops, especially in dry years. It has a very strong tendency to become overgrown with furze and brambles, and it is a continual struggle to try and keep these down. Most of the land is higher than the house, and it requires as many as five horses to take a ton load to the highest fields, owing to the steep nature of the land. This number of horses the farm of course cannot keep, and so I am compelled to get the loan of my neighbours' horses and await their convenience.

"The rent 70 years ago was 14*l.* 14*s.* 0*d.* when my wife's great grandfather was the tenant. 63 years ago he gave it up to his son, when the rent was raised to 16*l.* He and his son-in-law during their tenancies reclaimed upwards of two acres of waste land, and also built a very long stone wall, and the rent was again raised to 18*l.* In 1875 the rent was again raised to 22*l.* 8*s.* 0*d.* after a re-valuation of the whole estate made by Mr. Gillart, of Machynlleth. On the rent of 70 years ago therefore the increase is 55 per cent. On the rent of 16*l.* the rent was raised 27½ per cent., and the increase after the re-valuation 18 years ago was at the rate of 24½ per cent. These increases have been wholly on the improvements of successive tenants, the landowner spending practically nothing on improving the place.

"It is built on the side of a rocky bank, with one side sunk about four feet below the surface, and after heavy rains the water flows in a stream right up to the fire-place. The floor when I entered on my tenancy was of earth, and I at my own expense covered the kitchen with rough flagstones—the refuse from the quarry. What is now the dairy was used at first as a bedchamber, and the water used to run to the depth of several inches in a channel which had been worn at the side of the bed in the earth floor. At one end of the house is a baking-house, and that has been so badly constructed that the oven-chimney sometimes will not draw, and the smoke comes through the house wall (which has been built without mortar) and fills the whole house. This wall was not pointed or plastered, as it should have been, before the baking-house was built. During a driving rain storm the rain is driven right into the house through this wall. At the other end of the house is a pigstye which I built myself. The dairy is at this end of the house, and the house wall not having been built with mortar, the smell and liquid-refuse from the stye percolates through the wall into the dairy, and when the wind is in a certain quarter, the stench from the stye coming through the wall is abominable.

"The stable is far too small, there being only one stall less than nine feet wide for a pair of horses, and I sometimes have a yearling on the other side of a temporary partition behind these. The horses, owing to the confined space, often kick one another, and I have been put to a good deal of expense with farriers' bills, &c. The cow-house, again, is far too small, the width being under 15 feet, and sometimes I have as many as five cows in calf in this space, less than a yard for each to lie down. The roof is also in a very bad condition. The doors of all the buildings are very dilapidated. I have no cart-house. The pigstyes, such as they are, and the loft for storing corn, have been made wholly at my own expense. I have repeatedly called the attention of the agents to the wretched condition of the house and buildings, but have failed to get them to do anything. During the 17 years I have been a tenant the landlady has never once visited the place. The boundary walls and hedges are also in a very bad condition, there being many hundred yards which are only from three to four feet high. My land is level with the top of the walls in some places, and that of my neighbours' level with the top in other places. I have to get up from bed on moonlight nights to drive the sheep of my neighbours out of the swedes, mangolds, &c."

Chairman.

16,044. Do you say that that statement is correct?—I do.

Mr. Griffiths.

16,045. I think you said, Mr. Edwards, that the rent of this farm has been raised four times on different occasions?—Yes.

16,046. Have you had any sickness in your house?—No.

16,047. The water is pretty good, I suppose?—Yes.

16,048. Did you ever appeal to your landlord with reference to these bad smells and other things that you complain of?—No; I had not made the pigstye at that time.

16,049. Is there a sanitary inspector in the district?—Yes, I believe so.

16,050. Has he never been to see the place?—He was yonder about 10 or 11 years ago.

16,051. Very likely he has not been in office since that time?—I think he is in office all the time.

16,052. You think he received his pay, I suppose?—I cannot say.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,053. You say the soil on the farm is very poor. What crops do you raise?—Barley and oats.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

16,054. Do you get good crops?—Very bad crops this year.

16,055. And yet you have to plough it frequently, or else it produces weeds?—Yes, otherwise it will grow wild.

Mr. Grove.

16,056. What is the acreage of the farm?—I have never had the measurement, but I should think it is about 20 acres.

16,057. Is the landlord quite aware of the smallness of the cowhouse and the stable, and the general inconvenience of the buildings?—The agent ought to know. He has been yonder several times.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,058. Will you mention the name of the landlord?—Mrs. Royle.

16,059. Who is the present agent?—Mr. Williams, Gwernhefin, Bala.

Mr. Griffiths.

16,060. Have you any family?—Yes.

16,061. What is the number of your family?—A wife and six children.

16,062. How many bedrooms have you?—Two bedrooms, and four beds.

16,063. I suppose you have boys and girls?—Four boys and two girls.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ELLIS EDWARD WILLIAMS called and examined through an interpreter.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of Mr. Ellis Edward Williams, Hendre Eirian, Dyffryn, tenant farmer, Hendre Eirian.

"I was brought up at Bodgwilim, Llanaber, on the estate of Captain Wynn Griffith, Llanfair. The rent when my father took it in 1844 or 1845 was 55*l.* It was in about 15 years or less raised to 60*l.* Three fourths of an acre of the best land was taken from it towards the parish graveyard without notice or allowance. In 1871, I took it after my father had given it up. The railway when it went through took about three acres of the land. No reduction in the rent was given. In 1871 the rent was raised to 80*l.* My father had built some walls, but he received no compensation for them. I only held it for one year, leaving in 1872. I received notice to quit from them. The farm was held by me without a written agreement, according to the custom of the country.

"From 1873 to 1886, average of 13 years, 1*s.* 3*d.*

"From 1886 to 1893, average of 7 years, 9*d.*"

Chairman.

16,064. Do you say that that statement is correct?—Yes.

16,065. You received notice to quit in 1872?—Yes.

16,066. And your family had been on the land for between 40 and 50 years?—45 years.

16,067. What reason was given you for receiving the notice to quit?—They gave notice to quit to the estate altogether.

16,068. Was it going to be sold?—No, re-valued.

16,069. Was the rent raised in 1872?—Yes.

16,070. It was raised to 80*l.* in 1871. Was it raised again?—No, not after 1871.

16,071. Did you receive any compensation for the walls, and what you built?—No, nothing.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,072. Why did your landlord give you a notice to quit?—He knew I had taken another farm, and the person who took it, and the agent, were great friends, and I believe it was the work of the agent.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

16,073. Did you intend holding the two farms?—No, I did not.

16,074. You had taken this farm before you had notice to quit?—Yes.

16,075. I see you say that there is no agreement on the estates in the neighbourhood. Is there permission for a tenant, according to the custom of the country, to farm as he likes?—There was an agreement on the estate, but I had not signed one. I took the farm for a twelvemonth after receiving the first notice to quit.

16,076. Without an agreement?—Yes.

16,077. What was the reason you did not leave when you got the first notice?—I had not taken another farm at that time.

16,078. Is it a common thing in this neighbourhood for farmers to farm without agreements?—No, it is not common, but some do.

16,079. On whose estates have these advances taken place in the list you have handed in?—In Llanaber the greatest landlord is Mr. Abrams, of Barmouth.

16,080. And in Llandwywe?—Mr. Ansell, of Cors-y-gedol.

Mr. Griffiths.

16,081. You say three acres of your land was taken away by the railway, and you have had no compensation whatever?—More than three acres—four or five I should say.

16,082. I suppose if the railway took the whole farm, you would be obliged to pay the rent just the same?—It would be very difficult to do that.

Chairman.

16,083. This is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Who was the agent in 1871?"—Mr. John Rae.

16,084. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Since 1863 has not the neighbourhood of Bar-" mouth and Llanaber been opened up by " railways, and has not a good market arisen " for all agricultural produce?"—It is a little better, but not compared to the loss we experienced on the farm.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID HUMPHREYS called and examined through an interpreter.

16,084*a*. "Evidence of David Humphreys, Tirgawen, Llanegryn, farmer.

"I farm 272 acres, besides a sheep walk. The land belongs to W. R. M. Wynne, Esq., Peniarth. My evidence will relate chiefly to game. We take general advantage of the Ground Game Act to protect our crops, but there is no effort made to kill hares. We feel that a reform in the Ground Game Act, is wanted in its connection with the mountain. Under the present Act, the mountain is a kind of rabbit warren, and they catch almost all before the tenants can have the right to go to the mountain, although they receive loss. Last season the keepers caught in one day between 80 and 90 through ferreting. Another grievance the farmers have is, that they do not clear the coverts properly, which are connected with almost every field belonging to some farms. We ought also to have some law to protect us in this, either to compel proper enclosure, or else 9501, give the property in rabbits wholly to the farmer. It was altogether misleading to say at Barmouth that there were three rabbits to the acre, possibly for the whole estate they were three per acre. It is only fair to state that about a third part of the estate is marsh land, on which land there are no rabbits. There are several farms also without any, and others where there are no causes for complaint. On the other hand, on other farms, they suffered from fields of corn being eaten up, and they did not get back their seed. I can mention plenty of eye-witnesses to this. With regard to game, pheasants, &c., I believe no one would offer any opposition to the landlord taking all those which were wild; but this mode of rearing, causing very great unhappiness and loss for the sake of pleasure, is truly disgraceful. It is estimated by guess that about 1,800, including the old stock, are reared on the estate. To start with, the coops are placed on a convenient hay-field, and we generally get a shilling a coop for so doing. Then they are removed in the direction of the corn-field. Sometimes they are placed in a row by the side of the corn, and at other times in the woods outside the wire and corn, and in the covert, and often the tops of the stacks are seen covered with them. Beside the damage done to the barley after it has been cut, according to the custom of this country, it would be useless to plant beans, and loss is also suffered with the potatoes. I wish it to be understood that some parts suffer far more than others. On four farms, generally 800 are shot, but as Mr. Wynne has a yearly account, I would ask you to appeal to him lest I might be doing him a wrong. With regard to the damage done to the aftermath, I would be glad to make you eye-witnesses. The birds trample it, whether wet or dry, until it is pressed on the ground, and then it rots. I wish you to know that they cause more loss with the aftermath, than the rabbits, because rabbits run along the same paths, whilst they trample over the whole field with the exception of small tufts. We, as a neighbourhood, believe that the loss is at least 10 per cent. With regard to the struggle to pay the rent, it is almost incredible; the farmers and their wives work harder than their servants, they work like slaves. The rabbits and game are sent, when killed, to England to be sold."

See 16,166–17,706.

Chairman.

16,085. Do you say that that statement is correct?—Yes, I do.

Mr. Grove.

16,086. Have you made any claim for compensation for damage done by game?—No. I considered that Mr. Wynne knew about it, and I should be going against his wishes if I sent in a claim, and that would lead to disagreement between us.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,087. You say that the Ground Game Act is not used by the tenants, except for the purpose of taking rabbits. What is the reason why they do not make use of it, so far as hares are concerned?—We do that out of respect and goodwill towards Mr. Wynne.

16,088. Is it from respect or fear?—Out of respect one way, and fear also.

16,089. Which is the predominant feeling?—Fear.

16,090. I do not understand this sentence in your statement. "Under the present Act, the "mountain is a kind of rabbit warren, and they "catch almost all before the tenants can have "the right to go to the mountain, although "they receive loss." What is the meaning of that?—The keepers are those who go to the mountain; and the farmers are those who suffer loss.

16,091. Do not the farmers go up into the mountain to kill them?—The Ground Game Act stops them.

Mr. Griffiths.

16,092. Have they the right of grazing sheep on the mountain?—Yes.

16,093. What do you understand by keeping the coverts clear?—Too many are left in the coverts, so that they breed and come out to the fields and cause loss.

16,094. Will you kindly explain again what is meant by wild game?—All breeds that rear on their own accord—pheasants and partridges.

16,095. The mountain land is not wired off from the other land, is it?—No.

16,096. Do you think the land is let at a lower rate, owing to the landlord having the right to the game?—No, I do not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,097. I have another question to ask you with regard to farmers' wives. Do you adhere to the statement that farmers' wives work hard, and take part in the household work?—Yes, I do. One of them was telling me this morning that she had been churning, and she is on one of the largest farms on Mr. Wynne's estate.

16,098. Churning alone?—Yes, she and a boy.

16,099. What time do they get up as a rule?—About 5 o'clock in the morning.

16,100. Do they take part in the milking?—Yes, unless they are preparing breakfast.

16,101. And I suppose when milk is given for the calves they take a share of that work?—Yes, everything.

Chairman.

16,102. These are questions handed in by Mr. John Rowlands. The first question is: "Mr. "Wynne has mentioned, in his evidence at Bar- "mouth, that a farmer has bought a farm for "6,000*l.*, and now lives himself upon one of "Mr. Wynne's farms. Do you know to whom "he referred?"—I can only guess who he is. See 9510, 9596.

16,103. "Was the farmer referred to a large "grazier and cattle dealer, and his father before "him?"—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

16,104. "Are there any farms in your district "the rents of which are devoted towards "education, or anything else?"—Yes.

16,105. "What is the state of repair of those "farms, and are the rents high?"—I do not know. They are not very near to me.

16,106. "Do you know of any farms let to the "highest bidder?"—Yes, but not on Mr. Wynne's estate.

16,107. "Mr. Wynne in his evidence at Bar-"mouth said that the fences are bad. Can you "account for their bad repair?"—They must be getting worse every year, and the reason for that is that the rabbits have dug within the banks, and eaten the roots of the setting as well.

Chairman—continued.

16,108. Destroyed it?—Yes.

16,109. "Do you know where farmers' dogs "have been killed or poisoned?"—I think there was one pretty lately.

16,110. "Do you know whether farmers know "anything at all about the Agricultural Hold-"ings Act?"—Nothing, so far as I know.

16,111. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Do you not know perfectly well that other "people have made claims for game, and have "been paid, and that there has been no quarrel?" —No compensation has been paid within the last six or seven years, at any rate for the game.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EVAN EVANS called and examined through an interpreter.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of Mr. Evan Evans, Gesail, Towyn, farmer

"There are not many farmers who are free-holders in our district, and their number has decreased greatly during the last 40 years. The reason for this is that they receive higher interest for their money by selling them to the different estates. No one hardly buys his own holding here. The farmers are tenants, they and their wives undertake the work. The farmers' wives do the housework, rear the calves, and feed the pigs and fowls. The children in our neighbour-hood generally take to doing work on the farm. It is an exception for anyone to receive wages during the last 10 years, so the farmers have not received interest for their money nor wages for their children, and it may be said without hesi-tation that the present liabilities could not be met and wages as well.

"The work done by hired labourers and by members of the family is about equal. Most of those who are hired by the year live and board on the farms of those who hire them. The wages of the best men 45 years ago were from 8*l.* to 10*l.*, but by this they get from 28*l.* to 30*l.*, and those under 7*l.* by this receive 20*l.*, and women, who received from 3*l.* to 4*l.*, now get from 12*l.* to 15*l.* The houses have im-proved much, and the accommodation is greater. Few workmen live anywhere but in the villages. Those who hire on the farms are young men, and hire by the year. The supply is equal to the de-mand, except a little at harvest time; but not with thorough agriculture.

"We could believe that owners of estates enjoy comfort, as far as dwellings, and food, and opportunities for recreation go. And freeholders, if their land is unencumbered, or if the interest is higher than their present rent, have no comfort because their land is less in value. And farmers who are tenants are full of anxiety; although the houses and food are better, they are able to enjoy but few luxuries. I can speak for my fellow farmers that the majority are honest men, and anxious to pay their way, but the present state of agriculture, and of trade, make it impossible for them to do so. And land-owners, by their conduct in handing back from 10 to 15 per cent., acknowledge this, and farmers are glad of it; but it is a charity, and makes farmers feel almost like paupers. Before they enjoy real comfort they must get something, otherwise we must, like many others before us during the last 50 years, move somewhere, and the sooner the better, before we are undone. The depression has affected us during the last 15 years at least, bad seasons during the first five years, and reduction in prices during the last 10 years. This is a proof which has been acknowledged by landlords by abatements on two different occa-sions during the time. The landlords keep up the rents of their farms. Comparatively good wages are paid to labourers, and bread is cheap, and consequently farmers are obliged to suffer, and tradesmen feel from it. Certainty of compen-sation for improvements made is wanted, so that farming may be encouraged. Bearing the position of the population in mind, we do not believe in protection. As we farmers have to compete with foreign countries, we cannot do so without an appreciable reduction in the rents."

Chairman.

16,112. That is your evidence, and is it correct?—Yes.

16,113. Whom do you live under?—Under Mrs. Scott, of Peniarthuchaf.

Mr. Griffiths.

16,114. You say that the labourers flock into the villages and towns?—Yes.

16,115. Is it because they have no cottages in the country which are suitable?—No, the farmers do not hire them for certain, and for that reason we cannot get them to live in the cottages on the land.

16,116. Supposing they are given a plot of ground to keep a cow, would they be induced to stay there then?—There is an inconvenience with regard to the schools. If they have chil-dren it is no use for them to live anywhere but in the villages.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,117. You say that the number of freeholders has decreased during the last 40 years. In other districts which we have visited it has been said that about 15 years ago they increased very much, and that farmers bought their holdings in order to obtain security of tenure. Then I take it that in this district you feel pretty secure that you will not be turned out of your farm; is that so?—I think I can say that we are on the whole, provided that we pay the rent.

16,118. Will you kindly tell us what is the usual course adopted by an agent on the estates that you speak to in letting a farm?—He looks into the history of the applicant.

16,119. Do you know of any instances where he would tell an applicant to go and walk the farm and come to him and make a bid and afterwards to the next applicant the same?—I do not know that that ever happened on the estate on which I live.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

16,120. That is Mr. Wynne's, is it not?—No, Mrs. Scott's estate.

16,121. You do not know whether it has occurred on other estates or not?—Generally, farms are let at the previous rents, and it is pretty well understood what that rent would be.

Mr. Grove.

16,122. You gave an instance of two abatements, I think, in your evidence?—Yes.

16,123. Can you tell us what amount it was, how much per cent.?—10 to 15 per cent. the first time, and 15 now.

16,124. Do you know of any cases of permanent reduction in rent?—Yes.

16,125. Could you give us those?—Yes, there are two farms on Mrs. Scott's estate upon which they have done this.

16,126. Do you know what the amount per cent. was of the reduction upon those?—I cannot say exactly.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Humphreys called and examined through an interpreter.

The interpreter read the statement of the witness in the Welsh language and afterwards read it in English as follows:—

"Evidence of John Humphreys, Towyn, coal merchant.

"I am a merchant selling coal, lime, bricks, and manure, and give evidence for the parishes of Towyn, Llanegryn, and Llanfihangel, and I undertake to bring forward a few facts to serve as evidence to show in what straits and how very pressed farmers are, especially this year. They are chiefly my customers, and so I know something about them.

"I have observed that they always carry lime and manure to their land, according as their circumstances may be. If the times are good and successful, and they have something at their back, the farmers give extensively to the land; but if the prices are low and the seasons bad, and depression comes, they immediately proceed to give less. It happens to be so this year, more perhaps than in any year.

"In the years 1881, 1882, and 1883 I sold about 800 tons of lime yearly; this year the whole amount I sold was 435 tons, and from this 98 tons went towards building and repairing, so that which went to the land is 337 tons. If you would wish to have an idea over what extent of country that has been spread, I would take you first to one of the nearest farms from here to Aberdovey, thence we would go along the valley as far as Rhiwogo (a farm on the slope of Cader Idris by Llyn Talyllyn); after this we would turn and would go down along the parishes of Llanfihangel and Llanegryn and to the end of Celynin, and on until we reached Llwyngwril. This is a portion of pretty extensive agricultural land and contains a great deal of arable land. The lime has been spread pretty meagrely over the land, has it not? Perhaps some one might say there are three months before this year is over, and a great deal more lime may be carried before then. In reply to this, I may say that no one has carried scarcely anything towards the end of the year for many years. The time when it is called for, is during the spring months and the beginning of summer, and if you were to inquire at the three stations—Aberdovey, Towyn, and Llwyngwril you would find that there is no one else here besides who has sold but very little. I have been selling from 12 to 15 tons of manure yearly. This year I only passed off 7 tons.

"Another matter which shows how bad times are is the much greater amount of money which goes now to make a little business as compared with former years. Having made up my bills for the half-year terminating at the end of June and counting them all up, they make 1745*l.* 16*s.* From 9 to 12 years ago I did not have more than about 1,000*l.* on my books about this time of the year. I can also say I never saw such a difficult time to get money as this year. My liabilities for the last half-year terminating at the end of June were - £1,112 12 10

Receipts for the half-year - 866 2 3

Deficit - - £246 10 7

I received within the same period last year 1,188*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, or 322*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* more than I received this year; and as far as I can see now, it will not be much better at the end of the current half-year. I have started my trade since the commencement of the year 1868, and I can say, without hesitation, that I never saw more depressed times.

Chairman.

16,127. Is that your statement, and do you say it is correct?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

16,128. We gather from that, I suppose, that the farmers are very much in debt to you?—Yes.

16,129. Are there any allotments near Towyn?—The commons were divided about 100 years ago, but they have been taken possession of by the large estate owners.

Mr. Grove.

16,130. But you are speaking of commons; I ask you with regard to allotments?—There are no allotments.

Mr. Griffiths.

16,131. Can you tell us the reason why there is not so much lime used now as formerly?—The farmers are poor and disheartened.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

16,131A. Is it true as well that there is more labour attached to lime than to artificial manure?—Yes.

16,132. You sell artificial manure, do you not?—Yes.

16,133. Which do the farmers prefer as a rule, artificial manure or lime?—Taking everything into consideration, lime.

16,134. Do they sometimes beg of you not to send in your account until they have the produce of the crops?—They do not ask me not to send in my bills, but they do ask me to wait for some time.

16,135. Is that the reason then that you say there is more money required to carry on your business now than formerly?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM LLOYD called and examined.

16,136. The interpreter read the statement of the witness in the Welsh language and afterwards read it in English as follows:—

See next witness's evidence, Qu. 16,166.

"Evidence of Mr. William Lloyd, Llangelynin.

"My grandfather became tenant to Mr. Wynne, the present Mr. Wynne's grandfather, in the year 1818 to Nant Llanegryn. After that my father became tenant. My father took in 1892 Y. Waen as tenant.

"When living with my father in the year 1869 I took the Waen farm, which borders for the most part on the afore-mentioned place, namely, Nant Llanegryn. The rent at that time was 70*l.* At this time the house and buildings were in a deplorable condition, and in order to improve things I incurred many expenses to start with, by carrying materials towards roofing the cowhouse and raising part of the walls. Quite one third of the cowhouse had been roofed with straw.

"In 1880 my landlord, Mr. W. W. E. Wynne, the father of the present Mr. Wynne, died.

"In May of 1881 a new wing was built to the old house of Y Waen. I hauled all the materials. I carried 32 loads of gravel to it from a great distance, about two miles The gravel was raised from a place 250 feet above the level of the sea, the first mile coming down until within 40 feet above the level of the sea and the last mile going up to 400 feet, so the road was a specially steep and difficult one. In the year 1886 a part of the old house was re-raised, one side of the barn and the stable wall. I hauled everything towards this work, consisting of lime, timber, slates, and paving stones—some of these things from a very great distance. The cost of carrying towards this work and towards the work made in 1881 was as great as the cost of building, that is, the cost incurred for this was equal to that of the landlord, taking into consideration the inconvenient and laborious position of Y Waen.

"In 1884 Mr. Wynne took from the farm a field known as Caecoch consisting of 3 acres. This field was better than the ordinary farm land and was suitable land for growing wheat. Trees were planted in this field and the place was specially reserved for rearing game. The consequence of this was the birds and rabbits and the hares sheltered in this place and came on the cornfields and destroyed the crops. For one year I paid the rent in full although this field had been taken from me. After this for some time 1*l.* was returned to me and after this my rent was reduced by 2*l.*, which made it 68*l.* I also paid tithe on this field after Mr. Wynne had taken it away. I asked the agent for a reduction on this land but he refused, saying that the tenants paid the tithe on all the woods.

"In 1888 or 1889 a part of the meadow, about an acre and a half, on the driest and most sheltered part of it, was taken away where the cattle used to go to lie down. Room was made for the game here and at the same time a portion of land of a neighbour of mine, John Jones, Hen Shop, was taken for the same purpose. The result of this was my farm crops were destroyed. I did not receive a reduction in the rent nor any kind of acknowledgment for this. John Jones told me also that he had no acknowledgment at all. I had to keep on paying the tithe on this part also.

"In March 1892 I received notice to quit Y Waen. A few days after receiving this notice Mr. Wynne sent a bailiff to the farm and the agent with him to raise the rent for the year ending March 1893. I paid what the bailiff asked, the rent in advance. I do not know any reason why I should be treated thus. My family had been tenants to Mr. Wynne's family since the year 1817. I had spent a good deal on the land and had paid the rent in proper time and had cultivated the land in the best manner. Mr. Wynne had been speaking with me at my farm before I received the notice. He did not say a word with regard to the manner in which I was cultivating the land. Mr. Wynne asked, having seen that I was dressed in black clothes, where I had been. I told him that I had been burying one of the poor. After this we went on to talk about the poor in connexion with the Dolgelley Board of Guardians, of which board I was vice-chairman. Mr. Wynne said, 'Try to keep them down, Lloyd.' I attribute the receiving notice to leave the farm to the fact that I am a well-known Liberal and a conscientious Nonconformist, and that Mr. Wynne is a Conservative and is an enthusiastic Churchman. In the previous autumn I tried as chairman of the Dolgelley Board of Guardians to do away with the ex-officio guardians, and the same day at a meeting at Towyn held in connexion with the charities of the parish of Llanegryn I voted for devoting them towards intermediate education. I know that Mr. Wynne has consistently opposed these movements. The feeling of the country is that I was turned away from my farm because I was a Liberal and Nonconformist. The present tenant of Y Waen is a Churchman. He left the Methodist Chapel a short time before receiving the farm, and he married the daughter of a joiner on Mr. Wynne's estate. After the new tenant had gone to Y Waen Mr. Wynne made several improvements. He had refused to carry them out for me. It is a general complaint that the landlords make improvements and reduce the rent to incoming tenants whilst refusing the old tenants. I feel strongly that we must have changes in the Land Acts, and we must have a land court for the purpose of fixing a fair rent and giving some security to the tenant to remain on his land after labouring and spending his capital on it and certainty for compensation for improvements made on the land.

"Mr. Wynne's agent is a thoroughly inexperienced man. He does not understand the least about land. He is a joiner by occupation."

Mr. Grove.

16,136A. When the three acres were taken away from your farm, did they offer to reduce the rent?—No, they said nothing about it.

16,137. They did reduce the rent after a year or so by 2*l.*, did they not?—They gave me 1*l.* one year, and then 1*l.* each half year.

16,138. Did you ask for a reduction of the rent then?—No, I did not say anything.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,139. If I recollect rightly, Mr. Wynne stated at Barmouth that he had never given notice to a tenant to quit, only in one case, and that was for arrant bad farming. Do you think he was alluding to you then?—Yes, I think so—no, not for that. Ask it again please.

16,140. Mr. Wynne in his evidence at Barmouth said he never gave notice to a tenant to quit, except in one case, and that was to a tenant for bad farming. Do you think that he was alluding to you then?—I think that the only excuse was for such a feudal system as that—as they are acting for the feudal system only. That is the excuse.

16,141. Do you think it was to you he was alluding?—Yes.

16,142. Could you, if we desired it, bring witnesses here to testify to your good character as a farmer?—Yes, as good as my neighbours.

16,143. But you say that the general impression in the neighbourhood was this, that you were sent from your farm because you were a Nonconformist and a Liberal?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

16,144. When you left the farm did you make any claims for compensation?—No, I asked for the tithe allowance on the tithe for that field.

16,145. Is it a general thing for the farmers to pay the tithe upon the plantations?—I do not know. They talked about it at Peniarth, and that was what the agent of Mr. Wynne told me.

16,146. It seems a hard case that you cannot get the use of it, and that you have to pay a tithe for it?—Yes, I think so indeed.

Mr. Grove.

16,147. You spoke of the damage done by game, did you not?—Yes.

16,148. Did you make any claim for compensation then?—Yes, I mentioned it once when paying my rent—at the rent audit.

16,149. How did they receive your communication? What did they say to you?—They say there was not much damage, the same as Mr. Wynne.

16,150. Did you get any compensation paid you?—No, none at all.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,151. Could you tell us how many coverts there are for rearing on Mr. Wynne's estate?—What do you mean by that?

16,152. Land that has been converted into coverts for rearing pheasants?—There are many plantations. Do you mean plantations?

16,153. Yes, plantations?—I do not know indeed. The assessment of the parish, and the other parish too in connexion with Mr. Wynne's estate, will show I cannot count them. They increase them and widen them; they make them in new places.

Chairman.

16,154. The following questions are put by Mr. Vincent: "Were you not in fact a negligent tenant?"—No, I did everything in order to better all things belonging to me, and for the purpose of paying my liabilities.

16,155. "Were not your fences, ditches, and so forth, in very bad order?"—The rabbits had done a great deal to them lately and damaged them a good deal.

Chairman—continued.

16,156. "When the agent in March 1891 "came to serve the notice to quit were not your "stacks of the preceding harvest still un-"thatched?"—No, they were perfectly safe. I had secured them safely from all kinds of weather. I had no loss.

16,157. "Were there not pigs on the top of "the stacks and in the barn"?—They could not go as high as that, I believe.

16,158. Will you say "Yes" or "No"? "Were there not pigs on the top of the stacks and in the barn?"—I did not see any pigs either on top of the stacks or in the barn.

Chairman—continued.

16,159. "Did you ever thatch your hay-stack of 1890?"—Yes.

16,160. "Is it now rotting into manure?"—That was not hay.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,161. What was it?—It was something which had been carried there—something like waste.

Re-examined, 16,167.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Owen S. Wynne re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

16,162. What do you wish to state?—I wish, my Lord, to make a short reply to the three witnesses who have said anything to day affecting the estate that belongs to my brother, Mr. Wynne, of Peniarth. The first witness was the Rev. William Davies, minister of Llanegryn, and I must say that taking it altogether, he gave his evidence fairly. There was a field of barley which he mentioned, which he said was very much damaged by the game, belonging to a certain tenant. He did not name the tenant. I should have liked to know whether the tenant put in any claim for the damage that was done, I did not hear that he did. He also mentioned that the rents of some farms were raised, but I think he meant, so far as I understood him, the rents of farms before my brother purchased them.

See 15,842.

16,163. With regard to the barley fields, is there anything more you wish to say?—I do not know whose field of barley it was, and what I wish to ask is, did the tenant put in any claim for the damage done to it?

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,164. We have asked him to supply a copy of the claim?—Yes, I should like to know that. Then about the rents of the farms that my brother bought. I think I can state with regard to almost every farm that my brother has bought, he has had to reduce the rents and they pay him something like 2 per cent., as he said in his evidence at Barmouth. There has been very little improvement in the drained land, as Mr. Davies admitted. That is the fault of the tenants, and not the fault of the landlord. I may say that my brother, and my father before him, went to something like 11,000*l.* or 12,000*l.* expense in draining a large tract of land above and below Peniarth, and to that land there has been little or nothing done by the tenants. He mentioned, in one case, that there was very little intercourse between landlord and tenant, but when I questioned him, he said that did not refer to my brother and himself. I say that my brother is constantly going about the estate, and is continually seeing the tenants, and Mr. Davies and my brother have met very frequently, and have always had friendly intercourse together. I should have liked to know the name of the tenant who was refused compensation for the game trespass. I think the Commissioners asked him if he would supply the name.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

See 15,9

Chairman.

16,165. He said he would not supply the name?—As I have no opportunity of refuting it, I should like to know.

Chairman.

Mr. Davies, did you obtain the consent of that gentleman to hand in his name?

Rev. W. Davies.—I have not seen him.

Chairman.

Then when the consent is obtained, will you please do so?

Rev. W. Davies.—Yes.

Chairman.

16,166. Will you please continue, Mr. Wynne?—I think that is all I have to say about the Rev. William Davies' evidence, which, on the whole, I think is fair. The next witness was Mr. David Humphreys, of Tirgawen. He complained of the ground game, and of the hares. I say distinctly that I do not think you could find half-a-dozen hares on his farm at the present moment, and there are very few rabbits indeed. He complained that the keepers did not clear the rabbits well out of the coverts. I can only say that they always do their best to kill them. My brother said in his evidence at Barmouth that something like three rabbits to the acre were killed. He made a mistake, and Mr. Seebohm corrected him there, and instead of three rabbits to the acre, it should be one rabbit to three acres, and that makes a very great deal of difference. Mr. David Humphreys has always taken advantage of the Ground Game Act, and he uses his gun freely, and kills rabbits whenever he gets the chance, especially round the corn-fields in spring. He mentioned that a very great number of pheasants were reared. He exaggerated the number considerably. I know my brother rears a good many pheasants, but nothing like the number which was stated. When a field is taken for the pheasants to be reared, my brother pays 1*s.* per coop for putting them down, and the coops are on the field about six weeks, and the tenant has the aftergrass or can cut hay afterwards. He was paid for game trespass in 1888, and since that time he has not claimed compensation. I have no doubt my brother would have given it to him if he had applied. He stated that very likely if he had applied, he might have had a quarrel with his landlord. I say distinctly that his landlord would not have quarrelled with him at all; he would have considered the case very fairly, and I am quite certain if he had applied, he would have given him such compensation as is reasonable. He always has used the Ground Game Act, as I said before. He said the fences were bad because the rabbits eat them, and made holes in them. I say that is not the case, and it is not the case generally, for the fences are bad, and the farmers do not keep their fences as well as they should. I say that compensation was paid in 1888. The rabbits were killed in the summer and the winter, and whenever the keeper is applied to, he always goes and kills rabbits if they are doing any harm at a particular place more than another. The tenant also kills them too, and perhaps it is for that reason that he complained that too many rabbits are killed on the waste ground, because he would like to have an opportunity perhaps to kill a few more himself. I may add he has had his rent permanently reduced something like 25*l.* a year. A new house has been built on the farm; all his buildings are new, or nearly new, and he is having a new shed built for him now at the cost of about 60*l.* The whole of his drainage rate is paid by the landlord. Therefore, I do not think that Mr. Humphreys has very much to complain of. I say emphatically that I am quite certain that my brother, if he appealed to him for any compensation for trespass done, or damage done by game, would meet him in the fairest possible manner.

See 16,084*a*, 17,706.

e 16,136. "I should like to say a few words as regards Mr. William Lloyd, of Waen. I knew his father very well many years ago, and he was tenant of Nant. His father died, and his brother became tenant of Nant and this William Lloyd became tenant of Waen. His brother is tenant of Nant now, and an excellent tenant he is, and I hope he will be there for many years to come. Mr. William Lloyd says he took Waen in 1869 at a rent of 70*l.* I daresay he did. The rent is now 68*l.*; it has been reduced 2*l.*, as he stated just now, for that small bit of planting. He hauled, he says, to a new wing which was built to the house in 1881. I know all about it. It was a very small wing put on to the house, and I cannot but think that he is exaggerating with regard to the materials he carried. I may say this, that he was under one of the old forms of agreement, and when he went out he could have claimed compensation for haulage and any improvements he did to the farm, but he never made any claim whatever. He was under an old form, and we had not even contracted out of the 12 months' notice to quit, and he had 12 months' notice to quit. I may add that there was a small covert taken off his farm, and for this compensation was paid. The tithe rentcharge I cannot now remember about, but I am quite sure whatever was fair was paid to Mr. Lloyd. As regards game there is literally no game on that farm. I should think there is hardly any farm in the country upon which there is less game than Mr. Lloyd's. I do not think if you gentlemen were to go over it that you would find a rabbit or a partridge on his farm. Mr. Wynne talked to him several times about his farm, and it was in a miserable state. I may say I walked over it, and I do not think in the whole county of Merioneth there could be found a farm in a worse condition than Mr. Lloyd's. He is what I should call a pig of a farmer. I have had something like 1,700 tenants to do with, and I never came across, with any exception, such a dirty farmer as Mr. Lloyd, and I state emphatically here that it was not on account of his religious principles or his political views that he was turned out of his farm. My brother was away at the time, and I gave him notice (as his attorney) to quit the farm, and the sole reason he was given notice to quit was because the farm was in such a miserable state. The bailiff, who is here, went over the farm a short time before, on the 17th of March 1891, and found all his corn stacks without any thatching from the harvest of 1890. There were two pigs either grubbing at or running over one small stack that was almost on the ground, and there was a sow in the barn. There was a hay-rick of 1890 which was made in a field about a quarter of a mile from the buildings and which which was never thatched. Part of it still remains to be seen rotted into manure. The corn stack had gone to ruin between cattle, geese, and crows. Everything in the farmyard, out of it, and all about the place was in the most miserable state of dilapidation and ruin, and I have no hesitation in saying, as I have said before, that it was not on account of political principles that he was turned out of his farm, but it was because he was the very worst farmer that I ever came across in my life. I say that in justice to Mr. Wynne. I think I have made my reply as short as possible and said all that is necessary in reply to the insinuations contained in those three witnesses' statements.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Lloyd recalled and further examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

See preceding witness.

16,167. Do you wish to say anything upon what Mr. Wynne has just said?—Mr. Wynne never said a word to me about the cultivating of the land before giving the notice. He says so now; I think that is only his excuse for the feudal system on which he acted, he never mentioned a word to me.

16,168. Do you deny that your farm was in a very dirty state?—Yes, I deny that. It was not. It was as good as the neighbours.

16,169. It was in about the same condition?—Yes.

16,170. Then you say there were no pigs in your corn or in your barn?—No; nothing at all of that sort. The thrashing machine was there in April; nothing was thrashed in that way.

16,171. Have you got anybody you can bring to bear witness to the state of cultivation your farm was in?—I think my neighbours about the country can say the same.

16,172. There is nothing more you want to say?—Well, I say that Mr. Wynne has told a lie about me in that way.

16,173. You must retract that; we cannot have that sort of language used before the Commission at all. You may make your statement, and you can contradict anything you have said, but I cannot permit language of that kind you must understand. If you like to bring any of your neighbours, or any witnesses that you have, to prove that your farm was in the state of cultivation you say, we are perfectly ready to hear them when we have gone through the other evidence. Is there anybody in the room you would like to bring forward to speak?—There are men who know the facts in the room here.

16,174. If you bring them forward we shall be glad to hear them?—I suppose some of my neighbours could speak out.

Chairman.

Then go and see if you can bring any witnesses to prove what you say, and we shall be very glad to hear them after we have heard the other witnesses.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Morgan, called an examined through an interpreter.

The interpreter read the following statement of the witness in the Welsh language, and afterwards in English:—

"Evidence of Mr. John Morgan, Felin-ynys, Bryncrug, farmer.

"I wish to give evidence more especially for the parish of Towyn. I, with others, have come here to-day at the wish of the farmers, but I would prefer the larger farmers to come here themselves, those who could state their cause much better than I can. I believe that the reason why they do not come is because they are afraid of the agents and the landlords taking revenge upon them in the future for coming, and I am afraid that the same fear to a lesser degree possesses some of those who come forward.

"Mr. Humphrey Jones, of Caecenach"——

Chairman.

16,175. On whose property is that?—I am not sure. The farm is somewhere near Pennal.

16,176. Who is the agent?—I think it is Mr. Gillart.

Mr. Vincent.—It is the Marchioness of Londonderry's property.

Chairman.

Is there anybody here representing the Marchioness of Londonderry?

Mr. R. Gillart.—Yes, my Lord.

Chairman.

16,177. (To witness.) Is this farm on the Marchioness of Londonderry's estate?—Yes, as the agent said; I do not know myself.

"Mr. Humphrey Jones, of Caecenach, told me the other day that he intended giving a statement of the condition of farmers, that he had been that day asking the agents whether they were willing that he should give a statement before the Royal Commission on Land, and also that he had made the statement as smoothly and as finely as he could in order to start entering through this narrow gate, but he said that he had several other things far more important which he could say, but which he did not intend to repeat. See 16,

"The farmers said that their condition generally was one truly bad, and although they and their wives, and sons, and daughters worked hard, many of them from 5 or 6 in the morning until 8 o'clock in the evening, and the women often, namely, the wives, until they went to bed, and that they not only were hardly able, but could not keep the two ends of the string together without including wages for their work, and wages for the children, and the interest on their capital.

"Many of those who have paid rent and rates are unable to meet other liabilities such as those of tradesmen and artisans.

"And I also discovered that many of them borrowed money to pay rent, and others who had received money through other means were obliged to use it to pay the rent and other liabilities.

"They also complained that their condition was so bad that they were unable to give fair play to the land as they ought, and as they would wish, and also unable to keep as many workmen as they should, and consequently the country generally is obliged to suffer.

"I will endeavour to state a few of the reasons which are given by the farmers for the depressed state which has overtaken them.

"1st. Reduction in agricultural produce. About 20 years ago, 1*l.* 10*s.* was considered an average price for 4 bushels of wheat, whilst its present price at Newtown is about 13*s.* 6*d.*, a reduction of over 60 per cent. Sheep, which were sold for about 1*l.*, are sold for from 7*s.* to 10*s.* Wool has been reduced 50 per cent. Cows have been reduced I do not know rightly how much, and with regard to young cattle, which are small, no price at all is offered for them, and I think I am on safe ground when I say that agricultural produce has been reduced at least from 40 to 50 per cent., whilst the abatement in the rent is only from 5 to 15 per cent., and consequently although receiving 5 to 15 per cent. back, he loses from 35 to 45 per cent., and if deliverance does not come soon, many of the farmers will have lost everything, and will have become bankrupts.

"2nd. Increased wages.

"It was said that they could get a good man about 40 years ago for 8*l.* to 10*l.*, whilst now they have to pay from 25*l.* to 30*l.*

"They did not complain that the wages were too high for the workmen, nor did they suggest that they could live for far less wages, but brought forward the fact in order to show that their expenditure was far greater in these bad times than their receipts. They also say that keeping a family these days costs far more than it did in past times.

"3rd. Increase in the rents.

"Increase in rents when prices were good, and they have not been reduced when prices have decreased. One farmer said that the rent of his farm to his father was 40*l.*, but his present rent is 60*l.* Another farmer said that he went to a farm where those who preceded him were unable to live there. His rent then was 40*l.*"

16,178. Have you got the names of these gentlemen who made these statements?—Yes.

16,179. Is there any objection to put them in?—I am not sure; I did not like to put them down, but one of them is here to-day.

16,180. I should like to get the names. I do not like these anonymous statements?—The first is Mr. Hugh Phillips.

16,181. Is he willing?

Mr. Hugh Phillips.—My mother is the tenant. I do not know whether my mother would care to have her name publicly mentioned, but the thing is perfectly true.

"He gave himself up to cultivate and improve the farm, and the consequence was that he received a notice to quit. His rent was increased 5*l.*, and in a few years another 5*l.* increase was asked again.

"There is Tonfannau again. Its rent in 1872 was 153*l.*, and it was raised in 1875 I think 10 per cent., and a few years ago it was raised to 215*l.*"

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,182. Can you give us the date of that?—No; I cannot mention the exact date, beyond that it was a few years ago.

"And this is the farm of which Mr. Wynne said at Barmouth that he had bought it and had reduced its rent to 15*l.*, but he can reduce it another 15*l.* three times before it reaches the old rent without mentioning its reduction to answer the present bad times. And on the Ynysmaengwyn estate ——"

Chairman.

16,183. Whose is that?—Mr. Corbett's.

"On the Ynysmaengwyn estate the rent was raised by one agent and the other, so that it had become according to the country's idea the most expensive estate in the district, and the fact that three, four, and five have lived in most of the farms during the last 40 years, and many of them having left as bankrupts proves that the idea entertained by the country is a tolerably accurate one. I believe that there are only two or three who have been on the estate now for 14 years, at least so I was told, but I made no investigation myself, and I will mention an instance or two to show how tenants were treated, and how the rents were raised.

"There is Ysgyboriau farm on which I was brought up."

16,184. Is that on Mr. Corbett's estate?—Yes, it is on Mr. Corbett's estate now, but it was not at that time.

"My father and mother came to it when young after another tenant had been sold up."

16,185. What year was that in, do you know?—I am not sure. I had intended bringing the exact particulars, but it was about 40 years ago

"The belief of the neighbourhood was that they could not pay their liabilities out of it. But both of them had been brought up on farms, and my father was more than an average scholar in his time, and by their working hard and living economically, and prices for cattle being raised a little, they were able to pay their way moderately well."

16,186. What was the rent of that farm?—215*l.*

16,187. What was the size of the farm?—About 500 acres, including mountain and marsh,

Chairman—continued.

16,188. You came to it 40 years ago, and paid 215*l.* for 500 acres?—But the mountain was in that.

16,189. Including mountain and marsh?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,190. What was the acreage without mountain?—About 120 acres, or something like that.

[Statement continued.]

"Hundreds of tons of lime were carried in order to improve the land and to drain it as well as it was possible, and the consequence was that after 10 or 15 years, the rent was raised from about 215*l.* to 260*l.*

Chairman.

16,191. When was that?—I have the book at home, but I forgot to bring it.

16,192. Was it 20 years ago or 30 years ago?—It may be about 3 years ago.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,193. That is the very question I raised, because it has a very important bearing on the case.

Chairman.

16,194. You say about 10 years afterwards?—I think so. I am not sure, but I have the rent-book at home.

16,195. It would be something like that?—Yes, I think so.

16,196. About 10 years afterwards?—Yes.

16,197. The rent was raised to what?—260*l.*

"Soon I came to take the chief place instead of the head servant, and my two sisters to take the places of the female servants, and so avoiding the payment of wages to a servant and two female servants. In spite of this they were hardly able to get clothes for us and there was no interest to meet the 2,000*l.* or more which was laid out on the stock. My parents had become pretty disheartened and my father was trying to keep his eye open to find a cheaper place if it was possible to get it."

16,198. Are you in that farm now?—No.

16,199. When did you leave it?—About 16 years ago.

16,200. Why did you leave it?—It was too dear, and they were going to take a good deal of land from it, and still the rent to remain the same.

16,201. From 260*l.* they were going to make another rise?—They raised it from 260*l.* to 310*l.* first.

16,202. When was that?—That was 20 years ago.

16,203. That would be 1873. It was raised again in 1873 to 310*l.*?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

16,204. Was it Mr. Corbett's then?—No. It was soon after we had left he bought it.

16,205. Then it was after Mr. Corbett bought it?—About five years after the rent had been raised. We had been there four years then.

16,206. Were you in the farm after Mr. Corbett bought it?—No. They raised it after that.

16,207. They raised it to 310*l.*, then five years after that you gave notice to quit, did you?—Four years after that I received notice to quit.

16,208. What year was that?—About 1877. I am not sure exactly, but somewhere about that.

16,209. Then about 1877 or 1878 you left the farm?—Well I cannot be sure about that, it was somewhere about that.

16,210. But you are sure within four or five years I suppose?—Yes; it was about 16 years ago or something like that we left it.

16,211. Between 1878 and 1884 would it be?—Yes, about 16 years ago.

16,212. It was about 16 years ago that you left the farm?—Yes.

16,213. What compensation did you get?—Nothing.

16,214. You got no compensation at all?—No.

"And again they charged us what they considered was our share of the money and interest which went towards making the long ditch as it is called. But in order to try and meet our liabilities, my father endeavoured to make the rushy land into hay land by draining and levelling, by applying lime, and by manuring, and a pretty good crop of hay was had the first year after the corn. The second agent and the head agent came to see it and we received notice to leave. He asked for 80*l.* or 100*l.* rise in the rent; I am not sure which of the two."

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,215. What was the date when he asked for 80*l.* or 100*l.* rise in the rent?—About 20 years ago.

Chairman.

16,216. That was when it was raised to 260*l.*?—It was raised from 240*l.* to 260*l.*, then a reduction of 5*l.* was allowed for land taken away to serve as a plantation, and again the rent was raised from 255*l.* to 310*l.* If you continue the statement it is all detailed there.

"He asked for 80*l.* to 100*l.* rise in the rent. I am not sure which of the two; but however that may be, I am sure that it was raised 75*l.*, namely, from 255*l.* to 310*l.* My father was ill in bed, and before we finished taking it he died. We had such a strong attachment to the old home, and being young to go to a strange place, as well as in great anxiety as to the way to pay for it seeing we had taken it, I determined to cultivate it in the best possible way, because I did believe and still do believe that that is the best way to make land pay if it can possibly be made to pay. Within a few years the agent came to us again, and said that his landlord wanted two or three of the best fields we had for himself, and that if we were not willing that he should have them, he would be obliged to give us notice to quit on the following day, as it was the last day notice to quit could be given. I saw that our farm was being destroyed, so I told him that we would prefer receiving the notice. We did not receive it at that time, but within a few years another notice came, in order to free the farms for the purpose of sale, but inasmuch as no one came forward at once to buy the part of the estate around us, we were promised it as it used to be formerly and we went on cultivating and tilling the land. Soon after this some gentleman came forward and, in a way, half-bought the part of the estate which was left unsold. Shortly afterwards I was called to go to the agent. After going, the news I received was that he had let the hayfield, over which we had taken so much trouble, containing eleven acres of land, that he had taken this hayfield towards another farm, and that he had let about 30 acres of the land to another man, and 16 acres of the land which had been ploughed, and nothing was to be had for our trouble. Also that we were to lose the mountain field (ffridd), consisting of about 45 acres of grazing land for cattle and sheep, which, according as he let it, at that time was worth 140*l.* He said we should have five acres of land valued about 10*l.*, and so the rent would be raised to about 130*l.* But, if we were in the frying-pan before this, we saw at once that the end was nothing less than throwing us, feet and hands into the fire. We determined at once that it was better for us to flee for our lives whilst there was some breath in us, with the little property that was left, and so it happened. We were leaving the place where we had been bred with wounded hearts for a small place and to a small house; and when lying down in the new place for the first time, almost near the roof, my sisters were crying like children, and I could have done likewise."

16,217. What year was it when you gave up your farm?—About 16 years ago.

16,218. You got no compensation?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,219. Have you a copy of the agreement?—No, I have not a copy of the agreement.

16,220. Then about Hendy, whose estate is that and who is the tenant?—The present tenant is John Jones and the estate belongs to Mr. Corbett.

16,221. Are you going to talk now about John Jones or about the previous tenant?—I am going to speak about the previous tenant Mr. Lloyd.

16,222. Mr. Lloyd had this farm of Hendy under Mr. Corbett. What happened then?—He was there for a little time but not for long, only for a twelve month towards the end under Mr. Corbett. I am not sure of the time, but I think that is it.

[Statement continued.]

"With regard to Hendy. The rent was increased from 160*l.* to 180*l.*, then on to 240*l.* The farmers have every confidence in the landlord, Mr. Corbett, he is a very good landlord, but they do not think that he can quite understand the position they are in; when the bad times came, an appeal was made to Mr. Corbett and the agent, with the result that the following letter was received:—

"Ynys-y-Maengwyn,
"Towyn, Merioneth,
"20th August 1892.

"To the tenants of the Ynys-y-Maengwyn estate who have signed a memorial for the reduction of rents."

"I am truly sorry if any tenant of mine has any just cause of complaint in being over rented, but in such two cases two courses are open viz.: either tenant or landlord can give the usual six months' notice, or they can mutually agree to a revaluation of the farm or property in question. I can only promise to submit the appeal to my agent, but in regard to the future, I wish distinctly to inform the tenants of the Ynys y Maengwyn estate that whilst I am ready to consider the rent of any farm or property on its merits, I must protest against anything like a concerted combination of tenants signing what is called a 'round robin' for a general reduction of rents on the whole estate.

"JOHN CORBETT."

"Next I will endeavour to say what was said "about the estate of Mr. Kirkby of Llanfendigaid."

Chairman.

Does anybody in the room represent Captain Kirkby?

Mr. E. R. Kirkby.—Yes, I represent Captain Kirkby.

"That estate was raised in those good times. He returned 15 per cent. the last rent, I believe.

"There is again Mr. Wynne's estate. Some good things were said about him as a landlord. One thing is he lives on his estate at Peniarth, and he keeps several servants, and so spends a good deal of money in the neighbourhood. Another thing is he has not raised the rents much, but what the complaint against Mr. Wynne was, that he in the course of the years which have passed reared thousands of rabbits and hundreds of pheasants, and that they considered that nothing else, than that Mr. Wynne was sending his own stock in order to eat up the food of the tenants' stock, and they unanimously believed that Captain Kirkby's estate, the rents of which had been raised, was far better off than Mr. Wynne's, which had been eaten up to a very great extent by the rabbits and pheasants. Inasmuch as the landlords had raised the rents and others had allowed the game to destroy the produce of the farmers at a period when times were pretty good, the honey, as it were, has been taken from the farmer's hive in the summer and he has nothing to fall back on to meet the present stormy winter. When we go for honey to the natural bee, we take care to leave plenty of sugar for them for the winter, and if they do not get enough they are sure to die, and we are accustomed to give a little sugar to the bees in the autumn and prepare a cake for them over the winter. Five, ten, and fifteen per cent. is not enough sugar to keep the farmers alive over the present cold winter. Indeed it is nothing else but a little autumn sugar, and inasmuch as there is no hope that the landlords will give much autumn sugar the country hopes greatly that you gentlemen will be able to influence the Ministry to get a winter cake for the farmers, and if you care at all for their life the sooner the better. Many of them are afraid of becoming bankrupts before you are able to come round."

"The remedy is to get a good and effective Land Act, that is, to receive a certainty for a fair and just rent between the two sides, that of the landlord and that of the tenant; security of tenure of land and compensation for improvements; also a provision to receive money from the Government for interest, which must not be great, in order to allow them to buy their farms when they can get an opportunity. It will be well to have a land court to appeal to when the landlord and tenant are unable to agree, because when the agent is approached he says that he can do nothing without the permission of the landlord, and when one goes to the landlord he says that he does not know much about the thing and that he will speak to the agent, and it is very difficult for him to deal fairly with the tenant. As one said lately, it was because the rent was raised that he was able to get his wages, and it is evident that the landlords are not able to appreciate the position of the farmers, as Mr. Wynne's evidence at Barmouth shows, because I can say about some of the tenants that they owe me several pounds which they are unable to pay. With regard to that tenant who had bought land valued at 6,000*l.*, he had bought it before becoming a tenant of Mr. Wynne, because he and Mr. Wynne were buying at the same time, and he received an increase of 80*l.* from Mr. Wynne."

Mr. Grove.

16,223. You say that there is a fear of giving evidence, you think, in the minds of some of your farming friends. Have you good grounds for saying that?—Yes, I think so It is impossible to get any of the large farmers to come forward and give evidence. I am not at present a large farmer, and that was a sufficient reason for me.

16,224. Do they know the provisions of the Witnesses' Protection Act?—The most intelligent of them know, but they think that the old Welsh proverb is true: "Mae llawer ffordd o "ladd ci, heblaw ei grogi"—that there are many ways of killing a dog besides hanging him.

16,225. Do you know whether there are any allotments near to Towyn on Mr. Corbett's estate?—Not on Mr. Corbett's estate, but there are near Bryncrûg yonder. The tenant, Mr. Wynne, referred to had bought a farm and had divided it. I think that there is some call for such places, but it becomes too expensive.

16,226. What rent do they charge for the portion so divided?—3*l.* an acre.

16,227. What size plots is it cut up into?—5 acres and 10 acres.

16,228. And what is the land usually rented at which adjoins it on either side?—2*l.* an acre—according as the land is.

16,229. So that the ordinary run of the land is 2*l.* per acre, but that which is divided into allotments is put up to 3*l.* an acre?—From 1*l.* to 2*l.* ordinarily.

16,230. But the allotment land is about 3*l.* an acre on the average?—Yes, but about Towyn here, I think, it is 4*l.* an acre.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,231. Is that accommodation land?—Yes, it is.

16,232. In these allotment cases has the landlord erected any buildings?—Not generally.

16,233. Do they cultivate these allotments, or do they graze them?—They graze them.

16,234. I suppose each allotment is sufficient to keep a cow or two?—Yes.

16,235. When was the land cut up into allotments?—When the Ynysymaengwyn estate was sold those I refer to up yonder were made.

16,236. Were there no buildings made to shelter the cows?—The tenants themselves put those buildings up—some of them.

16,237. Were the tenants already on the Ynysymaengwyn estate?—No, they were workmen and artisans.

16,238. In the surrounding neighbourhood, I suppose?—Yes.

16,239. And they had to erect the buildings close to their cottages in order to shelter these cattle during winter?—There were buildings on several of them, but some buildings had to be put up

16,240. Practically, these men were erecting buildings on somebody else's estate, and not connected with the Ynysmaengwyn estate? Is that so?—Some each way—some on that estate and some on the land by the cottages where they lived.

16,241. Do you consider that a satisfactory state of things?—No, they complain that the places are too dear.

Mr. Griffiths.

16,242. Who was the owner of this estate when it was advanced from 214*l.* to 260*l.*?—Mr. Corbet was the name of the landlord before the present Mr. Corbett came.

16,243. It was the same family?—No, not the same family.

16,244. And was there the same state of things when the rent was advanced to 310*l.*?—Yes.

16,245. What do you mean by saying that they curtail their evidence before it should pass through a narrow gate. You say: "Ac hefyd " ei fod wedi gwneyd ei adroddiad mor " esmwyth ac mor fain ac y cawsai, i ddechreu " basio trwy y porth cyfyng hwnw"?—That he was afraid to say the whole for fear that the agent should take revenge upon him; and he was expecting some favour from the agent, and he was afraid that he would not receive that favour if he was to tell everything.

16,246. Then he kept some truths back which really ought to have been told?—Well, so he said.

16,247. Can you give me the value of the stock and crop on your farm when you lived there after your father's days?—About 1,500*l.* to 2,000*l.*

16,248. Can you also give me the value of your stock when you left?—It was that when I left.

16,249. Then you cannot give the value in your father's time?—No.

16,250. Do you think the agents are generally better paid if they advance the rent?—I do not think the interpreter translated exactly as I stated it.

The Interpreter.

The witness says in his statement:—"Fel y " dywedai un yn ddiweddar mae am godi y " Rhent yr oedd ef yn cael cyflog," which being translated is, "As one of the agents said lately, " it was for raising the rent he received his wages, " and not for reducing them."

Chairman.

16,251. What agent?—I do not like to mention his name. I could only mention the name privately.

Mr. Griffiths.

16,252. How is it you are not a large farmer now? A man possessing 2,000*l.* could manage a good-size farm?—When we left this place we found it was going too high, and we saw that we should be unable to pay for it. We had no other place in view, only this small place, and there was some land with it, and we had been accustomed to land.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,253. Did the tenants all sign this memorial for the reduction of the rent?—Yes.

16,254. Every one?—Yes, I think so, except one or two perhaps; I am not quite sure.

Chairman.

16,255. Mr. Vincent has handed in this question: "Who is the landlord of this allot- " ment land let at 3*l.* per acre"?—The land down here belongs to Mr. Corbett, but the land up yonder belongs to Mr. Roberts, of Perfeddnant.

16,256. Mr. Gillart asks this question: "Was " not the advance of rents on the Ynysymaen- " gwyn estate you speak of made in the time " of the previous owner, Mr. Corbet, and not in " the present Mr. Corbett's time, who had no " connexion with the previous Mr. Corbet"?—Yes. I said so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. RICHARD GILLART called and examined.

Chairman.

16,257. Are you agent to the Dowager Marchioness of Londonderry?—Yes.

6,177. 16,258. Do you wish to say anything with regard to the conversation that you have heard mentioned?—I wish to say that I had no conversation with Mr. Humphrey Jones of Cae Ceinach as to his not giving evidence to this Commission, but quite the contrary. I did not in any shape or form prohibit him from appearing here to-day, or at any of the other sittings to give evidence if he thought it necessary to do so.

Chairman—continued.

16,259. And the Dowager Marchioness of Londonderry I know has no objection to the tenants coming to give evidence; in fact, she wishes them to do so?—Yes, she would be glad for them to do so.

Mr. Grove.

16,260. Did you have any conversation with him as to his coming here to give evidence?—None whatever. He may have mentioned the Commission in the course of conversation, but I certainly never had any intention of saying anything to him to prohibit his coming here to-day. Re-examined, 18,427.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Bala.

TWENTIETH DAY.

The Shire Hall, Bala, Merionethshire, Thursday, 5th October 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN)

LORD KENYON.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. RICHARD JOHN LLOYD PRICE recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

See 8178.

16,261. We will go on with your evidence at the point at which we left off when we last sat at Bala. Will you please tell us what is the average size of farms in your district?—The size of the farms is from 10 to 300 acres; but most of them are under 100 acres.

16,262. Have any holdings been consolidated in the district?—Yes, there have been a few holdings consolidated, but not many, and those that have been so were on account of our not being able to do the required repairs and building at the time when the farm became vacant, having older premises to do first, and the adjoining farmers were always glad to get the farms joined.

16,263. What has been the effect of consolidation on, first of all, production?—I do not wish to argue particularly in favour of consolidation, but our experience leads us to believe that the large and medium-sized farmers in this district are the best off, and so can afford to put more manure on their lands, and generally treat their farms better. The medium-sized farms are more fitted to be worked with one team of horses, and find just the right amount of work for them, and also as regards labour, the number of labourers kept seem to fit better into a medium than a large or small farm, and the farmer gets better value for his money.

16,264. What do you say as to the employment of labour?—As to the employment of labour I consider the consolidation of farms a good thing in many instances as offering a means of rewarding the industrious small tenant, who has made money in a little farm, by giving him a better chance of getting on; the larger farms are in most instances doing the best in this neighbourhood, and good small farmers are always asking for larger farms. I have also, on the other hand, as has already been stated, in many cases separated farms where such could be done without injury to the tenants. We have only seven large farms on the estate at a rent of over 150*l.* The medium rents are from 60*l.* to 150*l.*

16,265. What is the state of cultivation and nature of farming pursued?—The question as to the scarcity of labourers is the first corollary to that. Labourers are certainly scarce, although they can always be obtained, only wages are so high, being from 2*s.* 8*d.* to 3*s.* 4*d.* per day, or from 20*l.* to 30*l.* per annum, besides their board and lodgings. As to fences, I never found cause to complain much of fences, ditches, or watercourses not being attended to, still there is room for improvements.

Chairman—continued.

16,266. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—Nothing of importance to my knowledge.

16,267. To what extent has waste land been reclaimed by tenants in your district?—No cases respecting waste land have arisen in my time.

16,268. Is there much land still waste which is capable of profitable reclamation?—Pretty nearly all is already ploughed up that is likely to be of value without a large extra expenditure in drainage and so forth. During the years 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876 I laid out over 4,000*l.* in draining marshy ground on my estate; and from 1876 about 100*l.* worth of draining pipes every year has been given to those tenants who needed them, and they did the draining, except the planning and the laying down of pipes, which was done by my men.

16,269. Have you anything to say about embanking rivers?—Land cannot be gained in this part by embanking rivers, but some may be saved, which has been, and is still, being done. There are the statistics as to draining, which I will hand in. (The witness handed in the paper.)

16,270. Has there been any arable land laid down in pasture?—There has not. The system of agriculture is carried on almost in the same style as usual.

16,271. Has there been any increase or decrease of root crops?—Not much alteration, but there ought to be to ensure winter feeding. I have been giving prizes for the encouragement of root crops for some years, but it has failed, much to my regret, to induce much improvement in this respect. We consider that growing more root crops would benefit the farmers very much more in Wales by enabling them to feed their sheep in the winter, which is one of the points they neglect, and which ought to be better attended to.

16,272. What improvements are generally made in your district by the landlords?—Nearly all improvements. Draining, new buildings, new dwelling-houses, and general repairs. Fences and posts are always given for fencing, and timber for hay and corn sheds, and for gates, &c. The only thing done by the tenants is some fencing and a little draining, for which they get the pipes given them.

16,273. Is there any compensation obtainable in your district by agreement between the landlord and tenant?—Yes, by agreement between landlord and tenant thus: "For all new farm "buildings erected by the tenant, the whole "value of the cost thereof if erected within 12 "months previous to quitting; and if erected "more than 12 months, one twentieth part of "such value to be deducted for every year "during which the said building shall have "been erected previous to such period."

16,274. Do you know of anyone contracting out of the operation of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—The 1875 Act being merged into the 1883 Act, we do not contract out of the Act except as regards the six months' notice to quit instead of the 12, which I believe the tenants prefer.

16,275. Is there any custom of the country?—There is no custom of the country affecting landlords.

16,276. Do farmers often apply for their landlords' written consent for improvements?—Farmers do not ever apply to me for a written consent, as they have their agreements already which cover improvements, and they prefer to have the improvements done by their landlord. Our agreements cover tenants' improvements.

16,277. You have put in the agreement?—Yes, I have put two in, one in English and one in Welsh.

16,278. What have you to say about tillage and cultivation?—The matter is settled between the outgoing and incoming tenant by appraisers chosen by both sides. The outgoing tenant on this estate gets the opportunity of selling (at a valuation on both sides) all his crops before consuming any of it to the incoming tenant; failing this, they get permission to sell it all out off the premises.

16,279. Have you anything to say about permanent improvements?—The whole value of the cost thereof, if erected within 12 months previous to quitting, as I said before, is paid as per agreement.

16,280. Have you any cases in your district where an outgoing tenant has failed to obtain sufficient compensation for his improvements?—Not from us. We have paid compensation whenever asked.

16,281. Is there any right recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of their interest in their holdings?—No.

16,282. Now kindly tell us a little about the sale of the sheep on the sheep farms?—The custom is that the outgoing tenant is to sell his sheep to the incoming tenant at a valuation, and, as a rule, the price is higher by about 2*s.* 6*d.* per head than the market price is at the time.

16,283. What do you think of the Agricultural Holdings Act? Is it workable?—We work under agreements which appear to be more satisfactory to the tenants.

16,284. Have you anything to say about game preserving?—I keep a game farm for the supply of pheasants' and partridges' eggs to the public.

Chairman—continued.

The pheasants are reared chiefly on the Home farm, and another farm in hand for the purpose. If other land is required for rearing, and used for that purpose, the tenant is paid his own valuation, and they are anxious to get the chance. The pheasants are put into wire pens as quickly as possible, and the corn on which they are fed is purchased by me. Compensation is paid if demanded before the cutting of the crops. About 1*l.* an acre for five weeks is the average sum paid for the hire of fields to the tenants for rearing.

16,285. Do your tenants avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act?—The tenants, or nearly all, kill rabbits when they please, and did so by permission from me long before the Ground Game Act was contemplated.

16,286. Is there much damage done by game to the crops?—The farms damaged by game are let specially low.

16,287. Your tenants of course are not required to beat?—If they do they are well paid and fed, but the tenants are above being employed in this way.

16,288. There is nothing about it in the agreement?—No, the answer is practically what I have just said: they are above it.

16,289. Do you say anything about the preservation of game affecting cultivation?—No, I have not prepared any answer to that.

16,290. What proportion do offences against the game laws bear to other offences against property?—For that we have been to the magistrate's record, and we find that the offences against the Game Laws are 4 per cent. as compared with other offences; that is for the whole district—the Petty Sessional District.

16,291. Who exercises the sporting rights over Crown lands and commons?—I have purchased the sporting rights from the Crown over all my property. I may say I think poultry farming might be pursued a little more with advantage in the district.

16,292. Is there any instruction given in butter and cheese making?—There have been dairy classes held in connection with the Aberystwith College and the Agricultural Show—that is the Merionethshire Agricultural Show. The experiments were held at the Rhiwlas Home farm buildings once for a week, and also at Bala and Maesywaen—for a week at each place.

16,293. Is any instruction given in other agricultural subjects?—The Merionethshire County Council at their last meeting passed a vote for instructions in dairying, agriculture, and cookery, so that they have done their duty.

16,294. Do the tenants avail themselves of that privilege?—We have not had the dairy classes, but judging from the way in which they were patronised a short time ago, I should think that they would become very popular and be well attended.

16,295. How is the facility for the carriage and disposal of produce affected by railway rates?—The railway rates on all produce are so very high that it is impossible to send any goods thereby without being too heavily taxed by the Railway Companies' rates to gain much profit because the profit and even more is swallowed up by the heavy railway rates, whereas the freight by sea is so moderate that farmers are able to reach the British market and get some profit on their produce, if within reach of the coast. We consider it a great hardship in this part of the world that meat can be taken to London cheaper from New York than from Liverpool, and also that other dairy produce from Holland and Germany should be able to get to London at a cheaper rate than from the English towns on account of preferential rates being granted by steamboats and railways from foreign countries. In my opinion preferential rates ought to be abolished before the English farmers will get a fair chance again. The maximum and minimum rates are unfair, being almost the same for large quantities as small; a small quantity costing very nearly as much as large.

16,296. Is there any combination in the nature of a trades union among landlords not to accept tenants of a certain description?—Not that I ever heard of.

16,297. Or amongst farmers to fix wages?—No.

16,298. Have many tenant farmers bought their own holdings in this district?—Yes, several small holdings. Mr. John Jones, Cefn Farm, and others. Mr. Robert Roberts, the tenant of Bronygadair, Carnarvonshire, bought the whole of my estate in that county, and has resold it again to become a tenant once more under Mr. Graves.

Mr. Grove.

16,299. Probably he became a freeholder with borrowed money?—No, I think not. I think he was pretty well off.

Chairman.

16,300. What is the present condition of freeholders as compared with the yearly tenants?—Freeholders are in a very much worse way than tenant farmers, having to pay all their own tithes and taxes, and do their own repairs, besides paying high rents in the shape of interest on money borrowed to purchase their freeholds.

16,301. You agree with what we have heard, that the tenant farmers and their wives work very hard. We have had a great deal of evidence to that effect?—I do not agree that the women work in the fields, I never saw them work in the fields.

16,302. I do not think they said that, but that they worked very hard?—Yes, some of them do, but some of the better farmers do not work at all. The amount of their labour depends upon the size of the farm, but at any rate they generally assist in the rearing of stock, in harvesting crops, and even in the planting season, and they work hard at times, but they are not so busy during the intervals. However, all the house and dairy work depends more or less on the skill and ability of the farmer's wife. The wife works in the dairy.

16,303. What provision is made for the farmer's family?—In this district we find that the children are generally put into a farm or some other living by their parents.

Chairman—continued.

16,304. Can you tell us anything about the hired labourers?—In almost every farmhouse there are rooms to lodge the necessary hired servants or labourers, especially single men.

16,305. Are the labourers settled in cottages?—All the villages about here are composed of labourers' cottages. The labourers prefer to live in villages where they can meet and gossip at nights, and the isolated cottages are not popular—in fact we have two vacant at the present moment. They mostly live in their employers' finding. The labourers' wages are from 2*s.* 8*d.* to 3*s.* 8*d.* per day, or from 20*l.* to 30*l.* per annum, besides their board and lodging. With food the farmers pay about 9*s.* to 10*s.* per week. I may mention we pay 2,657*l.* in salaries and wages per annum.

16,306. What has been the fluctuation in wages during the last 50 years?—The chief fluctuations in wages in this district are caused to a great extent by the slate quarries at Festiniog, Bethesda, and elsewhere, which have at times given very high wages, and our labourers at once left the land labour for the high rate of wages to be obtained at the different quarries, and scores of them have settled for life in the quarry neighbourhoods.

16,307. Have you anything to say about the nature of the accommodation provided at farmhouses for labourers?—The labourers live with the farmers, and in most farmhouses a separate room is placed at their disposal.

16,308. And have they somewhere to sit?—Yes. As to their sleeping accommodation we have no complaints from tenants on this score.

16,309. Is there a place in your farmhouses where there is a sort of sitting-room for them?—Yes. The farmers find them one, they generally give them the back kitchen, but as a rule they do not stay very late in it, as they prefer to go out at night a good deal.

16,310. What is the general standard of comfort as to house accommodation and opportunities for self-improvement in the case of estate owners?—Most of the workmen on this estate have a house and garden on the estate at a moderate rent, and have ample opportunities for self-improvement, because they have, whenever possible, an option of taking a small farm on the estate. As to the opportunities for self-improvement of tenant farmers, a notable instance occurs on this estate in the case of T. E. Ellis, M.P., whose father, Mr. Thomas Ellis, has held the farm of Cynlas (of about 158 acres) for over 38 years. The son is now Whip to the Home Rule Party. The sons of Fedwarian and Crynierth Bach have attained the position of ministers. The daughter of Tynycoed is a schoolmistress under the School Board. The son of Morris Evans, late of Llanfor, has been ordained. The daughter of Llaithgwyn married a partner in the firm of Messrs. Shoolbred of Tottenham Court Road, London. The son of a small farmer is now agent to this estate. The son of a tenant of Frongoch was the late Dr. Edwards practising medicine at Cerrigydruidion. That shows how people of this estate have raised themselves in life. I have always been well ahead of legislation as regards benefiting my tenants, having given them the benefit of compensation for improvements, the killing of rabbits, and having paid the tithe long before these matters were made compulsory. I have also lately instituted a plan by which the number of sheep is limited on each sheepwalk to a certain number, and for every sheep kept less than that number compensation is paid to the tenant at the rate of 1*s.* 6*d.* a head; by this means the ground is not overloaded with sheep, and they consequently improve in condition.

16,311. Have you had any migration of farmers or labourers?—I have explained about the migration of labourers in a former answer, but as to farmers we always try as far as possible to keep the estate in a family circle, and avoid as far as possible tenants from other parts of Wales.

16,312. Do any of the farmers keep diaries or farming accounts?—Very few diaries and farming accounts are kept at all. This is a point of great drawback to our farmers in general. In consequence of no careful account being kept they are unable to show clearly either a profit or a loss, and they really do not see how they stand, whereas if proper books were kept of all their transactions it would soon prove to be an invaluable guide to them, and they would also see what they paid for their labour, religion, luxuries, and style of living. I may say I never heard of an instance of any farming accounts being kept until yesterday when a tenant came to me and said he kept accounts, and I have asked him to let me have a sight of them, and he has promised to do so.

16,313. When in your opinion did the trade depression begin in your district?—The depression came in with the import of foreign produce especially cattle alive and dead, to the English and Welsh markets, which diminished the demand for the store cattle, which is the principal thing that the Welsh farmers produce and offer to the market, and the graziers or the butchers. The sheep trade has also suffered in the same way.

16,314. You have told us what are the principal causes of depression?—Yes.

16,315. What remedies do you suggest for improving the profits from land?—We are very much puzzled to know what are the principal causes of depression when the rents are very much about the same as they were 40 years ago, and also rates and taxes, and the price of all agricultural produce is nearly double as high even now in what we call very bad times as it was then, and yet the farmers complain that they are in difficulties. It must be the great rise in the price of labour, the increased cost of carriage by the Railway Companies in consequence of the high railway rates and generally a greater extravagance in living.

16,316. What remedies do you suggest for improving the profits on land?—I suggest to get all railway rates on farming produce reduced to at least half what they are at present; also parcels rates by rail and by post, and the establishment of special ramifications of the Parcel Post service for the benefit of the rural districts. If the district country roads were improved to the upland farms it would be an immense improvement of access, so as to get an easy and quick connection with all the consuming towns. Another great and beneficial improvement our country farmers ought to get is a right and proper process of making butter, and so to get it, as they easily could, to such perfection that no butter in the whole world could possibly surpass it. That means that there should be butter factories, and consolidation of farming produce—butter factories, cheese and milk factories and such like ought to be produced by co-operation amongst the farmers. Sheep farming has been said to be the backbone of the Welsh farmer. Well, more attention should be given to sheep farming by carefully improving the breeding and rearing of sheep and preventing overcrowding, and so overloading the mountains on which they are to graze. I think the sheep on each run should be limited to a stated number such as the sheepwalk will properly carry. Such a result would influence better prices from buyers. Our farmers are in the habit of overstocking their farms with cattle and sheep, when by keeping a less number they could get better quality, and make better beasts and demand better prices. What I should like to suggest as being a great benefit to the country is this, if a general public Act could be passed giving the County Councils power to grant to companies (on terms approved by the Local Government Board) the right to lay down steam tramway lines at the edge of main roads joining on from county to county the benefit to the farmers would be incalculable. The steam trams would go right through the villages past the rick yard and the cow barton, so no loading and unloading from carts would be required. A steam tram draws up at the door like a 'bus when it is whistled for, and the farmer would be able to put his produce straight on board and get it to the market towns at once. I look for great improvement in the future from the increase of ship canals bringing cargoes to inland places, as has been done at Manchester, thus bringing the sea competition to inland places. Also the State ownership of ordinary canals and their improvement, and, as I have said before, steam tramways laid along the roads under agreement with the local authorities. If the traders will only concentrate their energies on these three points instead of trying to bring about impossible legislation with the railway companies, I think it would be better for them. Then, there might be light railways, and improvements in the parcels post, which I hope to see, and which, I think, would be of immense benefit to the farmers, especially if the service could be conducted in the same way as it is in France, where a horse and cart is given to the agricultural postman as he goes along to the town, in case the parcels are too heavy for him to carry. Also, there might be improvements of roads and by-roads also. I think that all wholesale shopkeepers and butchers ought to be obliged to state what sort meat they are selling to their customers—whether it is foreign or English. At present they can sell foreign meat as English meat without incurring any penalty. The English beef, if well grown and fatted, will still hold its own. I have been especially asking questions of all the judges at the agricultural shows I have come in contact with this year on that point as to whether they do not think the English meat would still hold its own, and the answer in every case has been, yes, if properly fed and fatted, English beef will be always bought, especially by the poor man and miners and colliers, who will always buy the best of everything, and have full value for their money. As I said before, I think the consolidation of farming produce by manufactories of butter, cheese, and in England, jam, would be of benefit. Again, many a farmer could benefit himself by studying means of laying down the seeds for hay and other permanent pastures. To my knowledge it is a fact that dirty poor grass seeds have been collected, and then sown on good fields and land. The farmers imagine that they save a few shillings by not buying good, clean, grass seeds, the consequence being that they lose several pounds, and lose also for three or four years in the quality and quantity of the produce, time wasted, labour lost, good land spoilt by sowing bad and worthless seeds. The same would also well apply to other crops. In order to obviate on this estate the overcrowding of the sheep runs, and, therefore, to bring about an improvement of the sheep upon this estate, I have fixed a certain number to be allowed to each farm, marking these with my own brand, and then making the tenant an allowance of 1*s.* 6*d.* per sheep for every sheep that he keeps less than the prescribed number, and charging him 1*s.* 6*d.* per sheep should he keep more. Last year we paid 61*l.* compensation in this manner. I consider it would be an excellent thing if this plan were adopted on all Welsh estates. We think it will be a great improvement on this one at all events.

16,317. What money have you spent on repairs and improvements?—I have spent over 100,000*l.* on repairs the last 30 years. I cannot tell you the exact sum, but it is considerably over 100,000*l.* From the year 1877 to 1886 inclusive, the sum of 23,134*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* was spent on this estate in repairs and improvements, and the sum of 9,998*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.* has been spent in improvements made for the benefit of my tenants from 1887 to 1891 inclusive. It is about 25 per cent. per annum on the income. During the last 30 years I have expended at least 100,000*l.* on repairs and improvements, and in no case of such improvements has any interest been charged; neither are the rents raised as a rule.

16,318. Have you anything to say about allotments or cottages?—Most of my present tenants are descendants of families who have been holding the same farms for several generations, and, in one instance, for over 300 years, namely, Mr. William Evans, Tynant, now retired to a part of his former holding, Penmaenganol. Some have been raised from a small holding to a bigger farm. Mr. Morris Jones' son, of Tyncoed, is now at Frongoch, a very big farm, and Mr.

Chairman—continued.

Edward Vaughan,—who to the great regret of the whole, I think I may say, of this district, was buried last Monday,—from Tytanygraig, 80*l.* rent, to Penisarllam, a farm of 400*l.* rent; and there are many others.

I wish to put this book in as showing the notices given of the account of killing rabbits; it is entitled "Rabbits for Profit and Rabbits for Powder," and written by myself. I also hand in a plan of the warren fences which I promised to do. I may say I have been twice elected on the county council, and am now a member thereof. As to the Allotments Act asked about at the former sitting at Bala, there has been a committee appointed for that point, and they reported to the last council that there being only one application, and that one not having a good title or reason to show, that they did not advise the application of the Act at present. The council have already decided to make grants for agricultural and dairy lectures and cookery.

I was the means of starting the Welsh whiskey distillery at Frongoch which affords an excellent market for the Welsh barley, and during the erection thereof over 2,000*l.* cash in hand was paid in cartage to my tenants. I have now started a Fuller's earth works at Glanyrafon also, which will employ a good many labourers, as well as the brick and tile works at Frongoch, now in contemplation, a very valuable bed of blue clay having been recently discovered there, close to the railway line. I also hope to see ere long the upper valley and watershed of the Treweryn turned into reservoirs for the supply of Crewe, Chester, Leicester, and other towns on the way to London. This will employ much labour and find good markets for farm produce.

The establishment of brick and tile works at Frongoch will also be of great benefit to the farmers and the neighbourhood generally and employ much labour. The villages here are all labourers' cottages. They prefer to live in these, and a labourer living at Rhyducha refused to live at Rhiwlas gatehouse, he preferring his own house and walking two miles to a cottage at Rhyducha, though a cottage free of rent was offered him close to his work. The wives prefer living in company and close to shops. Unmarried men prefer living in the farm-houses because they get food and lodging free, and the master is bound to see to their comforts, and one of my tenants told me that now they insist on meat and tarts and pudding at dinner. I am afraid the tenant farmers would object to labourers' allotments as cutting up their farms.

I am a resident landlord, and though I continue to live part of the year in Llanfor and part in Llangower parishes, I cannot live in Llanuwchyllyn, having no house there, but should have to live at the "Goat" in rooms. As a landlord I have to do every bit of repairs on my estate—put in every nail almost.

My wife seldom leaves home and knows many of the tenants personally, and herself has a large milk farm on the home farm, and makes that pay well, sending the milk to Manchester,

Chairman—continued.

Festiniog, Barmouth, and lately even to London. The consolidation of Plasynghynllwyd and Garthucha was referred to at the last sitting of this Commission, and some explanation is desirable perhaps. The tenant of Garthucha preferred to go to Plasynghynllwyd, his wife being a relative to the wife of Garthucha; in fact, both wives being sisters. The arrangement was a mutual one between the farmers, the one from Plasynghynllwyd getting a better farm in a lower climate at Machynlleth nearer to the seaside, his wife being ill.

Under my agreements the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1875 is contracted out of, and not that of 1883.

Under the last clause of my agreement the sum of 55*l.* compensation was paid to Mr. John Jones, late of Rhydyfen, and the sum of 55*l.* crop purchase was paid to Mr. John Richards of Llaithgwin, and the sum of 76*l.* 15*s.* trespass money was paid in 1884 to other tenants; also 30*l.* paid for damage done by timber snigging to Mr. Davies of Brynbanon.

I believe that tenants prefer six months' notice to twelve, as they can move sooner.

Compensation for land taken for planting is always given at the price of the average rent per acre of the farm; but no planting has been done at Fedwlwyd. I should like to put in a list showing the return of interest on properties purchased by me.

It shows an average return of about 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent. I thought it might be interesting to the Commission to know that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,319. Did you hear the evidence of Mr. Thomas Davies of Fedwlwyd?—Yes, I heard it.

16,320. He stated that in the year 1876 the rent of the farm of Fedwlwyd was raised from 70*l.* to 90*l.* in consequence of a valuation made by Mr. Jenkins, late of Plas-y-ward, near Ruthin. Is that so?—I had a valuation made of the whole estate by Mr. Jenkins at one time.

16,321. Has a copy of the valuation been put in?—No; you have never asked for it.

16,322. Was the valuation adhered to in every case?—I think so. I cannot remember.

16,323. Have you got a copy of the valuation with you?—I suppose I have a copy, but not with me, certainly. We should be able to find a copy, I suppose. My agent tells me it is in London. See 16,623*a*.

16,324. Perhaps your memory will serve you in this instance; do you know a farm of the name of Gloig?—Oh, yes, I know Gloig.

16,325. What was the rent previous to the valuation?—I have not the faintest idea.

16,326. What was Mr. Jenkins' valuation?—I have not the faintest idea.

16,327. What is the present rent?—We can get that for you. Here it is: Gloig in 1870 was 35*l.*, now it is 29*l.*

16,328. You could not tell me what was Mr. Jenkins' valuation of it?—In 1877 it was 40*l.*, in 1870 it was 35*l.*, and at present it is 29*l.*

16,329. I should like to know what was Mr. Jenkins' valuation?—We have not got it. It is in London with my solicitors.

16,330. You could not give it in any instance at all, could you?—No, we have not got it here. In what year, may I ask, was Jenkins' valuation made?

16,331. In 1876. I suppose Mr. Jenkins made a valuation of it, did he not?—He did go over a great deal of the property. I remember it perfectly. It is 17 years ago, you see.

16,332. Mr. Thomas Davies made another statement. He says that "in the year 1886 five per cent. was returned to me from the first half-years' rent of Fedwlwyd. This was in response to a petition for an abatement. Every tenant who had signed the petition received five per cent., and those who had not signed received double that amount." Is that so?—Oh, quite so. I am of opinion that those who are the best off in this world always holloa the loudest, and the people who are badly off always keep their misfortunes to themselves.

16,333. Practically you punished these people for trying to strengthen their position in their dealings with their landlord?—Not at all. I had pity for those who said nothing; I thought they required more assistance than those who did say a good deal.

16,334. I think that inference might be drawn from it, at any rate?—I think we take a different view. Gloig is one of those farms which has been very much lowered, as I mentioned, on account of the game. You see it has been dropped from 40*l.* to 29*l.* See 16,5 16,335. Are any complaints made by the tenants to you of dogs and cats being killed?—I have not had any complaints for a long time. In one instance there was a complaint, and, to use a slang expression, I "sacked" the keeper who did it—I discharged the keeper.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

16,336. When was that?—Some few years ago.

16,337. Could you give me the keeper's name?—Yes, I think I can. We called him Evan Dinas, but I think his name was Jones; probably it was.

16,338. It might be Evan Jones?—I think you may safely take it that it was Jones; Jones is a favourite name down here. I have almost forgotten what his proper name was, but we always called him Evan Dinas.

16,339. I suppose you never authorised gamekeepers to kill dogs or cats when they are pursuing game?—Certainly not, but I can tell you that a good many of my tenants go to the keepers and request them to shoot dogs at night that come marauding and pursuing the sheep. I can give you an instance. I had the pleasure of mentioning this fact before a Committee of the House of Lords in regard to vivisection, as to which I was called as a witness. It is the custom in many parts of Wales, especially round Cerrig-y-ddruidion, and wild parts of that sort, for people to turn their dogs loose at night; so that they can see what they can pick up in the way of subsistence, which is practically inviting dogs to go and prey upon other farmers' sheep. It is a curious fact that dogs will not kill sheep near home, but they will travel many miles to do so. We have great complaints in these parts of dogs coming from other districts and killing sheep, and, in many cases tenants have asked my keepers to shoot those dogs for them, and what is more, in one instance a tenant has actually come to my keeper and quite sub rosa—saying nothing about it to anyone else—borrowed his gun and set out himself to shoot dogs and then returned the gun in the morning in a sack to the keeper, so that no one should be any the wiser, and that the keeper should get the blame, if there was any.

16,340. Would you have any objection to mention the name of that person?—No, I am not telling the name of the tenant.

16,341. Are you aware that one of your gamekeepers a fortnight ago shot a dog of the tenant of Rhydolwen, while the dog was standing near the tenant's son?—No, I have not heard anything about it.

16,342. You have a hillside farm of the name of Tynddol?—I have two or three farms of the name of Tynddol.

16,343. Also hillside farms of the names of Refailisa, Bryn Pader, and Tynllyn?—Yes.

16,344. And these farms are a portion of the Brynllesk—the level land below, by the lake?—The Brynllesk?

16,345. Yes?—Some time ago I suppose you are speaking of.

16,346. Yes, some time ago?—They have not been in Brynllesk for a long long time.

16,347. Was that land added to another large farm?—It was. It was found very inconvenient having small patches unfenced in the middle of an enormous acreage of pasture. If you know the Brynllesk, it is a very large piece unfenced, comprising a portion of the valley of the Dee; you pass it going by the train at the junction. It was very inconvenient for farmers having small holdings taking their carts with their horses continually, and passing through the meadow land of other farmers, and we thought it would facilitate matters and make it more comfortable by putting it all on to one farm. We should have had to fence the quillets, which would have been a great expense, and there is no right of road to them, and it was a great inconvenience to all parties. I consider it a great improvement having made it all one farm.

16,348. Did the hillside farmers consider it a benefit to them?—I have never had any complaints on the subject.

16,349. Did they used to raise hay from these plots of land?—They used to get, I suppose, a load of hay if it was in their farm, but the taking of hay was considered in their rent.

16,350. What reduction did you make in the rent of these farms?—For each of them?

16,351. Yes?—I cannot tell you. It is impossible to answer that question; it is so long ago. If you will ask me anything that has happened within a year or two, we can answer it.

16,352. Is it a fact that Mr. Edward Davies of Bryn Banon was ruined by damage caused by game on your estate, and that his crops were literally eaten up by game for several years before he left?—No, it is a fact that he got ruined by going security for his brother; he went smash.

16,353. Is that well understood in the neighbourhood?—You had better send for him and ask him. He will be glad to come and tell you.

16,354. You have a home farm, have you not?—I have, which my wife manages.

16,355. Do you include in the sum which you have mentioned for repairs what has been spent on the home farm and on pheasantries?—No, certainly not.

16,356. You have a separate account for that?—Yes, a separate account for pheasantries.

16,357. And a separate account for the home farm?—A separate account for the home farm, certainly. I built the home farm buildings out of a separate account, and spent a lot of money on them. But the home farm pays, I may remark, being a milk farm, and conveniently situated to the station. In fact, we have actually had application from London for milk this last day or two.

16,358. Have you been in the habit of writing to the English sporting papers, stating the large bags of game that have been made on your estate?—No, I do not send the bags up, but I have written a great deal for the English sporting papers in many ways.

16,359. Yes; written about the large bags of game?—Not about myself. I have written generally on sporting, at the request of the editors of the "Field," "Land and Water," "Bailey's Magazine," "The Daily Graphic," and other journals.

16,360. Not on your estate in particular?—I have not given very many minutiæ, except as regards rabbits, in that book that I have put in this morning. I have given a full and particular account of rabbit warrens, and how to make them, and how to use them; and I have also written many articles at the request of the editor of the "Field," for his paper. In fact, I have written two books at his request on sporting matters, which were published at the "Field" office, as well as a more recent book entitled "Walks in Wales."

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Mr. Grove.

16,361. You have put in two copies of agreements that are in use on your estate. Those we have?—Yes, Welsh and English.

16,362. Do you supply a copy always to each tenant?—Certainly.

16,363. That is without any request on their part?—Yes, it is a matter of course; but apparently they sometimes take one copy and do not return us the other (as came out in the evidence of Mr. Davies, of Fedwlwyd), which strikes me as hardly fair.

16,364. Then you spoke of leases occasionally being granted, but not very often, I think?—I have never had any application for a lease, except in the case of Mr. Owen, of the White Lion hotel here, and he has got one.

16,365. But you do not regard that as an agricultural lease, of course?—No, not at all.

16,366. It has nothing to do with agriculture?—I should be very glad to grant leases. I wish they would come for them more, if they thought it would be any benefit.

16,367. You would be willing to grant them?—Perfectly willing if asked for. In fact, if there is any demand for security of tenure, I should say that is the simplest way out of the difficulty—by asking for a lease.

16,368. You have given us instances of farmers who have retired?—Yes.

16,369. You gave us, I think, seven cases in your last evidence?—Yes.

16,370. Are we right in gathering from you that those men have made sufficient money by farming to be able to retire and live in comfort?—I only simply answered as to the words "have retired." Perhaps they go back to their former occupations; of course I do not ask them impertinent questions, but two of them are still living on my property. They are old, and I have had to find them a smaller house for their own convenience.

16,371. But you do not wish to convey the impression to us, I suppose, that farming has been so good for the last few years that they have been able to make fortunes to retire upon, however small the fortunes may be?—No; I think the farmers that are doing well are still with me. I can point out several of them.

16,372. Then the farmers who are doing well still remain, and those who have retired are those farmers who did not do well. Is that the case?—I am afraid that in most cases they were old, and one or two of them were, I am sorry to say, of slightly inebriate habits.

16,373. Of course we wish to gather so far as we can, the circumstances of farming for the last few years, and we would like to clear up that point. I think now you have cleared it up. The impression rather on my mind was that farming had been so good a thing, that a great many people had been able to retire upon the profits made, but I suppose you do not wish to convey that?—I think as a rule if a man becomes a farmer he seldom cares to retire except from other circumstances—increasing age or families. Of course on a large property like this we must lose a certain number of tenants from various causes. They do not all die.

16,374. Exactly. You have given us rather an interesting narrative of Mr. Ellis's family this morning?—I am afraid I have bored you very much with my evidence.

16,375. Not at all. I suppose you would consider that case of Mr. Ellis, which you have alluded to, a very exceptional case?—I consider it very creditable to the young man to have used his brains to acquire such a prominent position as he has, and I also if possible consider it more creditable to his father for having found the money to give him such an education.

16,377. You stated just now, I think, that where there was any special damage by game you let the farm so much lower in consequence of that?—Yes. In a special corner of the estate there always has been damage, I know. We have taken special care of that in letting the farms, and now we have no complaints, and I shall continue to do so when I see that it is proper to do so. See 816

16,378. There has been sent to us a letter dated October 1885?—Yes. That was sent by me certainly.

16,379. There seems to be a little difference in spirit to the provisions of the Ground Game Act to some extent?—It was perhaps before the Ground Game Act was passed.

16,380. No, the Ground Game Act was passed in 1880, and your circular was dated 1885. Your circular makes allusion to the provisions of the Ground Game Act. But just to clear up this one point, I see that it says first, where you are recapitulating the conditions upon which you wish your tenants to understand this question of game, "the rabbits to be killed "with ferrets and nets only"?—Yes, I consider that is the proper way to kill rabbits. I do not allow my under-keepers to kill them in any other way, and what is the best way for the keeper to kill a rabbit is best also for the farmer.

16,381. I suppose you know that the provisions of the Ground Game Act are such that they can kill them with firearms?—I believe so. I have never had anyone wish to do so; no one has ever said a word about it. I do not think the farmers in this neighbourhood care to use firearms; they are very much afraid of them as a rule. In fact, I have had one of them complain to me that his son was taking to shooting, and he [the farmer] did not like it at all.

16,382. Do you think your tenants are generally well acquainted with the Ground Game Act, and the provisions of it?—I do not know. I have never delivered them a lecture on the subject. I am afraid my Welsh would be hardly up to it.

16,383. May I just ask you a question or two about this game point, because a good deal has been said about it, and we want rather to clear it up. Would you mind telling us how many gamekeepers were on the estate when you purchased, or when you came into possession, and how many you have now, comparing one time with the other as a sort of index?—When I came into this property, I should think there were more than I have now, if anything.

16,384. And what is the number of rabbit warrens now, compared with what it was years ago?—The rabbit warrens are all let to tenants.

16,385. Are they increased in number?—I have always had three; I have got three now. Of course they were not all made at the same time. I began with one, had a second one, and then a third one, and I find that it pays very well to put land into rabbit warrens and let it to tenants. It pays better than it does to use it as agricultural land.

16,386. That is rabbit farming?—Yes. In fact, I find that land with rabbits lets from 10*s.* to 18*s.* an acre, which is more than you can get for the bad rushy land of which they are made. 2*s.* 6*d.* represents its value for sheep.

16,387. Then as to game farms as compared with what they were years ago; have you increased the number of those?—I only started a game farm ten years ago.

16,388. What is the number you have now of what we should call game farms?—I have two home farms, one of which is entirely devoted to game farming. The pheasants, as soon as they can possibly be caught, are put into wire and kept there. They are sold this month—the young birds—they all go away.

16,389. You stated I think, if I caught your words rightly, that the children of farmers were generally put into business or took another farm. I think you gave some answer of that kind?—I said that their parents very often started them in farms. We have had very many instances of that.

16,390. But would you consider that in half the instances, tenants that you are acquainted with have been able to do that, or in only a few cases?—I should think certainly more than half the tenants on my estate are related to others. They are nearly all cousins or nephews, or something, of each other. You cannot tell how many; it is impossible to say. My agent thinks it is rather more than half.

Mr. Grove—continued.

16,391. But my point would rather be this: has farming paid so well that they have been enabled to save sufficient money to put their children forward into life in the way that I gathered you intended to convey. Perhaps I may be wrong, but I thought you intended to convey that?—Well, that would be the inference, certainly. They do it with money they have made from farming, unless they have money of their own. They do it somehow, and I presume not many of them have much capital.

16,392. You just made an allusion to the question of railway rates. Did you mean by that, that there has been a recent increase in rates since this late Committee of Inquiry?—There have been a great many more complaints on the point I referred to about the maximum and minimum. I hear great complaints from the farmers in this district that they are not fairly apportioned.

16,393. Have you ever tested any of those charges with their legal maximum powers, to see whether there is any overcharge?—I do not think they would dare to overcharge. The farmers generally find the rates press very heavily upon them in sending small goods.

16,394. Do you suppose in some cases it leads to the farmers keeping teams for haulage that they would not otherwise keep, if they could get reasonable rates on the railway. I mean that would be a burden upon them in a sense?—I do not see that they do that exactly, but there is no doubt a great deal more is taken from the farmer's income in having to get his goods to market than used to be when he had to take them by team. It costs him more to get his goods to market than it used to, now that the railways have got a monopoly in the country, and that is why I hope to see an improvement in the agricultural parcel post, which could be done at once by having small light carts to run about the country to bring the produce in—eggs, butter, and that kind of thing.

16,395. Yes, that you have mentioned?—Instead of as at present being screwed down in price by the higglers, who are the sole purchasers.

Professor Rhŷs.

16,396. Do you know the neighbourhood of Cwm-tir-Mynach?—Yes.

16,397. Who is the principal landowner in Cwm-tir-Mynach?—I am.

16,398. I daresay I am asking a question which you have answered before, but I have been absent for some time. When did you succeed to the estate?—Thirty years ago, about.

16,399. You therefore remember what happened on the estate, probably from 1858 to 1865 we will say?—I cannot say that my memory is very good. I was away a good deal.

16,400. But you would have an idea of what was going on?—It would depend upon what I want to know. It would depend upon what it is.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

16,401. I have before me a report of the contributions in the years 1858–65 towards the Calvinistic College here. It is signed "Robert "Roberts, Brynhyfryd, Abergele, November 24th, "1873." I think he got his information about this county from the Rev. Edward Morgan. I notice under the head of Cwm-tir-Mynach a very remarkable note. There is a sum of money put opposite Cwm-tir-Mynach as having been collected there, like other neighbourhoods about here. There is no name given of anybody who made the contributions, but there is a notice to this effect. I will read it in Welsh, as you understand Welsh?—I do not understand it very well.

16,402. You can see that I am not mistranslating it?—I am afraid I cannot check you.

16,403. The note is as follows [Professor Rhŷs read the quotation in Welsh:]—The English of which is: "No names have been obtained from "this place to put in the annual reports, because "the contributors, for reasons known to them "and others at that time, did not choose their "names to appear." Now what I want to ask is whether you can throw any light upon that and whether you can tell us what the reasons referred to may have been?—Indeed I do not know anything about it. I do not suppose I contributed to the erection of the College myself. I cannot say. I have always been extremely good friends with the principal.

16,404. But the remarkable thing here is that the names are given in the other neighbourhoods, and the only exception is this one of the neighbourhood of Cwm-tir-Mynach?—Perhaps they gave so little that they were ashamed to see their names in print.

16,405. No, I find that is not the case. The total is 52*l.* 5*s.* 0*d.*, which is more than double what was given in some other places. I have not looked carefully through it, however. I do not think that can be the reason?—Why not call before you a farmer from Cwm-tir-Mynach, one of the deacons from the chapel, or some well-known man in that part, and he might be able to answer you the question. I cannot.

16,406. I must leave that to the Chairman of the Commission to determine, but you cannot offer any explanation?—I cannot really. You had much better inquire of some gentleman from Cwm-tir-Mynach. So far as I am concerned, I am equally ready to subscribe to a chapel as to a church, in a small way. I am often asked to do so. But a college is rather a palatial building.

16,407. But you see these people were afraid of putting their names to these subscriptions. I want to know what could be the reason?—Perhaps one of them subscribed 40*l.* and the rest only 10*l.*, and he did not wish to set himself up as a general capitalist.

16,408. I suggest the reason must be well-known to them and to the people round about?—I should like to hear an explanation myself very much. I hope you will get someone from Cwm-tir-Mynach and ask him.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

16,409. We may perhaps be able to get it from one of the men who had to deal with these reports later?—I think you referred to Mr. Edward Morgan.

16,410. Mr. Edward Morgan is referred to in the preface as being one of the chief collectors, but the report is signed by Mr. Robert Roberts?—Mr. Edward Morgan is alive, I believe

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,411. You say that you do nearly all the improvements on the estate, Mr. Price?—Yes, except draining.

16,412. Mr. Thomas Davies in his evidence said that he had spent at least 400*l.* to 500*l.* on the improvements, such as building and drainage at Fedwlwyd during the last eight years?—Mr. Thomas Davies I think is an exception. He is spending a lot of money on his farm. I hope he will continue to do so. Shall I tell you all about him.

16,413. If you can give some explanation with regard to this 400*l.* do so. It would take you a long time perhaps to tell all about him?—He came in 1885 to Fedwlwyd, a farm of about 138 acres, at a rent of 90*l.* per annum, but a permanent reduction of 8*l.* was made to him in 1888, also the sum of about 3*l.* tithe was paid for him annually, and during his tenancy I spent a great deal of money, about 175*l.* in repairs to the buildings there, and a great number of draining pipes was supplied to him, also fencing posts and other timber.

16,414. Those are your expenses, but I want to know about the money which he spent. Further, he was allowed to plough up some meadow land, contrary to the general rules of the estate. We have done a great deal for Mr. Thomas Davies, and spent a lot of money.

16,415. He has spent a lot himself?—Exactly. Because he spends money, we spend money, and if he continues to spend money on his farm I shall continue to help him if possible, if he wants more. He is the sort of tenant I should like to see more of—a man who would spend between 400*l.* and 500*l.*

16,416. Then you think he is the only instance on your estate?—He is the only one who has put himself prominently forward to say what he has done, at all events.

16,417. You say that there were cases of sub-letting on your estate, or sub-division rather?—I do know of one case of sub-letting contrary to the agreement. You mean sub-division.

16,418. Yes?—That means splitting up into little farms. We can give you all the instances if you like. (The witness handed in a list of instances.)

16,419. Were they in the first instance cases of consolidation?—Cutting up.

16,420. Were these farms that have been subseqently sub-divided, first of all consolidated?—One or two might have been.

16,421. How many?—I think my agent will answer the question. In most cases, so far as I can gather from my agent, they have been at one time put together, and sub-divided afterwards.

16,422. There was no expense in erecting the buildings?—In sub-division?

16,423. Yes?—In some of them there have been certainly. We have had to build new buildings entirely. There is Llwyngwgan, for instance, which is thoroughly built up.

16,424. Did you charge per-centage on the buildings?—No, we never charged per-centage. In some cases it is more convenient to subdivide farms. In other cases it is considered preferable to consolidate them. It is done principally to suit the intending occupants.

16,425. But what is the effect of consolidation as far as competition for farms is concerned?—I suppose it diminishes the number of the farms, but it is a reward to a farmer who has done well in a small farm, and who invariably finds he wants a bigger one. We are obliged to have a certain number of medium sized farms on hand to supply that demand. We always like if possible to get one of our own tenants from a small farm into a bigger one, and then put a labourer into the small farm to begin. That is the principle we try to work upon as far as possible.

16,426. What is the predominant feeling in your mind as to cases of consolidation. Is it to meet cases of that sort, or is it to save the expense of erecting buildings?—Not at all. It is for convenience in that way. In over 30 years we have had to consolidate certain farms because it has been seen to be more convenient.

16,427. You say tenants have been paid compensation for damage done by game according to valuation, "and are glad to have the chance," I think you said?—No, I did not say that; not at all. I said the tenants were glad to have their land taken for the rearing of pheasants, because they get paid a very good sum per acre for the use of it. They get 1*l.* an acre for five weeks, and that is very liberal you will admit.

Mr. Richard Jones.

I am not an authority on the point.

Lord Kenyon.

16,428. What would be the whole rent of such land per acre?—Well, the average of our rental comes out at 9*s.* 4*d.* per acre, as I stated before.

16,429. So you practically double the rent for five weeks?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,430. I think you said that some of the farmers on your estate do not work at all?—I think there are one or two who walk about and direct their labourers. I wish there were more of them in a position to be able to do so.

16,431. Would you think that many of the farmers on your estate are in a position to walk about?—I did not see many. I only say that I can recall an instance of one or two in my own mind.

16,432. Are they men of independent means? Have they any other resources?—I am afraid that very few of my tenants have independent means. I have no means of knowing, of course. They get legacies occasionally of which they do not come and tell me. Sometimes I hear of an old aunt dying.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

16,433. I think one of your suggestions for the improvement of things was that a better class of cattle should be bred?—No, I think I said sheep. I think the sheep ought to be improved. I do not think sufficient attention is paid by the Welsh farmers to sheep. They omit to feed them in the lambing time, and they omit to feed them in the winter, and I should like to see them grow more green crops for that purpose. I am always trying to impress it upon my tenants when I get a chance, and on other people's tenants too when I make a speech at an agricultural show. I think we have a great chance for sheep in Wales, and it is not half taken advantage of.

16,434. Do you think the tenants would better themselves if they bred Shropshire sheep here?—No, I think they could improve the Welsh breed. A tenant of mine, who has lately died, to our very great regret, improved the breed of Welsh sheep immensely in this neighbourhood—the late Mr. Vaughan of Penisarllan. I think if his example were more followed, the sheep throughout this country would be better. It is not considered a good thing to cross with English sheep, but the aim should be to improve the breed of the Welsh sheep. It can be done if properly done. I tried crossing Shropshire sheep myself, and found it a failure. They do not seem to do in this country. I do not know how it is.

Chairman.

16,435. I have two or three questions handed in that I shall have to trouble you with. One by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Was not the first "rabbit warren on your estate made some 10 or "12 years ago"?—I should think it was. You will find in the account of it the date.

16,436. About 10 or 12 years ago?—About 10 or 12 years ago, I should think.

16,437. "Do you express a wish to your "tenants not to kill hares"?—I did express a wish to my tenants not to kill hares, yes, and they do not either. They are extremely kind in that respect.

16,438. In your letter of October, 1885, do you not practically prevent your tenants killing hares?—No, I certainly do not prevent their doing anything they like.

Professor Rhŷs.

16,439. Are there any hares?—A few, nothing much. If any of the tenants want a hare they always send to me and ask for one.

Lord Kenyon.

16,440. Were you afraid of the hare becoming extinct?—Well, a friend of mine, the late Lord Abinger, once begged me to give him one to take away as a curiosity, as he said it was an extinct animal in his country.

Chairman.

16,441. Then there is another question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Can you state the "amount you have spent on buildings and re- "pairs on your estate during the last five "years?" You gave the whole amount; I think it was 100,000*l.*?—That is in 30 years.

16,442. But have you the amount for the last five years?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,443. You have given it for four years—from 1887 to 1891?—Suppose you ask my agent? he is coming to give evidence.

Chairman.

6,832. 16,444. He can put in those particulars afterwards?—He will do it very much better afterwards. We can put them in now if you like.

16,445. Let him put them in afterwards?—We can put them all in if you like.

16,446. Let your agent kindly put them in afterwards. Then another question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Could you make any state- "ment as to the number of game prosecutions on "the Rhiwlas estate during the last 20 years —Oh, there have been very few, I think. I should ask the policeman that.

Chairman—continued.

16,447. Very few, you say?—Yes. We have not had one for a long time.

16,448. Then another question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Have you been letting from "1,500 to 2,000 young pheasants reared at "your pheasantries, into the covers on your "estate, and did not these afterwards feed on "the crops of your tenantry?"—When? What particular year is he referring to?

Chairman.

Would Mr. Llewellyn Jones say whether he means annually or not?

Mr. Llewellyn Jones.—Every year—on any occasion.

Chairman.

16,449. Then the question is altered to: "Have you on any occasion let from 1,500 to "2,000 young pheasants, reared at your phea- "santries, into covers on your estate, and did "not these afterwards feed on the crops of your "tenantry?"—When I used to keep pheasants for shooting, I put them in my own covers in my own occupation, and fed them with my own corn. If they went outside the covers they only went for amusement, not for food.

Re-examined, 18,492.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Davies recalled and examined through an interpreter.

16,450. The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Additional evidence of Thomas Davies, Fedwlwyd, near Bala.

"Parish of Llanycil, Pen-y-cae.

"Owner, Mrs. Royle, Bryn-y-groes, Bala.

"Acreage, 18½ acres. Rent, 18*l.* per annum.

"Dairy.—The dairy is quite unfit for its purpose. It is separated by a wall from the henhouse. which was originally a pigstye. The walls are nearly coming down; the timber weak, and the roofing, which is of rushes, nearly gone. It is dangerous to ascend it for the purpose of repairing. A tarpaulin now serves as a covering at the back. The rain was coming through when I was there, making my hair quite wet. There was a pool of water in the buttery. The floor is of earth, with lumps of stones here and there, and to-day (30th September 1893) it is all in pools and the water splashing as one walks about.

"Cow-house.—The roof of the cow-house is bad, the slates loose, the laths rotten, and the rain coming through generally.

"The following is what James Richards, the tenant, informed me:—'I took the farm in 'October 1887 at the rent of 18*l.* per annum, 'which was an advance of 3*l.* on the rent paid 'by the outgoing tenant. After I had made an 'agreement with the outgoing tenant for the 'stock, &c., we went together to the agent, Mr. 'John Williams, Gwernhefin, near Bala. Some 'time afterwards the agent told me that he was 'raising the rent 3*l.*, though he had previously 'mentioned nothing about this. I told him I 'thought I should have the place at the pre- 'vious rent, and that if he were going to increase 'the rent, that I should have nothing to do with 'it. He replied that he was glad to hear that, 'as he could attach it to another farm, getting 'the same rent for it without having to make 'any buildings. He said that I should have to 'repair the house, and he acknowledged that it 'was unfit to live in, and promised to return me '2*l.* per annum when paying the rent towards 'meeting the cost of repairs, and that he would 'also pay the tithes. On the above terms I took 'it. He told me further that he would have to 'be satisfied with the repairs before I should 'receive the 2*l.* abatement. I repaired the 'house, that is to say two rooms, but before com- 'mencing told Mr. Williams that I did not know 'what to do, as the old roof was rotten. He 'told me to take away the old thatch and thatch 'it anew. I replied that after that it would be 'only a thatch roof, and that in view of the 'future it would be better for me to slate it, and 'so I did. When the work was finished he 'approved of it. I spent 15*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* on repairs, 'but Mr. Williams supplied the timber in the 'rough, and he has returned me 2*l.* every year. 'I asked for draining pipes, but he refused. I 'paid 5*l.* for pipes, and 2*l.* 10*s.* for opening the 'drains. Last August Mr. Williams came here 'to inspect the dairy, and said he did not 'know what I could do to it. I replied that I 'would do nothing. He replied he would do 'nothing as he had nothing to do with it, and 'that he had told me when repairing the house 'that he would return me 2*l.* per annum for 'seven years. I said that I had already spent 'more than that sum on the house alone, and 'that I was not going to do anything without 'knowing what he would do in the way of 'assisting me. I told him I must have a dairy. 'He was offended with me for using the word 'must, and said I ought to have asked for his 'good will, and that if I had asked for an abate-'ment he would have answered "Yes" or "No." 'I told him I wanted the dairy waterproof, as it 'was quite unsuitable for a dairy in view of 'winter. He replied, I might go away if I 'liked.'

"Mrs. Royle told the tenant and also myself, that she was leaving everything to Mr. John Williams to do as he saw best.

"Y Foel; owner: Colonel E. Evans Lloyd, Moelygarnedd, near Bala.

See 8139, 16,476, 16,790, 16,791.

"I visited Y Foel on the 18th, the 21st, and the 29th September. On the 18th and 21st I saw nothing inconsistent with my former evidence. The roof was in the same state as I described it, slates on the 'gronnd, and light to be seen through it. The tenant's wife testified that many of the slates had fallen two years ago, and that the roof was not repaired at all when the gable end was plastered about a year ago.

"In the flooring of the upstairs room is to be seen a big hole, through which the leg of a grand daughter of the tenant went in getting out of her crib. In another place is seen a hole, through which the leg of an iron bedstead crashed. The rafters are in a very bad condition from dry rot, I pushed my hand into one of them and took out a handful of the decayed wood. Under the loft is a large beam supporting it. It was put up some eight years ago, and certainly had it not been for this beam the loft would not have remained up so long.

"The tenant is a labourer working here and there, and is often away from home at night. The wife asserted that she has often got out of bed on a stormy night to sit on the seat by the fire from fear of the roof falling on her, and she said she had told Colonel Evans Lloyd a few days since that she is afraid of staying there for the winter unless he can assure her that the roof will not fall on her.

"There are neither offices nor pigstyes.

"On the 29th September I found the roofing has been very well repaired. This was done on the 27th September.

"The tenant's wife said they sent a son of theirs some two or three years ago to pay the rent, and that he complained to the landlord that the rent was too high, that his father could not pay it, and that he would be obliged to give notice to leave unless a reduction was made. He was answered 'I shall accept notice, there are many for it.' (Welsh 'Cymeraf notice, mae llawer am dano.') She remembered speaking to me about it previously, but did not recollect using the identical words I used in my previous testimony 'Give it up, I can get more for it. She did not deny using them, but had no recollection. She was certain the words 'I shall accept notice, there are many for it' were strictly correct, and that the pet word of the Colonel when they made complaints was 'botheration.' The tenant himself had used to me the very words I quoted 'Give it up, I can get more for it.'

"The whole holding measures barely three acres including the land under hedges or ditches. The present rent is 7*l.* 10*s.* per annum, and I produce the rent book [handing same].

"I feel that the sanitary inspector is greatly to to be blamed in connexion with this case. It was said that he had visited the place several times, saying that a privy and a pigstye would have to be provided, but I do not understand that he sent at all to Colonel Evans Lloyd. It is of the greatest importance that suitable persons should be appointed to this office. Without this, tenants will not get what is right, and the landlord sometimes be blamed when he does not deserve it.

"The above tenant was last year in receipt of parish relief: I put in the printed list of the paupers of Llanycil parish" [handing same].

Chairman.

16,450A. That is your statement. Do you say it is correct?—Yes. This is a sample of the wood in the loft [handing same]. This is a sample of the wood at the top of the house [handing same].

16,451. Is this a sample of the wood beams or of the rafters?—A sample of the boards of the floor in the upstairs room.

16,452. And the other sample?—The other sample is from the rafters at the top of the building.

16,453. These samples come from Y Foel?—From Y Foel. This is a receipt book I produce, with four receipts unstamped [handing same].

Colonel Evans Lloyd.

May I hand up a photograph of this place [handing same]?

Chairman.

16,454. [To the witness.] Is that all the evidence you wish to give?—Yes, that is all my evidence.

16,455. You gave your evidence on the 13th September?—Yes.

16,456. You visited Y Foel on the 18th, 21st, and 29th September?—Yes.

16,457. On the 18th and 21st it was in the state you describe?—Yes.

16,458. You visited it again on the 29th of September?—Yes.

16,459. What state was it in then?—It had been repaired on the 27th of September. The roof had been repaired; not the loft.

16,460. What condition was the flooring in?—The floor of the loft, do you mean?

Chairman—continued.

16,461. Is this sample the floor of the house or of the loft?—That is the floor of the loft.

16,462. What condition was the floor of the loft in?—It was in the same condition as I found it the first time.

16,463. Have you been near the place since?—Since the 29th September?

16,464. Yes?—Yes.

16,465. What condition is the floor in now?—It is in the same condition, as far as I understand. He said that he would not repair it.

16,466. In this list of paupers that you produce there appear the names of Edward Richards and his wife. Were Edward Richards and his wife the tenants of this cottage?—Yes.

16,467. And they were receiving parish relief?—Yes.

16,468. While they were paying this rent?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

16,469. The receipt book you put in shows in some cases pencil entries with a receipt stamp and in other cases without a receipt stamp. Did you ask for a stamp to be put on?—No, I did not. I am afraid you misunderstand me. It was not my place to ask for a stamped receipt, I never paid rents to him.

16,470. Then it was someone else?—Yes, Edward Richards or his wife paid the rent.

16,471. Do you not know that the party who receives a receipt without its being stamped is liable to a fine the same as the party who gives it?—I understand that, but I believe that they did not so understand.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

16,472. How far off is this place, Y Foel?—About a mile and a quarter, not a mile and a half I should say from this town.

16,473. And the other place, Pen-y-cae?—Two miles to Pen-y-cae; that is as near as I can guess.

16,474. Would the tenant of Pen-y-cae do the repairs himself?—Yes, I believe so, if it is so allowed in his rent.

Chairman.

16,475. There is a question put in by Mr. John Williams—"Did James Richards of Pen-y-"cae inform you that he took the farm with "the clear understanding that he would be "responsible for repairs and that for whatever "improvement he did to the satisfaction of Mr. "John Williams, Mr. John Williams would "give him a certificate for compensation ac-"cording to the Agricultural Holdings Act?"—He told me that he was going to build two sections of an outbuilding. He has not understood that he was called upon to do all the buildings, and he is not willing to put them up at his own expense.

Re-examined, 16,528.

The witness withdrew.

Colonel Edward Evans Lloyd called and examined.

Witness.

My Lord, to save time I have put my statement into writing. May I read it?

Chairman.

16,476. Yes, if you please. You mean with regard to Y Foel?—Yes; and I thought I might, as I was already here, make a further statement generally as a small landowner. It is very short.

16,478. If you please, if you will send in a statement afterwards?—It will not take five minutes.

16,479. Very well, then?—My Lord, may I beg permission to make a statement with reference to evidence given by Mr. Thomas Davies as to a small cottage holding of mine called Y Foel or Tynewydd, near Bala? I may just say incidentally that it is quite two miles from here. I feel that a great injustice has been done to me, more particularly as the evidence given was only hearsay and in the main totally untrue. Your Lordship probably has it, but it may be wise that I should read it; it is very short. Mr. Davies says that this is a small tenement, "measuring barely 3 acres, and that "at best maintains only one cow; the present "rent is 7*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* per annum; that the house "has no privy or pigstye." Then he says—and I beg to draw your Lordship's attention particularly to this—"that the house is separated from "the shippon by a thin partition through which "the stench from the adjoining building pene-"trated and made the house unfit to live in. "The sky is visible through the roof and it is "dangerous to walk along the uptairs room." Further, he says that when the tenant complained to me the only answer he got was "Give "it up, I can get more for it." That is the evidence which he gave, and which I propose to contradict. First as to the rent of 7*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*, I do not know whether that was considered high. I believe that the tenant thinks that it is too much, and it was on the occasion of the son's complaining some years ago that I said they were at liberty to give up the cottage, as there were plenty who would be glad to have it at the same rent. I never used the words attributed to me "Give it up, I can get more." And moreover (which is now corroborated by what has been said to-day) when I taxed the tenant with having told this to Mr. Thomas Davies, she at once said "Perhaps you did not "say that, but you said 'you had plenty of

Chairman—continued.

" ' tenants for it.'" That is quite another version, and is what I am still prepared to say, and do say to-day—that there are plenty of tenants for it at that same figure.

16,480. Then what you rebut is this. You say you did not say "Give it up, I can get more for it"?—No, I did not.

16,481. But what did you say?—I said "Give " it up, there are plenty who will take it."

16,482. Then the only difference is that you did not say "Give it up, I can get more for it," but you said "There are plenty more who will take it"?—Yes, that is what I said. What I mean is this. The inference which this witness wished the Commission to draw, was that I would a great deal prefer getting more rent to repairing the property. My answer is that it was not a question of repairing at all; it was a question of rent; and what I said to the son was "If you complain of the rent you " can give it up, I have plenty who will take it " at that figure."

16,483. Then the only difference between you is that you say you said "There are plenty more " who will take it at that figure," instead of "I " can get more for it"?—That is so.

16,484. I am only anxious to know the exact words you used. You did not say "I can get " more for it," but you said "There are plenty " more who will take it?"—Yes, and I am prepared to say that again to-day.

16,485. We quite understand that. Now, what else is there that you come to rebut?—Moreover this tenant told me that someone had offered 10*l.* for the place, of which I was not aware 16,486. I beg your pardon; there is nothing of that sort in the evidence at all. We must keep ourselves, please, to the evidence. There is not a word in the evidence about someone having offered 10*l.*?—But I am giving now my evidence with regard to the question.

16,487. I want you please to keep to your rebutting evidence; then anything you would like to say afterwards about your general estate, or anything else, we can have separately. Please keep for the present to your rebutting evidence?—The house is a two-roomed cottage, built about 38 or 40 years ago, with a small dairy recently added at a cost of 10*l.*, and a shippon about 15 feet by 12 adjoining the house. I put this in as a plan of the place [handing a plan]. There are three acres of land in excellent grazing condition, with right of common over some 600 or 800 acres of mountain land adjoining. I think that 3*s.* a week cannot be considered an unreasonable rent for that accommodation. That is bearing upon the question of 7*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* rent, which I presume is put forward as being too much. I have asked an independent neighbour, a freeholder, to look at the holding and give his opinion and evidence to the Commissioners, and he is here to-day to do so. So much for the value. Now as to the allegation about repairs.

16,488. Wait a moment. Mr. Thomas Davies says that the house has no privy or offices. Has it a privy or offices?—It has not; I am perfectly willing to admit that.

16,489. Very good. Is there a pigstye?—There is accommodation for a pigstye within the cowhouse.

16,490. Then that means that the pig and the cow would be together in the cowhouse?—That is so.

16,491. Is the cowhouse separated from the house merely by a thin partition?—That is one of my main contradictions. If your Lordship will kindly look at that plan it shows that, so far from being a thin partition, it is a main wall 2 feet thick. That is one of my principal points; and if that is a sample of the evidence given it shows what reliance you can place upon other parts.

16,492. You contradict that?—I contradict that most emphatically.

16,493. It is not a thin partition?—It is a 2-foot wall. It is the main wall of the buildings.

16,494. But is the wall in good condition?—Excellent condition; and I have another witness here, an independent witness, who can speak about it.

16,495. Can any smell come from it?—Impossible; but I must add upon that that when I went to see the tenant I said, "Is there a stench " coming from it?" "Oh, no," she said, "not " now; there was formerly when there was a " hole in it, but that has been stopped." The witness, Thomas Davies, has put it before the Commission that that is the existing state of things; that it is now unfit to live in; that the stench comes through, and renders the house unfit for anyone to live in.

16,496. You contradict that?—I contradict that most flatly. Moreover, I took the medical officer of health (who is present, I believe), Dr. Williams, and we both asked the tenant—— I will give it in Welsh, "A oes dim ogle yn " dywad trwy'r wal? Nac oes, ddim." "Is " there any smell oozing through the wall? " No, none." That is one of my main contradictions with regard to that question. First of all, I say that the partition is not a thin partition, and, secondly, that no stench comes through it.

16,497. May I ask you one question on that before you go on. There was a hole in this wall, you say?—I am not aware of it. I really cannot speak to it.

16,498. You told us that there was a hole in this wall; that was a statement of your own. You said there was a hole in the wall through which the stench came?—No; that is the statement made by the witness, which I deny. That is the statement which I come to contradict.

16,499. You say there was no hole in the wall?—Certainly not at the present moment.

16,500. No; but you said there was a hole in the wall through which the stench came?—No. I say that is the statement of the witness, but not mine, certainly not.

16,501. Do you contradict that?—I do, most flatly.

Chairman—continued.

16,502. You contradict the statement that there was a hole in the wall?—I cannot contradict what I do not know; I can only contradict that there is any hole in the wall now, and it has not been stopped by me; and, when the medical officer of health and I went and taxed the woman, and asked "Where is the hole?" She said, "There is no hole now." I asked, "Is there any smell?" and she said, "Certainly not, it has been stopped long ago." That was the woman's own statement to me last week.

16,503. Your statement is that there is no stench there now, but that there was?—Was last year. She said, "The master stopped it last year."

16,504. Who is the master?—Meaning me, I presume.

16,505. Then you have no knowledge that that repair was made?—I have none at all.

16,506. You have no knowledge that the holes were stopped, but you have no reason to believe that these holes did not exist?—Well, I can only say this. I really cannot speak from personal knowledge. I can only speak from what the woman herself told me. Last year I had a complaint from them that something was wanting doing, and I sent up a mason; I said, "Go up "and do everything that they require to make "them comfortable." Those were my own orders, and they were carried out; and the woman herself, I believe, expressed herself most satisfied and comfortable about it.

16,507. Then, perhaps, that was the time when the hole was stopped?—Possibly; I dare say it might be; but any small hole of that kind it is only the business of a proper tenant to stop at once herself; it is ridiculous to ask the landlord to send a man.

16,508. You have not seen the place yourself?—I have. I have been there considerably—very often lately.

16,509. Very often lately?—I mean since I have heard of this inquiry I have been there, and I was prepared to go on and state what I did find.

16,510. You are prepared to say that there are no holes in the wall now?—Certainly, most flatly. Moreover, I can be corroborated by a gentleman who is present.

16,511. Now we come to the roof of the house?—Now I come to that. Mr. Thomas Davies says, "The sky is visible through it." I went to the tenant, and said, "Where do you see the sky?" "Oh," she says, "It is up there." She pointed out to me a little corner—I have made a mark on the plan where it is—and I declare honourably that you could not have stuck half-a-crown into it. That is what the Commission have represented to them as a place where "the sky is visible." I went round to see the cause of it. It turned out that a slate—one solitary slate—had fallen off the corner, and was there to be seen, and that exhibited the hole. I do believe I am within the mark in saying that it would not take a florin to cover it. But I clearly saw light through it; I am bound to say that. I at once said to my man, "You must send a slater up there to put that up." But I said to the woman, "Why did "not your man put up a slate like that straight "off?" "Well," she said, "he is too infirm." However, I have had it done; but that is the size of the hole as to which Mr. Davies says, "The sky is visible through it." I say that is a perversion of the truth.

16,512. Are you prepared to say that the roof was in a good state of repair?—I do, and I can give you another reason for it. Last Friday this Mr. Thomas Davies met the medical officer of health, who, I believe, is present, Dr. Williams. You will recollect, and I daresay everybody present will recollect, what Thursday and Friday of last week were; for eight and forty hours consecutively there was storm and rain of the most violent character. These gentlemen went to see whether they could find a spot of damp; there was not a spot of damp to be found—after eight and forty hours' rain and storm, and this is the most exposed part on the edge of the mountain—and that is what they found. They looked everywhere for a spot of damp. This is a sample of the value of the evidence which is given to the Commissioners. It says here, "The "sky is visible through it, and it is dangerous to "live in." Indeed Thomas Davies says that the people were afraid to live in the place. Well, I am bound to say this: I do not want to misrepresent anything. With regard to the floor, I certainly found that there was a corner at one end of the room which showed certainly marks of decay. I suppose that very stuff that Thomas Davies handed up this morning came from that part, showing that the boards had evidently began to decay. Now, I may say that I am over 13 stone; Mr. Chadwick, who is over there, who was with me, is fully 14 stone. We went there, and I said, "Where is this floor that is so "very dangerous? Let us try it like that;" [illustrating]; and I jumped upon it, and there was not the smallest impression. I am not here to apologize for the state of this house; but I confess that if I had known it—it was a matter of half an hour for any joiner to go and remedy it. There is an elongated hole, just showing the decay in the boards; but all the rest of the floors are sound as this is underneath me. I jumped about—we are both of us 14 stone—and there was no impression at all. That is the sort of evidence that has been brought forward, and they say that "it is dangerous to walk "along the upstairs room." Well, I did that [illustrating], and I made no impression on it. Mr. Chadwick did the same; we were both of us up at the same time, testing it; and I am here to give a most emphatic contradiction, and I say it is a malicious perversion of what is the fact.

See 18,5

16,513. I do not think you should use such strong language as that?—Of course, my Lord, you will excuse my getting warm, because I really feel warm about it.

16,514. I think it comes to this. You say you deny that the roof is in such a condition that the sky is visible through it. You say there is only one corner that is defective?—I do. I most emphatically say that that corner ——

16,515. Now, please. You deny that it is dangerous for anybody to walk along the upstairs room?—I do, and I have evidence to corroborate me.

16,516. And when the tenant complained the only answer you are supposed to have given is, "Give it up, I can get more for it"?—My answer was "Give it up, I can get plenty more to take it." I want to say, it was not with reference to repairs at all that that answer was given; it was with reference to rent. Every time that I have been asked for repairs, they have been done. Only a few years ago, at the expense of about 9*l.* or 10*l.*, I fitted them up a very nice little dairy. If they had asked me for a pigstye or anything in the way of a necessity, as they say, they would have had it; I never knew that there was not such a thing, but I can only tell you this, that the moment I knew there was no privy there I at once ordered it, and I believe it is on its way now.

16,517. There is only one other question I have to ask you. Were you aware that this tenant of yours who paid 7*l.* 10*s.* a year was in receipt of parish relief?—Certainly not. I left orders when I went from home—(I go to Chester every winter)—"Whenever you can employ this man, do." I have paid many times, I cannot say very often, but he has generally worked for me at the rate of about 18*s.* a week, and he is now in full employ.

16,518. You are not prepared to deny that this man who paid 7*l.* 10*s.* a year rent was in receipt of parish relief?—I cannot deny it. It is the first time I ever heard it. I never heard it before.

16,519. You have never heard it before, but you are not prepared to deny it?—I should only like to say this. I should like to add that three years ago they wanted to buy it, and that does not look very much like poverty. They asked me to name my price for it; that is not very much like poverty.

16,520. I think we can pass away from that. Now, is there anything else you want to say?—I thought I should like to be allowed to say this; it was not with regard to this particular holding, but I wanted to make an observation—it will only take me three or four minutes. It is a point I feel very strongly upon.

Chairman.

We will now have Mr. Thomas Davies in the box again, and we will postpone your general evidence.

Lord Kenyon.

16,521. Did the Sanitary Inspector ever draw attention to this place?—No, never. I never heard the smallest complaint.

16,522. I understood from you that they once complained to you and asked you to repair the place?—Yes, and I did so.

16,523. That was the only occasion on which they did ask?—Yes. I have 45 or 50 small tenants at Bala, and I challenge any one of them to come forward before this Commission and say that I have not at once repaired when I have been asked to do so.

Chairman.

16,524. There is a question sent up by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "Are you a tenant for life of "your estate, and do you on this account "generally refuse to make any repairs"?—Certainly not. I am a tenant for life, but most certainly I do not on that account refuse to repair. I cannot recall what that refers to. If they will refer me to any particular case I will answer it. I can only say that I do repair, and most freely. I am a tenant for life, but I am not tenant for life of this particular property. I am a tenant for life in Bala, and I will defy any tenant of mine in Bala to come and say that I ever refused repairs. When I have been asked to rebuild or anything of that kind I may have refused. I can now recall what that question refers to. It was with regard to Plas Hendre, an old family house in this town. I said, "It is perfectly impossible for me to "rebuild, I am only a tenant for life." I suppose that is what the question refers to.

16,525. Then you have made that statement?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

16,526. In one instance?—If the question is put to me about any particular case I will answer it straight, but that is a very general question.

Chairman.

16,527. Two of the Commissioners will go up to the place to-day and see this building. May we keep the ground plan?—I shall be very much obliged.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS DAVIES recalled and further examined through an Interpreter.

The evidence of Colonel Evans Lloyd was translated to the witness.

Witness.

See 8140, and above, also 16,790, 16,791.

16,528. Why did not Colonel Evans Lloyd go to the corner which the old lady pointed out to him?—He would not go there. There are five adjoining slates off, and they cover a larger hole than a florin would occupy. Those five slates are together. Besides, there are so many slates, on the roof, and in other places, off here and there.

Chairman.

16,528A. Two of the Commissioners are going up this afternoon to judge for themselves?—Thank you.

Chairman—continued.

16,529. Do you say that there are any holes between the cowhouse and the dwelling-house at the present moment, or have they been patched up?—Yes, unless they have been repaired since yesterday morning. I saw them myself the day before yesterday.

Colonel Evans Lloyd.

Oh, they have not been touched. I would not have them touched.

Lord Kenyon.

16,530. [To Witness.] They were there the day before yesterday?—They were there the morning of the day before yesterday unless they have been repaired since.

16,531. Do you say you have found any stench in the house since your last visit to the place?—Yes, I have smelt it, not found it.

[The Interpreter: He uses the Welsh expression "Clywed"; it means he smelt it.]

16,532. Why did you not inform the Sanitary Inspector?—The time has been so short, and he has been there three times.

16,533. Why did you not inform him before you came before us lately?—The reason was because he had been there to Y Foel and seen it himself, and I knew that. He had been there three times.

16,534. But you saw Colonel Evans Lloyd, and you made no complaint to him?—I cannot say as to that. It is his fault.

Chairman.

16,535. A question is sent up by Colonel Evans Lloyd: "Do the holes come through the wall"?—Yes, I can push my stick through, over 8 inches beyond the wall into the house.

Mr. Richard Evans Jones.

16,536. I do not understand about the 18 inches; what do you mean?—That the stick goes into the wall a distance of 18 inches.

Colonel Evans Lloyd.

The wall is 2 feet.

Witness.

Had it not been that the son of the tenant had papered the wall I would be able to push the paper off the wall with my stick from the cow-house.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,537. How could you get at the paper if the wall is 2 feet, and you could only send it 18 inches—there would be another 6 inches?—It is repaired now, but before it was repaired you could push the stick a yard into the house.

Chairman.

16,538. Another question by Colonel Evans Lloyd: "Why did you call it a thin partition"?—I do not call it a thin partition, but it is a thin wall made of stones. Of course being a stone wall no one could make it very very thin.

16,539. Then two questions by Mr. Vincent: "Who is the Sanitary Inspector"?—Edward Morris of Pant y Saer.

16,540. "Is he here"?—I do not know.

Mr. Grove.

16,541. You say the wall has been repaired; will you tell us by whom?—The wall between the cow-house and the house has been repaired by the son of the tenant of the house.

16,542. Does that son live there at present?—No, he does not live there now. He lives at Pen-y-Cae.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. DAVID ROBERTS called and examined through the Interpreter.

16,542A. The interpreter read the following statement of the witness:

"Evidence of Mr. David Roberts, Tyn y bryn, Rhyducha, Bala. I am a tenant farmer. In the year 1866 I took a farm called Llanerch yr Eryr in the parish of Llandderfel on the Rhiwlas estate, from Mr. W. Schoon, the agent of Mr. R. J. L. Price. The tenancy was an annual one, six months' notice on either side; rent 60*l.* The farm Llanerch yr Eryr was 127 acres; arable land 50 acres, and the rest trees and mountain land. The agent promised to keep down the rabbits and to repair the buildings which were in a poor and unsuitable condition. But I was on the farm for 13 years without any of the promised repairs, and then I had to do all the cartage free and the rabbits were not kept down as promised. My father-in-law was the previous tenant to me, and he was ruined in consequence of the number of the rabbits. It was on this account that I insisted upon getting a promise to keep them down as they destroyed everything. It was with difficulty that I could produce on my farm sufficient to keep four cows, four calves, and two horses. On one occasion I sowed 18 hobbets of oats, and only got 40 hobbets from it, on another occasion from three hobbets of barley I received 1½ pecks, indeed six acres which I had sown were not worth harvesting. I went to my landlord and received 10*l.*

towards the damage, but this did not nearly cover my loss. A large number of my neighbours suffered as much as myself from the rabbit pest. I could name persons whom I believe were ruined chiefly through the game on their farms. After the passing of the Ground Game Act I determined to keep down the rabbits, and having cleared the place as well as I could, I settled down to try and make the farm pay. But I soon afterwards received notice, and my farm has been turned into a rabbit warren. For a year after this I failed to get a farm and had to sell all my stock and go to a small cottage. In the year 1883, I took a farm called Penlan, in the parish of Llanycil on the same estate; rent 31*l.* I was promised that the house and outbuildings would be put in good repair, and that new pigstyes and offices would be built. The house and outbuildings were slightly repaired, but the other things promised were never carried out. I was at Penlan for six years. During the time I was on Rhiwlas estate I lost something like 200*l.* A widow who is a neighbour of mine related to me the following account of her history on the Rhiwlas estate."

See 8139.

Chairman.

16,543. Would you mind giving her name?—I have no objection. I do not know whether the widow would have any objection to my giving her name, but I have no objection.

"In the year 1866, her husband took a farm for 61*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* The rent had previously been 55*l.*, but when he took it the right of pasturage for 160 sheep on the common was added to it, and a part of Efail Isa. The landlord promised when he took the farm that he would keep down the rabbits. In the year 1869 her husband gave up the common and the rent was again reduced to 55*l.* One year they suffered so much from the rabbits that they tried to be allowed a large sum out of the rent, but both the agent and the landlord refused. During the 21 years her husband and herself occupied the farm they were only allowed 16*l.* towards the damage caused by the game. On one occasion her only son was found searching for rabbits with a ferret and net, and to do this Mr. Price had given permission. But owing to the fact that her son was constantly ferreting her landlord ordered her to send him away. She lost a very valuable dog which was shot by one of the keepers. She placed the matter in a solicitor's hands, and she received 5*l.* towards the loss But soon afterwards she received a notice to quit; she was, however, allowed to remain there for one year longer, her rent being raised 5*l.*, and several other restrictions placed upon her."

See 16,572, 16,573.

Chairman.

16,544. Is that your statement, and is it correct?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

16,545. Could you not give the lady's name?—Elizabeth Jones, Refail Isa, near Bala.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

16,546. Do I understand you are now a tenant on the Rhiwlas estate?—No, I am not.

16,547. Did you give notice to quit Penlan?—No, I gave it up. I had another farm, which I held for a year.

16,548. You complain that the buildings are not sufficiently repaired. Is that all you have to complain of at Penlan?—Yes, that is all at Penlan.

16,549. Do you know whether Mr. Price finds it more profitable to have his other farm as a rabbit warren than it was when you held it?—I cannot say. The farm did not pay me, at any rate.

Mr. Griffiths.

16,550. Were you not promised some repairs and some buildings when you took the farm?—Yes.

16,551. Then what you complain of is that these promises were not fulfilled?—Yes, and in consequence I suffered a great deal of loss from my animals and horses during 13 years.

16,552. Can you tell me whether the keepers are in the habit of killing many dogs at this place?—Yes.

16,553. Is it by shooting them, or in what way?—Poisoning them and shooting them.

16,554. When they shoot the dogs, do the dogs always die?—Yes, generally, when they are near enough to the gun.

16,555. The reason I ask you is that I have heard of a case before where a dog has been shot and left to wander about in that state for a long time?—Yes, I heard that the dog did not die. A little boy was calling the dog at that time when the keeper was by.

16,556. Is there not an inspector appointed for the prevention of cruelty to animals?—A little is done by Mrs. Price. When the cows run about in the town, something may be done, but nothing else.

Mr. Grove.

16,557. As to this farm that Mrs. Jones had, you say that 16*l.* was given for damage by game over 21 years?—Yes.

16,558. Was that considered sufficient?—That is all he asked. I was with him at the time, and I had 12*l.* I was with Mr. Jones, and we went together to see Mr. Price, and Mr. Price said that he did not wish that his tenants should suffer any loss from damage caused by rabbits.

16,559. So that they had all they asked for?—Yes, that time; but several times we went, and we had nothing.

16,560. Then, following that last answer up, in that case they did not consider that they were properly compensated for the damage done by game?—No, never. I only asked a little for my labour, and for the seed I had sown—my corn and so on. They had destroyed the hay and the grazing land, and I was unable to sell my animals.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,561. Just to follow up that question, what is the usual course taken when a tenant makes a claim for damage done by game. Is a valuation made?—No, no valuation is made—only to take the goodwill. I did so several times. I had a little goodwill.

16,562. You simply take what the landlord chooses to give you?—Yes, that is better than being without anything.

16,563. When you received notice to quit, did Mr. Price promise to find you another farm when your former farm was turned "into a warren?"—Yes, he gave me a choice of many farms.

16,564. Were those vacant at the time?—I went to the tenants who had been living there, and the farms had been given up on account of the reduction, and so I would not take them at any price.

16,565. You thought it was better to go and live in a cottage than to go and live in one of those farms?—It would have been far better for me if I had been in a small cottage a long time ago than being in the farm where I was. I lived on the sparings of the rabbits.

16,566. You say that when you went to Penlan you were promised that the house and outbuildings would be put in good repair, and that new pigstyes and offices would be built. The house and outbuildings were slightly repaired, but the other things promised were never carried out. Are there no offices attached to the house?—No, there are not. I made one, but that has fallen since I was there.

16,567. You mentioned the case of a widow who has lost a dog, and that she received 5*l.* towards the loss. Did she receive this from Mr. Price without having recourse to law?—No, she had 5*l.* from the solicitor.

16,568. Did she previously make a claim to Mr. Price before she got it?—I cannot say.

16,569. Was the rent raised the year after this claim was made?—It was raised for the last year she was there.

16,570. And you say there were several other restrictions placed upon her. What were the other restrictions placed upon her besides raising the rent?—She was not allowed to plough any grazing land.

16,571. But she was not allowed according to the agreement to plough permanent pasture?—No, that is so, it seems.

Chairman.

16,335. 16,572. There are some questions handed in. The following questions are by Mr. Vincent: "Was not the case of the widow's dog the case "in which Mr. Price dismissed his keeper for "shooting the dog?"—No, the widow's son was turned from home because he interfered with the rabbits.

Chairman—continued.

16,573. Do you understand the question? I will put it in this way: "Was not the case of "the widow's dog, the case in which Mr. Price "sent away his keeper for shooting the dog"?—I do not know. He changes the keepers so often.

16,574. "Was not a new farm on the same "estate found immediately for the widow"?—Yes, she went to a small place under Mr. Price.

16,575. "Does she not now sub-let"?—Yes, she does sub-let a field or two in connexion with the house in which she lives.

16,576. "Does she not make a profit on the rent"?—I can hardly believe that she does.

16,577. "Was she not in arrears when she "received notice to quit"?—I think she owed something, I do not know the amount; but her brother paid the whole for her.

16,578. "Was not the son of the widow con- "victed for cutting trees on the Rhiwlas "estate"?—Yes, I heard them say so. See 17,574–17,603, 17,697–17,704.

16,579. "Were you compensated whenever "you made a request for compensation for "damage done by game"?—I had a recognition, but not compensation.

16,580. "Do not wandering dogs do damage "to sheep"?—No. I saw a dog belonging to Mr. Price, which had killed a sheep of mine while he (Mr. Price) was out, or his keeper.

16,581. This question is by Mr. Price: "You "say it was better to live in a cottage, but did "you not in fact take another farm on the same "estate"?—Yes.

16,582. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Was the son of the "widow brought before the magistrates for "damaging trees or not"?—I do not know.

16,583. "What was the type of men engaged "on the Rhiwlas estate as keepers in your "time"?—They were mostly the lowest class of people.

16,584. "Were they not as a class detested by "the farmers"?—Yes, because they told lies as between the tenant and the landlord.

Mr. Griffiths.

16,585. Are there many instances like that,—of keepers interfering between the landlord and the tenants?—It has been so on some occasions, but it is better now.

Lord Kenyon.

16,586. Do you say that that is not the case now?—I do not know so much about them now. I do not live under them.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ROBERT EVANS called and examined.

16,587. The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Robert Evans, Cryniarth Mawr, Cefnddwysarn,

"(Parish of Llanfor), Merionethshire.

"Personal.—Tenant farmer on the Rhiwlas estate. Extent of farm, 23 acres. Rent, 28*l.* (this sum includes the tithe rentcharge, about 32*s.*). Held farm since 1881. Evidence will be chiefly with reference to upper part of Rhiwlas estate, and part of Palé estate (at Bethel); that is the evidence covers the upper part of Llanfor and of Llandderfel parishes.

"Occupation.—Farmer and fellmonger.

"February 1st is the time for a new tenant to enter for cultivating the land; May 13th for the house and buildings. All the holdings in this district are annual tenancies. There is no demand for leases; one reason why leases are not asked for is that farmers have not been accustomed to them. The custom of the country has been annual tenancies. Another reason is that they do not expect to get them on favourable terms, especially as to the rent. As far as I can make out, tenants' changes in our district are just about the same as formerly. When a portion of a farm is taken from it by the landlord, notice is given, and a deduction made in rent, e.g., Bryn Bannon Farm, Cefnddwysarn, Rhiwlas estate. Part of farm taken for game farm; notice was given in due time to tenant, and tenant received a deductiod in the rent. Tynyffrith and Cynlas and Tynybryn. Part of each taken for rabbit warren; six months' notice given of the landlord's intention, and the rent was reduced. When trees are cut down, no compensation for damage is given to the tenant; he is, however, allowed all the branches for firewood. In cases where trees are cut from the hedges, the tenant has, at his own expense, to make up the gaps thus caused.

"Agreements.—Palé estate: No written agreement whatever between tenant and landlord. The tenants hold under the Agricultural Holdings Act 1883, and the custom of the country. On Rhiwlas estate there is an agreement, and I consider the following terms in the agreement to be of a severe character. The condition that a

See 16,832. tenant can only have two white crops in succession in the same field, and this is impracticable on upland farms. A penalty of 10*l.* per acre is claimed under the agreement for a breach of this condition, and in the latter part of the agreement it will be found that the landlord promises certain sums by way of compensation to tenants for various things, provided the tenant has observed all the terms in the first part of the agreement. It is quite impossible for the tenant to observe all the terms to which he is bound, so that the landlord is released from his obligation. Six months' notice to quit is quite unreasonable, and is a great drawback to the proper cultivation of the farms.

"The carrying of materials for buildings.—This is especially hard, in view of the short notice to quit which can be given. The condition that the tenant must render extra service to the landlord, I consider very mean. I consider if there is extra to be done, it ought to be on the other side. A copy of the agreement is given in English, or in Welsh, to all the tenants on the Rhiwlas estate.

"Rent.—The rent is fixed in a lump sum. Taken as a general rule, farms of about the same size and character in our district are pretty uniform as regards rent. But the smaller farms are dearer per acre than the larger ones, which I think ought not to be the case, e.g., Coedy bedol, 224 acres and sheep walk for 700 sheep, rent 127*l.* inclusive; Cryniarth, 23 acres, rent 28*l.*; Derwgoed, 200 acres, rent 100*l.*; Tyhen, 18 acres, rent 23*l.* As a rule, one may say that the rents per acre of highland farms in our district are on large farms from 10*s.* to 12*s.* per acre, and on small farms from 16*s.* to 20*s.* per acre. No services are rendered to the landlord on the Palé estate. On the Rhiwlas estate there is two days' work with one or two men and one or two horses according to the size of the farm. As a rule rents are fixed by private treaty after offers have been made. As a rule the person who is prepared to give the rent the landlord asks for is the accepted tenant.

"Alterations in the rent.—Rents have generally been raised in the last 50 years."

Rents of most of these farms were raised before any new buildings were made. Rents have been raised from the year 1852 to 1888 50 per cent., after 1888 have been reduced 15½ per cent."

Statement continued:

"Permanent reductions varying from 10 per cent. to 20 per cent. were made in the year 1888, as the above cases show, on the Rhiwlas estate. On the Palé estate permanent reductions have been made in some cases. Previous to the reductions on both these estates small returns of 10 per cent. had been made in the rent in 1881, 1886, and 1887. On Palé estate 15 per cent. has been returned out of the last two rents. The farms had their rents generally raised on the valuation of the estate by Mr. Jenkins of Plas y Ward (now Bryn Celyn) near Ruthin. No valuation was made on the Rhiwlas estate before the reductions; but on the Palé estate in cases of reduction a valuation was made by Mr. Thomas Jones, Brynmelyn, Llandderfel. The change of rents and the reductions made were of course due to the fall in prices, and the difficulty farmers had to meet their liabilities. The rents are paid within three months after they fall due. Tithe: Since the tithe agitation the tithe has been paid by the landlord on the Rhiwlas estate. Land tax and house duties and local rates are paid by tenant. The income tax is paid by the landlord."

"Taxes have gone up considerably.

"Wages have gone up about 150 per cent. to 200 per cent. in the last 50 years.

"Of late years wool has gone down about 100 per cent.

"Of late years sheep have gone down about 100 per cent.

"Of late years store cattle from 40 to 60 per cent.

"Of late years horses about 25 per cent.

"Pigs very changeable; fetch good prices now.

"The chief grievances on the Palé and Rhiwlas estate are high rents and trespass from game, especially on farms close to the coverts, and buildings in many cases on the Rhiwlas estate are poor."

"With regard to Tynybryn Farm, mentioned in the list of farms, I may say that my father, Meredith Evans, was the tenant, and after his death my mother succeeded him, and she married again, and her second husband, Robert Daniel, became tenant, and he was not on very good terms with the agent, Frank Parmeter; and in consequence it is our opinion that on his death my mother's rent, who then became tenant for the second time, was raised from 60*l.* to 80*l.* We want a good Land Bill, which will contain fair rent, security of tenure, and full compensation for all improvements by means, of course, of a Land Court, and the disestablishment and disendowment of the Church in order that part of the tithe should go towards the local rates."

Mr. Grove.

16,587A. You stated in your evidence that leases are not asked for because it is feared that the rents would not be so reasonable. What do you mean by that exactly?—We would not get the rents on favourable terms to cover bad times.

16,588. Is it from any intimation you have had to that effect, or is it because you fear it in your own minds?—We fear it.

16,589. We have been told that leases would be granted readily to any of the tenant farmers who asked for them?—Yes.

16,590. That is what we have been told generally?—That is the first time we have heard about it.

16,591. I take it then that applications for leases have not been made?—No.

16,592. Because of that fear that is in your mind?—Yes.

16,593. But if you went to the landlord, and he granted you a lease on the same conditions that you now hold under, you would be satisfied in some cases to take it, I suppose?—We want something besides security of tenure.

16,594. Yes, I understand all those points. Then you speak of extra services rendered by tenants, in your evidence. What do you mean by those extra services?—There is a clause in the agreement that the tenant is to do a certain amount of work for the landlord besides rent.

16,595. But are those extra services that you speak of shown in the agreement itself?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,596. Is this clause in the agreement enforced, that you are not to take more than two white crops in succession on the same field?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

16,597. It is not enforced?—No.

16,598. But if you break it, what is the consequence?—We get no compensation.

16,599. That is, if you made a claim for compensation under the agreement, or under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—It is under the agreement. They have contracted themselves out of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

16,600. So that you are allowed freedom of cropping, and yet there is a penalty attached to it?—Yes.

16,601. You say that these extra services that have to be rendered are a hardship on the tenant?—I think so.

16,602. Do you think that if the landlord demanded six days' services, the tenant would agree to it?—Oh, yes.

16,603. Because he does not feel himself strong enough to make favourable terms?—Yes.

16,604. You say that the tenant pays the local rates and the house duty. Do you know of any case where the tenant pays house duty?—He pays house duty on some houses on the Rhiwlas estate.

16,605. Are there any houses on the Rhiwlas estate where house duty is paid?—Farmhouses?

16,606. Yes?—I know of only one.

16,607. Only one?—Well, in the district that I come to give evidence for.

16,608. What is the name of that?—Brynbannon.

Chairman.

16,609. Several questions are handed up. One by Mr. Vincent—"Did you hear Mr. Price "say that 100,000*l.* had been spent on repairs "and improvements on the estate in 30 years?—No, I was not in the room then.

16,610. "If that is the case, do you suggest "that he has received any adequate return for "this money? Can you answer than question?—Well, I did not hear the first statement.

16,611. "Do you think if there was a Land "Court he would spend a farthing on his "estate"?—We hope every landlord would.

Chairman—continued.

16,612. You hope he would?—Yes.

16,613. Another question by Mr. Vincent—"You say that the clause in Mr. Price's agree-"ment as to two white crops is harsh because it "is impracticable?" That is what you said?—Yes.

16,614. "Why was it impracticable"?—The district where I am giving evidence for is highland farms, and they plough a good deal for the sake of the straw and so on, and green crops are of very little service on many upland farms. So if we were to give artificial seeds in the ground, after the second crop it would not be in a suitable condition; it requires a third crop to make it in a proper condition to put the seed down.

16,615. "Can you mention any cases in "which the restrictive or penal clauses have "been enforced?"—No.

16,616. Then a question by Mr. Price—"Would you take a lease of your farm at your "present rent?"—No.

16,617. You would not?—No.

16,618. Another question by Mr. Price—"The house duty you referred to is paid upon "Branyannon, which is let as a lodging-house, "is it not?"—It is a farmhouse.

16,619. It is a farmhouse, but is it not let as a lodging-house?—Well, it is the rule in the country when they can get strangers to come, to let a room or two to them, and they do that.

16,620. They let a room or two in the season?—Yes.

16,621. Then a question by Mr. Owen Wynne "Do you consider it good farming to take more "than two white straw crops in succession off "the same land"—I do, on upland farms. We cut a good deal of rough land—waste land—up; we cannot have it in proper condition to put seeds in.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,622. That is if you manure it of course?—Of course. You might put in five or six, with plenty of manure into it.

16,623. With virgin soil?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN JONES called and examined through an Interpreter.

See previous evidence, 16,161–64.

16,623A. The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of Mr. John Jones, Bala, formerly tenant farmer. Chosen by a number of Rhiwlas estate tenants to appear before the Commissioners.

"Evidence refers to farms on Rhiwlas estate, also personal evidence as to occupation of farm on Bodweni estate and farm on Rhiwlas estate.

"Some farmers in this district (Penllyn) complain that landlords employ agents who are ignorant about land and tillage. They have never had any connexion with farming, nor any experience whatever of land agencies prior to their appointment. These are small tradesmen, who have by some means or other got into favour with the landlords. They do not acquaint the landlord with the grievances of the farmer. Such is the case with building particularly. I know one farmer who put in his complaint more than a year ago, and has nothing, though the buildings are in a most unsatisfactory state. The roof of the house is so bad that the sky is visible through it in most parts The barn is in a similar condition, and the rain coming through greatly damages the crops. The cowshed is altogether unfit, and it may, any day, bury the animals under ruin. The farmer is a Welshman who does not understand English, and the landlord and chief agent are Englishmen, who do not know Welsh. The Rhiwlas estate has for a long time been suffering from this same disadvantage of difference of languages. Mr. Price, the landlord, who himself does not know Welsh, has had four agents during the last thirty years, three of whom were utterly ignorant of the Welsh language. This was unfair, as most of the tenants are monoglot Welshmen. An incident occurred on this estate some years ago, which shows that neither landlord nor agent cared much about hearing the grievance of the tenants. A number of the tenants joined and signed a petition to the landlord, praying for abatement the following rent day. The response was, five per cent. returned to the petitioners, and ten per cent. to those of the tenants whose names did not appear to the petition. Some of these foreign agents seem to be equally foreign to the well-being of farm and farmer. Evidently, they knew not much about the value of land. They would ask 200*l.* for a farm, and then let it for 140*l.* But it is a well-known fact that land is not let by the actual value, but to the highest bidder.

"Rent.

"As a rule the rent is fixed at a gross sum; in many cases the tenant has no idea how many acres his farm consists of.

"There is no uniformity in the rent of land of a similar character on the same estate.

"Generally one may say that small farms are much more highly rented than large farms; one might almost say that the rent per acre is generally very much higher.

"The right of pasturage for sheep is calculated on the amount of rent levied on the Rhiwlas estate. When a farmer gives up the pastures his rent is proportionately reduced. On the Bryn-pader farm the rent was raised on a common.

"Re-valuation of Estate.

"In 1876 a re-valuation of the estate was made by Mr. Jenkins, of Plas-y-ward, Ruthin. After this valuation the rents were raised and in some cases 25 per cent. However, I understood from Mr. Jenkins that in some cases where he has valued a farm at less than the old rent that the rents were increased, and in a large number of cases the rents were raised to a considerably higher figure than his valuation. The effect of this re-valuation has been disastrous to many of the tenants on the estate. For years now many tenants have had to keep all their children at home hard at work, but have been unable to pay them any wages. In other cases tenants have been compelled to give up their farms, leaving their capital invested in them. I would mention the following instance of the way rents have been raised on the Rhiwlas estate. They are farms taken at random from various parts of the estate:— See 16,320–29.

Parish.	Name of Farm.	Rent in 1870.	Rent in 1877 after Re-valuation.	Rent in 1892.
Llanfair - -	Gloig - - -	35	40	29
„ - -	Tynycelyn - -	45	57	36
Llanycil - -	Maesytail - -	65	74	67
Llanfair - -	Pentre cwmtirmynach -	70	124	114
„ - -	Tyllwyd - -	40	53	48
„ - -	Wernfawr - -	50	72	57

"In the case of Gloig and Tynycelyn the tenants failed to pay their rents after the increase and had to leave. They were distrained on.

"In the year 1880 I took a farm belonging to the late Mr. W. Price Jones, Bodweni Llandderfel, called Hafod Ucha, Calettwr, in the parish of Llanfor. The rent was 60*l.* The previous tenant paid 54*l.* When I entered the land was in a very poor state, the walls in many places down, no gates, and the buildings in a very bad condition. In March 1881 I signed an agreement between Mr. E. R. Jenkins, who came into the property upon the death of Mr. Price Jones. I refused to sign the agreement until I was promised that the walls should be put up and gates placed between the fields. This promise however, was never performed, and in the year 1883 I gave notice. At this time Mr. Jenkins was abroad and when my notice expired there was no tenant forthcoming. Mr. Jenkins, of Plas-y-ward, Ruthin, my landlord's father, came over to see me, and went over the farm, and eventually relet it to me for 30*l.* a year. When my landlord returned he gave me notice to quit as I was unwilling to pay a higher rent than 30*l.* During my tenancy I had made various improvements, such as making a new loft in the stable, rebuilding walls between the mountain and the farm, reflooring the house with stones which I paid for and carted myself, and I have ever failed to get any compensation. I suffered a good deal from the mountain grouse coming on to the farm. Several of the other tenants were compensated for the damage caused by the grouse.

See 16,832. "In the year 1885 I took a farm called Tynycelyn farm, from Mr. Edward Watkin the agent on the Rhiwlas estate. The rent was 48*l.*, or 2*l.* less than my predecessor paid. He had become a bankrupt, and when I entered I undertook to pay Mr. Price 80*l.*, which was the amount he owed him. One thing which he said had ruined him was the game nuisance, and very soon after I went there I made a wire fence round part of my fields so as to protect myself against the rabbits.

"During the years I was at Tynycelyn I lost two dogs and nine cats, with the result that the rats increased to an enormous extent. Traps were always being set in the woods, and animals strayed into these. I found three of my sheep dead, having been caught in the traps. I warned my successor of the danger in connexion with the traps, and he found two half-starved sheep in the traps, which subsequently died.

"On the Trebenmaen part of the Rhiwlas estate the Ground Game Act has been of very little good. By that Act we can only kill them on our own land, whereas the woods around and in the middle of the farms swarm with rabbits, and it is from these that we suffer most. Further, Mr. Price has always objected to our shooting them.

"Another cause of loss to the Rhiwlas tenants is the way in which pheasants are scattered through the woods on the estate. They are reared, in the first instance, near the Hall, and then farmers are paid so much for their crops, and afterwards they are taken to the various woods. From there they get over the cornfields and the potato fields, and cause considerable damage. Farmers are complaining very much of damage so caused at the present time, and also complain of the keepers. A keeper shot a bitch as late as the 22nd of last month, September.

"In September 1886 I gave notice, but as no tenant was forthcoming, I stayed on till 1888. In 1888 I re-took the farm, and signed an agreement. The rent was then reduced to 44*l.* In the following September I gave notice, as I was unable to pay my way. It was let to another person, the rent being reduced to 36*l.*, and he being promised certain repairs and a fence. He has received the fence, but I understand that the other repairs have not been carried out. I left in March 1889, and have since then been working as a labourer upon various farms in the district.

"A tenant of the Rhiwlas estate, whose name I am prepared to give, related to me the following."

Chairman.

See 16,382, re Cwm-Mein. 16,624. Will you give us the name, if you please?—I object to give the name, because he is afraid of Mr. Price. The agreement has been put in with the evidence, and his name appears on the agreement.

16,625. Here are several agreements (handing a bundle), will you pick out the one you refer to?—Will you look at those (selecting two agreements)?

Chairman—continued.

"In the year 1868 he rented a farm of 464 acres on that estate; rent 140*l.*, yearly tenancy. He was promised a new cowhouse, a shepherd's house, and a new road on the mountain to the farmhouse. He remained there 20 years, but none of the promised improvements were carried out. In the year 1870 his rent was reduced 12*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*, as he gave up the pasturage for 300 sheep. In the year 1876 the rent was raised 37*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* In the year 1883 he gave notice, and asked for 40*l.* reduction in the rent, but failed to get more than 15*l.* In 1888 he left the farm, being quite unable to continue. While on this farm he carried out a number of improvements, such as draining, raising stones for new walls, making new fences. This he did entirely at his own expense, and when leaving he received no compensation for his improvements. When he entered upon the farm in 1868 it was known to be in a wretched condition.

"I know a tenant on the Rhiwlas estate, whose evidence I can give who, implored me not to mention his name, as he feared his landlord, and that from such evidence his landlord would be able to discover who he was."

16,626. You decline to give us the name of that tenant?—I have bound myself not to give the name of the tenant. I have promised him.

16,627. What is the amount of the rent?—140*l.*

16,628. We are told that the name is generally known in the room. Will you give his name?—The agreement says——

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,629. According to these two agreements that you have handed up, the rent in one case is 165*l.* and in the other 135*l.* Neither one is at 140*l.* a year?—I want to keep my word, but I give you permission to name him.

Chairman.

We do not want to press for the name, but if the name is not given the evidence will be taken simply for what it is worth.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,630. In the evidence you say you paid 80*l.* to Mr. Price upon entry into your farm. What was that 80*l.* for?—The debt of the previous farmer who had become bankrupt.

16,631. Why should you pay the debt of the former tenant?—I received the crops instead of it.

16,632. How was this sum assessed or fixed. Was it assessed by valuation or did you take it at Mr. Price's valuation?—The crop and the sheep were greater than that.

16,633. So that there was a proper valuation made between the incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant?—Yes.

Chairman.

A communication has been passed up to me from Mr. Price. He wishes it to be known that no tenant of his has any reason to shrink from coming forward to give any evidence he pleases. Mr. Price also adds that he has invited six of his principal tenants, already, to give evidence before the Commission if they will.

[This announcement was also made in Welsh.]

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,634. You say that a keeper on Mr. Price's estate shot the bitch of a tenant as late as the 22nd of last September?—Yes.

16,635. Will you mention the name of the keeper?—I cannot give it, but we call him "Robin Nansi Llwyd"—Robin, the son of Nancy Lloyd.

16,636. Do you know if this keeper went to the tenant and asked him to hush the matter up in view of this inquiry?—So I heard.

16,637. From whom did you hear it?—From the tenant himself.

16,638. You say that on the Rhiwlas estate the farms are let to the highest bidder. When you became a tenant, could you tell us what was the course taken with you. Were you told to go and walk the farm, and make your bid?—No.

16,639. Then how are you able to state that the farms are let to the highest bidder?—I can only say that when I left the farm the highest bidder got it.

16,640. Were they treating along with other persons at the same time?—Yes, they were.

16,641. And those walking the farm?—Yes.

16,642. And each made his bid?—I do not know.

Mr. Grove.

16,643. You spoke of damage done by grouse to the farms near to the mountain, and you said that some of the farmers received compensation, but that you did not?—They were not under the same landlord as I was.

16,644. Did you ask for compensation when you had that damage?—Yes.

16,645. And did you get it?—No.

16,646. What reason was given?—That is what he said—that the reason why the other landlord gave compensation was because he wanted their vote to go into Parliament.

Professor Rhŷs.

16,647. Who was he?—Sir Henry Robertson of Palé.

Chairman.

I should like to say a word upon this witness's statement, as to tenants being afraid to come forward to give evidence. I have had to speak on this subject before, and I said then what I say now. We do not for one moment think that any landlords would be hard on their tenants if they came forward to give evidence; but we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that there is a sort of belief that that might happen. We do not think that any of the landlords would do such a thing; but it cannot be too widely known, and I repeat it again here, that we are perfectly unanimous, and have made up our minds on this point, that if any solitary case of intimidation or threatening of witnesses comes before us we shall not hesitate for one single instant in putting the power that the law has placed in our hands into force.

[This announcement was also made in Welsh.]

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,648. When you started farming on the Rhiwlas estate, I take it you had a certain amount of capital?—Oh, yes.

16,649. And you are now reduced to the condition of a labourer?—I chose that.

16,650. Because it was more profitable than farming?—I was losing money by farming.

Chairman.

16,651. Here is a question put in by Mr. Vincent—"Can you specify any cases in which "a farm has been let to the highest bidder?"—Yes, there is the farm which I left; that was one.

Professor Rhŷs.

16,652. You mentioned that before?—Yes. Then there is Gloig.

Chairman.

16,653. Another question by Mr. Vincent—"In each case will you say how you know that "the farm was let to the highest bidder?"—The tenant had offered that figure, but they were higher.

16,654. "How many farms have you held in "the course of your life?"—Only two.

16,655. "Did you ever make any claim in "respect of the sheep you say were killed in "traps?"—No, I did not.

16,656. "Was not Tynycelyn offered to you "at precisely the same rent as that at which "the next tenant took it?"—Yes, but I had made a sale, and had distributed my things.

16,657. Then I have some questions by Mr. Price—"Does the present agent of the "Rhiwlas estate speak Welsh or English best?—He can speak Welsh as well as he can speak English.

16,658. "Will you name the 'ignorant' agents "you complain of?"—Yes, I can.

Chairman.

Does Mr. Price wish the names put in?

Mr. R. J. L. Price.

I should like the names if he will give them generally—mine or anybody else's. I understood him to say that the agents generally in this part of the world were ignorant. He did not say ignorant of the Welsh language; he said "ignorant."

Chairman.

16,659. (To the Witness.) Will you give the names?—One especially is Mr. Armstrong, the agent of Sir Henry Robertson, of Palé.

16,660. What was Mr. Armstrong before he came agent?

Mr. D. Jones.—He is private secretary. He is not an agent at all.

Chairman.

Order, order. Any questions to be put to the witness must be handed in to the Chair; no one must speak from the body of the hall.

16,661. What was Mr. Armstrong before he became an agent?—Private secretary or secretary, I think.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,662. To whom?—To Sir Henry Robertson.

16,663. What was he before he became private secretary?—I do not know.

Chairman.

16,664. Have you any more names?—And there are other Welshmen who do not know enough about land. There is one, a confectioner, in Bala. here.

Professor Rhŷs.

16,665. Do you mean that the confectioner is an agent?—Yes, he is.

16,666. On what estate?—Mrs. Jones, of Maes y rhedyn.

16,667. Is that a large estate?—No, it is not a very large estate.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,668. I have some other questions put in by Mr. Price: "Was not 1000*l* spent on new "buildings on Cwm mein, the farm referred to?"—I do not know; he knows that.

16,669. "Is not Robert Williams, the late "tenant of Cwm mein Mill, a Rhiwlas tenant?"—Yes.

16,670. Then there is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Mrs. Hughes, of Maesyrhedyn, has not "more than four farms at the most, has she?"—Yes, a little like that she has got.

16,671. Then a question is put in by Mr. D. Jones: "Do you know that Mr. Armstrong is "only a private secretary?"—He is now regarded as an agent upon the estate of Sir Henry Robertson.

Mr. Grove.

16,672. Does he act as an agent?—He has been.

Chairman.

16,673. Then I have some questions put by Mr. William Buckley: "As regards the complaint "of the damage done by grouse, will you state "what amount of damage was done and how?"—There is a good deal of loss, but it would have been scores of pounds only that I was there on Sunday and on a holiday and on working days for six weeks.

16,674. "You stated that Mr. E. R. Jenkins "was abroad, and that Mr. Jenkins, senior, of "Plas yn Ward, came over and reduced the rent "to 30*l*., also that subsequently Mr. E. R. "Jenkins on his return home gave a notice to "quit. Why was that?"—Because his father had let it too low.

16,675. "Is it not true that you were served "with notice on account of your bad farming "and lazy habits and allowing the farm to "become impoverished?"—No, it is not. There are witnesses who can show that I improved the farm very much.

16,676. Are any of those witnesses in the room?—Yes, there is one.

16,677. Who is it?—Edward Edwards, of Maes yr fallen. He is here.

The witness withdrew.

See previous evidence, 7229–7319.

Mr. EDWARD EDWARDS called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

16,678. You are acquainted with Mr. John Jones?—Yes.

16,679. Can you talk English?—No, I speak Welsh better.

16,680. How long have you known him?—I have known him about 30 years.

16,681. Do you consider him a good farmer?—Well, he made an improvement on that farm, considering the condition it was in before he went there.

16,682. You consider that he is a good farmer, and that he does his land in a husbandlike manner?—Yes, I consider that he does so, and that whilst he was there he improved the farm. That farm was allowed to run by the former tenant greatly before Mr. John Jones went there.

Chairman—continued.

16,683. Was the condition of the farm better or worse when Mr. Jones left it?—It was better.

Professor Rhŷs.

16,684. Much?—I do not say that it was much better, but it was better.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN JONES recalled and further examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

16,685. I have two more questions by Mr. Vincent. The first is about the ignorant agents, "What real agent can you name who is igno- "rant?"—There are two; that is there have been. One is the confectioner; then Mr. Schoon, the first agent.

16,686. On whose estate?—On Mr. Price's estate.

16,687. What was he before he was agent?—I do not know.

16,688. Another question by Mr. Vincent is, "What has Mr. Armstrong done as agent?"—I do not think he has done anything.

Chairman—continued.

16,689. Then I have a question by Mr. William Darley: "Is it not true that you inter- "fered with the grouse shooting?"—There?

16,690. Yes?—At Hafoducha.

16,691. On the Bodweni estate?—Yes. I pushed Mr. Jenkins away from the corn when he was shooting there—in the stoups of the corn.

16,692. Then a question by Mr. Vincent: "Do "you know that Mr. Schoon came with recom- "mendations as agent from Mr. Sandbach, of "Hafodunos, to Mr. Price?"—He proved that he did not know the value of land.

See 17,54

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

It has been stated to me that the Interpreter in translating into Welsh the announcement I made a short time ago stated, "That the Commission would "enforce the law against any landlord." What I said was that the Commission would enforce the law against any landlord or any other person. The Interpreter will kindly make that clear.

The Interpreter made a corrected announcement in the Welsh language.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. JOHN JONES called and examined through an interpreter.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of Mr. John Jones of Berthlafar, Bala.

"I am a tenant farmer to R. J. L. Price, Esq., Rhiwlas. My tenancy began about 21 years ago on an upland farm called Rhydyfen, halfway between Bala and Festiniog. I worked very hard and spent a great deal of money in improving the farm by making fences, opening water courses, and building mostly hay sheds. About five years ago, owing to the health of my wife and seeing myself getting old, I made up my mind to get a farm in a lower climate and took a small farm in the Vale of Clwyd. Mr. Price and his son were very unwilling for me to leave the estate and offered me a farm called Berthlafar, about a mile and a half from this town. I had this farm in a most wretched state, the hedges and fences completely out of order, and some of the land was exhausted and very dirty. Since I have taken this farm I have been losing money very fast owing to the bad state of trade and very high wages. I hope some remedy will come soon or I shall be obliged to leave it again."

Chairman.

16,693. Is that your statement and is it correct?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

16,694. What remedy do you expect?—It is very difficult to know what remedy is to be expected.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

16,695. What are you thinking of. I suppose you have got some idea in your mind about a remedy?—To equalise rates is one thing.

16,696. Will you explain a little further what you mean?—There are too many rates on the land, and I should think it would be fairer to put them on property rather than on land. I pay 300*l.* rent and I am obliged to pay rates accordingly, whereas people who are equally well off live in a house with a rent of 50*l.* and pay rates accordingly.

16,697. What else were you thinking of?—Railway rates.

16,698. What do you think of railway rates about here?—That they are high, very high. They are higher this year than last year. I am obliged to pay 4*s.* more this year than last year for a truck taken something like 19 miles.

16,699. Do the high rates charged by the railways oblige you to keep more horses?—Not altogether for that reason.

16,700. But in other ways you have to pay too much you think?—A cattle dealer buys the cattle and knows the cost of conveying them and so we are obliged to sell them to correspond to that expense.

16,701. You mean that practically the fare of these animals is deducted from the price you ought to have?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

16,702. Your present rent is 300*l.* a year I think you say?—In two farms, one in the Vale of Clwyd and one here.

16,703. Both owned by the same landlord?—No.

Mr. Grove—continued.

16,704. What acreage have you for the 300*l.* a year?—159 acres and 134 acres.

16,705. That is 293 acres. Is it mixed land. Is there much waste land about it or is it pretty fair land?—Pretty fair land.

16,706. It was in bad condition when you took it?—Yes.

16,707. Did you take it at a low rental, because it was in a bad condition?—No, I could not get it.

16,708. Was the rent a matter of bargain between you and the landlord when you went in?—Yes, the landlord said that the rental was to be as it was before.

16,709. Although the condition of the farm was very bad?—Yes.

16,710. Just one word as to the question of railway rates. You say that you pay more now than you did before for taking a truck 19 miles?—Yes.

16,711. What does the truck contain?—Cattle or sheep, or anything else.

16,712. A certain number of cattle of course, put into the truck?—According to the size of the truck.

16,713. Do you know whether the railway company charge you more than they are entitled to charge by Act of Parliament?—No, I do not know.

16,714. But it is more than it was, say 18 months ago?—Yes.

16,715. How much more?—4*s.* for the distance.

16,716. For the full truck?—A drover was allowed carriage free before. Now we have to pay for the man with the stock.

16,717. But the truck was full was it; or was it half full?—It was full.

16,718. Where were they from, and where were they to?—From Bala to Nantclwyd.

Professor Rhŷs.

16,719. That would be on two different lines by the way?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,720. You hold two farms at present?—Yes.

16,721. Are they both under the same landlord?—No.

16,722. Under different landlords?—Different.

16,723. What is the size and what is the rent of Berthlafar?—159 acres, 200*l.*

16,724. Is the grass of Berthlafar good enough to fatten cattle without giving them artificial food?—Well, it is good enough to fatten sheep and lambs and it is good enough to fatten cattle if you do not put too many on the land.

16,725. You say that you had this farm in a wretched state?—Yes.

16,726. What was the previous rent?—200*l.* as far as I know.

16,727. And yet you took the farm at 200*l.*, although it had been worked out?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

16,728. Was there no allowance made to you on account of the condition of the farm; no promised allowance made to you in any way by the landlord on account of the condition of the farm?—I had materials for making up the fences and other things; no allowance in money.

16,729. I think you say you spent a lot of money on buildings in the farm that you occupied previously?—Yes, I did.

16,730. Now, Mr. Price in his statement this morning said that he did all the improvements and that the tenant did nothing, only the fences. That statement is not true as far as your case is concerned?—Well, it is true as far as this. Mr. Price paid me 55*l.* when I was leaving for what I had done.

16,731. Did you consider that adequate; did you consider that sufficient?—I only asked him 4*l.* more.

16,732. What induced you to let off the 4*l* more. What made you let that 4*l.* go?—I consider the 55*l.* a good deal more than I expected.

16,733. You say you are losing money now on this place?—Yes, I do.

16,734. Why do you not give it up?—I expect better times.

16,735. And then when better times come you will stick on in order to get money to pay for the losses you are now suffering?—Yes, and try to make something besides.

Chairman.

16,736. There are several questions by Mr Vincent: "Did you receive 87*l.* compensation "on leaving the upland farm?"—No, I received 55*l.*

16,737. "Was a new house built for you at Berthlafar?"—Yes.

16,738. Then I have two questions by Mr. Edward Edwards: "Did you take Berthlafar in "the month of June before the old tenant had "notice to quit?"—I did not.

16,739. "Did you not tell one of your servants "at Rhydyfen during the hay-harvest that you "had taken Berthlafar?"—I did not.

16,740. Then a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Do you think a Land Court would be satisfac-"tory, or do you think it best to leave matters "to be settled between landlord and tenant?" —Well, I do not profess to understand much about the Land Court, but, as far as I do, I do not believe in it.

Mr. Grove.

16,741. What is your idea of a Land Court then, because that is an important answer rather, if we are to attach any significance to it at all?—My opinion is that a Land Court would kill all sympathies and interests between the landlord and his tenant.

16,742. But if there were a Land Court provided, would you not allow the landlord and the tenant to first of all try to come to an agreement between themselves before they went to the Land Court?—Well, I do not understand what the Land Court is.

16,743. It would be something to fall back upon if they could not agree with each other?—I am quite in favour of every tenant having full security for his improvements, but I think the landlord and the tenant ought to have a clear understanding, before beginning, what is a permanent improvement.

16,744. Yes, that is very probable, and the Land Court would be arranged, no doubt, to give that. Would you consider that a Land Court ought to have anything to do with fixity of tenure?—Well, if a man would look after his farm well, I consider he ought to have security for his improvements before beginning, and that would be enough for me for a security of tenure.

16,745. Then would you be prepared to spend money in improvements even on a yearly tenancy?—Yes, on the security that I should be repaid if something happened for me to leave.

16,746. You would like a Land Court to say what would be a fair rent. Supposing that a landlord and a tenant could not agree, you would like a Land Court to say: "Now, that "farm is worth so much a year, that is the fair "thing between both"?—Well, I do not know what to say on that. I think the tenant and the landlord ought to be able to agree themselves.

16,747. And in the case of a good landlord you think that might be brought about?—Yes.

16,748. But in the case of a bad landlord what would you say then?—Have a law to punish him.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,749. You say that you are losing money on your farm at present?—Yes.

16,750. And that you are dissatisfied with your position?—Yes, as far as the trade goes and wages.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

16,751. If you are dissatisfied, why do not you go and settle your difference along with your landlord instead of coming to the court here to state your case?—Well, I state my case here to try to get some remedy—to get things remedied.

16,752. Have you any remedy to suggest?—Only what I have suggested.

16,753. What was it?—The equalisation of rates, and the reduction of railway rates, and so on, and another thing, I think, they are keeping too many officers a great deal, paying high wages for a great number of people.

Mr. Richard Jones.

Those are only like a pill for an earthquake, I am afraid.

Chairman.

16,754. Then I have some questions by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Were you farm bailiff at "Rhiwlas for years?"—Yes, I was.

16,755. "Have you ever expressed to anyone "your opinion that there was urgent necessity "for a Land Bill for Wales?"—No, I never bothered my head with it.

16,756. You never have?—No.

16,757. "How much reduction would you "expect to get from any change in the inci-"dences of rates?"—Well, I do not profess to understand the matter.

16,758. "Do you think that there ought to be "a court to decide between the railways and "the farmers?"—Yes, or the Government should look after it.

16,759. "When you left Rhydyfen did you "receive any compensation for improvements?" —Yes.

16,760. "Do you consider the amount you "received adequate?"—Well, yes; it was within 4*l.* of what I asked, as I said before.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN LLOYD, called and examined through an interpreter.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of John Lloyd, of Pen-y bryn in the parish of Llandderfel.

"I am a tenant farmer. In the year 1878 I went to Ty issa yn-cwm, a farm in the parish of Cerrigydruidion, belonging to Colonel Mainwaring, of Galltfaeran. The rent was 91*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, and, in addition to this, I had to pay the tithe rentcharge. When I rented the farm, the landland promised to put the house and farm-buildings in thorough repair. The house was in a very bad state. In the winter, owing to the state of the roofs, the snow used to collect on the beds. I was there for nine years and did my utmost to get my landlord to make the promised repairs. In the ninth year I gave notice to quit, expecting that in this way I should either get a reduction in the rent or repairs. I was, however, not successful, and had to leave. The succeeding tenant got the place for about 33*l.* less than I had paid for it, and in addition the requisite repairs were made for him. Besides this, the landlord fenced the farm for him also.

"During the time I was at Tyissa I lost fully 300*l.* All my children had to work. A boy of mine only 7 years of age had to do a great deal of work on the farm. Notwithstanding this, it was with great difficulty that I managed to pay my way and clothe my children properly.

"One thing which has been greatly detrimental to agriculture in the district is the manner in which small farms have been consolidated. Thus, about Cwm tir Mynach, the district where I live, I am prepared to make a statement of the names of the farms joined."

Chairman.

See 16,894. 16,761. Is that correct?—Yes.

16,762. How many farms were there?—Three farms have been consolidated, Nantfach, Gwerni, Gydrosucha, and part of Carreg y ddafad added to Gydros, Cae hir, Beudy Groenwen and Beudy isa added to Defaidty.

16,763. When you left your farm were you given any compensation after the nine years?—

Chairman—continued.

10*s.* 6*d.* was given me for building 8 roods of wall.

16,764. How many acres was the farm?—110 acres of enclosed land, besides the mountain.

Mr. Grove.

16,765. You spoke of your house being in very bad repair for a number of years. Did the landlord or the agent know that the house was in a very bad condition?—The landlord knew.

16,766. Did he come and see it himself?—Many times.

16,767. How long was it allowed to remain in that condition after the landlord knew the state of it?—Until I left the place.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS F. ROWLANDS called and examined through an interpreter.

16,767*a.* The following statement of the witness was read by the interpreter:—

See 7038. "Evidence of Thomas F. Rowlands, of Werglodd-ddu, Llanuwchllyn.

"I became tenant of Werglodd-ddu towards the end of 1874. The annual rent before my coming there was 29*l.*, which was considered too high, and the previous tenant declares that he lost money on the farm. My rent of the farm was raised to 38*l.* The house and all the buildings were in a thoroughly bad condition. The advance in the rent before mentioned was made on the condition that the building should commence in two years, but 10 years elapsed before they commenced building, and this delay had causesd me many losses. Besides, I had to hire a man and a horse for nearly a year to haul towards building, which I consider cost me from 50*l.* to 60*l.* I wish to call attention to the fact that I dug around the stones to blast and pull the out of the ground, as well as digging the foundations, which tenants now-a-days are not asked to do.

"2. Improvements on land through draining, pulling down old walls and putting up new ones, putting lime on the land and clearing it, which had been neglected for many years. Taking these things into consideration, I find that I have lost over 200*l.* on this little bit of land during the last 11 years.

"3. I wish to call attention to the opinion of the different agents in connexion with the comparative value of the Werglodd-ddu land and that of the adjoining farm. The old rent of Werglodd-ddu was 29*l.* for 29 acres and 12 poles. The old rent of the adjoining farm of 68 acres was 33*l.* 4*s.* for 68 acres. According to the opinions of Mr. O. S. Wynne and Mr. John Williams of Gwernhefin, the fair rent of Werglodd-ddu was 38*l.*, and that of the adjoining farm 44*l.* According to the opinions of Colonel Hughes and Mr. William Morris, 38*l.* would at present be a fair rent for Werglodd-ddu, and 26*l.* for the adjoining farm. It will be noticed that the two farms remain the same in extent as at first.

See 7965 16,796.

"4. I can mention one instance out of many I could give, which shows the difference in rent per acre between small and large farms of the same nature. Werglodd-ddu is 29 acres, and nearly 27*s.* an acre; Caergai, a farm of 197 acres close by, is 15*s.* and something over, together with a good mountain, serving as a sheep walk for a great number of sheep, while there is no sheepwalk in connexion with Werglodd-ddu. Another matter which considerably lessens the comparative value of this farm is that there is no water anywhere on the land during the dry seasons. And further, I built, about 16 years ago, a hay shed, which cost me over 16*l.*

"5. Under the above circumstances I have fervently asked for a reduction in the rent for nearly three years; but in the summer of 1892 Colonel Hughes and Mr. William Morris came to value my farm, and I was for a good long time before hearing from them. In consequence of the delay I went to Mr. William Morris and asked whether my rent was to be reduced, and he replied that it was not. Early this summer I spoke with Colonel Hughes, and pressed him for a reduction. The only reason he gave me for not reducing the rent was that 'I was a 'friend of Mr. John Williams' (the late agent) 'and that I ought to go to him to ask for a re-'duction, instead of putting them in "that hole."' I again went to Mr. William Morris (the sub-agent) and told him I had approached him for the last time on the subject of the rent, but I did not receive a satisfactory reply. I then said I would take another course, and on the 30th of August I went to Sir Watkin to place my grievances before him, when he gave me a kind and gentlemanly reception. He was unable to understand why my rent was so raised unless a new house had been built for me."

The witness then explained in the next paragraphs of his statement which were ruled to be inadmissible in evidence the state of education in the parish, and the prominent position which he took in opposing a certain committee of which, according to his evidence, the agents approved. He says:—

"It will be understood I was one of the foremost to protest against their plans, and in consequence I am under the impression that that is the reason why the agent refused to reduce my rent."

"I give a list of events which have occurred within the last four years. As the old agents have left this parish, I will give some details, which show how things are carried on under the present agency.

"1. Turning Mr. David Pugh, Tycerrig, Llangower, away from his farm. Mr. Pugh is a Churchman and Conservative, and is now at Henblas, Llwyngwril. Colonel Hughes refused to give the family any reason why he was turning him away from his farm. The tenant cultivated his farm properly, and he had not committed any offence. He was 73 years of age, and the old family had been tenants under Sir Watkin time out of memory, and the tenant's belief was that his daughter came to an early grave in consequence of this eviction.

"2. Llechweddau.—I went there to see the house, and I was obliged to bend down as I went in, just as if I was going into a pig-stye. The house had three windows, and those were about 16 inches in length and breadth. I entered the bedroom, which had only room for two beds, with a narrow passage between them. The earthern floor was damp, and when the tenant's mother was ill in her death-bed, it was said the snow covered the bed. As there was no cart road to the house, the body was removed in a drag-car or sledge (car llysg). Between three and four years ago the tenant agreed with the sub-agent to the raising of his rent by 5*l.* yearly, instead of his hauling towards building a new house; but he has not had a new house up to now, although he has asked for it each year he paid the rent, which included the 5*l.* yearly increase. Having got tired of hoping for a house, the tenant has decided to leave and has taken another place.

6,791, 92. "3. I wish to call attention to the class receiving farms under the new agency, which commenced five years ago. The following is a list of the names, &c.:—

Pantymarch, Rowland Williams, a son of the tenant of Llechweddystrad, and a Congregationalist.

Tycerrig, William Williams, a son of the tenant of Llechweddystrad, and a Congregationalist. An unmarried man occupying the former home of David Pughe and a family.

Pantyceubren, Rowland Rowlands, a Nonconformist.

Caellwyd, Edward Edwards, a Congregationalist.

Blaenlliwuchaf, Robert Edwards, a Congregationalist.

Froncastell, John Roberts, a Congregationalist.

Lon, Margaret Roberts, a Congregationalist.

Frondro, Thomas Williams, a Congregationalist.

Cerrigllwydion, William Evans, a Nonconformist, &c.

"4. The farms consolidated under the new arrangement are:—

Gwerngrug, joined with Llwyngwern.

Llwyncadi, joined with Eithinfynydd.

Wern, joined with Bryngwyn.

All the tenants are Nonconformists.

"5. Under the present agency a Churchman was turned off to make room for a Nonconformist; but under the old agency, except at the 1859 election, not even a single Nonconformist was turned off in favour of a Churchman without there being a sufficient reason to justify the eviction. Although things were bad enough under the old agency, I believe the dissatisfaction is more general under the new. Those who are partial to the present agency may belong to a class who have received their share very extensively in good favours."

Professor Rhŷs.

16,768. Your grievance, so far as I understand it, is that under the present agency on the Wynnstay estate, the tenants who are Churchmen are being cleared out wholesale in order to put in chiefly Independents?—I do not complain of that at all. I simply state that as a fact. I complain of other things.

16,769. Do you complain of the rent amongst other things?—I do.

16,770. And you think that they refused you a reduction in the rent because you took part in an educational dispute in the parish?—I do not know of any other reason. I have not done anything except that.

16,771. And in doing that you were acting in the interests of the parish—or what did you consider you were doing?—For my own benefit, and that of all the parishioners.

16,772. The proceeding which you complain of was the union of the two schools into one, as I understand?—Yes; and especially against the arrangements which were made subsequently.

16,773. I suppose the parishioners had contributed towards the building and maintenance of the schools?—They contributed towards building the British school. I do not known about the other—it was Sir Watkin's school.

16,774. The other was a National school, was it not?—Yes.

16,775. Did you contribute towards both?—No, I did not.

16,776. Towards which did you contribute?—Towards the British school, if I contributed at all. I do not remember.

16,777. You are a Churchman, I think. You did not favour the National school?—I am a Churchman, and I said that I was not opposed to the National school.

16,778. You preferred the British school, and contributed to that?—The other school was Sir Watkin's, and nobody came to ask me for a contribution, therefore there was no necessity to contribute.

16,779. How much, may I ask, was your contribution to the British school?—I gave a shilling every year—I do not know how much more.

Mr. Grove.

16,780. Did you give us the average of your farm?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

16,781. What was it?—29 acres odd.

16,782. And the rent?—38*l.* now.

16,783. You spoke about the inequality of rents for land of the same quality, that is, the difference in rents for land very much of the same quality; I want to know where the rent was 1*l.* 7*s* 0*d.* and where it was 15*s.* per acre whether the quality of the land was pretty much the same in each case?—Taking it altogether, I think it was about the same. It would be some better land let at 15*s.*, and a little worse land belonging to the other farm.

Chairman.

16,784. This is a question handed in by Mr. Ivan Davies: "Can the witness give the name "of any Churchman who applied for the farms "named?"—They say that they do not think it worth while to ask for a farm, judging from the way in which they have been treated in the past. These are two letters I wish to put in.

ee 16,793.

[The following letter was translated from the Welsh by the interpreter.]

"Henblas, Llwyngwril, R.S.O.,
Merioneth,
September 30th, 1893.

Mr. Rowlands.

Dear Sir,

David Pughe desires you to be good enough to place his evidence before the Commissioners at Bala next week, as he is old and unable to speak in such a place. As you may not know the details, I am sending you a copy of a letter which we sent to Sir Watkin before we left Ty Cerrig. The answer came to it under the hand of Colonel Hughes shortly and treacherously; also Colonel Hughes refused to behave decently and to listen to our demands. Also, with regard to Mr. Morris, cause he behaved so as to be the cause of loss to us in every way he was able so to be. He promised many things which he did not intend performing. He promised, after giving a notice to leave, that we should have the first offer before our fellow competitors for Ty Cerrig. Further, after that, he promised to pay towards the cost and expense which we had incurred on the land, namely, lime, levelling the soil, and gates, &c., but without pay, and he took no notice of the demand. Two witnesses of this promise are dead. Besides, he was opposed to the produce of the land and the hay being sold, except for a third of its value, which was of benefit to the new tenant, as well as reducing the rent, and wire fencing the boundaries, for a single man; after a family of nine had toiled there for 10 years, and rather than leave the place, offered to pay the rent 12 months in advance. I should be very thankful if you would lay this before them as you deem best, and keep the letter of Sir Watkin, so that we may have it again.

Chairman—continued.

We are truly and thankfully,
M. E.,
for DAVID PUGHE.

P.S.—We live on land belonging to the Countess de Morella."

The following letter was also read by the interpreter:—

"Tycerrig, Llangower,
Bala, June th, 1890.

Sir Watkin Williams Wynne,

As an old tenant on your estate, I beg your pardon for laying my grievances before you. I was born and brought up at Pentrecogwrn, a farm of Sir Watkin's, having two brothers. After I got married I removed to Penrhyn, a house which stood where Glanllyn Station is now. There we continued to live until the place was required for the convenience of the station. The late Sir Watkin, in Mr. Jones his chief agent's presence, decided to pull down the old house and to rebuild a house for me and my family by the next crossing. My wife then spoke saying, as the children were growing up, she would prefer having a farm for ourselves. Sir Watkin agreed to this, that we were to have the first chance for a vacant farm in the neighbourhood waiting for this. The old house, Pentrecogwrn, was slightly repaired for us after waiting for some years, having a message that Ty Cerrig was vacant, and that we were to have the first offer, conditionally we were to take it in the autumn, to buy everything, crop, stock, implements, &c., even the old furniture of the house. The old tenant on leaving the neighbourhood left the place poor. During this last nine years we went to a very heavy expense to improve the farms. Unfortunately by now for security of rent my two brothers had their names as tenants for Ty Cerrig. One of my brothers is now dead, the other living at Pentrepiod having some of my children with him. We have managed to pay our rent at worse time for farmers than now, so I consider it a very hard case for me to be turned out in my old age, and without any accusation, although knowing that I have no legal claim to your land, but still thinking that I have a moral claim. Since I have farmed the place with the idea that I should be allowed to finish my days here, and that my son would be allowed to remain after me, according to the custom of your ancestors for time immemorial. We had notice to leave September 26th. I have tried all means in laying my case before your agents, all quite useless. They say I must leave, although I have nowhere to go, having wife and seven children unmarried, one son 25 years of age. Mr. Williams, Gwenhefin, your late agent, can corroborate the facts that I have tried feebly to lay before you; he knows all my history. Hoping my case will receive your favourable consideration I humbly beg to be allowed to remain at Ty Cerrig as long as I can keep to Sir Watkin's agreement and pay my rent. I have the honour to be your humble servant.

David Pughe."

Chairman.

16,785. I have only one other question to ask you. Have you any connexion either with Mr. Llewellyn Jones or with Mr. Vincent?—Not at all. My Lord, I feel it my duty to say one thing. I have received information from Sir Watkins Williams Wynn through Mr. Morris, the sub-agent, that he on his own responsibility had made a slight reduction in the rent to meet the improvements which I had made on his land.

Professor Rhŷs.

16,786. The letter of the old man David Pughe to Sir Watkin has been read, his copy of it at any rate. What was the answer from Sir Watkin to that letter of David Pughe's?—This letter refers to that, that he had a reply from Colonel Hughes, which was short and treacherous.

16,787. What was the reply?—I do not know. Colonel Hughes knows.

Chairman.

16,788. We must not have that sort of language used about people which cannot be substantiated?—What language is that?

16,789. That language about Colonel Hughes's reply being short and treacherous?—I cannot say anything to that; that is David Pughe's evidence as he has put it in his letter.

16,790. And that is not your language?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

As there was a considerable difference of opinion between Mr. Thomas Davies and Colonel Evans Lloyd as to the condition of Y Foel, two of the Commissioners visited the cottage, and they were accompanied by Mr. Davies and by the Colonel as well. Lord Kenyon and Mr. Griffiths on behalf of the Commission visited the cottage and have reported as follows:—

"Ty Newydd or Y Foel.

"We visited this place and found an old single room cottage, built of the rough stone of the country, with a bedroom above containing two beds. The roof is of old slates on somewhat decayed rafters, plastered and apparently now watertight. There are some traces of recent repairs to the slates, the ridge-tiles also having been reset.

"The floor of the bedroom at one end is partially decayed, and needs repair. It gave way under the Commissioners' feet. At the other end it seemed quite sound. A dairy in rear of the house communicated with the living room.

"The cow-house, where a pig also was kept, is attached to the end wall of the cottage. The floor of this is very uneven. In the wall that divides the cowshed and cottage there are several interstices between the stones, into which a stick can be pushed for some distance, in one case clear through the wall, under the slate slab-flooring of the cottage. We set fire to some dry fern and grass, to ascertain whether the smoke would come into the dwelling-house, and found it did not penetrate the wall paper, but escaped through the front wall of the house near the door frame. Possibly this may account for the smell. This wall, which is no thin partition, but is fully two feet thick, has, on the cottage side, been re-plastered and re-papered within the last six months. Inside the cowshed it needs repointing.

"We also observed a new wooden privy in process of erection.

"We are of opinion that the sanitary authorities should have directed Colonel Evans Lloyd's attention to the unsatisfactory condition of this case.

Kenyon.
J. M. Griffiths.

October 5th 1893."

Colonel Hugh Robert Hughes re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

16,791. Have you anything to say to us, Colonel Hughes?—I think it as well to answer what has been said by Mr. Rowlands. In the first place, I will take what he said about the different farms, and how they have been let. I wish to say that I found that there were 137 Nonconformist tenants on Sir Watkin's estate when I came there, and 19 Churchmen. In fixing on tenants, on every occasion, we have never admitted a stranger. They have all been promotions from Sir Watkin's estate.

Chairman—continued.

16,792. I do not quite understand that?—This man who has come up says that the Churchmen—I think his expression was—were thrown out wholesale to make room for Congregationalists. I say in every case where there has been a change of tenancy we have taken the tenants from the families that are on the estate; we have never had a single stranger. I having found 137 families who were Nonconformists, and 19 Churchmen, I think that settles that part of the question.

Chairman – continued.

We then go on to the question about Ty Cerrig. The man who has written that complaint, and who was spoken of as having been turned out, never was a tenant of Sir Watkin's.

See 16,784, 16,908.

16,793. Is that David Pughe?—Yes. He never was a tenant of Sir Watkin's. Owen and Hugh Pughe were tenants on a farm called Pentrepiod, and they got possession of this farm Ty Cerrig, and they put their brother in as a caretaker. They also had a third farm called Bryn-cockyn, to which really there was no tenant at all; in fact, it was quite a case of a bogus tenant. We considered it was quite time, after the death of Hugh Pugh, to come to an understanding, and we spoke to the surviving brother on the subject, and told him that David Pughe could have the farm Tycerrig if he could satisfy us that he had the means of carrying it on. He was unable to do so, and the notice to quit was then served upon Owen Pughe. Owen Pughe remained to the time of his death, and after his death his nephew had that farm. We considered it was wrong, when there were other families wanting farms, that three farms should be in the hands of one person.

16,794. David Pughe never was a tenant of Sir Watkin's at all?—No, he never was a tenant of Sir Watkin's.

16,795. He was a caretaker?—Yes, he was.

See 16,767*a*.

16,796. Do you wish to say anything else?—Then we come to the third point, and that is the valuation of Mr. Rowland's own farm. The farm was valued on its own merits, and bears no comparison whatever to the farm he has quoted. Two-thirds of the 29 acres are all useful land, low ground between the house, and the village that is easily managed—you can work it up to the hedge all round—it is good useful land, and it bears no comparison whatever. Of course I may be wrong in valuing—I cannot say as to that—but the case brought up has nothing to do with it whatever. The other farm is land of very inferior quality compared to it. I brought out Rowlands' farm at 38*l.*, and when he went to Sir Watkin about it I received a communication from Sir Watkin here the night before your last sitting, in which he said he would not for a moment have the valuation altered, but he would allow him 3*l.* towards what he had done in the way of carriage. Those were my instructions, and there the matter rested.

Chairman—continued.

16,797. The present rent of the 29 acres is 38*l.*?—It is, my Lord, and it is to be 35*l.*, by Sir Watkin's directions.

As to the matter about the school, and any allusion to that, I really do not know how he stood in the matter. My idea about the school was this, that it was a great expense to Sir Watkin, and I thought as there was such a preponderance of Nonconformists it was very desirable to see if we could not work together, and make the education less distasteful to the vast number. We met and formed our committee, and have worked ever since: three Churchmen and three Nonconformists.

Then there comes that question about Llechwedd-ddu. It was always a bye-take. It was never looked upon as a farm, and the late tenant, Blanche Rowlands, died, I think, in 1889 or 1890. Her daughter carried it on afterwards, a Mrs. Williams, who lived in Liverpool. She did so for a time, and then she applied for it. We had a great many applications for it, but we thought it desirable to make it into a farm, and her shepherd became the tenant. That was looked upon as a promotion, and the rent was made 5*l.* higher, with a promise that a house would be built, which it will be. But, as I shall show hereafter, with the quantity of work to be done on the estate it is impossible to get it done in the time, although the promise remains good; so that her old servant has the farm.

16,798. This is a question by Mr. Ivan T. Davies: "Is it true that T. F. Rowlands has "suffered from you in any way on account of "the action he took in connexion with the "question of education"?—Not in any way. It never came to my knowledge at all.

16,799. The answer is no?—Yes.

Re-

The witness withdrew.

Mrs. Gwen Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

16,799*a*. The following statement of the witness was read:—

See 16,832.

"Evidence of Mrs. Gwen Jones, Gelli Isa, Bala.

"I am a tenant farmer on the Rhiwlas estate. Thirty years ago the rent my father paid was 37*l.* After he had cultivated it for some years, the rent was raised to 40*l.* In the year 1876, when the estate was re-valued, the rent was again raised to 53*l.* In the year 1880 the rent was reduced 3*l.*, as a portion of the land was taken for the railway. In the year 1886 my landlord promised to make me an abatement of 10 per cent. if I was prepared with the whole amount of the rent. This abatement has been made for several years. The present rent is 45*l.* The rent is considerably too high to enable me to meet all my liabilities. My family, consisting of a daughter aged 28, and two sons aged 26 and 16 respectively, have to do all the work upon the farm, and not one of them receives wages for their services. Two years ago I asked the agent for a reduction in the rent, but he declined to meet me, as it was much easier for me to manage than many other tenants, as I had three industrious children to assist me, and he hoped that prices of stock would shortly improve. Last year I saw Mr. Price himself. I told him that I wanted a permanent reduction. He distinctly told me, in reply, that he would not allow me any reduction. I then asked him for a truck-load of lime, and he refused to allow me any, stating that if he did so the other tenants would ask him for lime. In the end he told me to give up my farm. I am certain that the rent is 33 per cent. too high, in view of the prices of animals and other products.

"We have to send a man and two horses to work at Rhiwlas for two days annually. Neither the man nor the horses are allowed any place to take their food.

"Mr. Price pays the tithe himself."

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,800. How long has your husband been dead?—Seven years.

16,801. Have you managed the farm yourself since then?—Yes, I and my children.

16,802. Has the farm paid at all during those seven years?—No; we get into debt every year.

16,803. Had your husband saved money previously to his death?—No, not on the farm.

16,804. And the consequence is that if salvation does not come from somewhere you will become a bankrupt before long?—Yes, indeed.

16,805. Will you kindly tell the Commission how you spend your day in working?—Yesterday I was out digging potatoes.

16,806. What time did you get up?—I was up all night with a sick man the night before last, and I started work at 8 o'clock; I commenced then digging potatoes.

16,807. You were at it all day?—Until between 6 and 7, till it came on to rain.

16,808. And your daughters assisted you?—Yes, my son and daughter assisting me.

16,809. You work hard and continually throughout the year?—Yes, very, very hard.

16,810. And yet the farm does not pay?—No.

Mr. Grove.

16,811. Have you given us the acreage of the farm?—I do not know what is the acreage.

16,812. Then do we understand that this request for a reduction of rent and the granting of lime was made personally to Mr. Price, the landlord?—Yes; I saw Mr. Watkins and Mr. Price together.

16,813. Were they at the farm?—In the office.

Lord Kenyon.

16,814. How much stock do you keep?—Just as it may happen.

16,815. How much have you got now?—Three milking cows and several barren cows.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

16,816. Do you feed those?—No, they are out.

16,817. Do you keep as much stock as your husband did?—No, I do not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,818. Have you been obliged to reduce your stock in order to meet your payments?—Yes.

16,819. Does Mr. Price ever come to see your farm?—No, I never saw him.

16,820. You never see him, except at the office?—Oh, yes, besides in the office, I see him now.

16,821. I will put the question in this way to you: Do you ever see Mr. Price on the farm except when he comes to shoot?—No.

Chairman.

16,822. This question is put by Mr. Vincent: "Your rent is lower than that of your neighbours, is it not?"—Those complain enough—my neighbours.

16,823. Is your rent lower than that of your neighbours?—I cannot say.

Mr. Richard Jones

16,824. I will ask a question upon that: Are you in a position to know what the rent of your neighbours is, or the amount of acreage?—No, I am not.

Chairman.

I do not think she will be able to answer your second question, Mr. Vincent.

Mr. Vincent.

I put those questions by way of preparation. It is not fair to raise those points afterwards, unless I call attention to them here.

Chairman.

16,825. "Can you say whether your rent is 12*s.* 3*d.* an acre as compared with 21*s.*?"—I suppose that is a neighbour's rent. I cannot say.

16,826. This question is put by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "How far from Rhiwlas is your farm?"—I cannot say, indeed.

Professor Rhŷs.

16,827. But about how far?—There is only the river between.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Edward Watkins called and examined.

Chairman.

16,828. You are agent to R. J. Lloyd Price, Esquire, the owner of the Rhiwlas estate?—I am.

16,829. How long have you been in that position?—I have been agent on this estate over 10 years.

16,830. You wish to give some rebutting evidence, do you not?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

16,831. Will you begin with that?—I will take them in order as I go on. I will give particular evidence touching the Rhiwlas estate, which is about 17,958 acres.

16,832. I think we have had all the particulars of the estate from Mr. Price himself; what we want is the rebutting evidence?—Mr. Thomas

See 7973, 16,319.

Davies, of Fedwlwyd, in his evidence on the 13th day of September at the Bala Sitting, said: "That the rent of Fedwlwyd was 70*l.* and that it "was raised to 90*l.*" (giving the impression that it was raised upon his improvements), "and that "if he was obliged to leave he should receive "no compensation." I wish to explain that Mr. Thomas Davies took this farm (Fedwlwyd) in the year 1885 at the rent of 90*l.* per annum, and that his rent was not raised, but was reduced permanently in the year 1888 to 82*l.*, and his tithe paid as well, 3¼ years' rental having been already expended by his landlord in improvements on his farm since he entered into it. Further, I wish to state that Mr. Price supplied him (Mr. Davies) with about 90*l.* worth of draining pipes, and has spent about 176*l.* in building and in repairs at Fedwlwyd, and the existing buildings are quite sufficient on that farm. Therefore he, Mr. Davies, has no reason to complain of any ill-treatment done to him on this estate. I can also state that no rents have ever been raised on tenants' improvements on the Rhiwlas estate, as stated by Mr. Thomas Davies, and I wish to state that he could claim compensation by the agreement or else by the Agricultural Holdings Act.

See 8163, 16,623. Mr. John Jones, late of Tyn-y-Celyn, also in his evidence said that he took Tyn-y-Celyn farm in the year 1886, and had to pay Mr. Price the sum of 80*l.* I wish to explain that Mr. John Jones had purchased the crops and sheep, &c. on the said farm from the outgoing tenant, who had to pay Mr. Price 80*l.* in rent and arrears due at the expiration of his tenancy. So the said Mr. John Jones was only paying for what he had actually bought from the outgoing tenant.

The said Tyn-y-Celyn farm contained about 99 acres of land, with a sheep walk for about 300 sheep, at the rent of 48*l.* per annum, when Mr. John Jones took it; and in the years 1886 and 1887, as temporary abatement, a return of 10 per cent. was given him, and also his tithe paid for him. In the year 1888 a permanent reduction of 4*l.* was made in his rent; but in the year 1889 he gave the farm up. So he only stayed there three years on the Rhiwlas estate, and I am sorry to say that Mr. John Jones was not classified as a good farmer in the true meaning of the word. Mr. Price gave me permission to offer the said farm to him at the same reduced rent that it was let to his successor, which I did, but Mr. John Jones refused it.

There are some farms in that district that have been reduced at a greater per-centage than on the estate in general, namely:—

Tyn-y-Celyn,	36*l.*	per cent.	reduction.
Penmaenfawr,	34*l.*	„	„
Penmaenucha,	30*l.*	„	„
Gloig,	27*l.*	„	„
Taidraw,	28*l.*	„	„

The rent of Tyn-y-Celyn alluded to by Mr. J. Jones has been reduced from 57*l.* to 36*l.*, allowance being made for the trespass of game thereon, on account of their being situated close to covers, and therefore more apt to be trespassed upon by game. But there are hardly any complaints now, and if they are troubled with any at all they are requested to inform the head keeper, who will at once relieve them of their grievance.

Chairman—continued.

The present tenant of Tyn-y-Celyn has had the farm for some years and has made no complaint.

Respecting the building on the Rhiwlas estate, during the last 20 years there have been vast improvements on all kinds of farm outbuildings and dwelling-houses.

New outbuildings have been built on about 30 farms. Some of them had to be made new altogether, and the most part of the others had to be made new; also about 31 others had to be altered and throughly repaired. 39 dwelling-houses had to be renovated and repaired in the interior structure and made comfortable, the expenses of which were nearly as much as if they were made new. 17 new farm-houses have been built with ample bed-rooms and other offices in connexion with them, and there are still about six more yet on the estate to be either repaired or rebuilt, and also a few outbuildings to be erected. The expenditure on the outbuildings and on the dwelling-houses, including general repairs and improvements on the estate, were very extensive during the first ten years, that is to say, from 1873 to 1883, when the outlay amounted to about 28,151*l.* 16*s.*, or about 28*l.* per cent. on the annual income, and during the last ten years, from 1883 to 1893, it amounted to about 21,917*l.*, or about 25*l.* per cent. on the annual income, making a total of about 50,068*l.* 16*s.* spent during the said 20 years from 1873 to 1893 in building and general repairs for the benefit of the tenants. A team is constantly kept for the estate work, carting, &c.

Cottages.—There are about 67 cottages on the estate, and they are all inhabited with the exception of two which cannot be let, the rent ranging from 1*l.* 15*s.* to 4*l.* per annum.

Persons employed on the Rhiwlas estate, and house, garden, stable keepers, and allowances.—There are now 59 persons employed by Mr. Price at a weekly salary and wages of about 51*l.* every week all the year round, making an annual sum of 2,657*l.* paid in salary and wages only during the year 1892. Also he pays to local tradesmen only the sum of 2,380*l.* for goods and materials, &c., or in all the sum of 5,037*l.* actually paid in wages, requisites, goods, and materials in the district of Bala alone during the preceding year 1892. Hence during the last 20 years over 100,740*l.* has been paid in this district, which proves, without doubt, that the resident landlord is far better than an absentee, which he would become if a land court were established.

The agreements in respect to the penalising clauses are never enforced by the landlord on this estate; but they are made use of by the tenants as protection for themselves, especially when changing their farms. Such clauses as ensure compensation for manures, lime, seeds, and sale of sheep, &c., are frequently put in force by the tenants; and if Mr. Robert Evans, of Crynierth Mawr, thinks that making away of the clause respecting the two white crops in succession would benefit the farmers in any way I have no doubt that Mr. Price would wipe it off the agreement with pleasure. I am not aware that any farms have been let to the highest bidder, except one, which was let by auction. I wish to state that no farms have been consolidated on this estate during the last 10 years. It was stated as to Cwm Mein by the witness John Jones, late of Tyn y Celyn, that many things respecting building, &c., were promised to the tenant, Robert Williams. I can state to you that Mr. Price spent 1,000*l.* on new buildings on that farm; but Mr. Robert Williams' circumstances were confined, so that he preferred a smaller farm, and is now a tenant on this estate at Bryn Pader. Mrs. Jones, of Refailisa, referred to, is in a small farm rent 12*l.*, and is now sub-letting her land for about 20*l.*, I believe, contrary to the agreement.

Gelli Isaf.—This farm contains about 73 acres of meadow and arable land. In the year 1877 it was let at 53*l.* In the year 1880 it was reduced to 50*l.*, and in the year 1888 it was reduced to 45*l.*, and the tithe paid for her, about 1*l.* 16*s.* Therefore Gelli Isaf is only 12*s.* 3*d.* per acre on an average, while the adjoining land on both sides of it is let at about 21*s.* per acre on an average, though the said adjoining land is of the same quality. Accordingly, by comparing it with other farms surrounding it, the rent of Gelli Isaf is much lower than the rent of the adjoining farms. So there cannot be much hardship done towards Mrs. Jones.

Vacant farms and letting, &c.—When the question of deciding upon a new tenant comes, it is a well-known fact that neither language, politics, nor creeds (religion) have any influence in the least as to be in favour nor against the person who applies for the farm; neither does it in any way whatever affect the existing tenants. I may state here that nearly all the tenants famers on the Rhiwlas estate are Nonconformists, there being only three Churchmen. Further, it does not interfere at all with any of the indoor or outdoor servants in the employment of Mr. and Mrs. Price; all of them enjoy perfect freedom to go to any place of worship they please. Our general rule in choosing a new tenant is to consider his character and his ability to manage a farm Again, when a widow is left with children, even if they are grown up, we always take the widow to be the tenant, and thereby a home is secured for her, and they are more likely to live in peace together. I may say that we always find the widows active in conducting their farms, &c., and ranking among our best farmers. When children are left without either father or mother they always get the chance of taking the farm held by their parents; and we always do our best to get them to be joint tenants, so that they would all feel the same interest in their home.

Mr. Griffiths.

16,833. Do you consider that 10 per cent. reduction is sufficient to meet the present depression?—I do not profess to know what per-centage would be fair.

16,834. Surely an agent would know?—I do not think it would be.

16,835. You are not in a position to say how much would be really fair?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

16,836. I think you said that you offered the farm to Mr. John Jones at the same rent that it was afterwards let at?—I did.

16,837. But did he not say—I rather think he did, unless I am mistaken—that that was too late, as he had then sold his crops and his personal effects?—I do not quite remember whether he had sold them then.

16,838. I think he said so, did he not?—I believe he did.

16,839. Do you think that is correct?—I am not quite sure when it was—was it after the sale or before?

16,840. But in any case, the offer on your part was rather late, was it not?—I do not think it was too late.

16,841. If he had got so far as to sell, or had sold, it would be, would it not?—He would have then the same chance as a new tenant, on better terms.

16,842. I do not quite see where the better terms would come in then if he had sold. I am not quite sure that I understand you?—His terms would be better, because his rent would be lowered.

16,843. But the rent was raised to the new tenant?—No, it was lowered to the new tenant.

16,844. I understand now. Then, with regard to the cottages, which are rented from 1*l.* 15*s.* 0*d.* I think you said to 4*l.*?—Yes.

16,845. Do they mostly have gardens to them?—They do.

16,846. Even the cheapest?—Yes, the cheapest have gardens.

16,847. Of about what extent?—Two or three roods.

16,848. I am not sure whether I understood you. When you made an allusion to the Agricultural Holdings Act, and that you allowed the tenants the benefit of that if they liked?—I said that Mr. Thomas Davies, of Fedwlwyd, could obtain compensation under the Act, or under the agreement.

16,849. Is there any hardship with regard to game incurred by the farmers near the rabbit farms. You have two or three rabbit farms on the estate?—I do not hear of any after they have been fenced in.

16,850. The fencing has been effectual?—It has been a protection for the farmers.

16,851. How long ago was the fencing made. There was one about 8 or 10 years ago.

16,852. You have heard no complaints since?—Not afterwards of any importance.

Mr. Grove.

16,853. Is there any unfriendly feeling between the keepers and the tenants in consequence of the game?—Not so far as I am aware.

16,854. If any compensation is asked for damage by game, is the claim received in a friendly spirit, and entertained properly?—Oh, yes. It was last year that compensation was given to a tenant in a load of hay.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,855. I hardly think you have done justice to Thomas Davies, Mr. Watkins. You say that he represented to the Commission that the rent had been advanced on his own improvements, do you not?—Giving that impression.

16,856. But if you have read his evidence you will see all he says that the rent of Fedwlwyd was advanced to 90*l.* in the year 1876?—Yes.

16,857. He says that he was only eight years at Fedwlwyd, so that he could not possibly have represented that the rent was advanced on his own improvements?—Well, I only wished to make that clear.

16,858. What do you mean?—It was our impression that he said that the raising of the rent was made on his improvements.

16,859. You will admit now that he did not say so?—Yes.

16,860. You say that in one case a farm was let by auction?—Yes.

16,861. Why was it let by auction?—We had other small plots of accommodation land adjoining the town here to let at the same time that this farm happened to be taken. We put it in. There were several demands for it; it was a small farm, so we let it by auction.

16,862. It is not a customary thing to do?—No.

16,863. Do you ever advertise in the local papers for tenants to farm?—I do not remember any instance now of it being done.

16,864. Do you know of instances where farms have remained on your hands for some time without a tenant?—I do not remember any instance that we had all the year round.

16,865. But a part of the year?—Yes; I remember a part of the year. But we were always able to let it.

16,866. You say that 17 new farmhouses have been built, with ample bedrooms and other offices in connexion with them, and there are still about six more on the estate to be either repaired or built. Will you kindly name those places?—I cannot give them all; I have not got a list of them. I will name some of them. Tyddynysgubor, Hafod Tudur, Hafod Nwydog, Dolwen, and Creigiau Bychan.

16,867. There is still one?—Tyn y Coed.

16,868. Have you informed the tenants of these places that they are to have new houses?—Not exactly informed them; they are on the list to be done.

16,869. How long have they been on the list?—I cannot tell you exactly; we are doing the worst places first; that is our object.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

16,870. I suppose it is not a thing which has been in recent contemplation—the building of these houses?—No.

16,871. Do you know anything about Gelliuchaf?—Yes.

16,872. What is the condition of that house?—It wants repairing.

16,873. Is it in a very bad state?—Well; I would not say that it is in a very bad state.

16,874. Do you know anything about Coed y Mynach?—Yes.

16,875. In what state is that?—That is not let as a farm now to a farmer; it is one of the consolidated farms. We made a new house on the other farm.

16,876. Is it occupied by anybody?—Yes; I believe that the tenant sublets the house.

16,877. But what is the state of it?—I do not think it is very bad.

16,878. Do you know anything about Hanodfodog?—I do.

16,879. In what state is that?—That wants repairing.

16,880. And yet it is not on your list?—No; my list contains the new buildings, or re-construction of houses.

16,881. But not repairs?—Not repairs.

16,882. You think that repairs would answer the purpose in those places?—Yes; they will.

16,883. Do you know anything about Jenkins's valuation?—I do not.

16,884. Where are the documents belonging to the estate?—I expect they are with Mr. Price's solicitor.

16,885. In London?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

16,886. With regard to repairs; do you do much contract work—I mean with regard to rebuilding?—Well, we have done what we call piece-work.

16,887. But I mean you employ your own men?—We employ our own men—our own staff.

16,888. You go on in the regular way with regular men?—Yes, we go a regular round, and keep a regular staff.

Chairman.

16,889. I have several questions put in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Will you kindly state whether "the terms of the agreement made with Mr. "Davies as to improvements to be made by the "landlord have been fully carried out?"—I cannot say that they have been fully carried out the same as they were put down on the agreement, but there were other things made that cost more than if we had carried out our agreement. In fact there was a building from the house which wanted a little repair and altering, when Mr. Thomas Davies preferred to have a building by the house, a cowshed which was built, and it cost more than the other one; so I believe that we have expended more than if we had carried out the agreement.

Chairman—continued.

16,890. "Has he received all the drain-pipes promised?"—No, he may receive them again.

16,891. "What amount have you spent in "buildings and repairs on the estate during the "last five years?"—The total for the five years, 1883 to 1887, is 12,152*l.* 6*s.* 9½*d.*; the total for the five years, 1888 to 1892, is 9,764*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.* I hand in the following statement, giving the details:—

16,892. "Do you not tell farmers who now "come to you for repairs and new buildings that "you cannot get permission from your employer "to do them?"—No; I say that we do them as soon as we can get round.

16,895. "Do you consider that the buildings "at Gwigefail and Rhydolwen are in a satisfac-"tory condition?" Do you know those two farms?—Yes; Rhydolwen we have just repaired—we have put in new windows, and made it comfortable.

16,896. And the other one, is that in a satisfactory condition?—The other one might require some repairs, but the house is a fresh house.

16,897. "Has the tenant of Rhydolwen ap-"plied to have his house rebuilt?"—Not rebuilt—repaired.

Chairman—continued.

16,898. "And has Mr. Price refused to do it?"—No.

16,899. "Do you approve of the policy of lay-"ing out certain farms as rabbit-warrens?"—That is a question for Mr. Price. He finds them paying better.

16,900. "Can you say whether there is a single "window at the farm of Pen y bryn which can "be opened?" Can you answer that question?—No, I cannot.

16,901. You cannot say whether any of the windows can open?—I do not remember them.

16,902. You do not know?—No.

16,903. "And has the wife of the tenant been "seriously ill for several years?"—I believe she has.

16,904. Then I have some questions by Mr. George Owen: "If a Land Court was appointed "to fix rents, do you think Mr. Price would "spend as much money locally as he has done "in the past?"—No, I do not think so.

16,905. "Complaints have been made that "Churchmen have had more favour shown to "them than Nonconformists; is that the case on "the Rhiwlas estate?"—No, it is not.

16,906. "Are you a Nonconformist yourself?"—I am.

16,907. "And do you speak Welsh?"—I do.

Re-examined, 17,538.

Adjourned to to-morrow morning.

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

The Victoria Hall, Bala, Merionethshire, Friday, 6th October 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. EDWIN GROVE.
MR. RICHARD JONES.

MR. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Chairman.

To save time Welsh-speaking witnesses are requested to verify their statements in the presence of one of the Welsh-speaking Commissioners, so that the Commissioners may be perfectly satisfied with the accuracy of the statements, and with the accuracy of the translation of those statements when they are read out in court. These proceedings are, as hitherto, open to the public and to the press.

Colonel HUGH ROBERT HUGHES re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

16,908. You wish to say something, I believe, Colonel Hughes?—Yes, with your Lordship's permission. I was unable to get this paper yesterday from the office, in confirmation of the statement I made as to the man we were charged with having evicted, David Pughe. I wish to put in the agreement showing that he never was a tenant, and also the notice to quit which was served on the real tenant [handing papers].

16,909. I think you said David Pughe was only a caretaker and never was a tenant at all?—I did.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS EDWARD ELLIS, M.P., called and examined.

Chairman.

16,910. Will you be good enough to give us your evidence?—I am the son of a tenant farmer. I have been three times returned to represent my native county in Parliament. I have been a fairly diligent student of the rural economy of Wales. From my boyhood I have had a strong and deepening conviction that the system under which the land in Wales is cultivated requires drastic modification. I have given frequent expression to this conviction in the press and on the platform, and since my entry into Parliament I have taken occasion to press this conviction upon the attention of the House of Commons, for instance, on the Address in reply to the Queen's Speech in 1887, by a resolution before the House in 1888, by obtaining evidence for the Select Committee on Small Holdings in 1889, and on a motion for the second reading of the Tenure of Land (Wales) Bill in 1892. For good or ill, English rule and English law have imposed upon Wales the system under which its land is held, occupied, and cultivated. In Wales, as in every other country, the relations between the landholder or rent-receiver and the occupier of the soil is one which must influence, if not control, the whole system of society. The enormous growth and development of industrial Wales have helped to modify very materially the influence which the landholders and the land system of Wales exercise over the life and destiny of the Welsh people. Nevertheless the influence is still great, and we are entitled to apply some tests of the efficacy and sanity of the present land system in Wales, and I propose, with your permission, to apply five simple tests. Firstly. Is it calculated to produce a self-respecting tenantry and peasantry who can think, speak, act, and combine like free men? Secondly. Does it bring out the full capacity of the soil and ensure an adequate reward to the tillers for their skill, outlay, and labour? Thirdly. Does it conduce to enable as many families as possible to live and thrive on the land? Fourthly. Does it preserve for the common good the user and revenue of the public or common land? Fifthly. Is the rent or surplus produce of the land over and above what is necessary to feed, clothe, maintain, and educate the tillers of the soil wisely spent in the interest of the community of Wales? I believe that the land system of Wales, when searchingly tried by these tests, stands condemned. The answer to questions 1 and 2 is in the negative, mainly because of the insecurity of the tenure incident to tenancies-at-will. The answer to questions 3 and 4 is in the negative, owing to enclosures made with or without Act of Parliament, to consolidation of holdings, and to the grafting of the manorial system upon the old Celtic tenures of Wales. The answer to question 5 is in the negative, owing largely to the divergence of aims and ideals, religious, social, political, and national, between the rent-receivers and the tillers of the soil of Wales. I consider insecurity of tenure the first and worst evil—worst for the peasants rights and duties of citizenship, and worst for good husbandry in Wales. Tenants-at-will have learnt to realise the insecurity of their tenure by very diverse but effective methods. These methods vary at different periods and on different estates. Here are some instances:—First. Eviction for exercising an independent judgment in politics. The Commissioners have received some evidence of this already. They will receive more. It will take years to forget the thrill of horror which spread through Wales, more especially through its tenantry, owing to the political evictions after the elections of 1859 and 1868. Four uncles and relatives of my own were evicted for refusing to vote for the Tory candidate in 1859. Two of them were on the Rhiwlas estate and two on Sir Sir W. W. Wynn's estate. The two on the 832, Rhiwlas estate were Ellis Roberts, Fron Goch, and John Jones, Maes y Gadva. Of them I will say that by common consent in this district they were about the very best farmers on the Rhiwlas estate. The two on Sir Watkin Wynn's estate were Edward Ellis, Ty Ceryg, and John Thomas, Pandy Mawr. In connexion with them I desire to add this statement made by another evicted tenant with the Rev. Michael D. Jones, a leading minister and leader of thought in this neighbourhood, as witness. It was made at the very time of the eviction in 1859:—"The "statement of John Jones, Nanthir, concerning "the conduct of Richard Watkin Price, Esq., "Rhiwlas, towards him as his tenant in the "late election in Merionethshire.

"Mr. David Jones, Gydros, had had Mr. "Price's permission for the tenants to remain "neutral. Mr. Price had previously sent us a "note to ask us the favour of Mr. Wynne, and "Tom, the policeman, brought the note. On "the poll day he sent John Davies, gamekeeper, "on horseback to request us to come down to "vote for Mr. Wynne. I did not see John "Davies, and so he returned without any answer. "On the Saturday before the fair, called "Ffair "wyl Bedr," Mr. Price told me that he had let "my farm, and that the cause of that was that I "had not come down to Bala with his messenger "John Davies.

"The Monday following I received a notice to "quit from the butler, who informed me that "the cause of giving the notice was that I had "not come down to vote for Mr. Wynne, according to Mr. Price's request.

"I had gone to considerable expense in "improving the farm. I had made 120 roods of "hedges and planted thorns, hazel, &c., in them. "I brought about 15 acres of waste land to "a state of cultivation, which I limed, hoed, "burned, and ploughed, giving about 30 hobbets "of lime to each acre. I planted thorns, &c., in "old hedges about 200 roods. I planted about "30 roods of thorn alone. I cut about 120 "roods of drains, all in addition to ordinary "farming. The farm had been brought to "working order when I left, and previously it "was in a very bad state. It measures 160 "acres and its rent is 53*l*. About one-half of it "is waste land. If the Commission will allow me I will read one resolution passed at a public meeting here in Bala during that very year, in order to show the strong public feeling felt in this neighbourhood and the horror which these evictions caused in this district. Amongst the resolutions submitted to the public meeting was this:—"That "this meeting having in view the harsh pro-"ceedings which the recent contest has given "rise to in this neighbourhood, and regarding "the object thereof, an attack upon freedom of "election and to terrify tenant voters into a "slavish submission to the dictation of the "landlord, pledges itself to use every fair and "constitutional means to defeat those ends." The mover of that resolution was the Rev. L. Edwards, of Bala, perhaps the greatest Welsh leader of this century. It was seconded by Mr. David Jones, Llanderfel, who subsequently became a very prosperous merchant in Liverpool.

16,911. Have you the date of that?—August 1859. The resolution which followed it was this:—"That this meeting deeply and sincerely "sympathising with those tenant voters who at "the late election nobly refused to demean themselves by voting against the convictions of their "consciences, and who by so acting have incurred "serious material losses, resolves to set on foot a "penny subscription throughout the kingdom "generally in order to mark the sense of a free "and enlightened British public of such heartless "treatment at the hands of their landlord." In the election of 1865, which was the next election in this county, the landlords in this district stood in the Town Hall where the Commission sat yesterday to watch their tenants vote, and I have heard tenants express their shame that, terrified by the evictions of 1859, they voted against their will and conscience. It was after the election of 1868 that Cardiganshire and Carnarvonshire suffered most. In the course of this inquiry I have heard that called "ancient history," but those who know rural Wales know that the influence of the memory of these evictions is very far from spent. We have now the ballot, but over a large area of Wales a large per-centage of the farmers dare not appear publicly on platforms. I do not desire for a moment to say that the landowners would visit them with punishment, but the fear is very deeply imbedded in their hearts and their minds. The second method is the preservation of game. During the last thirty years there has raged amongst some landlords a veritable fever for game preserving. The whole paraphernalia of game preserving have been set up—a hierarchy of gamekeepers, strict sporting clauses in agreements, coverts, rabbit-warrens, pheasantries, the killing of dogs and cats, the pursuit of poachers, and the confiscation of their guns and nets. Under the rule of the former owner of Rhiwlas, Richard W. Price, Esq., a remarkable man and true captain of agricultural industry, who intimately knew the farms and farmers on his estate, there was on the Rhiwlas estate only one gamekeeper and hardly any game. When the present proprietor of Rhiwlas attained his majority the great game period began. A crowd of English and Scotch gamekeepers was introduced and dotted all over the estate. I cannot describe the repugnance and loathing to the game-preserving system engendered by the overbearing conduct and petty tyranny of many of these gamekeepers, by the monstrous increase of rabbits and pheasants, and by the immense losses occasioned by depredations of game on the crops of struggling farmers. I referred in the House of Commons to an incident in connexion with game, the truth of which has been challenged in a widely-circulated pamphlet. I shall give the details of the incident. In February 1867 on an afternoon while my father was away in the Vale of Clwyd, one of his two dogs, while with the servant who was ploughing, ran after, but did not catch, a hare. That night a gamekeeper, one George Stretton, came to the house and bullyingly recited the dog's offence. Next day, after his return, my father was ordered to take his two dogs to Rhiwlas. Both were taken and shot. In less than a fortnight my father was confidentially told by the only Welsh gamekeeper on the estate that he would lose his farm, and that, if anything was to be done to avert the eviction, it should be done quickly. My father went at once to the estate agent, Mr. Schoon, who said that he had not heard of the intention to give him notice to quit, but rumours were still rife. Months of anxiety passed. On September 1st Mr. Price and Mr. Woodruff came to shoot over my father's fields, but would not deign to look at my father. On September 27th a notice to quit came. My father went at once to the estate agent to know the reason. The reason was that the dog had chased a hare, and that the gamekeepers reported that my father destroyed the hares on his farm. This was as baseless an assertion as any ever invented. I refer of course to the statement that my father had ever destroyed any hare on his farm. My father desired to be brought face to face with Mr. Price or his accusers, but the agent said it was not of the slightest use going near Mr. Price. Weeks of dread anxiety followed, with sickness and death in the family. After much negotiation the farm was offered to my father at an increased rental of 10*l.* His capital and 12 years' hard labour were sunk in the farm. His children were very young. He was attached to his home. The offer was an ultimatum. It had to be accepted. During the 26 years which have elapsed, every penny of the 260*l.* enhanced rent has been paid. My father has forgiven and wishes to forget all. But these things cannot be forgotten. On the same day Mr. William Roberts, of Fedw Arian, received notice to quit, because one of his sons was said to be a poacher. This farm could not be got, except by an increase of the rent, and the exile of the son for ever from his home. I heard evidence given yesterday before the Commission that liberal compensation for damage done by game was given by the landlord and by the agent. I do not wish to deny this, for I have not got the facts to enable me to test it myself. But what compensation can there be for the agony and irritation of the tenant at seeing his crops eaten and destroyed by game while gamekeepers are prowling about to see that not a feather of the sacred birds is ruffled? The third method which has been exercised to impress the insecurity of the tenure, is the dispossession of tenants owing to a whim of the landlord. A former proprietor of farms in the Hirnant Valley—a little valley beyond the river——

Professor Rhŷs.

16,912. On what estate was that?—I think it was on Mr. Richardson's estate.

Chairman.

16,913. In what year would that be?—I could not give the actual year, but I think one of the witnesses in the course of to-day will give more detailed evidence as to this, and give the exact year in which it happened.

16,914. But about when?—I should say 20 years ago. A former proprietor of farms in the Hirnant Valley determined to get rid of the Welsh tenants in order to bring in some Scotchmen. Some Scotchmen came but never thrived, and there is now not a bone or stick of them left. A similar policy was pursued in a part of Breconshire with some apparent success, which the Commission will doubtless examine on the spot. Then the fourth method is the compulsory exaltation of rent under the threat of eviction. When a farmer receives a notice to quit in order to have his rent raised he is in a very helpless condition. For to leave his farm is to leave the fruits of his skill, outlay, and labour in his farm, and to abandon his means of livelihood. This has been modified partly by the Agricultural Holdings Act and partly by such agreements as those which, to his credit I think, Mr. Price has now in force on the Rhiwlas estate; but I think I shall show later on that these two are very insufficient in cases where a tenant leaves his farm.

16,915. Have those agreements been modified since the passing of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I think Mr. Price's agreements have been modified, and modified for the better, I think, on each occasion. A farmer in that position is no more a free agent in the contract than a purchaser is in a besieged and straitened town. Sometimes rents are raised in order to put the estate in the market. This was the case on the Palé estate prior to its purchase by the late Mr. Robertson. Sometimes they are raised after purchase, as was the case on the Tottenham estate, lower down the Dee Valley, under the régime of an estate agent named Mr. Sharpe. Sometimes rents are raised on what is called a re-valuation. In 1876 the Rhiwlas estate was re-valued by Mr. Jenkins, then of Plas yn Ward. At one stroke the rent of every farm was raised, the rise varying from 8 to 33 per cent. The impression of the country side is ineradicable that the rents were in many cases raised above Mr. Jenkins' valuation. Mr. Jenkins is still alive, and I suppose the document is in existence as well. Mr. Price in his evidence dismissed this re-valuation, which on his own admission amounted to 17 per cent., in a line and a half. But it is difficult for me to give the Commissioners any impression of the disheartening effect which that re-valuation had on the agriculture, and on the spirit and good heart of the tenantry of Rhiwlas. The fifth method is the exaction of high, sometimes impossible, rents in times of severe depression. During the last ten years there has been great suffering. The absence of any impartial authority to which the tenants might appeal has been keenly and bitterly felt. It has already been pointed out how on the Rhiwlas estate an attempt at a combination of the tenants was treated. A respectful petition signed by many of the tenants was sent to Mr. Price. Those who signed the petition received an abatement of 5 per cent., those who did not were blessed with 10 per cent. What I desire to point out is this, that under a system of tenancy-at-will such an artifice is calculated to produce a submissive and subservient tenantry. The sixth method is the uncertainty of obtaining compensation for improvements. I have obtained from my father an estimate of the cost of the permanent improvements which he has executed on his farm during his tenancy. See 8174. See 17,544.

The witness handed in the following list:—

1883.	Drainage of house and improvements				35	6	0½
					£635	9	5½

I will simply roughly go through that list if you will permit me. You will see that during a period ranging from 1857 to 1870 he drained seven fields, 5,370 yards, or 244 chains, at an expense of 101*l.* 9*s.* Mr. Price allowed pipes to the extent of 13*l.* 10*s.*, so that the net sum expended directly by my father was 87*l.* 19*s.* In 1862 my father built a large slate-roofed hay shed, one of the very first, I think, apart from the one built on the home farm on the Rhiwlas estate. That was 20*l.* During the period from 1860 to 1875 he fenced 2,691 yards, he cleared

Chairman—continued.

stone and boulders from the fields amounting to tons, he built substantial stone walls 5 feet to 5½ feet high, he made quickset hawthorn hedges, at an average—which, I think, is an extremely moderate average—of 1*s.* 10*d.* a yard, which amounted to 237*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*, less the timber supplied by Mr. Price, 9*l.* The net sum, therefore, is 228*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* Then erecting a dam, making a watercourse 250 yards, underground watercourse 60 yards, water-wheel for churning and chaff cutting, and shed for chaff cutting 50*l.* In 1873 a slate-roofed shed for calves 6*l.*. in 1875 Mr. Price built a new house at Cynlas, a substantial house. I may say it was high time that a new house should have been built, for I remember on more than one occasion snow on my bed in the morning. Haulage for the new house 70*l.*, water supply and drainage of new house 70*l.* 18*s.* 3*d.* Then a new kitchen garden with wall round it and quickset hawthorn hedge 20*l.* Poultry pen 5*l.*, a shed which serves as a dogcart house and as a potato shed 7*l.* In 1879 a new hay shed—and this was sanctioned under the Agricultural Holdings Act by Mr. Price's then agent, Mr. Parmeter—28*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.* That 28*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.* is exclusive of a certain number of bricks in order to build two of the pillars which were supplied by Mr. Price. Then there is a small figure for re-arrangement of rooms in the house. Contrary to my father's strong wishes, they made an extremely miniature sitting room or parlour, and it was so small that my father found that he had to re-arrange two rooms. That I admit at once is more or less from a farmer's point of view a luxury, but the figure here is 6*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.*, and I shall be quite willing to deduct it at once from the general figure of his improvements. In 1883 there was a complete drainage of the house and improvements in it amounting to 35*l.* 6*s.* 0½*d.*, making a total of 635*l.* 9*s.* 5½*d.* This is exclusive of the gates on the farm which almost without exception have been supplied by my father, nor has my father included in this estimate his own anxious thought, skill and labour. Now most of these improvements are unexhausted. Most of the fences are more valuable to-day than they have ever been, so are the hay sheds and the machinery for churning and chaff cutting. Yet, according to the agreement, no compensation will be paid for any of the drains, stone walls, and quickset hawthorn fences because more than 12 years have elapsed since their construction. Nor will there be, according to the agreement, in two or three years any compensation for expenditure upon buildings, because the agreement stipulates that 20 years exhaust any of the tenant right or claim to any value in the buildings which he has made. I should like to point out with regard to the statement that the fences are more valuable to-day than they have ever been, that in the case of the quickset hawthorn hedges which he has made they have had time to grow, they are full and strong and thickset, much better to-day than they have ever been, and they have in each case, I think, taken the place of straggling, untidy, slovenly hedges, such as were, and I fear still are, on a good many farms. If the farm were put in the market it would probably fetch, mainly owing to these improvements, double the sum which was paid for it when purchased. I venture to think that this expenditure by the tenant on these permanent improvements on an upland farm, his payment of 3,400*l.* in rent, 350*l.* in tithes, 450*l.* in land tax and rates, fairly establishes what is popularly known as "tenant right." The Crofter Commission lay emphasis upon the opinion so often expressed before them, that the small tenantry of the Highlands have an inherited inalienable title to security of tenure in their possessions while rent and service are duly rendered. Mr. Price in a clause in his agreement says that a tenant will be secure in his tenure so long as he pays his rent and tills his farm; so that that clause in Mr. Price's agreement is, I take it, a generous recognition of this feeling of the farmers and peasants of Wales, as of the Highlands, that they have an inalienable right to security of tenure so long as they till their land and pay their rent. It was an impression indigenous to the Highlands, though it had not before 1886 been sanctioned by legal recognition, and had long been repudiated by the action of the proprietors. There is a similar ineradicable impression in Wales, and we urge that it should likewise in Wales receive legal recognition. With regard to the third and fourth tests, I would say that the consolidation of estates, the consolidation of farms, and the exercise of manorial rights on the wastes and common pastures of Wales contravene diametrically the whole spirit of the old Celtic tenures of Wales. Lists will be handed to the Commissioners from every rural district in Wales showing how small tenancies have disappeared. The majority of tenancies are still small, but still lists will be produced, as they have hitherto been produced, showing the disappearance of a very large number of small farms and cottages with allotments; how the rural population is decreasing (at the last Census it was shown that during the last decade there was a serious decrease in everyone of the agricultural counties of Wales), and how labourers are drifting to the towns. Enclosures have been ruthlessly made without sufficient forethought for the poor. As a rule common pastures and meadows have been shared among the landowners of townships in a proportion corresponding to the area of the estate already belonging to them there. I make this assertion, not on my own authority, nor even in my own words, but in the words and on the authority of Mr. Palmer, of Wrexham, who has probably paid greater attention to the old Celtic tenures of Wales than any man now living, and who, with one of your own body, is the highest authority on the old Celtic tenures of Wales. I trust that this Commission will help to regulate the remainder of the unappropriated land of Wales. In a return just issued by the Board of Agriculture it appears that there are still approximately in Wales 953,000 acres of unenclosed mountain land, sheep runs, and hill grazings, over which sheep and other live stock range for at least a portion of the year. Mr.

Chairman.—continued.

Price, of Rhiwlas, said at Bala (Q. 8169), "My "tenants have sheep walks on mountain land "on this estate, which right is invested in me." Mr. Wynne, of Peniarth, said at Barmouth "Q. 9458), "The rights of pasturage (on the hill "side) are vested in the owner. They are part "and parcel of the rents. If there were no "sheep walks the farms would not command "half the rent." The late Lord Penrhyn before the Richmond Commission (1879) said: "There 83–9, "was at one time a great deal of pulling down 98, "walls at one part of Carnarvonshire. There 99, "had been an enclosure under the Inclosure 15. "Commissioners, and the people who were in "the habit of sending sheep on to the downs "pulled down the walls from time to time." (I may point out to the Commission that this was their only remedy) "and when I was appointed "the Lord Lieutenant of the county on finding "that I could not get any evidence against the "parties who did it," and here I may point out the significance of that statement of Lord Penrhyn's. There must have been practically a unanimous feeling that wrong was being done to the poor, and to the peasantry, and to the country side by this enclosure. Those who in Lord Penrhyn's eyes were evildoers had evidently the sympathy of the whole country side, for Lord Penrhyn, a very popular landowner, was absolutely unable to get any evidence whatsoever as to the people who pulled down these walls, and made the protest against the enclosure.

16,916. In what year was that Commission? —1879, the Richmond Commission, and that is Lord Penrhyn's own evidence. "On finding "that I could not get any evidence against the "parties who did it, we got the county to raise "an additional force of police and to quarter "them in the district, and charge that district "with the amount of their expenses." And Lord Penrhyn goes on to say that when these people were thus punished in their pockets, the resistance to the enclosure gradually died away. That is an instance of the method of enclosure, and of the results of the protest of these poor peasants. These deliberate, and it seems to me authoritative, statements, as to how hill grazings and common pasture have been enclosed, how the rights to them are claimed to be vested in the rent receivers, and how they are made to swell the rent rolls of great estates, are facts of pregnant interest to the student of the economic history of the land of Wales under the influence of English rule and law, especially in the contrast which they afford to the student of the historical development of the agrarian laws and customs of Switzerland. In the ancient laws of Wales the common pastures and hill grazings were jealously guarded by the courts of the Cantrev and Cwmwd, because, so runs the law, "every wild and waste "belongs to the country and kindred (gwlad a "chenedl), and no one has a right to exclusive "possession of much or little land of that "kind."

Professor Rhŷs.

16,917. Do you know the reference to that? —The reference is, I think, in the second volume, page 522, of the Ancient Laws of Wales, published in the Rolls Series under the editorship of the Rev. Aneurin Owen. That was the cardinal principle. Every grant of the waste, every encroachment was carefully regulated by the Cantrev and Cwmwd courts. Grants were made of the common land by the chief and by the whole court. Every grant was made on the first and main condition that the land was to be cultivated, and any ownership in grants made out of the waste by the chief and the court of the Cantrev and Cwmwd only became established by virtue of generations of careful cultivation. With the revival of local self-government, some public and local control of the common pastures and hill grazings in the interests of rural economy may fairly be expected, as was done in one of the amendments of the Crofter Act of Scotland. The last of the five tests which were laid down at the outset is, perhaps, becoming the most serious and solemn question of all. Is the rent or surplus produce of the land over and above what is necessary to feed, clothe, maintain, and educate the tillers of the soil wisely spent in the interest of the community of Wales? The following table, drawn from the statistical abstracts of the Inland Revenue reports, shows the modern growth of rents in Wales, and their approximately present figure:—

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

I will not trouble the Commission with this table more than to point out its main features. I take the rents of 12 counties of Wales, the 12 counties as they are placed in Government reports, and I take the rents first of the year 1814-1815, before the financial collapses and dislocations of industries after the great Napoleonic war. The rents of Wales in that year amount to 1,932,000*l.* Then I give the figures for 1842–3, and then I give the figures for 1879–80—the high tide of the rents of England and Wales, I suppose, on the whole—and then I give the figures of the rents for the years 1889–90, and the total for 1889–90 is 3,127,398*l.* That shows a per-centage of increase between 1815 and 1889 of 61 per cent. I may take two simply; I will take one of the most favourable, Merioneth. Now Merioneth had in 1814–15 a rental of 102,000*l.* In 1889–90 it had a rental of 140,335*l.* Then I take one of the less favourable cases, that of Anglesey. 81,000*l.* was its rental in 1814–15, and in 1889–90 its rental was 184,897*l.*, or a per-centage of rise of 128·26. During that time the rental of the whole of England rose from 34,328,000*l.* in 1814–15 to 38,903,832*l.*, or a rise of 13·3 per cent. When these figures were first produced in the House of Commons, and discussed in the country, there ensued a very vigorous correspondence, more especially in the columns of the "Times." Letters and figures were hurled at my head to disprove the statements which I made, and to depreciate the effect of the figures. It was said that the test as between England and Wales was not fair; because England was in the main a great corn-growing country, and Wales was in the main a grazing country; and they said there lies the secret of all the discrepancies of the figures. The objectors to my figures said, take the counties like Chester, Cumberland, Cornwall, Devon, Monmouth, and Westmoreland, the counties most like Wales, and see how your figures fare then? I accept the challenge at once. The figure for these English counties selected by those who desire to depreciate the figures which I have quoted was in 1814–15 4,065,000*l.* The figure for those counties in 1889–90 was 5,334,425*l.*, or a per-centage of rise of 30·1, namely, exactly half of the per-centage of the rise of the rents of Wales. Now I have given the most favourable figures, the figures which my objectors challenged me to examine, and now I come to what I hope will be a more impartial source; I will go to the reports of the Board of Agriculture. The Board of Agriculture has divided England into grazing counties and corn-growing counties. I do not know whether the Commission would desire me to read the list of what are considered the grazing counties of England, but perhaps I can put it in and save you the trouble, but I have taken these counties carefully out of the statistical abstract.

16,918. We shall be glad to hear them (the witness handed in the following table):—

You will observe that the grazing counties or Western Division includes the following counties, viz. :—Chester, Cornwall, Cumberland, Derby, Devon, Dorset, Durham, Gloucester, Hereford, Lancaster, Leicester, Monmouth, Northumberland, Salop, Somerset, Stafford, Westmoreland, Wilts, Worcester, York (North Riding), and York (West Riding). The acreage of corn crops to acreage under permanent pasture in this grazing division is as follows :—2,274,385 acres under corn crops, a per-centage of 16·8; under permanent pasture, 8,585,986 acres, or a per-centage of 63·3. Now I have taken these counties in the following table :—

Taking the rents of 1814–15 and the rents of 1889–90, I find this result, the rents in 1814–15 were 19,804,000*l.* in the grazing division; in 1889–90 they were 22,116,025*l.*, or a rise since 1814–15, not of 61 per cent, as in Wales, but of 11·6 per cent. I have then taken the corn-growing counties and I find that the rental of the corn-growing counties in 1814–15 was 14,524,000*l.*, and that the rental of the corn-growing counties in 1889–90 was 16,787,807*l.*, or a rise of 15·5 per cent.

Now these figures speak for themselves. The occupiers pay the land tax, the poor, public health, education, highway, police, and county rates, yet in Merioneth, where 140,335*l.* was paid as rent in 1889–90, the county is ill provided with public institutions. In a land and among a peasantry singularly devoted to social converse there is not a public village institute or hall, keenly fond of reading there is not a public library. In a changeable climate mainly damp, where the homes are small and confined, there is not a single hospital or public dispensary. In a land whose people are singularly attached to the soil and its associations the dwellings of peasants and cottages are allowed to fall to ruin. I venture to think this is too severe a strain and cannot last.

Chairman.

16,919. That is your evidence?—That is my evidence, my lord.

Lord Kenyon.

16,920. Mr. Ellis, I think your chief complaint is insecurity of tenure, is it not?—That is my chief complaint, as it bears upon the morale of the tenantry and upon the husbandry of this county and of Wales.

16,921. I do not see that you make any remark about leases?—No, because there are none.

16,922. Why is that so?—First of all, the period of leases is ended. I cannot exactly say why, whether it was that the tenants disliked them or that the landlords disliked them, but I have a shrewd suspicion that they were disliked by both, for this reason when the leases came to an end the landlords, took the whole of the improvements and enhanced the rent. Moreover, in the period of the rises of prices, and especially during the last 50 or 70 years, rises in rent were made far more easily under annual tenancies, so that in one way or another leases have become very uncommon. Why they are uncommon now is extremely patent. Landowners might offer them. Mr. Price yesterday very generously offered leases on his estate, but the question that must have shot through every farmer's mind was, "Upon what rent?" Well, of course upon Mr. Price's rent—upon the landlord's rent What the tenants say is, "We cannot bind ourselves for 20, or 30, or 50 years upon a rental which is decided by a landowner, and not decided by any impartial authority between the landlord and the tenant.

16,923. But take the case of a man coming into and taking a farm, I will say—not a hereditary tenant?—Yes.

16,924. He agrees with his landlord as to the rent. Why should not he accept a lease?—Of course, first of all it is hardly ever offered to him. When the lease is offered I should say that, first of all, he would consider that the rent which is asked for an annual tenancy is not a rent that ought to be asked for a lease; for the reason that he has then become absolutely responsible for everything on the farm—buildings, accidents, bad seasons, and everything.

16,925. That is according to the lease entirely?—Certainly. I believe that under proper conditions a system of leasing is one that promises best for the future husbandry of this country.

16,926. I have known a case on my own estate where a tenant having been a leaseholder for a long time preferred to remain at the same rent on a yearly agreement. I offered him a fresh lease on the same terms for 7, 14, or 21 years if he liked to have it, and he was much more pleased to remain a yearly tenant?—At the same rent.

16,927. Perhaps you can explain to me why?—It was at the same rent.

16,928. At the same rent—as it was then. If it was a fair rent for a lease, why should not he take a lease? You were just pointing out to me that it would be probably a lower rent for a lease than for a yearly tenancy?—Yes, naturally, and a rent which was, say, 100*l.*, with undoubtedly a generous landlord to give him reductions and abatements, is a very different thing to 100*l.* which is fixed, where he himself is responsible for buildings, accidents, and improvements.

16,929. He was not responsible for anything of that sort. From every landowner, I think, and from every landowner's agent, we have seen that there is every disposition on their part to grant leases if the farmers choose to ask for them, but they are never asked for. Then you referred to a re-valuation which seemed to be an unwelcome one; that was Mr. Jenkins's re-valuation. Was he an experienced valuer or not?—The result was unwelcome.

16,930. Was he an experienced valuer, because, as I understand you, the rents were raised?—Yes, in every case.

16,931. But was not he an experienced man?—Yes, probably an experienced valuer.

16,932. I forget what date you said it was, but I think you said 1876?—Yes, 1876.

16,933. That was a very prosperous time?—I ought to point out, if you will allow me, that he was a valuer appointed by the landowner. No tenant had any choice whatsoever or any influence upon him.

16,934. Probably it would not be regarded then as an independent valuation?—No, and his valuation would be made of course by simply looking at the farms from outside and making no account whatsoever of the improvements that had been made by the tenant.

16,935. Of course not. You stated what is undoubtedly a fact, that the labourers are drifting to the towns, but I do not think you said why in your opinion they are drifting to the towns?—The reply is very complex. One reason is that there is a tendency all over the world towards social and city life, with its industry and its attractions. That is a tendency which we may like or dislike, but in Wales that tendency has been accentuated enormously by the fact that cottages, and especially cottages with gardens, are allowed to fall into ruin, and that farms in many cases have been consolidated, and houses and lands attached where families in days gone by lived and thrived are now parts of other farms.

16,936. According to Mr. Lleufer Thomas's report, I think he says the agricultural labourer was never so well off in Wales as he is now?—Certainly as many of them as there are.

16,937. And, therefore, you think that it would be an inducement to them to stop in the country if they could. Your opinion is that there are too few houses for them?—Yes, and there is a vast amount in their condition still which is most unsatisfactory. It is only that their condition is relatively better according to Mr. Lleufer Thomas's report, I think.

16,938. Exactly. Their wages are higher probably?—Yes, their wages are higher, but none too high.

16,939. Their food is cheaper?—Their food is cheaper certainly.

16,940. And their clothing is cheaper?—Yes.

16,941. And their standard of comfort is improving?—Slowing, but steadily improving. There is still very great room for improvement.

16,942. I do not quite know then how to keep the labourers in the country except by building more houses?—Yes.

16,943. How are those houses to be built, that is the question that troubles me a good deal. One gentleman in answer to a question of mine said a house could be built for 60*l.*—a good labourer's cottage—but that you entirely deny of course?—With regard to that all I will say is this, that a very comfortable cottage could be built by a farmer or by a townsman at a very much cheaper rate than it can be built by a great landowner.

16,944. I suppose you mean that the labourers work better for the farmers or the townsmen?—No, I do not think they do, but a great deal of the wages are paid for superintendence with regard to the planning of cottages and building them, which would be obviated by an artisan or a farmer who built a cottage.

16,945. Take contract work, for instance; I could not get a man to build me cottages for 60*l.*?—No, not for 60*l.* I think that was a too hopeful estimate.

16,946. It is a matter of capital and return for capital, is it not—building a cottage for a labourer—in some degree? I mean supposing you were to spend 100*l.* or 120*l.* you would expect to get something back in the shape of interest?—Certainly, but I think it is one of the very first duties of a rent-receiver, if I may say so, to see that his estate is well provided with buildings both for labourers and for farmers

16,947. I perfectly agree with you. The only thing is I want to find out what in your mind is the remedy by which we may keep these labourers in the country. I deplore the depopulation very much, in fact?—So do I, heartily.

16,948. I want to know how to keep the people here. It seems to me if a man will not lay out money in building cottages because the rents he gets are too small, and if everything else that can be done is done to keep the labourers in the place, it is not much use unless some public body is constituted ?—With regard to that I would say this: under the present system of land tenure by which a sum, such as I have referred to in Wales, amounting to something like 3,000,000*l.*, is paid in rent, the duty in the first place undoubtedly devolves upon the rent-receiver. Under another system, such a system, for instance, as has gradually been built up in Ireland, and in the Highlands of Scotland, I think the local authority can and ought to do very much. I believe in Ireland the Labourers Acts have done enormous good, and that the benefit which will accrue is only just beginning to be felt, and I am looking forward hopefully to the time when similar work will be done in Wales.

16,949. And the return on the capital does not exceed in that case about 2½ per cent. ?—No, I suppose not.

16,950. You mentioned something about enclosures—enclosing sheep runs. We had some evidence that there are such things as disputes about the sheep ?—Yes.

16,951. And that in many cases a boundary fence was put up because it got rid of these disputes ?—No doubt a boundary fence does good. It just settles for the time a quarrel. Personally I am against fencing our hill pastures, because it contravenes the spirit of what I consider a thoroughly good law, that what may be called the reserve land of the community should not be appropriated for ever by private individuals, but should as far as possible be reserved to public use.

16,952. I know of a case where a tenant farmer was glad to get a fence put up ?—The present race of tenant farmers would gladly get a wall just as very often the present race of commoners will very gladly give up their commons sometimes for a dinner, and sometimes for a money consideration; but what I hold is, that the present race of tenants and the present race of commoners have no right to deprive posterity for ever of the rights which belong to the community.

16,953. You say one or two owners stated that these sheep runs were vested in them. I suppose they mean they bought the Crown rights to those hills. Is that it ?—I do not know. It is a very interesting question.

16,954. They become possessed of them in some way ?—Yes, in some way. They claim them evidently.

16,955. Are you a sportsman ?—No, I do not think I am.

16,956. You made many remarks about game ?—Even if I were inclined to be a sportsman, the history of this district would make me stop.

16,957. Tell me about these English and Scotch gamekeepers who, you say, were introduced and dotted all over the estate. Is it still the case that they are a race of men repugnant to the people in the neighbourhood ?—They are not loved.

16,958. Is the feeling better, do you say ?—It is better, for two or three reasons. At one time the repugnance of the country was so great, that there were actually bands of young farmers and labourers going about the fields at night, maintaining terrible fights with keepers, not for the mere purpose of poaching, but as a rough country protest against the system which had grown up. Then again the public opinion of the country was expressed in all sorts of ways against the horrible increase of rabbits and game. That had, undoubtedly, as the years rolled on, a salutary effect upon the management of estates—for instance, of the Rhiwlas estate—and rabbits were destroyed, and during the last few years rabbit warrens have been built. Personally I think, it is a very ill-advised policy from the point of view of rural economy to have game farms instead of tenant farms and peasant farms. That is my own opinion.

16,959. That is a matter of opinion, because the rabbits are as much an article of food as anything else ?—Yes, but I think that the first principle which should guide the ownership and the control of land is not the production of food, but the production of men.

16,960. But a rabbit warren entails a certain amount of employment of people to look after it ?—Yes.

16,961. Almost as much as it would if it were used agriculturally ?—Perhaps, but if you knew the social life of Wales the difference in their value to the community between the people who take care of game and who take care of farms is a very significant difference.

16,962. I trust that may be altered. I do not see why there should not be a good gamekeeper as well as a good farmer ?—Oh, there are many good ones.

16,963. With regard to this game question and the effect of a landlord residing on his estate, are you in favour of landlords being absentees or not ?—I am against it.

16,964. You think they are better residing on their estates ?—Yes.

16,965. They do a certain amount of good ?—Some do a great amount of good, although many landlords who are resident on their estates know extremely little of the real life of their estate. I think that sometimes with every good intention their want of acquaintance with the real life of the district is quite pathetic.

16,966. I think perhaps they are trying to remedy that. I know two sucking landlords are being taught Welsh at the present moment. One is the young Lord Powis and the other is the young Sir Watkin. Do you not think that a small amount, I do not say of excessive game preserving, but some amount of it, keeps the landlord on his estate and gives him some amusement there ?—I quite admit it.

16,967. It is the carrying it to excess that is bad ?—Yes, it is the carrying it to excess—showing to the country that the thing seems to be of the very first interest of the landowner. It is that which I think touches the conscience and intellect of the country.

Mr. Griffiths.

16,968. You consider that landlords as a rule do not sufficiently recognise that the tenant has much capital invested in the land which he cannot carry away with him at a 12 months' notice?—That is so; they do not. One of the highest authorities, I suppose, on agriculture, Sir James Caird, laid it down definitely that farmers, as a rule, were unable under any arrangement to recover at least 15 per cent. of the capital which they had sunk in their farms in various ways.

16,969. I entirely agree with you. They cannot as in the case of a labourer take their goods and remove to another cottage; that is not the case with the farmer?—No, or as is the case with the transfer of a share from one stock to another.

16,970. With regard to leases, is it not the rule that landlords when a tenant applies for a lease generally think that the farm is cheap?—I cannot speak from experience on that point.

16,971. That is the rule in our country that farmers are afraid to ask or a lease thinking that the landlord will at once say, "Oh, that "farm is cheap or else he would not want a "lease"?—That I cannot speak to from experience. Leases are extremely rare in this country now.

16,972. Do you not think it would be the means of keeping the labourers more in the country and prevent them running into towns if they gave them a plot of land to keep a cow or two?—Certainly. I look forward very hopefully to the working out of two tendencies in Wales as in England; first, the allowing freer and easier access to the land for the labourer; and secondly, the growth of a vigorous and corporate village life.

16,973. Do you think that would also tend to bring up the children into agricultural occupations?—Certainly; and I think that is of enormous importance, because the real farmers are those who are bred and born on the land as labourers and as farmers.

16,974. I see in Mr Doyle's report a remark is made by the late Mr. H. P. Goode who was a very excellent man in the county in which I live. I will just read it to see whether you agree with it:—"There are, how-"ever, redeeming features in the system of "very small farms. The smaller farms, whose "tenants occupy from 5 to 100 acres, of which "there are a great number in this country, "employ their own children, both boys and "girls, at a very early age, to look after their "cows, watch over their crops to keep off "birds, watch their bees, and the little girls do "the house work, whilst their parents are "employed in the fields. They are generally a "very industrious race, and when the girls and "boys come up to 14, 15, or 16 years, they go "to service, some to farms, others to families. "Girls as nursemaids, under housemaids, and "maids of all work to small establishments; "they carry with them their industrious habits, "and in good, considerate families they make "first-rate servants." Do you agree with that?

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

—I agree with every word of it, and I would say further, that, apart from the material good to the community of having such a class, the moral good is incalculable. Practically, all the leaders of thought and activity and influence in Wales during the last 200 or 300 years have been sons of these small holders—these small peasants. The evidence given in 1889 before the Small Holdings Committee by Mr. Thomas Jones, of Brynmelyn; by Mr. A. C. Humphreys Owen, of Glan Severn; and by others, conclusively proves that the value of this class to the community is incalculable, and the Committee in its report (it was Mr. Chamberlain's report) fully appreciated this.

16,975. Is there any information you could give us as to a remedy for these things?—Well, I introduced in 1892 a Land Bill.

16,976. Perhaps you could just give us an extract from that?—I think the Bill is based on two great Parliamentary experiments—two great Parliamentary enactments: the Irish Land Acts, but more especially the Crofters' Act of Scotland; and I venture to think that as the Commission come into contact with the actual life of Wales the greater similarity they will find between the history and the condition of the Highlands and of Ireland on the one hand and of Wales on the other. In this Bill—which was brought forward by a body of members representing Wales—I have followed the lines of these great agrarian enactments in two ways, first of all by making a land court the starting point for a new system of land tenure; the starting point, I say, because I believe that no Purchase Act and no Small Holdings Act will ever be really valuable and workable unless you first of all have a land court to fix fair conditions of rent and of tenure, and to prepare the way for purchase of farms under various conditions, whether by the local authority or by the occupier or in any other way. That is the first part of the Bill. Another, and of course a subsidiary part is the one which attempts to deal with what Lord Kenyon referred to, namely, the quarrels and the disagreements and misunderstandings with regard to the common grazings and hill pastures of Wales. I believe that at the time, this Bill was considered to be too extreme, but I believe that there is hardly anything, if anything, in it which in one way or another is not embodied and acknowledged by the best landlords in the country. It is true that the power of having an impartial authority to fix rent as between landlord and occupier is not acknowledged as such or specifically by any landowner, but we know well of landowners who would never dream of revaluing their estates with a view to a rise of 15 or 20 or 30 per cent., or of raising their rents with a view to putting the estate in the market, or with a view of raising rents after purchasing, in order to have a commercial interest upon the transaction. There are many landowners who would not dream of exacting such rents. They only ask for rents which enable the tillers of the soil to have a fair and a decent maintenance, and some margin for old age and for accidents, and for allowing their sons and daughters to have some fair start in life and in employment. With regard to insecurity of tenure, there is a clause in the agreement which I think will ever be to the credit of the owner of one of the estates, which gives to the tenants security of tenure, and I say that such a clause embodied in an Act of Parliament would be only what landowners sometimes great already. With regard to a clause making alarger provision for unexhausted improvements, I think this is only the barest act of justice to a tenant, to give him fair compensation for all the permanent and unexhausted improvements which he has made upon his farm. It is also a great incentive to agricultural enterprise, labour, and activity.

Mr. Richard Jones.

16,978. In respect of a land court, Mr. Ellis, would you suggest that a land court should come in between the landlord and tenant in the first instance, or should it be simply a court of appeal, that is, a court of appeal for either party to go to in case of failure to come to agreement?—A court of appeal, certainly. I may illustrate that by what happened yesterday in the Town Hall. One of the witnesses before your Commission complained bitterly of railway rates, and he said in reply to a question that he thought it was a very good reform to have a court to decide questions between the railway company and the trader and the farmer. That is, of course, the court of appeal, which all the trading community in this country has been asking for. Now I venture to think that as between a great railway company and a trader there is not half so great a gulf fixed as there is fixed between a great landowner and a witness such as that widow who gave her evidence before you yesterday. If it is necessary for a powerful trader to have some outside body to appeal to, how much more necessary, in reason and in common sense, is it for a Welsh peasant, like a Highland peasant or an Irish peasant, to have a court to which he can appeal?

16,979. I suppose you would suggest that the court should not only decide questions of rent, but questions of repairs. The question has been repeatedly put by the representatives of the landlords to witnesses: "In case a land court was established, do you think the landlords would ever spend anything on repairs?"—Quite so, and the question is generally put with a view of getting a negative reply, as if the thing were a self-evident proposition. First of all, I have an infinitely better opinion of landowners than their own friends have evidently, and secondly, there is a special provision in this little Bill for repair and building by a landowner, which is as follows:—"The rent of any holding, subject "to statutory conditions of tenancy and rent, "may be increased in respect of capital laid out "by the landlord under agreement with the "tenant to such an amount as may be agreed "upon between the landlord and tenant, and "sanctioned by the said Commission, and the "landlord shall have the same rights and powers "to enforce the due fulfilment of such agree-"ment as to recover payment of the rent."

16,981. You think that a tenant should have perfect liberty to cultivate the land in the way he likes, provided that he does not weaken the land?—Certainly.

this excessive preservation of game, and the pursuit of it, as a great ideal of life.

16,983. I suppose inasmuch as the game is kept at the tenant's expense that he should have the whole right to it if he chooses to preserve it?—I would not like to encourage any tenants to preserve game either. They would be just as bad as the landowners, at least some of them would be.

Mr. Grove.

16,984. You have mooted your Tenure of Land Bill. Could you supply the Commissioners with a copy of that document?—I should be very happy to do so.

16,985. Perhaps you are aware that Mr. Bryn Roberts has given evidence, and has given us his Bill, or it has been promised to us, and some of us have copies?—If I may say so I think the Commissioners have a perfect right to call upon Her Majesty's Treasury to supply them with any number of copies of Bills presented to Parliament.

16,986. Does your proposal vary very widely from that of Mr. Bryn Roberts?—Yes, I think widely, although in essence it is not very different. The principle against which landowners and agents fight is the principle of having any authority whatsoever outside themselves to settle differences between the landlord and tenant. That principle Mr. Bryn Roberts seeks to establish by setting up a system of arbitration to settle differences of rent and conditions of tenancy. In my own case, in this Bill I have asked that a land court or Land Commission should be set up for two or three purposes; first of all, you will then have the machinery close by; every tenant will feel—"Well, I can go on doing the very best with my "farm, and if there is no disagreement I never "need go near it; if there is a case of disagree-"ment there is the land court to which I can "appeal; I can by the payment of 1*s.* 6*d.* or "half-a-crown for the form appeal to the Land "Commission to decide my difference with my "landlords, just as my fellow Celt in the High-"lands can do." One objection has been brought forward to a land court, and it is this, that it is expensive. Now it need not be expensive or of any expense whatsoever to the tenant or the landlord, for I have looked very carefully into the working of the Crofters' Act, and all the payment that a crofter need make is the 1*s.* 6*d.* for the application form to have a fair rent fixed or a holding enlarged. A notice is then sent to the landlord and both appear before the court. If he tells his own story in person, as landlords and tenants tell their story to you, no greater expense need be taken upon it than was taken upon settling that very interesting question between Colonel Evans Lloyd and Thomas Davies yesterday. I ought to say this with regard to the expense of the court, that it would fall upon the State. I believe that in this matter Wales has a strong claim upon the State, because for all ordinary purposes of a judicial and a police system Wales makes extremely small demands upon the Exchequer. The progress of judges through the greater part or through all rural Wales is simply an empty pageant, it is a holiday, it is a matter of the presentation of white gloves in one county town after another. The main cause of difference in Wales really is agrarian, and a court set up for the special purpose of settling agrarian differences, and of giving security of tenure and fair conditions of tilling the land in Wales, would do really in Wales what the State does in Birmingham and Manchester when it sets up an expensive machinery for the punishment of crime, and the settlement of civil, shipping, and commercial suits.

See 13,167–13,222.

See 16,790–16,791.

Mr. Grove—continued.

16,987. With regard to your evidence in chief as to hill grazings and common pastures on page 10 in the summary of the evidence you have given, do we gather from you that the provisions of the Crofters' Act if applied would be useful?—Most useful. If I remember rightly the Crofter Commission decides questions—in fact I am certain of it—relating to hill grazings and common pastures. They decide whether a large crofter or a large farmer takes unfair advantage of his power by placing too great a stock upon the common pasture, and in some cases I believe the Highland Land Court has given to crofters the rights of pasture on the hill land, who before the Commission came had no rights, owing to some system or accident or other.

16,988. Then I presume that body is a permanent body under the Act?—That body is a permanent body under the Act.

16,989. Do we gather from you that you think there is not sufficient agricultural labour on the land properly to develope the land; is that your view?—That is my own view, which may not be of much value. I think that is the view of every practical agriculturist in Wales.

16,990. Does it arise in your opinion from the want of cottage accommodation to some extent?—Partly, but very largely undoubtedly during the last 10 or 15 years owing to the various causes arising partly out of the depression of agriculture and partly out of tenure of land and the exaction of high rents.

16,991. And the competing industries of various kinds?—Yes.

16,992. In looking at the cost of a cottage for an agricultural labourer, in your opinion is it fair for simply the interest upon the outlay to be looked at; should it not comprise the increased comfort of the tenant farmers and the labourers as well as the increased value of that labour on that land?—Certainly. Under the present system landlords set their rents on this principle; that they supply practically all the machinery, so to speak, of cultivation—houses and draining. Well, I take it that as part of the machinery comfortable and accessible labourers' cottages ought to be included.

16,993. Do you think that the consolidation of small farms has been brought about to any extent by the landlords not being prepared to rebuild and keep in a proper state of repair the buildings on the smaller farms?—Undoubtedly, and for another reason. I do not believe that many landowners have ever realised first of all the strong desire which people have, so long as they are fairly comfortable, to remain on the land, and secondly, I do not think that they have realised what a value many of these small tenancies are to the actual life of the district, the glen and the country side.

16,994. In alluding to the buildings by your father upon his farm you stated that under the agreement the compensation for buildings would run out in say a year or two from now. Of course there is a limit of time?—Yes. No doubt the provision in Mr. Price's agreement, that if a tenant leaves the first year after he has built he will get the full compensation, and that then the compensation is to diminish in twentieths, is a liberal provision; still I venture to think it is insufficient.

16,995. Do you suppose that that varies from the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act in any way?—Yes; it is undoubtedly an alternative to the Agricultural Holdings Act. I believe it would be considered an alternative.

16,996. By a mutual agreement between the two, I suppose?—Yes, I suppose so, although I think that the agreement might be considered void at law; but I think it would depend upon all the circumstances of the case under the provisions of the agreement as tested by the Agricultural Holdings Act.

16,997. One would have to carefully analyse every word of the Agricultural Holdings Act; I can see that?—I desire to say this, if you will allow me, with regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, that, although I believe it was really a very laudable effort to settle the difficulties felt throughout the kingdom, yet, so far as Wales is concerned, for one reason or another, it is a dead letter. I believe it has quickened the sense of landowners in making their agreements, and so far it has done good; but in the main it is a dead letter in Wales.

16,998. I am sorry to be obliged to trouble you with one other question, about the game, we have heard a good deal about it. Do any of the large landowners in this district to your knowledge rear game for sale, for profit, as distinguished from sport?—Oh, undoubtedly.

16,999. They do?—Undoubtedly.

17,000. And do you consider that where that is the case the probability is that there would be a greater infliction of damage on the tenants?—Much greater, and I consider mainly that that is the system which is against public policy.

17,001. Are there any local landowners, especially in this immediate neighbourhood, who rear pheasants for profit, for sale, do you think?—By the hundred and thousand, so I understand.

Lord Kenyon.

17,002. Hundreds and thousands of pheasants you mean, not landowners?—Quite so, not landowners; we have not come to that yet.

Professor Rhŷs.

17,003. Would you say there was any difference between Wales and England as regards the land question?—I do not believe, so far as I know, that there is any difference in the actual law, but there is an enormous difference I think in the administration of the law; and in the question of land really a great landowner in many respects ousts the law of the land. He really is legislator and administrator on his own estate, and the differences that exist between various estates and the differences between the various periods on the same estate are such as to show that it is not the letter of the law but the spirit of the administration which tells on tenure and upon society. There is the same law in Llanuwchllyn to-day as there was in 1859, but in 1859 the evictions on Sir Watkin's estate struck terror into the people of Llanuwchllyn and the district. To-day, so far as I can understand, Colonel Hughes is what he has been in the Vale of Clwyd—a land court in himself. What there may be after Colonel Hughes has gone we do not know, and that is why we ask that Colonel Hughes should, so to speak, be placed in an Act of Parliament. See 68

17,004. I see what you mean. Would you say that, roughly speaking, what the best landlords and their agents do and what some of the inferior landlords profess to do might reasonably suggest a line of legislation which would be reasonable on the whole to all parties?—Certainly.

17,005. I do not know that you recommend that as an actual line of legislation, but that is conceivable?—It is quite conceivable.

17,006. With regard to distribution of land and population, and character of agriculture, what would you say with regard to the Welsh farmers as compared with the English farmers?—With regard to that I think the best reply I can give is to quote the reply which Mr. Doyle made in 1879 to the Richmond Commission. I ought to say Mr. Doyle was a Commissioner for eight English counties—Oxford, Stafford, Warwick, Gloucester, Worcester, Salop, Hereford, and Monmouth, and he was Assistant-Commissioner for 12 Welsh counties. This is how Mr. Doyle prefaces his report:—"The eight "English and 12 Welsh counties comprised "in this district exhibit greater variety and "more marked contrasts in the distribution "of land as well as of inhabitants, in the "character of its agriculture and in the con-"dition and habits of the rural population "than would probably be found within similar "districts in any other portion of the kingdom." I think it is unnecessary for me to point out the difference between the mass of the rent-receivers of Wales in politics, religion, language, and social aims, as compared with the mass of the tenantry in Wales in religion, politics, language, and aims.

17,007. You have said that the gap between the small Welsh farmer and the landlord is very great?—Yes, in reality it is very great.

17,008. Much greater than it would be between an English farmer and his landlord?—Very much greater.

17,009. And we have had it illustrated in many cases—at least, allusion has been made to it—that on the other hand the gap between the tenant farmer and the labourer is correspondingly small?—Take Wales as a whole it is very small. It is small because farmers are small and they live together, and it has been made smaller by the Nonconformity of Wales. The labourer and the farmer and the tradesmen are on a greater basis of equality in their chapels and in the polity and government of their denominations than any body of men I know in any part of the kingdom. Of course we have instances—innumerable instances—where labourers are the leaders and the deacons, and the much respected and influential deacons, of their chapels.

17,010. You would not go so far as to say that the deacons and the preachers, as we heard the other day, force the farmers to give evidence against their landlords?—Well, I have heard a good many preposterous things in my time, but that beats them all.

17,011. You say that "with the revival of "local self-government, some public and local "control of the common pastures and hill graz-"ings, in the interests of rural economy, may "fairly be expected." What bodies would you utilise in that respect? Do you allude at all to the county councils?—I would not like to give a reply right off to that, but I should rather think that in various ways the gradation, so to speak, of local government should have reasonable control of the land and common grazing. I think it is quite possible that in some respects parish and district councils should have certain powers over what one may consider the more public side of land; for instance, they should have far greater power to secure land for public purposes, and they should have greater power to regulate land, especially what is considered common land.

17,012. Would you, for instance, extend the borrowing powers of the county council to buy land as under the Small Holdings Act?—I took the deepest interest in the passing of the Small Holdings Act, and, as your Commission is aware, a sum of either 5,000,000*l.* or 10,000,000*l.* (I forget now which, I think it is 5,000,000*l.*) from the Public Works Loan Commissioners is at the disposal of the county councils of England and Wales, according to their rateable value; but I believe the Small Holdings Act can only be made effective, and can only be made to live, after some such Bill as this Bill of mine, the Land Tenure (Wales) Bill, is passed and a land court is set up.

17,013. You do not consider that the Small Holdings Act is now being carried out to any great extent?—No, and I do not think it can be in Wales, and not very much in England either.

17,014. I am not quite clear as to your answer to the question I asked about the county council. I asked if you would give the county council powers to buy land?—Yes, I would certainly.

17,015. You would give them powers to borrow money?—Yes, and I would go so far as this. I believe we are fast coming near the time when responsible local authorities like the county councils will have a right of pre-emption of estates in the market.

17,016. That brings me on to another question which I wish to ask you. I think I understand to some extent the difference between your Bill and that of Mr. Bryn Roberts, but how about the idea of land nationalization that we have heard of sometimes? How does your Bill stand in regard to that?—My Bill does not touch that. With regard to the question of land nationalization, I do not think we are, so to speak, called upon to decide for or against any special system of land nationalization, but my own belief is, I think, similar to the belief of most thinkers on land questions, such as John Stuart Mill, Herbert Spencer, Carlyle, and others, that the land belongs to the people, especially to the generations of people who have tilled it well and who will till it well. The people's is, after all, the very first interest in the land. But I do not desire to go into these questions of distant theories. I think one right step at a time is enough, and our duty is to bring practicable and immediate remedies for present ills.

17,017. Then may I ask whether your Bill, if carried into effect, would help that or stand in its way?—It would undoubtedly help it. I say so frankly. It would undoubtedly help it, very largely help it.

17,018. I want to ask you one question about the re-valuation on the Rhiwlas estate. What was supposed to be the reason for the re-valuation in 1876?—Perhaps the more or less human reason of taking advantage of the shining hour. It was a time of high prices.

17,019. You mean it was considered probable that the estate was under-rented?—I suppose so.

17,020. Then that re-valuation was really in order to raise the rents, you think?—One has only to judge by the result.

17,021. The result was very unpopular, but I think you suggest that there was an ineradicable impression amongst the people that the rents were in many cases raised above Mr. Jenkins' valuation?—Undoubtedly that is the impression in the country on the Rhiwlas estate.

17,022. That would partly account for the unpopularity of the re-valuation?—Yes, that would partly account for it, and then there is the feeling of uncertainty—that people do not know when a re-valuation might come again for some reason or other—and they feel—"Well, "if a re-valuation is to come it is not very wise "policy for us to put the whole strength of "body and brain into improvements if a re-"valuation like this can come again at any time."

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

17,023. Where is Fron Goch of which Mr. Roberts was tenant?—It is about three or four miles away.

17,024. What is the district?—It is the Cwm tir mynach district, I suppose. It is at the bottom of the Cwm tir mynach district.

17,025. That is the district I mentioned yesterday and I could not get an answer. You heard my questions as to the contributions towards the college?—Yes.

17,026. I asked why the people of Cwm tir Mynach refused to give their names, as it was said in the Report, "for reasons known to them "and others at the time." Can you throw any light on that? It refers to the years between 1858 and 1865?—Well, I think the dates which you give are a clue to that statement. For some reason or other the Cwm tir mynach people, the farmers of Cwm tir mynach, are considered in this district as people who are more afraid of the landlord than any people in this district, with the exception of the Llanuwchllyn people, about 20 years ago. About 20 years ago the Llanuwchllyn people were supposed to be and were undoubtedly greatly in fear of their landlord and their land agent. All that, I believe, has now become a thing of the past, and the terror is worked out and the Llanuwchllyn people are on the average as free as anybody else; but in Cwm tir mynach I believe that this terrible event of 1859, of turning the very best farmers on the estate adrift, has had an enormous influence, and during those years 1858 to 1865 there was developed in this neighbourhood, and more especially, I think, on the Rhiwlas estate, a policy of building what I call plantation churches.

17,027. I should like to hear something of that?—One of them was built at Fron Goch and the other at Sarnau, not because there was an abundance of churchmen, but because there was a hope that by various influences, Christian and otherwise, churchmen would gradually abound in those districts.

17,028. Has that hope been realised?—Not with brilliant success. At Fron Goch there is, I suppose, an average attendance of about 20, but the services at the church at Sarnau have long been discontinued. I know that in the Sarnau district the obtrusive interest which Mrs. Price—the Mrs. Price of that day—took in the religious and educational welfare of the tenantry there was such that Nonconformists not merely sent their children to the school during the week, but felt forced to go themselves and send their children to the Sunday school on Sunday afternoon, and it was always found that those who sent their children on Sunday afternoon to the Sunday school at Sarnau were not charged the threepence fee which was charged to those who came for secular education during the week and who went to the "ty cwrdd" or the chapel on the Sunday. I can quite believe that during that period, of what I may consider great Church of England zeal, these people of Cwm tir mynach, whose spirits were already depressed considerably by the evictions of 1859, were not very anxious that their names should appear in the reports as being contributors to the Methodist College at Bala.

17,029. You have incidentally made a remark which leads me to gather that threepence was the price of religion in that district?—I am not quite sure that that is a fair inference from my argument. I ought to say this at once. That was up to 1865. I believe that in the main, since then, the present proprietor of Rhiwlas has not cared a toss whether a man goes to church or to chapel, but, as I said before, there are different methods at different times and on different estates to teach insecurity of tenure.

17,030. May I ask you do the Cwm tir mynach people ever meet at public meetings to discuss social questions or political questions as people do in other neighbourhoods?—Oh, no, far from it; I think they are gradually emerging towards the light and freedom in that matter, but I think that if I went to hold a public meeting there would be considerable shaking of heads at Cwm tir mynach.

17,031. You do not think they quite like it?—No, the fear still exists.

Sir John Llewelyn.

17,032. With regard to political evictions in 1859 to 1868: that was before the days of the ballot?—Before the days of the ballot, yes. I believe that they very largely influenced the bringing about of the Ballot Act.

17,033. You mean that those evictions were considerably discussed at that time and were probably instrumental in bringing that about?—Yes.

17,034. Have there been any cases to your knowledge of political evictions since those days?—Since 1868?

17,035. Since 1868?—No, I cannot say that there have been anything like the sensational political evictions—the turning out neck and crop—of the best farmers in the whole district; but when the tithe agitation came, the old sense came up again that these people could not fight out their own tithe battle from fear of their landlords. I do not know whether it is true or not, but the rumour reached us in this part of the country, that in the Vale of Clwyd Col. Hughes refused absolutely to interfere in any way between the farmers in their struggle over the tithe question. He said, "I am agent "for estates in order to get good tenants, and "to get rents well paid, and these Nonconformists who are fighting the tithe battle are "my best farmers, and I am not going to harry, "or worry them, because of certain views of "theirs on the tithe question." But that was not the feeling on a great many estates.

17,036. Then with regard to the game, it is not the law with which you find fault, but the abuse of it or the extra use of it?—Largely so.

17,037. Then with regard to the migration of labourers from the country, do you not think that that is principally owing to the temptation of higher wages in these days at the works in South Wales and the quarries in North Wales?—That only partly accounts for it, I think.

17,038. Only partly?—Only partly.

17,039. Would you give me your own opinion as to the other part?—No doubt the agricultural labourers know that there is not merely good wage to be had in the industrial districts, but they have an idea that there is fair housing. They have an idea that there are greater social comforts and opportunities, and certainly far greater educational advantages. When they look round here in rural Wales they find first of all that their housing is very poor, that their wages, although much better than they have ever been before, are still not as high as in the towns; and when they especially find that there is neither a public room, nor an institute, nor a library nor any means of real recreation, they get tired of the land, and then, when they cannot find a cottage, or when they know that there is no vigorous village life, and no comfortable and well-warmed rooms in the village, they naturally drift to where they hope they will get greater educational and social and material advantages.

17,040. Would the better housing and these other advantages, if they were supplied in the agricultural districts, keep them on the land?—I think it would tend largely to keep them on the land, very largely. It would palpably check the present tendency.

17,041. Even though the wages were in the other places so much higher?—Oh, yes; I think I can give an example of that. Very many people who go to the industrial districts live there for a time, and are very glad again to return to the country, to build a little house and live the rest of their days in the country.

17,042. Then coming on to the question of compensation for improvements, and the instances you gave, do you think that compensation for improvements ought to be subject to no time limits?—No, I would not say that, but I cannot help thinking——

17,043. In the very interesting account you have given us of the improvements made on your father's farm, I see that some of the unexhausted improvements go back a very considerable number of years?—Yes.

17,044. Do you think that they would wear out—that the right of compensation should wear out in time?—Well, no doubt it does wear out, and I dare say it ought to some extent to wear out.

17,045. You do not consider that it would last for ever?—No, of course I know it cannot, but I feel in walking about my father's farm when I come home and look at thoroughly good hay sheds where corn and hay are well and tidily stacked, and when I look at capital hedges, and fields that are green and fruitful because of good drains, I do consider it rather hard that, supposing my father went next year or in two years' time from Cynlas and lived here in town, or suppose he was no more, I would consider it fairly hard that he or his family should have no legal right whatsoever to anything that he has done during a tenancy of 38 years. These improvements in the main were made during the first 18 or 20 years of his tenancy. I do not wish of course to speak with regard to my father at all as apart from others; I simply take the example nearest at hand and of which I know most.

17,046. That I quite understand; you have taken the nearest example. With regard to the principle of the Agricultural Holdings Act, which requires the consent of the landlord in certain improvements, do you approve of that principle?—There is nothing to be said against the principle of it, but in the working I think it is very ineffective.

17,047. You think it is ineffective, but I want it on the question of principle. Do you think that a landlord ought to have a right of veto as to proposed improvements by tenants?—I consider that is fair, but I should like to say this, that I do not think it will ever work well in Wales. On some estates landowners are rather jealous of allowing the tenants to set up any sort of claim as it were by making improvements. In other cases a tenant does not very much desire to be going cap in hand for permission to do this and permission to do that endlessly.

17,048. With regard to what you say in your evidence in chief about the Scotchmen who came into Wales some time ago, you spoke of Breconshire also. I know Breconshire very well. Can you tell me what part of Breconshire the immigration took place to?—I could not give you the exact district at once. I could find the reference very easily; but there is a huge district bordering on one of the ranges of hills in Breconshire.

17,049. The Pontsenni district, perhaps?—Yes, that is the district.

17,050. Where there are sheep farms?—Yes, and where there used to be large numbers of small tenants who lived, as they do in this district, all along the edges of the hills—where they had small farms in the low lands and then a right of sheep walk upon the hills. Now these small Welsh tenants have been swept from that district, their houses are in ruin, and then there are three or four Scotchmen with enormous farms. Well, I say, with all respect to those Scotchmen, it is not good to the community of Breconshire that that huge land should be rid of its families of peasants in order to have two or three great farms.

17,051. I have one Scotch tenant, I believe, but that is all, and he speaks Welsh. The next question arises out of the interesting figures that you have given to us as to the general rise of rent from the year 1814 up to the present time. I see that while there was a large increase in the rents between 1814 and 1842 and again from 1842 on to 1879, since that there has been a decrease?—Yes.

17,052. A decrease which amounts in the aggregate, I think, to a small sum, 145,000*l.*; it is small, and the per-centage would appear (I have not worked it out) to be still smaller when compared with the decrease in the English towns?—Yes, no doubt.

17,053. Have you taken into consideration the buildings, the enclosures, and the reclamation of land that has taken place in Wales?—Yes, to some extent, and from my point of view I do not think that improves the matter at all.

17,054. You do not think it would?—No, for this reason——

17,056. You know some parts of Wales well, and I know another part?—With regard to Merioneth, for instance, where the per-centage is 37·5, I think one could very easily illustrate that by the rent of particular farms, and seeing how gradually the rents have run up. One could do the same with Carnarvon. Instances have already been given to the Commission.

17,057. Carnarvon, I see, is very high—90 per cent.?—That is very easily accounted for by the schedules of rents, some of which have been, I believe, submitted to the Commission already. I have, for instance, here a schedule from which I find that, say on the old Rhiwlas estate in Carnarvon, in the days when it was part of the Rhiwlas estate, 1843, for instance, the rent of Bronmiod was 80*l.*; it was then sold and made part of Gwynfryn, and the rent was 126*l.*

17,058. It is probable that that increase was made upon material improvements to the farm?—It was made after purchase, yes—soon after purchase. There are a large number of other instances which I could give. Here is another, Pentyrch uchaf, on the Rhiwlas estate, the rent was 60*l.* in 1853, while its rent now as part of the Glasfryn property is 120*l.*

17,059. I do not want to go too much into detail, but I wanted you kindly to give me a general idea. I observe that the two counties that probably you know best are so different that you would be very likely to tell me why it is that a 37 per cent. increase is to be found in the case of Merioneth and a 90 per cent. increase in the county of Carnarvon?—I could not give immediate reasons why there should be such variation, but I think it is quite possible that reclamation and enclosure may have had a great deal to do with it. But what I desire to point out there is this, that in every case the reclamation of waste has been done with infinite labour by the tenantry, and that with regard to the enclosure of mountain I consider it one of the most serious parts of the whole system that rents should be exacted out of these wastes of Wales—the waste lands and hill grazings of Wales, on which never a penny piece has been spent by any landowner.

17,060. Even though that enclosure of wastes was done under an Act of Parliament?—Well. I think they were Acts of Parliament which were only very partial in their good. They may have helped cultivation, but they did it at the expense of serious ill-treatment of the poor and of the community.

17,061. Are you aware that some of the English counties are meeting together with a view of laying their case before the Royal Commission on Agriculture? I observe that some of the counties in England, Lancashire, Westmoreland, and Cheshire are joining now?—Yes, I understand that that is so.

17,062. I extracted that from one of the London papers of the 27th September. I understand they are combining with the view of adopting the "Three F's" as a legislative programme. I believe there is some considerable agitation also in the counties of Devon and Somerset, and that part of England. Are you aware of anything of the kind?—Yes. I have long seen—I have seen during the last few years that there is a distinct movement, especially on all that border, and I may add that it is rather instructive to find that it is these selected counties which were hurled at my head in the argument we had about a twelvemonth ago, where it was said that the rents were not so very different from those of Wales—it is precisely in those counties that the movement at this moment for better tenure of land is making progress.

17,063. I think that from that it is a fair inference that the Bill which you have brought in is considered in some of the mountainous parts of the United Kingdom to be desirable—for that part of England as well as for Wales?—Yes, I rather think that is the impression which is gaining ground.

17,064. Perhaps it is too early to form any opinion on the subject, but there have been statements made in that direction?—Yes, that is so.

Lord Kenyon.

17,065. You mentioned the fact that there had been no recreation rooms. Have you ever thought of any good plan for rooms for recreation in the villages or any good system of carrying on one?—The great difficulty is to get a thoroughly good building. First of all there is the land, secondly there is the building. Now suppose, for instance, a landlord who is really anxious to do something for the villages on his estate were to look about and say, "Now how can I "help the community on my estate?" I think he could do nothing better for the labourers than to build in every fair-sized village a really handsome building—not handsome so far as ornament is concerned, but I mean so far as regards convenience, lighting, and airing; that then he should hand it over to some public body, either a trust or a local authority as trustee; and then that he should give to the people of the locality complete power of controlling it. The people in these Welsh villages have learnt during the last 50 years the most valuable lessons of self-government. Their chapels have been to them a splendid education in self-government; they manage these chapels and manage their organisations with admirable skill and success; and I have no doubt that if the government of these building were given—given generously—to the labourers and to the peasants they would make splendid use of them.

17,066. There is one difficulty—not in this part of the world I believe at all, but it does occur more in mine—with regard to these recreation rooms competing with the public-houses. I am afraid that a recreation room would be at a disadvantage as compared with a public-house if it had no means of selling liquor. I do not say that that is the case here, because I do not think it is?—With regard to that, in these parts of Wales I believe that if the law gave power to the people of the rural communities of Wales to do as they would with public-houses, they would simply be swept away from every village in all rural Wales—swept away; and the thing, I think, which would prevent people from sweeping ordinary public-houses away from towns is the feeling that there are now no convenient public rooms.

17,067. It is a concrete case I am thinking of in a little village in which I am interested. I wanted to do something of this kind. I had an old building—it was not a very remarkable building, but still it was utterly useless in its present condition and I thought it might be made into a recreation room, and I could not devise any plan on which they would take it up. I was afraid the difficulty was the lack of beer? —Well, it may be. If I am right, Lord Kenyon, part of your estate is on the borderland between England and Wales?

17,068. It is. This is almost on the border. —I know something about the borderland. It is neither England nor Wales, and the difference as between the habits of the population and their ideas on the borderland, especially the Anglicised borderland, and those of the population, say, in the centre of Merioneth, is as great as it is between Dorset and a Swiss canton.

17,069. I was only hoping to get some information from you as to how to start this thing. Possibly I may have another attempt. One thing more. You say that your Bill is based to a certain extent on the Irish legislation?—Yes.

17,070. Are you acquainted with Ireland?—I do not know it well; I only know it from having visited it half-a-dozen times, and from having pondered over its history and social condition.

17,071. Do you think it would be well that repairs should be done on the same system as they are in Ireland now?—No, I do not think so. In Ireland, of course, the buildings as a rule have been made by the tenants; many of them are poor buildings; they were naturally poor because of the terrible history of land tenure in Ireland. And I would say this, that in Wales as well as in Ireland under the system of real security a vast improvement would be made even by the tenantry in the matter of buildings. Take, for instance, this district. I know of one or two instances where farmers have bought their own farms. I have especially one instance in mind where a farm was bought in what we call the Waun district; a farm was bought at a fairly reasonable price, and when it was bought the tenant at once set about draining, hedging, building outbuildings, and making a capital home for himself. It is a completely freehold farm and exceedingly tidy, and the farmer is comfortable and well off, and was, I think, selected by his neighbours as the first member of the county council for the district.

17,072. Probably he had capital?—No, I do not think he had much capital. He bought the farm at a fair reasonable working price, not at a fancy price, but a working price, and he was able to do the improvements from time to time.

17,073. The difficulty in my mind was whether, if the buildings were properly repaired, the people would live in comfort if our system of land tenure was the same as it is in Ireland. At present the repairs being done by the landlord must be a great boon to the tenant?—No doubt. Suppose, for instance, a Welsh Land Bill were passed, or that the landlords thought fit to sell their estates, and they were bought by their tenants, I can quite believe that in many cases and for some time many houses and outbuildings would remain poor and defective, and that there would not be the same expenditure as there is at present; but the raising of the standard of comfort, especially the new ideas which will come with a liberal and better education, and also the changes that will come with improved and organised agricultural education, all would tend to improve both out-buildings and farms, whether the tenants were the owners of their farms or the part owners.

Chairman.

17,074. I have some questions that have been handed in. First, I will put those sent up by Mr. Vincent. "You are aware, are you not, "that the preservation of game is carried on "as pure matter of business by Mr. Price, of "Rhiwlas"?—Well, so I should think from the appearance of things—quite a commercial business.

17,075. "The rabbit warrens are in fact rabbit farms are they not?"—Certainly.

17,076. "What relation to the present Mr. Price was the gentleman who held the Rhiwlas estate in 1859?"—I think he was grandfather.

17,077. The present Mr. Price was grandson to that gentleman?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

17,078. "Was Mr. Price then a boy at Eton in 1859?"—Certainly; at least I should say he was at Eton. I do not remember the time; it was the year I was born.

17,079. "In your speech (House of Commons, "March 16, 1892, Parliamentary Debates) you "spoke of a custom of selling the goodwill of a "farm. Will you please specify any case in "which this has been done to the knowledge of "the landowner?"—First of all what I would say with regard to that is this, that in the old times on the Sir Watkin estate, tenants were not only never disturbed, but when they did at any time change from farm to farm the incoming tenants paid a more generous sum for the stock, because, as the country word is, the outgoing tenant turned his back "am droi ei gefn;" there was a very generous payment for the inconsumed stock and the sheep and so on when an incoming tenant came in. I said I think at the time in the House of Commons that it was only a modified form of what took place in the way of tenant right in Ulster. I notice that at Llanrwst Mr. Owen Hughes, of Pant-y-ffridd, Llansaintffraid, Glan Conway, said this. It is at question 13,973, "Was it as goodwill that you had it?"—namely, the 30*l.* received from the incoming tenant for drainage done—"Yes. It was the sale of the "improvements to a new tenant owing to the "fact that I was allowed to choose a new "tenant." Then at question 14,018 "Was it not "by the custom of the country that you had this "30*l.*?—No, I agreed with the incoming tenant." —(14,019)—"Quite so, but is it not customary "to do that?—It is a rule when the landlord "permits it, but it is seldom that the landlord "permits it." Then a landowner gave evidence, I think it was at Dolgelley—a small landowner, I think—Mr. Charles Jones. He was asked:— "Did I understand you to say that the incoming "tenant makes the best terms he can with the "outgoing tenant; that you tell him he can "have the farm if he can arrange with the out-"going tenant." Mr. Jones answered: "If "he can arrange for the purchase of the stock, "and so on." Then one of the Commissioners said: "So that you practically give up the right "of making arrangements with the incoming "tenant." The answer is: "Yes, I first of all "tell the man he could have the farm if he "could arrange with the outgoing tenant." Well, for the outgoing tenant to have a power more or less of choosing, subject, of course, to the veto of his landlord, the tenant was in its sort of way and so far as it went a form of tenant right. Now, in 1887, the Welsh representatives sent to many parts of Wales a schedule of questions, and among the questions was this question of whether there was in any form this system of goodwill—something paid over and above the value of the stock. One of the replies was this. This is by one of the leading agriculturists in Anglesey—I suppose one of the very best farmers there—Mr. Roberts, of Trefarthen. He said:—"When an outgoing tenant "has spent a good deal upon unexhausted "improvements, some landlords take this into "consideration and allow the outgoing and "incoming tenant to agree, but not often." Then another said, speaking for himself and his neighbours, this. He is asked: "Has there "been any goodwill or tenant right paid?" He says: "Even in the most flourishing times "when this was obtainable the landlords set "their faces against anything of the sort. "Further, they reserved the right of appoint-"ing an umpire to settle valuations for un-"consumed produce. This has been a matter of "great complaint in some places." So what I said in the House of Commons (very largely from facts such as these before me) was that on some estates there was this sort of modified tenant right of allowing the incoming tenant to pay a generous sum for the stock, and that the landlords in most cases, if not in all cases, set their faces against it. That was one of the points which I made in the House.

17,080. These are Mr. Vincent's questions continued. "Do you know that Mr. Bryn Roberts, "M.P., has thrown over the doctrine of free "sale in his evidence given at Carnarvon?"—I do not know that he ever took it up, so he could not throw it down. I have never taken it up in Bills which I have introduced, and I think that Mr. Bryn Roberts is right in the matter. It would be unwise, especially if we had a good Land Bill, to set up in Wales the system of free sale, because it would be transferring the evils of competitive rents from the landowner to the tenant. In this Bill, Land Tenure (Wales) Bill, what we ask for is that the compensation for unexhausted and permanent improvements should be assessed by the tribunal which is set up.

See 13,182.

17,081. "In your House of Commons speech "(March 1892) you trace a number of rents "from dates at the end of the last century. "Would you admit that the value of land has "increased since those days by reason of im-"proved communication?"—Certainly, though under what law all the enhanced value arising from improvement in the communication should go to the rent-receiver and not to the rent-producer passes my understanding.

17,082. "If the improved value ought not "to belong to the landlord, can you suggest any "reason why the sitting tenant should have it "more than anybody else?" Do you understand that question?—I suppose the question has reference to the Bill, but I do not propose that he should intercept, so to speak, the unearned increment through improvements of communication or through nearness to towns: I do not refer to that at all. I simply ask that the tenant should have all his improvements on his farm assessed by impartial authority.

17,083. "In relation to Lord Penrhyn and "the enclosure, did you say in the House of "Commons this?" Then Mr. Vincent gives the following quotation from the "Times" of March 17th. "Much discontent had been caused in "Wales by the enclosure of what had formerly "been pasture land. In one case Lord Penrhyn "had enclosed some pasture land, and the "fences had been broken down, upon which "Lord Penrhyn had used his power as chair-"man of quarter sessions to obtain a special "posse of police to protect the fences, and had "levied a special rate in the district to bring "these farmers to their senses." Mr. Vincent also gives an extract from the Parliamentary Debates, "purporting to be revised by Mr. "Ellis:"—"In regard to the question of pastur-"age, too, the rights of the people had been "invaded. In his evidence Lord Penrhyn ad-"mitted that considerable difficulty had arisen "in his district owing to the fact that the "pasturage of the tenants had been enclosed. "In the assertion of their rights, the tenants "had taken down the fences; and what did "Lord Penrhyn do?—He used his power, as "chairman of quarter sessions, if I remember "rightly, to obtain a special posse of police for "the district, and he levied a special rate to "bring to submission these farmers who had "asserted their rights." Are those quotations correct?—Yes, the latter.

17,084. "Do you admit that the enclosure "was not made by Lord Penrhyn at all, but in "pursuance of an Act of Parliament?"—First of all, I never said that the enclosure was made by Lord Penrhyn. The report in the "Times" is quite incorrect: the report as it appears in the Parliamentary Debates is correct. I see that somebody has very kindly added (I suppose it is the special correspondent of the "Times") "purporting to be revised by Mr. "Ellis." So far as I remember no revision was necessary so far as this part was concerned. I made no statement that Lord Penrhyn himself enclosed it, but the argument is not in the slightest degree affected.

17,085. It was not enclosed by him, but Lord Penrhyn took it. Is that what you say?—No. I read in my evidence this morning Lord Penrhyn's own words that an Inclosure Act had been passed—passed in the way that the old Enclosure Acts were passed—smuggled through both Houses without any adequate knowledge on the part of the people of the district, and that the tenants, the commoners, in self-defence pulled down the walls. I made a mistake in the House of Commons in saying that Lord Penrhyn was "chairman of quarter sessions": I said he was "chairman of quarter sessions if I remember rightly."

17,086. You mean he was Lord Lieutenant?—He was Lord Lieutenant. That is, of course, a merely verbal slip, Lord Penrhyn's own words are the best authority; he was appointed Lord Lieutenant of the county. First of all he could not get any evidence from the tenants or from informers or anybody; he then got the county to raise an additional force of police; then quartered them on the district, and then charged that district with the amount of their expenses.

17,087. Yes, I remember that all very well. Then the next question by Mr. Vincent is: "Do "you admit that Lord Penrhyn was never "chairman of quarter sessions?" You admit that?—Quite so, I have explained that.

17,088. "Do you admit that a difference of "opinion exists as to the identity and the "character of the people who broke down the "fences"?—There are very few things about which there are not differences of opinion, but one thing is very clear, that the statement of Lord Penrhyn is his own statement, and every intelligent man can draw his own conclusions from it. These commons, where the people had a habit of sending sheep "on to the Downs," as Lord Penrhyn put it—this land was enclosed; the people made the only protest in their power; the Lord Lieutenant of the county, a man of enormous power, gets the county magnates to raise an additional force of police, he distributes that police in the district, and he charges that district with a special rate.

Professor Rhŷs.

17,089. How would you characterise the conduct you have described?—Infamous.

Chairman.

17,090. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Do you take the figures under Schedule A. or "the figures under Schedule B. as representing "the rental"?—I think that is rather an insult to the intelligence of a student of statistics. No one would dream of looking for agricultural rental in anything excepting Schedule B.

17,091. "Do you deny that Schedule B. covers "other things than the purely agricultural "rental"?—If it covers it in England it covers it in Wales; and, mutatis mutandis, the comparison stands as between the per-centage of rise in England and the per-centage of rise in Wales.

17,092. "If under Schedule B. then can you "explain why Mr. Gladstone chose Schedule "A."?—Mr. Gladstone did not choose Schedule A. Mr. Gladstone, when he spoke on the 16th March 1892, was speaking of a return which he had not actually perused himself at that date—a schedule which covered a large number of years, Schedule A., B., and D. He asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the day whether it would not be convenient to have, so far as the Welsh counties individually were concerned, Schedule B. separate from Schedule A., not knowing that the very return which had been issued to the House two days before gave that very information.

17,093. "You say that 'If the trader wants a "'court to settle with the railway company, the "'farmer wants a court to settle with his land-"'lord.'" Those are supposed to be your words. Do you remember saying that?—What I said was this, that the gulf fixed, so to speak—the difficulties interposed between a railway company and a trader are not so great as the difficulties between a great landowner and a peasant widow.

17,094. "You do not, of course, forget that "the railway company obtained the monopoly "on the terms of being subject to statutory

Chairman—continued.

" legislation " ?—That is so, and I do not know that it is very wise to challenge one to ask why a certain number of people have had the monopoly of the land.

17,095. " When you speak of the Irish Land " Act, you refer, I presume, to the system which " is the result of the Irish Land Acts from 1860 " onwards. Is that so " ?—No, I think the Act of 1860 was one of the very blackest spots upon British legislation. It was an Act which at one stroke enacted that, in all relations between the Irish tenant and his landlord, contract should rule; and it is very largely due to that most ill-directed Act that the British Parliament has had to spend long and painful years in order to undo its work by the later agrarian enactments of 1881 and 1887 and the Purchase Acts.

Mr. Vincent.

The witness has misunderstood the question. With your Lordship's permission, I will hand up another.

Chairman.

17,096. " Do you know that under the existing " Irish system, subletting, although it is said to " ' break the judicial rent,' is tolerably common " ? —No, I cannot speak as to that, but I can quite believe that remains of the bad custom should still exist. It takes long years to eradicate customs of that sort.

17,097. " When you refer to ' arguments " hurled at you,' do you refer to a correspon- " dence between Mr. Gladstone and Mr. George " Owen in the ' Times,' or to other, and if so, " what correspondence " ?—Well, I do not quite differentiate between Mr. George Owen and a good many other correspondents of the " Times."

17,098. You speak generally ?—I speak generally, yes.

17,099. " I venture to agree with your esti- " mate of the moral obligations of a landlord " under the present system in relation to build- " ings and so forth, but do you think that if " the present system goes, and if a compulsory " and restricted relation of landlord is substi- " tuted, any part of this moral obligation will " survive ?"—Well, I should say that there would be an enormous moral obligation upon a receiver of great rents under any enactment that the Parliament of this United Kingdom would pass, so long as he was in receipt of the rents.

17,100. " Was not the return of which Mr. " Gladstone spoke an extract from his ' Returns " for land only ' under Schedule A." ?—Certainly. The return for land only is the one thing that Mr. Gladstone asked for, namely, under Schedule B., and to get the figures separately for Wales; and all these returns in Schedule B., laid out clearly as relating only to land and agricultural rental, are the returns (and that is the column) on which all these figures have been based—Mr. Gladstone's figures and the figures which I have ventured to lay before you to-day.

17,101. On Schedule B. ?—On Schedule B., certainly.

17,102. It is a mistake, a confusion between

Chairman—continued.

A. and B., is it not ?—Yes. Schedule A. of course includes more than land only, but Schedule B. only takes agricultural land.

17,103. " You have quoted Mr. Doyle as an " authority. How do you reconcile this with " the fact that in March 1892 you used these " words of Mr. Doyle :—' The Richmond Com- " ' mission appointed a gentleman as Assistant " ' Commissioner who had been an inspector for " ' the Poor Law Board. He knew not a word " ' of Welsh, and from that one fact he was " ' unable to communicate with nine out of " ' every 10 of the Welsh peasantry. He did " ' not make any pretence or semblance of " ' obtaining evidence from the tenantry; he " ' sent a schedule of prepared questions to the " ' clerks of Poor Law Unions inviting them to " ' send him answers. Now, I venture to think " ' that a Commissioner who considered he was " ' doing the work appointed for him to do by " ' adopting this method of obtaining informa- " ' tion cannot be said to have afforded much " ' assistance to the House in these matters ' " ?—Any intelligent man, and especially any intelligent civil servant, going to two districts, say in England and in Wales, would be able to decide, even if he knew nothing about actual practical agriculture, whether there were great and distinctive differences between the two districts which he visited; and Mr. Doyle, by the very fact that he could not speak with nine-tenths of the tenantry of Wales, had to admit that there was an enormous difference between the condition of England and Wales. Upon that point I think Mr. Doyle is as good an authority as anybody; but as an authority as to what the views of the tenant farmers of Wales may be; as to the views which can be obtained by patient investigation, Mr. Doyle's authority is most trifling as compared with the authority, for instance, of the Commission which Her Majesty has seen fit to appoint in order to go thoroughly into the land question in Wales, and to hear all sides, instead of merely asking Poor Law clerks to give them all the information about agriculture in Wales.

17,104. Then I have several questions by Mr. Owen Wynne. " You say that under your Bill " the only necessary expense to the tenant " would be 1*s.* 6*d.* hearing fee. Would you " prohibit either side from employing legal " advice " ?—No, I would certainly not prohibit them; but I think that the practice of the Crofter Commission is an extremely wise and salutary one, namely, in every case to discourage the appearance of solicitors on either side. They say, " We want to hear the story of the " landlord and we want to hear the story of " the tenant, and we do not want long legal " arguments; we will decide between you," and they have decided in thousands of instances much to the contentment of the peasantry of the Highlands.

17,105. " If you did not prohibit would there " not be an opening for legal expenditure " ?—I think my first reply answers that.

17,106. " If you did prohibit would not a " tenant be at a disadvantage as compared with

Chairman—continued.

" a highly educated landlord, Mr. S. Pope, Q.C., " for example " ? Is that a question you can answer ?—Yes ; I think I can answer it very well. I would back the tenant against Mr. Pope, or anybody else, before an impartial Commission.

17,107. Then I have some questions by Mr. Llewelyn Jones. " Have you any idea as to " how many persons are occupied in connexion " with the work on a rabbit farm ? " Can you give us any idea of that ?—No ; I suppose one gamekeeper, I should think——

17,108. " If these rabbit warrens were let " to tenant farmers would not a larger number " of persons be employed on them ? "—I think it is quite possible. I should think that Mr. David Roberts, for instance, who gave evidence before you yesterday, and who was sent from Llanerchyreryr, in order to make way for a rabbit warren, would undoubtedly employ a certain amount of labour, and certainly the gain to the community of having a tenant farmer in Llanerchyreryr with two or three labourers in his employ would be infinitely greater than that of having a gamekeeper there, however good he might be.

See 16,542A.

17,109. " Who was the landlord of the Rhiwlas " estate in 1865 when the landlords of the dis- " trict sat to watch their tenants voting " ?—I think Mr. Price had left Eton then. He was in the hall. Most of the landlords of the district were there.

17,110. " Do you know how many keepers " there are on the Rhiwlas estate now " ?—No, I do not. I heard that question very often asked yesterday, but you never seemed to get an answer to it ; but there are a good many of them, not quite so many as there used to be, and I should think some of them are of a better type. I have heard, for instance, the head gamekeeper considerably praised ; but they are not in very high repute even yet.

17,111. " Who was the landlord of the Rhiwlas " estate when your father got the notice to " quit " ?—The present Mr. Price.

17,112. " Do you know whether Mr. Price of " Rhiwlas, your father's landlord, speaks Welsh " or not " ? Do you happen to know that ?—I think not. I have never had the pleasure of speaking to him except two years ago in this hall.

17,113. " What legislation would you suggest " with reference to common land which has " been enclosed by landlords of late years " ?—Well, one has, I think, sometimes to check one's own inclinations in matters of that sort ; but I think that these enclosures, especially recent enclosures, unless they have been made under some very high authority, ought to be carefully and responsibly scrutinised. I would go no farther than that, and certainly I would say this as a general principle that the local authorities, as representing the local communities, ought to have greater control over the land and easier access to it.

Lord Kenyon.

17,114. Is it not the case that a Bill has just been passed with regard to these enclosures ?—I hope it will be a most useful little Act.

17,115. Providing for the consent of the Board of Agriculture ?—Yes, it was to repeal part of the Statute of Merton, which enabled a landowner to enclose without an Act of Parliament.

17,116. It has only just become law ?—Yes, this year ; it was a Bill of Lord Thring's.

Chairman.

17,117. Then there are one or two questions by Mr. Price. " Have not several public read- " ing-rooms been started by Miss Jones, of " Vron, and various other well-intentioned " people, and failed for want of popular sup- " port " ?—Of course I should like to know the district and I should like to know the conditions under which they started ; but I venture to say this, that there never was a reading-room started under the conditions which Lord Kenyon, for instance, asked about just now, namely, that buildings should be provided — adequate and attractive buildings—and the complete control of it placed in the hands of the people themselves.

See 18,4

17,118. " Is there not one now trying its " luck " ? Do you know of any public reading-room that has been started now in the district and is struggling on ?—There is a reading-room in the town of Bala not, as far as I know, built by any landowner. I believe Mr. Pope, at Llanbedr, has established a reading-room and a sitting-room—a smoking-room—and I believe it is hugely appreciated.

Lord Kenyon.

17,119. Oh, there are some ?—There is this one at Llanbedr, but even that I think cannot be called a great social experiment.

Chairman.

17,120. " Do you not consider this very Vic- " toria Hall a valuable institution as a recrea- " tion room " ?—It has been a very great public convenience to the town, but I would not call it a great recreation room. I believe that, in order to celebrate the visit of Her Majesty to this town, Mr. Price very generously gave the land on which this hall is built.

17,121. You do not call it a recreation room ?—No, I do not call it a recreation room.

17,122. It is not used as a recreation room ?—No.

17,123. " Is it not a fact that the Rhiwlas " rents generally have been permanently re- " duced since the valuation by Mr. Jenkins " that you referred to " ?—Oh, yes, there have been reductions, but I venture to think not adequate reductions considering the prices and considering the conditions of agriculture nowadays.

17,124. " Was not an excellent new farm- " house built for Mr. Ellis, senr., in 1875, or

" thereabouts (and no increase in the rent made), " at a cost of 600*l.*; also new pigstyes "?—Yes. I have said in my evidence that a house and a pigstye, and even more than that, I think, were built about 1875, and the very next year came the re-valuation, and, although my father had had an increase of 10*l.* in his rent in 1867, yet in 1876 he had a further increase of 7*l.* in his rent. I think I called your attention to the state of the old house—I mean it was absolutely unfit, rain and snow came through part of the roof to one of the bedrooms.

17,125. " Have not the agreements now in " use on the Rhiwlas estate been in existence " for the last 20 years or so, long before the " Agricultural Holdings Act was dreamt of "?—I cannot give the years; certainly they have been in existence before the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883, and I give every credit to the liberal clauses in those agreements.

17,126. " Mr. Davies, of Fedwlwyd, stated in " his evidence before the Commission that he " had refused to sign his agreement. Do you " consider him better or worse off than the " other tenants on the Rhiwlas estate who have " signed their agreements "?—Well, really, I cannot decide upon that.

17,127. You cannot give an answer?—No, I cannot give an answer to that. Re-examined, 18,507.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Jones called and examined.

Chairman.

17,128. You are a land agent and valuer, and fire loss assessor and farmer?—I am.

17,129. You are prepared to give evidence about the district of Cerrig y Druidion?—Yes.

17,130. Especially referring to the estate, Hafod Elwy, belonging to the Honourable R. Cavendish?—The estate belonging to the Honourable R. Cavendish.

17,131. And the Llaethwryd Estate belonging to Mr. Middleton?—The estate formerly belonging to Mr. Middleton, under my care.

17,132. And other estates in England?—Yes.

17,133. What is the acreage?—About 5,000 to 6,000 acres.

17,134. Where is it situate?—In the Manor of Uwchaled. Will your Lordship allow me first of all to make this statement. I am not here for any party, either one party or another. I am here to give before your Commission an independent account of the parish of Cerrig y Druidion as worked between landlord and tenant. I have no desire to favour either one or the other.

17,135. We are aware of that, but we want your evidence, please. We have a great many witnesses, and I want to give everybody a chance, and not to give all the time to one person?—Very well, I will go over this statement.

17,136. Have any recent enclosures been made, by Act of Parliament or otherwise, of common land; and if so what has been the effect on the neighbouring population?—The land enclosed under the Enclosures Act in this parish has benefited both farmers and labourers, under 8 & 9 Victoria chapter 118, from 1865 to 1868 and 1870.

17,137. Were recreation grounds or allotments for the use of the labouring poor apportioned? If so, how are they used at present?—Land was left for turbary rights only. I had a great deal to do with enclosures myself.

Chairman—continued.

17,138. Is it made use of?—It is not—has not been for years.

17,139. Then with regard to squatters' cottages, or other dwellings erected on waste or unenclosed land, how are they dealt with? Are they surrendered, and, if so, on what terms?—They are all surrendered. Many bought back the cottages and land enclosed by them.

17,140. To whom were the sheep runs given?—They were given to the farm tenants, and are included in the farm rents.

17,141. What was the effect of the sheep runs being given on the rents of adjacent farms?—The effect has been to improve the farm, of course, and they were also enclosed in by the Honourable R. Cavendish; they were wired in, which was a very great benefit to the tenants. In fact it saved them a great deal of money in shepherding—a very great deal of money.

17,142. What is the general condition of sheep-farming?—Not as good as it was a few years ago, but much better than it was 20 or 30 years ago.

17,143. Then about difference of language, politics, or religion, between the landlord or agent, and the tenant or proposed tenant?—No difference is made. The majority of the tenants are Liberals and Nonconformists. When a farm becomes vacant, as a rule the nearest relative is given the preference. If none apply, then the best farmer with the largest capital applying is given the preference. Neither politics nor religion are inquired into by the owner or his agent. A knowledge of Welsh is requisite in the Cerrig y Druidion district.

17,144. Where agents are employed, have they received any special training for the supervision of agricultural land? If not, is there any inconvenience or hardship experienced? Yes or no?—The agents in this part of the world have a thorough knowledge of agriculture and estate management.

Chairman—continued.

17,145. What is the usual date of entry in your district?—Annual tenancy, date of entry on land 25th March; on house 13th May.

17,146. Then you say they are all annual tenants on this estate?—All are annual tenants. Leases are often refused, farmers preferring to be free to remove to other farms at the end of their yearly tenancy. I know of only one lease being granted in the parish.

17,147. Is there a great demand for leases, and, if so, are they readily granted by landlords?—It is an exception for a tenant to ask for a lease; they are often offered leases, but they refuse them. In my experience, which now extends over 30 years, I have not had any, excepting two applications for leases.

17,148. Do tenants readily accept leases? If not, why?—No; preferring to be able to leave when disposed to do so.

17,149. Is the condition of the leaseholders and of their farming superior, or the contrary, to that of yearly tenants?—Superior, especially when a farmer has capital.

17,150. Have changes in tenancy become more or less frequent than in former years?—If more frequent, to what causes are they attributable?—Seldom; not more frequent.

17,151. Are there any cases of hardship?—No.

17,152. In resuming the occupation of a field or plot out of a holding, for the sake of planting, building, or for other purposes, do owners generally serve their tenants with proper notices for the purpose, and grant them compensation?—Very little planting is done. If my landlord wished to plant on my farm I should be very glad to give the land up for the purpose, without compensation, because plantations warm and improve a farm and provide shelter for sheep and cattle. Much more might be done to the benefit of both the landlord and the tenant, for this is a hilly country, and I myself have planted a good deal there on a farm which I occupied as a farmer, and which has been very successful. In fact, it would be much better for the land, for the landlord, and for the tenant if more planting was done.

17,153. What are the usual conditions of tenancy?—Annual.

17,154. Are any of the clauses in your agreement considered oppressive?—No.

17,155. Are penalising clauses common, and are they often enforced?—No.

17,156. Are tenants usually given a copy of the agreement or lease, or if Welsh-speaking, are their contents explained to them?—Yes.

17,157. Is the rent usually fixed at a gross sum, or at so much per acre?—A gross sum.

17,158. Is there any uniformity in the rents of land of similar qualities on the same or neighbouring estates?—Yes.

17,159. Is the rent of the smaller tenantry higher per acre than on larger farms?—Yes.

17,160. What is the usual rent of average lands of different qualities in your district, e.g., on upland and lowland farms?—Oh, it varies very much—from 2*s.* 6*d.* to 20*s.* or 25*s.* per acre.

Chairman—continued.

17,161. And of course you take the right of pasturage over a common into account in fixing the rent?—Yes.

17,162. Are any services other than the payment of rent rendered by the tenants?—None whatever.

17,163. How is the rent fixed—on the basis of a valuation, or by proposal followed by private treaty?—On the basis of valuation.

17,164. Holdings are not let to the highest bidder, you say?—The holdings are not let to the highest bidder, but to the best farmer who has the largest capital. Tenants with sufficient capital are accepted when no relatives of the former tenant apply.

17,165. Is arbitration ever resorted to as a means of settling or re-adjusting the rent?—No.

17,166. Have you raised rents?—Yes.

17,167. Have there been any permanent reductions or temporary abatements of rent?—Both permanent reductions and temporary abatements have been made. None were made in my time. One farm has been sold since.

17,168. When rents are raised or reduced does the change depend on a re-valuation?—On valuation made by the agent or professional valuer.

17,169. What have been the chief fluctuations in prices affecting rent within the last 50 years?—The price of live stock in that neighbourhood. It is a grazing country mostly.

17,170. The rent is paid from three to six months after falling due?—Yes, and very often a much longer time is given.

17,171. What effect has the preferential claim for rent on the position of tenants generally?—It has a very good effect, and is beneficial to the tenant farmer in protecting the farmer against—well, you may say tradesmen or anybody else—because I think the landlord is the farmer's best friend, and, in my opinion, he ought to get his money before everybody else. That is my experience.

17,172. You say tithes, land tax, chief rent, local rates, and income tax are all paid by the tenant, except property tax?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

17,173. Are the tithes now paid by the tenant?—The tithe is paid by the landlord, but repaid by the tenant, as you are aware. I may explain that the tithe on my farm was 7*l.* 17*s.* a year; now it is 4*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* There has been 40 per cent. reduction, I believe, in the tithe.

17,174. It is paid in the first instance by the landlord?—According to the present law. Some landlords pay the tithe. I believe Mr. Mainwaring pays all the tithes for some of his tenants.

Chairman.

17,175. You say rates have greatly increased?—They have.

Chairman—continued.

17,176. And the average size of farms is from 50 to 60 acres?—Yes. When I say rates have increased I mean there are now new rates, and they have in the district a very bad system of appointing road surveyors. The district is divided into what you might call several districts; they have about 10 or 12 surveyors when one would be far better and would also keep the road in far better repair. If they were to appoint one man and pay him it would lessen the rate very considerably indeed. The present is a very expensive way of keeping roads in repair in rural places, because there is shedding here and shedding there, and the farmer is taken from his agricultural work and great loss to himself results.

17,177. Then you say no consolidations have taken place?—No, none to my knowledge.

17,178. What is the population?—From 1,000 to 1,100, but it has decreased considerably.

17,179. Is there any sub-letting?—Little or no sub-letting is done, and when done the tenants have the advantage.

17,180. Then you think the large holders are the best farmers?—They are.

17,181. They stand the depression best?—They do.

17,182. Then as to the state of cultivation and the nature of farming pursued, what is it?—Cattle and sheep breeding.

17,183. You do not want any labour at all at harvest time?—Well, yes, we do. We require labour certainly.

17,184. But you have no scarcity of labour?—No scarcity of labour except at harvest time. The men after harvest time are obliged to leave because there is nothing else to do. The farmer does not go on cultivating his land, unfortunately, whereas cultivation ought to be going on. You cannot keep the rural population on the land unless you employ them.

17,185. Do you consider the hedges and ditches are kept properly?—No, I do not. They are kept very improperly.

17,186. Is there any land going out of cultivation, or being insufficiently cultivated in your district?—No.

17,187. To what extent has waste land been reclaimed by tenants in your district within living memory?—Very little.

17,188. Is there much land still waste which is capable of profitable reclamation, e.g., by ploughing up rough land?—Yes, any quantity. Some of the best land in the whole of Wales is in this district if it were only cultivated; it could be brought into cultivation by draining and employing labour upon it, and it would pay well. I have myself on my own farm brought land into cultivation that was not worth 6*d.* an acre, and it is now worth 30*s.* an acre, which has been brought about by draining and cultivating.

17,189. Has there been any considerable change in the nature of the agriculture pursued in your district within the last 50 years; for instance, in the way of arable land being laid down in pasture?—Very little change.

Chairman—continued.

17,190. There has been a slight increase of root crops?—Yes, too slight.

17,191. No fallowing?—No.

17,192. And on the whole farming is improved, you say?—Yes.

17,193. Who does the draining?—The draining is done by the owner, and sometimes pipes are given to the tenant for him to drain.

17,194. The tenants, I suppose, do not do much improvements?—Very little—too little.

17,195. Do the landlords give the tenants pipes?—They do.

17,196. And the tenants cut drains and lay the pipes?—Yes, but unfortunately they do not keep the mouths of the drains open. They let them go out of repair.

17,197. In the case of improvements partly or wholly effected by a tenant, is there any compensation obtainable in your district by agreement between landlord and tenant?—I am not aware of any.

17,198. Do you know of instances where either party contracts out of the operation of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes. On the estate of the late Honourable R. Cavendish notice was given to contract out of the Act in February 1876.

17,199. Do farmers often apply for their landlord's written consent for specific improvements under the Agricultural Holdings Acts?—I am not aware of any on this estate. I have never been applied to on behalf of the landlord.

17,200. What about the custom of the country in your district as to growing crops?—There are no growing crops on land in this neighbourhood, except just the herbage, when the tenant comes in on the 25th of March.

17,201. What is the custom as to manure and produce remaining at the expiration of the tenancy?—The produce is generally sold to go off the land.

17,202. The manure generally becomes the property of the incoming tenant, of course?—Yes.

17,203. Then as to permanent improvements?—Very little, if any, are done.

17,204. What is the custom as to the liabilities of a tenant as to mode of cultivation, dilapidations, and sale of produce?—Sale of produce is allowed. The agreement is made according to the custom of the country.

17,205. Have any cases occurred in your district where an outgoing tenant has failed to obtain sufficient compensation for his improvements?—None to my knowledge.

17,206. You do not know of any instances where compensation has been given for the general improved condition of a holding, and not simply for specific improvements?—No.

17,207. And you say there is no right recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of their interests in their holdings to any solvent tenant to whom the landlord shall not have any reasonable objection?—No, I do not know of any.

17,208. What is the custom as to the sale of the sheep on "sheep farms" by an outgoing tenant to an incoming tenant or to the landlord?—It is to the advantage of the outgoing tenant to sell his sheep to the incoming tenant, because he gets a better price. Sheep are of greater value on the land than if sold in the open market. Notwithstanding this, however, unfortunately some tenants will take the sheep off the land, and they get less value accordingly.

17,209. What have you to say as to game preserving?—The landlord preserves the game. The tenants have the ground game.

17,210. Do tenants generally avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act?—Yes.

17,211. The tenants shoot hares and rabbits?—Yes.

17,212. You say there is no damage done by the game to the crops and pastures?—No damage. There is not much game, in fact. There are, of course, some partridges, but game is not preserved to a great extent in this country.

17,213. Are the tenants expected to beat coverts, &c. when the landlords go out shooting?—No.

17,214. How does game preserving otherwise affect cultivation?—All good farmers that I have known like to see game on their farm to a reasonable extent, and it proves good farming too, I think.

17,215. You say the relations between landlord and tenant are very good, and the same as to the labourers and the public generally?—Yes.

17,216. Is the law of trespass satisfactory?—Yes.

17,217. You do not know who exercises sporting rights over Crown lands and commons?—No.

17,218. What attention is being paid in your district to fruit culture?—None.

17,219. To horticulture, including market gardening?—None.

17,220. And to forestry?—Very little.

17,221. And to poultry farming and bee keeping?—None. A great deal could be done in this way if it were tried and benefit would result.

17,222. No instruction is given in butter and cheese making?—No, none.

17,223. Nor in field experiments, or in anything else?—No. I believe there is a certain sum now put by; we hope this will come, but nothing has been done as yet.

Mr. Grove.

17,224. You mean by the county council, I suppose?—By the county council.

Chairman.

17,225. Then what do you say about the way in which railway rates affect facilities for the carriage and disposal of agricultural produce. You say you would like to see a railway made from Corwen to Bettws y Coed?—I would. The whole neighbourhood would be greatly benefited by it. We have now only a traction engine, which, however, has benefited the farmers very considerably indeed. In fact, they are now better able to attend to the land, with fewer horses, and the cost of haulage, I should think, is reduced at least 2*s.* or 3*s.* a ton to the neighbourhood. It has been very, very beneficial indeed, but I am sorry to say that the County Council now are going to take action against the owners of this traction engine, which, in my opinion, has done a great deal of good to the road. I have myself been surveyor of these Holyhead roads in parts. Having been overseer for two succeeding years, and acted as road surveyor in the county, I can speak as to the state of the roads. If the County Council win their case, a very heavy loss to the parish will result.

Mr. Grove.

17,226. Upon what ground are they bringing the action?—On the ground of damage done to the roads by extraordinary traffic. The traffic there is not as great as it was 40 or 50 years ago. I remember before the time the traction engine came on the road that in driving to Corwen, I have got into ruts on the road, and feared that the axle of my trap would be broken, but now, I am glad to say, I do not find a single rut in it, because the traction engine levels it.

Chairman.

17,227. Then are there any instances of co-operation or sharing of profits and risks between landlord and tenant, or between employers and employed?—No.

17,228. Is there any co-operation among farmers for purchasing or analysing farmstuffs, such as manures?—No. That is a thing very much overlooked in this country. If there were such co-operation, farmers would be much benefited. I consider this is one of the most important branches of farming and requires great care and experience. I am very sorry to say that the farmers in our district very often look at the cost of the seeds. My experience of farming is that the best seeds are the cheapest. I may tell the Commission that I am continually valuing and assessing damage after fire both in England and Wales: I used to be formerly in Liverpool. I was once called upon to assess the loss by fire at a manure manufactory, and greater rubbish I never found in my life than the manure which was turned out there. Mind you, I am not speaking as to all, but of this particular place—I am not going to name it, of course—greater rubbish I never saw put upon land.

Chairman—continued.

It is a great pity that the farmers do not procure the best manure, the best seeds, and at the best prices; it is cheapest in the long run.

Mr. Grove.

17,229. Was that manure analysed chemically?—I had to do that as assessor of the fire loss. I am speaking now of what I saw there prepared to put on land, knowing, as a farmer myself, that it was of no earthly use, and I say, farmers in this country ought to join together and deal with a respectable firm to get the very best material and the very best seeds. That is the only way to get on in farming.

17,230. To what extent, if at all, do farmers insure their stock, crops, implements, or buildings?—The farmers in this parish mostly insure their stock and produce. The landlords insure the buildings. In this parish of Cerrig y Druidion the farmers used formerly, when a fire happened, go from one neighbour to another and beg for help, but now they generally insure their stock and the landlords insure the buildings.

Chairman.

17,231. Then I will ask you as to the general condition of the farming population. Are there in your district many peasant proprietors or small freeholders?—Very few indeed.

17,232. Their number has decreased?—Very much.

17,233. You say that farmers' wives work very hard?—They do work very hard. I know of no women who work harder than the farmers' wives, and it would be much better if farmers would exert themselves as much as their wives. They work very hard from morning till night. First, they go and milk the cows and prepare the milk, then they prepare the breakfast for the men; after that they prepare the food for the calves, and so on throughout the whole day. I know of no farmers' wives in any part of England or Wales who work harder than the Welsh farmers' wives.

17,234. What is your opinion with reference to the children on the farms?—They do work upon the farms, but it would be much better to send them away from home. I should like to impress that upon the Commissioners, because they say that children work at home without wages. Admitting they do, supposing a farmer has a son whom he wishes should succeed him on the farm, let him keep that one at home and send the others down to England, when they are 16 or 18 years of age, to gain information there as to farming, and if they want to return to their own country (as we Welshmen are all very glad to return to our country), they will return with experience and be better farmers. That is my opinion.

17,235. Thank you; all your evidence is very similar to that which we have had before. I may say it coincides with all we have heard?—Very well, then I suppose I may be right. I should like to state, with regard to the amount of the labourers' wages, that they vary. I paid 15*s.* and 16*s.* per week, the men finding their own food and lodgings. Team men get from 18*l.* to 25*l.* per annum and their keep. Then with regard to the chief fluctuations in wages during the last 50 years, farm wages 50 years ago were 4*s.* 6*d.* per week and keep, they are now 7*s.* to 9*s.* per week and keep. Harvest wage 50 years ago was 9*s.* per week, and now it is 22*s.* to 24*s.* per week, the keep included in both instances. I should like, if you would permit me, to say this as to the farmers' daughters in Wales, and the farmers too. In this parish the matter is rather a serious one, viz., cooking, which is very little understood indeed amongst them. The medical men there have told me this, that it often happened the patients really did not require medical attendance at all; all they wanted was a little kitchen medicine, and he said, "I can assure you, Mr. Jones, I have often "to cook food fit to give an invalid myself, "because the people here do not understand how "to make even a little soup, or anything else "suitable for an invalid." I say it would be much better for the farmers' daughters to go from home to England. In the case of those who have gone and have returned home, you can see the improvement in their houses and in their cleanliness and tidiness.

17,236. That is valuable information. Can you tell us about the principal causes of depression?—There is a great deal of importation of foreign live stock and corn which acts most injuriously against the farmers in this country.

17,237. What do you suggest are the remedies?—With regard to the remedies, I think transfer of land ought to be made very much cheaper as things are, far too much goes amongst the lawyers. First of all, there are the procuration fees, and then they go on with their letters and all that sort of thing, and the poor farmer, if he buys his own farm, has to pay very, very dearly for his conveyancing.

17,238. Too dear for it?—Too dear, in my opinion. I think that transfer of land ought to be very considerably cheapened by Government, and it would be very much better for the freeholders of Wales and the farmers. Men here who save a little money, and buy a little land, ought to have it at a less cost of transfer than they do now. It is something terrible as matters stand.

17,239. Then with regard to the general relations between landlord and tenant, they are friendly?—They are very good.

17,240. Can you tell us how much money has been spent on the estate in repairs?—They have spent in my time there about 1,100*l.*

17,241. There are nine farms on the estate?—Yes.

17,242. And you do not charge any interest?—No interest at all.

17,243. You have got three families that have been there for 70 years?—Yes. Do you wish to see the agreement? I have a copy of the agreement between landlord and tenant if you would like to see it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

17,244. Mr. Jones, with regard to the enclosed land which you spoke of, were the enclosures made under the Enclosure Acts?—Yes, they were made under the Enclosure Acts. I had not anything to do with it.

17,245. Then can you give us any reason why the land which you say is reclaimable has not been brought under cultivation?—Well, a great deal more might be made out of the land than is made now, and I think greater industry on the part of the farmer in a greater measure is required. A great deal of time is lost in going to fairs and markets which ought to be spent at home. If the Welsh farmers were to read more of the agricultural papers it would pay them much better than going from fair to fair and market to market, and they would have more time to remain at home with their men.

17,246. Is there much land uncultivated?—There is a great deal of land here that may be brought into cultivation.

17,247. Where is that land?—Part is close to the village of Cerrig.

17,248. Can you suggest any better system by which that land could be profitably worked?—It wants labour upon it. It wants draining and cultivation. That is what it wants, nothing else. It would make some of the best grazing land; in fact I used to let grazing land to farmers from near Bala from May to November.

17,249. Can you suggest any better system by which that land could be brought into cultivation?—More labour upon it, that is all. There is plenty of land here, and plenty to keep the labourers employed too, and besides, it would keep the labourers at home. The labourers would be employed after harvest time. As things are after the harvest is over, the labourers are put on one side, they are not wanted, and when the farmer wants them again he cannot get them.

17,250. Do you suggest that a greater security of tenure would result in this land being cultivated?—I really cannot say. I have offered leases and they refused to take them. They prefer to be tenants from year to year.

17,251. You spoke of two leases, did you not?—The only lease I had was with one farmer. He was the best farmer in the country, a man named Edwards, and he farmed a farm belonging to a charity of my late uncle, who presented it to the parish for the support of a girls and infants' school.

17,252. Were they two in number?—They were two in number.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

17,253. Were they repairing leases? Who did the repairs?—The landlord, certainly.

17,254. For what length of time were they? Do you mind telling me?—Seven and 14 years. One lessee bought his farm, but that was near Corwen.

Mr. Grove.

17,255. You speak of reclaiming land, and making land that is worth 1*s.* an acre now worth 30*s.* per acre?—I do. I have done it myself.

17,256. How much per acre did you expend in reclaiming that land, about?—Well, I do not suppose, taking everything into consideration, that I spent 20*l.* an acre upon it.

17,257. So that as a matter of commercial speculation it would pay to do it?—Yes, pay well.

17,258 Now you say that there is a great deal of other land of the same kind that may be done in the same manner?—Yes.

17,259. Then who do you think should find the money to do that, the landlord or the tenant?—If the tenant was to take a lease upon it, he may do it, or his landlord. Some has been done, but I have never seen that the landlord has raised the tenants' rent for improving his land.

17,260. Then if there was to be fixity of tenure, you think it would be reasonable for the tenant to do it?—Yes, if he had a lease—very reasonable.

17,261. You speak about the farmers going to fairs and markets rather more than you think they need. I suppose they must go to those places to buy and sell their produce, must they not?—True, when they have something to buy and sell. But I maintain that in Wales we are rather short of agricultural papers in the mother tongue. It would be much better if there were more. We have to be content with little papers, such as "Farm and Home" and "Farm and Fireside." It is a very nice little paper to read, and you can get much more information from that paper than by going 14 or 15 miles to market and spending 5*s.* or 10*s.* and wasting time. The farmer's time would be better spent at home, but at the same time he should go when he has business.

Mr. Griffiths.

17,262. I think you said that there is no change in the nature of the agriculture in the district?—In this neighbourhood there is not. One portion of this estate belonged to the old monks of Abergynolwyn, no improvements have been made there, and you can find the old marks still remaining, so it is evident that not much cultivation has taken place. As you can see, it is mostly sheep farming and cattle grazing.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

17,263. Have you any mowing machines?—Yes, there are one or two I think I know of.

17,264. And implements of all descriptions?—They are very backward with the use of implements. But there is another matter, I think, which should be mentioned, farmers ought to have more shedding for their cattle instead of cow ties. The open shedding is more profitable than the cow ties.

17,265. Have you ever considered how much more capital a farmer of the present day requires, owing to the improved implements, than 50 years ago?—Oh, yes; there is no doubt at all that the implements of husbandry now have improved farming very considerably, and the more implements that come into Wales the better it will be for the land. But the farmers require capital to get them, and they require proper houses to keep them in. Implements are very expensive things if there is no shed to keep them in the winter, when they are not wanted.

17,266. You say that there are no improvements made by the tenants? Do you not consider that drains being made, and pipes laid down, are improvements?—Yes, but there is very little done.

17,267. Is not that an improvement by the tenant?—Yes, but I think the landlord has done a great deal more than the tenants.

17,268. You say again that there are no growing crops? Will you explain that?—On the 25th of March, I mean.

17,269. At the expiration of the tenancy?—Yes, when the tenancy changes. I mean to say that there are unfortunately not much roots, and there are very few vetch crops. If there were more, it would be beneficial. I have found it very beneficial. I have grown cabbages in that part of the country which weighed 18 or 20 pounds apiece. Farmers should always grow some vetches, because you do not know how the season will turn out. Whenever it happened that I did not want them for early consumption, I used to harvest them for the winter feed, and there is nothing better.

17,270. Do you consider that farmers who have five or six sons grown up are in a position to place each of them on a farm in this neighbourhood?—I think the farmers' sons do very well. I can name some who are becoming joiners, masons, drapers, grocers, and clerks. I am speaking of their going from here to Liverpool. Many young lads have done well in Liverpool; and some have qualified as doctors and solicitors.

17,271. But I am speaking about the sons that are at home; do you think farmers are in a position to put each son, when they are at home, in separate farms?—I do not know whether they are in a position to do it. They do it.

17,272. You know such as have done so?—Oh, dear, yes. There are farmers' sons who have succeeded one another for generations.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

17,273. I see one of your remedies is protection. Do you think a Government now will be prevailed upon to introduce that question?—That is a matter for a Government. My opinion is that farmers must have some protection.

17,274. Can you tell me whether the farmers in this district buy more food than they sell, such as Indian corn and flour?—I am sorry to say there are thousands of tons of foreign food brought into the country. They sell their pigs now from 4½*d.* to 5*d.* a pound alive. They get American bacon, which a poor unfortunate labourer cannot get now under 8½*d.* a pound. I remember the time when a farmer used to kill his own pigs and sell the food to the workmen. It would be much better for the farmer and much better for the workman to do so instead of paying the carriage for all this stuff, which is imported from America; they should consume their own produce which is now sold off the land. There is another matter I wish to mention, viz., the housing of the men and women.

17,275. Is the housing insufficient, or what do you wish to say about it?—Very insufficient indeed. The farm servants generally sleep outside above the cattle and horses. I am afraid there are some farmers who could house them on the premises, but who make a point of sending them out of doors. In my journeys in Wales fire assessing (I am not now speaking of this parish), I have seen the farmer's servants sleeping in a stable over cattle, the floor was not even boarded, it was just merely rough wood with straw over, and a few boards for the men to stand on. It is a disgrace to humanity that men are obliged to sleep in such places. But I know also in the neighbourhood I have mentioned of proper places for men to sleep in, why the men will and do go outside, whether they prefer it or not, I am unable to say, but they do it. A very unfortunate accident occurred about 18 months ago—in 1891 I think it was—at a farm about three miles from the village. A poor girl had been shot dead by a young man who was loitering about the place at night. I happened to be on the coroner's jury, and it was a pity to see her, poor young thing! The lad and his companions had been loitering about the place at night for some time; the farmer came to me to complain, and said, "Mr. Jones, I "have no peace either night or day." He said, "A lot of men come here from other farms at "night; they run my carts and barrows over "the walls, and let the cattle out, and now I "positively can get no sleep at night." "Well," I said, "why?" He said, "They come here "after the girls." I said, "You farmers should "lock your doors at night. He said, "If we did "not allow the girls this custom we could nto "keep a servant in the place." I said, "You "ought to unite, everyone of you, and either "the master or the mistress of the house should "make it a rule to see that your servants are "properly housed and in their beds at a proper

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

"time at night." This farmer was subjected to continual annoyance by these young men loitering about his farm. A very good police officer, who is now at Wrexham, was sent there, with the result that several men were summoned for trespassing at night and letting out the farmer's cattle. They were bound over for 12 months, and I suppose the farmer has been better off since then.

Professor Rhŷs.

17,276. What parish is this in?—The parish of Cerrig y Druidion where this poor girl was shot. One of the lads who had a gun with him stood by the window, and wanted the girls to let him in. It was Spring time, and a great many lambs, it was rumoured, had been killed by dogs. These two lads (they were only boys) had borrowed guns to go out with the intention, as they said, of shooting the dogs. However, they made for this farm, and got to this poor girl's window. The girl opened the window and put her head down in this way (illustrating) to talk to him, when by some means the young man shot her dead. I cannot say it was wilfully done, but I know the other servants told the doctor (this did not come before the jury) that the boy had remarked that if the girl did not come down and let him in, he would shoot her, but whether he intended to do so or not I cannot tell you. It is time these horrible things should be put an end to.

17,277. You would not say that they usually carry about guns when they go to see the girls?—No; I only say in this instance.

17,278. You attribute their going about at night in that way to the fact that there is no control kept over them by the farmer?—Yes; I think a farmer ought to control his hands, and particularly women. I never asked my labourers on the farm to work excepting from 6 to 6, but then they worked while they were at it; other labourers work longer hours, from 5 o'clock in the morning till 6, 7, or 8 at night. Men cannot work all these long hours, neither can the poor servant girls. It is only natural that girls should want to go to shops to buy something or other sometimes. They are never allowed out in the afternoon, and they must therefore go to the shop in the village at night, and we know what happens when the girls go out at this time.

17,279. Can the farmer exercise proper control over the farm servants? Has he got accommodation to have them sleeping within doors?—I know some who have, and the farm servants sleep out.

17,280. Whose fault is it, do you think?—It is the fault of both. I think the farmer ought to keep, and the landlord ought to provide, sufficient accommodation for the men servants to sleep inside the farm-houses.

17,281. Does the landlord provide sleeping accommodation?—If there is no such accommodation the landlord ought to.

17,282. I want to know what there is?—Well, there is, as I told you, on some farms, and on some there may not be.

17,283. But on some there is sufficient accommodation?—Yes.

17,284. And even there the farm servants do not sleep in the house?—No.

17,285. So that it is the custom of the district for them to sleep in the outhouses?—Yes, mostly.

17,286. And you think that is to be deplored?—It is very much to be deplored.

17,287. For various reasons?—No labourer ever slept in my place. I paid them by the day. I paid my men 15*s.* or 16*s.* a week, and they found their own food and lodging.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Watkin recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

17,288. You have been before us twice?—Yes, my lord.

17,289. We are extremely anxious to give you every facility and to do everything in our power, but we must call your attention to the fact that there are a great many witnesses as well as yourself to be called, and that therefore we shall have to confine you entirely to what you wish to rebut?—Yes, my lord.

17,290. Will you please keep yourself as closely to the point as possible, and confine your evidence to any statement which you think it necessary, in the public interest and for the public good, to rebut. We will take no further information about the estate or upon any general matter?—Certainly.

17,291. You wish to rebut the evidence of Mr. Robert Owen Jones given at Pwllheli?—Yes. As to his statement that when he went to live at the house I commenced to repair it, but did not complete the work owing to Mr. Huddart's death, this is not the fact. Mr. Huddart died on the 1st February 1885, about two months before Jones entered upon his tenancy. I promised Jones to do certain repairs which he considered necessary, and he said that, as he had himself been a master builder and contractor, he could do them cheaper than anyone else. When he paid his rent in January 1886 I allowed 9*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, the amount of his brother's bill, for repairs, and also 4*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.* for work done to the house by Jones himself. In subsequent years I allowed him the following sums in respect of repairs done by him or under his supervision :—

Chairman—continued.

1888 - -	2	0	0
1889 - -	2	14	0
1890 - -	13	14	5

I have the bills here for those repairs, which I took from him as cash on the rent days. I will produce them, if necesary.

17,292. Yes, produce them ? (Witness handed in bills).—During those years I also paid about 18*l.* for materials for the repair of the house. As to the land adjoining Plas yn Penrhyn House, let to Jones, it is not the fact that he was charged 80*l.* a year rent in respect of it, nor is it the fact that land was taken away from him without any reduction in the rent being made. Then I produce copies from the rent book, slips for each half year, which show you the regular course of things from the date he went there till he left. (Witness handed in slips.)

17,293. Then you say he paid 57*l.* and afterwards 69*l.*, and not 80*l.* Is that so ?—That is so, my lord. In 1885, when he became tenant, he was charged at the rate of 57*l.* a year. After the sale of part of Mr. Huddart's property, 10 acres 3 roods 21 perches were taken away from him, and 17 acres 2 roods 28 perches were added to his holding. The rent was raised to 69*l.*, that is to say, 12*l.* added in respect of the additional 6 acres 3 roods 7 perches of land. The landlord paid all rates and outgoings in respect of the land, and I do not consider the rent excessive, as it is good land and situated near the town of Portmadoc. After 1887 no land was taken away from Mr. Jones, and he continued as tenant to March last. It is a fact that a pond on the land was included in the lot sold to Mr. Haigh and taken from Jones's holding, but I consider that there was still enough water on the land for Jones's purposes. There has always been an unfailing supply of water in a well close to the house, and the present tenant, by simply cutting a trench on the land, has not only supplied his own stock during the recent great drought, but has been able also to supply his neighbours with water.

17,294. Was any reduction made in the rent because this pond was taken away ?—No, the water was taken. I produce a letter from the present tenant to show there is sufficient water there.

17,295. Do you deny that the tenant had to carry water in a tank for a quarter of a mile ? —I do not know anything about it.

17,296. Do you deny he had to pay 13*s.* to the waterworks ?—I do not know anything about it. What I maintain is that there is sufficient water on the premises.

17,297. But you do not deny that he had to pay 13*s.* rent to the waterworks for water to give to his cattle ?—I do not know about that.

Chairman—continued.

17,298. You say there was enough water, and he says there was not ; that is what it comes to ? —Yes.

17,299. And he says that he had to pay 13*s.* rent for the water from the waterworks to water his cattle ?—Yes. There is a letter from the present tenant. (Witness handed in letter.)

17,300. The present tenant states in the letter that "at one time the well was getting "rather low, but I made it deeper, and there "was a plentiful supply after that for my "cattle." At the time before the well was deepened the late tenant says that he had to pay 13*s.* a quarter rent to the Portmadoc waterworks ?—Yes ; it is only deepened about 18 inches, that is all, my lord. It is true that Jones complained that the rent was high, but it is not the fact that I advised him to continue tenant. On the contrary, I told him that I had no power to reduce the rent, but if he gave up the tenancy I would, after receiving notice to quit, see what the trustees would do for him. So far from desiring him to continue tenant during the last year, I told him that as he did not pay rent he must leave. As to Mr. Jones's statement with regard to the negotiations between him and Mr. Randall Casson, it is not the fact that, owing to my not carrying out my promise, the arrangement fell through. On the contrary, I was very glad that Mr. Casson's client was likely to take the house. I promised to meet his requirements in every way so as to secure the tenant. Mr. Casson afterwards informed me that his client had taken a house which suited her better. I will produce a letter from Mr. Casson to me, dated 22nd September 1893, bearing out my statement. (Witness handed in letter.) I would state generally that I have not in any way treated R. O. Jones harshly. As before stated, I spent considerable sums (considering the rent) in repairing the house, and I did not press for punctual payment of the rent. In March last he owed 492*l.* 14*s.* for arrears of rent, and I agreed with him to accept 120*l.* in discharge, on the understanding that he would give up the premises on the 1st March 1893. During the eight years that R. O. Jones occupied the house and land he paid (including sums allowed for repairs) 555*l.*, or at the rate of 70*l.* a year. The rent did not ruin him as he did not pay it. When he paid the 120*l.*, which I accepted in discharge of 492*l.* 14*s.*, he retained the whole of his stock, and also the furniture in the house. I have no means of ascertaining what he received for the stock and furniture, but I have been informed that he had a good balance after paying the 120*l* I am informed that he is now tenant of a farm called Plas Canol, under Mr. Haigh, at the rent of 45*l.* a year. Since R. O. Jones left in March 1893 the house of Plas yn Penrhyn has been re-roofed, but the work was not completed in time to let the premises for the summer season. With regard to Jones's statement that the land he occupied has since been let at a reduced rent, the fact is that it has been let to Mr. John Owen at 70*l.* a year, which is 1*l.* a year more than the rent at which it was let to R. O. Jones. As to the land let to Evan Griffith and William Williams, to which Jones referred, the former rent was 20*l.* They had impoverished the land by carrying away the crops, and not bringing back any manure. I let it at the reduced rent of 16*l.* to the present tenant, who runs a coach and keeps horses, as I believed he would improve the land.

17,301. Then it comes to this; he says he owed 600*l.*, you say he owed 550*l.*?—He said himself in his evidence that it was so.

17,302. Then he was sold up?—Yes.

17,303. And you got for the 600*l.* that you had allowed him to go into debt 120*l.*, and he was left with his furniture and 10*l.* and a cow that he had not paid for?—He had his live stock besides, and his furniture.

17,304. Was not that seized too and sold up?—I sold up everything for him.

17,305. You sold up everything he had in the world?—No. I produce the agreement. (Handing in agreement.)

17,306. I think that is what he said before?—He said 600*l.* I never said that.

17,307. You said 550*l.*?—I said upwards of 550*l.*; it was 492*l.* 14*s.*

17,308. You say 492*l.* 14*s.* He says 600*l.*; everything was sold?—No, I said I got 120*l.* from him.

17,309. You sold everything he had?—I sold everything to him for 120*l.* That is what it is.

17,310. You got 120*l.* instead of 492*l.* 14*s.*?—You see by the agreement that it is so.

17,311. Do you mean to say that the tenant had 120*l.*?—He paid the solicitors 120*l.*, and he got the things.

17,312. Do you mean to say that the tenant went away with 120*l.* in his pocket?—No, I do not mean to say that. My belief is that he had a great deal more.

17,313. Who got the 120*l.*; did he get it or did you get it?—I got 120*l.*

17,314. And what did the tenant go out of the farm with?—He went away with his things. That was part of the agreement. If you read the agreement you will see that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

17,315. Who had the stock?—He had the stock.

Chairman.

17,316. How much stock was there on the farm?—I have not got the list; but the solicitors had it. It is more a matter of the solicitors. I believe he said he had got 110*l.* for his live stock. Then he had his furniture; it is a large house and very well furnished. I knew that I was sacrificing a good deal. He made an assignment of all his goods.

17,317. That is what he says, Mr. Watkin. He is asked: "How much did the stock realise?" He says, "110*l.* on the whole bill of sale"?—

Chairman—continued.

That is what he meant for the live stock. He sold the live stock in October, and then he sold his furniture in March. He had a two days' sale in March, my lord. I may add this, that he got the solicitors to write; he wanted to go on afterwards—after last March—and wrote to the trustees as well, and wanted to go on with the place, but I would not allow him to.

[The interpreter was here directed to proceed to another room in order to translate into Welsh the evidence given above by Mr. Wm. Watkin to Mr. Robert Owen Jones.]

See 17,4

17,318. Now we will go to the next witness you wish to rebut?—As to the statement of Mr. John Thomas Jones at Pwllheli on the 19th September 1893, that I gave notices to quit to Robert Roberts, Caellobrith, and John Thomas, Broneifion, for political reasons, this statement is untrue. Those farms belonged to the late Mr. Ellis Anwyl Owen, who himself signed the notices to quit. He required the land for the purpose of offering it for sale by auction. The land was offered for sale in small lots, and portions were sold. I may state that I received a letter from Mr. Anwyl Owen, about the time of the election of 1868 from Jersey, stating that if he came to England he would vote for the Liberal candidate, and it was not likely that he would eject his tenants for voting for that candidate. I produce that letter. I may say that Mr. Ellis Anwyl Owen was a Liberal in politics, only he was against the Irish Disestablishment.

See 11, and below.

17,319. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones:—"When did the sale "of the land take place?"—In 1872, my lord. They could not go on with it at the time. The tenants thought of obtaining the land, and to prove it, Robert Roberts, one of them was in the house till 1871. I produce the receipt for the money which I paid for fixtures, &c. at the house. He left in 1871.

17,320. "Do you know whether letters sent "to you and to Mr. Huddart were not replied "to?"—I do not know anything of any letters he may have sent to Mr. Huddart. That is not the question with regard to this.

17,321. "What was the amount of rent due "when the bill of sale was made in 1892?"—It was less by 119*l.*: the 119*l.* was not due when the bill of sale was made. It was 492*l.* 14*s.*, less 119*l.*: that was the amount due then when the bill of sale was made in October or November 1892.

17,322. "Is the document produced, the bill of "sale?"—I believe that is the agreement. The bill of sale was made in April 1892. That bill of sale was made then, if it was a bill of sale.

17,323. Is this the bill of sale?—No, that is the agreement when I sold him the things.

17,324. Have you got the bill of sale?—No, I have never seen the bill of sale, if it was a bill of sale. It is in the hands of the solicitors, but I got the agreement. I have handed the agreement to you. You asked me a question about when the sale took place.

Chairman—continued.

17,325. Do you wish to state anything more?—Then John Thomas was till his death in this place. I produce the notice to quit which was given a little before the sale, signed by Mr. Ellis Anwyl Owen himself. I never signed a notice to quit to any of Mr. Anwyl Owen's tenants in my life. (Witness handed in notice to quit.)

17,326. Who do you say signed these notices to quit?—Mr. Ellis Anwyl Owen himself, the landlord.

Chairman—continued.

17,327. The landlord signed the notices to quit?—Yes, in fact I acted more as a friend than an agent for him. We were brought up close together.

17,328. That is all you wish to say on the subject?—Yes.

Mr. JOHN THOMAS JONES recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

17,329. What do you wish to state?—In reference to the evidence which has just been given by Mr. Wm. Watkin, I should say Mr. Watkin was the agent; the landlord was in Jersey, a long way off, and did not interfere in the election of 1868 at all. He was quite willing that his tenants should do as they liked, and they did vote Liberal, as they intended. By the support given them by a friend of Mr. Anwyl Owen there, Robert Roberts, Port madoc, went to fetch them, and they had free liberty to vote Liberal as they intended. But I emphasize again what I stated at Pwllheli that Mr. Watkin sent his man Griffith Roberts to these two tenants to say that, unless they voted with him there were others willing to take their farms. I have seen the widow of Robert Roberts since, and she tells me the same, that those were the words, and Robert Roberts was not allowed to stop on the farm; he was not allowed to bid for the farm, but he was allowed to be there for one year only, till he got a house, and I believe he did take two fields by auction. Robert Roberts felt this to the day of his death, and gave the agent, not his master, cause to turn him out. The estate of Caellobrith is not sold yet, but it was put up for auction and has not been sold.

17,330. I do not want to interrupt you, but all you want to say is that:—"After the election "of 1868 the tenants of Broneifion and Caello- "brith had notice to quit from the landlord, and "the night before the election the agent sent "his head man to them both to say that unless "they voted with him they would have to leave "as others were bidding for the farms"?—That is correct.

Chairman—continued.

17,331. And that has been denied by Mr. Watkin?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

17,332. May I ask one question? Was the land put up for sale?—Yes.

17,333. Was any of it sold?—Caellobrith was not sold at the auction, but it has been sold since.

17,334. Mr. Watkin's contention was that notice to quit was given on account of their wishing to sell?—The general opinion is the reverse; the general opinion is that it was done on political grounds.

Chairman.

17,335. Mr. Watkin says it was not so and you say it was so. That is all you wish to say?—Yes.

17,336. There is one question put in by Mr. Watkin: "Did Robert Roberts remain till 1871 on his farm"?—He remained there one year, as I said, after he received notice that he was to leave.

Lord Kenyon.

17,337. After the notice expired?—Yes, after the notice expired; the notice expired, say, the 20th March or May; he was allowed to be there a year after that.

17,338. One year's grace?—One year's grace.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ROBERT JONES called and examined.

Chairman.

17,339. You are a land agent at Festiniog, are you not?—Yes.

17,340. What district do you give evidence for?—For Trawsfynydd, Llanfachreth, Llanelltyd, Llanfair, Llanbedr, and Llandanwg parishes, all in the county of Merioneth.

17,341. To which estate does your evidence particularly refer?—Mr. R. H. Wood's estate alone, for which I am agent.

17,342. What is the acreage?—The acreage is 4,680.

Chairman—continued.

17,343. And the estate is unencumbered?—Yes.

17,344. No fines are charged on admission?—No.

17,345. And the sheep runs are let with the land?—Yes.

17,346. Then, of course, the sheep walks are considered part and parcel of the farm?—Yes.

17,347. And as to the general condition of the sheep farming, I suppose you say the same as everybody else has said?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

17,348. We have heard a great deal about that?—Yes.

17,349. Mr. Wood lives a great deal amongst his tenants?—Yes, especially during the summer.

17,350. You never interfere in reference to politics or religion?—No.

17,351. Have you been trained as an agent?—I have been trained as a farmer; I know stock dealing.

17,352. And you are accustomed to sheep and cattle?—Yes, I have been all my lifetime.

17,353. The usual date of entry is the 25th of March?—Yes.

17,354. And they are yearly tenancies?—Yes, all.

17,355. Have any cases of hardship arisen to your knowledge?—Yes.

17,356. Can you tell us anything about that?—Sometimes there have been cases of hardship through long severe illness, and the landlord, in many cases to my knowledge, stepped forward and paid the doctors' bills and so on, to tide them over those difficulties.

17,357. What are the usual conditions of tenancy?—Yearly.

17,358. Will you give us a copy of your agreement?—That is the agreement. (Handing agreement.)

17,359. You have no oppressive clauses, have you?—No, not a single clause that I am aware of, at any rate.

17,360. You explain to the tenants what they have to sign?—Yes, always.

17,361. In Welsh?—In Welsh if they require it.

17,362. What is the rent?—From 5*s.* to 15*s.* an acre. Most grazing farms do not let higher than 5*s.*, and the arable not over 15*s.* or 16*s.* at the most.

17,363. What is the usual rent of land in your district?—Sheep and pasture from 5*s.* to 8*s.* per acre, and arable from 12*s.* to 16*s.*

17,364. Can you tell us what other services besides the payment of rent are rendered by tenants in respect of their farms? Have tenants to beat covers or to haul? Are there any services besides the payment of rent demanded from the tenants?—No, nothing whatever.

17,365. Have rents been raised generally or in individual cases on your estate within the last 50 years?—No, not on our estate, but many have been lowered, and on account of that I have a little rebutting evidence to put in.

17,366. Against whom is it?—Against Richard Roberts, who gave evidence at Barmouth. I have had a copy of it from the Commissioners. See 9341*a*.

17,367. Have you got his evidence?—Yes.

17,368. What have you to say about that?—Well, I understand that he was misinformed. He stated that the rents on Mr. Wood's estate were raised, but the fact is that they were all lowered, and that makes a deal of difference.

Chairman—continued.

17,369. He mentioned several farms?—Yes. I can state those. They are Bryn Crwn, which he says was raised from 40*l.* to 47*l.* The truth is, that was lowered from 45*l.* to 35*l.*

Lord Kenyon.

17,370. It is now 35*l.*?—It is now 35*l.* Mr. Wood never received more than 35*l.* for it. Tyddyn sais, he says, was raised from 40*l.* to 50*l.* The truth is, it was lowered from 50*l.* to 42*l.* Bryn maenllwyd, he says, was raised from 45*l.* to 57*l.* That again was lowered from 60*l.* to 45*l.* Bryn y gath from 44*l.* to 70*l.*, he says. The truth about that, is that the tenant himself, in selling the lease to Mr. Wood, valued that farm at 70*l.*, and he paid it during his lifetime.

Chairman.

17,371. Was it 44*l.* originally?—I do not know anything about the 44*l.*

Lord Kenyon.

17,372. It was the tenant's valuation, was it not?—It was the tenant's valuation in selling his lease, and after the tenant died, two years ago, the widow complained, and it was lowered to her from 70*l.* to 60*l.*

17,373. It is 60*l.* now, is it?—60*l.* now, with 20 per cent. abatement as well. The same abatement is given on all the farms.

17,374. There is one more which he mentioned, Pantglas?—Pantglas, he said, was raised from 80*l.* to 130*l.* When I first came there it was 140*l.*, and it was reduced to 130*l.*, and then it was reduced to 120*l.* It is 120*l.* now, and 20 per cent. abatement as well. That is all about that. He admits that he was misinformed, so there will be no quarrel about that.

Chairman.

17,375. Are there any permanent reductions on your estate or temporary abatements?—There have been permanent reductions on the farms named, and 20 per cent. abatements. There was 25 per cent. abatement in 1886, 1887, and 1888, and 20 per cent. in 1892 and 1893, and I suppose it will be the same for the current year again.

17,376. When rents are raised or reduced, do you re-value the estate?—No, it is only done by the landlord, his agents and tenants, consideration being taken of the prices of sheep and cattle.

17,377. As to the chief fluctuations in prices, we have heard a great deal, and I do not think we need trouble you about that. Then rents fall due on March 25th and on September the 29th, do they not?—Yes.

17,378. When are they paid?—They are usually paid from May the 12th to the 24th, and November the 12th to the 30th.

Chairman—continued.

17,379. You have nothing very much to say about the preferential claim. We have heard a great deal about that?—No.

17,380. Then the tithes are paid in the ordinary way, and the taxes as well. Can you tell us anything about the average size of farms in the district?—The average size of farms in my district is not very easy to tell, but as a rule I find them from 100 to 400 acres, but I know of many from 50 to 80 acres.

17,381. What is the state of cultivation and the nature of farming pursued?—Trawsfynydd, Llanfachreth, and Llanelltyd are mostly for hay and pasture, but wheat and barley are grown at Llandanwg and Llanfair, &c.

17,382. I suppose the landlord makes the wire fences and walls as a rule, does he not?—Yes.

17,383. The farmer looks after the ditches and keeps them open?—Yes.

17,384. What improvements are made in your district? Who makes them? What does the landlord do?—The landlord makes all new buildings and repairs, providing gates and posts, pointing and fencing without charging interest.

17,385. Do the tenants do the haulage?—The tenants as a rule cart all materials, such as timber, slates, wire, lime, &c., from the railway station, but in many instances, such as Brynre Wern and Caerhys, Abergeirw, and Cwmbychan, and Pantglas partly, Mr. Wood does them himself.

17,386. He helps?—He helps in many instances.

17,387. Then the produce and manure is bought, I suppose, by the incoming tenant.—Yes.

17,388 And the permanent improvements?—The incoming tenant pays for all hay and straw not consumed after the 25th of March.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,389. Is it "not consumed after the 25th of March," or "before the 25th of March?"—Consumed after. Of course that is what I was thinking of; it is written down "after," because it is supposed the tenant is to consume all till the 25th of March, and what is left then the incoming tenant is to buy.

17,390. I think it should be "not consumed "before the 25th of March"?—Well, just as you please. It comes to the same thing in the end.

Chairman.

17,391. Then the custom as to the sale of sheep is the usual one, I suppose?—Yes, the incoming tenant has to buy all sheep bred on the land at a valuation, one on each side, and in case of disagreement an umpire is called in, whose decision shall be final, but I do not know of any case where an umpire was called in.

17,392. You can always manage it between the man who goes out and the man who comes in?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

17,393. Can you tell us anything about game preserving?—Mr. Wood lets the grouse and partridges on some farms, and allows the tenants to have all the rest. Of course the law allows it, but he allowed it before it became law.

17,394. Then you have no trouble about the game?—No trouble whatever.

17,395. Are the relations between landlord and tenant very good?—They cannot be better.

17,396. Is there any instruction given in butter and cheese making?—Yes. The county council undertook to send qualified women for the dairy to many centres in the county, and a great many availed themselves of the opportunity.

17,397. Have you anything to say as to the facilities for the carriage and disposal of agricultural produce?—No; I must say we consider the railways to be a great boon in our part. The Festiniog and Bala Railway brought facilities to the parish of Trawsfynydd through bringing coal and lime to a reasonable distance from every farm. We had to pay 12*s.* a ton for carting to Trawsfynydd before the railway; now we can get it from Ruabon for that price and less.

17,398. Do the farmers insure their stock and crops?—Many do. I know of some, but on the whole, as far as my knowledge goes, the majority are careless.

17,399. Do the labourers avail themselves of benefit societies?—To a great extent, especially labourers.

17,400. And savings banks, and so on?—Yes.

17,401. You have not many peasant proprietors, have you?—Not many; they are selling out.

17,402. I suppose you agree that the farmers and their servants work very hard, and are a very industrious and hard-working people?—Yes, it is always the case.

17,403. And they all help each other?—Yes.

17,404. Could the present rents be maintained if wages were paid in respect of the children's labour?—It is not very easy to answer that, as when a farm becomes vacant the rule is for five or six more often to apply for the place, especially if the farm lets at from 30*l.* to 40*l.* a year rent.

17,405. That is the size of farm they like best in the neighbourhood?—Yes.

17,406. Then, I suppose, as to hired labourers you tell us that there are a few in cottages, and they live in the farmhouses?—Yes.

17,407. What are the wages that the men get?—In winter, about 9*s.* weekly; in spring, about 12*s.*; and in harvest time, about 15*s.* to 20*s.*, with food, or about 25*l.* a year with food.

17,408. That is always with food?—Yes, always with food.

17,409. Then your evidence is the same as we have heard before about the meal-times and evenings?—Yes.

17,410. And you think the sleeping accommodation is good?—It is mostly in the house as the rest of the family.

17,411. Is the accommodation on your estate fair?—It is very good. We have very nearly built all the houses anew.

Chairman—continued.

17,412. Are there separate places for the labourers to sleep in on the farm?—There are none on our estate sleeping out.

17,413. Have you sleeping accommodation for the labourers on the farm?—Yes, in the house.

17,414. They are decent, comfortable places?—Yes, surely.

Mr. Grove.

17,415. You said you took into account the price of sheep and cattle?—Yes.

17,416. You have a sort of sliding scale arrangement that is regulated by the price of the live stock?—For instance, we have let a farm to a new tenant, and as the prices were low that farm was lowered from 65*l.* to 60*l.*

17,417. Because stock was low?—Yes, or else there would be no need of it.

17,418. That is your rule?—That is Mr. Wood's rule, and then I carry it out as best as I can.

17,419. It is not an annual valuation, it is only when you happen to have a change of tenancy?—Yes, only when we have a change of tenancy.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,420. There was one question which I am doubtful whether you understood aright, viz.:—Have any cases of hardship arisen? I take it the question means this, whether, say, fields have been taken from a tenant without any notice, or that he has had damage done to his land by timber felling, or something of that kind?—Nothing of the sort; we never had any complaint on that score.

17,421. That is what I take it the question refers to, but your answer refers to cases of illness?—Yes, sometimes through long severe illness.

17,422. What did you say about the landlord paying the doctor's bill?—And the landlord in many cases to my knowledge stepped forward and paid the doctor's bill. It would be a hardship for the tenant to pay a long doctor's bill, but he steps forward, and pays it himself.

17,423. I do not think you have quite understood the question; however it is very creditable to the landlord, I must say?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

17,424. You say you are a practical farmer?—Bred and born.

17,425. Do you farm at present?—A little.

17,426. Do you say that 20 per cent. is sufficient to meet the present price of produce?—Well, Mr. Wood is the best in the district, and he has lowered his rents as well, as I told you, he has made reductions in the rent and 20 per cent. afterwards.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

17,427. What do you consider would be a fair reduction in the present year? What do you as a practical farmer consider would be fair to have thrown back for the next half-year?—It is very hard to tell, because many farmers do not work in the same way.

17,428. And it would depend to some extent whether the farm is let high or low?—Our estate is considered low enough. There are plenty of applicants for a farm which happens to become vacant. I know that.

17,429. That is quite true, but at the same time we know there is very great depression?—Yes.

17,430. Tenants cling to their holdings as long as they can. Some people have said as an answer to this question that if they had all the rent allowed them this year they would not consider that any too much?—Well, I do not know. I am not of the same opinion as those at any rate.

17,431. Do you think 50 per cent. would be sufficient?—Oh, they would gladly take it, there is no mistake about that.

17,432. If the reduction is not sufficient, how long do you mean to leave these things going on—as long as the tenant has any capital, I suppose?—Our notion is if the landlord and tenant agree on that score, of course no one else ought to grumble; and the tenants on our estate are content. I must tell you that.

Chairman.

17,433. These are questions by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "In what year did Mr. Wood commence to pay the tithe rent, do you remember?"—Well, as I wrote it down.

17,434. "Was it before the anti-tithe agitation broke out?"—Oh, no, he does not as a matter of fact pay it now. I pay it for him, of course, but it is added to the rent.

17,435. He pays it himself?—I pay it for him, and add it to the rent.

17,436. "How many farms are there on Mr. Wood's estate?"—About 30 altogether.

17,437. "How many changes of tenancy have taken place on the estate within the last 10 or 15 years?"—Only two or three.

17,438. This is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Your landlord is a Conservative and a Churchman, is he not?"—Yes.

17,439. "Are you a Liberal?"—Yes.

17,440. "And a Nonconformist?"—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Richard Roberts recalled and further examined through an Interpreter.

e 9341*a*, d above.

Chairman.

17,441. Do you wish to say anything?—I was not able to understand what Mr. Robert Jones said.

17,442. Do you want to rebut anything?—May I explain this? I had taken a list of Mr. Wood's farms, about half-a dozen of them. I called them Mr. Wood's farms because they were in his possession at the time. I referred to the increased rents which had taken place 15 to 20 years ago, and those rents had been increased, so far as I understand, on three farms before Mr. Wood bought them.

17,443. Your evidence refers to these farms before Mr. Wood came into possession of the estate?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

17,444. Do you agree now that the rents have been lowered?—Yes, I think that I owned that in my former evidence that there had been some rents reduced.

Chairman.

17,445. We quite understand that it was before Mr. Wood came into possession of the land?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Robert Owen Jones recalled and further examined.

e 11,491, ,288.

The Interpreter.

I have been over this evidence with the witness, and he states, in contradiction to what Mr. Watkin stated, that the house was not in fairly good repair when he entered it. He also states that he was tenant of the farm five weeks before Mr. Huddart died and not two months after his death, as Mr. Watkin stated.

Chairman.

17,446. When did you become tenant?—Christmas Day.

17,447. What year?—The first year I went there.

17,448. However, it is only a difference of five weeks?—Yes.

The Interpreter.

Mr. Watkin stated during the years 1887 to 1890 he paid 18*l.* for materials for the repair of the house. The witness states that these materials did not come to Plas yn Penrhyn. Mr. Watkin stated that after the sale of part of Mr. Huddart's property, 10 acres 3 roods 21 perches were taken away from his farm, and 17 acres 2 roods 28 perches were added. The witness states that 25 acres or thereabouts were taken from him, and that Mr. Watkin says an equivalent number was added to his farm. Mr. Watkin says there has always been an unfailing supply of water in a well close to the house, and the present tenant by simply cutting a trench on the land has not only supplied his own stock during the recent great drought, but has been able also to supply his neighbours with water. The witness states there has not been enough water in this well during the dry season, and he further states that he himself made this well. Mr. Watkin also said that it is not a fact that he advised the witness to continue tenant of Plas yn Penrhyn. The witness states that it is true that Mr. Watkin advised him to continue as a tenant. Those are the material points which the witness wishes to contradict.

The Interpreter—continued.

Chairman.

17,449. There is one thing I should like to ask you. When you left the farm did you sell the stock to your own advantage, or was the stock sold from you, and taken for rent by the landlord?—I gave 120*l.* for the stock, and I sold it myself.

17,450. And you kept the money for yourself?—Yes, in order to pay them.

17,451. In order to pay whom?—To pay 100*l.* to my sister-in-law, and 20*l.* to my brother-in-law.

17,452. Mr. Watkin is perfectly correct in saying that you had that 120*l.*, and that it did not go to the landlord?—But I had paid them.

The Interpreter.

The witness wishes to put in a number of letters and a long statement, and I have explained to him that I was afraid the Commissioners would not be able to enter into the whole details of this case.

Chairman.

That is your evidence, and we are very much obliged to you.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EDWARD GRIFFITH called and examined.

Chairman.

17,453. You are a Justice of the Peace for the county of Merioneth?—Yes.

17,454. Do you hold some property in the county?—Yes.

17,455. And you desire to give evidence on what point particularly?—I have several points.

17,456. Then tell us what you wish to say?—I wish to make a statement about my own property first of all. May I say that a letter was sent from Edward Griffiths, the agent of the Nannau estate, and was read at Barmouth referring to me as a Nonconformist landowner, and owing to that I thought it would be better for me to appear and to give a statement of my experience with property in the county as well as the rates. I will not be more than a few minutes.

17,457. You are a Nonconformist?—Yes, I am a Nonconformist, and it will not take me more than 8 or 10 minutes to say what I have to say to the Commission about my landed estate. My real estate is about 650*l.* annually, and I receive about half of that amount from seven farms the (other from house property), which I let to different tenant farmers, the measurement of which is about 1,100 acres. I have reduced the rents twice since the year 1880, being in all a reduction of between 24*l.* and 25*l.* per cent. I have one point about common land in our district. Before we can understand the present condition of the rural districts in Wales we must go back to the end of the last century and the beginning of the present. At that time we had hundreds of small farms which have since been abolished and consolidated with others. In the 31st Elizabeth, cap. 7 (1589), an Act of Parliament, was passed called the Cottage and Inmates Act. This Act is as follows:—That after the end of this session of Parliament no person shall within this realm of England make, build, or erect any cottage or dwelling-house to be used for habitation, unless the same person do assign four acres, at least, of land to be freehold with the said cottage. (There is an exception to houses built in towns and cities.) In Wales, with the great extent of common land, this Act had the effect of encouraging the building of cottages with their four acres of land in great numbers in all parts of the country, and especially in the county of Merioneth. There was such a growth of small tenements on the border of our common land that the authorities for the time being, consulted together how to check their progress. I have here a very interesting document of a solicitor at the time giving instructions to the authorities in the county of Merioneth how to check the progress of building small cottages with four acres of land.

17,458. On the common land?—No, not on the common land.

17,459. What is the date of that?—Well, there is no date on it, but it was written by a great lawyer, Mr. Owen, of Pant-philip. He was the greatest lawyer of the time, and he lived and took part in the business of the county from 1720 to 1755, or something of that sort. At the beginning of this century, Parliament began to legislate with regard to the common law. Enclosure Acts were passed one after another so rapidly, that not an inch of common land was left without being included in an Act of Parliament. I may state, my Lord, that I take a little interest in things of this character as an antiquarian, and I have the reports of the Commissioners of Waste Land in my possession from the year 1795 up to 1825. Having all those reports in my possession shows that I have taken a little interest during these later years in the matter. I will only mention one which is a fair specimen of the whole, that is an Act for enclosing lands in the parish of Dolgelley and Celynin, which had the Royal assent in 1811. The acreage of the two parishes is about 37,000, the common land within the two parishes was over 12,000 acres, or one-third of all the land in the two parishes. Under this Act a Mr. Josiah Boydell was appointed a Commissioner at a salary of 2*l.* 10*s.* a day; surveyors and assistants were appointed by the freeholders. The first allotment under the Act was $\frac{1}{20}$ to the Crown; the second $\frac{1}{20}$ to the lord of the manor. After this the allotments were to be made to the freeholders of the parishes in proportion to the value of their landed property to be ascertained by the Land Tax Assessment.

Chairman—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

class—the working man—from the rural district, and the effect is felt to this day. I may refer here, my lord, to a farm of mine. There is only one farmhouse now, but in the old deeds of that farm there are eight messuages, six cottages, and 15 gardens; they had all been swept away before the commencement of the century. That is all I have to say with regard to the common. I have the price charged at the time for the common land. I ascertained from the report of the Commissioners that 117 acres were valued at a little less than 1*s.* an acre. 10*l.* 4*s.* was the annual value of 117 acres, and the price in all cases was five per cent. It is as sold for 204*l.* Well, I have had a little experience in dealing with rates in the county. The incidents of rates have so increased as to be a burden on the tenant farmer and have caused much depression and irritation. The School Board rate, sanitary rate, and the roads are an addition to what we paid before. Before 1882 we received from the letting of tolls about 7*l.* to 8*l.* per mile towards maintaining the roads. We have in the county 294 miles of main roads, which cost the ratepayers 3,753*l.* now, or 12*l.* 10*s.* per mile, or 3*d.* in the £ on the rates according to the present valuation. I happened to be a commissioner or trustee of the Turnpike Trust before 1882, and I took an interest in that. I think the sum this end of the county received for letting the tolls was from 7*l.* to 8*l.* a mile. There is great dissatisfaction among tenant farms with regard to this, viz., that all new rates fall entirely on the occupier. I have been for the last 20 years on the assessment committee and for the last 13 years as ex-officio member; I am well acquainted with their grievances, and although a small landowner, still I feel the disadvantage and must admit the justice of their grievance, and before landlords and tenants can meet equally on the different boards and deal with the rates they ought to join in the burden, and the rates ought to be equalised between landlord and tenant. I acted as chairman for the last two years on the rating committee of the county council, the work of which was completed at the last meeting. The valuation on farm and agricultural property was based on the rental as per income return. All the rental from farm and land in this county is 127,000*l.* That is a valuation for the county rate according to the new valuations. I am stating now the argument of the tenant farmers, which I hear very often at the Board, and especially on this committee:—"that this is only "$\frac{1}{3}$ of the produce of the land, so that there "remains $\frac{2}{3}$, and this part of the produce is the "wealth of the county; with this the farmers "keep their families and educate their children, "the working men and their families, as well as "all tradesmen, are supported, and all rates "paid; yet the laws are made to protect the "landlord's share and leave the share which "keeps the country to take its chance." That is the argument I get always at the Board from the tenant farmers. They say that the wealth of the country is, what remains of the produce after paying the rent. Another thing they say is, even in this county, that nearly half the rents of the county are going from the county to non-residents. I could name them. Of course they could not live in more than one county. Sir Watkin has property in three or four counties, and Lord Dudley, Lord Harlech, and many of them are non-residents of the county. Another large portion of the rents are going from the county in interest, so that the wealth of the county, which pays the rates and tradesmen and everything, goes from the $\frac{2}{3}$ of the rents, and that is the amount that does everything for the business of the county. Now the depression has continued for 13 years, and I am acquainted with dozens of farmers that do not know what to do, they are depressed. I mix with them, I try to assist them, and sympathise with them; they would give up farming at once if it was not for the low price they would have to sell the stock; selling at present prices would ruin them. I have here the report of a meeting held at Dolgelley in 1886, when 60 or more farmers from the west end of the county attended. I went to the meeting, I addressed them and advised them what to do under the circumstances. It was reported at the time in the "Cambrian News." My advice to the farmers at the time was:—"Apply to your landowners; "I am certain they sympathise with you, and "they will do anything they can to assist you "in the present state of depression"; but I am sorry to say that the depression has gone on, and the farmers feel they are depressed in this county. I am well acquainted with them. They appealed to me and I tried to assist them. In my opinion nothing will meet the requirements of the farmers but a Land Bill. Of course I have not much experience in this matter, and we must leave it to experts; but in my opinion before we can cheer up the farmers and keep heart in them to go on with farming in the county, they must have a Land Bill to lower the rents. It is useless to speak of protection or anything. The only thing that will meet the requirements of the tenant farmers in our county to any degree at present, is to lower the rents, and after lowering the rents to correspond with the state of the market, they ought to have fixity of tenure. Of course that ought to protect the landlords as well as the tenant, but that will be left to the experts. There ought to be fixity of tenure and compensation. I am quite convinced of that, and the sooner the better it will be for us as landowners to meet with farmers and try and do our best for them.

There is another thing I wish to mention to the Commission. There is a peculiarity in the Welsh farmer that we do not find in any other country. Wales is the land of Nonconformity. 95 per cent. of the tenant farmers are Nonconformists in North Wales. I will mention only my own parish, the parish of Dolgelley. In the rural district of the parish, excluding the urban district, we have a population of 1,318 extending over a district of 14 miles; in that district we have 125 bonâ fide tenant farmers voters. I consulted one of the officials, but I could only find that two of the 125 attended the Church of England, and two widows, four altogether, from among the bonâ fide tenant farmers in the parish of Dolgelley in the rural district As I say, only four out of 125 attended the Church of England. It is the same in the parish of Llanfachreth, over 80 per cent. are tenants on the Nannau estate; but this I feel that at every contest in our end of the county, school board, county council, members of Parliament—every contest—the agents come about and canvass the tenant farmers, and some of them even after canvassing the tenants on the polling day enter the polling booth. I can prove that because I was sent on two different occasions to a polling booth, and a very amicable and kind agent of one of the estates was there with me the whole day. I am grieved to think of my country and our Nonconformist tenants when there is a contest in any part of the county; there is the landlord's agent and the power of the Church of England, and on the other hand you have the poor tenant farmers and the tradesmen. You can imagine what the effect of this is; and not only that, the oppression continues and follows every election we have in the county. Even now cases are being referred to as having taken place some years ago, but there are cases it is impossible almost to find, but a spirit of oppression is prevalent. Then there are the clergymen in the county. I do not say of course that the clergymen come out to canvass, but they always seem to go against the great majority—the 80 per cent. of the county. Then there are the ladies of the Primrose League joining together. The effect after every election is very oppressive to all the tradesmen in the villages and towns in the county. They crush Nonconformity from every corner. That is all the evidence I have to give.

17,461. Do you complain of oppression?—I can give an instance, as I have spoken of the spirit of oppression, of what happened lately in the parish of Llanfachreth, in connexion with a small Calvinistic chapel there. This refers to Mr. Charles Owen, of Hengwrt uchaf, and I would rather speak in his presence, but, however, this is the fact. There was a post office, being a house and a shop, in that district, and the only house where a minister or a preacher of the Gospel could lay his head down in passing through. The minister of that little chapel lodged in this house for years. The tenant died. Well, I understand that several Nonconformists applied for the house as tenants; they were refused, and the house was let to a member of the Church of England, and the minister was refused at the only place where he could find lodgings, and was obliged to leave that district, and live 2 miles to 2½ miles away.

17,462. Can you give any other instances?—I am friendly with them, and I would rather leave the matter stand with that incident now.

Professor Rhŷs.

17,463. I was not here when you began your evidence, but I think you come from Dolgelley?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

17,464. Can you tell us anything about the timidity of the farmers to come forward in that neighbourhood. We are told that they are afraid to come forward to give evidence. In fact some of them who sent in evidence disappeared without coming forward?—I can state from my own knowledge I attended a meeting with Mr. Lleufer Thomas when he made his inquiry, and the room was full. There were over 60 who attended at the time, and as the inquiry was with regard to the wages paid to labourers, they were disappointed. A great many of them expressed themselves in this way: "I thought "it was something to do with the land, to "lower the rents."

17,465. They would have preferred a meeting about rents to one about wages?—Yes, and at the other meeting I referred to, which was reported in the "Cambrian News" in 1886, the hall was crammed full at the time with farmers from every part, but I cannot speak from knowledge as I did not take any part.

17,466, I am referring to this particular inquiry of ours. We do not put any names down on our list of witnesses except from briefs actually sent in, and in some cases men whose briefs have been sent in to the Secretary have failed to come forward to give evidence, and even some of the Welsh-speaking witnesses, whose evidence I went through with them at Dolgelley, failed to come forward in the course of the day?—Yes, I cannot give evidence on that point; I was not present and did not make any inquiries.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,467. Of course you mean to intimate that placing a Tory agent in the polling booth was intended to induce the tenant to vote for a Tory candidate?—Well, he canvassed the tenants before, and he attended. Mr. Edward Griffiths, of Nannau, and I were both there representing each party. I thought myself that it was not fair for the tenants of the estate in a village which had 80 per cent. of the voters, that the agent should be present at the time. I do not know what his object was.

17,468. That was your conclusion, I suppose, that he was placed there with that object?—Well, I did not like to see Mr. Griffiths present. I did not care to see him; I knew he had such influence in the parish.

17,469. Are there any instances of what we may call boycotting Nonconformist tradesmen in Dolgelley?—Not lately. I do not think there are.

17,470. Have there been instances in the past?—Well, I cannot name any boycotting; of course there are rumours, but before I could mention anything of that sort I should like to have more time to look into the facts, and to make sure of them.

Chairman.

17,471. This is a question put in by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Is it not true that the new tenant "of the post office whom you mentioned was "a very old family servant?"—The wife might have been, but the young man was a man from

Chairman—continued.

Dolgelley. I think the wife was a servant of Mr. Vaughan's at Nannau.

17,472. Another question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Do you not think that you have "considerable influence with voters?"—Yes.

17,473. You think you have?—Yes, I think I have.

17,474. This is a question by Mr. Thomas E. Ellis: "Do you know that in a special report "on Crown Lands in Wales, issued about 1825, "it is admitted that the cottages built on the "waste, and the acres cultivated around them "by the peasants, were added to neighbouring "large estates?"—Well, they were added according to the reports to all the freeholders who paid the land tax, and were down on the assessment of land tax.

17,475. Do you happen to know whether that was admitted on the special report issued as to Crown Lands in 1825?—I cannot speak to that.

17,476. "Are these the small holdings which "to a large extent have been merged in large "farms, and the cottages allowed to fall to "ruin?"—They are entirely gone—abolished from the country.

17,477. This is a question put in by Mr. Vincent: "You tell us that about 95 per cent. "of the tenant farmers are Nonconformists?" —Yes.

17,478. May Mr. Vincent take it then that there is no special preference for churchmen as a general rule?—Well, there is in some cases. They have tried even last year. There is an increase of one tenant farmer, a member of the Church of England, in one of the four parishes I mentioned since March last.

Chairman—continued.

17,479. This is a question put in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Is it not a fact that the "post office was offered to a Nonconformist on "condition of his not taking the minister as a "lodger"?—Yes, it was on the condition that he would not take the minister to lodge there.

17,480. That was a condition?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

17,481. Or take any lodgers?—Well, I am not certain of that. But the minister was there and a Nonconformist applied for the house, and the post office would have been let to a Nonconformist provided he would not take a minister.

17,482. Especially a minister?—Yes. May I just say this before leaving the table; that although there are cases of oppression in the county, I was one of a deputation, consisting of five, who applied to Sir Watkin to buy the freehold of all our chapels on Sir Watkin's estate in three or four counties, and I think it is right to say that Mr. Wynne dealt with us most kindly and dealt with us most liberally, and Sir Watkin sold the freehold at a very low price indeed, in some cases at a nominal price. I am referring to the last Sir Watkin. There is another case again I might perhaps mention with respect to the chapel of Abergeirn, near Dolgelley, Mr. Nanney was selling the farm, and the chapel was built on the farm with a ground rent of 2*s.* 6*d.* or something. Mr. Walter Jones kindly took the chapel from the sale and gave it free to the Calvinistic Methodists and sold the farm. I think I ought to state those cases.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Alderman JOHN HUGHES called and examined through an Interpreter.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

Alderman JOHN HUGHES, Hafod Fawr Isaf, Festiniog.

General evidence relating to Maentwrog parish.

The parish is a comparatively small one. Agriculture is the main industry followed by the inhabitants. The farms are comparatively small in size, several farms have been consolidated, for instance, Tyddyn Merched, Rhoswen, Gellidywyll, each of these three farms were two about 1872. This according to all appearances is disadvantageous to the land, to the tenant, and consequently to the owner.

About 30 labourers' cottages have fallen into ruins during the last 40 years, which cottages were scattered the length and breadth of the parish. There are two villages in the parish, namely, Maentwrog and Gellilydan. The inhabitants of the first place depend for the most part for their living on the Tanybwlch estate, namely, on the home farm, the gardens, &c., in connexion with the mansion of W. E. Oakeley Esq., which is close by. The majority of the inhabitants of the other village depend mainly on the slate quarries of Blaenau Festiniog. They go to their work in the morning, and return in the evening by train, a distance of seven or eight miles.

Nature of the Land.—Land in this part of the country is considered bad, the soil without much depth of earth, poisonous soil. The chief occupations of farmers in this parish are rearing horned cattle, making butter, and sheep farming. There is not much cultivation of land in the parish.

Poverty of the Parish.—To account for this we may mention one cause, the poorness of the soil. This possibly may go far to prove the poverty of the inhabitants. But the chief reason why farmers are so much in want is the high rents. The farmers fancy the farms are too high by one-third, taking the parish generally, although some of the landlords have reduced their rents, and the rest have made certain abatements; but I consider that abatements in the rent are unfair to farmers, and if the farm is too high, the rent ought to be reduced.

See 17,494, 7,538–7,543. Another cause of the poverty of the parish is the game. The game is a destructive plague, messing the food of the cattle, and eating the children's bread. It is understood that some of the landlords are ready to give compensation for the loss caused by game, but it is equally understood by farmers that it is an offence to claim compensation, and as farmers are such a servile class they prefer suffering rather than ask for that which is reasonable they should have.

There are several landlords connected with this parish, but as far as I know only one of them lives in the parish, W. E. Oakeley, Esq., of Tanybwlch, who is the chief landowner, and about half the parish belongs to him. He has several good qualities as a landlord, there are excellent farmhouses on his estate, and good outbuildings; he keeps the boundaries of the farms well, and assists the farmers to drain and manure the land, which things are very deficient on the lands of other landlords in the parish.

I believe if the game were destroyed and experienced agents were appointed, the Tanybwlch estate would be one of the most reasonable in the country.

There are four persons connected with the land whom the farmer is in danger of offending, namely, the parish parson, the keeper, the agent, and the landlord. I believe what would meet the general wants of Wales, reckoning the farmers as well, would be Home Rule, or in its absence, Disestablishment and Disendowment of the Church, and a land court dealing with:—(a) Fair rents; (b) security of tenure; and (c) compensation for improvements."

Chairman.

17,483. Is that statement correct?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

17,484. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

17,485. What is the size of your farm?—81 acres.

17,486. Is the land on your own farm that you are complaining of, or is it all the land of the parish?—I complain of my own farm as well as the land of the whole parish.

17,487. Do you think your opinion is generally shared by the people of that district, namely, that the land is very poor there?—Yes. They entirely agree with me. There is an association of farmers, and that is their opinion.

17,488. Of how many does the association consist?—The majority of the farmers in the parish.

17,489. Do you know the farm at the Tanybwlch Arms?—That is the Festiniog district, is it not?

17,490. It is just over the river from Maentwrog?—I do not know anything about that farm. The tenant of that farm is not a member of the association which I represent.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

17,491. I dare say she is not. What I want to know is whether you do not consider that pretty good land?—It looks better than many farms.

17,492. Does she not keep some very good stock?—Yes, but that farm is in the only valley in the parish of Festiniog.

17,493. Does not Mr. Oakeley raise some very fine stock on his own farm?—Yes, but it would cost four times more than any farmer could afford.

17,494. I dare say. Now you complain of the game. Do you complain of the game on Mr. Oakeley's estate?—Yes, the farmers generally complain.

17,495. Is it on your own account that you complain?—No, there are only grouse where I am.

17,496. Have they asked Mr. Oakeley to give them compensation?—Yes, but, as I have stated in my evidence, not one of them feels free to do so.

17,497. You state that experienced agents are not appointed. Do you consider Mr. Oakeley has an inexperienced agent?—That is my idea, at any rate; and that is the idea of the farmers too.

Mr. Griffiths.

17,498. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Rowlands, of Tenby.

17,499. Have you ever appealed to him for a reduction of rent?—Yes, scores of times.

17,500. Has he ever given you any abatement?—Yes, a little.

17,501. How much?—This is the only abatement I had: "The landlord to allow the tenant "in each year of the tenancy the sum of 5*l.* "towards the purchase of lime or manure for the "said land."

17,502. That is part of the agreement?—Yes, it is the agreement. He gives 2*s.* in the £ abatement on some occasions.

17,503. Has he given you suitable buildings?—No, they are unfit for either man or beast to live in.

17,504. Have you made an application for better buildings?—Yes.

17,505. And can you not get them?—Not at all.

17,506. You live not far from Tan y bwlch, do you not?—About three miles from Tan y-bwlch.

17,507. Does Mr. Oakeley give the use of his sires, such as horses and bulls, to the surrounding neighbourhood at a reasonable price?—Yes, he has been allowing them to use them for very little, almost for nothing. I do not know that he has charged anything.

17,508. Do the tenants generally accept it?—Yes, but there is such a difference in the breed.

17,509. Are they better or worse?—They are much better.

17,510. Would it not be advantageous to the farmers to make free use of that?—I believe that the land is far too poor to keep them on unless you buy to feed them as Mr. Oakeley does.

17,511. Are you deputed to come here on behalf of the farmers of your parish?—Yes, I was appointed to come.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,512. Had you a meeting of farmers to appoint someone to represent them at this inquiry?—Yes.

17,513. How many were there present at the meeting?—I am not sure of the number. We held meetings here and there through the parish.

17,514. Do you think the farmers generally in your parish approve of what you have said here?—Yes. I am stating what they wished me to say.

17,515. I think you say in your evidence that the soil in the parish is poisonous. What do you mean by saying it is poisonous?—It is red soil with shale foundation — [priddyn gwenwynllyd] poisonous soil.

17,516. Are there any works near the neighbourhood the smoke from which would damage the grass?—No.

17,517. Have you said what is the average rental per acre of the land in the parish?—No, I have not made that statement. I do not say for certain how much it is.

17,518. What is the rent of your farm?—It is 35*l.*, only that 5*l.* is taken off in accordance with the agreement.

17,519. Is there any sheep walk attached to your farm?—Yes.

17,520. Is that included in the rent of 30*l.*?—Yes.

17,521. How many acres is the sheep-walk?—I cannot say for certain—from 15 to 20 acres.

17,522. Do you raise any barley and oats on your place?—Oats will grow, but it is seldom that barley will grow.

17,523. How many bags per acre will it yield?—If we sow a hobbet we get five.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

17,524. That is about half of an average yield?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

17,525. How much is a hobbet?—In Denbighshire two hobbets make a sackful.

17,526. How much is a sackful?—When we buy it, it weighs about 210 lbs.

17,527. What is a sack?—That is a sack.

17,528. You say you represent the farmers of the parish. What did they instruct you to say to us as regards any reform in the land question?—The farmers think that there is no reform to be expected until some means are found of valuing land between the landlord and tenant.

17,529. Let us know what you mean by that power that you allude to?—In the first place we expect impartial men to value the land.

17,530. Where do you expect them from?—We expect the Government to appoint experienced men.

17,531. What else do you expect them to do?—That they should go through the country valuing the land.

17,532. Is that all you say?—We want them to give some protection to farmers when they leave their farms.

17,533. You would be willing for the same men to come to give protection to the landowners, too, would you not?—Yes; so far as I know, the farmers do not wish for anything except that which is right.

Sir John Llewelyn.

17,534. Do you really want the Commission to believe that you are afraid of the parson?—Yes.

17,535. Are the other farmers the same?—I believe they are so generally.

17,536. What power has the parson got over them?—He has no public power, but private power.

17,537. Over you?—With the landlord or agent.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William John Kerr recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

ee 17,494.

17,538. You are agent to Mr Oakeley?—Yes.

17,539. Is there anything you wish to say?—I should like to make one or two remarks (I will make them as short as possible) with regard to the statements which Mr. John Hughes, the last witness, made. He especially referred, I think, to the game at Maentwrog on the Tanybwlch estate. He complained that that was a great grievance generally in the valley of Tanybwlch.

17,540. Is that on Mr. Oakeley's estate?—Yes. The acreage of the Tanybwlch estate, not including the sheep walks, and not including grouse moors, is about 10,000 acres. Last year I think, the game books will show as good a return as any year in the last 20 years. Mr. Oakeley and his friends last year killed on these 10,000 acres about under 800 pheasants, under 20 hares, and under 300 rabbits. Most of this game was shot on land in Mr. Oakeley's own lands, about 700 acres. In the last five years I paid to the tenants as compensation for game 98*l.* 15*s.* Mr. Hughes also complained of the rents of the farms on the Tanybwlch estate; he said he considered the rents were generally too high. During my tenancy of the estate I have reduced three farms 7½ per cent.; I have reduced two farms 10 per cent.; two farms 12½ per cent.; one farm 13¾ per cent.; seven farms 15 per cent.; two farms 17 per cent.; one farm 18¾ per cent.; eight farms 20 per cent.; one farm 23 per cent.; five farms 25 per cent.; one farm 26 per cent.; one farm 27 per cent.; one farm 30 per cent.; and one farm 42 per cent. With regard to my qualifications as agent, I can only say that I am a Welshman, I have lived in Wales—all my life in the country—I can speak Welsh, and I learned estate agency in the Castle Menzies estate office in Perthshire.

Chairman—continued.

17,541. This question is sent up by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Can you give the names of "any of the tenants to whom compensation for "damage for game was paid"?—Yes, my lord Here is a table showing the payments made to tenants as compensation for game damage:—

17,543. So that the tenants were perfectly satisfied?—My belief is that in every case the tenant was perfectly satisfied. I also wish to put in the payments I made for repairs and

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Ellis called and examined through an Interpreter.

17,544. The following statement of the witness was read :—

"Thomas Ellis, Cynlas, Llandderfel, Corwen.

"I worked during the early years of my life on my father's farm, Ty Ceryg, in the parish of Llangower. I have been a tenant for nearly half a century. On my father's death my brother and I became joint tenants of Ty Ceryg at an increased rent of 10*l.* We farmed together for nine years. Our landlord was Mr. Gilbertson. In 1885 I became tenant of Cynlas, which I have farmed ever since. Cynlas is on the Rhiwlas estate.

See 6,910–6,915.

"During the first 15 years of my life as tenant I received very valuable agricultural instruction from my first two landlords, Mr. Gilbertson and the late Mr. Richard W. Price. Mr. Gilbertson took an experimental field on our farm, where he taught us how to manure and cultivate land successively for crops and for hay. The late Mr. Price took a keen interest in every farm on his estate ; he beautified it by judicious planting, and instructed and encouraged his tenants. Nowadays this district needs landlords practically acquainted with farming like them, or an organised system of school and college instruction in agriculture in all its bearings.

"I have read carefully the evidence tendered before the Commission and agree in the main with the evidence given by tenant farmers with regard to their struggles and difficulties and to the need for land reform. It is very natural to lay great stress upon the political storms of 1859 and subsequent elections. In old days to get on Sir Watkin's estate was—just what Welsh farmers are crying for to-day — very reasonable rents, perfect security of tenure, and a fair chance of good terms if a tenant ever changed his farm or left the estate. The evictions of 1859 came like a thunder-clap ; they struck terror into the tenantry like an earthquake. They created a breach, a gulf between landlords and tenants. Neither the Ballot Act nor time has healed that breach. It was the first serious blow at the spirit of enterprising cultivation by tenants.

"I should like to lay stress upon two of the farmers' difficulties :—

"(1.) The ruin of cottages diminishes the supply of labour. The farmers' labour bill is now much heavier, while his rent is higher. In 1855 I paid to two young labourers 10*l.* 10*s.* and 10*l.*, to a maid 4*l.* 10*s.* In 1893 I paid to two young labourers 25*l.* and 23*l.* 10*s.*, and to a maid 14*l.* Wages are none too high when we consider the wages paid in industries. Rent being so high and prices so low, the farmer cannot employ so much labour. So the land deteriorates.

"(2.) Owing to the game system there has been an enormous increase of sparrows and wood pigeons, which eat up corn crops.

"I see that some landlords have testified before the Commission that tenants make no personal improvements on their farms. My best reply to that is a schedule of the improvements which I have made at Cynlas. [See Qu. 16,915.] Most of them, I submit, are solid, genuine, permanent improvements. Many of them will last unexhausted for generations. They amount to 635*l.* I have not included any estimate of my own anxious care and thought and labour upon these improvements."

Chairman.

17,544A. That is your evidence and it is correct ?—Yes. With your permission, my lord, as one of the Rhiwlas tenants, I feel that I ought to make this remark. With regard to the evidence of my old friend last night, that is, the evidence referring to Mr. Schoon, the late agent, I do not agree with him in what he said, that Mr. Schoon was an ignorant agent. I thought that he had every qualification and every knowledge to be the agent of a large estate like that of Rhiwlas, and I conscientiously say, as far as I could see, that he did every justice between the landlord and his tenant.

See 16,623*a*–16,685.

Mr. Grove.

17,545. I think I gathered that you say there was complete fixity of tenure under the late Sir Watkin ?—I have been farming now for nearly half a century. I recollect years before that I lived in a farm between Sir Watkin's estate and that of Rhiwlas. The idea with regard to Sir Watkin's estate was that the buildings were bad, the rents were low, and that no tenant was ever turned away ; the idea was that agriculture was pretty backward on Sir Watkin's estate at that time. With regard to the Rhiwlas estate the idea was different ; that Mr. Price was one of those who best understood how to cultivate the land in this country. That was the idea—that he gave every welcome and every encouragement to all good tenants, and that he, if he could, swept every bad tenant overboard.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,546. Do you ever remember a worse time for farmers than the present time ?—Taking everything into consideration, I do not recollect a worse time.

17,547. Do you consider that they are either paying their way on former savings, or that they are using up their capital ?—They must be doing either one or the other.

Mr. Griffiths.

17,548. Do you consider that young farmers of the present day do not have such good training as you had in your day ?—I am afraid that they do not get the same training.

17,549. You say the landlords were then "practically acquainted with farming" ; do you think that landlords are less practical now than they were then ?—I am afraid so. I had advice from the two gentlemen who are mentioned in my evidence on agriculture, which I have never forgotten.

17,550. But are there not lectures given at the present day on farming, and experiments carried out?—Yes.

17,551. Do you not consider them as practical as they were in the old days?—They are perfectly necessary, but a man must have experience as well as education.

17,552. But he must have education to meet the present times?—Of course.

17,553. What do you understand by a bad tenant? You speak of "sweeping bad tenants "overboard"; what do you mean by a bad tenant; do you mean a man without capital?—Lazy and untidy tenants—slovenly tenants.

17,554. Do you consider the labourers of the present day as practical as they were in your days?—Labourers?

17,555. Yes?—I must acknowledge that they are more unthoughtful, but perhaps they do their work with their hands as well as they did.

17,556. Do they do as much now in a day as they used in those days?—I do not say but that they do.

Lord Kenyon.

17,557. You said labour was much dearer. Is not the cost of harvesting rather cheaper owing to the improvement in agricultural machinery?—It is very difficult to use implements on many kinds of land.

17,558. I meant within your own recollection on your own farm?—What machinery do you refer to?

17,559. Mowing machines, horse-rakes, and various harvesting machines?—They are being used now, and wherever they can be used I think that in time they will be favourable so as to engage fewer men; but it is only in some parts of our land that they can be used, on a few farms.

17,560. Would that have any effect on using fewer labourers on farms?—Those who use machinery are able to do with less.

Chairman.

17,561. Do you believe that the establishment of a land court would have the effect of driving all the best landlords out of the country?—No, I do not.

17,562. These are questions by Mr. Vincent: "Did your landlord invite you to give evidence "before the Commission?"—Yes.

17,563. "Do you think any tenant on the "Rhiwlas estate need be afraid of coming "forward?"—I am afraid that there are some, but I have no fear.

Chairman—continued.

17,564. Mr. Llewellyn Jones sends up two questions: "Could you say whether Mr. Schoon "knew Welsh?"—No, he did not.

17,565. "Was your brother Edward Ellis "evicted from Ty Ceryg, your old home, in "1859"?—Yes. May I add one thing? I have read in some reports of the proceedings of the Commission that they say that rates have been the means of burdening us. I do not agree with that. I paid poor rates 30 years ago, 11*l.* 1*s.*; 20 years afterwards, 11*l.* 6*s.*; last year I paid 8*l.* 8*s.* But this ought to be explained; that my farm was changed from one parish to another. If I had been in the same parish the sum I would have paid last year would have been 11*l.* 7*s.* 6*d*

Professor Rhŷs.

17,566. That is for poor rates, is it?—For poor rates, yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

17,567. Do you not in addition to that pay a sanitary rate?—That is included in the sum mentioned, as well as the education and highway rates.

17,568. All those are included?—Yes, included in the 11*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*, all of them.

Chairman.

17,569. Another question is sent up by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Is there any destruction "of crops in your district by birds?"—Fearfully.

Lord Kenyon.

17,570. What sort of birds—sparrows?—Small birds and wood pigeons.

17,571. Is there no such thing as a sparrow club?—No; they are increasing year after year. There is another thing I wish to mention which is disadvantageous to the tenants—the whole population going to the towns and villages. I regard that that will be a great disaster in the future.

Chairman.

17,572. There is another question by Mr Llewelyn Jones: "Why should these birds cause such destruction?"—The Almighty has made a law that one bird keeps the other down.

Professor Rhŷs.

The law of the balance of power.

Sir John Llewelyn.

17,573. Do you consider that the hawks kill the sparrows?—Yes, dozens of them.

The witness withdrew.

Mrs. Elizabeth Jones called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

17,574. Can you speak English?—A little. I prefer speaking Welsh.

17,575. You want to contradict a statement made yesterday?—Yes, I do.

17,576. What do you want to contradict?—That my son did not cut any wood.

17,577. As far as I remember it, Mr. Vincent put in a question stating that your son had been convicted of damaging trees. That was not the case?—No.

17,578. He was taken before the magistrates?—Yes.

17,579. He was not found guilty?—No.

17,580. Who was found guilty?—One of the assistant workmen who was mending the fence, a man who had come yonder to assist us to repair the fence.

Chairman—continued.

17,581. Did he pay for the damage?—Yes, every penny.

17,582. And your son was proved to be perfectly innocent?—Yes.

17,583. These are questions by Mr. Watkins: "Was he not convicted and fined?"—No. I was not in court, but he was not found guilty or fined.

17,584. "Was Mr. E. Watkins a witness in the case"?—He came to tell me that my son had done this.

17,585. Do you know whether Mr. Watkins appeared as a witness against your son?—I did not hear anyone say so.

17,586. "Are you the lady whose dog was shot?"—Yes.

17,587. Did you recover 5*l.* for the shooting of the dog?—Yes, 5*l.* compensation.

Re-examined, 17,699.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Edward Watkins recalled and further examined.

Witness.

I was witness in the case of Mrs. Jones's son, and proved that he had cut a tree, and my valuation was put on it, 4*s.* I forget now what the fine was. The case was brought before the Bench, and he was convicted of having cut the tree.

Chairman.

17,588. You were a witness in the case?—Yes.

17,589. And you say Mr. Jones, junior, was brought up for damaging a tree?—Yes.

17,590. You bore evidence against him?—Yes.

17,591. And made the damage out at 4*s.*?—Yes.

17,592. And he was convicted?—Yes.

17,593. And what was the fine?—I forget the fine.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,594. Was the servant that Mrs. Jones mentioned summoned as well?—Yes.

17,595. The two of them?—Mrs. Jones and the son, do you mean?

17,596. No; the servant that she mentioned, the assistant who was helping him?—I forget about the servant.

17,597. You forget?—I do not remember anything about the servant.

17,598. You do not know whether he was summoned to appear even?—I do not remember that now.

Lord Kenyon.

17,599. You heard her statement, that it was not her son who was convicted and fined, but an assistant who came to hedge and so on, who was convicted and fined. You say that is not the case, but that it was her son?—As far as I recollect it was the son.

Chairman.

17,600. Do you say absolutely so—because this is rather a serious thing; there is a man's character at stake. Are you absolutely certain that it was Jones junior who was convicted and fined, and not the assistant? When did it happen; how many years ago?—I should think about eight years ago.

17,601. And are you absolutely prepared to state as a fact that it was Jones junior and not the assistant?—Well, I have not gone into the matter, and have not got it from the register book.

17,602. I think you had better "go into the matter," if you are not absolutely certain, because a man's character is at stake, and it is a very serious question for him?—Very well.

Mr. Grove.

17,603. The point is this as I gather it. Mrs. Jones says that before the magistrates the servant man who was helping to do the fencing admitted that he cut the wood and that he paid the fine and all the expenses of the summons, and that the son was declared by the magistrates to be perfectly free of the offence. That is the point?—Before I say anything further, I will see to this matter.

Re-examined, 17,697.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM ROBINSON LAWFORD recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

See 10,003.

17,604. You come to rebut certain portions of the evidence given by Mr. John Roberts at Portmadoc on the 16th September?—Yes. Mr. John Roberts said this:—"It was the "first year that I came yonder that Mr. Law- "ford offered me 1*l.* He never paid me a "halfpenny."

17,605. What was that for?—That is not the question; it is simply whether I paid him the 1*l.* or not. I want you to know the truth.

17,606. But what did John Roberts say that it was for?—It was about taking some land for shooting.

17,607. One pound for the privilege of shooting?—Yes. I believe I was wrong in offering the 1*l.*, but Roberts said that I did not pay it. I only mention it now to show you the truth of the thing. I bring here his receipt to show you that he had the money.

17,608. That is his receipt for the power or privilege of shooting in that warren, is it?—No, on a field of his just outside. He said I never paid him. The receipt was as follows:—

"Cefntreforfawr, December 29, 1883.

"The Honourable LORD HARLECH to JOHN ROBERTS.

"The liberty of catching rabbits at racecourse in 1882, 1*l.*

"(Signed) Settled, JOHN ROBERTS,
"February 4, 1884."

See 15,761–15,764, 15,821.

17,609. It was paid a year after it was due?—He sent in the bill on the 29th December 1883, and I paid it on the 4th February 1884.

17,610. Then you want to rebut something further?—Dr. Jones, of Harlech, said at Towyn on October 4th: "Lord Harlech requires tenants "to beat for two days for game." That is not true.

17,611. That is not the case?—It is not true; there is no agreement in any way. The tenants are asked by the keepers to beat; some few are asked if they will come and beat, and some come of their own accord.

17,612. But there is nothing in the agreement?—Nothing whatever. Neither Lord Harlech or his agent have ever compelled them to come. The keeper asks a few tenants, but only a few. Some come of their own accord just to enjoy the sport. They have a feed at middle day, and they have a feed at night, and they enjoy that and the sport.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,613. I do not think it was said that it was in the agreement. What he said was this, that when a tenant took a farm it was understood that he was supposed to give two days' beating?—It is not understood, nothing of the sort. It is the very furthest thing from Lord Harlech's mind.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

17,614. You admit that the keepers sometimes ask the tenants?—The keeper goes round and asks some few tenants; some come of their own accord, and some at a distance ask us to let them know when Lord Harlech is going to have a day's shooting.

Professor Rhŷs.

17,615. But you must be aware that an intimation from a keeper is taken by the tenants as a command from his master?—I do not think they would so understand it in Lord Harlech's case; they know him too well for that.

Lord Kenyon.

17,616. How many beaters does he pay?—I really could not tell you off book.

Chairman.

17,617. Is there anything else?—Then he complains that interest is charged on buildings. I do not know whether he applies that directly to Lord Harlech, but Lord Harlech wished me to say that he charges no interest whatever on any buildings. Then Dr. Jones goes on to say that Lord Harlech's keeper killed a dog. It is true that the keeper did kill a dog, but directly Lord Harlech knew of it he made that keeper go and pay for the dog at once. Lord Harlech made him pay for it at once himself. His Lordship told me that last night, and asked me to state it here to day.

See 15,7 15,783.

17,618. Was that a keeper at Glyn?—Yes, Edwards.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,619. Do you know the name of the tenant?—He was not one of Lord Harlech's tenants. He was a stranger. The dog was poaching. I believe he was running a hare at the time and it was rather a tempting shot; but at any rate Lord Harlech made the keeper pay for it himself—so he told me last night. Then Dr. Jones implied that Lord Harlech was unapproachable. May I put in a letter that I received the other day from quite an independent man as to Lord Harlech's character. He applied to me for a farm; the farm was a cold wet clay farm not at all suitable to him. In writing about the farm he says, "I shall be very glad to have a good "farm under Lord Harlech, as I have had a "good character of him as a landlord." Lord Harlech wished me to put in that letter to-day.

17,620. Is it a certificate as to his approachability?—No. The man applied for a farm. He asked me to let him have a good one when I had one to let, and that is his opinion of what people say of Lord Harlech. Dr. Jones rather sneered at him in his evidence, I thought.

Chairman.

17,621. I do not think so. There is only one opinion of Lord Harlech. What I think Dr. Jones said was that he was difficult to get at?—He is just the reverse.

Lord Kenyon.

17,622. I think Lord Harlech would like it to be known that he is approachable?—Most decidedly approachable and by the poorest on his estate—he is most approachable to them.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

17,623. If there is a feeling that he is unapproachable it is quite unfounded?—I have often seen his Lordship go and talk to poor people.

The witness withdrew.

MR. WALTER B. C. JONES recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

e 10,140, ,824. 17,624. You wish to rebut certain evidence by Mr. Cadwalader Roberts at Portmadoc on the 16th September?—Yes. At Question 10,140 he is asked: "What is the acreage on your farm?" and the answer is, "It used to be 120, but since "Mr. W. B. C. Jones came yonder to value it he "has increased it by adding Crown property, so "that it is now about 200 acres or so." The total acreage included in the rent of 38*l.* paid by Cadwalader Roberts to the Incumbent of Llanfihangel y Pennant is by the $\frac{1}{2}\frac{1}{5}$ Ordnance map 200 acres 1 rood and 38 perches. So it is 200 acres odd, excluding the Crown property. That is in the occupation, for which Cadwalader Roberts pays 38*l.*

17,625. Then what is there between you?—80 acres.

17,626. It is 280 acres?—It is 200 acres, and I think he said it was 120.

17,627. No; he said it used to be 120, but he says since you came yonder (I do not know what he means by that) you increased it by adding Crown property and so making it 200 acres?—He said it was 120 acres before Mr. Walter B. C. Jones included the Crown lands.

17,628. Yes?—Well, it is 200 acres by the $\frac{1}{2}\frac{1}{5}$ Ordnance sheet without including any Crown land. I think Mr. Roberts himself is now satisfied on the point.

17,629. Then the only difference between you is that he says it was Crown property and you say it was not?—That is so.

17,630. Is there anything else?—I wish also, with your Lordship's permission, to put in an explanation as to some questions which were put by Mr. George at Pwllheli and answered by Mr. Ellis Nanney.

e 11,406. 17,631. What is the number of the question. It would be a great convenience if rebutting witnesses would be good enough to bring the number of the questions that they wish to challenge; that would save time?—This is at Question 11,406. Mr. George's question was, "Was the rent of Bettws Fawr raised from 120*l.* to 148*l.*?" There is no record of the Bettws Fawr rent ever having been 120*l.* in the books in Mr. Ellis Nanney's possession, which I myself have searched. The rent was in 1866 132*l.*, and it was increased by Mr. Robert Thomas, the valuer at that time, to 148*l.* 14*s.* 5*d.* It is now 146*l.*, the difference having been allowed for land taken for planting.

17,632. Then it was not 120*l.*, but it was 132*l.*?—132*l.* as far as I can trace it back.

Chairman—continued.

17,633. As far as you know it was 132*l.*, and the evidence given to us was that it was 120*l.*?—That is so.

See 11,409, 17,057. 17,634. Is there anything else?—Then at Question 11,409 there is mention of the Bron miod farm, and it is stated, "In 1843 the "rent was 80*l.* and in 1893 the rent was 126*l.*" It has also been stated to-day by the honourable member for this county, upon information supplied to him at the time, that it was so. I am able to prove that in 1843 the rent of Bron miod was 96*l.* I can, if necessary, put in a letter by Mr. Owen Evans, who then received the rents of the Rhiwlas property in Carnarvonshire. I am prepared to hand that letter in, if your Lordship thinks it necessary.

17,635. That is the difference between you; it was 96*l.* instead of 80*l.*?—Yes, my lord.

17,636. And in 1893 it was 126*l.*; is that it?—124*l.* 10*s.* in 1893. Then about the Tyn y llan farm. The question was asked whether the rent was not 12*l.* in 1843. The rent in 1843 of Tyn y llan was 30*l.* 10*s.*

17,637. Not 12*l.*?—No, not 12*l.*, but 30*l.* 10*s.*

17,638. Where did you get these particulars from?—I have this from Mr. Owen Evans, who was then the agent of the Rhiwlas property in Carnarvonshire, and I also called at his residence, Broom Hall, yesterday and verified the matter myself.

17,639. From the books?—Yes.

See 11,414, 11,602. 17,640. You say it was 30*l.* 10*s.*?—It was 30*l.* 10*s.* in 1843, and not 12*l.* as suggested. Then as to Cae'rtyddyn, it was suggested the rent was 28*l.* 7*s.* in 1852. In 1852 it was 31*l.* 10*s.* It was increased in 1858 to 35*l.* before it was sold by the Rhiwlas estate.

17,641. Is it 44*l.* 10*s.* now?—It is.

17,642. That is accurate, is it?—Yes. Then I should like to point out that this Bron miod farm is chargeable with 24*l.* a year, payable by the owner to 12 poor persons. Then at Q. 11,402, Mr. Ellis Nanney is asked (by Mr. George), "Were there at the time of the enclosure six "almshouses on the common belonging to the "parish," and his answer is, "I cannot tell you." I now put in a conveyance from the Crown to Mr. Ellis Nanney's father, the late Major Nanney.

17,643. What was the time of the enclosure, do you happen to know?—The enclosure was subsequent to the purchase of these cottages by the late Major Nanney. This conveyance is dated the 29th day of July 1859, from the Crown to the late Major Nanney, of the six cottages referred to by Mr. George.

Chairman—continued.

17,644. Were they almshouses?—That I cannot say.

17,645. These are the six cottages referred to standing on the high road, or on a road at any rate?—Yes, which the question insinuated had been taken by Mr. Ellis Nanney's predecessor from the parish of Llanystwyndwy.

17,646. I do not think there is anything in that. He was asked under what right the enclosure was made, and he said he could not tell?—I have the conveyance here also from the Crown to Mr. Ellis Nanney's father, and others of the common.

17,647. But I must call your attention to this. Mr. Ellis Nanney was asked, "Were there "at the time of the enclosure six almshouses on "the common belonging to the parish?" and he said, "I cannot tell you;" that is all?—Yes; Mr. Ellis Nanney was unable to explain the matter from memory, but since then he has searched into it, and he thinks it advisable that the information placed before the Commissioners should be accurate on the point.

17,648. Then there were six cottages?—There were six cottages, which were purchased previous to the enclosure.

17,649. This is the conveyance?—The July conveyance conveys the six cottages to Major Nanney absolutely. The enclosure is dated the 29th December following that conveyance: therefore, the enclosure was subsequent.

17,650. I quite see your point?—That is the point.

17,651. That the cottages were bought before the enclosure was made?—That is the point, and, if the parish was wronged at all, it was evidently wronged by the Crown.

See 11,404.

17,652. Is there anything else?—Your Lordship asked for an account of the amounts which had been paid to the tenants of Mr. Ellis Nanney's property in respect of the game trespass. I now produce an account showing the amounts paid in respect of game trespass, and also the amounts paid for barley bought from tenants adjoining covers. Wherever the barley was damaged adjoining covers, the tenants were paid the full market value as if it had not been damaged, 5*s.* a stook.

Chairman—continued.

The following statement was handed in:—

Name of Tenant.	Holding.	Cash.	Barley Paid for.
		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
W. Griffith	Bettwsfawr	2 0 0	13 9 4
Mrs. Davies	Bettwsbach	—	4 10 0
W. E. Hughes	Efail Plashen	—	0 17 6
H. Ll. Roberts	Plashen	39 0 0	121 18 0
John Jones	Tynlon Plashen	—	1 7 0
Anne Owen	Llwyneryr	0 9 0	2 15 0
Griffith Pritchard	Penybryn	—	11 0 0
Hugh Williams	Llidiart	—	7 13 0
Mrs. Whittington	Tyddyn sianel	46 0 0	54 18 6
R. H. Hughes	Glynn	—	4 10 0
Jane Thomas	Nant glynn	8 0 0	—
		95 9 0	222 18 4½

17,652A. For how many years is that?—From 1872 to 1892.

Mr. Griffiths.

17,653. The damage by game then would be about 5*l.* a year for the 20 years?—That would not be quite so, because when the estate was re-valued in 1876 there was a permanent payment fixed upon in respect of two farms which were more liable to damage than others. In respect of one farm there is 4*l.* a year regularly allowed, and in respect of the other 3*l.* a year. Moreover, from those two farms as a rule nearly all the barley which is required for carrying into the covers is purchased at the highest market value, whatever that may be at the time.

Chairman.

17,654. That is all?—That is all, my lord.

The witness withdrew.

[Several witnesses were called, but failed to answer.]

Chairman.

It must be distinctly understood that we are ready to sit here all night, but if the gentlemen who were to give evidence to-day do not come forward, their evidence will not be taken to-morrow, as the day will be fully taken up by other witnesses. If witnesses do not come forward on the day they are called upon, we are afraid that we shall not be able to take their evidence.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. OWEN ROBERT HUGHES called and examined.

Chairman.

See previous evidence, 9719-9942.

17,655. Are you a tenant of Lord Harlech's?—Yes.

17,656. What is the point you wish to rebut?—The evidence given by Mr. Watkin at Portmadoc with reference to Gwernddwyryd farm.

Chairman—continued.

17,657. What do you wish to say about that?—I wrote to Mr. Watkin to tell him that I would be here, and this is a copy of the letter that I wrote to him (handing letter). I do not know if he is here at present.

Chairman—continued.

ee 9946.

17,658. Will you make your statement, please?—As to the advancement of rent, I altogether dispute the accuracy of the statement of Mr. Watkin that Gwernddwyryd rent was not raised. I have the rent receipts which prove otherwise. He said that the rent of Caecannol was 28*l.*, and Gwernddwyryd 74*l.*

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,659. In what year?—He did not give the year, I understand.

Chairman.

17,660. He says, "In 1813 I found by the "record that the rent of Gwernddwyryd and "Caecannol was 118*l.* 18*s.*" Is that right?—That is what he said, my lord; that is not right.

17,661. What is right then? What was the rent of these two farms in 1813?—I do not know about it in 1813, but my family have been there since the year 1822. I do not know anything about it before that.

17,662. We will go to 1822. He says, "The "grandfather of Mr. Owen Hughes came to "Gwernddwyryd in 1822." Is that right?—Yes, my lord, I believe so.

17,663. "And Caecannol was separate from "it at the time." Is that right?—When my grandfather came there—separate from it?

17,664. Yes?—No, that is not right.

17,665. "He paid 74*l.* for it, without Caecannol." Is that right? Did your grandfather pay 74*l.* for one farm?—I believe he paid 74*l.* There is the receipt book (producing book).

17,666. "Afterwards they took Caecannol." Is that right?—No, my lord, my grandfather took both together. If you will please take the rent book it will tell you. My grandfather, in the year 1825, had Caecannol as well as Gwernddwyryd.

17,667. What did he pay for Caecannol?—He paid then for both together, 95*l.* 6*s.*

17,668. Then "he paid 74*l.* for one farm, and 22*l.* for the other." Is that right?—Will you please allow me to read this, and I will show you how it is.

17,669. Did you get the evidence of Mr. Watkin?—I saw a part of it on my own proof, my lord. It happened to be on the same paper as my own.

17,670. Just give your own version of it, and we will try and work it out between the two?—He said that the rent of Caecannol was 28*l.* and Gwernddwyryd, 74*l.*, which added together will make 102*l.* But if you will look on the rent book you will find that the rent of Gwernddwyryd and Caecannol in the year 1825 was 95*l.* 6*s.*, and the same rent was paid until the year 1852, when my father gave up Caecannol, because it was a bad time and he had a hard struggle to pay his way. Caecannol then measured 22 a. 1 r. 7 p. In the year 1871 you will find from the receipt that part of Caecannol was again added to the farm for the rent of 18*l.* He had then to pay 18*l.* for 12 a. 2 r. 4 p.; whilst the rent only came down when he gave up 22 a. 1 r. 7 p., by 21*l.* 6*s.* All the land was about the same in quality.

Chairman—continued.

Professor Rhŷs.

17,671. Then he was paying 74*l.* when it came down to 21*l.* 6*s.* That comes out of the 95*l.* 6*s.*, does it not?—Yes, 21*l.* 6*s.* In the year 1873 you will find that the rent is raised from 92*l.* to 102*l.* And again in the year 1886 the farm is sold, and the rent in consequence is considerably raised; so that we have to pay 116*l.* for Gwernddwyryd and half of Caecannol, whereas formerly we had only to pay 95*l.* 6*s.* for Gwernddwyryd and the whole of Caecannol. That will leave about 36*l.* advancement of rent. Besides that, many acres of the farm were taken away for the tram road in the year 1856

17,672. Where is that tram road made?—It was going to a quarry called the Gorseddau. It is not worked now. That is about the advancement in rent.

Chairman.

17,673. Then we will put that in the evidence?—The plot of land which my father bought. As to this plot of land it measures 11 a. 2 r. 24 p., of which 1 a. 2 r. 26 p. is a small hill with no depth of soil, and upon which only gorse grows, when we put it up by auction for pasture we had no offer. The remainder measures only 9 a. 3 r. 38 p., which is arable land of light soil that requires much manure to be kept in good condition. There is not a bit of building on it. For this 600*l.* was given; so any man that knows anything about the land of this district would say that full value was given for it. My father sold it at that time for the same money. You know, my lord, Mr. Watkin said that we had 300*l.* bargain on that. Mr. Watkin said that he had seen part of this plot of land let for the summer months for 5*l.* an acre. I can prove otherwise from the sale book, which I can now produce.

17,674. What did it let at?—It was let at 3*l.* an acre.

17,675. 3*l.* and not 5*l.*?—Yes. I can again say that Mr. Watkin was not with Messrs. Huddart at the Sportsman Hotel, Portmadoc, the evening before the sale, when my father and Mr Williams, Plasisa, as an interpreter were with them trying to buy Gwernddwyryd, and that they told him to consider the thing, and call again next morning, which he and Mr. Williams did punctually, but Mr. Watkin was then with them, and they were not allowed to see the gentlemen. And the highest bidder at the sale next to the one that bought it was a member of Mr. Watkin's family, who lived then with Mr. Watkin; he did not bid by a wink, but he spoke it out. And he afterwards, at the same sale, bought Llwynmafonisa. I now have the conditions of sale of the Brynkir estate which prove my statement that the greater part of the estate was mortgaged. Shall I produce the document, my lord?

17,676. Is that contradicted?—Yes, he said something about it.

Chairman.

17,677. Did Mr. Watkin say that the estate was not mortgaged?—Not exactly that perhaps, my lord, but he said something about it.

I do not think that is very important.

Professor Rhŷs.

17,678. You can prove that it was mortgaged?—The fourth condition of the sale will prove it.

Chairman.

17,679. Is that all your evidence?—No, my lord.

17,680. What else do you wish to rebut?—As to the improvements. May I ask Mr. Watkin to prove his statement before the Commissioners as to the estate having spent 1,000*l.* on the farm?

17,681. He said, "The estate spent 1,000*l.* at "least in repairs of that place; we paid more "than 200*l* for slates alone." Is that what you want to rebut?—I do rebut it.

17,682. You say there was not 1,000*l.* paid on it?—I have a statement of the buildings here, which shows what the estate spent, and what my father spent, on the buildings, as close as I can make it out.

Sir John Llewelyn.

See 9946.

17,683. Pardon me, Mr. Watkin in speaking of the estate speaks of the whole of the estate. Do you understand Mr. Watkin in this answer to be speaking of the particular estate with which you were connected also?—Lord Harlech's estate?

17,684. No, the estate that you are interested in?—I am interested in both.

17,685. The estate he says has spent 1,000*l.*?—On the farm, yes.

17,686. But he does not say on the farm*?—But he is speaking of the farm

17,687. Let us have your own version of it?—He is speaking of the farm when he says that.

Chairman.

17,688. Tell us how much you spent by yourself, and how much you estimate was spent by the landlord?—That shows it (producing document).

* Mr. Watkin's statement at Qu. 9946 was, "The estate has "spent 1,000*l.* at least in repairs of that place," i.e., Gwernyddwyryd.

Chairman—continued.

17,689. Tell us what it amounted to?—I will, my lord. Since my family have been on the farm I make out that the estate has spent 419*l.* 15*s.* That is according to my statement, and my father spent on buildings, alone 425*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.*

17,690. Then we understand you to say that the estate paid 400*l.* odd instead of 1,000*l.* on that farm?—That is so, my lord. They did not spend a penny on anything else but buildings.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,691. May I ask you how you arrive at your figures showing that the estate spent only 400*l.*?—If you will look at that it will show you (producing document).

Lord Kenyon.

17,692. Whose valuation is it?—My own, my lord.

17,693. This is your valuation of what they spent?—It is.

Chairman.

17,694. Have you anything else to say?—It would be my greatest pleasure to visit Gwernddwyryd with one or two gentlemen of the Commission and Mr. Watkin, so that he may point to them where he spent the 1,000*l.* if he can; and I could show them at the same time what my father did on the farm.

17,695. Mr. Watkin says that 1,000*l.* was spent on this place since 1822. That was long before you had it?—No, my lord; my grandfather was there about that time. He came in then.

17,696. Then I quite understand it; you are both calculating from the same time?—"Owen Roberts" it should be, not "Owen Hughes," my grandfather. I put in a statement showing the amount spent on the buildings by my father and Mr. Watkin respectively. I have also a letter in my possession (which I produce) from Dr. Waters, of Chester, which proves that my father was so affected by the treatment he received that he sickened and shortly afterwards died. My father had exactly the same confidence in his landlord as Mr. Humphreys, Aberkin, has now; but, as you see, the estate went into other hands, and he was thus treated.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EDWARD WATKINS called and examined.

Chairman.

See 17,574–603.

17,697. What is it you wish to say?—This is a copy of the conviction of Evan David Jones, Bryn Pader. It is for cutting and stealing a tree: fined 1*s.*, signed by Inspector Roberts.

17,698. And that is a copy from the book?—From the book. I have seen it copied.

The witness handed in the document, which was as follows:—

Chairman—continued.

"Evan David Jones, Bryn Pader Farm, Llanfor (son), aged 20.

Date.	Offence.	Result of hearing.	Complainant.
1886. 9th January	Larceny (stealing a tree).	Fined 1*s.* and costs, and to pay for tree.	Edward Watkins, agent.

ROBERT ROBERTS, Inspector.

Mrs. Elizabeth Jones recalled and further examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

e 17,574. 17,699. Have you anything else to say?—I say that my son did not cut the tree. When I heard or came to know that the servant had cut the tree, I asked him why he did that without telling me, as I was in the habit of asking the agent for poles in order to fill up the gaps when I wanted them. He said it was not wrong to cut something a little, in order to fill up a gap in a fence on the land, and I told him he ought not to have done that on my place, and he said: "I will take the blame and anything which may result." He went to my son, who was in the stable——

Chairman—continued.

17,700. We are very sorry to interrupt you, but this ought to have been said to the magistrate, not to us; all we require to know is whether the conviction was proved or not, and unfortunately for you it has been proved, so that I am afraid we cannot do anything in the matter?—Robert Evans paid the expenses and the fine.

That is sufficient, I think.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Edward Watkins recalled and further examined.

Mr. Grove.

e above. 17,701. Were you present when this case was before the magistrate?—Yes.

17,702. Did the son Jones appear? Was he present when the charge was read out in the court?—I do not quite remember.

17,703. You cannot say whether he was present or not?—No.

Mr. Grove—continued.

17,704. Was he fined in his absence? Did he come in late, because I have heard some talk about his having arrived at the court after the case was either begun or had almost finished?—I cannot answer that question.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

The Victoria Hall, Bala, Merionethshire, Saturday, 7th October 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. OWEN SLANEY WYNNE recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

17,705. You wish to make a statement?—I wish to say a few words about a witness who gave evidence respecting my brother's property at Towyn last Wednesday.

what Mr. William Lloyd said about Waun, I stated before, and I now state it more emphatically, that he was about the worst farmer I ever came across in my life, and that is the reason he was turned out. He had a notice to quit previously, but there was a flaw in the notice, and on that account we had to serve him with another notice. Then again he said he was not warned. I can only say he was warned frequently. I went over the farm and I never saw a farm in a worse state. My brother went over it, and he can say the same thing. I assert that he was repeatedly warned as to his farming before he had notice to quit. He made one statement which might be misinterpreted. He said he met my brother one day when he was going to the Board of Guardians and there was a talk about the poor, and that my brother said "Keep them down, Lloyd." Of course when my brother said that he was referring to the Poor Rates. As a matter of fact, Lloyd had a tendency to keep up the rates, and during his time the rates were higher in the parish of Llanegryn, and my brother alluded to that. I believe that clears up everything. I can only say he had notice given in consequence of the bad state of his farm, and in no way on account of his political convictions, because he had already promised to vote for my brother on the County Council as a Conservative. He was turned out for his exceedingly bad farming.

The witness withdrew.

Sir HENRY BEYER ROBERTSON called and examined.

Chairman.

17,707. Are you the owner of estates in this county?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

17,708. Will you tell us the size of these estates, and where they lie?—In the parishes of

Chairman—continued.

Llanderfel, Llandrillo, Llansantffraid, and Llantysilio. There is a good deal of property in those and bits in other parishes. I do not know exactly what parishes, but altogether in Llanderfel and Llandrillo parishes about 3,612 acres.

17,709. We will say about 3,500 acres?—Yes.

17,710. Is that the whole of the property?—No, the whole property is about 5,000 acres; that is not including sheep walks. I could not give you the acreage of the sheep walks, because I do not know them; I have been trying to find out.

17,711. That is cultivated land?—It is cultivated land and pasture you might say. Out of that there are about 476 acres of wood, so far as I can make out, it is rather hard to get the exact figures.

17,712. Where there are rights of pasture for sheep runs, &c., in whom are such rights vested, and subject to what payments and conditions, and what is the effect on the rents of adjacent farms?—Some of the farms have a certain amount of mountain allotted to them over which they run sheep.

17,713. What have you to say as to politics and religion?—They do not enter into the matter in any way.

17,714. What sort of agent have you to manage the property?—At the present time I have not an agent. My father's old agent died this spring, and no new one has been appointed. In the event of any questions of dispute or anything like that arising, the tenants come and see me, and I agree with them on a separate umpire or arbitrator.

17,715. If you cannot agree you have an umpire?—Yes, we both agree upon one man.

17,716. What is the usual date of entry?—It is the 25th of March.

17,717. Of course there are yearly tenancies?—Yes.

17,718. Is there any demand for leases?—Not at all. My father used, I believe, to try and get leases, but they would not take them.

17,719. You compensate, I believe, by permanent reductions of rent, probably any people that have land taken away from them?—Yes.

17,720. Have your tenants any services to perform besides paying the rent?—I do not know of any.

17,721. Is there any haulage done by them?—In the case of new buildings it is the custom I think for the tenant to do the haulage, but very often it has been done by my father.

17,722. But it is customary in some cases?—Yes, it is generally a matter of agreement between the landlord and tenant.

17,723. You have nothing else that they do—no beating coverts?—Oh, no. I am very glad to see them when they do come, but there is no clause about it.

17,724. No drawing of coal up to the house for instance?—No, I pay for that certainly.

17,725. How are the rents fixed?—It is rather hard to say. I have only had to do with the property less than five years myself. My father died five years ago, and the agent died only last year. I believe in some cases they were raised a bit at the time the property was purchased. I have that information from the tenants, and I think it is correct—they were raised against new buildings and improvements.

17,726. There was a sort of percentage charge?—I do not know if that is exactly it. I understood the buildings were to be put in order, and that the rent was to be then fixed. The rents were fixed by valuation by an independent valuer.

17,727. You have said all you have to say about settling and re-adjusting the rent?—My father adopted the same principle. First of all, old Mr. White, of Rhydyglafes, acted as his adjuster, and then the Reverend Mr. Williams, a Calvinistic Methodist, a tenant farmer at Llandrillo, acted as arbitrator afterwards, and subsequently after his death, Mr. Thomas Jones, of Brynmelyn, has been always acting, and has been accepted.

17,728. You say the rents have not been raised generally or in individual cases within the last 50 years?—Since sending in my statement, I have got that information; I did not know it before.

17,729. Have there been any permanent reductions or temporary abatements of rent?—There have been permanent reductions during my father's time and my time, equal to 7½ per cent. on the gross rental—about that as near as can be. Besides, there have been temporary abatements of 10 per cent. from September 1885 to March 1889, and again from March 1891 to March 1892, and then again 15 per cent. from the 29th of September 1892—that is in addition to the permanent reductions.

17,730. Of course you have given notice to the tenants?—Yes.

17,731. How long after it is due do you get your rent paid?—About three months usually. It varies a bit.

17,732. The rates and charges are paid in the same way?—I believe so.

17,733. Now what is the average size of the farms in your district?—They vary very much, I think, from about 4 acres up to 250—I have that figure down here, but I am not quite certain. I think one is larger.

17,734. How many farms do you think you have?—About 74.

17,735. Has there been any consolidation?—I cannot remember it, except in one case. There was one small farm tumbling down, and there was no water near it, and we did not build it up again, so that it was put in with another farm. I believe there have been small consolidations, but not in my time though.

17,736. Can you tell us about the repairs and improvements, and what has been the amount spent?—Yes, I can give you the figures if you like. They have been rather hard to get, but the following statement is fairly accurate.

17,737. That is since 1876, there has been 18,415*l.* spent on the property?—That is on buildings—tenants' property. That is not in connexion with any covers, or anything on my private property.

17,738. Nothing to do with the house?—Not my own house or my own covers in any way. We have the figures for a longer period, but those are the details for those years as near as I can get them.

17,739. I think that is just what we want to know, that since 1876 you have spent 18,500*l.* roughly in improvements and repairs?—That is so far as we know, but I am afraid it is under the mark.

17,740. I suppose you do most of the improvements yourself—the tenants do not do much?—They do occasionally; if they want to put up an iron shed—a Dutch barn—they have asked me for poles sometimes.

17,741. In case of drainage, you find the pipes of course?—Yes, as a rule. I find the pipes, but I believe in some cases they have found the pipes.

17,742. And you find material and labour for other improvements?—As a rule.

17,743. And you find the fences and gates?—Yes, gates. In some cases with reference to the fences I find the material, and they put them up.

17,744. And the tenant does the cartage?—It has not been always the case. I found out that in many of those years a great deal of the cartage was done by my father, because we had a team of horses then working, and they used to do odd days for them, but as a rule the tenants do the cartage.

17,745. You do not contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, never.

17,746. Have you much game on the property?—I do not know if there is much. On some farms there is more than on others, but every now and then there are small complaints, and I try to deal with them, and the way in which I deal with them is to send an independent valuer.

Chairman—continued.

17,747. You have no trouble with your tenants with respect to the game?—No, I do not think I have ever any trouble with my tenants. All the food required for game is purchased in the district, and I do not think there is any more now than there used to be. There is just about the same.

17,748. Then your relations with your tenants, I take it, are very friendly?—I hope so. I think I know most of them personally; in fact all nearly. There may be some little dissatisfaction expressed sometimes.

17,749. Do you happen to have many changes on the property?—No, very few; there have been some changes; I think I said no changes had taken place, but that was a slight mistake.

17,750. The bulk of the tenants remain?—It was necessary to take one farm in hand at Llantysilio, and on another farm I had to have a change as the tenant was not satisfactory.

17,751. Out of the 74 farms the bulk of the tenants remain?—Yes.

17,752. With few exceptions?—Yes, very few.

Lord Kenyon.

17,753. I think your father had a great deal to do with the railway system down here?—Yes, he had. He and the late Mr. Thomas Brassey brought the railways up here. I think it was mainly owing to my father's exertions.

17,754. They made the district?—I cannot say. I do not remember it before the railways, but judging from the increase in the receipts of the railways, as we know the amount of the traffic, it probably would be so.

17,755. I should think this country owes a great deal to your father?—I may say it was the fishing and the game that brought him up here to start with.

Mr. Grove.

17,756. You speak of certain sheep walks being attached to certain farms and used by the tenants. Are the number of sheep they can turn on limited in each case?—I believe there is some understanding, but I do not think there is any written law. That is a question a tenant farmer could answer better than I could.

17,757. Could you give us the time the property was purchased?—It has been purchased at various times. I think the first purchase was in 1859, and it has been bought at subsequent dates.

17,758. I think you stated that your father rather wished to grant leases?—So I understood.

Mr. Grove—continued.

17,759. And the tenants did not seem inclined to take them?—No, I believe not; I believe he could not get them to take them.

17,760. There is one case of consolidation that you speak of, and you say the building was not rebuilt or repaired for want of water?—It was not in a suitable place, and it would have taken a great deal of expense to make it a good holding.

17,761. As the question of consolidation is looked upon as rather an important one, let me ask you this: why was it put there originally if there was not a proper supply of water?—I cannot tell you that; it was before my time.

17,762. I think you state, generally, the question of game does not cause any unpleasant relations between landlord and tenant?—I have claims every now and then, and I always try to meet them as fairly as I can.

17,763. Could you give us the amount of compensation you have paid during the last few years?—I believe I can give them to you for two years at all events. This list shows the amount paid lately, and the amount of money expended in the district for food to the farmers. It only goes back two years. I have no record further back than that. Chairman.

17,764. You would like to have those figures put in, I suppose. They seem very liberal?—Yes; I find that for 1891 it is about 90*l.* paid in food, and in 1892 it is about 85*l.* I have only four items of trespass down amounting to 18*l.*

17,765. For the two years?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

17,766. I think you once had a very distinguished tenant. Did you pay her for unexhausted improvements?—No; but she paid no rent. I should like to say one word as to some evidence given the day before yesterday. One witness complained of my agent at Palé as being an incompetent person. I have no agent. He mentioned the name of Mr. Armstrong, who is my secretary, and was my father's secretary, but he was no more my agent than the witness was.

Chairman.

17,767. This is a question put by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Have you not taken great interest in "fish culture?"—Yes, I have, a good deal. I have turned very many thousands of salmon and trout into the river, and still continue to do so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS JONES called and examined.

Chairman.

ee 16,974. 17,768. Are you a farmer, land valuer, and county councillor, living at Brynmelyn, near Corwen?—I am.

17,769. About what part of the country do you wish to speak?—The parish of Llandderfel.

17,770. Who owns that property?—Earl Dudley, Sir Henry Robertson, Mr. Price, and Mr. Wynne of Rüg. The land in this parish is mostly the property of four large proprietors, the remainder being the property of small proprietors, and only one freeholder farming his own land. More than half the parish has changed ownership during the last 35 years. It is partly arable and partly pasture, and a mixed system of husbandry is pursued. The houses and outbuildings are good, and have been much improved of late years.

Chairman—continued.

Rents are uneven, but, as a rule, are higher than adjacent parishes. Rents were advanced before the land was sold, and again by the new proprietors, and remained so up to 1880. Some have remained so up to now, but others have been reduced, and abatements were given in 1886–87 and in 1892–93. One farm was advanced equal to 60 per cent., and still remains so. Rent is generally fixed at a gross sum by the landlord or his agent, but the late Mr. Robertson appointed an independent valuer, and so does Sir Henry Robertson; and the practice is extending.

Tithes in some cases are included in the rent; in others it is paid by the tenant to the landlord.

Income-tax paid by the landlords. Land-tax and local rates paid by tenants. Local rates have increased 20 per cent. in 40 years.

Size of farms vary from 20 acres to 200 acres, the majority being under 80*l.* annual rent, and only three or four above 100*l.* There has been no consolidation of late.

Cultivation generally good, but there is much more land in pasture; and land at a high elevation is going out of cultivation, and speedily returning to its normal state, owing to the low price of corn and high price of labour.

Improvements are generally made by the tenants, but the buildings by the landlords, and the tenants often carting free and without any chance of compensation. Some landlords have contracted themselves out of the Agricultural Holdings Acts, 1875–1883, and these Acts have been of very little benefit. I know of no instance where compensation has been given for the general improved condition of a holding. Many years ago there was a right recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of their holdings to suitable successors, but this has vanished with the change of the ownership of the land.

Game preserving is not carried to such extremes as it was 20 years ago; still there is a certain amount of it carried on now. The Ground Game Act is not much availed of by the tenant, on account of fear of offending the landlords; and much damage is done in some places, and the tenants are only occasionally compensated. I consider that extensive game preserving affects cultivation injuriously, makes the relations between landlord and tenant strained and uncomfortable, and has a bad effect on the labourers and the public. The sporting rights over Crown lands have been sold to the neighbouring proprietors.

Agricultural education is being given from Aberystwith College.

Railway rates are higher into Merioneth, and are based on a higher scale than on the Great Western main line. The rate for hay and straw to Llandderfel is excessive, and the farmers are altogether at the mercy of the railway company. The Royal Commission on Railway Rates has made matters worse.

Tenant farmers and their wives take an active share in the manual labour of the farm, and the children often work at home and only get clothes and some little pocket-money, and present rents could not be maintained if the children's labour was paid for.

Labourers, if single, are lodged and fed at the farms; if married, they mostly live in the village, as there are very few cottages on the farms. More cottages are wanted in the country; scores of cottages existed at the beginning of the century, where now no vestiges of them are to be seen.

House accommodation is much improved.

Diet is much better, and there are many more opportunities for self-improvement than formerly.

There have not been many migrations of farmers, but of farmers' sons and labourers a great many, chiefly to the large towns and the mining districts.

There are very few, if any, diaries or farming accounts kept.

Depression began about 1879 and has continued till now with slight improvement in 1889 and 1890. I attribute it to bad seasons and foreign competition, and the farmer suffers more than any one else.

Remedies.—First, apply tithes to the relief of local rates.

Secondly, give the tenant farmer greater security of tenure.

Thirdly, a better security for compensation for improvements.

Fourthly, fair rents.

Sir John Llewelyn.

17,771. You say you know one instance of a farm raised 60 per cent.?—Yes.

17,772. What is the amount of the rent of that farm now?—65*l.* I think now.

17,773. It has been raised 60 per cent.?—Yes I got it from the tenant himself.

17,774. Do you consider the farm is worth that sum?—I do not.

17,775. In recent times—I do not mean to say for a series of years back?—Perhaps in 1875 or 1876 it was.

17,776. You think at that time it was worth that?—Perhaps about that.

17,777. But now owing to the depression it is not worth so much?—No.

17,778. You think there was some ground for raising the rent at that time?—Oh, certainly.

17,779. When you say that the landlords contracted themselves out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, I can understand it; but are you aware of the 55th section of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—The tenants consider that the landlords have contracted them out of that as well as the Act of 1875.

17,780. They have no power?—I understand it is so.

17,780*a.* You think the tenants generally do not?—The tenants generally do not.

17,781. That is the point. In your opinion would it be any advantage to the tenants if the Act was printed in Welsh?—I believe it would, if it was circulated.

Mr. Grove.

17,782. Do you hold any land under an agreement ?—I do.

17,783. Have you put a copy of the agreement in ?—I have not. My father was the original tenant. The agreement was made with him, and as succeeding tenant I am held by the agreement.

17,784. Are the clauses what you consider fair as between the tenant and landlord ?—Not having a copy of it myself, I cannot say, but when I found I was under an agreement the valuation of my crops came down some hundreds of pounds.

17,785. You say the railway rates are higher. Is it that because they have been advanced the last 12 months since the recent inquiry ?—They have.

17,786. Could you send in a memorandum showing where the goods are taken from, and where they are taken to, and the distance and the rate paid ?—I could.

17,787. You do not know whether the Railway Companies are charging more than they are legally entitled to ?—Oh, certainly not; they are not charging more than they are legally entitled to.

17,788. They are under their statutory powers so far as you know ?—Well, I have a letter from a trader, if you would like to hear it, bearing on that point.

17,789. Is it very lengthy ?—Very short.

17,790. Perhaps it would be interesting that you should read it ?—"The rates into Merioneth "are based on a higher scale than those on "the Great Western Company main line; even "those on the Minera Branch Railway—a line "I consider more difficult to work, and causing "greater wear and tear—are on a lower scale. "I consider the Board of Trade acted unfairly "towards this district in granting the Company a "higher scale on the lines from Ruabon to "Festiniog and Dolgelly, than to most of the "other systems. Some of our rates have been "advanced, others remain the same, and if any "application is made to alter, we are met with "the reply that the rate is within their scale. "Sept. 30, 1893."

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,791. When was this farm advanced 60 per cent. ?—It was advanced at various times to that figure.

17,792. On whose estate is it ?—I do not know whose property it is now; it was the property of the late Dr. Richards when it was advanced. I believe it is the property of a minor at present.

17,793. Of course the landlord pays the tithe. When did the landlord start to pay the tithe ?—On the Rhiwlas estate in 1888, I believe. On other estates since the passing of the Tithe Act. On Earl Dudley's estate the tithe is put in with the rent on every new taking, but on old takings the tenant pays the amount of tithe to the landlord.

17,794. How is the tithe fixed when it is put with the rent on the new taking ?—From what I have seen of those, it has been taken at the present value, not at par.

17,795. Do you know of cases where it is taken at par ?—I do not. There have not been many changes on the estate during the last four years, so there cannot be; but in those cases where there are, it is fixed with the rent and generally at the present rate.

17,796. You do not know what prompted the landlord on the Rhiwlas estate to pay the tithe himself instead of the tenant ?—It was a period of depression, and the farmers were complaining, and I believe he readjusted it as he thought it would be more easy for the tenants, and also cause less trouble. The tithes mostly on the Rhiwlas estate are very low, I must say that, especially in Llanfor, but not in our parish.

Lord Kenyon.

17,797. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, you said it was not much used. Do you think that is possibly on account of the expense of working it as against an agreement. Where an agreement is fair the tenant would prefer to abide by the agreement than go to the expense of arbitration ?—The tenants do not feel inclined, as a rule, to fight with their landlords or agents.

17,798. In fact the relations are friendly ?—The relations are friendly.

17,799. You are a land valuer ?—Yes.

17,800. You have valued some of the land in the district round you ?—I have valued for the last ten years extensively.

17,801. What is your opinion of the rents —In every case I have been valuing I have had to make a reduction.

17,802. Lately ? — I commenced after the depression in 1883.

17,803. Do you think the landlords in this country are attempting to meet their tenants in the way of abatements and reductions ?—In our parish they are. We have had a reduction of 15 per cent. the last two years from Sir Henry Robertson and from Earl Dudley.

Chairman.

17,804. This is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Did you look at your father's agree-"ment under which you say you now continue "to hold" ?—I never saw it.

17,805. You have never seen it ?—Never.

17,806. "If so, may Mr. Owen Wynne con-"clude that you do not consider it of any "importance" ?—I never knew of it until about six years ago.

17,807. You never knew there was an agreement ?—I never knew there was an agreement.

Lord Kenyon.

17,808. You did not think it of much importance, then ?—I thought I was free from an agreement. I thought there was no agreement.

Chairman.

17,809. Under whom do you farm?—Earl Dudley.

17,810. You are one of Earl Dudley's tenants?—Yes, I am, and my father was before me.

Lord Kenyon.

17,811. Have you a copy of that agreement?—No.

17,812. Have you asked for one?—No.

17,813. So that I take it you do not care much about whether you have it or not?—Well, I have great faith in Lord Dudley, and that he would not hurt me.

Chairman.

17,814. This is a question by Mr. R. H. Ll. Price: "As a land valuer, how would you value "land farmed for rabbits, as compared with "the same land under sheep, the same ground "keeping both sorts of stock equally well?" Can you answer that question?—I call that rather a comical question. I would value the land on its merits, and keep what he likes on it.

17,815. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "When you say landlords contract out of the "Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, do you mean "that they try to contract out of the whole "Act, or only out of those clauses which are "not compulsory?"—Those clauses which are not compulsory.

17,816. "Will you name any landlord who "tries to contract out of the whole Act?"—I cannot.

17,817. These are questions by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Do you, in re-valuing farms on the "Palé estate, go carefully over the farm and "take into consideration the special peculiarities

Chairman—continued.

"of each farm, and the improvements effected "by the tenant and landlord respectively?"—I do.

17,818. "Is this the practice on other estates?"—I presume that means, is the valuation of other estates done in that way?—Where I have been it has been the same.

17,819. So far as you know it is the same?—So far as I know.

17,820. "Were the rents on the old Palé "Estate screwed up before it was purchased by "the late Mr. Robertson?"—Very much.

Lord Kenyon.

17,821. Was that in order to induce Mr. Robertson to give a better price?—I cannot say.

Chairman.

17,822. There is another question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Was it not on account of "the Anti-tithe agitation that the landlords "determined to pay the tithes themselves?"—I cannot answer for the landlords.

17,823. "Is there a tenant named Thomas "Jones, Tynant, on Earl Dudley's estate?"—There is.

17,824. You know him?—I do.

17,825. "Do you know whether he received notice to quit an account of his persisting to refuse to pay the tithe?"—I do not know. It is not in my parish.

17,826. This is a question by Mr. William Darley—"Have you not land for which you are the trustee or the owner?"—I have.

17,827. "Have you reduced the rent?"—I have.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS called and examined through an interpreter.

See evidence of next witness, and generally 7722 and 16,914.

17,828. The following statement was read:—

"Evidence of Mr. John Williams, of 8, Tegid Place, Bala, formerly tenant farmer.

"Evidence relates chiefly to Bala portion of the estate of Sir Edmund Buckley of Dinasmawddwy.

"I have been for 35 years on the Hirnant estate. My father lived at Gelligrin farm on that estate 23 years ago. Mr. Richardson, who was at that time owner of the estate, gave notice to all his tenants. The estate was then put in the market but was not sold. He then tried to raise the rents, but all the tenants left. Three of the farms were, however, let at an increased rent. Two of these farms were let to two Scotchmen who were not able to continue long on the estate. One farm, adjoining these let to Scotchmen, was let to a Welshman. The following September the Welshman had notice against his will and he left in March and one of the Scotchmen had it. Before the close of the following year the estate was sold and relet, in many cases, to old tenants.

"I eventually took a farm called Maeshir, under Sir Edmund Buckley. About the time the notices were given, the lease which my father had on a farm called Gwastad y Groes fell, and his rent was raised from 20*l.* to 60*l.*

"When Sir Edmund Buckley bought the estate the rent was raised on every farm from 20 per cent. to 30 per cent. The rent of Maeshir in Mr. Richardson's time was 45*l.*, raised to 65*l.* for my brother, who came in after the purchase of estate. He left and the rent was reduced to 60*l.* for me.

"At one time I held Maeshir and Gwastad Groes, and also a sheep-walk worth 10*l.*; the rent of the three reached 130*l.* This was reduced 20*l.* twice, so that I was paying 90*l.* when I left.

"After the passing of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, the agent came round and compelled us to sign a form waiving the advantages of the Act.

"For about four years the estate was in the hands of a receiver, and during this time we received no repairs but had to pay our rent in full into the bank to the credit of the receiver.

"We were never allowed to burn the heather on the hillside, which was destroying the pasture for sheep. The heather was, of course, useful for the rearing of game, the shooting being let. It was because I could not burn the heather, so as to make the best possible use of the farm, that I determined to leave.

"A tenant was never allowed anything for carting materials for building.

"I will also speak as to the clause in agreement whereby a tenant is compelled to offer his sheep to landlord or incoming tenant, whereas there is no corresponding liability on the tenant or the landlord to take them. This agreement is not now in force."

Chairman.

17,828A. Is that your statement and is it correct?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

17,829. What do you say about the purchase of sheep?—I should like to bind over the landlord or the incoming tenant to purchase the sheep so as to avoid their being sold away.

17,830. Is it not usually the custom of the country for the incoming tenant to pay for the sheep?—Yes, that is generally the case, but farms are now such, that it is difficult to let a farm on which there are many sheep.

17,831. Do you know of any case in which the incoming tenant has refused to take the sheep?—Yes.

17,832. In that case who has had to take them—the landlord?—Somebody from outside who may choose to buy them.

17,833. What happens: have they to establish a fresh flock?—Yes, they have.

17,834. Can you mention the name?—A Scotchman who came to Dolwen. He was Mr. Wilson. He refused the sheep and he took Gelligrin, as I have said before. The first tenant who had only been there a year and had bought them, had to sell them outside.

17,835. Do you not think the Scotchman was a great fool not to take them?—He came without any capital.

17,836. Do you know of any cases on Sir Edmund Buckley's estate where the tenant bought his holding?—I do not. There are some on the Dinas side, they are not on the estate on which I was.

17,837. Was the Mr. Buckley who bought the estate any relation to Sir Edmund Buckley?—Sir Edmund Buckley we call the son now.

Chairman.

17,838. Was the estate sold or not?—Yes, at the time of which I am speaking of, it was at first.

17,839. Was it sold by Sir Edmund Buckley, or was it not?—It was sold to Sir Edmund Buckley.

17,840. And Sir Edmund Buckley is now the possessor of the estate?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

Mr. Interpreter, a question I asked about a fresh flock being established, does not seem to have been quite accurately put. The question I asked was: "Has a fresh flock been esta- "blished; that takes a long time, does it not"? and you interpreted that, "Did they buy new "sheep for the place?"

The Interpreter.

Yes, I took that to be your meaning.

Lord Kenyon.

17,841. What I want to know is, was a fresh flock established on the whole, because it takes a very long time to do so?—Yes, but it was a small place, a little mountain, and not a large place.

Mr. Griffiths.

17,842. Who was the owner of this estate before Mr. Buckley bought it?—Mr. Richardson.

17,843. You say that the rent was raised to all the tenants. About how many rents were raised?—There were about 15, some small and some large.

17,844. And they all left?—All the large farmers left. Some of the small farmers remained.

17,845. Then you say that two Scotchmen took a farm apiece?—Yes.

17,846. How long did they continue there?—I cannot be sure about Mr. Thomson, of Maes y Fallen; the other remained two years at Dolwen and one year at Gelligrin.

17,847. Why did they leave?—They failed to pay the rent.

17,848. Have you many Scotchmen's graves about here?—I cannot say. They live here, but they go away from here to die.

17,849. Then it is very plain they cannot live on these Welsh hills. You find fault that you are not paid for hauling on this farm?—I had nothing at any rate. I have not blamed them much.

17,850. Why did you not stop on the farm and enjoy it then after you had taken all the trouble?—My health had broken up.

17,851. Did you not say just now that it was owing to the heather being burnt?—No, I did not say that. I said that the heather was not burnt.

17,852. And did you find that that was a great loss to you?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,853. You say that after the estate was put into the market by Mr. Richardson, and when it was not sold, that Mr. Richardson then tried to raise the rents of all the estate?—Yes.

17,854. And the tenants all left?—Yes.

17,855. Was your brother at Maes Hir in the time of Mr. Richardson?—No.

17,856. Could you tell the Commission the amount of the increase which Mr. Richardson required in the rents?—No, I cannot.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

17,857. I suppose you consider it was a hardship to this tenant, who was obliged to sell his flock of sheep, because when he became a tenant of the farm he could get 2*s.* or 2*s.* 6*d.* above the market value for them, and when going out he could only sell them at the market value?—Yes.

17,858. But as a general rule I take it that the custom is observed of the incoming tenant buying the sheep from the outgoing tenant?—It is a custom, but it would be better for us to have a law.

17,859. Is it not sufficient if it is in the agreement?—It is not in the agreement.

17,860. What kind of farmers do you consider Scotchmen are?—I do not know enough to express an opinion upon that, but they failed to do anything with the farms, and went away.

17,861. Do you think their method of cultivation is suitable to the Principality of Wales?—No, especially as to the sheep.

Mr. Griffiths.

17,862. You did not tell us where these Scotchmen had their sheep from?—They had some from Scotland and from various places.

Chairman.

17,863. A question is handed in by Mr. William Darley, which is as follows "Can you "tell me of any case when the sheep were not "taken over since Sir Edmund Buckley purchased the estate?"—No, I cannot.

[The Interpreter.

He stated with regard to the clause in the agreement, that there was such a clause in the agreement, but that it does not exist now.]

17,864. There is a question handed in by Mr. Vincent. "The raising of rents you speak "of was in the time of Mr. Richardson, was it not?"—No, he failed to raise the rents. It was in Sir Edmund Buckley's time, when he took the tenants anew.

17,865. Who was the agent who went round and asked you to contract out of the Act of 1883?—His name was Mr. Griffiths.

17,866. The following question is handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Jones. "Was it not a great "loss to the tenant to sell his sheep off the farm?"—Yes.

17,867. This question is also by Mr. Llewelyn Jones. "Are there many Scotchmen on Sir "Edmund Buckley's estate now?"—No, not one.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Buckley called and examined.

Chairman.

See evidence of preceding witness.

17,868. What do you wish to state?—I am acting as agent for my father on the Aberhirnant estate. There were one or two statements made by the last witness with regard to taking over the sheep. He said that in the present agreements there was no clause taking over the sheep. That was strictly untrue. Unfortunately I have not got one of the agreements down here, but will put one in at the next place you sit at. (The Interpreter: The last witness said just the contrary; he said that was the case at one time, but that it is not now.) The witness stated the rents have been raised since my father purchased the estate. I can only say that I will put in a paper showing the rents. I believe the estate was purchased in 1871 or 1872, and I will put in a paper showing the rents also in 1829. (The witness handed in document.) The valuation of 1829 I am not quite able to make out. There are some little alterations, but those are the rents in 1870, 1882, and the present time.

17,869. The estate was purchased in 1870, was it not?—No, 1871. The last witness would know when it was purchased; I am not quite certain myself.

Sir John Llewelyn.

17,870. He said 22 or 23 years ago?—Yes, I am not quite certain about that.

Lord Kenyon.

17,871. It was all purchased at one time?—It was all purchased at one time. That is the present rental, or rather taking it after 1883; that is the last one; and also 1882. I should like it to be read out, if it could be.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Chairman.

17,872. Is what the witness stated according to the shorthand writer accurate. "About 1870 "he gave notice to his tenants and tried to sell "the estate"?—That is Mr. Richardson, before my father bought the estate. I can say nothing about Mr. Richardson's time.

17,873. "He then tried to raise the rents, but all the tenants left." Then the last witness said that the rents were raised in your father's time?—He stated that. I have put that in, so that you can see the rents in 1870, and the present rents. I was not agent myself in 1870, but that will show that the rents were not raised. As to 1829 I want it left out.

17,874. Shall we take it in 1829 first?—No, my Lord. I cannot make that out. You can take some of them as being perfectly correct.

Lord Kenyon.

17,875. You cannot verify them?—I cannot verify them. I have the valuation in my pocket.

Chairman.

17,876. What do you want to prove?—I want to prove that the rents, instead of being as they were at the time the estate was bought, are about half.

17,877. That is now ?—Yes.

17,878. But what he says is not that the rents are raised now, but that they were raised some time ago ?—I should like him to state where they have been raised.

Lord Kenyon.

He says they were raised since 1870, and that goes to show that they have been lowered since 1870.

Chairman.

17,879. What he said was that the rents were raised, and all the large tenants left ?—That was before my father purchased the estate.

The Interpreter.

What he did say was that when the estate was bought by Sir Edmund Buckley the rents were then raised by Sir Edmund.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,880. He gives an instance of one farm being raised. That was his brother's farm ?—I do not believe that was on the Aberhirnant estate.

Chairman.

This is rather puzzling. Will you read his evidence again, please.

The Interpreter.

This refers to Mr. Richardson. "He then "tried to raise the rents, but all the tenants "left."

Chairman.

17,881. Then, was the estate bought by your father ?—Yes, my Lord.

The Interpreter.

"About the time the notices were given, the lease which my father had on a farm called Gwastad y Groes fell in, and his rent was raised from 20*l.* to 60*l.* When Sir Edmund Buckley bought the estate, the rent was raised on every farm from 20 to 30 per cent."

Chairman.

17,882. Now, we have it. When did Sir Edmund Buckley buy the estate ? About 1870 ?—From 1870 to 1872. I am not quite certain as regards the date. All the tenants did not leave in Mr. Richardson's time ; Thomson was at Maesfallen, and I do not know about the others. I say I was not the agent at the time.

17,883. From your knowledge, the rents on the estate were not raised by your father ?—No, to my knowledge they were not. Many of the farms were empty at the time, to the best of my knowledge ; there were no tenants at all.

Lord Kenyon.

17,884. When he bought it ?—When he bought it.

Mr. Griffiths.

17,885. Can you supply us with the rents of these farms in Mr. Richardson's time ?—I can supply you with the rents in 1870 which were taken from the valuation in 1870.

17,886. I do not mean in your time, but I mean in Mr. Richardson's time ?—I believe that is the rental in Mr. Richardson's time—in 1870.

Chairman.

17,887. They were all empty ?—That is what it was valued at. Some of those were let ; for instance, Maesfallen was let to Thomson, and I believe Gelligrin and Dolwen ; I believe there was a tenant in those, but when the estate was bought, that was what the rent was put down at.

17,888. It was put down at that, but have you anything to verify that ?—That is the rental, I believe, they were receiving for it up to the time the tenants left.

17,889. You believe it ; you have nothing to prove it ?—No, I have nothing to prove it now I can prove it afterwards.

17,890. That was the rent of the estate in 1870 ?—Yes.

17,891. It was put up to this value, when all the tenants had to leave ?—I may say from my own knowledge there was one tenant in, and that was at Maesfallen ; they did not all leave. I believe that there was a man named Maxwell, who was a Scotchman, at Dolwen and Gelligrin, and I believe those were both in in my father's time ; they left afterwards.

17,892. This 1870 valuation, so far as we understand it, gives the rents which were put on the different farms, and when they were put on these farms the tenants left, most of them ?—That is the rental when the estate was bought ; that is what it was put down at.

17,893. That is what it was put down at in the sales ?—Yes.

17,894. But when you came into the estate you found no tenants on it at all ?—We found some ; there were only a few tenants.

17,895. The estate was practically cleared ?—Yes ; it is a very large wild estate, and I think there were only a few tenants, 15 or 16 tenants, on the whole of the estate.

17,896. You were led to believe, when you bought the estate, that would be the fair rent ?—Yes, exactly.

17,897. Not being aware that the rent was so excessive that it had cleared the ground ?—Yes, my Lord.

17,898. Can you put that in ?—Yes, my Lord.

17,899. You still say that you think that was a fair rent ?—I consider it was a fair rent in 1870.

17,900. Though you are now aware that the rent was so high that all the tenants left ?—That statement was made that they left, but I do not think it was altogether that. I think it was the Scotchmen coming down into Wales, and that they did not understand their language, and they did not find it pleasant for them. If there had been more Scotchmen in the country, they would have stopped there—if there had been a larger colony of them.

17,901. That does not quite follow. What I mean is, that you put in this as the rent of the estate when you bought it?—Yes.

17,902. Though there were no tenants?—Though comparatively few tenants.

17,903. And that was the rent that was demanded from the persons who took the farms under your father?—Yes, my Lord, to the best of my belief.

17,904. Since that time it has been impossible to keep them up, and they have gone down?—The farms are all let.

17,905. You have put a farm at 300*l.* in 1870, and you say that that farm was valued—that that was supposed to be the rent?—Yes, 300*l.*

17,906. That is Maesfallen?—Yes, we were receiving that rent for it, it was one of the farms occupied when my father bought the estate.

17,907. The rent was 300*l.*?—Yes, we were receiving that rent for it.

17,908. You found that was an impossible rent, because in 1882 you had to bring it down to 205*l.*?—We had to bring it down to 205*l.*

17,909. That was one-third less. Since that, in the next 10 years, you found that was so high that you had to bring it down to 160*l.*?—No, that is not the case; it was not that, that was so high. I may tell you that in our old agreements there is a clause, which has been altered now, to the effect that the incoming tenant must take the sheep over, and that clause is still there, but it was the incoming tenant or the landlord. I may say before I took the agency over, that all the tenants gave notice; they put their heads together and gave notice simply to get the landlord to reduce the rent. He would have to take the sheep over; therefore we reduced the rents, as you will see. I consider those rents are simply ridiculous.

17,910. The tenants were of opinion that the rents were high, and you were not?—We were not. We were always ready to have it valued.

17,911. But the practical result for 20 years was that the rent which you thought fair in 1870—300*l.*—fell to 160*l.*?—Yes.

17,912. That is it practically?—I consider the 300*l.* was not too high.

17,913. You consider 300*l.* was a fair rent?—Yes, fair rent now.

17,914. Your tenant thought not?—He thought not.

17,915. And the practical result of you and your tenant putting your heads together is that the rent has fallen 50 per cent.?—No, the combination of all the tenants to give notice, simply to get a reduction. I do not know the exact number of sheep on the estate, but it is a large estate, and it requires a lot of capital. They all gave notice; I do not think it was because the rents were too high; I think it was because they thought they had got an opportunity.

Chairman—continued.

17,916. They thought the rent was too high?—I do not think so, my Lord. I think it was for other reasons.

17,917. That is your opinion?—Yes, my Lord.

17,918. Do you wish to put in that list?—I put that in.

The following list was handed in:—

—	1870.			1882.			1893.

17,919. It shows a great fall in the rents since 1870, when you bought the estate?—Yes, my Lord.

Lord Kenyon.

17,920. Was the estate valued for your father when he purchased it?—That I cannot say for certain.

17,921. He did not buy under a valuation?—I should say not.

17,922. You would not know. Since he bought it, am I to understand that the old tenants returned?—So the last witness stated. I do not know, for I did not know the tenants. I was a mere lad in 1870. I quite believe it.

17,923. The result was that all the farms are let?—All the farms are let.

17,924. And let to Welshmen?—Let to Welshmen, with the exception of one, who is an Englishman; he has about 12 acres, and he is my foreman of woods. I do not call that a farm.

17,925. You spoke about some combination; but apart from your combination do your father and yourself and the tenants get on well?—I think we get on very well indeed.

17,926. I want to ask you one thing with regard to burning heather. A late tenant said something to the effect that he could not get the heather burnt?—The heather, I believe, before I took the agency over, and since my agency, has been burnt by the keepers.

17,927. Do you not consider (you know something about grouse ground) that it is equally advantageous for the grouse and for the sheep to have a certain amount of heather?—Yes, I do, certainly.

17,928. Under care?—Under care. It wants very great care.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

17,929. A certain amount of long heather is equally useful to the sheep as to the grass land?—Yes; I consider it extremely useful, especially when there is snow on the ground. There is less loss in that case than with entirely grass hills.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,930. I think you said that the rents in 1870 were fair rents?—I consider them quite fair.

17,931. Were you in a position in 1870 to say that those rents were fair. What was your age in 1870?—I said that those would be fair rents now. I made a mistake in saying that I considered them fair rents in 1870, because in 1870 I was only about 10 years old. I consider those rents in 1870 would be fair rents now.

17,932. They might not have been fair rents in 1870; they might have been high rents?—From all evidence which we have heard so far, it seems probable that times were better in 1870, and that they have never been so bad as they are now. Many of the witnesses have stated that the times are worse now. Mr. Thomas Ellis, of Cynlas, came and stated yesterday, that he never knew the times so bad as they are now.

17,933. But it does not follow. They might have been high rents in 1870, although the times were so bad?—But I consider that the rents in 1870 would be fair rents now, and 1870 was a better year than this.

17,934. Are you in a position to compare stock and produce in 1870 with stock and produce at the present time?—No, I am not, but I say all the evidence of Mr. Ellis, of Cynlas, and other persons, is that things are worse now than they were in any other year.

17,935. I think you said that you were acting as agent for your father?—Yes, I am acting as agent for my father.

17,936. Will you kindly tell us what training you have had for the agency?—I have had some experience in farming, that is to say when I lived at home, we farmed to a certain extent.

17,937. How many acres?—200 acres, something like that, chiefly grazing. I have also been in an estate office with Mr. Naylor, of Kerry, agent, and Mr. Swetenham; you probably know Mr. Swetenham.

17,938. Yes?—I was in Mr. Swetenham's office for some time.

17,939. Was it you who generally sold the produce of the farm?—No.

17,940. Have you had any experience in selling stock and produce?—I have had very little experience in selling.

17,941. Then I gather that you have not had any means of judging of the value of stock and produce?—I consider that I have had; I attend fairs, and know what prices are.

17,942. Do you know the weight of an animal?—I can fairly judge it. I do not say that I should be exact; I could make a very rough guess at it.

Mr. Grove.

17,943. Do we quite understand from you that the rents were raised between 1870 and 1882? I believe they were not; I cannot state for certain about 1870, but after 1882 I have put in the list. There are two exceptions, namely Gelligrin and Dolwen Ucha, which are higher now.

17,944. Two small exceptions?—Two small exceptions, and those I can explain.

17,945. You see you have put in the rents of 1870 and then you put in the rents of 1882—12 years after—and then you put them in for 1893, which is another 11 years. May we take it that, with those two exceptions, the rents were not raised between 1870 and 1882?—Yes.

17,946. Then you have referred us to three cases; there is one where the rent was 300*l.* in 1870 and is now 160*l.*; there is another where the rent was 125*l.* in 1870, and now is 60*l.*; there is another where the rent was 170*l.* and is now 105*l.* Do you consider that in each case, those farms are worth the rents which show the larger figure as shown in 1870?—I consider that they are worth what is put down as the rent in 1870.

Sir John Llewelyn.

17,947. Did Mr. Williams hold Maes Hir and Gwastad Groes at the same time from you?—Yes, I may state that Gwastad Groes is held as sheep-walk, with a house or cottage on it.

17,948. Shall I find those farms on this list? Yes, I did not put Gwastad Groes down; I put it down as Maes Hir.

17,949. You told us that the rent was 130*l.*, but it was twice reduced, and when he left it was 90*l.*?—It was 90*l.*

17,950. Do you usually let more than one farm to one tenant?—There are sheep walks at Stacros.

17,951. I do not know about the sheep walk. He seems to have held Maes Hir and Gwastad Groes. Are they now let to new tenants?—No.

17,952. They are still let to the same tenants?—Yes, they are still let to the same tenants.

Chairman.

17,953. The following question is handed in by Mr. W. J. Kerr: "Have you had any recent "applications for farms with sheep walks"?—I have, since the Commission has been sitting, even.

17,954. These questions are by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "How long did Mr. Thomson stay at "Maesfallen after your father bought the "estate"?—I cannot say for certain, but I believe for some years.

17,955. How many years?—I cannot say for certain.

17,956. You do not know?—No.

17,957. "Do you know how much Mr. "Maxwell and Mr Thomson lost at Maes-"fallen when they paid 300*l.* a year for it"?—No, I certainly do not. I do not know that they lost anything.

Chairman—continued.

17,958. This question is by Mr. Jones: "Did "not Mr. Thomson leave because the rent was "too high"?—I do not think that was the case. The house was bad in those days, and it has been entirely rebuilt, and I believe if the house had been rebuilt at once, Mr. Thomson would have stopoed on.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,959. I have one question to ask you. Have you in any case been advertising in any English papers for tenants?—I do not think I have ever advertised for an English tenant, and I do not think I have put advertisements in.

17,960. Or in an English paper?—I have advertised shooting.

17,961. You have not advertised for tenants?—I do not think that I ever have. The "Cambrian News" is the usual paper. I will not be certain; I can tell you if I look it up, but to the best of my recollection I should say, No.

17,962. You have advertised in the "Cambrian News"?—Yes, continually.

17,963. Any other paper?—I have advertised in another little paper in Bala called "Y Seren," a Welsh paper.

Mr. Griffiths.

17,964. According to that list the rents have been reduced from 1870 in most cases?—Yes.

17,965. Why did you do so?—Why have they been reduced?

17,966. Yes?—I really cannot say why they were reduced; some of the farms were empty, and they were let at a low rent really to start with; that is what I call the 300*l.* I explained the reason why they have been reduced to such an extent, is because the landlord did not want to take all the sheep over.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

17,967. That was the combination of tenants?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,968. Was it because you could not get any local applicants that you were obliged to advertise?—No, we got applications, but I think it is always as well to put an advertisement in.

17,969. Is it customary on estates like Sir Watkin's, Lord Harlech's, and Mr. Wynne's of Peniarth, to advertise for tenants?—I do not know, but I would not compare Sir Watkin's estate with the Aberhirnant estate.

17,970. Have you ever seen advertisements for tenants on the estate of Sir Watkin?—I have never looked.

17,971. You have never looked at the columns of the local papers?—Oh yes, but I have never seen one of Sir Watkin's. I do not say I will compare the two estates; one has 15 tenants and the other has, I forget how many thousands.

Chairman.

17,972. This question is by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Was not Mr. Thomson obliged to stay "seven years on this farm because he was under "lease"?—I do not know how long he stayed, I know it was a leasehold, and I believe he gave it up before his lease expired. I cannot say really for certain; that is 1870, I was only 10 years old at the time, and I cannot state as regards that.

Mr. Robert Wynne called and examined through an Interpreter.

[The following statement by the witness was read:—

"Evidence of Mr. Robert Wynne, Clegir Canol, Bettws Gwerfil Goch.

"I am a tenant farmer. My forefathers have occupied the above farm on the Jesus College (Oxford) estate for some generations. The farm I occupy is a remote hill-farm, which is very difficult of access. The rent has been raised at various times after my predecessors, and I have gone to expense in the way of improving the place by drying the land or reclaiming uncultivated land. I produce a number of receipts showing the rent of the farm. [The receipts were handed in.] This increase of rent is especially hard in view of the fact that agricultural prices have fallen 40 per cent. within the last 20 years and that at the same time the price of labour has increased 30 per cent.

"The work on my farm has been done partly by my family and partly by hired servants. Some of my children grew tired of working at home without wages, and have gone to work elsewhere

"I have done all the haulage towards buildings without any pay. Some of the buildings are in very bad condition, notably the stable and barn. About 10 years ago, I had an abatement of 10 per cent. or 15 per cent. on one half-year's rent. Then, some time afterwards, I had a similar abatement of 15 per cent., from 1886 to 1888 or thereabouts. I had 3*s.* in the 1*l.* abatement on the rent, due on the 25th September last year, and we had no abatement on the half-year's rent, due last May. We, the tenants of the estate, have appealed for a permanent reduction in the rent. They let the game to strangers. The rates are very high—the poor rate is 3*s.* 4*d.* in the 1*l.*"

Chairman.

17,973. Is that your statement, and is it correct?—Yes.

17,974. What is the size of your farm, and what is the rent you pay for it?—I pay 50*l.* rent now. It was not quite 41*l.*, 20 years ago. The extent of the farm is close upon 100 acres.

Sir John Llewelyn.

17,975. When was the appeal for a reduction of rent made?—Before we received this abatement of 3*s.* in the 1*l.* eight or nine years ago we appealed to him together as tenants.

17,976. Who were "we"?—The tenants of the Jesus College estate.

17,977. All over the United Kingdom, do you mean?—The tenants at Bettws Gwerfil Goch.

17,978. How many are there?—There is only myself up yonder, but there are others, about 2 miles from me by the side of the Holyhead Road.

17,979. How many do you speak of when you use the word "we"?—From 24 to 30. The agent is here; you may ask him.

17,980. That is quite near enough for what I wanted. Did you say that the rent was raised after improvements by reclaiming waste land. Am I right as to that?—Yes.

17,981. Did you make any application to the College authorities under the first schedule of the Act?—I do not understand that we did that time. I am not perfectly certain. There was an abatement of 3*s.* in the 1*l.* for three years.

17,982. That is not the question. The question is whether you have made any application?

The Interpreter.

He said he did not perfectly understand whether they did at that time.

Mr. Richard Jones.

I do not think he understood the question. Will you again ask about the Agricultural Holdings Act?

17,983. Did you make any application to the College authorities under the first schedule of the Act?—I do not understand that we did, that is I am not quite certain about it, and I should not like to say so, unless I was certain.

17,984. But surely you would know if you made any application to the authorities of the College under the Act of Parliament?—I do not understand what you mean by that; it is perfectly strange to me.

17,985. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes. I cannot explain it.

17,986. Do you know that you might get compensation for some improvements?—No, I did not know that; that is why I came before these gentlemen and these Lords now.

17,987. Would you understand the Agricultural Holdings Act better if it was printed in Welsh?—It is certain we would, in our own language.

Mr. Grove.

17,988. To whom did they make the application for a reduction of rent?—To our own agent, Mr. Clough, of Denbigh.

Mr. Grove—continued.

17,989. And, of course, everything connected with the estate goes through Mr. Clough?—Yes.

17,990. What advance of rent have you had since you went to that farm?—My rent was raised by the agent who was there before Mr. Clough.

17,991. But from what was it raised, and what is it now?—The rent when I went to the farm was 40*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,992. What year was it?—About 26 years ago, and Mr. Jones, of Carnarvon, as they call the agent, then raised the rent, so as to complete a sovereign and make it into 41*l.*

Mr. Grove.

17,993 Then when you did not like to pay the larger rent, did you not bear in mind that the rent itself goes for the purpose of education to Jesus College?—I know that it goes towards education; but as prices of animals and so on are decreasing, what will we do and to whom will we apply?

17,994. When was the last advance in rent made?—20 years ago. In 1873.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,995. Do you know who is the Bursar of Jesus College?—Yes, I know quite well. I am very fond of him.

17,996. Was the rent raised after Professor Rhŷs became Bursar?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

17,997. Has it been reduced?—No, it was not reduced, but an abatement was given. We pay the rates just the same.

Mr. Richard Jones.

17,998. Were the improvements made before the year 1883, before the Agricultural Holdings Act came into operation?—Yes, two or three parts were done before that.

17,999. Two or three parts of what—of the improvements?—Improved parts of waste land, so as to cultivate them.

18,000. Have you got an agreement?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

18,001. Does the education given in Jesus College benefit you at all?—We farmers know nothing about it. We feel that a good deal goes from us towards it.

18,002. Why do you wish the College to reduce your rent permanently?—For the reason that it has been permanent for such a time. They were good times when the rent was raised, and now the prices of animals have fallen, wages have been raised, and all calls on us run high, so that we cannot afford to pay them as things are now.

18,003. Do you not consider that if you have your rents reduced permanently you will have your rates reduced?—Yes, I would be glad to get that.

18,004. What is the amount in the 1*l.* you pay now to the rates?—3*s.* 4*d.*

18,005. That is the reason you want to have your rent reduced permanently?—Not the only reason. It is part of the reason.

18,006. It is one reason. Have you made application to the College to have it reduced?—Yes.

18,007. What did they tell you?—They said that the college could not afford to give it; that they would allow 3*s.* in the 1*l.* for two years.

18,008. But how is it that they gave you no abatement upon the last rent?—I cannot say. That made us all more angry. We had an abatement before the last rent.

18,009. Do you not think that times are worse now than they were before?—Yes, they certainly are. It is getting worse and worse.

Lord Kenyon.

18,010. Have you stated at all to the Bursar of the College what the improvements are?—No, it is seldom that they come yonder, and I should be glad if they came up oftener. When they do come they do not come up to the mountain top yonder.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,011. Do you remember that I went to the highest part of your farm the last time I was there?—To the highest field, sir. You would not come higher.

Lord Kenyon.

18,012. Could you describe the improvement that you have made, as to the generally improved state of the farm, or could you specify them in any way?—Yes, I could mention especially four or five places, and show where they are.

18,013. What sort of weather was it when Professor Rhŷs went there?—It was a heavy thunderstorm when Professor Rhŷs visited the house, and he was in a hurry to go away.

Professor Rhŷs.

It is quite true that I visited the place, and I waited for the storm to go off.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ROWLAND DAVIES called and examined through an interpreter.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of Mr. Rowland Davies, Rhydygethin, Llandrillo.

"I am a tenant farmer occupying a farm called Rhydygethin, belonging to Mr. Parry Glanpaith, Aberystwith.

"I propose to give evidence with reference to the parish of Llandrillo. The parish is about 2 miles square. It may, as to the character of the land, be divided into two parts—the valley, which contains a large amount of arable land; and the mountain and high land, which is chiefly used for sheep and cattle pasturage.

"The chief landowners in the parish are Earl Dudley and Sir Henry B. Robertson.

"I know of no leases for years in the parish; the farms are held from year to year, the land being entered upon on the 25th of March, and possession of the house being given on the 13th May.

"I desire to present evidence chiefly on the following points:

"In view of the fact that market prices have fallen, rents are much too high to allow the tenant farmer to meet all his liabilities. Farmers' children are compelled to work at home without wages, and receive very little in the way of pocket money.

"Consolidation of farms: This has generally taken place with a view to save building new houses and outbuildings. I propose to hand in a list of the consolidations which have taken place in the district within the memory of living men."

[The following list of consolidations was handed in.]

"Cae Caregog and Blaen-y-Pennant.
"Tyddyn-y-famaeth and Cernyw.
"Ty Cerrig and Cadwst.
"Maes and Tynant.
"Llystyn and Llawrcilan.
"Ty Croes Pennat and Cross Foxes.
"Tyn llwyn and Moelysgoedwig.
"Tyddyn powel and Plas-yn-dinam.
"Hen felin and Dudley Arms farm.
"Tyn y wern and Garthiaen.
"Llechwedd cilan and Llawr cilan.
"Ty coch and Branas Ucha.
"Tyfos isa and Tyfos Ucha.
"Llechwedd and Garthiaen.
"Llechwedd bach and Cross Key Farm.
"Ty Croes and Moelygoedwig Isa.
"Tyn yr ywen and Rhyd y glafas.
"Tyddyn y coed and Tyn y coed.
"Cryniarth and Cwmisa.
"Heolganad and Plasynyfaerdre.
"Rhos y mardy and Rhyd y glafas."

Chairman.

18,014. We had better have the number?—21.

Lord Kenyon.

18,015. How many are there now?—There are 21 instances.

18,016. But how many farms do they make now?—There are 21 farms now.

18,017. How many were there originally?—About 42 or 43.

[Statement continued.]

"The result of this has been that the population of the district is one half of what it was some years ago. Again this has resulted unfavourably upon the cultivation of the land.

"Increase in rates have been 50 per cent. in the last 25 years.

"Character of agricultural labour in the district. I should like to give the following instance of the way the sitting tenant is refused a reduction in the rent, when a reduction is afterwards made on letting the farm to a new tenant. Mr. Thomas Jones, the new tenant of Ty nant on Lord Dudley's estate was formerly (1879 to 1882) tenant on Major Tottenham's estate. The rent he paid was 51*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* He asked his landlord for a reduction and as this was refused him he gave notice to quit and eventually left. The following tenant stayed for 18 months and then left without, it is understood, having paid his rent. The farm is now, I believe, rented at 35*l.* The agent wrote me offering it for 30*l.*

The Witness.

I hand in a copy of an agreement. [Handing same.]

Lord Kenyon.

18,018. Whose agreement is this, Major Tottenham's?—Yes.

18,019. Have you been Major Tottenham's tenant?—No.

18,020. How did you get hold of this then?—I got it here to-day.

18,021. You got it from someone else, I suppose?—Yes.

18,022. Why do you put it in. Is there anything you wish to remark about it?—Mr. Jones gave it to me.

18,023. Who is Mr. Jones?—Mr Llewellyn Jones.

18,024. But do you know anything about it yourself?—No, I scarcely know anything about it; but I know he offered the farm at Pen y bryn to me for 30*l.*

18,025. You put it in as Mr. Jones's agreement with Major Tottenham's? Is that so?—I have nothing to do with it.

Mr. Griffiths.

12,026. Do you consider that the effect of the consolidation of these farms is that the population has been reduced to one-half?—Yes.

18,027. Has it had any effect upon the rates as well?—Yes; to some extent the soil is worse.

18,028. What was the first rent of that farm which you say is let now at 35*l.*?—51*l.*, I think.

Mr. Grove.

18,029. You are speaking as to the circumstances of the parish in which you live, are you not?—Yes, so far as I understand them.

18,030. Is any land within the parish let according to the agreement that has been put in?—I do not know.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ROBERT ROBERTS called and examined through an interpreter.

[The following statement of the witness was then read.]

"Evidence of Mr. Robert Roberts, Hengaer isaf, Llawr y bettws, Corwen, tenant farmer.

"Evidence will chiefly relate to Rûg Estate and to the township of Nant ffriar in the parish of Llandderfel."

Chairman.

18,031. Whom does the estate belong to?—It is the Rûg Estate belonging to Mr. Wynn.

[Statement continued.]

"Occupation.

"Tenancy commences March 25th, but out going tenant may occupy part of house and buildings till May 1st following.

"No compensation given for damage caused by felling trees.

"Agreements.

"Copy of agreement on Rûg Estate put in.

"The following are the Clauses which are considered oppressive: Six months' notice to quit. Right to enter to cut timber without adequate compensation for damages. The preserving of the game by the landlord. The obligation placed upon the tenant to keep all the buildings, fences, gates, &c. in repair. The obligation placed upon the tenant to keep dogs for the landlord and to carry coals, &c. to the landlord's residence. The clause whereby the tenant is liable to a penalty for a breach of any of the terms of the agreement. The exclusion of the Agricultural Holdings Acts.

Chairman—continued.

"On Mr. Henry Robertson's estate there is no written agreement; the tenancy is under Agricultural Acts and custom of the country.

"The effect of the above clauses upon cultivation is, that they absolutely prohibit the tenant from farming in as husbandlike a manner as he otherwise would. The agreement is very similar to that on the Rûg estate, but it includes the obligation on the tenant to supply a fat goose at Christmas. (See Clause 9 in the agreement.)"

18,032. Is that on Mr. Wynn's estate?—No, on Mr. William Kerr's estate, of Maesmor.

"The rent varies greatly between the small and bigger farms. On the Rûg Estate the tenants are expected to carry coal for their landlord and to keep a dog, if necessary. During the last 30 or 40 years rents have been raised generally from 35 per cent. to 45 per cent. During the last five years reductions have been made on a few farms, and temporary abatements given varying from 5 per cent. to 15 per cent.

"Size of farms.—Farms have in numerous instances been consolidated, and this has had a very detrimental effect on agriculture. It has also meant a serious decrease in the population.

"Cultivation.—There is a great scarcity of agricultural labourers and this is due partly to the fact that houses are scarce. The Agricultural Holdings Acts are, in almost all instances, excluded. I know of instances where farmers have improved their holdings by draining the land, making outbuildings, and adding to the house, and making important alterations inside the houses. Instead of receiving compensation they have been compelled to pay an increased rent. My father's farm was formerly on the Rûg estate. My father improved it, but it was sold to Mr. Henry Robertson, who, no doubt, paid Mr. Wynn a sum which was in respect of the improvements made by my father.

"Tenant farmers.—The children of tenants have to work in many cases harder than the hired servants, and often without any wages. Notwithstanding this, it is with difficulty that their parents are able to pay their rents and to meet their liabilities. I know of one instance in particular, where the two sons of a farmer, the eldest of whom is nearly 40 years old, have always worked at home without receiving any wages. The landlord was approached and asked to lower the rent; but declined to do so, telling them either to leave or to rest contented.

"Evidence relating to the late Robert Reece, of Pontpren, on the Rûg estate.

"The following facts are well known:—

"Robert Reece took the farm of Pontpren in the year 1859 for 14*l.* 4*s.* 0*d.* rent. When he went there he had 200*l.* capital, and the house being in a poor condition he built a new house at his own expense. His father-in-law, who had been the previous tenant, had also built the outbuildings at his own expense. After the house was built, the rent was raised to 18*l.* When hard times came, Reece went down in the world and eventually died on the parish.

Chairman.

18,033. Is that your statement, and is it correct?—Yes

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,034. You speak of oppressive clauses?—Yes.

18,035. And the exclusion of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

18,036. It is in the evidence in chief, and that is what I want to know?—That is so.

18,037. In the evidence in chief you complain of the exclusion of the Agricultural Holdings Act. Do you complain of that?—I complain this much, that the landlord on the Rûg estate refused to allow tenants to receive any benefit under the Agricultural Holdings Act.

18,038. Did they apply to make any improvements?—I do not know that any application was made, but it shows at once that the landlord, Mr. Wynn, does not wish that the tenant should have any benefit from the Act if there is any benefit to be obtained.

18,039. I am under this difficulty. Are you a tenant of Mr. Wynn's or a tenant of Mr. Kerr's?—I am not a tenant of either of them.

Chairman.

18,040. Are you not a tenant under the Honourable Mr. Wynn?—No, I am not.

18,041. Under whom are you a tenant?—Sir Henry Beyer Robertson. My father was a tenant of Mr. Wynn's.

Lord Kenyon.

Mr. Robertson, Sir Henry's father, bought the farm. I think that is it.

Mr. Grove.

18,042. By what means do you say or did you obtain information that any landlord wished to deprive the tenant of the benefits of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—That is obvious from the fact that the landlord puts it down in the agreement with his tenants.

Sir John Llewelyn.

But it is not in that agreement.

Mr. Grove.

That is exactly what I was coming to.

18,043. You have had no personal experience of the agreements that are put in, have you?—No, not myself, but my father has been a tenant for about thirty years.

18,044. Can you show us the clause 8 in the agreement that contains that?—It says in the agreement which has already been put in, as far as I understand it.

Lord Kenyon.

18,045. Will you point to the clause [the agreement was handed to witness]?—It is clause 12, "The Agricultural Holdings Act 1875 "shall not apply to the holding."

Mr. Grove.

18,046. There is no clause that you object to in Mr. Kerr's agreement I suppose?—No, but it is almost the same as that of Mr. Wynn, of Rûg, except the last clause.

Mr. Richard Jones.

See 18,100–18,108.

18,047. The ninth clause is this: "The tenant "shall keep a dog, send a fat goose to the Hall "at Maesmor, and cart for a day in each year "if required to do so, and protect the game, "fisheries, and trees from being injured or de-"stroyed by unauthorised persons, and shall "prosecute such trespassers or allow the land-"lord to do so in his name." Was the rent advanced by Mr. Robertson after he bought the farm on which your father was?—The land which was being sold by Mr. Wynne was valued.

18,048. That is not an answer to the question?—When the valuer appraised the land it was for the purpose of selling the land; he advanced the rent a great deal more than it used to be to my father, but Mr. Robertson did not advance the rent until his valuer valued it.

18,049. Was it bought by private treaty?—By public auction.

18,050. According to the valuation of a certain valuer; it was by valuation?—By valuation.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

18,051. And what you complain of is, that the valuation was made on improvements done by your father?—Yes, quite so.

18,052. Had Mr. Kerr an agent?—No, I am not aware that he has.

18,053. Has he a large estate?—I am not certain of the number of his tenants. I believe he has about 20 perhaps, or thereabouts.

18,054. And he receives the rents himself?—Yes, he does so, I believe.

See 18,201–18,209.

18,055. I have one or two other questions to ask you. Did Mr. Wynn of Rûg refuse to give Brynbrith to Mr. Williams, the son-in-law of the former tenant, a Nonconformist, and let it to a Churchman, who failed subsequently to pay the rent?—I cannot assert that; but there is a rumour among the inhabitants in the neighbourhood that it was refused to Mr. Williams. I cannot say so, but Mr. Williams himself can prove it better than anyone else.

18,056. But that is the impression in the neighbourhood?—Yes, that is the impression.

18,057. Did Mr. Wynn pursue a similar policy with regard to Trewyn?—Well, I have heard so; I cannot be certain of that. I have heard it, and there is a letter written under the agent's hand or the landlord's hand, that Trewin Farm was not to be let to any Nonconformist but only to a Churchman. I have not seen the letter myself, so I cannot be certain; but I have heard that someone has it, and very likely the Commissioners will get it by-and-bye.

18,058. Do you know of many cases where Nonconformists have been succeeded by Churchmen on the Rûg estate?—There are few cases, I believe, where Churchmen have succeeded Nonconformists.

18,059. Are you well acquainted with the Rûg estate, and would you be able to say what has been done?—Yes, as to a part of it, but not the whole of it.

18,060. In the part that you know, what is the proportion of Churchmen to Nonconformists?—Well, I cannot say. That is a question I cannot answer at present and give the exact number of them; but, in general, I believe about a fourth part of the tenants are Churchmen on the estate.

18,061. About one-fourth are Churchmen?—Yes, very likely.

18,062. But could you answer this question; generally speaking, do the sons succeed the fathers on the estate?—Yes, I believe they do on the estate, mostly.

Mr. Griffiths.

18,063. Is there much timber on the Rûg estate?—There is.

18,064. And much damage done by carting?—Well, I remember the owner of the Rûg estate cut down timber from the farm where my father lived, and they did a great deal of damage at the time, damaging the hedges and the land as well.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

18,065. Did your father have any compensation?—None at all.

18,066. Are you aware that if a landlord bars himself out of the Agricultural Holdings Act it is void according to the law?—No, I am not.

18,067. I will just read you one portion of it, the 55th section, "Any contract agreement or "covenant made by a tenant by virtue of which "he is deprived of his right to claim compensa- "tion under this Act shall, so far as it deprives "him of such right, be void both in law and "equity"?—The Agricultural Holdings Act is wholly a dead letter in the part I represent.

18,068. But it cannot be a dead letter in that respect?—It is.

18,069. You say that Robert Reece built a house. Was he ever paid anything for that house?—Nothing at all.

18,070. And it cost him 200*l.*?—Yes, it cost him somewhere about that; it must have done by building and improving the land.

18,071. And his father-in-law also built some shedding, did he?—Yes, the outside buildings.

18,072. Can you give the amount of that?—No, I cannot. I did not get it.

18,073. So he sunk all his money on another man's land?—Yes, that is so. He had the slates for the house; but he was obliged to pay a part for the timber for buildings on the estate.

Lord Kenyon.

18,074. Did I understand you rightly that your rent has not been altered—that it is the same as your father paid?—Yes, it has been altered.

18,075. Has it been raised?—Yes; but it has been reduced after——

18,076. It has been reduced back again? Yes.

18,077. What I gathered from you was that the valuer valued the farm above the rent that you paid in order that Mr. Robertson might pay a better price for it?—It is very likely that was the object, although I cannot be sure—to get a better market price.

18,078. But although he may have paid rather above its value, he did not increase the rent?—The rent was not raised to the Rûg valuation.

18,079. Was it raised at all?—Yes.

18,080. How much?—9*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*

18,081. It was raised when he bought it 9*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*; then, how long afterwards was it reduced?—About ten years after the sale.

18,082. How much was it reduced then?—About 7*l.*

18,083. You have given us a very interesting schedule of prices. Is there much corn grown on your farm; do you grow any wheat?—Yes.

18,084. Do you raise any wheat?—A little.

18,085. For thatching, for straw?—Yes.

18,086. For the straw?—Yes, for our own use.

18,087. And I think you said Mr. Kerr had about 20 tenants?—Yes, somewhere about that.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

18,088. Do you think he gets 20 fat geese at Michaelmas?—Well, I know some of the tenants refuse to give one.

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,089. Can you point out to me in either of the two agreements put in any attempt to contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—No, I did not refer to that.

18,090. That is what I wanted to know. You did not mean to refer to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—No, I did not.

Lord Kenyon.

18,091. May I point out that you said in your evidence in chief, "The Agricultural Holdings Acts," in the plural; it should have been the one Act?—Yes.

Chairman.

18,092. A question is sent up by Mr. Vincent: "Are you authorised to speak for the tenants of "Mr. Wynn, of Rûg, or those of Mr. Kerr"?—Well, we had a meeting in our neighbourhood, and I represent the farmers for that part. Some of them are the Rûg estate farmers, some of them are otherwise.

Lord Kenyon.

18,093. Would you mind stating whether that was a largely attended meeting?—Well, I daresay there were somewhere about from 20 to 30 tenant farmers.

18,094. Somewhere from 20 to 30 tenants on different estates?—No; 20 to 30 in all.

Chairman.

18,095. Question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Is "the clause as to supplying a fat goose ever "enforced; is it not obsolete?" Is it not done away with?—No, it is not.

18,096. It is in force now?—It is enforced now, year after year.

18,097. Another question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Supposing the rent of a farm was "50*l.*, and the tenant had three children working "for him without wages, and the landlord "reduced the rent to 25*l.*; what wages per "week would the tenant then pay to each of "these children?" Can you calculate that; can you give any answer to that?—Well, that depends upon the nature of the man, and what kind of a generous farmer he would be, to pay his sons wages and salaries.

18,097A. Question by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "How long is it since Mr. Kerr has been in the "habit of supplying his tenants with copies of "their agreements"?—Well, I know there are some farmers, some of his tenants, who have not got copies of their agreements. I do not know whether they have asked for copies or not, but I know there are some who have not got them.

18,098. But they have signed the agreements?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

18,099. Another question handed in by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "What is the opinion of the "tenantry in your district as to the value of the "Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883"?—Well, if I am to speak of that, I believe that most tenants know nothing about the Act; not one out of fifty knows anything about it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM JOHN KERR recalled and further examined.

Witness.

be 18,047.

18,100. I am the son of Mr. Kerr, of Maesmor. My father is not present here to-day; I wish he was. With regard to the two clauses which the man who has just gone complains of, first with regard to keeping a dog. To my knowledge, I believe I can safely say that no tenant has been asked to keep a dog on the Maesmor estate since my father has possessed it.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,100A. How long ago would that be?—We may say 30 years, I think. With regard to the other clause, which I believe existed in many of the old Welsh agreements (and which has evidently not been removed although, I admit, I thought it was) it has long since become obsolete, and has never been enforced for many years.

Chairman.

18,101. Are those the two things you wish to speak about?—Yes. That clause has not been enforced for many years. A good many fat geese do find their way to Maesmor at Christmas time, I believe, but they are free gifts of the tenants, and many do not give a goose at all.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,102. And they are probably better geese—fatter—than if they had been sent under the agreement?—I believe so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,103. Are you in a position to say that tenants do not feel this burden, but continue sending the geese for fear of giving offence to their landlord?—No; I believe that every goose that goes to Maesmor is given of the goodwill of the tenant, and many do not send at all. Those who do not wish to send one do not do so. I believe I am right in saying that they are never asked to send one now; they might have been in former years, but it has not been done for some few years back. I was quite unprepared for the question arising, but I believe I am right in saying that.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

18,104. You look upon it as an expression of good feeling by the tenant towards his landlord?—That is the way we look upon it. I have heard my father say so.

18,105. And in the same way, I suppose, your father gives them game occasionally?—Yes, he does; he gives them game and rabbits very often.

Professor Rhŷs.

10,106. Then are we to conclude that the people who do not send the geese do not entertain the best feeling towards their landlord?—No; probably they cannot have geese. My own idea is—I cannot say for certain, but I think it is extremely likely—that some of his farmers have geese, and others have not. If they have a fat goose they very likely send one. Those also who have not a fat goose, probably do not send one. I do not know, but I think that is extremely likely.

Chairman.

18,107. Another question by Mr. Llewelyn Jones is: "Are geese sent on other estates?"—That I cannot answer.

18,108. You have no knowledge of that?—I have no knowledge that they are.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I may tell Mr. Jones that it was the custom on my own estate, and I struck it out many years ago, but the geese still come.

Witness.

I will go so far as to say that I do think that it is a clause which I should strike out myself.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. W. T. Rowlands called and examined.

Chairman.

18,109. You are a farmer?—Yes, living at Tan-y-coed, Maerdy, Corwen.

18,110. And a small freeholder?—Yes.

18,111. What is your evidence chiefly in respect of?—Small freeholders, common land and district roads in the district of Penllyn.

18,112. Who is your landlord?—Myself.

18,113. You only farm your own land?—Yes, only my own farm.

18,114. Only your own land?—Only my own land.

18,115. Will you read us what you have to say?—"There is a considerable amount of mountain unenclosed land in this district, which is nearly all sheep runs, the rights of which are vested in the adjoining holdings or those in the same townships. The owners of these holdings have an exclusive right to the pasture on their sheep walks, which are defined by metes and bounds, derived by custom from the olden times. When a holding is sold the right to the sheep walk belonging to it also goes with it, the same right again is taken into consideration when the farm is rented, as being pasturage belonging to the farm. The Crown claims the minerals and the game over it, with all manorial rights, and usually lets the game on a lease to some one party.

"There is a continual contention between the farmers with regard to this land. It is overstocked with sheep, many turning more sheep upon it than their sheep walk will hold. They consequently oppress their weaker neighbour's pasture, and this leads to disputes as to the boundaries, some tenant farmers in this way acquiring more land for their landlord and in some instances at the expense of the small freeholder. Even between tenants belonging to the same estate there are often quarrels about their sheepwalks. All this is very detrimental to the general condition of sheep farming, through over stocking and constant disturbance to the sheep.

"Cultivation.—Labourers are very scarce, and experienced ones are hardly to be had at all; we are obliged to do with very young men. There are instances of many acres of land of the best soil lying waste for the want of drainage as it lies between more than one owner. Those who are anxious to reclaim it cannot do so without the joint action of the others.

"Facilities for the carriage and disposal of agricultural produce. Most of the small tenant farmers and small freeholders are at a great disadvantage owing to the want of proper highways. They have to use roads which were originally constructed as mule and bullock tracks centuries ago, and which are narrow and steep. This means much discomfort and expense to farmers who live near them, while they pay highway rates the same as those that have good roads and live by the main roads.

Chairman—continued.

"General condition of the farming population:—

"Proprietor farmers.—There are a few who have inherited their holdings from their ancestors but not many. Their number has decreased by their being absorbed in the large estates. There are tenant farmers who bought either their own or other holdings for their own occupation, and all those I know of, have done so from the fear of losing their homes. This took place about 40 years ago and one instance about 10 years ago, and in all these the purchase-money was excessive. They borrowed nearly the whole of the money on mortgage from their friends at 4 per cent. interest, and they never have been able to pay it off, because they bought it too dear for fear of losing their homes, and their present situation is as bad as that of tenant farmers. These holdings are of high and inferior land, as for example: (A.) 44 acres bought from Sir Watkin about 40 years ago for 700*l.*; present mortgage 600*l.*; annual interest 24*l.*; previous rent 22*l.* (B.) 31 acres bought from Sir Watkin at the same time as the others for 650*l.*; present mortgage 400*l.* at 4 per cent. (C) Bought from Sir Watkin at the same time as above for 1,000*l.*; present mortgage 700*l.*; previous rent 34*l.* (D.) 44 acres bought from Mr. Price, Rhiwlas, about 10 years ago for 1,000*l.*; present mortgage 900*l.*; previous rent 30*l.* I can give the names if required.

"General.—The remedies I suggest for improving the profits from land are:—Legislation to encourage and aid peasant proprietors and for facilitating the transfer of land; an arrangement for the owners of holdings to buy the Crown rights in their sheep walks and a compulsory allotment and enclosure of them; compulsory acquisition of land for widening or constructing new highways when a majority of a neighbourhood requires it; a change in the law so that one owner cannot frustrate another from having his land drained. A better administration of the highways, especially the district ones which are the only communication between the upland districts to the main roads; an inspection over them by the county authority so as to compel the local authority when they neglect constructing new roads should they be required. With regard to many of the present old roads it is simply waste of money to repair them, and it would be more economical to make new ones; also the proper maintenance of all roads to an efficient standard according to law. I also believe, as the majority of farmers I know do, that a land court or some arbitration tribunal is the only remedy for most of the present complaints; and to bring a better understanding between all concerned. It would be even better for landlords. Also a Government loan at a reasonable interest to tenant farmers to buy their own farms, and to also aid those I have already mentioned as having bought their farms too dear from fear of losing their homes. I also feel that the tithes should go to relieve the rates, as it is at present only used to keep a certain class in luxury at the expense of the agricultural community."

Lord Kenyon.

18,116. I understood you to say that the disputes as to the sheep gave great trouble. You say there is continual contention between the farmers with regard to this land. It is overstocked with sheep, many turning more sheep upon it than their sheep walks will hold. What remedy do you suggest for that?—The enclosure of it.

18,117. Then you are in favour of enclosing?—I am in favour of enclosing, and that the freeholders should buy the Crown rights in it.

18,118. I do not know whether you heard Mr. Thomas E. Ellis' evidence yesterday?—I read it in the paper. I heard some of it.

18,119. I asked Mr. Ellis whether he knew of cases where a wire fence had been put up, and he said he was not in favour of it. He thought that although it might be an advantage it was not a right thing to do. It was "against "the Celtic tenure of land;" that, I think, was his expression. You would not be of the same opinion?—My opinion is that the present state with regard to mountain land is very unsatisfactory. I agree with Mr. Ellis in his object to protect the rights of the community; and I believe the same as Mr. Griffiths yesterday stated, that three parties have an interest in it; the lord of the manor (on the place where I refer to, the Crown is lord of the manor); the commoners, who I understand under the present law are the freeholders; and the community, whom, I understand, the Woods and Forests Office represent. As it is now, neither of those parties get their rights.

See 6,950–6,954.

18,120. What I want to get from you is what remedy you propose as to the dispute that occurred between farmers about their sheep. We know that some farmers, if he thinks he can do it, will turn a great many, too many, sheep on, and then his neighbour objects. You think a fence would be a good thing?—Yes, in my opinion.

Lord Kenyon.

I only wanted to get your opinion. I asked the same question of Mr. Ellis, and he said, No. Therefore, apparently, you differ there; but, of course, you have a right to your opinion. You say, "Even between tenants belonging to the "same estate there are often quarrels about "their sheep walk."—I am quite aware of that—"and all this is very detrimental to the "general condition of sheep farming."

Mr. Griffiths.

18,121. Will you give us the date when the tenants were induced to buy their farms?—No I cannot give the dates; only it was about 40 years ago.

18,122. What induced them to do so?—Well, they had no other place to go to, and these farms were their old homes, and they were obliged to buy them by auction, or else to be without anywhere to live.

18,123. Have you yourself any right to this mountain land?—I have a right of pasture on my sheep walk as a commoner—a freeholder—an exclusive right.

18,124. You have not been deprived of that right?—No; some have tried to deprive me, by pushing their sheep on my sheep walk, and thus hoping to claim it in time, but they have not succeeded.

18,125. Do you consider that there is a very heavy expense attached to the transfer of land at present?—Yes, I do.

18,126. You want a simpler and cheaper way?—Yes.

18,127. You complain of your roads?—Yes, I do.

18,128. What in the £ do you pay for rates?—Highway rates 2*d.* in the £.

18,129. And how much is the poor-rate?—5*d.* in the £.

18,130. Are they lower or higher than they used to be?—I believe they are a bit lower than they have been a few years ago, taking them altogether.

18,131. All parishes are not alike. The last witness we had here paid 3*s.* 2*d.* in the £?—Yes, I know that all the parishes are not alike.

18,132. What makes the difference—perhaps you cannot answer that question. Who are the landlords of this district where you say there is much draining needed?—There are two or three owning different farms.

18,133. Are you speaking of mountain land, or of the land enclosed on the farm that wants draining?—The land on the farm. The best soil on the farm is covered by the stagnant water of the stream, and it is impossible for one farmer to drain it without the others joining to open the stream that runs between them.

18,134. And there is no draining done at present?—No, we cannot possibly do it. I have made a great deal of improvement upon my farm, but I cannot reclaim that part of it (which covers a good many acres) without the other owners joining so as to cut a place for a stream to run out.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,135. Did you say that mountain land had been allotted to each farm?—No, I did not say that. I myself desire it to be so.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

18,136. How is it managed now. Does a farmer send a number of sheep to the mountain in accordance with the size of his farm?—No, they have boundaries to the sheep walks, which I suppose have been brought about from olden time. At any rate, they are adhered to now, and they are supposed not to turn more than their sheep walk will hold within those boundaries, but many do send more than their boundaries will hold.

18,137. Are the boundaries well defined?—Only by metes and bounds; there is no boundary ever made, only what is natural there.

18,138. What are the relations between the different farmers; are they good or bad?—Well, they are very often bad, as I said, owing to differences between them with regard to the sheep: one pushes upon the other, and this goes on all the year round.

18,139. Do you think that if it was so arranged that one shepherd could look after the sheep on several farms that it would be satisfactory?—But the farmers could not agree themselves what work that shepherd should do, because one would require him to do something for his own benefit to the detriment of another.

18,140. You think that system would not answer then?—Well, under the present circumstances, as I know them, it could not answer. Of course, if they agreed to what was just in itself, it could answer very well.

18,141. If they could agree?—Yes.

18,142. What is the consequence as far as the sheep are concerned of this continual chasing of the sheep?—Well, they are very much poorer bred and smaller sheep. They would be far better, and pay much more to the farmers, if they all had their sheep walks enclosed, and in my opinion that is the only remedy for them to have peace with them.

18,143. The sheep get anything but a peaceful life?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

18,144. I suppose the county council manage the main roads, do they not?—They do.

18,145. Since the passing of the Local Government Act, have not the district roads improved?—Not much in this district. They never make permanent improvements, of course, they keep them in the same repair as they were 100 years ago. I mean the way of treating them is to keep them as they were before.

18,146. Not to improve them?—Not any permanent improvement.

18,147. Every parish has the privilege of sending representatives to the Highway Board?—Yes, that is quite true.

18,148. Then you have your remedy to a certain extent in your own hands, have you not?—To a certain extent, but we cannot get it: at any rate, we have not had it. Most of those on the Highway Board do not take an interest in many of the district roads, because, I suppose, they have never occasion to use them themselves.

18,149. But they are only supposed to look after the district roads?—Yes, they are supposed to look after them.

Mr. Grove.

18,150. I suppose that the general depression in agriculture would prevent them from spending much money on the roads, would it not?—I do not think exactly that. I think the least they could do is to repair them pretty evenly between one district and another. The rate is only twopence in the pound. I do not think it is very heavy at all.

18,151. The county council have only taken over a certain part of the roads I suppose?—Only the main roads.

18,152. Are those better than they used to be, or about the same?—I believe if anything they are better.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Owen called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

18,153. This is your evidence taken before Professor Rhŷs this morning and it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of Mr. Thomas Owen, Cwm Isa, Cynwyd.

"I am a tenant farmer, residing at Cwm Isa, Cynwyd, on the Palé estate. I have been nine years at Cwm Isa. I was at Tyddyn du, Cwm ganllafar, Llanycil, Bala, before I went there. I took a farm of 70 or 80 acres in January 1873, from Humphrey Jones, Tyddyn du (the then landlord), and I bought the stock at a valuation. The terms of the tenancy were to be:—15 years lease, rent 54*l.*, and the landlord to build a cow-house at Ty llwyd. Six weeks afterwards Mr. Humphrey Jones sold the farm. The lease was accordingly not signed. Mr. Robert Evans, the purchaser, relet the farm to me for 52*l.* as an annual tenant. The state of the farm was very bad, the walls were also in a very bad state, and there were only three gates on the farm. The character of the farm may be judged from the fact that two tenants, at least, had failed there before I entered. While I was there I made several improvements, among them being the following:—

Chairman—continued.

Chairman—continued.

"(a.) I drained a portion of the land, buying the pipes and doing all the labour myself.

"(b.) I pulled down several walls and planted hedges instead of them.

"In seven years after I took the farm, my landlord removed from a large farm to a smaller one. I was afraid, as he had a large family, to make any further improvements, as I thought he would want the place himself. He reassured me, however, in that respect, saying that he would never wish me to leave. In 1882 Mr. R. Evans, my landlord, told a brother of mine that he wished to have the farm. He wished me to give up the land without proper notice, and I refused. On the 24th March 1883 he served me with a notice to quit, and I left a year afterwards I received no compensation from him for the improvements I had made. For several years he occupied the farm himself, and then sold it, receiving from 300*l.* to 600*l.* more than he paid for it."

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,154. When was it he sold the farm?—Two or three years after I left.

18,155. Did you leave in 1883?—I left 10 years ago.

18,156. Where you paying the same rent, 52*l.* up to the time you left?—Yes.

18,157. So the complaint was that you were turned out of the farm without due compensation?—It was worth as much again when I left it as when I had it first. If I may be allowed, I have three facts to state with regard to the place. I sowed 2 acres of grazing land the first year, and I had 15 hobbets of oats from it. I tilled it well afterwards, and I turned it into grazing land again. I had 45 hobbets of oats from it.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,158. Was this grazing land after it had been ploughed again?—Yes. As to another field, for the first two years I managed to carry all the hay on three loads each year. From that time onwards I did not get less than from eight to ten loads from it. As to a mountain field, of which they told me, I would only have weeds on it; I put from 4*l.* to 5*l.* worth of pipes in it. I cut the ditches or drains myself, and I limed it, and I had 65 hobbets of corn from it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,159. Was Mr. Robert Evans your landlord at this time?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

18,160. Had you any agreement with him?—No, I had not, and that was a good thing for me by the time I had to leave.

18,161. Is Mr. Robert Evans a large landowner or not?—No, he has only a few holdings.

18,162. I do not understand in what way you think you would have been worse off if there had been an agreement. It would have been better, would it not?—He wished me to leave before the proper time, and I held it 12 months longer than he intended I should.

18,163. You declined to give it up then?—Yes.

18,164. But many agreements will allow for the improvements, will they not?—I sent a man to meet him to ask for compensation, and he refused to make any agreement with me. That man is here, close by, if he is wanted.

18,165. You say you applied for compensation?—I sent a man to meet him, saying, that I would go away if I had something for going.

18,166. What was the answer to that?—He wanted nothing but the land.

18,167. You got no compensation?—Not at all, only what I did through ploughing a little and getting more corn.

18,168. Then you did get some compensation, but not for the improvements. Is that it?—I had nothing except what I was able to plough and make on the sale.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,169. I only want to understand particularly whether this was before the Agricultural Holdings Act had come into force?—I do not remember that; I cannot recollect the year.

18,170. Did you not consider that at the time?—I had the right to hold it for another twelvemonths at any rate.

18,171. But you would have a right to something more than that under the Agricultural Holdings Act, would you not?—I do not care to bother with law at all—with litigation—because he who gains is only a loser.

18,172. Do you mean litigation, or do you mean that particular Act?—The lawyers can turn it just as they like. I am not fit to meet my landlord; he made me pay 9*l.* and I had not a penny back.

18,173. 9*l.* for what?—He put me in Court for 5*l.* which he had had a long time ago, and the solicitors took 4*l.* more.

Mr. Grove.

18,174. What amount do you consider you spent in improvements on that farm?—I had not a halfpenny of wages there for the first five years at any rate. I had been working at the hay until 2 o'clock in the morning, because I could not afford to give wages for it.

18,175. But when the farm was sold, you say it fetched a very much larger price because of the improvements you put there?—I have already proved that the farm was worth as much again—double its original value.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,176. Then a considerable portion of the 300*l.* that he gained on it, you consider to be due to your improvements?—I do not say that; but I must say that either he bought it too dear, or else sold it too cheap.

Mr. Griffiths.

18,177. What was the rent of the farm when you were forced to leave?—2*l.* less than I paid Humphrey Jones. Instead of building on the farm, Humphrey Jones would not sign the lease.

18,178. What was the sum paid for the farm?—I cannot say. I am told it was sold for 2,100*l.* I cannot be sure.

18,179. I want to know what was the farm sold for when you were forced to leave?—2,100*l.*, and about 40*l.* more of land had been added to it since the time I went there first.

18,180. By reclaiming land, or what?—No. This land belonged to another farm from the 12th May to the 12th August.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

18,181. Then you consider that your landlord benefited a good many hundred pounds by selling the farm?—Yes; and he had several good crops for two or three years after I left as well.

18,182. Did you not get some profit?—I got no compensation; he prosecuted me.

Lord Kenyon.

18,183. What did he prosecute you for?—For this 5*l.*

18,184. What was the 5*l.* for?—He said that he had paid 5*l.* for me, and that I kept it in my pocket, but I never had it.

18,185. But you had to pay?—Oh, I paid 9*l.* altogether.

18,186. 9*l.* with costs?—Yes.

Chairman.

18,187. I have a question by Mr. Vincent: "You stated, I think, that Mr. R. Evans is not a "large landowner?"—No.

18,188. Where does he live?—At Argoed.

18,189. "What is his religion?"—I do not know. He is often in the public-house.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EDWARD DAVIES called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

18,190. This is your evidence taken before Professor Rhŷs this morning, and it is correct?—As far as I know, it is.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of Mr. Edward Davies, of Bodynlliw, Bettws, G. G.

"I am a tenant farmer, and occupy the farms of Bodynlliw, Bettws, G. G., Pencraig Fawr on Lord Bagot's estate. The land I farm covers about 500 acres, and the total rent is 250*l.*

"I propose to give evidence chiefly with reference to Bettws Gwerfil Goch Parish, and also with reference to the parishes of Corwen Gyddelwern, and Llanfihangel Glyn myfyr. I desire to be examined on the following points:—

"1. Increase in rents.

"2. Fall in the price of stock.

"3. Consequent failure of farmers, with the result that their families have become chargeable to the parish.

"4. The way outgoing tenants are treated, by being denied full compensation for improvements, and by being prevented from selling the crop at its full market value.

"5. Change in the nature of the agriculture pursued.

Chairman—continued.

"Occupation:—

"1. Term of Tenancy.

"The usual date of entry in the district is the 25th of March for the land. Farms are let from year to year, there being no demand for leases, as the rents reserved are too high and the conditions demanded intolerable. Changes in tenancy have been more frequent of late years, and this is no doubt due to the high rents. When owners resume the occupation of a field or plot out of a holding for the sake of building or planting, they seldom serve their tenants with proper notice or grant them compensation.

"2. Agreements and Leases.

"In many cases tenants do not receive a copy of the agreement.

"3. Rent.

"I. Amount.—Rent is usually fixed at a gross sum, the farm being let for the highest sum which it will fetch. The rents of land of similar qualities are not uniform, smaller farmers being rented at a higher sum per acre than the larger farmers. The rent of farms averages from 7*s.* 6*d.* to 40*s.* per acre.

"II. How fixed.—The rent is generally fixed by proposal followed by private treaty, holdings being practically let the highest bidder, with the result that rents are too high, and that frequently tenants with insufficient capital are accepted.

"III. How varied.—Rents have generally been raised during the last 50 years. Permanent reductions have been very few, but temporary abatements have been made in some estates varying from 10 to 15 per cent. In the case of an increase in rents the change has been made as the result of a revaluation by the landlord's valuer.

"IV. Its payment.—Rent is usually paid two or three months after it falls due. The effect of the preferential claim for rent is that it spoils the credit of the tenant.

"4. Rates.

"Local rates have increased during the last few years, and the increase has to be paid by the tenants.

"5. Size of farms.

"Farms in the district vary from 10 acres to 300 acres. Many holdings have been consolidated at different times within the last 20 to 30 years. The consolidation was generally effected with a view to save the cost of repairing Upland farms have been mostly consolidated. The effect of consolidation upon production has been to lessen it, and as large farms can utilise more machinery, it has resulted in the employment of less labour. The rent of the consolidated farms has been much the same in good times as the aggregate rent of the several holdings, but in bad times it is, no doubt, less. In my immediate district 24 farms have been converted into 11 farms, and 20 labourers' cottages have been pulled down. Large farms have better machinery than small farms, but in times of depression the occupiers of small holdings are often better off, though unable to provide for their families.

"Cultivation.

"There is a great scarcity of labourers. Fences, ditches, &c. used formerly to be properly attended to, but now tenants cannot afford to attend to them. There is much land insufficiently cultivated, and this is due to the high rents. At one time hundreds of acres were reclaimed by tenants, but very little has been done within the last 25 years. All wheat growing has been given up, but there has been a large increase of root crops."

Lord Kenyon.

18,191. With regard to the preferential claim for rent, you said it would destroy the farmers' credit, but we heard that in Bala they owed great sums to the tradesmen. Do you think they ought to owe more?—The creditors lose through their giving credit to the farmers, inasmuch as the landlord takes the preferential claim.

18,192. I take it that if they owe a lot of money they have credit?—Yes, to some degree, but the fact that they have lost money on one farm prohibits other farmers from receiving credit.

Mr. Griffiths.

18,193. What is the system of letting farms that is in use on the estates you speak of?—To the highest bidder, generally.

18,194. One man is asked to go over the farm and say what they will give?—Oftentimes more than one man walks over the farm.

18,195. And each of them makes an offer?—Yes, that is often the case.

18,196. Are there sufficient cottages for farm labourers?—They have almost all been taken down, with the exception of those which are found in villages.

18,197. Why should that be so?—I cannot say, beyond that they have been allowed to go into a bad state to avoid building.

18,198. Then you think it is the fault of the landlord that he does not build cottages?—Under many circumstances.

18,199. Do you think that if each of the labourers kept a cow or two they could better pay rents?—Yes, I say so emphatically. I will give you instances. One of my farms is near and the other is far from the village; and consequently I am obliged to pay a shilling or two more in one farm than in the other for work.

18,200. Is that because the rent is higher in the town or villages?—It is inconvenient for labourers to come to one of the farms, a distance of over 2 miles.

Mr. Richard Jones.

See 18,055–18,057.

18,201. Do you know anything about the Rûg estate?—A little.

18,202. Do you know of a farm called Bryn brith?—I do.

18,203. What is the name of the present tenant?—William Hughes.

18,204. What is he, a Nonconformist or a Churchman?—A Nonconformist, I think. He used to go to church at first when he first went to the farm.

18,205. What was the former tenant?—A Churchman.

18,206. Do you know anything about Trewynbach?—Yes, and I know of Trewynfawr.

18,207. What is the name of the present tenant?—I am not sure. Evan Davies is the name of the tenant at Trewynfawr.

18,208. Do you know anything about the tenant at Trewynbach?—His surname is Hughes; the same family has been there for many years.

18,209. What do you say was the name of the tenant at Trewynfawr?—Evan Davies.

18,210. Is he a Churchman or a Nonconformist?—A Churchman.

18,211. What was the former tenant?—A Nonconformist.

18,212. Do you know whether the farm was refused to any Nonconformist applicants in favour of Churchmen?—That is the general idea throughout the country, but I have no fact to prove it.

Mr. Grove.

18,213. You stated in your evidence that a good many farmers have failed, and the families have become chargeable to the parish; what proof have you got of that?—I have a list of them, those within an area of 3 square miles.

18,214. What does this list show—that the present paupers in the union have gone there because farming has been bad?—I do not understand that question.

18,215. Will you explain what your list is?—These have become chargeable on the parish. There are 19 families, and all those have become chargeable within my memory.

18,216. What were they, tenant farmers or labourers?—All of these were farmers.

18,217. Will you read off your list?—John Evans and wife, of Fottyfoel. The valuation in the rate-book of that farm is 32*l.*

18,218. Simply give us the names, not the rateable values?—Robert Rowland and wife, Fottyfoel; David Davies and wife, Tyddyn-attwg; Robert Davies, wife, and children, Bryn-goleu; John Jones, Tynewydd; Robert Davies, Tyddynbach; Jane Jones, Tyn-y-llechwedd; Thomas Roberts and wife, Pen y-bryniau (43*l.* rateable value); Jane Petters, White Horse; Robert Roberts and wife, Pant-y-mel; Robert Roberts and wife, Rhyd-y-galed; the family of David Roberts, his mother, wife, and his children, Bryn halen; Harry Thomas, Pant-y-fallen; Cathrin Roberts and children, Hand; Mary Williams, son William and daughter Mary, Nant-y-geurud; William Edwards and wife, Cefn roft; Mary Jones, Bryngaseg; Anne Hughes, Cabal hir; Robert Roberts, his wife and children, Bryn mawndy.

18,219. To the best of your belief those people have had parish help because the farming has failed them?—With the exception of two or three who drank. Five families have cost the parish 300*l.* within five years.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,220. Can you tell us why the local rates have gone up lately in your parish?—There are two or three reasons, I should say.

18,221. What are they?—The wages of the officers have risen considerably; farmers have failed and become chargeable to the parish, as you see by that list; all the costs incurred with regard to the roads and the county have increased very much.

18,222. Why is that?—When I first remember there were no policemen; there is a staff of men now, chargeable on the county.

18,223. Why are they wanted now in such numbers?—I do not know, if it is not because there are no offences in Merionethshire.

18,224. What do they find, then, to employ their time?—That is more than I can say.

18,225. You farm on rather a larger scale than most of your neighbours?—Yes, more than some of them.

18,226. How many servants are there on the farm?—Six servants who are hired for the year and live in the house, one maidservant, and two weekly labourers.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

18,227. Where do the labourers live?—One lives on a farm which he bought and enclosed from the mountain.

18,228. Who bought it?—The man who works with me.

18,229. Where do the servant-men sleep?—In a loft in the house.

18,230. In your own house?—Yes, in the two houses.

18,231. Not in a loft of the stables or some outhouse?—No.

18,232. And you have control over their movements?—We are very comfortable together.

18,233. Is it the ordinary custom in your neighbourhood that they sleep in the house?—It is more general than it has been.

18,234. And you think that more satisfactory?—It is very difficult to do in one farm, as it is far from all conveniences.

18,234*a.* You mean by that, that the servants are divided between two farms; is that it?—I mean they are very late coming home. When they go to a shop or to the village, they are very late coming home.

18,235. This is in reference to the accommodation of two farmhouses, I suppose?—The two farms are distinct from each other, the children in one and I in the other.

18,236. Let me understand. Do the six servants sleep in one of them, or are they divided between the two farms?—There are four servants in one and two in the other.

18,237. Do the four all sleep in the house which is occupied by yourself?—Yes, and two in the house where my children are.

18,238. You said just now that some of the tenants about you do not receive their agreements?—Yes.

18,239. Do they sign them?—Yes.

18,240. Why do they not have them?—I cannot say, because they do not get them.

18,241. Do they ask for them?—I myself asked for it, and I am without it still. See evidence of next witness.

18,242. What did the landlord or the agent say?—He promised it to me at first within a week; I asked for it again at the first payment of the rent.

18,243. What then?—I never received it.

18,244. What did he say?—He said that it would be sent shortly; he had promised it before paying the rent.

18,245. Do you know what is in your agreement?—I only saw it once, but I know what I refused to sign, because it did not please me.

18,246. I do not understand that. Did you sign the agreement or not?—Yes, I did, after the agent had written an amendment to it.

18,247. Do you think your neighbours know what is in their agreements?—No; only about one out of every ten.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

18,248. And do you know whether amendments were made in those agreements?—I should rather fancy that not one of them applied for an amendment, because they did not understand what it contained.

18,249. I suppose I need not ask whether you have a Welsh copy of your agreement?—I never saw one.

18,250. Who is your landlord?—I have four or five.

18,251. How many agreements have you then?—Two.

18,252. From whom should you get those agreements?—One from David Jones of Bodynlliw.

18,253. What is he; is he the landlord or the agent?—He has been buried; he was the landlord, when I took the place.

18,254. Who represents him at the present time?—Three families of children.

18,255. From whom ought you to get the other agreement?—From Lord Bagot.

18,256. Who is the agent?—Mr. Neighbour and Mr. Evans.

18,257. How long ago is it since you asked for your agreement from them?—About 15 months ago.

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,258. When you complain of the farms being consolidated, you hold more than one?—The children are in one, and I married again, and my wife and I went to the other farm when we were married.

18,259. Are there more than two farms?—I found them as two farms, but they were let as five farms many years ago.

18,260. Are there more than four different properties?—No, only there are three parties in one property.

18,261. Then are there two properties?—There are two properties, and two others from whom I take a portion of the mountain.

18,262. Are there any more than two farmsteads?—No, not now.

18,263. Were there before?—Yes; there was another farm or two when I first recollect.

18,264. Have the houses fallen down?—Yes, altogether.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

18,265. In answer to No. 3, with reference to the question of the amount of rent, you say, "The rents of land of similar qualities are not "uniform, smaller farmers being rented at a "higher sum per acre than the larger farmers." Is not that in consequence of greater outlay for buildings?—Yes, that is the reason; and there are more applicants for it.

18,266. Then in your opinion who are the best off, the large or the small farmers?—Small farms are able to bear the hardships for a time better, but they are unable to provide for their families, and they become chargeable to the parish.

18,267. The smaller farms?—The smaller farms.

18,268. That does not quite agree with what you said before, that they were the best off?—They are able to hold out longer when the times are bad.

18,269. Do you know of any farmer who has failed—become a pauper—who paid a heavy rent?—Yes, I know of a large farmer.

18,270. 32*l.* was the largest rent of those you mentioned. What is the instance?—A former tenant left a farm, the rent of which was 50*l.*; it was let to this man at—I am not quite sure to a pound—from 70*l.* to 75*l.*

18,271. Is the former tenant now a pauper?—No, the second tenant—the 70*l.* to 75*l.* tenant.

18,272. Was his name on that list?—Yes; he remained for six years before becoming chargeable to the parish.

18,273. Then I was wrong in taking it that 32*l.* was the largest rent on the list?—That is the rateable value; the rents were higher.

18,274. That was the case. I heard you read out that the rateable value was 32*l.*?—Yes.

18,275. Then I took it down rightly?—No, the rateable value of that farm is 43*l.*; the man paid a rent of 70*l.* to 75*l.*

Chairman.

18,276. There is one question by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "On what estate was it that you were "refused a copy of your agreement?"—I have said before, on Lord Bagot's estate.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Oliver Evans called and examined.

Chairman.

18,277. You are agent to Lord Bagot?—I am.

18,278. What is the size of his Lordship's estate?—Nearly 20,000 acres.

18,279. Do you wish to say anything on the subject of the last witness's evidence?—Yes, my Lord.

18,280. What is it?—Mr. Davies had the agreement twice in his hand. When I let the farm to him he read the agreement, and signed it, then I had to send it to his Lordship for his signature, his Lordship was not at home, or something, and I did not get it for a long time. The agreement came, and Mr. Davies called for it, and he read the clause himself. After that, when I got it into my hand I wrote the copy, and I have a copy, which I am sorry to say is at home; he shall have it any day. He read it twice; he read it when he signed it, and he read it afterwards when he was paying the first half-year's rent himself.

Chairman—continued.

Chairman—continued.

18,281. Then what do you wish to say?—He said he had only seen the agreement once.

18,282. He said he had not got it?—He said he had only seen it once.

18,283. He never said that. He said he had not got it; has he got it?—No, I have got it at home for him now. He shall have it any day, and I will send it by post to him.

18,284. I quite understand; he has not got it, but he shall have it?—I understood him to say he had only seen it once.

18,285. He says that he was refused it?—No, he is not refused it at all. I had not the agreement back to make the copy after his Lordship's signature.

18,286. He was unable to get it, in fact?—No, he will get it now any day.

18,287. Up to now he has been unable to get it?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

18,288. Do you usually supply tenants with a copy of the agreement when it is signed?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

18,289. In Welsh or in English, as the case may be?—No, in English.

18,290. Have you no copies printed for the Welsh tenants?—We have no copy in Welsh, but I always read the agreement over in Welsh before they sign it, and besides that, we have lots of tenants without agreements at all.

18,291. But do you not think, for the sake of the Welsh farmer, it would be better to have them printed in Welsh as well as English?—Well, I do not know; I always translate it to them—every one of them—all the clauses.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,292. You incur the responsibility there personally; if you had a Welsh translation which was corrected with the original, then you would be free?—We have no objection to get it translated and printed, and let them have it—no objection whatever.

Chairman.

18,293. This question is handed in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "How long have you had the "copy at home?"—I have had it now, I suppose, for two months.

The witness withdrew.

At this point Lord Kenyon took the chair.

Mr. John Williams called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

18,294. You wish to make a statement?—I do, my Lord.

See 7181, 7430–7517.

18,295. As to whose evidence?—Mr. Thomas Jones, of Llanuwchllyn. In his evidence before the Commissioners on the 12th September he stated that I had taken advantage of my position as agent to secure to myself a sum of money for letting Mr. Evan Jones into the tenancy of Rhydybod, which allegation I then contradicted from memory, imperfectly, I fear, from what appears in the newspaper reports. I now, after looking through my memoranda of that time, wish to present a statement with a short account of the transaction, and to deny most emphatically and most positively that any sum of money was secured to me by Mr. Evan Jones, either alone or jointly as consideration of the tenancy of Rhydybod. I further beg leave to state emphatically that I have never received pecuniary or other consideration from any person in respect of a tenancy upon any estate with which I have been connected.

18,296. This is the passage: "Was it on "Sir Watkin's estate that the agent received "money for accepting a tenant? If so, will the "witness name a case?—Yes, Evan Jones, of "Rhydybod." Is that it?—Yes.

18,297. Then you say that you received no money?—Yes, I deny that any sum of money was secured to me by Evan Jones, either alone or jointly in consideration of the tenancy of Rhydybod.

See 7163.

18,298. This is another statement: "Do you "know of cases where agents have been using "their position to serve their own personal "ends?—(A.) No; there may be cases. "(Q.) Do you know of cases?—(A.) I remember "once when a tenant died, and he was indebted "to the agent, and the son applied for the place, "and he had it on terms. (Q.) In what was he "indebted? Was he indebted to the agent per-"sonally, or to the landlord?—(A.) To the "agent personally." Do you deny that?—It was not a case of death.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

18,299. Did Mr. Evan Jones of Rhydybod owe anything to you personally?—Not to me personally.

18,300. Mr. Brynmor Jones examined you the following day, and he said at question 7437: "Do you challenge the statement made by "Mr. Thomas Jones that Evan Jones became "answerable for the 100*l.*?—(A.) Not at all; "he became answerable for the 100*l.*, but it "was not money paid to me for his going to the "farm. (Q.) Was it a debt due from him to "you?—(A.) It was a debt." Now you say it was not a debt?—I fear, my Lord, I answered imperfectly from memory then. I have gone through the memoranda and I wish to lay a statement before your Lordship and the rest of the Commissioners as to the transaction.

18,301. Then please do so?—"I beg leave to "submit that early in February 1882, finding "that David Jones the elder, the tenant of "Rhydybod, was in difficulties, and that Evan "Jones, his son, who had been for some time "working the farm with his father, was desirous "of becoming tenant, and retaining the old

" home, the matter was considered by Mr. O. S. " Wynne and myself, and as it was the custom " on the estate to allow the son of an outgoing " tenant to have the first claim, it was decided that " Evan Jones should have the farm provided he " could command the capital necessary for taking " to the stock. This was communicated by me " to Evan Jones. It transpired, however, that " Evan Jones was at the time embarrassed by " being personally responsible as surety in some " of his father's affairs, and it was arranged, with " Mr. O. S. Wynne's sanction, that his father- " in-law, Hugh Edwards, of Caecoch, should " become the nominal tenant on his behalf, and " Hugh Edwards did so in March 1882. Mr. O. " S. Wynne is prepared to verify the above."

18,302. Have you anything further to say?—"The pecuniary transaction between Hugh " Edwards and Evan Jones and myself arose " in this way. In 1879 I lent Evan Jones's " brother, David Jones, of Dolfawr (not on " Sir Watkins' estate) 100*l.*, and in 1881 I " lent him and his father, David Jones, of " Rhydybod, a further sum of 200*l.*, both on " promissory notes only. David Jones, father " and son, failed early in 1882. The sum of " 520*l.* was then required by Hugh Edwards " and Evan Jones to buy the stock of Rhydybod " from the trustee under the liquidation, and " they pressed me to advance it, stating they " would make good the loss I had sustained " through the failure of David Jones the elder. " The proposal came from them, and was purely " voluntary on their part, as an inducement " to me to lend them the 520*l.* I agreed to " advance the money, but the transaction had " no reference to the tenancy of the farm, which " in any event would have been let to Evan " Jones, as previously stated, if he had been " in a position to stock it. I positively deny " that any part of the debt of David Jones the " elder, or any other sum of money whatever, " was secured to me by Evan Jones, either " alone or jointly, as consideration for the " tenancy of Rhydybod. I further beg leave to " state emphatically that I have never received " pecuniary or other consideration from any " person in respect of a tenancy upon any estate " with which I have been connected. This I " am prepared to swear upon oath in any " Court."

18,303. You deny that Mr. Evan Jones had anything to do with the monetary transactions, I understand?—No, my Lord; he and his father-in-law became joint security to me.

18,304. There are some questions handed in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: " Is the accompanying " a copy of a statement written by you on the " back of an I O U, for 700*l.*, dated March 14th, " 1882." [The document was handed to the witness]?—I do not think it can be, because the sum advanced by me then was 520*l.*

18,305. Is that in your handwriting?—No.

18,306. Mr. Llewellyn Jones has handed the original. Do you recognise that document [handing original document]?—That is mine.

18,307. Is the endorsement on the back in your handwriting?—The ink part is.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

18,308. Is that other paper I handed down first of all, a copy of the ink part, or any part of that endorsement on the back of the I O U?—Yes, it is a copy.

18,309. Is the writing on the back, both pencil and ink, your handwriting or not?—Yes, I see now it is, my Lord.

18,310. Then what I handed to you first is a copy?—Yes.

18,311. " Why did you take a promissory " note for 500*l.* and an I O U for 100*l.* in " September 1883?"—That was 18 months afterwards, when a settlement was arrived at. I had received sundry moneys in the meantime—dividends from the estate of the David Jones's, and some money I had made elsewhere in connexion with them, which I gave them credit for.

18,312. " Did not the 100*l.* represent the " balance due to you from Mr. David Jones?"—I do not quite understand the question.

18,313. I suppose he means the I O U for 100*l.* Did that represent a balance due to you from Mr. David Jones?—No, there was 600*l.* due to me—100*l.* and 500*l.* But what I contend is that it had nothing whatever to do with the tenancy of the farm; it was in reference to the loan of the money.

18,314. This is another question by Mr Llewellyn Jones: " Was Evan Jones a co-tenant " with David Jones, and was he so entered on " the estate books?"—No, my Lord.

18,315. He was not?—No, he was not co-tenant with him.

18,316. He was a tenant by himself?—David Jones was the tenant until he became bankrupt.

18,317. And then who was?—Then Hugh Edwards.

18,318. That was the father-in-law?—That was the father-in-law.

18,319. " Was Evan Jones anything more " than a labourer on the farm in the same way " as many farmers' sons?"—He was more than a labourer. He practically worked the farm. The father was a dealer, and a good deal from home and the son had a good deal of money in the farm.

18,320. What do you mean by " working the " farm with his father"?—He was working at home, and took the general management of the farm.

18,321. But he was not entered on the estate books?—No, he was not entered on the estate books.

18,322. " When David Jones filed his petition, " did you not get a composition like his other " creditors?"—I did, and gave them credit for it.

18,323. Then there are further questions by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: " Did you not tell Evan " Jones that unless he became responsible to you " for the rest of the debt over and above the com- " pensation paid, that you would hold Rhydybod " for another 12 months, and simply put Mr. " Evan Jones in as caretaker?"—Certainly not; he asked me would I do so, if he failed to get the money.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

18,324. "Did you ever during the time you "were Sir Watkins' agent, send a number of "cattle to Cwmtylo to be fed by John Evans, "one of Sir Watkin's tenants, giving John "Evans a mere trifle for the keep of the "cattle?"—I never sent cattle to anyone without paying full price for it.

18,325. "Have you any objection to stating "the number of cattle sent, the length of their "stay there, and the sum paid for their keep?" —I have not the particulars here.

18,326. "Did you ever during the time you "were Sir Watkins' agent send a number of "cattle to Lletycripil to be fed by Richard "Roberts, a tenant of Sir Watkins'? Did you "declare to pay Roberts the market price "for hay consumed by your cattle, and will "you state the number of cattle sent to Llety-"cripil, the length of time they remained in "the tenant's charge, and the sum paid for "their keep?"—I certainly cannot give the particulars now off book; but I can safely say I never sent cattle anywhere without paying the full value for it.

18,327. You did send the cattle to Richard Roberts?—Yes, I may have done so; I have no distinct recollection of that more than anything else.

18,328. You were in the habit of sending cattle to some of the tenants?—I have often done so when they had more crop than they had stock to consume it with. It was not confined to me. Others did the same.

18,329. "During the time you were Sir "Watkin's agent, is it a fact that new buildings "were erected at Llwyngwern and Hendre-"mawr, and that the tenants received no "remuneration for cartage and haulage?"—We were not in the habit of paying for cartage on any of the farms—or very few of them—unless by special arrangement. It was the ordinary rule of the estate that the tenants should do their own hauling.

18,330. "Were new buildings erected at "Pentrepiod and Trawsgoed, and did the tenants "of these farms receive remuneration for cartage?"—By special arrangement, it was occasionally done. I cannot tax my memory now at this length of time as to who was paid or who was not.

18,331. "Was the tenant of Pentrepiod or of "Trawsgoed a personal debtor of yours at the "time?"—I do not think the tenant of Trawsgoed was; I will not be certain.

18,332. Or either of them?—The tenant of Pentrepiod was a debtor of mine to a small amount.

18,333. Have you any objection to say how much?—Well; I cannot say now off book.

18,334. Then the answer to that question is in the one case "Yes"?—Yes.

18,335. And in the other is it "Yes" or "No" as to Trawsgoed?—I do not think he was at that time; but whether he was so or not it would not have affected the case at all. All those matters were submitted to Mr. Wynne, and no payments were made without his sanction.

18,336. This is a question by Mr. Vincent:— "Do say that Mr. Owen Wynne knew of any "money transaction or arrangement made "between you personally and Evan Jones?"— I have not said so; I have said that Mr. Owen Wynne knew of the transaction, as I have stated in what I have already said—that David Jones, the elder, then tenant of Rhydybod, was in difficulties, and that Evan Jones, his son, who had been for some time working the farm with his father, was desirous of becoming tenant, and retaining the old home. The matter was considered by Mr. O. S. Wynne and myself, and as it was the custom on the estate to allow the son of an outgoing tenant to have the first claim, it was decided that Evan Jones should have the farm provided he could command the capital necessary for taking to the stock. This was communicated by me to Evan Jones. It transpired, however, that Evan Jones was at the time embarrassed by being personally responsible, as surety, in some of his father's affairs, and it was arranged, with Mr. O. S. Wynne's sanction, that his father-in-law, Hugh Edwards of Caecoch, should become the nominal tenant on his behalf, and Hugh Edwards did so in March 1882.

18,337. But Mr. Owen Wynne did not know that you had lent money?—No, not at all; it was immaterial to Mr. Wynne where the money came from, so far as I know.

18,338. Will you repeat that. Did Mr. Owen Wynne know of any money transactions of your own?—No; I do not think he did.

18,339. I may take it that Mr. Owen Wynne did not know that you had lent any money to Evan Jones?—No.

18,340. Or of any money transactions or arrangements made between you personally and Evan Jones?—I think I will go further, my Lord. I am not aware that Mr. Owen Wynne ever knew of any personal monetary transactions of mine.

18,341. There is another question put in by Mr. Vincent, and by Mr. Llewellyn Jones:— "Is it a fact that you are not either put for-"ward as a witness by Mr. Llewellyn Jones, or "by Mr. Vincent?"—Not by either of them.

18,342. You came here independently?—I came here to vindicate myself after the insinuations which were cast upon me.

Mr. Grove.

18,343. You admit, of course, that you have monetary transactions with the people mentioned; but you say it had nothing to do in any way with their having the farm?—Nothing whatever.

18,344. And when you sent the cattle to feed you looked upon that, I suppose, as a sort of mutual arrangement because they had spare feed and you had cattle wanting it?—They had spare feed and I had cattle to send to them, and they very often came and asked me if I would do so.

Mr. Grove—continued.

18,345. You say that in every case you paid the full amount of value?—Certainly.

18,346. Can you send in to the Commissioners at some time or other a statement showing when they went, the dates they were there, and what you did pay?—It runs over a period of 20 years and there would be a difficulty of getting at the particulars.

18,347. Supposing you give us five years out of it, if it is not too much trouble for you. If you send it to the secretary when we meet in London we can just look it over?—I will endeavour to do so, but those are matters in respect of which no receipts were taken, but only just entered in one's book. In farming transactions we seldom take receipts.

18,348. Give us the best return you can of that?—I will do so. Will you ask Mr. Wynne whether what I have stated is correct?

Lord Kenyon.

18,349. There is another question put by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "How many tenants on the "estate were indebted to you for money ad- "vanced to them"?—I cannot say at present. Often and often tenants have come to me for help, and if it was in my power I have given it to them; small sums of money have been lent by me many a time to men in need.

Mr. Grove.

18,350. Did it not occur to you that you might place yourself in rather a false position by helping the farmers in that way?—It never occurred to me in that way, and the intention was to help them when they were in want.

18,351. So that it was a bonâ fide transaction all through?—All through.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. OWEN SLANEY WYNNE recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

18,352. Do you wish to make a statement?—I merely wish to say this, as Mr. John Williams has mentioned my name as being able to verify two things. I can certainly verify that David Jones, of Rhyd-y-bod, was in difficulties from my recollection—it is a good many years ago now—and I told Mr. John Williams that if the son had the money he might succeed his father, but of course I was totally unaware, and always have been unaware, of any private monetary transactions between Mr. John Williams and any of Sir Watkin's tenants.

Mr. Grove.

18,353. Supposing you had been aware of those transactions, would you have approved them?—Certainly not.

Lord Kenyon.

18,354. This a question by Mr. John Williams to you, Mr. Wynne: "Evan Jones having had a "promise of the farm provided he raised the "capital, could I have prevented him from "having it, whatever the source from which "he obtained the money?"—No, I do not think he could, because in that case I should have approved his having the farm. In fact my directions were to Mr. John Williams, as far as I can remember, that if he had enough money to succeed his father to take up the farm, he should have it.

Mr. Grove.

18,355. But if you had known that that money was borrowed from your own agent you would not have approved it?—Certainly not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS JONES recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

18,356. You wish to make a statement to us?—Yes. Mr. Williams states that Mr. Evan Jones was working the farm with his father. He was not a co-tenant. He was in no way responsible for the farm or rent. He simply worked without wage for his father. David Jones became bankrupt. Mr. Williams of Gwernhefin, who had lent the two Mr. David Joneses 200*l.*, received the composition like any other creditor.

18,357. I do not think he denied it?—Mr. Williams told Evan Jones that, unless Evan Jones became responsible to him for the rest of the debt over and above the composition paid that he, Mr. Williams, would himself hold Rhyd-y-bod for another 12 months, and simply put Mr. Evan Jones in as caretaker. These are the documents that will show the other transactions [handing documents].

18,358. Is Evan Jones still alive?—Evan Jones is in court.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,359. What you say is this, that Mr. John Williams gave Mr. Evan Jones 100*l.* in order to become the tenant of the farm?—Yes; more than that, as those documents will show.

18,360. Did he do more than find him security for the capital to stock the farm?—Mr. Williams supplied him with the money, but his father-in-law became responsible for him, who was sufficient surety for any sum to any amount—a very large farmer.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

18,361. Did Mr. Williams receive any pecuniary consideration from Evan Jones before letting him this farm?—He had his 100*l.* besides what was paid as composition from the Dolfawr and Rhyd-y-bod estates as those documents will show, and those are in Mr. Williams' own handwriting

Lord Kenyon.

18,362. This is a question put in by Mr. Darley: "Do you give evidence of your own knowledge or hearsay"?—Well, partly from my own knowledge, and partly from what Mr. Evan Jones has told me himself, and he is here.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

18,363. You say he is here?—Yes, and I wish you to call Mr. Evan Jones.

18,364. What I understand you to say is that Evan Jones gave Mr. Williams something over and above what he owed him?—Yes, Evan Jones owed him nothing.

18,365. He went security for his father-in-law?—Evan Jones when his father failed owed Mr. Williams nothing, but Mr. Williams advanced him 520*l.* to pay for the stock.

18,366. I do not think Mr. Williams denied that?—No, he did not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

[Mr. Williams's statement was translated to the witness by the interpreter.]

Lord Kenyon.

18,367. Have you anything to say upon that?—I knew nothing about the circumstances of my father and my brother. With regard to borrowing money, a man had offered them to me.

18,368. As far as that statement of Mr. Williams concerns yourself, do you say that it is true or untrue?—It is not true with regard to the taking of the land.

18,369. Will you give us your account, then, of how you were accepted as tenant?—I will give Mr. Williams's own words. I went to Mr. Williams's office at Gwernhefin to him. I was very sorry to lose my home, as I had a wife and little children. Mr. Williams said that he would do anything for me, but that I should take a portion of my father's debt, or else that he would hold the farm himself for a twelvemonth, and I was to be yonder looking after things.

18,370. Is that all you wish to say?—That is all with regard to this statement. I must acknowledge that I do not quite understand. Inasmuch as he was going to hold it for a year, I thought that it was easier for me to go there at the time than if the place was full of stock. I do not quite recollect what Mr. Williams said in his statement.

18,371. Were you not made responsible after your father's death?—Yes.

18,372. Was that made a condition of your taking the farm?—Yes.

18,373. Do you recognise this [handing I O U to witness]?—Yes.

18,374. Can you explain to me how the indorsement on the back is 600*l.* and the I O U is for 700*l.*; what happened about the balance?—The dividend came in—the composition.

18,375. Then here is another I O U for 100*l.*, with this statement at the bottom, "Interest not to be charged." What is your account of it?—100*l.* of my father's debt, and I was to have 100*l.* without any interest until I was able to pay it.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

18,376. Is that the I O U mentioned on the back of the I O U for 700*l.*?—Yes, 100*l.* of my father's debt.

18,377. I have some questions handed in by Mr. John Williams: "Were you not joint security with your father at the bank before he failed?"—I and my two brothers.

18,378. The answer to that question is, Yes?—Yes, joint security.

18,379. "When you applied to me for the money, had not your father-in-law promised to lend it to you, and afterwards refused owing to pressure put upon him by his other children?"—My father-in-law had not promised the money.

18,380. "Was it not open to you to obtain the money from any person you could find willing to lend it to you?"—Yes, if my father-in-law put his name to it.

18,381. "Was I not keeping your brother at Dolfawr after his bankruptcy, and did you not ask me to keep him at Rhydybod in the same way if you could not get security for the money you then wanted?"—No.

18,382. He was not keeping your brother at the farm?—I do not know on what terms they were together—what their relations were.

18,383. Then you did not ask Mr. Williams to keep him at Rhydybod in the same way?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,384. When did you become a tenant farmer?—I am not sure; I do not know when I became free to become a tenant.

18,385. In how long after this transaction?—About three or four years afterwards; I am not certain.

18,386. Were you kept on the farm in the meantime?—I myself was there, and my father-in-law was backing me up.

18,387. In whose name was the tenancy—who was nominally the tenant?—My father-in-law.

18,388. What is his name?—Hugh Edwards, of Caecoch.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Richards called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

18,389. This is your evidence taken this morning before Professor Rhŷs, and it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of Mr. William Richards, of Gwern brychdwr, Corwen, tenant farmer.

"Personal evidence as to occupation of farms by his father and himself in Merionethshire and Vale of Clwyd. Also evidence as to consolidation of farms.

"From Plas yr Esgob my father came in 1878 to Gwern Brychdwr. The size of Gwern Brychdwr is about 160 acres. About 32 years ago the farm (which had also an encroachment of about 17 acres afterwards taken from it) was rented at 60*l.* before that took place. About 32 years ago it was sold, and the purchaser lived there for some years. Some seven or eight years afterwards the farm was again sold to Dr. Richards, an uncle of the present landlord. The rent was then fixed at 80*l.* When my father came in in 1878 he took it upon lease for 21 years at 105*l.* My father managed to pay this sum for about 11 years. He then, owing to the depression in agriculture, and the fact that several of his children had left home, and that he had to pay a heavy price for labour, went back in the world. The lease was accordingly allowed to be surrendered, and I took the farm for 80*l.* (tithe rentcharge included.) Tithe was about 5*l.* For the first three years I received 5*l.* towards manure. I received 5 per cent. abatement in January last, also in August last.

"Consolidation of farms.

"I remember 20 farms, about 30 years ago, in this district called Nant Lleidiog, which is about a square mile. The farms are now 15, and the population has decreased about 25 or 30. Of the above 20 farms, three moderate farms have been combined in one, this was on the Rhiwlas estate; and two large farms have been joined so as to form one farm of about 400 acres. They cannot produce as much as they formerly could. Only about one third the number of men work upon them compared to what used to work.

"I live at Gwern Brychdwr, which is about 160 acres in extent. My father held Hafod uchel for about 12 years. Hafod uchel is a large farm on the Bodweni estate, the owner of which at that time was the late Mr. W. Price Jones, of Bodweni. In 1862 my father at a vestry in the parish of Llanfor refused to pay the church rate, and opposed the landlord. In about 10 months afterwards he received a notice to quit, and we found that the farm had been let immediately after the vestry was held.

"While my father was at Hafod uchel he brought under cultivation and enclosed, two encroachments belonging to the Crown. When he left they were bringing in about 25*l.* a year to the landlord. From Hafod uchel my father went at Christmas, 1863, to Glenfron Fawr, in the parish of Gwyddelwern. The landlord of this farm was Mr. John Jones, of Cyffdy, Bala. Twelve years afterwards he received notice to quit, to make room for Mr. Morris Jones, a son of his landlord. When Mr. Morris Jones was married my father asked Mr. John Jones whether he would wish him to leave to make room for his son. The reply was, "Certainly not." In a year afterwards he received six months' notice to quit. From Glenfron Fawr he went to Plas-yr-Esgob, Llanynys, which was on the estate of Mr. Gabriel Roberts. In 1876 the landlord sent to my father asking him to sign a paper waiving the advantages of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875. My father refused to do so. Later on he received a notice, and had to leave, in consequence, as we suppose, of his refusal to sign that he was willing to exclude the operation of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875. Under the agreement, he had no right to sell the crops and unconsumed hay, corn, &c. off the farm. He received permission to sell everything off the farm in the last year, but had to pay the landlord 10 per cent. upon what he received.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,390. When your father took the farm on a 21 years' lease at 105*l.*, did you consider that dear?—It was far too high, but the reason why he took a lease was that he had experienced three times before, the disappointment of insecurity of tenure.

18,391. How much too dear do you think it was?—As the market was at the time, it was at least 30*l.* too high.

18,392. And your father was induced to take that lease because he had experienced the in security of tenure only?—That is one reason. Another reason was that he had four sons, and those worked without receiving any wages on the farm, and so he was able to pay too high a rent for his land—a rack rent.

18,393. When one of the farms was given up there were certain damages charged against you?—Yes.

18,394. Will you please tell us about that?—When leaving Plas-yr-Esgob a bill to the amount of 50*l.* for damages was sent in.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,395. What year was this in?—Either at the end of 1878 or the beginning of 1879.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,396. When you were leaving Plas-yr-Esgob?—Yes, when I was leaving Plas yr-Esgob.

18,397. Will you explain what that 50*l.* was for?—My father had been making improvements on the farm, draining, and pulling down fences in order to straighten them. There was one large wall from 4 to 5 yards broad, and two ditches, one on each side. Those had been closed up with pipes and the walls had been pulled down; and as he had not put up a new fence or a new wall, damage was charged against him because the walls and fences were not in their places.

18,398. What did he intend to do?—If he was allowed to remain there he was going to make a new wall.

18,399. Did your father pay the 50*l.*?—No. At that time Mr. Gabriel Roberts died.

18,400. Was he the landlord?—Yes, the landlord; and Colonel Hughes succeeded as agent or as trustee. My father went to Colonel Hughes and made his complaint, and Colonel Hughes came to the place and reduced the bill to half.

18,401. Did your father pay the half?—My father paid the half.

18,402. And did you get any compensation for the improvements that you had made?—No.

18,403. At what would you value your improvements?—The improvements in draining and so forth are sure to be about 25*l.*, and the land had certainly been improved another 15*l.* worth in the rent; because when we first went there, we sowed a field called Caemelyn with eight sacks of oats, and we had a crop from it of seven sacks of far worse oats. We tilled that field, and put turnips and potatoes in it.

18,404. What then?—Then, to go on with the description of the cultivation of the field, we had to plough it seven times, and had in the same way to drag it seven times. That field before we left, produced excellent crops.

18,405. How many of those excellent crops did you get before leaving?—Only two.

18,406. Now you worked as a farmer's son on your father's farm without wages, did you?—Yes; I followed the horses for about 18 years and worked hard, and I never had a half-penny for my work; and four other brothers of mine were working for a lesser time in the same way.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

18,407. Have you anything else to say?—I should like the Commissioners to understand that I am in favour of obtaining an Act to give a right to tenants for improvements, and fixity of tenure for a reasonable rent, for the sake of the rising generation—for the sake of our children

Lord Kenyon.

18,408. How did you manage to get a surrender of the lease?—Because my father had failed in his circumstances; he did not become bankrupt. The rent-book will show how he went back in his circumstances.

18,409. The landlord, sooner than having him bankrupt, released him from the lease, is that so?—Yes.

18,410. Some questions are put in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "What induced your father "to take a lease of Gwern brychdwr"?—That has been answered.

18,411. "Would you be willing to take a "lease of your farm at the present rent"?—No, not at the present time.

18,412. "Has your farm been re-valued "lately"?—It was valued about eight years ago, before I took it.

18,413. "By whom"?—Mr. Jones, of Brynmelyn, valued it for Dr. Griffiths. See 17,7 18,414. "What was the result of the re-valua-"tion"?—I am under the impression that the valuation was 66*l.*

18,415. "What is your present rent"?—80*l.*

18,416. You are under the impression that the valuation was 66*l.*, or do you know?—That is what I believe. Mr. Thomas Jones told me at one time, and I believe that is what he said.

The witness withdrew.

At this point Professor Rhŷs took the Chair.

Mr. ROBERT ROBERTS called and examined through an interpreter.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,417. This is your evidence taken before me this morning, and it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of Mr. Robert Roberts, of Blaengwnodl ucha, Cynwyd.

"I am a tenant farmer living at Blaengwnodl ucha, Cynwyd, a farm on Sir Henry Beyer Robertson's estate.

"My father was tenant of a farm called Bryn penllyn, Llandrillo, on the Earl of Dudley's estate, from 1865 till 1886, in which year he died. The farm was 40 acres and a sheep-walk for 200. My mother then became the tenant, and we left Lady-day, 1892. The rent during the whole period of the tenancy was 28*l.* Abatements in rent were made for some years, and stated in the evidence of the Honourable Mr. Eden, at Barmouth, but at the last two rent audits prior to our leaving, we had to pay the rent in full, and did not receive abatements like the other tenants on the estate. The reason we had to leave was on account of a disagreement between a neighbouring tenant and ourselves as to the boundaries of the sheep-walk on the mountain. After the dispute commenced Mr. Eden stepped in, and it was eventually agreed that we should either go to arbitration or to law to settle the dispute. However, Mr. Eden served us with notice to quit. I am prepared to produce all the correspondence in the matter.

"During the anti-tithe agitation in the district the agent took a very determined stand against tenants taking any part in it. One of the tenants, Thomas Jones, of Ty Nant Farm, Pennant, Llandrillo, persisted in his refusal to pay the tithe rentcharge except under compulsion.

On this account he was served with a notice to quit. When the notice expired (1889) the farm was re-let to him, the rent being reduced from 35*l.* to 30*l.* The tithe was under the new agreement to be paid by the landlord, but the amount thereof (presumably the par value, as it is considerably in excess of the commutation for the last few years) was added to the rent in this case, making the rent 32*l.* 16*s.* 0*d.* The same thing took place on most of the other farms. In Thomas Jones's case, when abatements in rent have been made since 1889, they have been made on the 30*l.* only. The buildings on many of the farms on Lord Dudley's estate are in bad condition. Thus on the farm of Thomas Jones, of Ty nant, a mare was injured in the stable owing to its being too small. He has made more than one complaint to the agent as to the state of the buildings."

18,418. Is that the only instance, as to the buildings on the last farm, of the stables being too small?—Another mare could not foal because the place was too small, and she had to be raised standing.

18,419. Is that all?—Yes.

18,420. Here is a question from Mr. E. J. Williams, referring to the houses on Lord Dudley's estate: "Is the sleeping accommodation what it ought to be, or have persons to "pass from one bedroom to another in some "instances"?—Yes, there are several the same.

Profossor Rhŷs—continued.

18,421. Then a question by Mr. Ivan T. Davies: "On whose estate did the consolidation "of farms take place referred to in Mr. Row-"land Davies's evidence"?—Which are they?

18,422. You do not know the farms?—I did not hear him say. I was outside at the time.

18,423. Then you do not know?—I do not know?

18,424. Another question by Mr. Ivan T. Davies: "Mr. Eden, Lord Dudley's agent, is "reported to have said, in his evidence at Bar-"mouth, first, that there had been no consolida-"tion on Lord Dudley's estate." Will you say what you have to say upon that?—Yes, there are; I could name some. See 9916–9238 18,425. "Secondly, that there was only one "Churchman on the estate." Is that so?—Yes; I could mention 11 at least. Mr. Eden also said that they paid their rent at the proper time. They do not do so.

Mr. Griffiths.

18,426. You mean to say the rents are in arrear?—Yes, many of them who pay the rent are obliged to borrow money in order to do so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. R. GILLART recalled and further examined.

The Witness.

18,427. I wish to correct some statements made at the sitting at Towyn on the 4th instant by Mr. Foulkes Jones, schoolmaster of Llwyngwril. In his evidence he says, "Clauses in agreements were considered most unfair and oppressive." I put in a copy of the agreement which we have generally adopted in regard to holdings in the district. [Agreement handed in.] If you will recollect a tenant on the late Countess de Morella's estate said at the Barmouth sitting, that he could say nothing against it, and that he considered it very fair. Mr. Jones also says, "One clause required lime to be put into the "land beyond what was necessary. It was put "in operation against Edward Humphreys, "Hendre, and David Owen, Henblas." So far as Edward Humphreys of Hendre goes, it was put into operation, and the sum that he stated, 14*l.*, was claimed from him as compensation for not putting the land into a reasonable state of repair. When my late father undertook the agency of the Hendre estate, which is the property of the Countess de Morella, about the year 1868; Robert Williams was the tenant of Hendre farm at a rental of 200*l.* per annum. At Lady-day 1875 Mr. Williams' rent was advanced on re-letting to 210*l.* per annum, and remained at this figure until Lady-day 1877, when he gave up the farm. Mr. Williams was succeeded by Mr. Edward Humphreys at the same rent. On the 10th of September 1879 Mr. Humphreys gave notice to give up the farm the following Lady day on the ground that it was too highly rented.

The Witness—continued.

On representing the case to the Countess de Morella, her ladyship agreed to re-let the farm to Mr. Humpheys at a rental of 160*l.*, a reduction of 50*l.* per annum. Mr. Humphreys finally gave up the farm at Lady-day 1881, when I believe he emigrated to America. It was found that Mr. Humphreys had left the farm in a bad and exhausted state of cultivation. Fences and gates were in a neglected state. He had not applied the lime and manure specified in his agreement, and he had also ploughed up more land than he should have done. In consequence of this Mr. Humphreys paid the sum of 14*l.* 9*s.* by way of compensation for lime and manure not applied to the farm. The landlady, however, did not pocket this amount but paid it over to the succeeding tenant (Mr. Ellis Pugh Jones) on 24th June 1881, to be expended by him in lime or manure. Mr. Ellis Pugh Jones became tenant of the farm at Lady-day 1881 at a rental of 180*l.* per annum. Mr. Jones purchased from the outgoing tenant upwards of 400 sheep at 19*s.* 6*d.* each, (390*l.*), also some unconsumed produce and machinery which were on the premises, but which, however, he was not required to do by the terms of the agreement. Previous to Lady-day 1887, Mr. Jones complained that his rent was too high, and a reduction of 20*l.* was made to him, thus reducing his rent to 160*l.* per annum, from which a further abatement of ten per cent. per annum was made for three years from Lady-day 1887. From Lady-day 1890 Mr. Jones' rent was again reduced to 158*l.* per annum, less a further allowance of 8*l.* per annum towards lime for the following three years. Mr. Ellis Pugh Jones gave up the farm at Lady-day 1892, from which date it was let to the present tenant, Mr. Rees Pugh Roberts, at a rental of 140*l.* per annum for the first three years and afterwards at 150*l.* per annum.

Witness—continued.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,427A. What is it exactly that you are rebutting now? He says that it was put into operation against Edward Humphreys of Hendre, and David Owen of Henblas, tenants of the Countess de Morella. He said that, did he not?—Yes, he did.

18,428. Are you contradicting that?—No, I do not contradict it. All I say is that he delivered up the farm in a bad condition.

18,429. You admit that is right then?—We did claim it from him.

18,430. Then you are not rebutting that?—I am not rebutting that statement further than to show you how the rent of the farm has been reduced from time to time. Then he says, "Another clause bound the outgoing tenant to "sell sheep at a valuation, but did not bind the "landlord or incoming tenant to buy at a valua- "tion." I do not know of a single instance upon any estate under our management where the landlord or incoming tenant has not purchased the sheep.

See 15,956.

18,431. What is the statement exactly that you are contradicting now? What did he say?—He said that the clause bound the outgoing tenant to sell the sheep at a valuation.

18,432. Do you contradict that?—I say that the clause does not bind the tenant. The clause in the agreement is optional; that the old tenant may offer if he likes the sheep to the landlord or to the incoming tenant.

18,433. Would you mind reading that clause from the agreement, that will settle it, I think?—It is clause 10, "It is also agreed that the "landlord or incoming tenant shall have the "option of buying, and the tenant will sell "the sheep bred and usually grazed on the said "farm and sheepwalk on or before the 20th "day of March next preceding the time of the "said . . . . . his executors, admini- "strators and assigns, quitting the said farm, at "a price to be fixed upon by two indifferent "persons, the one to be chosen by the landlord "or incoming tenant, and the other by the "outgoing tenant, with liberty for them to "appoint an umpire in case they disagree, and "his or their decision shall be final. One fourth "of the said sheep to be of four years old, one "fourth to be of three years old, one fourth to "be of two years old, and the other one fourth "to be of one year old, or as near the said "respective ages as practicable; the sheep that "shall be affected with a disease called 'rotten "'or rot,' or any other disease or infirmity are "not to be purchased." I may say that on some properties this clause has been altered. We have altered it now to a clause compelling the landlord or the new tenant to buy the sheep.

18,434. Does it at present stand as it is in your hands there, or is that the altered agreement that you have just read?—It is the same in the old agreements.

18,435. The option is not in the old agreements?—The option is in the old agreements, but not in some of the present agreements. In the new agreements which we have had, we have put it in some cases, but not in all, that the landlord or incoming tenant must buy the sheep.

18,436. Then there is no option?—It is optional.

18,437. You do not rebut that, then?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

18,438. The point is this, you speak now of putting it in some agreements but not in others?—In some of our new farm agreements we put it that they must buy, limiting the tenant to a certain number.

Mr. Griffiths.

18,439. That is when the tenant wishes to buy?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

See

18,440. What is the next?—The next point is this. Mr. Foulkes Jones says, "Spare fodder "was to be left to the incoming tenant whether "he preferred to pay for it or not." I say it is customary that an outgoing tenant leaving at Lady-day should consume all the fodder before leaving. I know instances, however, where the incoming tenant has purchased the unconsumed fodder which happened to be on the premises at the termination of the outgoing tenant's tenancy.

18,441. What did he say about that?—He said that spare fodder was to be left to the incoming tenant whether he preferred to pay for it or not.

18,442. You say that is not so?—I do not know of any instance. In most cases the fodder is consumed before the termination of the tenancy.

18,442A. That you say is the fact?—Yes.

18,443. What is the agreement on that point?—The agreement says that he is to consume it before the termination of the tenancy.

18,444. Is he right with regard to the agreement?—He is right with regard to the agreement. He says, "Whether he preferred to pay "for it or not." I say that the old tenant ought to consume it. He should not have the option of being paid for it. He has got plenty of time to consume the fodder at the end of the tenancy.

18,445. Is there anything else?—Then he says, "The power to demand rent in advance "had been acted upon in the cases of Morris

15,958. " Jones, Carnygadell, and Richard Williams, " Parthygwy-ddwch and was considered quite " unfair and oppressive."

18,446. Is that the case?—No rent has ever been demanded in advance from any of the tenants except perhaps in a few cases where rent was applied for during the last six months of tenancy. On the contrary in many instances we have allowed the rent to stand over from 12 to 18 months after it was due.

18,447. But let us keep to those instances in which rent was demanded in advance. He is correct, is he?—It was only acted upon in cases where tenants were leaving the last six months.

18,448. But he says it was done in certain cases that he mentions. Was it so done or not?—I do not know whether he meant that it was done annually, or whether it was done in the last year of the tenancy. I say it has only been done in the last year of the tenancy.

18,449. Has it been done in those cases at all?—In those cases it has been done the last six months of his tenancy.

18,450. In those cases?—Yes.

18,451. Very well, you admit that?—Yes, but not annually.

e 15,968, ,969. 18,452. I do not suppose that he meant that?—Then he says: "A couple of days haulage " would be required by the Countess de " Morella." There was a clause to this effect in the old form of agreement, but it was never enforced, and there is no such clause in the existing agreements. Then he says: "There " had been many instances where two or more " farms had been let to the same tenant, and " the process was still going on." During the period that we had the agency of the property I have only known one case.

18,453. You say not several instances, but one?—Only one. Then he says: 'Land drained " at the sole expense of the tenant without " compensation." I know of no draining that has been done by the tenants. It is chiefly done by the landlords.

18,454. Did he give instances?—He did not give instances.

18,455. What does the landlord contribute in this case?—The draining we have been doing; we have been supplying the pipes, and doing labour, and putting them down.

18,456. Then you think that statement was not correct?—As far as it relates to the Countess de Morella's estate it was not correct.

Mr. Richard Jones.

e 15,991. 18,457. Do you know where tenants have applied for draining and you have refused, and the tenants have had to do it?—Not on this estate. He says: "No Churchman had been " known to have his application for a farm " refused, but instances when Nonconformists " had been turned aside in favour of Church- " men, were not at all rare." I say this is not the case on the Countess de Morella's estate. A short time ago, a farm—Rhiwgaeron—became vacant, when a Churchman applied for it; his application was put aside, and the farm was let to the present tenant, David Roberts, who is a Nonconformist, a Calvinistic Methodist.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

18,458. What is the name of the farm?—Rhiwgaeron, and he says: "A tenant, born and " bred a Nonconformist, went to Llwyndu, but " while there he attended church; after leaving " the farm and the district he regularly attended " a Nonconformist place of worship. He was " succeeded by his brother, who attended " church." I say this is not the case. The tenant referred to (Edward Jones) for years before he came to Llwyndu attended the church at Llanegryn, and his brother David Jones, the present tenant, did the same.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,459. What places of worship did he attend before leaving?—I cannot say.

18,460. You contradict the first part of his statement?—He says: "In the case of Henblas, " a Nonconformist had all but taken the farm, " when a Churchman and a Conservative ap- " peared on the scene. The Nonconformist was " told he could not have the garden unless he " was prepared to pay 5*l.* increased rent. As " the farm was already dear enough he refused, " and the farm was let to the Churchman at the " increased rent. He was, however, allowed 5*l.* " in his lime bill every year. Those cases had " occurred in recent years on the Countess de " Morella's estate."

18,461. That is the witness's statement?—Yes, I say this is not so; on the contrary, the farm was offered to a Nonconformist, but he declined. It was afterwards let to the present tenant (David Pugh) at the same rental as that paid by his predecessor for the first three years.

18,462. Was it the same rental as it was offered to a Nonconformist?—The same rental as offered to a Nonconformist, and the same rental is paid by his predecessor, who said at the Barmouth sitting that the landlord had raised the rent of the succeeding tenant 5*l.* for improvements made by him, which is not the case. See 9249, 18,491.

18,463. He says that the rent is reduced, practically, by means of an allowance?—He says we raised the rent 5*l.*, and allowed that 5*l.* towards lime, which is not the case. The present rent of the farm is the same as paid by his predecessor, Mr. Parry, who said at the Barmouth hearing, that we raised the rent of his successor 5*l.* on account of improvements made by him. Then he says: "In every instance where there had been a por- " tion of the mountain enclosed for the use of a " farm, there had been an increase in rent " greater than the interest on fencing." I know of no instance where this statement has been carried out on the Countess de Morella's estate, but quite the reverse. We have enclosed ffridds and sheepwalks recently, and charged no interest at all.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

18,464. You have looked into the figures in each instance?—I have looked into the books. Then about the increase of rents at Carnygadell. He says within the past 30 years. We will take the case of Carnygadell. In 1868, when my late father became agent to the estate, the rent of this farm was 50*l.*, and so it remained until Lady Day 1877, when it was reduced on re-letting by 10*l.* per annum. At Lady Day 1890 a further reduction of 2*l.* per annum was made on account of a detached field being sold.

See 15,994.

18,465. What are you rebutting now exactly?—He spoke about the increase of rents, and he names one farm, Carnygadell, in which it was raised from 40*l.* to 52*l.*

18,466. Is that so?—I say in 1868—I cannot go beyond that—when my late father became agent to the estate, the rent of this farm was 50*l.*, and so it remained until Lady Day 1877, when it was reduced on re-letting by 10*l.* per annum. At Lady Day 1890 a further reduction of 2*l.* per annum was made on account of a detached field being sold.

18,467. So that you say, instead of being raised it has been reduced?—Yes, it has been reduced. That is one instance. All I can say is, that neither politics nor religion have anything to do with us in the selection of tenants. I should like to say one word with regard to the sanitary condition of the village of Llwyngwril. The Countess de Morella last year disposed of the whole of her house property in the village, the tenants in some instances having purchased their holdings. Previous to her Ladyship selling the property, we, amongst others, received notice from the Rural Sanitary Authority of the Dolgelly Union to provide a better supply of water for the village. I attended a meeting of the Sanitary Authority of Dolgelly, and explained to them that as far as the Countess de Morella was concerned she was quite willing to join in any reasonable scheme, provided that other interested owners would bear their proportion of the expense. Since then, however, nothing up to now has been done.

See 9283.

18,468. Was there any suggestion made by her in that direction. Was there anything proposed?—So far as her Ladyship was concerned, she was quite willing to bear a portion of the expense of providing a sufficient supply of water.

18,469. Was the thing discussed, and did she suggest anything?—I myself provided a plan of the scheme, and submitted it to the meeting, and informed them at the time of what I have now said, but nothing has been done from that time up to this.

Mr. Grove.

18,470. Did you make an estimate of the cost?—I think we obtained tenders for the work.

18,471. Was that also submitted to the other people, who were interested in the question?—It was submitted to the sanitary authority, and I take it, that it was brought before their notice at the meeting of the Board of Guardians.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,472. Have you anything else to say?—I have nothing further to add; she spent during the 26 years we have had the management of the property, in building, repairs, and improvements; a sum of 3,719*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*

18,473. Have we the figures as to the rentals and so on?—No; the extent of the estate is about 1,500 acres, and the rental about 1,000*l.* per annum.

Mr. Griffiths.

18,474. Is it true that you allowed land to be taken out for railway purposes, and never made an allowance to the tenant?—In connexion with this property?

18,475. Yes?—I do not know of any instance in my time.

18,476. Mr. Jones in his evidence said that it was the case?—I do not know of any instance on the Countess's estate.

18,477. Whether he said, it was on this estate or not, I cannot remember?—Quite so.

18,478. Do you say that no tenant has ever left the estate leaving unconsumed fodder for which he had no compensation?—I do not know of a single instance; but if there was some fodder at the termination of the tenancy, the new tenant would purchase it; but he has plenty of time to consume it.

18,479. Is it not a fact that the Countess sold the cottages rather than go to the expense of putting them in a sanitary state?—It is certainly not a fact, she is the owner of a large property and estate in England. She has disposed of all her cottage property, and when she came over here, she decided to do the same.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. FOULKES JONES re-called and further examined.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,480. What have you to say?—I should like to make a short correction in the evidence I gave at Towyn, with regard to the abatements in rent, first of all. I said that the abatements varied from 5 to 15 per cent. I do not wish to do any injustice to the landlords, but I find there was one case, that of Alltgoch, where the abatement was 18½. The rent was reduced to the old rent. Two other things I wish to say. I beg to hand in two lists, one a list of failures in the parish of Llangelynin during the last 25 years.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

18,481. Bankruptcies?—Not exactly bankruptcies; but failures to keep on.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

18,482. Is that on the Countess de Morella's estate?—Oh, no; she is only one owner among many [handing document].

18,483. This is new evidence?—Additional evidence to what I gave at Towyn.

18,484. I think you had better first of all say what you have to say with regard to Mr. Gillart's evidence with regard to the selling of the sheep?—According to the agreement under which Mr. D. R. Parry, the former tenant of Henblas farm, farmed, the outgoing tenant was bound to offer the sheep to the incoming tenant.

18,485. Have you seen that agreement?—Mr. Parry is here himself to confirm what I say. With regard to the spare fodder, again, supposing spare fodder is not consumed, my statement is correct, that the old tenant is to leave it to the goodwill of the incoming tenant. If he likes to pay for it he can do so, and if he does not, he can do that. I do not see that Mr. Gillart upsets my evidence. Then as to the consolidation of farms, he says there was only one instance of consolidation. In my evidence I did not refer to the Countess de Morella's estate especially, but I was referring to the whole of the district. There may have been one instance only on that estate, but the instances I gave were over the whole district, on the Countess's as well as the other properties.

18,486. You adhere to the statement you then made?—Yes. With regard again to Rhiwgaeron, I do not know, of course, what offers were made to Mr. Gillart for that farm. With regard to Llwyndu, my statement was that the tenant was bred and born a Nonconformist. That is true, and it is true that he now attends a Nonconformist place of worship, after leaving the farm and the district. With regard to Henblas, my statement was that the farm was let to a Churchman at an increase of 5*l.*, and and this 5*l.* was allowed in the lime bill. Mr. Parry is here, the former tenant of Henblas, to confirm what I have said, that this 5*l.* was demanded of the Nonconformist applicant for Henblas. It was given in the other case, but allowed back in the lime bill; that is the tenant's own story. The other case where a Churchman was preferred——

18,487. You need not remark upon that?—With regard to the enclosures, there have not been many enclosures in recent years, but the general impression amongst the farmers is, that the increased rent has been paid where ffridds have been enclosed towards farms. I adhere to my statement with regard to the rent of Carngadell. That was 40*l.*, and was increased to 52*l.* Whether it was before Mr. Gillart's agency or not, I cannot say.

18,488. You offer to put in a table?—Yes. This is a list of persons in the parish of Llangelynin in receipt of outdoor relief in 1890, who had been tenants of farms, or who were members of families of those who had been tenant farmers. It amounts to a total of 34, and 163*l.* 8*s.* in out-relief, and fees of children was paid to the above persons during 1890. There were some others in receipt of relief, who had moved to other parishes. Then there is a list of failures.

18,489. Are those technically bankruptcies?—No, not technically bankrupts.

18,490. Men who have failed?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. D. R. Parry recalled further and examined.

The witness' statement was interpreted by Professor Rhŷs.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,491. You wish to make a statement?—I wish to say this. I said at Barmouth that 5*l.* was added to the rent of Henblas, for the improvements which I had made on the Henblas farm. Mr. Gillart has now said that he did not raise the rent. I went with the tenant who was 9249. the first applicant for the farm at Machynlleth, in Mr. Gillart's office, and he said he must have 5*l.* increase in the rent, or else he should not have it; and Morgan Jones said that he would not take it at the increase, but he would take it at the old rent—that is Morgan Jones, Tynmawr, Tal Sarnau. Owen Pugh, a brother of David Pugh, the present tenant, was an applicant for the farm, and afterwards Robert Jones, Dolymoch, Festiniog, came over and wrote a letter at the house at Henblas to Mr. Gillart, and stated that he was willing to give the 5*l.* increase; and he had a reply that the farm had been promised to another person before. David Pughe, the present tenant of Henblas, and Owen Pughe, his brother, have told me that they ought not to have made the advance of 5*l.* They complained of the rise. That is all.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Gillart.

If you wish it, I will send you the agreement of Henblas, stating what the rent actually is.

Mr. Grove.

It is by agreement.

Mr. Gillart.

It is by agreement, and states what the rent is.

Mr. Grove.

Please send it to the Secretary.

Mr. R. J. L. PRICE re-called and further examined.

Professor Rhŷs.

See 16,918, ad. fin.

18,492. You wish to make a statement?—I wish to correct a mis-statement made yesterday in the evidence given by Mr. T. E. Ellis, Member of Parliament. If the papers report him correctly, he is supposed to have said, "Yet "in Merioneth, where 140,335*l.* was paid as "rent in 1888–90, the county is ill-provided "with public institutions. In a land, and "among a peasantry singularly devoted to "social converse, there is not a public village "hall. Keenly fond of reading, there is not a "public library." On public grounds, I feel myself bound to come forward to contradict that statement. As to the public buildings, this hall speaks for itself. There are also public buildings to my knowledge in Corwen, Dolgelley, Festiniog, and other parts of the county. Of course they are public to this extent, that any one can make use of them by paying a small fee. That I believe is usual in all parts of the country. As to reading-rooms, being on the committee of one myself, I do not wish it to go forth in the English papers that we are so unenlightened in Wales as not to have reading-rooms in the towns or villages, whichever you like to call them, of Merionethshire. For other counties, I do not propose to speak.

18,493. Will you read his statement?—His statement was: "In a land and among a peasantry singularly devoted to social converse "there is not a public village hall. Keenly fond "of reading, there is not a public library." I beg to state that in Corwen there is a reading-room supported by public subscriptions and by an annual concert. The people pay a trifle as a yearly subscription. Anyone can belong to it without ballot. Therefore I consider it public. It was started by the townspeople themselves. Visitors are admitted upon payment of a penny. In Dolgelley there is also a public reading-room much on the same lines, but I am not prepared to state the administration of it from my own knowledge. At Llanbedr there is a public reading-room which was built, endowed, erected and carried on by Mr. Pope under a committee of the people of Llanbedr. At Maentwrog, which is a village, as you may know, near Festiniog, there is a public reading-room and recreation ground built by Mr. Oakley and entirely supported by him, and the charge is only 1*s.* per annum to the members, and it is managed by a committee of the members. This particular instance appears to me to anticipate some further words of Mr. Ellis, in which he says that landlords should erect the buildings and hand them over to a public trust or local authority, the people of the locality having the complete power of controlling them. It appears to me that Mr. Pope and Mr. Oakley must have acted exactly upon Mr. Ellis's own instructions. In the case of Bala, Mr. Ellis was good enough to admit there was a reading-room; he was not aware of the fact before. [Mr. T. E. Ellis: Quite aware.] There is one, and it was founded, I believe, by the efforts of Mr. Ellis Edwards, the Vice-Principal of the Calvinistic College, assisted by Dr. Hughes, a resident magistrate, and my wife, and other people in the neighbourhood. It is managed by a committee composed of some Churchmen and many Nonconformists. There are four Churchmen on the committee, the chairman being the Rector at present, and the committee composed of various ministers and other people of some importance in the town. To make sure, I went into it myself this morning and found a good fire burning and a good reading-room with all the papers in it and a recreation room with innocent games. It is situate at a soda-water manufactory, so that there is no fear of the members getting drunk. I merely wish to state on public grounds that we are not so deficient in reading-room accommodation as has been alleged. Of course it is no business of mine to state it, but I believe in the county there does exist a couple of hospitals, or rather one on the borders and one in Festiniog, and one in Machynlleth to which the people of Merionethshire have access as patients.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

Mr. Grove.

18,494. Would you consider these halls, public village halls, or public libraries in the sense that Mr. Ellis intended, controlled by the public?—They are controlled by a committee appointed by the members, in the case of Bala anyway.

18,495. The impression which occurs to my mind is that Mr Ellis must have known, as his knowledge of the county is so very complete, of these halls that you are speaking of, so that it is only just a difference in terms possibly?—The statement reads that there was not a public library amongst a population keenly fond of reading. I maintain the county is well provided with libraries. I am sorry to differ from Mr. Ellis, but I think it is only fair that we should have the credit of being more enlightened, than we have got credit for, in Wales.

Mr. Griffiths.

18,496. You have given the composition of one of these public places. Is the composition of all the same?—I cannot answer you that question. I only speak of the one of which I am a member of the committee.

18,497. In the village I live in it is not so. That is why I ask you?—I have taken pains to ascertain the composition, so far as I can to-day, from people in this hall who do live in the various villages referred to, and there is no doubt about the Maentwrog statement being a correct one, because I got it from the agent of the gentleman who built the institution.

18,498. Are these places you mention all villages or towns?—Our towns are all about equal size. Bala and Dolgelley are generally supposed to be struggling for rivalry as the capital of the county. The Quarter Sessions are held alternately in both. Festiniog is, of course, the largest place in the county, but it is not at present generally recognised as the capital.

18,499. How many of these places do you distinguish as villages?—I do not think we have a town in the county, unless you call Blaenau Festiniog a town. I should not say any other place in the county is large enough to be a town—perhaps Barmouth might be.

18,500. "Public village hall," it says here. We were chiefly speaking of the rural population and the agricultural districts, and leaving the people to ramble about at night, and it was suggested that they should have public places in the village?—In the village of Llanfor, which is near here, my wife did institute a reading-room a couple of years ago, but greatly to our regret we have found it has been so little used, it has been shut up now.

18,501. Was there anything about the conditions of it, that they did not like to go there?—I do not think so. We did everything we could to induce the people to go. As to the other villages in the county, of course, I cannot speak.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,502. Was it public in the sense that Mr. Ellis intended it to be public?—The committee manages it in the case of Bala and Maentwrog, and, I presume, in the case of Dolgelley and the others.

18,503. You said your wife had had some connexion with the library. What library was it?—It is the one in Bala. She took a very interest in its institution, and does still in its maintenance.

18,504. Do you know anything about the one at Llanbedr?—Mr. Pope's?

18,505. Yes?—No, I cannot say that I could speak to that.

18,506. It was Mr. Pope's, not the public's?—Mr. Pope erected it, and has handed it over to the public.

Mr. Grove.

18,507. Under control?—I cannot tell you. I do not know the conditions at all, but I understand it is handed over to the public, and I believe it is a very good library and hall; I am told so, but I have not seen it personally.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. T. E. Ellis, M.P., recalled and examined.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,508. You have heard what Mr. Price has said?—Perhaps the Commissioners will allow me to read again the statement which I made. I referred to the rental of Merionethshire as 140,335*l.* paid as agricultural rent in the last return to which I referred, and then I made this statement: "In a land and among a peasantry "singularly devoted to social converse there is "not a public village institute or hall; keenly "fond of reading, there is not a public library. "In a changeable climate, mainly damp, and "with homes small and confined, there is not "a single hospital or dispensary." First of all, "with regard to the rental, this rental of 140,000*l.* is simply and solely the agricultural rental of this county, not including the rental of any single town in the county. Next I should like to say that my first statement was that there is not a public village hall. When I say a public village hall, I mean not a couple of rooms which may be let with or without rent for a time and at the will of the landowner or of a resident, but a building with rooms and conveniences which is the property of a parish or of a village. Of such a building I believe there is not a single instance in the county of Merioneth. Let us take the two cases mentioned by Mr. Price—Llanbedr and Maentwrog. The Llanbedr room and hall is a very admirable one, and does a very great deal of good, but the hall is the private property of Mr. Pope, and with great generosity he has allowed these rooms, I think, to be used freely by the public; but it is not the property of the parish of Llanbedr, and if Mr. Pope went away from the district I do not believe there is any guarantee except the guarantee of his generosity that would leave it as a public institution. It is in no sense the public library of Llanbedr. I do not wish to speak with any certainty with regard to Maentwrog. If I hear, or Mr. Price tells the Commission, that this hall at Maentwrog has been transferred by Mr. Oakeley to some responsible local authority in Maentwrog, then so far, I am willing to modify the statement which I made yesterday. Until such a statement is made I have nothing to withdraw or to modify. Then secondly there is not a public library. In order to secure some contradiction of this statement, Mr. Price has to go to a little reading-room in Corwen, and to a reading-room in Dolgelley—little spasmodic attempts made by small groups of individuals in those two towns. There is no continuity whatsoever about these reading-rooms, and they are in no sense public libraries.

Now, I come to the case of Bala, and I should like to point out here that any library built in Bala is of course mainly and primarily for the interest of the householders in Bala; but with the householders of Bala, I had nothing directly to do in giving evidence. I have never referred to their rental in the statement which I made yesterday, and so far as I know, except incidentally, the Commission does not inquire into their condition. But what is this library in Bala? First of all, it was started twelve months ago, and so far as I understand it was started on these conditions: a Nonconformist missionary in a part of this town called Plasey found a certain number of young fellows playing cards in an empty house, and this missionary, with a marvellous, and I fear exceptional, success, managed to turn this card-playing party into a prayer meeting, and two or three townsmen, I believe (the Reverend Edward Ellis being leader), said, "It is really high time that we should "make some attempt in order to have a room "where the young townsmen can meet together." At last they have been able to get a room in an old barrack, not far from this hall—not one room, I should say, but three or four or five rooms—for which they pay a certain rental—8*l.* or 10*l.* or 12*l.*, or whatever it may be. [Mr. R. J. Ll. Price: 10*l.*] Then I was very nearly correct. They simply pay an annual rent of 10*l.* to the proprietor. They have two or three comfortable rooms, so far as they go. There is a little room which is called a library, but I do not believe the Commission would give more than about 5*l.*, if they would give 5*l.*, for the whole stock of books that are there. They are antiquated, and the majority of them perfectly useless and unserviceable.

18,509. Perhaps it would be said that the Commissioners are not reading men?—That is not a statement I am called upon to contradict, I hope. With regard to my main statement that there is not a public village hall or institute, I am quite willing that we should test that by examining the district, which mainly I had in my own mind—this district, the evidence with regard to which you have been receiving now for three days, the union of Penllyn. It contains five parishes. In those five parishes there are the following hamlets and villages: Capel Celyn, Llanfor, Rhyducha, Rhos-y-Gwaliau, Glanrafon, Llawrybettws, Cefnddwysarn, Llangower, Sarnau, Llanuwchllyn, Bethel, and Llandderfel. I will take first of all Llandderfel. There is in Llandderfel a little room called the Cocoa Room; it is one room in a small cottage. It has done, so far as it has been able to do, a certain amount of good work; a certain number of the peasants and workpeople come down there and read their paper. But if there were in Llandderfel a village institute—a real public institute—owned by the village and controlled by the peasants around it would be of enormous and incalculable advantage to that village and the country side. It would enable the young farmers, and especially the young labourers who have no home to go to, to come there of an evening and have a smoking room, a reading room, and a library, and any other rooms that might be convenient.

Now we come to the case of Llanuwchllyn. I believe that some years ago an attempt was made to start a reading-room or a library in Llanuwchllyn. It was started by getting one or two rooms in a house, and a certain number of books was placed there, but they were the mere surplusage of other libraries, and a good deal of the literature was about such subjects as the Lost Ten Tribes, and similar, which cannot, of course, be of great interest to a villager or to a peasant.

Now I will deal with the case of Llanfor. I am delighted to hear that two years ago an attempt was made to open a reading-room in Llanfor. I understand this has failed. I can hardly think that a large landowner can derive very great credit to himself if his social experiment in the way of providing a library breaks down within two years, and he gives it up. There is now in Llanfor no form of public library or reading-room.

With regard to the other villages, in Capel Celyn there is no library or reading-room, and the only place where people can come together or meet for any purpose whatsoever in Capel Celyn is in a chapel which the peasants themselves have built, and a schoolroom.

In Glanrafon there is no room whatever of any kind except a chapel which they have built. In Rhyducha and Rhos-y-Gwaliau I believe there are a chapel and a school-room. The chapel, of course, has been built by the tenants, and the school-room has been built by the occupiers not by the owners of property.

In Sarnau there is a disused church, which is used as an elementary school, but that school has been practically condemned by the Education Department, because the chancel of that church has been boarded off, and not allowed to be used for the purpose of a school.

In Cefnddwysarn there is no village hall or school, except a little schoolroom which has been built by the Nonconformist peasantry there. In Bethel, likewise, the condition of things is exactly the same. So also in Llangower.

With regard to the other point, "in a change-"able climate, mainly damp, and where the "rooms are small and confined, there is not a "single hospital or dispensary." What is Mr. Price's reply to that statement? First of all, that there is a hospital in Machynlleth, but that is in Montgomeryshire, and that there is a hospital in Blaenau Festiniog. There is a hospital in Blaenau, Festiniog, belonging to one of the quarries, very largely supported, I believe, by the quarrymen of Festiniog; but we have nothing whatever to do with the rental of urban Festiniog, or with its life.

Now what is the case with regard to the rural districts of Merionethshire, where you have these little peasant homes dotted in hundreds up and down the glens and country sides, where you have fevers from time to time, where you have cases of consumption, of cancer, and of typhoid, there is not from one end to the other of the county of Merioneth a single public hospital, and not a single hospital where cases of consumption, or fever, or cancer, or any other serious cases could be dealt with. That is my reply.

Mr. Grove.

18,510. I suppose, whilst you give us that very clear statement as to the actual facts of the county, you quite appreciate any effort that is being made by the landlords and others to do what they can in that direction?—Most certainly; for instance, I appreciate highly, as any resident anywhere near Bala Town must, the fact that Mr. Price has given a guinea and Mrs. Price a guinea, that Mr. Jones, of Vron, has given two guineas, the Rev. Ellis Edwards has given a guinea, and that a lady, well known for her generosity in this district, Mrs. Wilson, has given 10*l.* But these subscriptions, to what one may call a casual reading-room, which is rented in an old barrack here in the town, is a very different thing to a handsome building which is owned by the people, and controlled by them.

The witness withdrew.

Colonel Edward Evans Lloyd re-called and further examined.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,511. What do you wish to state?—I have read the report of my evidence, and I find that I somewhat hastily, I must say, and when my Welsh blood was rather warm, used the word "malicious" with reference to Mr. Thomas Davies' evidence. I am anxious, in justice to him, and out of respect to this Commission, to withdraw that word.

See 16,512, 16,513.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,512. I think you have done that already?—No, not before this moment.

18,513. I was anxious to do it publicly, for the sake of the witness. No doubt Mr. Davies simply considered that he was carrying out the instructions he had received, and from what he has since told me, he has satisfied me that he had no ill-feeling in the matter towards me. In every other respect of course I adhere to the evidence I gave. In this connexion may I be allowed in the public interest to say this, that any person may be prejudiced now, according to the procedure of this Commission, without notice and in his absence, and for weeks he may be unable ——

Professor Rhŷs.

18,514. I think, Colonel Evans Lloyd, we cannot enter into that without calling forward Mr. Davies, and going into the whole thing again?—Well, I do not wish that. I am not alluding to Mr. Davies again at all.

Mr. Grove.

18,515. But you are alluding now to the action of the man, are you not?—I am alluding more particularly to the way in which evidence can be raised on hearsay, without any previous intimation to the person charged.

18,516. That is a point which I am of opinion we cannot listen to at all, because we have settled our mode of procedure?—I quite agree, then, I will not say a word about that.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,517. We quite appreciate the spirit in which you came forward to make your explanation, and to withdraw a certain term?—Yes. At the same time, may I not make the general statement that the others have been allowed to make. It will not take me three or four minutes. It is on the general question.

Mr Grove.

18,518. Lord Carrington has been very particular, you remember, when you wanted to rebut evidence, to keep you down to the one special point that you want to rebut. It must occur to you that if you were to be too discursive in these explanations we should have no end to them?—I am not explaining now. Lord Carrington said, "Will you confine yourself to "the evidence now that you wish to report, and "on Saturday we will give you an opportunity "of making your general statement," and now I propose to do that. It will not take really three minutes, if you will allow me to do it.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,519. Certainly, if you have that permission to make a statement, we will hear you?—I have had it promised me. What I have to say is merely this, that I do not think the statement has been sufficiently answered which has been made with regard to schedule A.—the comparison which our friend Mr. Ellis has made, and also the Prime Minister has made, with regard to the comparative deductions shown, looking at schedule A. with reference to the English properties as compared with those in Wales. My point is that the English corn-growing county which formerly let at the rate of 2*l.* and 2*l.* 5*s.* an acre, now by the force of automatic reasons has become reduced to probably 15*s.* and 18*s.*; and that therefore the farm which originally stood at 200*l.* a year in schedule A. now stands automatically at 100*l.*

18,520. May I ask if you question the accuracy of the return which we have had?—No, I do not.

18,521. I am afraid, then, that we cannot hear these highly argumentative statements?—It seems to me you have had a great deal of argument before you. I know the time is late, and therefore if you are not disposed to hear what I have to say, I will not persist.

18,522. We should probably have to hear Mr. Ellis after you, and we should have to go on till Sunday morning?—Just so. I will not say any more excepting this, with regard to a land court. I am very much afraid that it may produce a disagreeable and hostile feeling in the country, but I should be very pleased indeed, so far as I am concerned, if the law in favour of the tenant could be strengthened with regard to improvements. That is the real point. I think that in the case of a tenant having improved his farm and the owner having died, or the property having been sold, there should be some compulsory power of arbitration to secure the tenant; in having that which he has expended, secured to him.

18,523. I take it that you speak with some authority upon this point; you are both landlord and tenant, I think?—Yes, I am; and I have also been brought up in the law; therefore I have some little feeling upon the point. I am perfectly sure that clauses could be adopted which could be incorporated in every agreement between landlord and tenant which would act as a protection.

Mr. Grove.

18,524. I suppose your objection to a land court would be perhaps partly removed, if it were understood that a tenant and his landlord should always try first of all to come to terms, and you would give them the chance, would you not, of approaching each other and of trying to agree between themselves?—Quite so. I was going to say, moreover, that it has been stated that there is a paralytic fear—those were the words used—on the part of the tenant against his landlord. I contend it is quite the other way, that the landlord is really more in fear of his tenant going; the times have so changed, and that that may be fairly left to time to settle for itself. That is all I have to say, but I was mostly concerned in justice to Thomas Davies to say that he had not done it maliciously.

Mr. Grove—continued.

We quite understand that.

Professor Rhŷs.

The Commission is adjourned to Tuesday morning at Llangefni. We thank you all for attending, for taking so patient an interest in the proceedings, and for giving evidence these last few days.

ALLEGED ENCROACHMENTS ON THE FORESHORE.

To the Council of the Borough of Swansea.

GENTLEMEN,

In accordance with your directions, I now beg to lay before you my Report upon the question of the alleged encroachments on the sea-shore, and the approaches thereto, within the municipal borough.

In the year 1762 an Act of Parliament, intituled "An Act for dividing and inclosing two pieces or "parcels of open and enclosed land, called the Town "Hill and the Burroughs, in the borough of Swansea, "in the county of Glamorgan," was passed, whereby it is enacted (in effect) that there should be allotted to the Duke of Beaufort 150 acres of the Town Hill, and that the same should thereby be vested in him, his heirs, and assigns for ever. Also that the burgesses of the borough of Swansea and their successors in their corporate capacity should have, hold and enjoy as their allotment all the rest and residue of the said parcel of land called the Town Hill and all the said piece of land called the Burroughs, which were thereby vested in the burgesses and their successors in their corporate capacity for ever in severalty freed and discharged of and from all, and all manner of right, title, and interest whatsoever which the Duke of Beaufort, his heirs and assigns, or any person or persons claiming or to claim by, from, or under him, or by, from, or under any lord or lords of the said borough and manor could or might have, or pretend to have, in or to the same, or any part thereof save as in the Act thereinafter excepted. There was also a clause saving the rights of the Duke of Beaufort, as lord of the seigniory of Gower, or of the said borough or manor of Swansea. It was also enacted that certain commissioners therein named should make an award directing what roads, &c., should be made over the pieces of land thereby allotted. It seems that these commissioners made their award, and set out several roads, &c., on the land. The Corporation, pursuant to that Act, entered into possession of the Burrows, and granted from time to time leases of parts thereof, that portion in the neigbourhood of what is now known as the half-tide basin of the South Dock being used by the burgesses as a place for recreation and promenade.

From old papers in my possession I find it stated that owing to the prevailing winds much loose sand was deposited on the shore adjoining Burrows, such accumulation having the effect of keeping back the sea, and consequently increasing the dry sand. This addition or accretion was at the time considered to be the property of the Corporation by virtue of the ownership of the Burrows being adjoining land.

In the year 1836 the harbour trustees, acting pursuant to various Acts of Parliament passed for the improvement of the port and harbour, selected the land left dry, as above mentioned, as a place whereon ballast brought by ships entering the port might be deposited. The mode of depositing the ballast was to have it wheeled in barrows, &c., on the Western Pier, and thrown out on to the new land through doors or apertures. This being (through the action of the water) found injurious to the rights of other parties was, after being carried on for about nine years, stopped. In order, however, to provide some place for the reception of such ballast the trustees procured another Act which authorised them to construct a bank of copper slag to be laid along the shore from the Western Pier to a distance of about 80 yards in the direction of high-water mark, and which terminated (remote from the pier) at a point below high-water mark. This bank was for the purpose of preventing the sea washing away the ballast, and, as I understand, was certainly in part constructed upon land left by alluvion of the sea, and therefore at that period belonging to the adjoining owner.

For some years after the construction of such bank the depositing of ballast landward of the bank was carried on until an immense heap had accumulated.

This accumulation produced a bank so high as to shut out the sea view from the houses in Gloucester Place and Cambrian Place, which was looked upon as a grievance by the occupiers of those houses, as appears from a petition presented by them to the council praying that the bank in question might be lowered four feet. This prayer was acceded to by the heap being lowered and levelled, and the surface laid out as pleasure grounds, carriage ways and paths being formed thereon.

This took place in 1884, and called forth a protest from the Duke of Beaufort. This protest not being noticed by the Corporation, was followed by the issuing of a writ against them by the Duke for trespass. The Corporation, in answer to the declaration, put in several pleas, being not guilty, not the soil of the Duke, that they derived title under the Enclosure Act, and freehold and soil in themselves. After replication in denial, issues were joined and the action was tried by Mr. Justice Williams, in Swansea, in the year 1848. After the putting in by the Duke of very voluminous documentary evidence, and taking the evidence of the Duke's witnesses (no witnesses being called on behalf of the Corporation) the judge left the jury the four following questions:—1st. Is the land between high and low water mark part of the seigniory of Gower? 2nd. Was the land on which the alleged trespass was committed gained from the sea by slow, gradual, and imperceptible accretion and alluvion (that is) imperceptible in the manner of the accretion and alluvion? 3rd. Was the land in question part of the Burrows mentioned in the local Act (i.e., the Enclosure Act)? 4th. Did the Burrows mentioned in the local Act extend to the high-water mark? To which questions the jury gave the following replies:—1st. Yes. 2nd. No. 3rd. No. 4th. Yes. A verdict was accordingly entered for the Duke on all the issues, leave being reserved to enter a verdict upon a point reserved by the judge, viz., "That if the land were not gained by slow, gradual, and imperceptible accretion it vested in "the Crown and not in the plaintiff."

During the trial several charters were put in by the Duke, one of which granted to his predecessors in title the seigniory of Gower, or, as stated in the charter, "terra de Gower," that is, "the land of Gower," and it was upon the strength of that charter, together with Acts of ownership which were proved at the trial, that the Duke based his right to the soil between high-water and low-water marks. The jury, as you will have perceived, found that the land between those marks was a part of the seigniory of Gower, which in effect was that the soil itself belonged to the Duke, and that he had not merely a bare franchise. It was also proved at the trial that the land in dispute was reclaimed by the throwing out of ballast, which was a means of driving back the sea. The law upon this point is that where the sea falls back imperceptibly by alluvion the land left dry goes to the owner of the adjoining land; but in this case, as found by the jury, the accretion was not imperceptible but was caused by artificial and forced means, in which case the law seems to be that the land left dry shall not go to the owner of the adjoining land but to the owner of the soil of the sea shore. That was simply the contention of the Duke, in which he was successful.

Before going further, I may say that a rule was obtained by the Corporation to set aside the verdict as being against the evidence, on account of misdirection to the jury, and on the point reserved. The rule was argued in 1849 by the then Attorney-General for the Corporation, but was dismissed.

The seigniory of Gower comprises several manors or lordships and boroughs, among them being the manor and borough of Swansea, of which the Duke is lord. Having regard to the finding that the soil of the sea shore was a part of the land of Gower, it will be necessary to consider whether, as lord of the seigniory of Gower, or only as lord of the manor of Swansea, the Duke is seised. If as the latter, the right of enclosing the sands is easily determined; but if as the former, a difficult question may arise, and upon which I at this time give no opinion. If the soil belongs to the Duke in virtue of his position as lord of the manor, then (excluding the idea that it can be part of the demesnes of the manor) he is not absolute owner, but owner subject to the rights of the copyholders of the manor if it can be proved that the adjoining land (if allowed to have remained in its quandam (state) is copyhold land. If it cannot be proved to be copyhold land, then it may be found to belong to the wastes of the manor, in which case all the tenants of the manor would be entitled to certain rights of way, passage and other rights which would preclude the Duke enclosing the same without a verdict of the homage.

So far I have been considering the question in its general bearing, and not with a view to upsetting the verdict given in 1848 (even if that were possible) for that verdict I apprehend only extended to that portion of the sea reclaimed by the forced and artificial means made use of.

Now, as far as I am able, I will lay before you my opinion as to the rights of the Corporation in respect of land left dry, other than that the subject of the above-mentioned action, and that from which its nature will fall within the perview of the decision then given, and even with respect to such land, I will not specify any particular portion adjoining the seashore, but simply say that if any land has been added to (by alluvion) so as to join any of the land allotted to the Corporation by the Act of 1762, and now in their possession, it is in my opinion Corporation property to high-water mark.

We have next to consider in what way the approaches to the beach have been interfered with as the result of recent legislation. By the Swansea Dock Act, 1847, the Swansea Dock Company were empowered to make and maintain the South Dock and Lock, and on the 20th February, 1852, in consideration of the sum of 5*s.*, the Corporation conveyed to the Swansea Dock Company an extensive piece of ground for the formation of the South Dock and Lock, and the Duke of Beaufort conveyed to the Company the remaining ground required for that purpose. By the said Act of 1847 the company were empowered to form the South Dock embankment, and by section 21 it was enacted that—

> "The embankment shall be constructed in the position shown on the plan deposited at the Admiralty Office, and shall not be deviated from in a seaward direction; and the pavement or stone facing of the sea wall shall be constructed in a slope of four horizontal to one perpendicular in order that the waves may break and expend themselves as theretofore: and the said embankment shall be constructed in such a way and manner as shall be approved of by the Lord High Admiral, or the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral, and maintained and kept in repair to his or theirs satisfaction in all time herein-after."

By section 24 of the same Act it was enacted—

> "That the said company shall make and construct along the top of the said embankment, and parallel thereto for its whole length, a carriage and foot road of not less than 30 feet wide in all, and the said company shall carry on a formation and construction of the same simultaneously with the progress of the dock or docks and other works thereby authorised, as nearly as the nature of the same will permit, and so that the said carriage and foot road may be completed as nearly as may be at the same time as the said dock or docks and other works are completed; and the said carriage and foot road shall be at at all times open and accessible to the public, and shall be maintained by the company in all time coming free from obstruction and in good and sufficient repair."

Section 25 enacted—

> "That if the company should take any land beyond the western limit of the said embankment they should continue and maintain the said carriage and foot road of the aforesaid width of 30 feet to the western extremity of the land so taken."

Section 26 enacted—

> "That the company hereby incorporated shall construct a tramroad from the pier of the harbour of Swansea along and upon the said carriage road and that it shall and may be lawful for the trustees of the said harbour to use the said tramroad, and to make communications therewith for carrying the ballast which shall or may be unloaded from vessels using the said harbour to the westward of the works hereby authorised upon payment to the company of a sum of one penny for each 100 tons of such ballast, provided always that such use of the said tramroad by the harbour trustees shall in nowise interfere with the general use thereof by the company, and shall in all respects be subject to their rules, regulations, and bye-laws."

Sections 27 and 28 read as follows:—

"And whereas the formation of a half-tide basin, dock or docks, and other works as herein-before authorised will cut off the communication at present existing between the town of Swansea and the Western Pier and the sands or sea-shore, be it enacted—That the said company shall make construct, and maintain a swingbridge or drawbridge with proper avenues and approaches thereto, over or across the entrance of the half-tide basin from the said harbour, or near thereto."

"And whereas the ground lying immediately to the southward of the proposed basin is used as a site for bathing machines for the accommodation and convenience of the inhabitants of Swansea and others, and the ground so used will be in part encroached upon in the construction of the said embankment or sea-wall, be it enacted—That the company hereby incorporated shall in the construction of the said embankment, and from time to time thereafter, as occasion my require, make such provision as may be necessary and adequate for securing and protecting during high water the bathing machines, which shall during the progress of the works hereby authorised, or at any future period, be employed or used within 900 feet of the existing pier wall, and the said company shall also make and construct, and in all time coming, and for the distance aforesaid, maintain, good, easy, and sufficient access to and from the said bathing machines over the said embankment."

The Swansea Dock Act, 1847, was, however, wholly repealed by the Swansea Harbour Act, 1875 (Section 14).

By section 47 of the Act of 1857 it is enacted—

"That the trustees shall not in the execution of any work under this Act deviate riverward or seaward from the line of the works shown on the plan of the respective works deposited under the recited Acts or any of them, or this Act at the Admiralty Office, or make it over, under, through or across any tidal or navigable water any work by this Act authorised to be made or completed without the previous consent of the Admiralty signified in writing under the hand of the Secretary of the Admiralty, and then only according to such plan and under such restrictions and regulations as the Admiralty so approve: And where any such deviation or work is made with such approval the trustees shall not at any time alter or extend the same without first obtaining the like approval."

And by section 51 it is provided—

"That after the vesting period the embankment for the docks shall be made or completed by the trustees in manner from time to time approved by the Admiralty, signified by writing under the hand of the Secretary to the Admiralty."

Section 53 provides that—

"After the vesting period the trustees, with the consent of the Admiralty, may deposit ballast and soil excavated from the docks and other works in Swansea Harbour or any part of the shore of Swansea Bay between the Western Pier and Gorse Lane to the westward thereof subject to the provisions of the recited agreement of the twelfth day of June one thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven."

And section 56 provides that—

"After the vesting period the trustees shall make and maintain a swingbridge or drawbridge, with proper avenues and approaches thereto, over or across the entrance to the half-tide basin from the harbour, or over the lock between that half-tide basin and the inner dock."

By section 61—

"After the vesting period the trustees shall forthwith make and maintain along the top of the sea slope or embankment, by the recited Dock Act of 1847 authorised, and parallel thereto for its whole length a carriage and foot road of not less than thirty feet wide and the same shall be at all times open and accessible to the public. Provided always that the trustees may make, maintain, and use rails and turntables and conveniences connected therewith upon, along, and across the carriage and foot road and the continuation thereof. Provided also that no such work or thing shall be done in contravention of the recited agreement of the twelfth day of June one thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven."

The trustees have recently placed gates across the roads referred to in this section.

It is much to be regretted that the Corporation did not insist upon sections 27 and 28 of the Swansea Dock Act, 1847, which preserved communications between the town and the Western Pier and the sand or sea shore, being incorporated in the Swansea Harbour Act, 1857, and provision should have been made in the later Act that in the event of the embankment being extended seaward, the 30 feet road should be removed to the top of the sea slope of any new land so formed. As this was not done the 30 feet road in its present position and condition is of little if any benefit to the public, as since the year 1857 a considerable quantity of land has been made on the seaward side of the road, thus intercepting access to the sands or seashore.

By the London and North Western Railway (New lines and additional powers) Act, 1875, the London and North Western Railway Company obtained power to acquire compulsorily the land in question, known as the South Dock embankment. The Corporation opposed this Bill before both the Lords and the Commons, alleging that if it passed in its then form the public of Swansea would be deprived of the approach to the sands so necessary from a sanitary point of view. The Bill received the Royal assent on the 19th July, 1875.

By section 25 of this Act, provision is made for a substituted road in the event of the Company interfering with the existing 30 feet road, but the road has not been interfered with and the time for so doing has now expired. The following clauses in the London and North Western Railway (New Lines) Act, 1875, were inserted by Parliament at the instance of the Corporation.

"The company shall not close or interfere with the road numbered on the deposited plans and in the deposited books of reference 2, in the parish of Swansea, until they shall have widened the roadway leading from the said road No. 2, under the railway of the company to the Oystermouth Road opposite Trafalgar Terrace so that the said roadway shall form a means of access to the beach of Swansea Bay of not less than 20 feet clear in width and until they shall have lowered the ground under the railway by means of which the said roadway is carried under the said railway to such an extent as to leave thereunder a clear headway of 10 feet in every part and so that the inclination of the said roadway where lowered shall not in any part exceed one in twenty."

"The company shall leave on the seaward side of the land acquired by them under the powers of this Act upon the shore of Swansea Bay an open space of 15 feet in width which shall be open and accessible to the public, and shall also leave two approaches to the said space from the substituted road herein-before provided, one of such approaches to be at the western and the other at the eastern end of the said substituted road. Provided that the company may resume possession of the said space of land and the approaches thereto when the site thereof is required for works by the company, but nothing in this section contained shall prejudice or interfere with the rights, powers, and authorities possessed by or vested in the said Duke of Beaufort, his heirs and assigns upon, over, or in respect of the land between the existing thirty feet road and the shore of Swansea Bay."

The open space and two approaches provided by section 28 still remain, but as the company are empowered by that section to resume possession at any time when the site thereof is required for works by the company the benefits conferred by this section may at any time cease to exist.

Now, as regards access to the seashore from the site of the Old Infirmary in a westward direction to the stream forming the western boundary of the borough, we find that until the year 1861 the public enjoyed an uninterrupted access at almost every point. But in the years 1861 and 1862 the Llanelly Railway and Dock Company obtained two Acts of Parliament, known respectively as the Llanelly Railway and Dock Act, 1861, and the Llanelly Railway and Dock Act, 1862. The Acts in question authorized the construction of the existing line of railway. Section 18 of Llanelly Railway and Dock Act, 1862, for preserving access to the sea, reads as follows:—

Section 32 enacts that

"The Company shall, at their own expense, make and maintain the works following (to wit):—

1. "An archway as high as the nature of the ground will permit under the Railway No. 1 (Swansea Lines) authorised by the Llanelly Railway (New Lines) Act, 1861, at a point opposite the south end of Bryn Mill Lane, in the parish of Swansea."

2. "A crossing on the level of their railway fit for horses, carriages, and cattle, with good and sufficient gates across the same on each side of the railway near the triangular piece of ground at St. Helen's, or at some convenient point between that piece of ground and the south end of Gorse Lane; and the manner of making and watching such level crossing shall be subject to the approval of the Board of Trade."

3. "Two good and sufficient wooden bridges fit for foot passengers, with convenient approaches and inclinations, and with proper railings or fences along each side thereof, and gates or stiles at the end thereof, one of such bridges to be made at a point between the said triangular piece of ground and Sea Beach Cottage and the other at such point near the Old Union Workhouse as the mayor, aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Swansea (hereinafter called the Swansea Corporation) shall by writing under their common seal direct. Provided always that the company shall not be bound to make or maintain those bridges respectively, or either of them, unless required so to do by notice from the Swansea Corporation under their common seal, after and within two years from the opening for public traffic of the Railway No. 1 (Swansea Lines), nor if, after being so required, they shall tender or pay to the Swansea Corporation the sum of fifty pounds in respect of each bridge which the Swansea Corporation shall so require them to make, and shall permit the Swansea Corporation to make and maintain the same."

And section 33 provides that

In respect of the Railway No. 6 (Swansea Lines), by this Act authorised, the company shall be bound by, conform to, and fulfil the stipulations following (to wit):—

1. "The span of the bridge or arch for carrying the railway over Bathurst Street shall be such as not to lessen the present clear width of that street."

2. "The railway shall be carried over the road leading from the west end of the South Docks towards the Oystermouth Road opposite the gasworks by means of an arch or opening of the clear width of 40 feet at the least."

3. "The road or highway in front of the Union Workhouse and extending thence towards the west end of the South Docks shall not be reduced to a less width than 40 feet in any part."

The land for the formation of this line of railway within the borough was conveyed by the Corporation to the Company in the year 1865.

By the Swansea and Carmarthen Railways Act, 1871, the Swansea Lines undertaking of the Llanelly Railway and Dock Company was vested in a new company incorporated under the name of the Swansea and Carmarthen Railway Company, and by the Swansea and Carmarthen and London and North Western Railway Act, 1873, the same was transferred by the last-mentioned company to the London and North Western Railway Company, the present owners of the line.

The foregoing is so far as I am aware the best history I can give you of the Swansea seashore and its approaches from the year 1848 to the present time. The powers conferred by the several Acts of Parliament to which reference has been made have undoubtedly materially interfered with that free access to the beach which existed before the construction of our local docks and railways, and I fear that little can now be done to improve the present state of things. I, however, beg to suggest that the harbour trustees be called upon to remove—

1. Any existing gates or barriers interfering with free access to the thirty feet road along the top of the South Dock embankment.
2. The gates across the road near the Royal Institution leading to the Burrows Lodge, as it is provided in paragraph 4 of the agreement in the second schedule to the Swansea Harbour Act, 1866, that the Corporation and their tenants shall have full right, power, and authority of entering upon and using the road in question; also that they be respectively asked to remove the gates near the South Dock Swing Bridge, as well as the gate across the road leading to the lock gate at the entrance to the basin of the South Dock.

Before closing my report I would call your attention to 29 and 30 Vict., c. 62, which as from the 31st December, 1866, transferred from the Commissioners of Woods and Forests to the Board of Trade the management of all such parts and rights and interests as then belonged to Her Majesty in right of the Crown of and in the shore and bed of the sea, and of every channel, creak, bay, estuary, and of every navigable river of the United Kingdom as far up the same as the tide flowed, except as in the said Act provided subject to the provisions of the Act, and subject also to such public and other rights as by law existed in, over, or affecting the foreshore or any part thereof.

The duties of the Board of Trade with respect to the foreshore and bed of the sea are, it would seem (inter alia), to protect the Crown rights, to ascertain in what parts of the coast the Crown has parted with its rights, in what parts the rights of the Crown are undoubted, and in what parts the title is doubtful, to prevent encroachments on the foreshore, and to protect navigation and other public interests. These duties are thrown upon the Board by several Acts of Parliament to which I need not here refer, and in concluding I would also suggest that in the event of further encroachments being threatened a representation be made to the Board of Trade with a view to obtain assistance in securing its prevention.

I am, &c.

Handed in by Mr. John Jones, of Troedybanc at Bala. Question 8163 (Ninth Day). (See also Questions 16,378–382. Nineteenth Day.)

Private.

Rhiwlas, Bala, North Wales,
October 1885.

Dear Sir,

Although as you are aware I anticipated the Ground Game Act which has granted the farmer a legal right to kill rabbits, provided he can afford to buy ammunition and a gun, is not afraid to let it off, can hit the rabbit when he does, and does not mind paying a heavy tax for the privilege of doing so, by allowing my tenants to destroy the rabbits upon their farms many years before such a measure was ever dreamt of, as I have also done the Agricultural Holdings Act long before such an Act ever entered the heads of any politician by having for a lengthened period paid all my tenants full compensation for improvements should they ever quit the estate, which I am happy to say is an event of extremely rare occurrence. Still I find that many tenants are slow to take advantage of the permission to destroy rabbits, under a mistaken, though most kind and creditable feeling, that such a course is displeasing to their landlord. I therefore adopt this method by addressing to each tenant a circular letter to assure them that such is not the case, and to beg their assistance and co-operation in destroying without mercy, and at all times and seasons when convenient, these little pests of which no one as a farmer has a greater abhorrence than myself, and I hope that their destruction may by the sale of the rabbits assist many of the farmers in the payment of their rents, besides providing a change of wholesome food for their families. My head keeper will as heretofore always be happy to purchase from tenants any full grown rabbits that may be brought to him alive, and as it is some years since the permission to kill rabbits upon the Rhiwlas estate was first granted, I think it desirable to repeat for your guidance the conditions upon which this concession is granted and the non-fulfilment of which will vitiate all claim to the privilege.

1. The rabbits to be killed with ferrets and nets only.
2. Each tenant with his sons or other persons resident in his house deputed in writing by himself, to kill rabbits on his own farm only, and not at any time to assist his neighbours by giving them the use of his men, dogs, ferrets, or nets.
3. The tenants not to ferret in the hedges surrounding the covers, or inside the covers, which are my property, and in my own occupation.
4. To inform the keepers of any trespassers who they may detect interfering with the hares, rabbits, or other game upon their farms, or if they find any traps or snares set upon their lands or in their hedges.

It may not be out of place here to express a hope that the tenants will as they have hitherto always so kindly done continue to render my residence on my own property a pleasure by protecting as far as lies in their power the hares and other game upon the farms.

* * * * *

I am,
Your very sincere friend,
R. J. Ll. Price.

The following are translations of two other documents, relating to the same matter, and subsequently handed in by Mr. R. J. Ll. Price:—

I.—A Stiff Cardboard Notice.

[Issued in 1882.]

Rules to be observed by the Rhiwlas Tenants when killing Rabbits on their Farms.

(1.) The rabbits to be killed with ferrets and nets only. The gun will not be allowed on any account.

(2.) The only persons who may kill the rabbits are the tenant himself or his sons, or other persons resident in his house, and deputed in writing by himself, and that on his own farm only, and not at any time to assist his neighbours by giving them the use of his men, dogs, ferrets, or nets.

(3.) The tenants not to ferret in the hedges surrounding the covers, or inside the covers, which are my property, and in my own occupation.

(4.) To inform the keepers of any trespassers who they may detect interfering with the hares, rabbits, or other game upon their farms, or if they find any traps or snares set upon their lands or in their hedgerows.

R. J. Ll. Price.

Please put up this notice in a conspicuous place.

II.—Circular to Tenants.

Rhiwlas Estate Office,
Bala, North Wales,
. . . . December , 1892.

As Mr. Price has received complaints from some of his tenants that rabbits have caused them loss, he desires it to be understood that every one who may be so annoyed by them, and fails to exterminate them, should send a letter to his chief keeper, who will cause them to be exterminated forthwith.

Your truly,
For R. J. Ll. Price, Esq.,
Edward Watkins.

No. 2.—Agreement for Cow Pasture. Question 11,951.

Agreement made this day of 18 , between The Honourable William Edward Sackville West, of Limegrove, in the County of Carnarvon, as agent for and on behalf of The Right Honourable Lord Penrhyn, of Penrhyn Castle (the landlord), of the one part, and Mr. in the Parish of Llandegai, and County of Carnarvon (the tenant), of the other part:

Whereby the landlord agrees to let, and the tenant agrees to hire, the right of depasturing one cow on the unallotted portion of Llandegai Mountain, from the day of 18 . The tenancy to be from year to year and the rent to be ten shillings a year, payable half-yearly, on the 12th May and 12th November, subject to one month's notice to terminate this agreement expiring on either of the above-named days. The rent to be recoverable by distress in the usual way. As witness the hands of the parties.

No. 3.—Notes as to Penrhyn Manors, &c., being a letter from Mr. H. Barber (steward of Lord Penrhyn's Manors) to Colonel West. Question 12,183.

Land Commission.

My Dear Sir, Bangor, North Wales.

In answer to your letter of 22nd I do not know of any "copyhold" or "customary" tenures in North Wales. Vague reports are made of copyhold in South Wales. I never saw any evidence of them, and suspect them to be mere encroachments like the well-known "Cote property" in the eastern counties.

Inclosures.

Caerhun Inclosure Act. } 13 & 14 Vict. c. 8. (1850).
Llanbedr-y-Cenin do. }

The order of the Inclosure Commissioners was made to Lord Anglesey's trustees. The date of the order is confusing. It only took effect in favour of Edward Lord Penrhyn by virtue of an old reported case, not now easy to find.

* Note by Secretary:—
Rule No. 5 was struck out in the copy handed in.
The words enclosed in brackets in No. 6 had been added in red ink.

The conveyance to him (including Gorswen and about 213 acres of allotment) is dated August 1856, from Anglesey, &c. The enclosure of the allotments generally were from about 1854 downwards.

Lord Penrhyn had nothing to do with the awards, or the enclosure, no allotment being made by him, he not having any lands in Caerhun or Llanbedr, but taking afterwards from Lord Anglesey, &c.

He was prominent in the matter of the disturbances with Lord Newborough (chairman) and others at quarter sessions, but merely in the maintenance of the peace, not as a landowner.

PENRHYN MANORS.

In addition to our conversation 17th instant, I should tell you that appointments by Lord Penrhyn are registered with clerks of peace of gamekeepers for following manors (five):—

1. Penrhyn.
2. Tir Evan Ysbytty.
3. Eidda.
4. Vill of Penmachno.
5. Aber.

Lands not manors:—

Llanllechid.
Bangor.
Llanddeiniolen.
Llanrwst (Denbighshire).

The Manor of Penrhyn has been much insisted upon. Mr. Dawkins Pennant registered.

All the manors may be cited from public records. It would be dangerous to drop them, not merely for game purposes.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) H. BARBER.

Parish of Llangelynin.—List of Farms where tenants have failed during the past 25 years or thereabouts. The tenants did not all actually become bankrupts, but were compelled to give up farming. A few cases may have been due to extravagance and intemperance, and a few, perhaps, to the fact that the tenants entered upon their tenancies with insufficient capital, but the main cause was the high rents.
